Mass transit 'misses the bus'

By Marc Chase
General Assignment Reporter

An agreement between student government and University administration to collect a $20 fee this August to support a new mass transit system is being put on hold because it is too late to go before the Board of Trustees with the fee proposal, SIUC President John C. Guyon said Thursday.

"It is too late to send in the necessary paper work to notify the board of the fee for the proposed mass transit system," Guyon said. "It would be impossible, due to timeline rules and regulations, to bring this proposal before the board at its April 14 meeting."

Guyon said it will be too late to collect the mass transit fee in August because many students already will have paid their tuition and registration fees.

Susan Hall, Graduate and Professional Student Council president, said a plan for a mass transit system, which would supply students with bus transportation throughout the Carbondale area, has been in the works since 1986.

Hall said referendums in 1986, 1988 and 1993 displayed a large amount of student support for the services.

Students voted in 1993 to support a referendum to charge a $20 student fee this August to fund the $800,000 program.

GPSC Representative Bill Hall said he is displeased with the delay and sees no reason why the University cannot collect fees from students in August.

Trustees may charge additional fees anyway, such as the $3 increase for resident student organizations and a possible athletic fee, so the delay is unnecessary, he said.

"I firmly believe that the University has the capability to start the ignition on the first bus route of the transit system one

Issues of identity challenge Asian Americans

By Emily Priddy
International Reporter

Although popular stereotypes can be a problem for Asian-American students, many of the challenges they face in society come from a lack of mentors and personal struggles for identity, a researcher and student affairs official says.

Gene Awakuni, vice president for student affairs at California State Polytechnic University in Pomona, California, helped kick off Asian-American Awareness month at SIUC with his keynote address Thursday night at the Student Center.

Awakuni, a Japanese American, told a group of about 75 SIUC students and faculty members the term "Asian American" is not entirely accurate, because it describes a group too diverse to define in a single word.

"From my perspective, what we struggle with in the Asian community is, first of all, this generic label of 'Asian American.'" Awakuni said. "If you really think about it, and if you think of culture as having a (single) language, having a common sense of values, there really isn't an Asian-American culture."

Finding a group with which to identify is important in many Asian cultures, but many people struggle to find this identity, Awakuni said.

"I think in the Asian-American community, because it's so important to establish a sense of place in Asian culture, you have to have a sense of being somewhere," he said.

Asian-American students need more role models to encourage them in disciplines such as psychology and other social sciences, where Asian-Americans tend to be scarce, Awakuni said. "From within the culture, we have to do more to assist the next generation to move through the system," he said.

"We have to all be mentors. We need to support each other not only as Asian Americans, but as fellow citizens."

Awakuni studied moral development and Asian-American psychology at Harvard after struggling with guilt because of his decision to fight in the conflict in Vietnam.

"There are things that I am not proud of: I did (that were) sad to people, but (Vietnam) made me realize that I had to come to terms with my own identity," he said.

Jean Paratore, associate vice president for Student Affairs at SIUC, said Awakuni's background and education made him a good choice to kick off Asian American Awareness Month.

"It is certainly appropriate that we begin our celebration of Asian American Awareness Month with a keynote address from someone of Dr. Awakuni's stature," Paratore said.

Insurance claims cause for health-fee proposal

By Aleksandra Macys
Health Reporter

The SIUC Board of Trustees will discuss a possible $28 health insurance fee hike April 14, an increase a health administrator says is proposed because claims have exceeded premiums.

Center administrator Martin J. Baggott said provided services need to be paid for, causing a need for increased fees.

Baggott said on-campus fees at the health service have remained the same for three years, while insurance fees have risen. The current insurance fee is $106, up

Fee-increase arrives after on-campus fees remain stable

$20 from the previous year.

The original proposal discussed last year was $22, but he and others worked to reduce the amount, Baggott said.

The U.S. Department of Commerce reported Tuesday that 25 percent of U.S. citizens had a lapse in health insurance between 1990 and 1992, and a bureau analyst says young adults were the most vulnerable to lapses in coverage.

In 1992, U.S. citizens spent $625 billion on health services and elderly were the least vulnerable to lapses in coverage.

Bureau analyst Robert Bennefield said one-half of those persons, age 18 to 24, had at least one month without coverage, compared with just 1 percent of older Americans, most of whom are covered by Medicare.

The bureau reported in its statistical brief, "Health Care Coverage — Who Had Gaps Between 1990 and 1992?," that people with incomes above the poverty line and those who did not participate in a major assistance program also were less likely to have gaps in coverage than those who spent at least one month in poverty and those who participated at some point in a government assistance program.

The brief, based on results from the bureau's survey of income and program participation, is subject to sampling variability and other sources of error.

Loreen Mason, a Carbondale agent for State Farm Insurance, said she encounters students who use the University plan during the school year, but use the State Farm plan during the summer.

"Others choose not to have any insurance during summer months because they are willing to take a risk and not have insurance coverage, she said.

