USG favors football, summer senate

By Miguel Albe
Staff Writer

In an emergency meeting Tuesday night, the Undergraduate Student Government Senate voted in favor of creating a summer senate as well as voting in favor of supporting the football program.

Quorum was met with the exact 15 required voting members present.

Bob Smith, Saluki head football coach, spoke at the meeting to clarify some of the information that has been presented on the issue.

Smith, who has never taken a public stance on the issue, said the publicity generated by debate over whether or not to eliminate the football program has, to some extent, hampered the team's recruiting ability.

"When an article or two appears in the negative form, your opponents often Xerox that article and take it to a high school or junior college," Smith said. "That doesn't help any."

Smith said other areas such as fund raising, endowments to football and plans for a Saluki television show, which is expected to be picked up by Chicago media, could be affected by negative publicity.

Bill Hall, USG president, called on the senate to postpone taking a stance until information brought up by Smith could be analyzed.

However, the senate voted overwhelmingly in support of the football program with supporters saying there was no way to put a dollar value on school spirit and other intangible benefits derived from having a football program.

In other senate business, an amendment to the constitution to establish a summer senate was passed with two changes made to appease opponents.

The changes to the legislation involved increasing the number of signatures needed to become a summer senator from 35 to 100. In addition, the summer senate will meet two times during the entire summer instead of twice a month as previously planned.

The summer senate amendment issue was the center of controversy last week when confusion erupted over whether to round up or round down when tabulating votes. Mathematically, 13.33 votes originally were needed to pass the amendment, but only

COBA is granted full reaccreditation

By Theresa Livingston
Staff Writer

The College of Business and Administration has been fully reaccredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business, Thomas C. Guttridge, the dean of the college, said.

"It means we have a solid program and that we are moving in the right direction," Guttridge said.

The college was evaluated by a team of business educators from across the country in October to determine its status, he said.

The college's accreditation, which covers all undergraduate degree programs and the master's degree in business and administration, was officially granted on April 17, Guttridge said.

Accreditation is awarded for a ten-year period to schools that meet or exceed standards set for a wide variety of areas including curriculum, admissions, degree requirements, library and computer facilities and financial resources.

In addition to the reaccreditation, the college's master of accountancy degree received its first accreditation since the program was first offered in 1980.

Some 1,200 American colleges and universities offer business degrees, but only about 265 have AACSB accreditation.

This type of recognition signifies excellence to scholars and business, Guttridge said, and is difficult to obtain.

Sesame Street prepares for baby

By Jackie Spinner
Staff Writer

After 20 years of programming, Sesame Street will have a new kid on the block Friday as Big Bird and friends tackle the issue of pregnancy with the arrival of the show's first baby.

During this week's storyline, Maria and Luis, played by Sonia Manzano and Emilio Delgado, have the couple's baby. The program does not actually show Maria in labor, but Maria goes through several false starts during the week.

When the couple announced Maria's pregnancy in February, they explained that Maria and Luis got together and started a baby growing inside of Maria.

Mary Sue Holland, a publicist for Children's Television Workshop, said the producers felt it was the role of the parents to answer further questions. "Sesame

SIU-C travel advance policy will go into effect on June 1

By Lisa Miller
Staff Writer

A new, more restrictive travel advance policy that limits travel advances to foreign and domestic travelers will be in effect for the University starting June 1.

The travel advance policy is changing because the University has been cited in 1985 and 1987 by the Legislative Audit Commission for being in violation of the policy, Charles Hindersman, vice president for financial affairs, said.

"The auditors said the University did not have authority to grant the types of advances we were granting," Hindersman said.

The University is limiting travel advances to University employees on international and domestic travel for more than seven days, Hindersman said.

Some group travel, such as

Childless couples turning to baby ads

By Theresa Livingston
Staff Writer

Childless couples, frustrated by the length and complexity of the adoption process, have turned to the media in the search for a child.

These prospective adoptive parents have begun running advertisements for an adoptable baby wherever they think they will do the most good: in daily and monthly publications, on billboards and even on park benches in metropolitan areas.

Although Illinois and other states across the country list many children ready for immediate adoption, many prospective adoptive parents are faced with numerous amounts of red tape and long waiting lists.

Evelyn Barber, Southern Illinois regional administrative coordinator of the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services, explained the phenomenon of advertising for children in this way:

"I've heard of people wanting babies so badly that they advertise. I've even heard of people that have rented bus waiting benches and written their message there. The problem is, they only want healthy, white infants and the waiting list for those babies is up to ten years in this state," she said.

As a result, many take the task of finding a child into their own hands, advertising in such newspapers as the Daily Egyptian and other daily publications.

Steve Bashaw, a Chicago-area attorney who deals with adoption advertisement, said many couples advertise in and around college towns, such as Carbondale, to insure the type of infant they would desire.

"It's a natural environment. The mother will most likely be a semi-well educated white, from an upper middle class background, which for them is the perfect candidate," he said.

A spokesman for the IDCS' main offices in Springfield said the problem is not the availability of children.

First government results from Panama election out

PANAMA CITY, Panama (UPI) — The first government results from Sunday's presidential election showed the candidate backed by Gen. Manuel Noriega leading by a 2 to 1 margin Tuesday. The results from four of a total 40 districts showed Carlos Duque of the pro-government, pro-military National Liberation Coalition with 32,282 votes, followed by opposition alliance candidate Guillermo Endara with 16,493 votes and the third candidate, Hildebrand Nicosa, with 2,040 votes.

Bush predicts 'summit' in Brussels

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Bush predicted a "summit" when he meets with NATO leaders in Brussels late this month and indicated Tuesday that a compromise is emerging to mend a rift over short-range missile negotiations. Bush appeared to be signaling a resolution of the dispute, mainly between the United States and West Germany, on the issue of East-West negotiations over the battlefield nuclear weapons — those with ranges of 300 miles or less.

Government squelches Guatemalan coup bid

GUATEMALA CITY (UPI) — Rebel soldiers tried to overthrow the civilian government of President Vinicio Cerezo Tuesday but loyalist troops put down the coup attempt and arrested the mutineers, government officials said. "The government achieved control over a coup this morning, when various army corps surrendered their arms," said presidential spokesman Carlos Anleu in the broadcast on private Guatemala Flash radio.

Second Navy disaster in three weeks kills 6

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Six sailors were killed and five were injured Tuesday in a fire that swept through the boiler room of the Navy supply ship USS White Plains about 100 miles from Hong Kong in the South China Sea, the Pentagon said. The cause of the blaze was not immediately known, Navy officials said, but preliminary indications were that it was a fuel fire.

Exxon: Soviet oil skimmer no longer needed

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (UPI) — Exxon said Tuesday the giant Soviet oil skimmer no longer was needed to help clean up North America's worst oil spill and ordered it to leave, but officials aboard the vessel disputed the company's claims and said substantial oil slicks remained on the water. "It's not going to be doing any more work," Exxon representative Amos Plante said in Seward.

KABUL, Afghanistan (UPI) — Army troops launched the first government counter-offensive against U.S.-backed rebels trying to capture Jalalabad since the strategic eastern garrison town came under siege two months ago, an official said Tuesday. In Pakistan, the rebel-run Afghan News Agency confirmed the government counter-attacked Sunday but said its troops were repulsed and 150 killed.

Elementary school gunman sentenced to die

GREENWOOD, S.C. (UPI) — A gunman who killed two children during a shooting spree at an elementary school was sentenced to death Tuesday, despite the court's acceptance of his plea that he was mentally ill at the time. Circuit Judge James Moore, in a precedent-setting decision, ordered that James William Wilson, 20, be put to death in South Carolina's electric chair.

Diverse University employee retiring after 38 years

Minnie Hinton has held several jobs at SIU-C since 1951

By Phyllis Coon
Features Editor

She's maintained a relationship with University students for more than 38 years.

Minnie Hinton's connection with students was not formed through administrative or academic positions.

"Just casual conversations," Hinton, a native of Carbondale, said. "Most people just say hello and nothing more."

But as one of the Physical Plant's building service workers, she will be ending the long relationship when she retires May 31.

"It has been a pleasure!" Hinton exclaims about her career with a smile. "We get along like a big happy family."

THE PEOPLE are what she said she'll miss the most.

"I've seen a variety of people just by working on campus everyday," Hinton said. "I will miss the continuous activity, but after 38 years I think its about time. I hate to leave."

Relaxation and travel are some of her plans for the future.

"This is a time when you decide you want to enjoy life before you get too old," Hinton said.

While her travel log includes a first-time visit to Paris, she already has traveled to Japan, the Bahamas, Italy and Australia.

Minnie Hinton was a University sociology student and cafeteria worker in 1941. She was hired as a civil service worker in 1951 and has worked at SIU-C since. She will retire May 31.

"So I really haven't just stuck around Carbondale my entire life," Hinton said.

Hinton's relationship with the University began in 1941 when she was a sociology student.

"I WAS going to school and working in the old cafeteria," Hinton said.

The cafeteria was in a building that used to stand near where the Student Center stands, she said.

"There were only about four buildings on campus at that time," Hinton said.

At the cafeteria she worked as a salad girl, she said.

"I don't remember how much I made, somewhere about $2.65 an hour," Hinton said. "But I do remember you thought you were in heaven when you got that $2.65 an hour."

After four years of college,

Hinton took a break from her studies. In 1947, she married Lloyd Hinton. They have one child and three grandchildren.

"MY HUSBAND doesn't believe I'm going to retire," Hinton said. "He says I'm too busy and always have to be doing something. He doesn't know that this is it. I want to enjoy life."

Hinton said she considered retiring a couple years ago but couldn't bring herself to do it.

"He says if I retire, he'll retire. I hope he's ready," Hinton said.

Hinton was hired as a civil service worker in 1951. While she only has her senior thesis to write, she never returned to the University as a student.

"I just never wanted to teach," Hinton said. "I wanted something different."

As a civil service worker, she worked for three years as a receptionist for former University President Delyte Morris.

WHILE WORKING for Morris, Hinton also used one of her other many talents — cooking.

"He found out I could cook and oh brother!" Hinton said laughing. "I made all kinds of cakes and pies and put them in the freezer."

Morris had a house in the middle of campus when Grand Avenue still ran through campus.

"He was a very nice man," Hinton said of Morris.

Through dinners and brunches, she was able to meet several governors at the Morris'.

"So many things have changed," Hinton said.

"Unless someone mentions it you don't think about the changes."

Woody Hall was her next stop.

"I WORKED at Woody Hall 14 years," Hinton said. "It was still a women's dormitory."

As a janitor in the 365-bed dormitory, she said she became acquainted with many of the residents.

"With all my jobs, I've had a lot of contact with the students," Hinton said.

After Woody Hall was closed as a dormitory, she was transferred to the Physical Plant. There she has worked on several special crews doing jobs that include cleaning the medical department in the Wham Building and washing windows.

She said she doesn't regret her decision to become a civil service worker.

"THERE'S MORE money in janitorial work," Hinton said. "I am serious, there is. We even had a doctor who worked as a janitor for eight years."

For the past 20 years, she has worked with Jerry Raney, building custodian at the Physical Plant.

"We're all going to miss her," Raney said. "She's a dedicated hard worker. If I ever wanted a job done that was real particular, Minnie is the tops at doing it."

Many people probably see Hinton in the Communications Building cleaning rooms, but her job takes her all over campus, she said.

