Southern Illinois University
Carbondale, III., Nov. 11, 1945 • Vol. 10, No. 10 • Free
November is here. The interest in the elections will now be dwindling and viva sports-minded men will turn to hunting.

The local weather in the region has been quite agreeable, with temperatures remaining in the low 50s. However, some forecasters predict a cold front will move in the area over the weekend, bringing with it a significant drop in temperature. This change in weather could have an impact on the hunting season, with colder conditions making it more challenging for hunters to track their targets.

The local wildlife population is thriving, and with the recent rains, many species have been seen feeding and moving about more actively. This increased activity is a sign of the changing seasons and the upcoming winter months.

Overall, the hunting season is off to a good start, and with proper planning and preparation, hunters can expect a successful season.

Cuba and the United States, where the results of the election are eagerly awaited. Meanwhile, back in Chicago, the election season continues as usual. The city is abuzz with political activity, with various candidates holding rallies and debates in an effort to gain the support of the electorate.

The local weather forecast predicts a high of 60 degrees Fahrenheit with a mild breeze blowing in from the north. This will likely make outdoor events more pleasant for attendees.