Mason also said she sees more people buying insurance plans because they are not happy with someone else, such as an employer or university, providing the plan for them.

"More people in the 18-to-24-year-old age bracket are emancipated from their families and have to pay premiums themselves," she said.

She said in past years, more people were on their parents' plan.

HIGH COURT UPHOLDS AMERICAN'S SENTENCE—SINGAPORE—A court here Thursday rejected an American teenager's appeal against a sentence of flogging for spray-painting cars, saying he had pursued a "calculated course of criminal conduct." Without a trace of emotion, Michael Fay, 18, of Dayton, Ohio, was led from the high court by police to begin serving a four-month jail term in the case, which has attracted worldwide attention because of the flogging. U.S. charge d'affaires Ralph Boyce, who attended the appeal, expressed American regret at the sentence and called on the government to reconsider.

U.N. SANCTIONS COULD RELAX AGAINST IRAQ — WASHINGTON—While Washington's Middle East attention has been focused on the Arab-Israeli conflict, on another front in the region, State Department officials have detected quiet but growing pressure to relax U.N. sanctions against Saddam Hussein's Iraq. Two of Iraq's neighbors, Jordan and Turkey, which have always disliked the sanctions and oil embargo because they have been deprived of needed revenues from Iraqi oil and trade, have renewed efforts to relax the restrictions.

COURT SAYS SCOUTS ALLOWED TO BAN GAYS — LOS ANGELES—Ruling on an issue closely watched by gay-rights advocates and their opponents, a California appeals court has concluded that the Boy Scouts of America has the right to bar gay men from becoming scout leaders. In a 2-1 decision issued Tuesday, the Second Appellate District of the California Court of Appeal found that a state law prohibiting job discrimination against gay men and lesbians does not apply to the Boy Scouts and does not prevent the organization from excluding gays from the ranks of scout masters. Forcing the scouts to accept openly gay leaders would violate the organization's First Amendment rights of association, the judges said. The "Boy Scouts' exclusion of an adult leader who openly models or advocates homosexual behavior is no more or less rational than its exclusion of a leader who modeled or advocated any other type of behavior that it seeks to discourage," the judges wrote in a lengthy opinion.

TWO ARRESTED FOR MURDER, CARJACKING — LOS ANGELES—Less than a week after the brutal slayings of two Marymount College students during a carjacking, Los Angeles police announced that two youths were arrested Wednesday in the case. Taken into custody in the Friday night slayings—which this week sparked international outrage and Japanese calls for gun control in the United States—were Raymond Oscar Butler, 18, of the Los Angeles port district of San Pedro and Alberto V. Reygoza, 20, of nearby Long Beach, Calif. Takuma Ito, a Japanese citizen, and Go Matsuura, a U.S. citizen who grew up in Japan, were shot to death at about 11 p.m. Friday night in a carjacking in the parking lot of a Ralph's supermarket in San Pedro.

COMPLAINT FILED AGAINST JACKSON FAMILY — LOS ANGELES—Emmy-winning producer Gary Smith filed a lawsuit Thursday against the Jackson family charging fraud and breach of contract in connection with the financially troubled "Jackson Family Honors" musical benefit. The 30-page complaint filed on behalf of Smith-Hemion Productions Inc. in Los Angeles County Superior Court alleges that Jackson family-affiliated firms refused to pay an estimated $2 million in outstanding bills and misrepresented information regarding past debts that allegedly jeopardized the fiscal state of the production. Ten family members are named individually as defendants, including superstar Michael Jackson.

Amazon comes alive in talk

By Stephanie Moletti
Environmental Reporter

Extension worker Jim Penn spends his days and nights enduring persistent rains and unique wildlife native in the Amazon.

He helps conserve resources of the forest, teaching villagers about health, self-respect and the environment — all for no salary, other than living expenses.

Penn, director of the Amazon Conservation Fund, discussed a variety of issues on the rainforest during his slide presentation, "Working with Indigenous Peoples and Non-Governmental Organizations" Thursday in the University Museum Auditorium, sponsored by the Rainforest Alliance Group of SIUC's Student Environmental Center.

Penn's work takes place in Iquitos, Peru, in the Amazon River basin — an area with one of the highest biodiversity in South America.

Iquitos is an overpopulated urban area of 500,000 in northeast Peru. Penn's project is concentrated to the villages surrounding Iquitos, a city that is mixes modern and primitive structures, with 70 percent of its population living in poverty.

"Education is the main problem," Penn said.

Penn said he works with the natives to help them become more self-sufficient and develop more respect for themselves and their customs.

Projects were set up to get schools functioning and start mother's clubs in the villages.

Through environmental education in the schools, children are planting useful trees and plants to form a sustainable agroforestry program.

The fund also assists the Tamshiyacu Health Center, which vaccinates natives and teaches them to use intravenous equipment for cholera. The cholera epidemic spread through Peru and the government 'lew over villages dropping intravenous medications into villages. The people, however did not know how to use the medication.