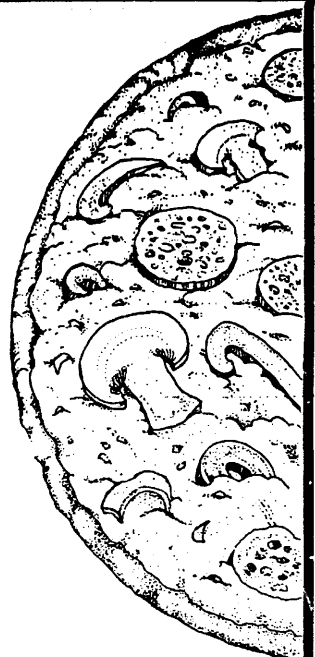

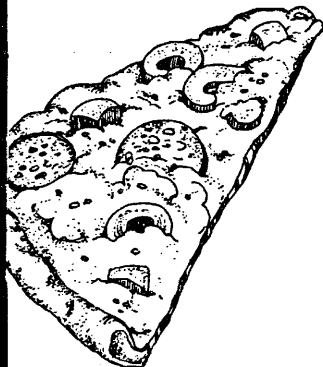

After she retires, Hinton plans to be more involved with organizations and community.

Abortion controversy could clear in time

THE SUPREME COURT has set for itself a summer deadline to rule on the federal government's right to regulate abortion. There is little doubt that as the weather gets hotter so will the debate on abortion.

Abortion is an exceedingly divisive issue in this country. The battle lines have been drawn between those who believe they are fighting for the life of unborn children and those who believe they are defending the right of women to do what they like with their bodies.

Nationwide surveys show that a slight majority of American's consider abortion to be a woman's right, but generally with some reservations. The most telling point of these surveys is that a vast majority thinks that even if the Supreme Court allows the states to regulate abortion it will not put an end to the practice.

ANTI-ABORTION GROUPS have staged protest after protest at abortion clinics throughout the country. Images of anti-abortion activists being dragged from the steps of these clinics have become a common feature of the newspapers and evening television news.

The pro-choice groups retaliated recently with a massive march on Washington. The march featured the Hollywood movie star set with such towers of morality as Morgan Fairchild.

So what has all this political pressure to do with an issue that is supposed to be a legal decision. It gives an indication that while abortion is supposed to be a legal issue, it has become a political, social and emotional issue.

The Supreme Court is supposed to decide the case on its constitutional merits, but the moral attitudes of this country, at least of the white middle class, have been reflected in the rulings of the court in the past. But these rulings hold little water by today's morality or jurisprudence.

WHILE BUSING IS still a hotly contested issue in this country, the separate but equal ruling that the Supreme Court used to justify segregation before Brown vs. Board of Education has been discredited. Similarly, the Court upheld the constitutionality of internment of Japanese people during World War II though many of them were U.S. citizens. Today this seems an outrageous flaunting of due process, but it was justified by the Court as necessary for national security.

So the nation's politics and morality can be a deciding factor in a decision of the Supreme Court, and an issue as controversial as abortion can become crystal clear with the passage of time.

Opinions from elsewhere

Clippings Howard News Service

Should the federal government penalize mothers and fathers who take care of their children at home instead of sending them to day-care centers? That would be the practical effect of child-care legislation sponsored by congressional leaders such as Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn. Mounting evidence suggests that such discrimination is not just unfair, but against the best interests of many children.

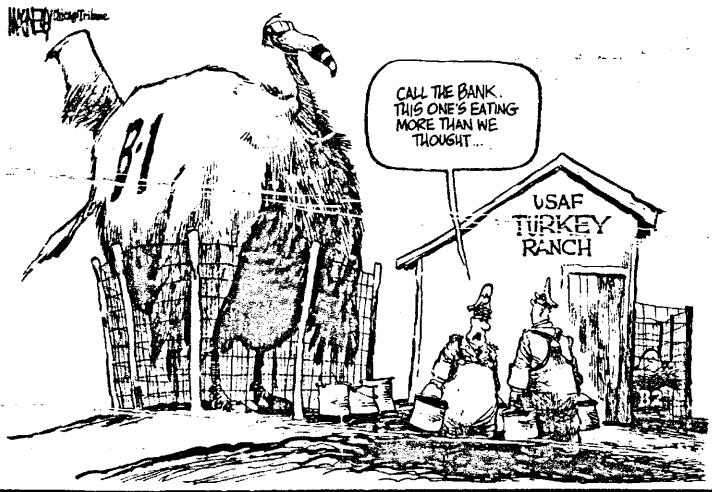

University of Maryland professor Harriet Presser recently published a study comparing health statistics for thousands of young children. Among those under age 3, she found "a consistent and statistically significant pattern in the prevalence of respiratory illnesses according to the place of care: lowest in the child's own home, higher in another home, and highest in a child-care center or nursery." Day-care infants under age 1 were more than twice as likely to suffer such diseases as their home-care peers.

Another pediatric researcher, Tufts University professor David Elkind, has concluded that many preschool children may be suffering emotional harm from pressures to learn reading, music, karate or other skills before they are ready.

Such premature efforts to give toddlers "a leg up on the competition," he says, "put young children at risk for short-term stress and long-term personality problems." Households in which both parents work, he suggests, are especially receptive to a mistaken "conception of infantile competence that suggests that children can cope with out-of-home care with little difficulty."

For many parents — such as single mothers trying to escape welfare dependency — day care is the only realistic choice. But it hardly follows that the government should subsidize such care for affluent, two-income couples at the direct expense of parents who are making financial sacrifices to raise their children at home. The well-being of children — not of the day-care lobby — should be our top priority.

Comics funny without 'Bloom County'

By Curtis Winston
Staff Writer

There will be a void to fill this August when Berke Breathed's popular comic strip "Bloom County" leaves the funny pages. Or will there?

Breathed, who announced last week that he is closing the borders to the county in which Opus the Penguin, Milo Bloom and Bill the Cat live, will start a new Sunday-only strip. Breathed leaves comics fans speculating on the focus of the new strip.

"A good comic strip is no more eternal than a ripe melon," Breathed said in a statement released by his syndicator, the Washington Post Writers Group.

He asked his syndicate "not to elaborate on the statement of his reasons," a letter from the Writers Group states.

Breathed obviously is burned out. He has run out of new gags for his endless array of characters. Killing, then bringing back his characters has gotten stale. It was fun at first, but now ...

MAYBE BREATHED feels his strip is too old. Age is an issue he raised in canceling "Bloom County," which has run for barely a decade.

"The ugly truth is that in most cases, comics age less gracefully than their creators," he said, adding, "Bloom County" is retiring before the stretch marks show."

But then Breathed hasn't taken into account such ripe, yet good-tasting melons as "Peanuts," "Gasoline Alley," "Dick Tracy" and "Pogo."

Charles Schultz' "Peanuts," which chronicles the never-ending childhood of Charlie Brown and company, has endured for better than a quarter-century now.

Although "Peanuts" reached its height in popularity during the late 1960s, when Brown's beagle, Snoopy, flew his doghouse to the moon, that strip's characters have set a precedent for new generations of loud-mouthed, round-headed kids and intelligent animals.

A NEW BREED of strips, most notably, Bill Watterson's "Calvin and Hobbes," have picked up where "Peanuts" has left off. Calvin, a smart-mouthed, round-headed brat, is the only character in the strip who can talk to his stuffed tiger, Hobbes.

Calvin's wild imagination has provided Watterson with a seemingly endless array of space voyages, dinosaur attacks and wagon rides to the death.

But Breathed's statement on the aging of a comic strip is true to some extent. After all, how many times can Dagwood (Biondie's husband in the long-running strip "Blondie") kick a traveling salesman off of his doorstep and still be funny?

However, there are exceptions, most notably the still-published strips from the "Golden Age" of newspaper funnies, which is generally recognized as the early part of this century. These strips have been around for years and are still funny and fresh.

"GASOLINE ALLEY," which has been going since 1919, was the first strip to actually have an infant human character grow up in the actual chronological age of real people. When the character, Skeezix, was 30 years old, so was the strip.

Chronicle the life of the Wallet Family, "Gasoline Alley" endures today as the pioneer of the family comic. Newer strips, such as "Cathy," "For Better or for Worse," "Hi and Lois" and the long-running panel, "Family Circus," expand the trend of real-life situation comedy in ink.

"Dick Tracy," which was started by the late Chester Gould in 1931 continues to invent new devices for a modern age of law enforcement. It was one of the pioneers of the adventure comic. Along with the "The Phantom," another comic strip of the 1930s, "Dick Tracy" was a precursor to the superhero comic books.

In the 1930s, Detective Tracy chased down bootleggers and gangsters. He was the first to wear a two-way wrist television-radio. Ever advancing, Tracy is well equipped these days to fight computer saboteurs, although if you've been reading his latest adventure, one isn't really sure what will happen next.

"POGO," A POPULAR politically oriented comic of the 1960s, recently came back to life after the death of its artist and subsequent production costs killed it in the mid-1970s.

Created by Walt Killely, "Pogo" is named after its title character, Pogo the opossum, who lives in the Okefenokee Swamp with Professor Howland the owl, Albert Alligator, Churchy LeFemme the turtle and other swamp critters.

Much of the Pogo's fame came from his biting, yet terribly truthful political commentary, which is still evident in today's panels, drawn by Larry Doyle and Neal Sternecky. "Pogo" opened the door (or can of worms, depending on point of view) to other "political" strips getting on the "funnies" page.

"Doonesbury" by Garry Trudeau is probably the tops of today's political bunch. In 1975, Trudeau was the first comic strip artist to win a Pulitzer prize for editorial cartooning. Breathed also has garnered a Pulitzer for his strip.

TRUDEAU'S STRIP, which began in the early 1970s as a sometimes obscene and radical view of college life at Yale, has evolved into a "yuppie" strip, with its main characters now holding respectable jobs.

The new "Pogo" makes fun of "Doonesbury," with its animals drawn with the gloomy, baggy-eyed look of the "Doonesbury" bunch. But "Pogo" also blatantly takes jabs at itself.

"Where's the gag," asks a swamp frog, as the rest of the Okefenokee clan throw pies at one another. Pogo, sitting idly by, always observing, says "the gag ended long ago."

For Breathed, the gag ends in August, whether the public is ready or not. "Bloom County" has turned into the kind of strip Breathed detests — something with cute, adorable creatures that spur T-shirt, stuffed animal, book and calendar sales.

Bill the Cat was created in reaction to the mass popularity of the sickly cute, fat cat in "Garfield" had attained. Bill is just plain sick and ugly. Yet people love him and want him to be a write-in candidate for president.

Breathed has been caught in a vicious circle. While trying very hard not to pander to the needs of a pop culture, his strip has become one of the more popular attractions on any comics page.

Whatever Breathed ends up drawing, it will likely be something that can still maintain the radical, counter-culture integrity that Breathed obviously desires. In order to achieve this, the strip must avoid the cuteness and wit that make strips too popular for their own good.

Endless miles, finding life's dreams

University grad student a doer despite hereditary cell disease

By Jackie Lay
Student Writer

Carolyn Rowley is a little different from most University students.

Not because she came to Carbondale from California to earn her doctorate in psychology. Not because she was a practicing psychologist at 23. Not because she has jumped 14,500 feet from an airplane. Not because she has owned three Mercedes-Benz automobiles since she was 16.

The major difference between Rowley and other University students is that she has an incurable disease known as sickle cell anemia.

Sickle cell anemia, a chronic hereditary disease of the red blood cells, afflicts one out of 50,000 blacks yearly.

The 27-year-old graduate student learned she has sickle cell anemia when she was three years old.

"While lying on the couch, I told my mom that I had to go to the bathroom. She told me to go, meaning, you're three you can walk," Rowley said.

"I couldn't go. My dad overheard the conversation and picked me up and took me to the bathroom. I was in a lot of pain, so he took me to the hospital," she said.

