Ayurvedic Education in India

Ayurveda is taught at two levels in Indian institutes:

- A. Undergraduate
- B. Postgraduate

Duration of undergraduate studies is five and half-years. It includes five years of intensive studies and six-month clinical internship program. For getting admission in Ayurvedic College, the student has to pass common entrance test after plus two. Before introduction of common entrance test, the Pre-Ayurveda course was available in colleges. Here study of subjects like Chemistry, Sanskrit, Botany and Zoology were integral part of Pre-Ayurveda curriculum. Degree awarded was Graduate of Ayurvedic Medicine and Surgery (G.A.M.S).

After the introduction of the common entrance test, the name of the degree undergraduate of Ayurvedic Medicine and Surgery (G.A.M.S) was changed to Bachelor of Ayurvedic Medicine and Surgery (B.A.M.S). The graduates have to register themselves with state Ayurvedic and Unani Councils. Central Council of Indian Medicine (C.C.I.M) is apex body governing rules and regulations related to Ayurveda in India. Most of the practitioners of Ayurveda opt for allopathic practice after graduate studies.

A postgraduate study in Ayurveda is three-year course. After completion of postgraduate studies, Vaidya Vachaspati (equivalent to MD) is concerned discipline is awarded. Postgraduate studies are available in following disciplines:

1. Agadtantra (Toxicology)
2. Ayurved Siddhant & Darshana (Fundamental principles)
3. Bhaishjyakalpna (Ayurvedic pharmaceuticals)
4. Dravyaguna (Medicinal Plant Pharmacology)
5. Kaumarbhritta (Pediatrics)
6. Kayachikitsa (Internal Medicine)
7. Manas Roga (Psychiatry)
8. Panchkarma
9. Prasuti & Striroga (Obstetrics and Gynecology)
10. Rachna Sharir (Human Anatomy)
11. Ras-Shastra (Indiana alchemy or latrochemistry)
12. Rog Nidan (Clinical-diagnosis)
13. Samhita (Ancient texts)
14. Shalaky (Ear, nose and throat)
15. Shalya (Surgery)
16. Swasthavritta (Hygiene)

Ayurvedic postgraduates opt for teaching profession or join industry as consultants. Some of them opt for clinical practice. These days subjects like Dravyaguna and Bhaishjyakalpna are in great demand particularly from industrial point of view. For postgraduates, further options are available for PhD studies. Person holding PhD in Ayurveda is known as Ayurvedavaridhi.

Reviving the Ayurvedic curriculum

With changing global trend for Ayurveda, we need to emphasize introduction of new courses in Ayurvedic curriculum. Subjects like phytochemistry, biochemistry, pharmacognosy and ethno pharmacology should be made integral part of graduate Ayurvedic syllabus. Ayurvedic/herbal studies have recently become interdisciplinary. For an herbal expert, knowledge of subjects like phytochemistry biochemistry, pharmacology and pharmacognosy is a must. This is particularly significant for professionals working in industry or practicing pure Ayurveda/herbals.

Keeping in mind the growing demand for professionals for herbal drug industry several Indian universities have introduced courses related to Ayurveda, medicinal plants, cultivation and medicinal botany (see the table). The courses depicted in the following table are particularly useful for Ayurvedic professionals interested in joining the pharmaceutical industry.