Penn said village people understand the need to preserve their resources, but governmental views and projects are hurting the forest.

Distilleries, which are illegal, use very little land and make a lot of money. This is an example of possible environmental solution, with social draw backs, Penn said.

The reserve is owned by the government, but the people of the villages use the land, he said.

Penn and his colleague, Richard Bodmer, have been working in South America since 1984. In 1989 when the Peruvian government and scientists in Peru became interested in creating a reserve, Penn and Bodmer became involved. In 1990 they formed the Amazon Conservation Fund, which is registered and functions in Peru.

Communication society founder goes national

By Doug Durso
General Assignment Reporter

An SIUC faculty member is the first speech communication professor elected to head a national scholarly organization in the field of semiotics.

Richard L. Lanigan Jr. was elected president of the Semiotic

Society of America.

Semiotics, the study of cultural codes in comparative communication between people, animals and machines, spans every type of language, including verbal and non-verbal communication, Lanigan said.

Lanigan, who helped found the society in 1976, said he felt the society was necessary because there was no organized way for people who are interested in semiotics to compare ideas.

At the time there was not a comparative organization to study communication across cultures and species so it was important to have a program to compare and organize research from people in the field of semiotics, Lanigan said.

Society members are interdisciplinary, with occupations from biologists to computer specialists. Any field which deals with communication is important in semiotics, he said.

His first job will consist of organizing the Fifth International Congress on Semiotics, which occurs every five years and will be in the United States for the first time June 12-18 at California University in Berkeley.

"The congress meets to compare research and update any new information gained over the past three or four years," Lanigan said.

Middle-East peace process must go on

LAST SEPTEMBER A SECRETLY NEGOTIATED pact was signed between the leaders of Israel and the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

The pact, signed by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and PLO leader Yasser Arafat, called for a withdrawal of Israeli soldiers from Arab towns in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho to begin by Dec. 13. Only troops guarding Israeli settlements and the roads connecting them would remain.

The agreed upon deadline was missed. Consequently, doubts about the sincerity of Israel to live up to its promise, as well as violence between the two opponents, began to rise, threatening the peace process.

If the desire for peace by both leaders is sincere, the acts of extremists should not stop their efforts.

VIOLENCE IN THE ISRAELI OCCUPIED TERRITORY of Gaza continues to rise in spite of the talks between Israeli and PLO leaders. The violence continues in a cyclical pattern of attack and retaliation.

On Feb. 25, a Jewish settler attacked and killed 30 Palestinian worshippers at a mosque in the town of Hebron.

Early last week four members of the Islamic Resistance Movement were killed after they fired on a passing Israeli police patrol and refused to surrender. A woman and her unborn child were also killed in the shooting.

Monday, six members of Fatah, a faction of the PLO, were killed by Israeli soldiers.

In one day this week, over 50 people were wounded and one killed in the Gaza Strip.

Adding to Palestinian suspicions is the continuous building of low-cost apartment complexes in occupied territories. The Israeli government offers low-mortgage rates as incentives for families who can not afford a home elsewhere.

ALTHOUGH ISRAEL MISSED THE DEADLINE, it has begun to remove the infrastructure of its military out of Arab settled towns and into the country side surrounding the Jewish settlements.

Currently, it is estimated that 70 percent of the Israeli military has already pulled out, though the military presence on the streets of Arab towns has not changed. This again leads Palestinian settlers to be wary of Israel's promises.

BECAUSE NO FINAL AGREEMENT HAS YET been reached stating specific terms of the withdrawal, Israel's reluctance to remove its forces completely is understandable. The subject on which the two sides disagree the most is that of an international observation force. Palestinians want the force to be made of United States and Russian soldiers, the Israelis want only troops from Norway.

THE WITHDRAWAL OF ISRAEL'S SOLDIERS should continue to completion, without excuse. A true desire for peace among Israeli and PLO leaders should not be hampered by the violent acts of extremists.

Also, Israeli leaders might wish to consider this; an early withdrawal would make a nice prelude to lasting peace.

Letters to the Editor

Peace must ensure rights, identity

I am writing in response to the March 25th editorial by Allan Poretz, in which he expressed his concern about the peace process after the massacre in Hebron. First of all, thank you for your concern about the peace process, but let me point out the following to enhance your knowledge about this subject.

You described the handshaking between Yasser Arafat and Yitzhak Rabin as an "incredible moment", but do you think that the hands of Rabin are cleaned from the Palestinians blood? If yes, why haven't the Jews forgotten about their blood spilled in Germany?

And what about Yasser Arafat, who accepted all the "conditions" of his historical enemy, for what reason? Is it for an independent state? Is it for money? Or is it a new conspiracy? In light of those possibilities, is this such an "incredible moment"?