A WEEK LATER, she was diagnosed with the disease.

Although the disease primarily affects blacks, it has been known to affect Greeks, Italians, those of African descent and other Mediterranean ethnics.

An individual can carry the trait without having the disease.

One or both parents must carry a trait of the hereditary disease in order for their offspring to contract it.

In Carolyn's case, both of her parents were trait carriers.

Trait carriers have a 25 percent chance of having a child with sickle cell, a 50 percent chance of passing the trait and a 25 percent chance of their child having normal hemoglobin.

Carolyn's only sibling, Alison, carries the trait.

Many people who have sickle cell live between 25 to 32 years. Most do not live to be 40, Carolyn said.

There are two kinds of symptoms in sickle cell anemia, primary and secondary.

Primary symptoms are when a crisis is involved. A crisis is when the red blood cells, which are sickle shaped, tend to stick together.

THE CELLS CLOG the arteries and veins, cutting off oxygen. This results in pain in the back, ankles, knees and joints.

A few things that can trigger a crisis are stress and cold weather.

Altitude also is a major effect of causing a crisis, but this didn't scare Carolyn.

"Skydiving is something that I have always wanted to do. I was scared at first, but once I got up in the air, I knew that I was going to do it."

body," Carolyn said. "But I had to do it without my doctors permission."

Rowley admits that because of her Christian convictions she doesn't like to lie, but she had to when it came to doing what she had always wanted.

"On the flying application where they ask if you have any illness or handicap that might be effected by this, I said no," she said. "After jumping, I called my doctor. She said, well, at least you're okay."

The only problem she experienced during the jump was when her parachute didn't open and she had to use her reserve chute, Rowley said.

With all the faith she has in God she said, "I didn't think it was time to die right then. But if it was," she added, "oh well."

THE SECONDARY SYMPTOMS include chronic pain that leaves the person feeling tired, listless and fatigued.

Rowley admits that she is pretty strong and does not give in to the pain all the time.

She said that her first semester at the University was very traumatic.

"When I first came here, I was getting sick about once every 10 days (this varies)," she said. "The people here were very prejudiced and because of the medical system, I almost died."

"St. Josephs in Murphysboro was the first hospital that I went to, and I wasn't being treated there. They didn't know me. I told them to call my doctor in California, but their problem was with drugs."

"I needed a certain amount of Demerol (a pain reliever) to ease the pain that I was feeling. For them, it was a high amount."

THE FACT THAT I was black, a professional, knew just as much, if not more about sickle cell than they did, knew my medication and how much to take and was familiar with needle sizes in drawing blood, they suspected that I was a drug addict and banned me within a 100-yard radius," Rowley said. "I am not a drug addict."

This left her with no where to go for treatment, an extreme crisis on her hands and extraordinary pain.

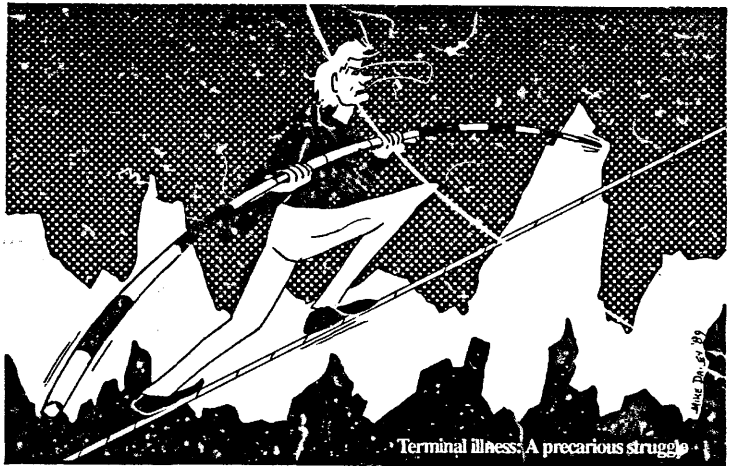

"For two days I was in pain to the point where I couldn't

After having to prove herself of not being addicted to drugs, by going to Jackson County Community Mental Health Center, Carolyn finally found Dr. Fasnacht in Carbondale.

Terminal illness: A precarious struggle

SIU-C law student fights fear of sclerosis with friends' help

Life after college for most students involves anxieties associated with seeking employment, relocating, things John Chism might consider as being simple readjustments.

He has more serious concerns.

Chism is afflicted by a rare and usually fatal disease called amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS).

Ever since baseball great Lou Gehrig died of ALS in 1941, it has been commonly known as Lou Gehrig's disease.

ALS is a disorder that causes gradual deterioration of motor nerve cells, which control virtually all voluntary muscles and progressive muscular weakness.

The first indications of the disease include a loss of strength, a difficulty in speaking and swallowing or the twitching of limb muscles.

Muscle reflexes heighten, but there is not strength or dexterity in them.

"The muscles are receiving the impulses, but they don't know what to do with them," Chism explained.

Eventually people with ALS lose their ability to walk, talk and breath.

About five Americans in 1 million are stricken annually with ALS. It is more common among men between the ages of 35 and 65.

There is no specific treatment, no cure and no known cause. What is known is that 25 percent of the people diagnosed lead normal lives after three years and 75 percent are terminal within two to three years.

Chism, a 35-year-old law student from Springfield, whotically healthy, helping other people, having a healthy concept of death and long talks with God are what helps her handle her disease.

"I'VE BEEN A vegetarian for 14 years and I've fasted for 7 to 14 days before to cleanse myself," she said. "I only eat because I have to."

Rowley said that helping people also helps her.

"I've wanted to help others ever since I was young. I have a genuine concern for people."

Rowley also plans to adopt older children who have susical people and support groups for those with sickle cell.

"The nurses in L.A. would ask me to mentor other sickle cell patients in the hospital because they were depressed," Carolyn said.

SO, WHO MENTORS Carolyn?

"It helps me to help others, I talk to God," she said.

"It's not just me, but I think that many people with sickle cell wish that every time they had a crisis that it was the last one."

Rowley says that she is stronger because she has had to deal with so much more than most people.

"I have had to work twice as hard as most people because I am sick and time is taken away from me," she said.

Carolyn said she is stronger because she has had to deal with so much more than most people.

"People are putting all types of money into AIDS, Cancer, and other types of diseases and none into sickle cell. When it comes to a black disease, people don't give any credence for it. More research is needed."

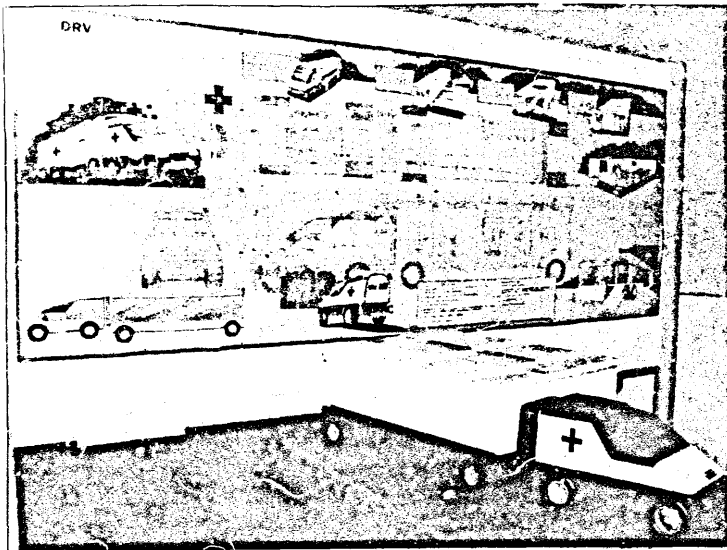

ALISON, HER SISTER, has done a documentary on the disease, including information about Carolyn in specifics.

A movie based on Rowley's life and an autobiography are forthcoming, Rowley said.

Rowley said she makes long-range plans because she doesn't know how long she will live, but added that if she dies tomorrow she will have led a good life.

She said she wanted to be a singer, model, photographer, skydiver, stewardess, pilot and a psychologist, among a few other things.

"I've done everything that I could do to make the most of my life."

Robert Ufer's design of a disaster relief vehicle won the "best of the show" prize at Design '89, the first student competition for undergraduates organized by Design Initiative Now, a registered student organization in the School of Art and Design.

Undergrads' art shown in contest

Close to 60 original models, posters and product designs are exhibited in the Student Center Ballroom A as part of Design '89, the first-ever student competition for undergraduates in the School of Art and Design.

Design Initiative Now, a registered student organization in the School of Art and Design, organized the exhibition, which is entirely student built.

The show features 20 elaborate entries from juniors and seniors in product design and visual communication from the University's design program.

Judgings took place at the exhibition's debut on Sunday, according to Sunand Bhattacharya, product design professor and the faculty adviser for Design Initiative Now.

Six awards for excellence were given to:

■ Robert Ufer, Best of Show, for his concept and model design of a disaster relief vehicle, which could be used in the event of an earthquake.

■ Brian Lawrence, best rendering in product design.

■ Kevin Connelly, best model in product design.

■ David Berk, best concept in product design.

■ Sunny Yin Wang, best illustration in visual communication.

■ Lisa Peterson, best concept in visual communication.

Judges for the first annual Design '89 were Hari Kumar, professor at the University of Cincinnati, and Brent Kington, director of the School of Art and Design at SIU-C.

Founder of University High School dies at 100

University News Service

Fount G. Warren, the man who organized University High School at SIU-C and headed the University's education department in its early years, died May 5 in St. Mary's Hospital in Grand Rapids, Mich. He was 100.

He came to Carbondale in 1913 at the request of the late SIU President Henry W.

Shryock to organize a University high school. Mr. Warren taught mathematics and served as the school's principal. In those days, University High School was on the top floor of the Allyn Building and the entire SIU campus consisted of four buildings.

During the next 46 years, Mr. Warren saw a small rural teachers' college expand into a large university.

He joined SIU-C's education department after earning a master's degree at the University of Chicago. He stayed with the department until he retired in 1959, after chairing the department for 20 years.

The body was cremated. In keeping with Mr. Warren's request, no memorial services are planned.

Faculty reps favor tuition-waiver bill

By Lisa Miller
Staff Writer

With a unanimous vote, the University's faculty senate passed a resolution to support a bill that would provide tuition waivers for children of University employees attending SIU.

The resolution is a show of support from the University if the senate passes the bill.

Harris Rubin, faculty senate member, said the bill is in the Illinois Senate and will be decided upon in the summer.

A similar bill providing tuition waivers for children of University of Illinois employees was not supported by U of I, Rubin said.

The reason for U of I not supporting the bill is still unknown, Rubin said.

The faculty senate suggested further research was needed on the bill, but the resolution was passed regardless.

In other business, faculty senate chairman, Donald Paige said he had met with other faculty senate chairs in Springfield to discuss education funding.

Paige also met with Barbara Curry, chairwoman for the Illinois House subcommittee on higher education, to present facts to her on the declining governmental funding.

said he first became aware of ALS symptoms last August. "Things started acting weird," he said. "My left forearm was experiencing weakness and something like a twitch, tremor, or spasm." At the time, Chism said he thought the problem could have been any number of things.

"I had been active, so I attributed it (the twitch) to muscle fatigue," Chism said. "I even thought it had something to do with school. Being a law student is stressful."

By October, Chism noticed a change in the physical appearance of his left arm. Then he decided to go to the campus Health Service.

Chism's quest for answers began with a visit to the campus health center. "They ran tests and referred me to a neurologist in Carbondale," Chism said.

According to Chism, the neurologist diagnosed the ALS, but he did not explain the consequences.

"I did not get a full explanation of the ramifications of having ALS," he said.

