The Department offers both masters and doctoral degrees in Speech Communication. Doctoral graduate students elect to specialize in one of five concentrations: Communication Pedagogy; Intercultural Communication; Language & Social Interaction; Performance Studies; Rhetoric and Philosophy of Communication; and our newest area, Gender, Sexuality, and Communication. Masters students take classes in three of the four areas.

The graduate faculty of the Department also offers curriculum in the following areas: interpersonal communication, semiotics, ethnography, conversation analysis, organizational communication and public relations, public address, and political communication.