You describe J. Goldstein, who opened fire on civilian worshippers in Hebron Mosque, as a man insane, and you compared his act to the acts of the maniacs in this country.

You are right up to a certain point. Maybe the crimes are the same, but the motives are not. It's the same stereotype that we as Palestinians have been hearing since 1948; that this is an act of individuals, while the truth is that it's not.

The criminal's wife claimed that she called the Israeli authorities after he left his home to stop him, but the Israeli authorities deny that she called.

The survivors testified that the Israeli guards threatened them with guns when they tried to call an ambulance to help the victims.

When investigators questioned the Israeli guards as to why they didn't stop the maniac, they said that they had the authority to shoot Palestinians only not Jewish settlers under any circumstances. In this context, do you think this is an "individual act"?

Lastly, those whom you described as "political opportunists" are the majority of the Palestinian people, who are mislabeled by pro-Israeli sources.

We want peace, but not any peace. We want a peace which insures our human rights, our identity and our independent state in our historical homeland.

—Abu Fardem Sameer, senior, computer science

Animal rights activists illogical

A letter by Andrea Bauch, of the Animal Rights Action Team, on March 28th, addressing animal rights displays the radical and illogical rational of this tiny but highly vocal organization.

Ms. Bauch says her group believes, "...there is no justification for the use of non-human animals in research."

Animals play an integral part of medical research not only in this country but around the world.

Is it wrong?

Yes, some of it is when it is carried out unprofessionally or inhumanly.

Most facilities that operate this way were shut down or changed years ago by animal rights activists who wanted to see ethical and moral treatment of laboratory animals.

They opened the public's eye to this problem and have forced the science community to either treat research animals as humanly as possible or be exposed to ridicule, loss of funding, etc.

Most of the people I know applaud this aspect of the animal rights movement but this is not what the organization wants.

They want to stop valuable research and medical uses of animals that save thousands of human lives each year and offer hope for the understanding and control of hundreds of diseases.

I do not appreciate this radical group trying to stop what may potentially save members of my family, friends, or even Ms. Bauch from disease or death.

She contends that humans have a choice to end the pain and suffering of ALL animals.

Anyone who truly understands nature and its predator prey relationships can see the absurdity in this concept.

She also contends that humans are not superior to animals, however, she must not be considering the enormous gift humans share—the capacity to reason and think in terms of morals.

We have been given dominion over the animals (Genesis 1:28-29) and as their superior we need to treat them humanly but also use them to benefit mankind.

People need to be skeptical of any organization that bases its agenda strictly on emotion without concern for logic and logic is clearly the Animal Rights Action Team is lacking.

—Don L. Smith, senior, zoology

"It's a matter of where they (young people in the United States) choose to spend their money," she said.

I've seen people who just bought a $20,000 car, but cannot afford $50 a month for health insurance"

Mason said rates for people in the 18- to 24-year-old age bracket ran from $45 to $85 a month, depending on deductibles and gender — women pay higher rates because they are more likely to be hospitalized.

It also was reported in the brief it also was reported full-time employees had a 13-percent lapse in coverage, while the unemployed went for a month or more without a job had a 38-percent lapse.

The bureau also reported in the 1992 Service Annual Survey that revenue for the nation's health-care industry continued to rise in 1992 to $625 billion — a 9-percent increase from 1991.

Bureau Survey Manager Tom Zabelsky said revenue for nearly all health-service industries increased.

"Home health care and kidney dialysis centers posted the largest gains of 22 percent each," he said. The survey reported that hospitals accounted for more than half of all revenue for health-service industries in 1992, exceeding $335 billion, an 8-percent increase from 1991.

Administrators at Memorial Hospital in Carbondale and St. Joseph's Hospital in Murphysboro could not be reached for comment.

The bureau also reported an 8-percent increase from 1991 to 1992 and a $42 billion revenue in nursing and personal-care facilities.

Revenue for offices and clinics of doctors of medicine rose nearly 9 percent and more than 42 percent of the revenue came from patient services provided in the doctor's office or clinic, and 22 percent came from hospital inpatient services.

week before the fall semester." Bill Hall said. "I have heard no justifiable reason for delaying the system any longer."

Bill Hall said students and taxpayers already have spent large amounts of money and time researching the creation of a transit system and it is time to act on the information.

"SIU students and the taxpayers of Illinois have spent eight years and well over $100,000 in researching how to put busses on the road in Carbondale," he said. "It is now time for the studying to end; it is time to get on the bus."

Linda Gladson, senior planner for Carbondale, said a transit service could become a joint effort between the city and the University if trustees decide to allow community members to ride transit buses.

"We (the city) have been talking all along with the University about a joint effort in the transit service," Gladson said. "Right now we are not considering providing any money from the general fund (of the city) to fund the mass transit system, because the University has not yet decided if the service will also be open to the entire Carbondale community."

Bill Hall said allowing community access to the transit service at other colleges, such as Northern Illinois University at DeKalb, generates extra funds for those universities.