In February, Chism went to the SIU School of Medicine, where a medical student and a staff neurologist confirmed the earlier diagnosis and provided some details about ALS.

Chism got further confirmation in St. Louis from the top neurologist in the Midwest, Dr. Micheal Brooke, he said.

"Brooke told me that 80 percent of the people diagnosed with ALS are usually terminal within two to three years," Chism said.

Chism expressed doubts about the prognosis.

"I don't think two to three years is valid," Chism said. "They really can't set a timetable." Although there is no cure for ALS, Brooke recommended that Chism take amino acid, an over-the-counter medication, to reduce some of the symptoms.

In addition, Chism said he has changed his diet.

"I have cut out red meats. I am on a macro biotic diet that primarily consists of legumes and vegetables, Chism said."

Since March the deterioration has progressed from his left arm to the other extremities of his body.

"There's no spring left in my legs," Chism said.

In dealing with ALS, Chism said his emotions have ranged from anger, frustration, fear and confusion.

"When anger surfaces, I ask myself 'why me?'" Chism said. "Other times I have been scared to death. Being told there is no known cure or cause is bad enough. But seeing my arm, then my body not do what it has done for 35 years is not only scary, but also frustrating."

"More frustrating is that I've always been an independent person. Now I have to become dependent and learn to accept help from people," Chism said.

Some of the difficulties Chism has been experiencing are opening buttons and picking up combs.

The strange aspect of having ALS is that there is no pain associated with the disease, he said.

Most of Chism's friends at the law school know about his affliction.

"Some have been my support system, while others have avoided me," Chism said. "When they say 'I don't know what to say,' I respond by telling them I understand."

People have a more difficult time dealing with Chism's ALS than he does, he said.

According to Chism there are no professional ALS support groups in Carbondale. He said the closest support group he knows of is the Muscular Dystrophy Association support groups in St. Louis and Cape Girardeau. Although marriage and a law practice are still very much in his future, Chism said he has had to alter some of his plans.

"Now I plan to set short-term goals that seem realistic," he said.

"I've always enjoyed looking at the moon, seeing the sunset and stopping to smell the roses," Chism said. "The mind is as powerful as any medicine. It's up to me and my will power and whatever love that can be generated."

"WE HAVE have 800 state wards. The only kids we have are under guardianship. These are older kids, maybe handicapped. These kids have to wait months, even years to be adopted, as opposed to a healthy, white infant," Tom Teague said.

Teague cited a growing trend among 15 to 20-year-old women as the main cause of the infant shortage, which he attributes to changing societal attitudes.

"It's definitely contributed to the shortage of children available (for adoption). It used to be that 95 percent of young women pregnant cut out of wedlock put their babies up for adoption. Ninety-five percent keep their babies now," he said.

Teague said a lot of peer and family pressure is exerted on young women to keep their babies.

BARBER SAID the agency only offers adoption services because their overall services to children, placing sexual and physically abused children, children from broken homes, older children and children with only one parent surrendering custody.

The shortage of infants with the "desirable characteristics" has brought about the advertising, Barber said.

"Right now, we don't have any one to five year-old children to place and we have a seven-year waiting list for our current clients. We don't even take new applications. Last year, we had only two infants out of the 67 children we placed in homes. So they go elsewhere to find babies," she said.

Whatever the motivation behind it, adoption advertising is seen by many prospective adoptive parents as a quick and relatively inexpensive alternative to the time-consuming formal adoption process.

"TODAY, PEOPLE are waiting longer before they start families. You have Yuppies who have reached a certain point in their lives where they have the house, they have the BMW, now they want to have children."

Bashaw said in the convenience-oriented American society, people refuse to wait for anything, much less a baby, after an important decision is made.

"These people are not used to standing in line to go to the movies, much less to get a baby," he said.

A former client of an adoption agency confirmed what Bashaw said, stipulating similar questions.

"The waiting list right now stands at the 10-year mark and that's only after you fill out all the forms and pass all their tests and then you don't even know what you're getting. All we want to do is adopt a baby. Why is that so difficult?" Joanne Lindsay, of Connecticut, said.

LINDSAY AND her husband, John, are both career executives and own a house in a suburb within commuting distance of New York. They had advertised in several college and East Coast publications for nine months before successfully adopting a two-week-old infant last year.

The couple had been trying to adopt for five years previously.

Mrs. Lindsay, who now works part-time in order to care for the couple's daughter, said the emotional aspect of the waiting lists were the hardest to bear.

"Everyday you wake up and think, 'God, let it be today,' but the call never comes and your heart breaks," she said.

CATHY WINER, a 1984 graduate of the University, said she and her husband, who now live in Vermont, are still trying to adopt through classified advertisements, despite months of anticipation.

"We've been trying to adopt for at least six months. It's hard to say if we're having any success. We've had one reply, but we'll have to wait and see," she said.

The Winers have tried several different adoption agencies, Mrs. Winer said, but all have waiting lists.

"An (adoption) agency recommended that we try this because they are just so swamped. We're advertising in about 10 different papers. I went to school at Southern (Illinois University), so we decided to maybe go this route," she said.

WINER SAID while she and her husband aren't particularly concerned about an infant's ethnic origins, it was an important factor in an adoption.

"In a way. Primarily, we'd obviously prefer a healthy baby. We'd also prefer a white baby, but we would consider others. It would be hard though. Vermont has an almost all-white population and sometimes it isn't the most liberal place in the world. We wouldn't want the baby to be the only one (a minority) in town and in school or to be made fun of," she said.

Beyond the emotional aspect lies the inevitable questions of legality.

John Clemons, a Carbondale attorney who deals with adoptions, said adoption advertisements had opened "an entirely new chapter" of interpretations of the current adoption statutes.

He said in order for an adoption to take place, the child has to be available for adoption, with the parents giving up custody rights or having been deemed unfit guardians by the state concerned.

HOWEVER, CLEMONS said with the advent of adoption advertising, a fine ethical line has been drawn between the acceptable and the illegal.

"Advertising is the problem. If you pay for a kid, then, yes, it is definitely illegal. The idea is they cannot actually buy a kid," he said.

Illinois statutes state no one person or agency can pay monetary compensation for custody of a child, Clemons said. However, the party is allowed to pay for reasonable medical expenses, maybe other expenses but it varies form case to case.

Many problems may occur through private adoptions that aren't state supervised, for athletic teams, will be provided for on the new travel advance policy, Hindersman said.

However, monetary restrictions will be put on these groups, Hindersman added.

According to John Day, executive director of the LAC, the University was giving too much money to too many travelers.

"Giving so much money prior to the trip does not comply with the laws concerning travel advances," Day said.

The old policy provided University employees and athletic teams with money from University accounts before a trip was taken, Hindersman said. The new policy provides money that comes from a temporary loan from the Bursar's Office for "out-of-pocket" expenses in the form of reimbursement.

Advances under the new policy are not provided for expenses, which may be billed directly to a University account or on a corporate credit card issued by the University, Hindersman said.

A corporate credit card is an American Express Card that can be obtained by University employees, Hindersman said. It may be used to pay only travel expenses and hotel accommodations.

Money for travel must be approved by the fiscal officer of the account from which the travel expenses will be charged, Hindersman said.

Restrictions have been put on the amount of money given for travel, Hindersman said.

Five thousand has been allowed for football and $2,000 for all other teams. Recruitment travel for athletes is $750 per person. Domestic travel provides $2,000 per group and $500 per person. International travel provides $1,000 per person.

Graduate students are included in the new travel advance policy, Hindersman said. A graduate student can receive an advance when they travel on University-related business and stay for a week or longer.

Travel funds are not to be advanced to students, guests, members of committees, interviewees, or any other people not on the University payroll, Hindersman said.

Exceptions can be approved by an appointed vice president when the situation would serve in the best interests of the University, Hindersman said.

According to Hindersman, the University is not alone in changing its travel advance policy.

"Many universities in Illinois, including the University of Illinois, have been in violation and are changing their travel advance policies," Hindersman said.

ADOPTION, from Page 8

Barber said.

"There is a so-called 'gray market' where people pay a certain amount for babies for a healthy, white infant. It's not legal, but it's difficult to prove and someone undoubtedly makes quite a bit of money," she said.

Barber said many pregnant women don't know they have alternatives to adoption and the role of an adoption agency is to educate them and safeguard those rights.

ALTHOUGH BARBER said she understood and sympathized with the childless couples' plight, in her opinion, it is the best course of action for all concerned to go through an adoption agency.

"We offer counseling to the mother and the prospective family. It's a hard time for a girl. She needs to think about the alternatives available. The family needs to have an orientation to adoption, to go through something to prepare them for the changes the baby will make to their lives," she said.

Barber said agencies do a home check to ensure a safe environment and adequate space for the child. The family is licenced, fingerprinted and checked for any communicable diseases health they might pass on to the child.

Daria Wexsten, certified social worker with the Lutheran Child and Family Services in West Frankfort, said adoption advertising and adoption agencies need not be rivals.

"WELL, THERE doesn't have to be any animosity. It can be a very nice complement to our services. We call this an identified adoption. We sometimes recommend this to our clients. Our advice is when they identify the child, to involve a licenced agency," she said.

Wexsten said each state has different laws and an agency's knowledge of interstate and international adoption laws, as well as counseling and preparation for the impact of the adoption is an invaluable source for prospective parents.

"Our stand on the issue (of advertising) is that if it's going to take place, we prefer to be involved at some point. We want to help the child and the family to the best of our abilities. There's more to preparing for an adoption than the legal aspect," she said.

SIU family's donation creates lecture series fund for R-TV

University News Service

Owners of radio station WCIL have provided the SIU-C Foundation with a gift of $10,000 for seed money for an endowed lectureship in memory of the late Paul F. McRoy, WCIL founder.

Paul H. and Charlotte McRoy presented the money that will bring the lecture series to SIU-C's Department of Radio-Television. When fully funded, the series hopes to attract national broadcasting leaders for seminars, lectures and formal meetings.

"I am delighted that the department wanted to establish this and even more delighted that they wanted to do it in my father's name," McRoy said. "He was, after all, a pioneer in Southern Illinois broadcasting."

The elder McRoy, a Carbondale native, started his station in 1946, a time when the only radio stations in the area were in Herrin and Harrisburg. McRoy's early attempt in the FM market was unsuccessful, so he turned to AM, and played a combination of 78 rpm records and live music, which his son described as "hillbilly bands."

McRoy had no formal training in either business or radio. He graduated from Southern Illinois Normal University in 1934 with a degree in education.

Many of the people McRoy hired to do live broadcasting for the station were from SIU-C's radio-television department, according to Joe S. Foote, Department of Radio-Television.

"It's given literally hundreds of future broadcasters the chance to get their start in business," Foote said. "WCIL has had quite an impact on our program over the years."

"Many of the pioneers like Paul McRoy stood for strong localism and public service," Foote said. "We'd like to resurrect some of those values."

McRoy was a member of the President's Council and the Foundation's board of directors. He also served as president of the Alumni Association board in 1958-59. McRoy's son, Paul, and his wife both graduated from the University in 1964, and their two children are undergraduate students at SIU-C now.

"This gift is a concrete extension of the family tradition of involvement in SIU," Rex Ball, Foundation president, said. "It's a way of ensuring that all future generations benefit."

Students win R-TV awards

From press releases

Ten SIU-C radio-television students were honored with awards or scholarships by the Illinois News Broadcasters at its spring convention.

Seven students won awards in four of seven categories in competition.

James Thomas, senior from Geneseo, tied for first place in TV News reporting. Amy Hasten, a December 1988 graduate from Peoria, took second in this category.

Robert Irzyk, also a December 1988 graduate, won first place in the sports reporting category. Irzyk is from Chicago. Another Chicagoan, Junior Suzanne Burda, took second place in this category.

In the radio categories, Martin McKee, senior from Mansfield, won first place in sports reporting. Corey Alan Fergie, senior from Kankakee, took second.

Michelle Pullen, senior from Galesburg, took second place in radio news reporting.

Pullen also was one of three radio-television students awarded a scholarship.

Stephan Grzanich, junior from West Frankfort and J. Michael McCormick, junior from Germantown, Tenn., also were awarded scholarships.

Grzanich, a reporter from WCIL AM-FM, also received a second-place award for radio news reporting from the Illinois Associated Press during the convention.

The scholarship winners were chosen from 16 finalists representing colleges and universities throughout Illinois. Two additional INBA scholarships were awarded to students from Illinois State University and Eastern Illinois University.

The awards were presented to students who show outstanding promise for careers in broadcast journalism and are based on academic achievement and media experience.

The convention was held May 6 in Springfield. Students attending the convention are members of Students in the Illinois News Broadcasters Association.

'Field of Dreams' a movie like they used to make

By Wayne Wallace
Entertainment Editor

The next time someone tells you they don't make movies like they used to, take them to see "Field of Dreams."

The fantasy mixes the quixotic imagination of "Back to the Future" with the old-fashioned hokum of "It's a Wonderful Life" to produce a modern-day fairy tale rivaling Gary Cooper's "Pride of the Yankees" in its unreserved sentiment for America's national pastime.

"Field of Dreams" is a

movie for anyone who's ever played catch with their dad in the back yard, but more importantly it's for anyone who missed out on that treasured experience.

To paraphrase Sinatra, "Fairy tales can come true if you're young at heart." This theme is at the core of "Field of Dreams."

Five major characters seek fulfillment of a dream, and five corresponding sub-plots intertwine intricately throughout the course of the movie.

The major plotline concerns protagonist Ray Kinsella, an Iowa farmer, who, at the advice of a voice he hears in his corn field, plows under his major crop to build a baseball diamond.

His child-like faith in the voice echoes the innocence of youth and the purity once symbolized by baseball in our society.

Kinsella, portrayed by Kevin Costner, heir to Jimmy Stewart's throne as the all-American everyman, substitutes his love of baseball for the fatherly love that was never exchanged between his dad and him.

Subconsciously for Kinsella, erecting the baseball field is an expression of love for his deceased father, although he builds it on the pretext that the hallowed grounds will serve as the playing field for Shoeless Joe Jackson, his father's

Shoeless Joe and seven other members of the 1919 Chicago White Sox, who threw the that year's World Series, find sanctuary on Kinsella's magic diamond after having faced an eternity without baseball.

Unlike that dreadful Charlie Sheen disaster "Major League," which could be an ode to incompetence, "Field of Dreams" is a moving look at the reason why people still love baseball and still pursue dreams.

12th annual Paul Robeson Awards presented

By Kathleen DeBo
Staff Writer

The 12th Annual Paul Robeson Awards Program was highlighted by the presentation of almost 100 awards and a poetry and prose performance led by Arthur Myles, graduate student in theater, Monday night in the Student Center Auditorium.

Stephanie Davis, junior in electronics management, was awarded both the $100 Kenneth Garrison Memorial Scholarship, and the Roby Scholarship Award, worth $150.

The Roby Scholarship Award is given to a senior in the Black Affairs Council with a 3.5 or greater grade point average. The Garrison scholarship is given to a fraternity or sorority member with a 3.6 or higher GPA. Davis a member of Zeta Phi Beta sorority.

The Roby Humanitarian Award went to Patricia Black-

Clay, academic adviser for medical preparation, for outstanding service to the Black Affairs Council.

The Academic Excellence Award was awarded posthumously to Maurice E. Smith, a senior in health care management, for his 3.5 or greater GPA. Smith, a second lieutenant in the Army medical service corps, died April 9 of complications from meningitis.

The Roby Service Award for contributions to the University and community went to Seymour Bryson, assistant to the president for affirmative action.

Winners of the Roby Athletic Awards, chosen by Intercollegiate Athletics, were football player Ron Kirk and women's basketball player Dana Fitzpatrick. The awards were presented by Jim Hart, athletics director, and Charlotte West, associate athletics director.

Delta Sigma Theta sorority received the Roby Involvement Award, given to a Black Affairs Council organization. Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority won the Roby Programming Award, given to the council organization with one or more outstanding events.

Dionne Hawkins, sophomore in theater, received the Ira Adridge Scholarship, named for a living emeritus professor and noted actor.

Rea: Bill may help care crisis

By Jackie Spinner
Staff Writer

Health care legislation sponsored in part by State Sen. Jim Rea, D-Christopher, would provide incentives for health care personnel in underserved areas such as Southern Illinois, if passed by the General Assembly.

The package, "Rx for Illinois," passed the Senate Committee on Public Health, Welfare and Corrections May 4. The bill was read for the second time on the Senate floor Tuesday.

"We must pull together as a state to solve the health care crisis," Rea said.

A proposed Family Practice Residency Act would waive residency requirements for doctors, nurses and other health care professionals who are eligible for medical scholarships if they practice in an underserved area of Illinois after graduation.

An underserved area is one that lacks health care professionals or services.

One of the problems facing rural communities is the lack of physicians to care for babies, Rea said.

"Of the 11 counties I serve in my district, only three have service to care for babies," he explained.

Another proposal in the package would supplement the income of nurses by $1,200 in rural cities and towns with less than 50,000 people.

If passed, the Senate joint resolution 26 would create a task force among the departments of Professional Regulation, Public Health, Commerce and Community Affairs, Insurance and the Illinois State Scholarship Commission under the Board of Higher Education. The task force would produce a written plan by early 1990 to implement a professional volunteer program for rural areas.

13 favorable votes were cast. A revote was suggested by three judicial review board members. The review board members said not enough supporting votes were cast to pass the amendment.

Summer senate supporters called last night's emergency meeting in order to put the amendment on the floor for a revote. This time it passed with 12 members in favor and two against. One senator abstained from voting.

Susan Hall, USG senator, was opposed to the amendment.

"This (amendment) already failed once," she said. "They just keep on bringing it up again and again until they get a favorable vote."

Head football coach Bob Smith, who has never taken a public stance on the football issue, said the debate has hampered the team's recruiting.

Hall said this strategy has been used in the past by several senators.

Chuck Hagerman, committee for internal affairs chairman and writer of the amendment, said a summer senate was needed to keep the system of checks and balances intact over the summer.

Correct addresses aid in receiving refund checks

By Jeanne Bickler
Staff Writer

Some students will be receiving refund checks from the Illinois State Scholarship Commission and having the correct address on file will assure their arrival, Pam Britton, Financial Aid director, said.

"When we are able to determine who gets the refund, we will get it to them," Britton said. "We are working on that now."

"At this point, the Financial Aid office cannot tell anyone who will be receiving the refund, because we don't know yet who they will be," Daniel Mann, associate director of the office of Student Work and Financial Assistance, said.

Not all students with ISSC awards will receive the refund, but those who do will receive $29.40, Britton said.

Since tuition increased in the middle of a school year, the Board of Trustees waived the increase amount for ISSC recipients, Mann said.

The legislature gave ISSC $5.7 million to award to students with mid-tuition increases at state universities, he said, bringing about the refund for some students.

The ISSC then chose to recompute students' award amounts for spring semester. This changed the award amounts, he said.

Anyone expecting a refund check should know that it will be mailed to their local mailing address, Janet Finnerty, public information specialist for the office of Student Work and Financial Assistance, said. Students who are going home for the summer should be sure to put their home address on the address change forms.

The changes can be made at the office of Student Work and Financial Assistance or the office of Admissions and Records, Finnerty said.

The refunds are expected to be mailed out within the next few weeks, Britton said.

Elvis haunts SIU Arena with 'King'-sized appetite

By Wayne Wallace
Entertainment Editor

Jelly doughnuts are missing and Arena custodians are pointing an accusing finger at the King.

Brace yourself. The ghost of Elvis Presley haunts the SIU Arena.

It seems that on Oct. 27, 1976, just 10 months away from his early grave, Colonel Tom Parker's favorite acquisition (and Colonel Sanders' favorite customer) sold out the Arena to an audience of screaming 35-year-old women.

Spookier still is the fact that peanut magnate Jimmy Carter had appeared on campus Oct. 26 — one day before. Imagine Elvis and Jimmy both playing gigs here within the same 24 hours.

ONE OF THEM was days away from being elected President. The other was months away from a throne in Rock 'n' Roll Heaven.

But while Elvis is dead, and Jimmy might as well be, one fact remains. The spirit of the King just won't rest.

Submitted for your approval:

It was a cold winter night, Jan. 8, 1989, the King's birthday. A night janitor had just gotten off work and was walking through the Arena parking lot.

This janitor has asked to be identified only as M.C. (mystery custodian) for fear that Elvis' ghost might kill him with karate.

AS M.C. APPROACHED his car, he noticed someone had written something on the hood. Wiped in the dust on his car was a number, "54." Then he realized on Jan. 8, 1989, Elvis would have turned 54.

M.C. quickly noted the time, 11:54 p.m.

The janitor jumped in his car and drove away as fast as he could, but his nightmare wasn't over. Turning on his radio, M.C. was shocked to hear Elvis singing "That's All Right, Mama," a song the King recorded for Sun Records — in 1954.

Need more proof?

ARENA SECURITY guards, who wish to remain anonymous for the safety of their families, claim that all kinds of food, from pastries to beef pot pies to spaghetti, frequently turn up missing from their lunchboxes.

These Arena workers cite a hungry Elvis phantom as the source of the disappearances, noting that the King is partial to Vienna sausages and McRib's. Elvis simply won't eat yogurt, they said.

Night shift janitors also report hearing a faint, lone voice that cries out around midnight each night.

Usually the voice will either sing "Viva Las Vegas" or "My Way," according to one custodian. There are no liquor cabinets in the Arena's janitor closets. Daily Egyptian reporters investigating the phenomenon checked.

THE GREAT MYSTERY here is not the supernatural occurrences themselves, but why Elvis picked SIU-C as his eternal haunting ground.

Some say it's Bob Harris' fault. Harris, director of University security, was in charge of driving Elvis from the Williamson County Airport to the Arena on the night of Oct. 27, 1976.

Harris recently admitted that on the ride to the Arena, the King was noticeably quiet.

"His security people told me he wouldn't talk much because he had to force himself to remember all the words to his songs," Harris said.

THE ONLY PRE-CONCERT words Elvis exchanged with Harris concerned Neely Hall. "I told him that's where all the girls were, so he asked me if I'd take him there after the concert."

Thinking the King was just joking, Harris never made that Neely Hall pit stop. He admits today that this might have been the biggest mistake of his life.

"It's the only reason I can think of why he'd want to haunt us," Harris said.

Think again, Bob.

Harris said Elvis' concert was one of the best he's ever seen, and although the King was a round mound of sound in his shiny rhinestone jumpsuit, not once did Harris see him pop any pills.

a happy, talkative mood on the drive back to the airport, repeatedly calling Harris "sir" and even inviting the young security director to come visit him and Red and Sonny at Graceland, Elvis' rock 'n' roll shrine in Memphis.

The last words Elvis said to Harris were, "You call now, ya' hear?" Harris never took him up on the invitation and a year later the King was dead.

invitation be the reason old sideburns is restlessly walking the corridors of the Arena, stealing food to avenge his honor before he heads up to that big solid gold Cadillac in the sky?