"It is our understanding that an extra $40,000 was generated at NIU in one year because of its mass transit service being open to the DeKalb community," he said. "Student government has always united in the idea to share the ridership of the mass transit system with the Carbondale community."

Bill Hall said he hopes Guyon will present the $20-fee proposal to trustees at their May meeting.

Lanigan said about 82 countries have semiotic societies, the U.S. organization consisting of 500 members. The majority of members are university professors but there also are members in business and industry.

A nomination committee selects candidates, asks them to run and members vote for the president at the annual meeting in October, Lanigan said.

Lanigan said one reason he was nominated is because he is a speech communication professor.

There have been presidents in different fields like linguistics, philosophy and anthropology, so different fields of study bring a different perspective on communication.

Bues band to visit Murphysboro

By Kyle J. Chapman
Entertainment Reporter

Weeks after Mardi Gras festivities have ended, the up tempo St. Louis sound of the Souldr Blues Band is coming to Carrie's Place in Murphysboro this weekend.

The band plays a combination of soul, mescic, and blues and rhythm and blues.

The Souldr Blues Band came together in 1977 in the musical community of souldr in St. Louis, where they were influenced by many different artists like Ike Turner and Dizzie Gillespie.

The band has been together for more than 16 years and has toured the country performing in such places as Mississippi, Kansas City, Chicago, Missouri, Texas and Florida.

An Dwyer, bass player for the band, said the music profession is rough sometimes but it still is a rewarding job.

"This stuff is rough now and then but it's a great life," he said. "We came up in St. Louis listening to people like Ike Turner for 50 cents a night. We have remained true to our roots which is in a neighborhood called Souldr in St. Louis."

Dwyer said despite difficult times and the low points, he would not choose another profession.

"I'm the manager of the group and sometimes you just have to get down to it and do what you can," Dwyer said. "We've made three or four albums and been all over the country. I accept the good and the bad because this is just the life of a musician."

Dwyer said he would like to continue to play his music ever after his retirement because it has become an essential part of his life.

"I'd like to discover the fountain of youth and win the lottery but music is my livelihood and it's an honest wage," he said. "We feel good about what we do and we will probably continue to do it as long as we live."

Souldr Blues Band

Scott Browner, owner of Carrie's Place, said he has known the Souldr Blues Band for years and its music is consistent with the band's St. Louis roots.

"I personally have known them for 14 years and I've listened to them since then. I had a club in St. Louis in an old neighborhood called Souldr and consequently met the Souldr band," Browner said. "They always have been strong, dynamic and well choreographed. They've always had a horn and an outstanding harmonica."

The band will play from 9 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. Saturday. The cover charge is $3.

Excellent wine takes patience

A long, winding, gravel road snakes through the scenic Shawnee National Forest to a small winery in the middle of the woods. In the township of Pomona, with its population of 150 and one vine-covered general store, George Majka and Jane Payne started Pomona Winery.

Majka said they always had a passion for wine and how to make it. "We've always enjoyed wine and intrigued with the idea of making it ourselves, but we had never tasted any good wine made at somebody's home," Majka said. "One day we met a person who made excellent home wine and he told us how to make it."

Majka said the key to making wine is being careful and following all instructions.

"What usually happens in home-wine making is impatience or lack of cleanliness or allowing oxygen into the wine. If you allow any of those three things to happen the wine will be uninteresting, untasty, oxidized or flat wine," Majka said.

"If you follow those rules you will have a pretty good wine and then you can build to possibly an excellent wine," Majka said.

Payne said they spend half of their time cleaning the equipment.

Payne said Pomona means goddess of fruit trees, so that was a good omen. Majka and Payne, whose other occupation is residential building, built the winery next to their house in 1990. The winery, on a small hill overlooking the forest, is filled with many 55-gallon barrels tilted to one side while the smell of apples fills the room.

The winery produces about 1,500 gallons of wine a year, Majka said. One of only nine wineries in the state, Majka's and Payne's business produces apple wine from the local orchards, like Grammer Orchard, because the area has very good orchards.

Apples were a logical choice because the area has very good apple orchards. "There are three types of apples we use: golden, red and jonathan," Majka said.

Payne said apples must be picked when ripe, so wine-making season starts in September and October.

"The first step is to choose the apples and then take LuLu, our 1946 Chevy Truck, to haul the apples back to the winery," Payne said.

Past comes alive, disco revitalized at local bar scene

By Melissa Edwards and Joe Bebar
Special Assignment Reporters

It is dreamlike — a timewarp minus the machinery.

Is that Jan Brady? No wait, it's Marsha. Butterfly collars and leisure suits compete with beauties in polyester booging to the beat of the BeeGees.

Sound like '70s Radio Hell? It is. Wednesday night at Hangar 9 was WIDB's eighth "Best of the Worst of the '70s," a night for those who miss the strobe-lighted disco scene to come out and proclaim their love for the "Disco Inferno."

SIUC alumnus Alan Matthews was the disc jockey who began the best of the worst April 1, 1986. Along with his partner in crime, SIUC alumnus Keith Tixhorn, the two spun some of the worst radio tunes to come out of the disco fever era.

But the night also was a true reflection of '70s pop culture, complete with milk and Pepsi chugging contests, just like Laverne used to drink in "Laverne and Shirley," bobbing for Barbies in a styrofoam cooler while wearing a shark fin, just like "Jaws" bobbed for bodies in the ocean, and '70's trivia.

SIUC student Kelly Guerin, who coordinated the event for WIDB looked groovy in her bell bottoms, boots with three-inch heels and powder-blue barrettes. She said the night was so popular last semester the station decided to do it again.

Dave Jull, a senior in radio and television from Du Quoin, did his best Bluto impression, straight from the big screen of "Animal House." He said the night is the coolest thing that happens every semester.

"I grew up with this music — and I like to make a fool of myself dancing to it," he said.

But perhaps the embodiment of the '70s came in the form of Ulis Crawford, a freshman in graphic design from Barrington. One of the only people who knew how to really dance to the disco vibes, she openly admitted to liking the music.

"It's upbeat, fast-going — I'm not doing anything (different) I'm just dancing," she said.

Brad Francis, a sophomore in math and chemistry from Nashville, who won the bobbing for Barbies contest, easily summed up the point of the evening: "There is nothing more fun than seeing people in retro gear getting out and shaking booty."

Foolish pranks played for pleasure

By Karyn Viverito
Special Assignment Reporter

One day, SIUC student Tanya Jphoff finally got up the nerve to call her sister and best friends to tell them she was three-months pregnant.

Little did her family and friends know that by the end of the conversation, they would be laughing.

Uphoff, a junior in nursing from Findlay, said it was her freshman year in college and she got the idea for the April Fool's Day joke from some girls on her dormitory floor.

"It was something crazy to do, because before that I always used to pull little pranks," she said. "It was really fun because it was hard to fake it; I had to pretend like I was crying on the phone."

Playing practical jokes on the first of this month has been a tradition known as April Fool's Day, or All Fools Day, since the custom began practice more than 400 years ago.

No one really is sure of its exact origin, but it seems to have come about in France in 1582 — that was the year the Gregorian calendar changed New Year's from March 25 to Jan. 1.

Gifts and visits always had been exchanged at the end of the New Year season, which ended April 1. With the change in dates, more conservative and forgetful Frenchmen would go to doors bringing gifts and be subject to ridicule.

Thus April Fool's started as a day for fools who failed to make the proper adjustment.

April-fooling in England did not begin until 1752 when the calendar changed.

Some other European traditions included putting notes on people's backs, filling a sugar bowl with salt, gluing a penny on the pavement, and sending false messages or letters through the mail.

Newspapers in Germany and England printed false stories. — The Daily Egyptian also did this in the 1950s when the paper put out an entire false issue.

Known as "hunting the gowk (cuckoo)" in Scotland and "poison d'avril" in France, current fool's tricks include sending people on foolish errands and "crying wolf."

When Uphoff decided to cry wolf she received some surprised reactions.

"My sister did not say anything at first and she was breathing real heavy, when she started to ask how and I could tell she was really scared, I let her in on the joke," Uphoff said. "My friend Lisa was so concerned she was going to come down from Eastern to be with me; needless to say she was more relieved than upset when I said 'April Fool's.'"

SIUC student Chad Gordon has taken part in the April Fool's Day tradition for quite some time, but one prank turned out to be a little more serious.

Gordon, a sophomore in radio-television from Villa Grove, was on a high-school field trip on April Fool's, when he and some friends decided to play sick.

"We took a half-day field trip into Amish country and ate a bunch of food at one of their local stores," he said.

"To get out of the rest of the day at school, we all pretended to be sick from the food we ate there."

The bluff worked, and the U.S. Food and Drug Administration was called in and closed down the Amish store that supposedly gave Gordon and his friends the bad food.

Gordon said the harm was cleared up when a parent got wind of what the students did.

While that prank went a little too far, a trick involving his parents was a lot of fun, Gordon said.

"When I was 16, I called my dad, at 2 a.m. on April 1 and said I was in Champaign-Urbana in jail for underage drinking," he said.

"I kept it up for a couple minutes before I let him know it was a joke, but my dad already had one foot in the pants leg and his shirt on."

Apples are shoveled into a washing tank then placed into an electric grinder where they are ground up to a finest pulp as possible. Then the fruit is moved to a press where juice is squeezed by hand, Majka said. The press is connected to a hose, which transports juice into 55-gallon plastic barrels.

Payne said bottling and labeling is very time-consuming, because each bottle is filled and labeled by hand.

Majka said they bottled their first professional wine in August, sold it for retail in October and the wine hit liquor stores in January 1994.