ANOTHER EXPLANATION of the Presley spectre is the "bad review" theory.

In the Oct. 29, 1976, issue of the Daily Egyptian, Michael Mullen, a staff writer, gave the King's sold-out performance a lukewarm reception, noting: "Elvis seemed more intent on exposing his profile to every possible angle than he was on delivering a first-rate vocal performance ... the numbers seemed to be little more than verse, chorus, verse, chorus, ending."

Could Elvis' ghost be angry because Mullen panned his show and is he now seeking revenge on the University 13 years later?

Mullen, Class of '76, who now teaches journalism and English at Rend Lake College, thinks not.

"NO, ELVIS THOUGHT the review was a pretty fair evaluation of his show," Mullen insisted. "I know this because he visited me. Elvis' spirit spoke to me."

And how is Elvis looking these days?

"He's more relaxed," Mullen said. "He's keeping it down around 122 (pounds) and he looks great."

"Elvis is free of the demons that haunted him in life," Mullen added.

"The only thing the King has a problem with are all these black velvet paintings of him. He says they have got to go."

ONE INTERESTING paragraph in Mullen's concert review notes that Elvis "mumbled and forgot the lyrics to 'Fever.'"

By a strange coincidence, "Fever" was written and made famous by Peggy Lee, the same legendary singer who recently canceled a March 9 concert at Shryock Auditorium due to "health reasons."

Could the real truth be that a mischievous Elvis apparition appeared before Miss Lee and scared her into cancelling, fearing that she might upstage him on the very campus where he ruined her famous song in front of 10,000 witnesses?

Judy O'Connor, secretary at Shryock Auditorium, denied this, stating that Lee backed out because her doctor advised against touring on a series of one-nighters because of potential damage to her health.

HOWEVER, WHEN questioned about the cancellation, John Saulle, Lee's secretary in New York, nervously replied, "She was ... ill. Yeah, sure, that's it! She was sick."

Now, it's pleasant to think that Elvis is in Heaven — in some celestial jam session with Jimi Hendrix and Jim Morrison, or perhaps sharing a ham sandwich with Mama Cass Elliott.

But maybe it's possible the King hasn't yet entered that realm of the spirit world. Perhaps he's still in rock 'n' roll limbo.

So the next time you're walking alone in the Arena and you hear the rattle of gold chains and someone humming "Love Me Tender" behind you, don't turn around just to catch a glimpse of this white-caped apparition with the diamond-filled sunglasses. Start running and don't look back.

Student set to work at new Disney park

By Nora Bentley
Staff Writer

The Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park at Walt Disney World in Orlando, Fla., has been catering to large crowds since its May 1 public debut. Tom Pham, theme park employee and an SIUC sophomore in cinema and photography, said:

Pham works at the Brown Derby Restaurant, one of many park exhibits modeled after actual Hollywood landmarks.

The restaurant is an elaborate re-creation of the original in Hollywood, complete with Louella Parsons and Hedda Hopper, portrayed by Disney actresses, sitting at reserved tables like they did in the 1930s when the Brown Derby was the place to be seen, Pham said. Caricatures of Hollywood legends reproduced from the original Derby collection cover the walls, he said.

Other restaurants and lounges visitors can enjoy are the Soundstage Restaurant, Catwalk Bar, Hollywood and Vine Cafeteria and the '50s PrimeTime Cafe.

Pham said The Great Movie Ride is one of the main attractions at the park. The movie ride is on a train system that takes visitors through different movie sets and stops the "film" in progress to get tourists caught in middle of the action going on.

"You can stop and get caught in a gangster shoot out, and your tour guide might get shot. The people love it," Pham said.

Live actors are combined with audio-animatronic robots to produce scenes from "Singin' in the Rain," "The Wizard of Oz," "Carablanca," and others.

Pham's favorite attraction is the Monster Sound Show in the Sound Effects Studio. "They show how they make sound effects. You can get hands-on at all the sound equipment," he said.

"The best attraction (within the sound effects studio) is the 3-D sound imaging," Pham said. With eyes closed visitors can get a mental image of the sounds they hear. For example, the sound of a door opening is so real that the visitor will think someone has walked in, he said.

Other attractions visitors will experience include Catastrophe Canyon, Disney's animation building, commercial shoots, movie stunt recreations and a stage show that turns guests into actors.

The park was four years and a half-billion dollars in the making, and is the about the same size of Disneyland in California.

Disney Co. Chairman Michael Eisner said: "It's kind of a realization of a dream of Walt Disney's, not mine, although I've adapted it."

United Press International contributed to this report.

Southern Illinois Klansman's biography reprinted

By Wayne Wallace
Entertainment Editor

His murder was plastered across the front pages of the Chicago Tribune and St. Louis Post-Dispatch, not to mention obituaries in papers as far away as Memphis and Louisville.

He was never elected to public office, yet local historians regard this Klansman as the most notorious law officer in the history of Southern Illinois.

S. Glenn Young, hired in 1923 by the Marion Law Enforcement League to rid Williamson County of Prohibition-era crime, "soon proved more disruptive to the peace of the area than any number of bootleggers, gamblers and gunmen," according to historian Gary DeNeal's review highlights on the back cover of Young's recently reprinted biography "Life and Exploits of S. Glenn Young."

GORDON PRUETT, a Herrin resident and collector of Southern Illinois paper ephemera, came across an original copy of Young's biography in the summer of '88.

Realizing the historical importance of such a work, Pruett took note that the book had been out of print since 1925, the year of Young's death.

"So often history is rewritten, I think once in a while it deserves to be reprinted," Pruett said of his restoration effort in putting Young's biography back in the bookstores.

With his own money, Pruett spearheaded the publication of 1,500 new copies of the book, which will be available in stores this weekend, he said.

Report: Radical recruitment of nurses needed to fill void

NEW YORK (UPI) — Fifteen percent of Chicago-area hospitals report a severe nursing shortage and a study says hospitals must start some "radical thinking" and recruit more men and minorities to alleviate the shortage.

"Radical thinking is required about how hospitals are organized and operated," concluded the two-year study released Tuesday that surveyed six major cities. It forecast that the shortage will worsen unless certain recommendations are taken to heart.

Nationwide, hospitals unable

Book Review

Pruett admits he was lucky. There were no royalties to pay on the book because its copyright had long since expired and Young's biographer had never stepped forward to take responsibility for the work.

IDENTIFIED IN the book only as "Veritas," or truth, the author, actually a ghost writer who assisted Young with this "autobiography," wisely chose to remain anonymous in covering such a controversial public figure, Pruett said.

In his research of vintage newspapers and books, Pruett thinks he has pinpointed the true identity of Veritas.

"It looks like it's Herbert Brice. He was a local minister with Klan ties who escaped to Canada fearing for his safety after Young was murdered," Pruett said.

Pruett said he doesn't want readers to get the idea he's a Klan sympathizer.

"The more I learn about Young, the less I like him," the publisher asserted, "but back then the Klan took on more of a law and order slant, especially with big Klan memberships in Franklin and Williamson Counties."

"THE BOOK calls him the 'little Napoleon.' I call him the 'little Hitler,'" Pruett added.

Young, a former prohibition agent with the Treasury Department, rose to power in Southern Illinois within a year and a half, Pruett said.

"Supposedly his duty was to assist the Williamson County sheriff in prohibition arrests, but he was paid by the Klan. He was the 'Klan's figurehead,'" Pruett added.

"He was more interested in power than eradicating bootleggers. He was drunk on power."

Among the more outrageous exploits discussed in Young's autobiography is a far-fetched account of how Young single-handedly captured a gang of eight fugitives.

NOT HAVING his handcuffs ready, Young brought the desperadoes to justice by looping barbed wire over the neck of each man and marching them into jail.

"One time he arrested the sheriff of Williamson County and the mayor of Herrin on murder charges and declared himself in charge," Pruett said, shaking his head and smiling at the ridiculousness of that situation.

Young spent more time bickering with the proper law enforcement officials than he did putting gamblers and prostitutes behind bars, according to Pruett.

"And he was a showman," Pruett said, pointing to the book's many photographs of Young posing with rifles, pistols and machine guns.

At one point Young boasted of killing 30 people, but Paul Angle — Illinois historian and author of "Bloody Williamson" published 1953 — estimated the actual body count at somewhere around two, Pruett said.

ANGLE REPORTED that in a single night in February of 1924, Young arrested 125 men and confiscated 6 stills, 27 barrels of wine, 54 gallons of white mule and 200 gallons of home brew.

"Often, when (Young) knew he was going on a raid, he would call a reporter ahead of time because he loved the publicity," Pruett said.

"It's the quirky anecdotes and shady stories like that interest me," Pruett confessed.

The Klan bought Young a big Lincoln touring car in 1923, Pruett said, the same vehicle in which Young and his wife were fired upon and wounded while driving near Okawville in May 1924.

But it wasn't until a year later, Jan. 24, 1925, that Young met his fate at the hands of a disgruntled Williamson County sheriff's deputy, Pruett said.

It happened in downtown Herrin, in the European Hotel, which is now an insurance office.

DEPUTY ORA Thomas not only gunned down Young and two of his aides but also was slain in the return fire.

"Newspaper accounts contradict themselves about the gun battle," Pruett said. "Some reports have a hundred witnesses at the scene, others have only a few witnesses listed."

All I Ever Really Needed To Know, I Learned In Kindergarten

By Robert Fulgum

Most of what I really needed to know about how to live, and what to do, and how to be, I learned in kindergarten. Wisdom was not at the top of the graduate school mountain, but there in the sandbox at school. These are the things I learned: Shave everything. Play fair. Don't hit people. Put things back where you found them. Clean up your own mess. Don't take things that aren't yours. Say you're sorry when you hurt somebody. Wash your hands before you eat. Flush. Warm cookies and cold milk are good for you. Live a balanced life. Learn some and think some and draw and paint and sing and dance and play and work every day some. Take a nap every afternoon. When you go out into the world, watch for traffic, hold hands and stick together. Be aware of wonder. Remember the little seed in the plastic cup... the roots go down and the plant goes up and nobody really knows how or why, but we all like that. Goldfish and hamsters and white mice and even the little seed in the plastic cup -- they all die. So do we. And then remember the book about Dick and Jane and the first word you learned, the biggest word of all: LOOK. Everything you need to know is in there somewhere. The Golden Rule and love and basic sanitation. Ecology and politics and sane living. Think of what a better world it would be if we all -- the whole world -- had cookies and milk about 3 o'clock every afternoon and then lay down with our blankets for a nap. Or if we had a basic policy in our nation and other nations to always put things back where we found them and clean up our own messes. And it is still true, no matter how old you are, when you go out into the world, it is best to hold hands and stick together.

State president Thomas Wallace says Redbird football as a problem Illinois State must deal with.

"One-third of the athletic department budget goes to football, although the athletic budget office has made an effort to disguise the full cost of the program," Wallace said in his letter.

"We have been branded some sort of nuts out here. That's a bunch of bull."

—Arlan Richardson

Klass said he estimates each student who attends a football game costs those students who don't attend $50. Klass also said dropping to Division III could bring both better attendance figures and attract more students to the university.

"Given the quality of ISU's football team in the past, I'm not sure that we would not field a better team with volunteers from the student body," Klass said in the letter.

Richardson said eliminating the use of tuition money would leave the athletics department two alternatives for making up the lost money: raising the student athletic fee, now at $25, or decreasing athletics department costs.

"I don't think the students would stand for it," said Richardson in reference to the student fee. "Cutting a lot of small sports won't make a dent. You have got to do something about football."

Information concerning Illinois State's tuition issue was sent by Richardson to SIU-C anthropology professor Jerome Handler, Richardson said. Richardson said Handler, in turn, sent the information on to the Faculty Senate.

"It would be nice if the representatives of the two (the Faculty Senate and Illinois State's academic senate) were able to get together," Richardson said. "We (Richardson, Klass and Handler) have been branded some sort of nuts out here. That's a bunch of bull."

Handler said there was some similarity between Illinois State's controversy and the football issue at SIU-C.

"I don't think they're doing the same thing," Handler said. "What's relevant here is they're raising questions about whether Illinois State should continue I-AA football."

Faculty Senate president Donald Paige said he did not know how senate members would react to a meeting between the two groups.

Paige said a move in the state to eliminate tuition money from athletics would have an effect on SIU-C.

"What they're trying to do is cut down on the state dollars and make athletics stand on its own," Paige said. "That would take a million dollars out of our budget."

Richardson said he is trying to contact a faculty member at Northern Illinois, after hearing their faculty had shown some concern in funding of the athletics department.

At SIU-C, the athletics department received a waiver budget of approximately $496,000 in fiscal year 1988-89, budget director Mike Williams said.

Charlotte West, associate athletics director, said SIU-C has approximately 348 in-state waivers.

"We take these and sit down and appropriate them as honestly as we can," West said. "I think that is the only waiver money we use. We have some state money we use for salaries, but I don't think that is tuition dollars."

West said football receives 100 in-state waivers, the most of any SIU-C sport. The two basketball programs receive 11 each, and the other sports receive one and a half times what the NCAA allows them to have.

"It will be less visible," Smith said. "I haven't really given it much thought. All I know is we'll be playing football when fall comes around."

The SIU-C athletics department deal with the issue over the summer in the form of a public relations campaign. Athletics Director Jim Hart and men's sports information director Fred Huff will collaborate on a weekly column to be distributed to area media once a week beginning in mid-May for 16 weeks.

"They have to deal with the fundamental issues," Handler said. "People will make a judgement call as to whether the incredible expense is worth the return. One can argue all sports will lose money, but there is a difference between a whale and a minnow although both float in the water."

Donald Paige, Faculty Senate president, said the senate will look at what the IAAC says on the matter when examining football.

"I don't think it will die over the summer," Paige said. "We will definitely do something in the fall. Our response might be to support what they do. We're going to study what they do. It is not disappearing."

Paige said of the current senate members, some are in favor of football.

"William Vicars of the management department has campaigned for a position and he has avidly spoken out for the football program," Paige said. "That would be a different outlook."

Tim Hildebrand, president-elect of the Undergraduate Student Government, said the issue will remain through the summer after the USG vote on its football elimination proposal.

"I think it will be a big issue through the summer," Hildebrand said. "Nothing will be determined until after the IAAC study. Hopefully (the USG vote) will make (University President John C.) Guyon take a stance."

Ongoing IAAC president George Black said the interest Handler has gained since his initial argument was presented will keep the issue alive.

"He has peaked some interest," Black said. "There will be a small, but vocal group pursuing it."

Black said the effect of the issue on the football team in the fall season remains to be seen.

"It could be distracting," Black said

New Indianapolis 500 rule angering race drivers

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — Drivers practicing for the Indianapolis 500 said Tuesday they will protest tougher enforcement of a regulation track officials say will make for safer driving.

Tom Binford, chief steward of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, said racers will be penalized for driving below the inner line of the 2 1/2-mile oval. Drivers commonly use the area to maintain top speeds in turns.

"We are not doing it to slow them down," Binford said. "We're doing it to maintain a safety lane. It's to be used in an emergency and not for racing."

"There will be a penalty assessed for any car with the right-side wheels under the line unless forced there to avoid an accident. If the infraction occurs during qualifying, the lap would not be counted and it would be an incomplete attempt."

The rule was the main topic of conversation in the Gasoline Alley garage area Tuesday as rain washed out practice. It was the first time in eight years an entire practice day had been rained out.

"When I first heard about it, I had no idea they would try to enforce that," driver Arne Luyendyk said. "Personally, I thought somebody was joking."

Luyendyk, the 1985 Indy Rookie of the Year and a four-time Indy starter, said drivers were unamusedly opposed to the plans.

"I don't think the drivers will stand for this," Luyendyk said. "We have to meet face to face and sit down with Binford until we get it solved. Mario (Andretti) would be the guy because he's our drivers' representative. But I've talked to a few guys and from what I've heard, nobody likes it."

Said Andretti: "Race track is race track. I don't even want to hear talk about that."

Drivers have 50 feet of track in straightaways and 60 feet in curves with a 15-foot safety lane below the white line in the corners. Luyendyk said drivers often go completely below the line because it is the safest path or because they have handling problems.

Luyendyk was confident an agreement could be reached but said he would obey the rule rather than risk a time or lap penalty.

"I don't want to see that, though, because it's a bad rule," Luyendyk said. "It would take away one line of the passing zone. Nobody's going to give you extra room. It's going to screw up my rhythm. I'm going to have to think. 'Ooops, I can't go there.' It will cause more trouble, especially with rookies. They're going to be extra psyched out."

Defending champion Rick Mears, whose lap at 225.733 mph Monday was the fastest ever timed at the speedway, worries about possible violations.

"It might be a difficult situation to police during the race," Mears said. "A lot of times you might have to go places you don't want to go on the race track. Whatever they want to do, they'll do and we'll abide by it."

Binford said use of television cameras to determine penalties was being considered.

Luyendyk said driving below the white line would probably increase.

IRS mistake gave Duran $1.5 million

MIAMI (UPI) — Middleweight champion Roberto Duran has been overpaid millions of dollars because of a mistake by the Internal Revenue Service, and now the government wants its money back.

Duran's lawyer, Jan Neiman, said the Panamanian-born Miami resident intends to repay the $1.5 million he still owes.

"He has every intention of paying it back, and we're looking for ways to do that," Neiman said Monday. "We're hoping to work out a payment plan. We think we need less than a year."

The problem began in November and December when the IRS sent Duran more than $3 million in refunds, although the agency owed the boxer only about $60,000. Duran cashed two checks totaling $1.6 million, but when a third check for $1.4 million arrived, he sent it back, Neiman said.

The government has sued Duran for the $1.6 million from the checks he cashed. A hearing is scheduled Wednesday before U.S. District Judge Stanley Marcus.

The dispute began when the IRS charged in 1987 that Duran owed more than $3.8 million because he failed to report almost $12.8 million in earnings between 1977 and 1984. Duran filed a suit saying the IRS failed to credit him for $1.3 million in taxes withheld.

The two sides settled in May 1988.

"We agreed that he had overpaid some years and underpaid other years and the bottom line was that the IRS owed him a $60,000 refund," Neiman said. "Then the government made a couple of mistakes."

He said that instead of sending Duran a check for the $60,000, it sent individual checks for the amounts he had overpaid in the last 11 years.

Salukis open Gateway tourney with Sycamores

By Douglas Powell
Staff Writer

The seventh annual Gateway Conference Softball Tournament begins Thursday in Cedar Falls, Iowa, and the Salukis, seeded sixth with a 29-22 overall record and a 10-5 league record, take on the No. 3 seed Indiana State at the noon.

If the Salukis upset the Sycamores, they will probably advance to play the No. 2 seed, Illinois State at noon Friday. A loss in their first game would mean a second game Thursday at 4 p.m. against the Eastern Illinois versus Drake loser.

"They are eager to finish strong," said Coach Kay Brechtelsbauer about her softball players.

The 10-team double elimination tournament will be tough, according to Brechtelsbauer.

"Going into the tournament all the teams have an 0-0 record," said Brechtelsbauer. "The No. 3 through 8 teams, that were seeded by final conference records, are bunched."

"All the teams get motivated for the tournament."

Coach Brechtelsbauer said she hopes her team is ready for the tournament.

"They are all coming off of exams and they are tired. Hopefully they can get some rest during the trip up there." The Salukis leave at noon today for Cedar Falls.

"They will have to reach inside for a little extra," said Brechtelsbauer.

The best any SIU-C softball team has finished in the Conference tournament was fourth two years ago, with a 3-2 tournament record. Last season the Salukis went 1-2.

The Salukis have met the Indiana State Sycamores three times in Gateway Conference history, each game going extra innings. In 1984 the Salukis defeated the Sycamores 3-1 in 10 innings, in 1985 the Salukis dropped one to the Sycamores by a score of 1-0 in eight innings and in 1986 the Salukis lost 3-2 in 10 innings.

Ramsey gets league honor

By Douglas Powell
Staff Writer

Saluki Coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said that Billie Ramsey "has the potential to become an outstanding power hitter."

Ramsey is proving Brechtelsbauer right. Ramsey has been picked Gateway Conference Player of the Week in softball because of her .500 hitting average (10-20) in six games last week, contributing six RBIs, three doubles and a run scored.

For the second week in a row the Salukis have had a player receive the award. Junior Shelly Gibbs won the award last Monday.

Ramsey, freshman designated hitter from Centralia, was the difference in wins over Indiana State and Illinois State, batting .760 (6-8) with two doubles, five RBIs and a run scored against two of the top three teams in the Gateway.

For the season, Ramsey is batting .317, shares the team lead with 20 RBIs and has a .446 slugging percentage. She is second behind Gibbs in home runs with two.

the Gateway tournament, but Brechtelsbauer said "Western will be the team to beat. They have been the most consistent this season, far above other teams."

Over this season the Salukis have been led by junior second baseman Shelly Gibbs. Gibbs, who has been Gateway Player of the Week and is a two-year All-Gateway pick, batted an impressive .450 in six games last week to raise her season average to a team-high .361.

Gibbs, who is a Carbondale native, has rewritten the record books nine times in her career at SIU-C. She holds nine hitting marks including career at bats (428), career hits (139), season (5) and career (11) home runs and career RBIs (63).

Freshman Cheryl Venorsky has contributed a great deal this year. With a .339 average, Venorsky ranks second on the team and sixth best in the conference. Sophomore third baseman Mary Jo Firmbach finished the season with a .306 batting average and has an outstanding .980 fielding percentage.

SIU-C's top pitcher has been sophomore Traci Furlow. The right-hander finished regular season play with a 9-7 record, two saves and a 1.62 ERA which is 10th best in the Gateway.

knowledgeable coach in softball I have ever met. She has a keen sense for picking up on the flaws in her players' performance. People don't realize how much she knows. She keeps up with the times as far as research and things."

Brechtelsbauer is one of the few coaches in the country with two post-graduate degrees. After achieving a bachelor's degree from Central Michigan University, she completed her master's degree at SIU-C in 1966 and received her Ph.D. in education psychology from SIU-C in 1980.

A tenured member of the physical education department, Brechtelsbauer serves on the SIU-C graduate committee in physical education and has been a member of the NCAA Midwest Regional Softball Committee, the Illinois MIAW Softball Committee, the National Coaches Council in softball, the American Alliance of Health, the National Association for Girls and Women in Sports, and the Illinois Coaches Association.

Junior team leader and two year All-conference player Shelly Gibbs said she would have to agree with West and Buckles.

"She (Brechtelsbauer) is always one up on the new events in softball," said Gibbs. "She is very perceptive of how her players are performing, more perceptive than people think."

Sophomore third baseman Mary Jo Firmbach was impressed with Brechtelsbauer when she was being recruited.

"When I was being recruited Coach B was very informative," said Firmbach. "She has a lot of wit for the game. Coach B knows what needs to be done for the team to be a conference contender."

During coming summer months Brechtelsbauer does what it takes to make her team a continual contender — recruiting.