"We deliver the wine to local stores in the Southern Illinois area," Majka said.

Their future plans include a tasting room and a possible stop for tours.

They learned how to set up a professional winery by touring others in Illinois and Missouri, as well as reading books on the subject.

Wagner shines at benefit concert

Mellifluous songs tell tales; soprano enthralled audience

Concert Review

By Melissa Edwards
Entertainment Reporter

One word never has sounded so sweet. Although the entire song consisted of one word, it never sounded the same twice.

The song was Mozart's "Alleleluia," the voice was Jeanine Wagner's and the result was overwhelming.

Wagner sang Wednesday night at a benefit concert for Mu Phi Epsilon, an international music fraternity.

She was accompanied by Margaret Simmons, whose piano skill combined with Wagner's voice to create one of the most exciting free performances this campus has ever heard.

The two performed a wide variety of pieces — some were in German, Italian, or French, but Wagner's voice seemed to transcend the language. The music had such a power on its own that, although translations were provided, they almost were not necessary.

All songs told a story, but "The Serpent," a light-hearted tune in English, was a real pleaser.

The audience seemed captivated by the story of a snake who one day decides he needs to sing. Swirling notes and slight lisp give the image of a snake who just happens to have the best singing voice a snake has ever had.

But the best part of the evening came in the form of a song that many people think of as a sing-along. Wagner sang "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands," as an encore.

The song has special meaning to the two women. Wagner said they always had liked the tune, but after she and Simmons performed it while they were part of a faculty exchange in Latvia, it took on an even more special meaning.

The powerful song meant a lot to the audience, too, who gave the two a standing ovation.

As they received flowers, they smiled and bowed, in just as graceful and elegant manner as the music they performed.

Holocaust film retells true tale of young man

By Kyle J. Chapman
Entertainment Reporter

In recognition of the Jewish Holocaust Memorial, the SIUC Student Programming Committee is presenting the film "Europa Europa," the story of a boy who finds the will to survive in the midst of the holocaust.

Co-sponsoring the film is the Hillel Foundation, a registered student organization serving Jewish students and faculty members.

Robin Gross, director of the Hillel Foundation, said she wanted this film to be shown during the Jewish Holocaust Memorial Week.

It begins Monday, because it will be a realistic and educational experience for SIUC students.

"It's based on a true story of a man struggling to survive during the holocaust — he was one of the few lucky enough to survive," Gross said.

Gross said in the film one of the most moving realizations of the Jewish boy is that "in the Nazi system of education, the path from a man to a monster is indeed very short — no longer than the finger that pulls the trigger of an automatic rifle, but the path back is longer than eternity. This is what all youth around the world need to know."

Committee chairperson Jim Lawrence said "Europa Europa" is a powerful film that was difficult to come to grips with.

"It's hard to believe that this film is actually a true story," Lawrence said. "It's the story of a German-Jew who puts on all kinds of masquerades to survive the holocaust."

"He poses as a Nazi soldier and a Russian soldier and becomes a war hero by an unusual accident.

"It's a great film that everyone should see just to see the reality of the Jewish holocaust."

The film will show at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday, in the Student Center Auditorium. Admission is $1.

With designs on advertising sales, more teams are changing uniforms

The Baltimore Sun

Baseball has reached the end of the rainbow. And yes, there is gold there.

The Houston Astros, who jolted the sports world in 1975 with a kaleidoscopic uniform, finally have abandoned the last vestiges of the "rainbow" in favor of a gold-accented blue and gray uniform.

And they aren't the only team toning down this year and hoping to hit it rich with sales of team apparel. Twenty-two of the 28 major-league teams will take the field this year in redesigned uniforms, a record. In some cases, the changes will be minor, such as tinkering with batting practice jerseys for the Baltimore Orioles. In others, such as the Astros, it will be dramatic.

Overall, say those who follow sports fashion, the changes represent the end of one fashion epoch and the beginning of another. America's oldest and most tradition-bound sport is rediscovering its roots, rejecting the splashy and unconventional designs that dominated the 1970s.

"I think this is the conclusion of the '60s and '70s design period. I think the pendulum has swung the other way, to tradition," said Anne Occi, vice president of design for Major League Baseball Properties, the sport's merchandising unit.

And what a period it was. Thick waistbands, V-neck, button-less jerseys and bright color. Lots of color. Several factors conspired to make the nation's baseball players look like candy canes during the period.

Color television grew common, and double-knit polyester just had been invented, making it easier to experiment with looks the owners thought would show well on TV, said Mark Okkonen, author of "Baseball Uniforms of the 20th Century."

And there were the sensibilities of the time—the age of bell-bottom pants and platform shoes—which favored the unusual.

There is a new consideration in uniform design, and it's colored green: money. Baseball, like all major-league sports, has discovered a gold mine in sales of caps, shirts and other officially licensed merchandise.