"My whole summer is recruiting," said Brechtelsbauer. "I'm on the road most of the summer, going to Amateur Softball Association games. But in my free time I like to get in a few rounds of golf."

Philippou, who will have to duel with Robbins in the triple jump, is a two-time champion in the event. Her leap of 40 feet 4 1/4 inches leads the conference this season. She will also be one of the favorites in the long jump.

"Christiana should have no problems winning the triple jump," coach Don DeNoon said. "She is really jumping well lately. I feel good about her chances in the long jump too. Again Carmen is not the top seed, but again she will be up at the top when the event is over."

Another defending duo, Lisa Judisack and Rosanne Vincent, will spearhead the Salukis in the distance and middle-distance events.

Judisack, the Gateway 10,000-meter champion last year, is again the favorite in the event. This year her competition should come mainly from her own teammates. Dona Griffin and Cathy Brown are seeded just behind Judisack at two and three, respectively. New entry Jane Schumacher should make the 10,000 a high scoring event for SIU-C.

"The kids realize that they have to do more to make up for the people who are gone."

—Don DeNoon

"Jane should be tough in the 10,000," Judisack said. "I'm nervous, she's going to push me. It would be great if we could finish one-two. Either way, I think this should be a good event for us."

Rosanne Vincent, whose 2 minute 7.80 second 800-meter time leads the Gateway this season, won the event last season and is coming in as the top seed. Vincent will also help the 4 x 400 relay squad of Danielle Sciano, Traci Davis, and Carmen Robbins. The top-seeded foursome should continue the Saluki dominance in the event. SIU-C has won the 4 x 400 three years in a row.

The bulk of the Salukis points in the sprints should come from school record holders Kathy Raske and Traci Davis.

Raske, who missed last year's championships because she was redshirted, comes into this year's meet as the definite favorite in her NCAA qualifying event, the 100-meter hurdles. Raske will also help out in the 200-meters in which she is seeded third. Her season's best time of 13.47 in the 100-hurdles is more than half a second faster than her next closest conference opponent.

Davis, the school record holder in the 100-meters, will be the favorite to win the event. She also will run in the 200-meters.

At this year's meet the Salukis will be without the services of three injured athletes, Michelle Sciano, Angie Nunn and Dora Kyriacou.

"The kids realize that they have to do more to make up for the people who are gone," DeNoon said. "Those three did well for us at last year's meet. We will have to do our best to get along without them."

This year the competition should be from only one team, Drake, according to DeNoon.

North Carolina's Reid to pass up final year

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (UPI) — J.R. Reid, the star forward on North Carolina's basketball team, Tuesday said he will give up his final year of college eligibility to enter next month's NBA draft.

"I think it's best for me right now," Reid said at a news conference on the North Carolina campus. "I've done everything I've expected and more. I've had a good time for three years. Now, I'm doing what's best for J.R. Reid."

Reid, 6-foot-9 and 260 pounds, is the second touted underclassman to announce he will turn pro. Indiana sophomore Jay Edwards earlier said he's leaving school for the NBA.

Underclassmen have until midnight Saturday to inform the NBA if they want to be included in the June 27 draft.

Reid's physical maturity and inside scoring ability make him a likely lottery pick. "I think he'll definitely go in the top 11," North Carolina Coach Dean Smith said. "That includes the expansion (Orlando and Minneapolis) teams. He's got size, quickness, good hands and he can cover anybody out on the court."

Reid is the fourth player under Smith to turn pro after the junior season. Bob McAdoo (1972), James Worthy (1982) and Michael Jordan (1984) were the others.

"If he's in the top 11, he can get $3 million over 4 years," Smith said. "On that information, I'm sure people can understand. If anybody can't take that and be financially secure, then they are spending too much money."

A year ago, Reid may have been considered the top pick, but his stock slipped a bit the past season.

Cubs fall to San Francisco Giants; Dawson out for right knee surgery

CHICAGO (UPI) — There was something missing from the Chicago Cubs' lineup Tuesday and San Francisco Giants pitcher Mike Krukow was quick to take advantage of it.

Minus the club-high five home runs and 19 home runs of outfielder Andre Dawson, the Cubs succumbed meekly to Krukow and reliever Craig Lefferts, who combined on a four-hit, 4-2 victory. A key two-out error by Dawson's replacement in right field, Mitch Webster, led to two unearned runs.

Dawson will undergo arthroscopic right knee surgery Thursday and miss at least four weeks, it was announced before the game.

"Without his presence, they're definitely a different ballclub," said Giants manager Roger Craig. "He's one of the best players in both leagues."

"We'll just have to continue to pitch well and score runs from other places," said Cubs manager Don Zimmer.

Between singles by Ryne Sandberg in the first and seventh innings, Krukow, 2-0, retired 17 batters in order. The veteran right-hander walked none, struck out three and allowed three hits in seven innings, while Lefferts tossed two innings of one-hit relief for his fifth save.

"There was a hard wind blowing in from left field," said Krukow, "and I wanted to take advantage of it."

Will Clark delivered an RBI single and scored one run, as the Giants moved within out game of first-place Cincinnati.

Trailing 4-0, the Cubs ruined Krukow's bid for his 11th career shutout in the seventh inning. Sandberg and Mark Grace singled with one out, and Damon Berryhill followed with a sacrifice fly to score Sandberg. A two-base error by right fielder Donell Nixon on Webster's fly ball plated Grace to make it 4-2.

Zimmer was ejected by plate umpire Jim Quick in the seventh inning during an argument over a runner's interference call on rookie Dwight Smith. Smith opened the inning with an apparent infield single, but was ruled out for running on the fair side of the first-base line.

"I was going to stay in the dugout, but my first-base coach (Jose Martinez) had a beef," said Zimmer. "I asked (Quick) about the call, and he said that Smith ran inside the line.

"I went away to talk with Martinez, and (Quick) followed me. He said, 'It's my call, and you can't go to the first-base umpire.' I told him, 'That's the problem with you guys: You're always looking for trouble.'"

With the aid of a two-out error by Webster, the Giants reached starter Paul Kilgus, 3-3, for three runs in the sixth inning to take a 4-0 lead.

Clark was hit by a pitch and, two outs later, scored on Robby Thompson's triple. Kirt Manwaring walked, then Webster did pipped Jose Uribe's pop fly in short right field as Thompson and Manwaring scored.

San Francisco took a 1-0 lead in the third inning, when three straight batters reached base against Kilgus with two outs. Brett Butler singled, moved to second on Nixon's single and scored on Clark's single.

Redbird athletics funding questioned

By David Gallianetti
Staff Writer

Controversy over use of tuition dollars at Illinois State has faculty members concerned about Redbird athletics, especially football.

Illinois State's academic senate, the governing body of both the faculty members and the students, has voted in favor of a proposal calling for the elimination of using student tuition money for the Illinois State athletics department.

Arlan Richardson, a chemistry professor at Illinois State, said about $1 million in student tuition money is used for the athletics department, in addition to $200,000 to $300,000 in tuition waiver money used by athletics.

Officials: football issue will survive summer

By David Gallianetti
Staff Writer

Despite summer being just around the corner and the absence of most of SIU-C's 20,000-plus students, officials agree that the Saluki's football issue will be around next fall.

"It has already been decided that the Faculty Senate will discuss the issue next fall, and the Intercollegiate Athletics Advisory Committee will discuss it as well," said anthropology professor Jerome Handler, who initiated the argument to eliminate Saluki football.

"The issue is alive. It has been discussed by many openly. It has reached a peak with respect to publicity. Things will calm down a bit. I think it has been carried as far as it can reasonably go."

Football coach Bob Smith said he feels the issue will die down some over the

Richardson, a former member of Illinois State's athletic council, said the examination of tuition money began last spring, but was halted because of discussion by the state concerning university financing.

The tuition examination began again last fall when a committee looked into exactly how much tuition money was being used for athletics at Illinois State. Richardson said the resolution was drawn up and passed this spring.

"Those monies could theoretically be used to enhance the education of students," Richardson said. "We don't have tuition waivers for chemistry majors."

Illinois State athletics director Ron Wellman was out of town and unavailable for comment.

Richardson said examining Redbird football could become an issue at Illinois State if the use of student tuition was eliminated.

"The reason football gets in there is if the program had to operate without going into tuition funds, they would have to do something about football," Richardson said. "I think if they had to essentially balance their budget they would have to make a firm decision on it."

Baseball team opens MVC touney with No. 1 seeded host Wichita State

By Troy Taylor
Staff Writer

The baseball Salukis, who finished last in the Missouri Valley standings at 6-14, open the conference tournament at 7 p.m. May 17 against top seed and host Wichita State.

All games for the double-elimination tournament will be held at Eck Stadium-Tyler Field, marking the eighth time in 11 years that the tournament has been held in Wichita, Kan.

The tournament championship will be televised on tape delay by SportsChannel, a Chicago-based cable network.

Ticket prices run from $2 for general admission to $39 for an all-session box seat.

Pending a three-game series this weekend at Western Kentucky, the Salukis enter the postseason at 24-33 — the worst record in school history.

The Salukis have lost nine of the last 11 games, including a 1-3 showing against Wichita State April 29 and 30 at Abe Martin Field.

Wichita State rolls into tournament, having swept a four-game series from fourth-seeded Creighton to post a 53-10 overall record and earn a No. 3 national ranking from Baseball America.

The Shockers, winners of the last two Valley tournaments, want to match Bradley's six championships, the most among present Valley schools. The conference record is seven consecutive titles, won by Tulsa from 1969-75.

The schedule for the first two rounds:

On May 17: Game 1—No. 1 Wichita State vs. No. 6 SIU-C, 7 p.m.; Game 2—No. 2 Indiana State vs. No. 5 Bradley, 3 p.m.; Game 3—No. 3 Illinois State v. No. 4 Creighton, 11 a.m.

On May 18: Game 4—Loser Game 1 v. Loser Game 2, 3 p.m.; Game 5—Winner Game 1 vs. Loser Game 3, 7 p.m.; Game 6—Winner Game 2 vs. Winner Game 3, 11 a.m.

The championship game will be held at 2 p.m. May 20. If a second championship game is necessary because neither of the finalists has two losses, a second game will be held at 7 p.m. The winner advances to the NCAA tournament.

Coach cites teams for softball success

Brechtelsbauer needs 1 win for No. 300

later, Brechtelsbauer is one victory away from becoming the first Saluki women's coach to reach the 300-victory mark.

The dean of Gateway Conference softball, Brechtelsbauer modestly contributes her success to the team.

"My record is a reflection on the fine players that I have had in this program in the past years," said Brechtelsbauer.

The most prominent notch in Brechtelsbauer's 299-267 career record came in 1978 when the Salukis grabbed first place at the Illinois AIAW noteworthy coaching accomplishment was probably her College World Series victory in 1978."

When asked what Brechtelsbauer's best asset is, West noted her coaching knowledge.

Women's track team shoots for fourth straight league title

By Paul Pabst

No other Gateway Conference team, in any sport except volleyball, has won four consecutive Gateway titles.

The feat could be accomplished this weekend when the SIU-C women's track team makes their assault to break into that upper echelon at the outdoor conference championships at Macomb's Hanson Field.

"We're ready to go for our fourth title," coach Don DeNeon said. "Practice this week has been light due to finals. If the girls aren't ready now they aren't going to be."

The events begin Thursday with the heptathlon. The majority of the events will take place Saturday and Sunday.

The Salukis will bring with them four defending champions from last year's squad that scored 132 points to roll past Drake and Western Illinois who tied with 77.

A pair of those returning champs are multi-event athletes Carmen Robbins and Christiana Philippou.

Robbins, who has won the heptathlon championship two straight years, will again be the No. 3 seed.