The Chicago White Sox were the first team to show how a redesign can affect sales. The team went to a black-and-white color scheme a few years back and rocketed from near-last to first place in merchandise sales. Last year's expansion teams, the Florida Marlins and Colorado Rockies, began play in uniforms designed to sell and went to the top of the lineup as soon as they took the field.

The 28 baseball franchises split evenly the licensing revenues from apparel sales, but some teams also operate their own retail stores and can benefit individually from a hot look.

The Texas Rangers, for example, this year will take over operation of all in-stadium merchandise sales and will inaugurate a new uniform to go with their new ballpark.

that doesn't need any shoring up is behind the plate where sophomore Tim Kraatovich has thrown out 16-32 base stealers so far this season. Last year the Mt. Olive native gunned down 46 percent of the would-be stealers.

If your one of those morbid baseball fans who enjoys seeing batters get hit by pitches, then the Saluki squad has a player for you. Senior infielder Chris Saurich has been pegged 14 times already this season, breaking his mark of 12 in 1993. SIUC as a team has been hit 31 times, opposed to the 12 batters Saluki pitchers have nailed.

Creighton players who may deserve a double-take this weekend are leftfielder Chris Piggott and centerfielder Chris Meyers.

Piggott is hitting a red-hot .400, while Meyers slugs out at .351. Five Blue Jays are above .300 with the team average standing at .294.

year, but has run into problems this season.

Daugherty said she needs hall to start scoring.

"We'd be right there if she was scoring," Daugherty said. "She can do it, it's just a matter of getting out there and playing well."

Rohan said possibly the biggest problem the Salukis have faced this season is getting good play out of the entire team on given days.

"As a team a couple of guys play well in one match but we need everyone," he said. "Basically we need to play well on the same day and it's not happening. We need to do this to come through as a team."

The Salukis will seek good play this weekend when they take on conference foe Illinois State on Saturday and Memphis State on Sunday.

Riggelman has jockeyed the Saluki defensive line-up through the nonconference schedule, but now that league play has arrived the Saluki skipper is going with the experience.

Three seniors and a sophomore will make up the Dawgs infield with Saurich at third, Craig Shelton at short, Jeff Cwynar at second and Scott DeNoyer at first.

Riggelman said the experienced line-up will hopefully provide enough defensive stability to put the Dawgs over the top.

"This allows us to have our most experienced players in there, along with Shelton (sophomore), who has enjoyed a solid season so far," he said. "Now we have to stop somebody, with quality pitching and a stingy defense."

Saturday's doubleheader with the Jays begins at noon, while Sunday's first pitch is slated for 1 p.m.

Dawgs host Creighton in MVC opener

By Grant Deady
Sports Reporter

Salukis take 5-1 home mark into weekend games

Clear the runway- the Creighton Blue Jays are flying into Carbondale this Saturday to battle the Saluki baseball team as Missouri Valley Conference play finally gets underway.

The Dawgs bring an 11-10 record into the three-game series with the Jays, a team ranked third in the MVC's preseason coaches poll.

Creighton comes into the game with a 10-16 record and winners in just one of its last six games. But Saluki head coach Sam Riggelman said the Blue Jays record doesn't nearly reflect the type of team Creighton has.

"They'll be very good because they have some strong personnel," he said. "Creighton's record is misleading because of their tough schedule on the road. You don't get to play many baseball games in Omaha, Neb. this time of year."

One thing Creighton should brace itself for is some high-scoring games. The Dawgs are averaging just over six runs per contest through the first 21, and boast a 5-1 record at Abe Martin Field.

The Dawgs defense has struggled in its last two games, but the fact that six Saluki players are hitting above .300 has Riggelman excited about his teams' chances.

"We know there's an area or two we have to clean up and one of those is to shore up defensively," he said. "I'm certainly encouraged with our offense as we have raised our team batting average to .270, though, and are scoring quite a few runs."

SIUC hoopster in NCAA Finals' 3-point contest

So what if the SIUC women's basketball team was shutout of post-season play this year. Saluki off-guard Karen Powell is going to the men's Final Four.

Powell is one of eight players chosen to compete in the women's Three-Point Shootout in Charlotte, N.C. on Sunday.

Powell and the elite field of female sharpshooters will be part of a basketball extravaganza shown on ESPN that will also feature a men's three-point and slam-dunk contest.

Other bombers going head-to-head with Powell are behind the arc will be Evansville's Amy LeFever, Southwest Missouri State's Melody Howard, Amy Conn and Kristen Follis from Stetson, Oregon's Missy Croshaw, Seton Hall's Jodi Brooks and Dan Galbreath from Texas Arlington.

Dick Vitale and Tim Brando will be the hosts of the event live on ESPN beginning at 2:30 p.m.

Women golfers look to improve this weekend

By Dan Leahy
Sports Editor

The SIUC women's golf team will try to scratch its last tournament from its scorecard as the action gets underway in Indiana this weekend.

The Salukis finished 18th out of 18 teams in the LSU Invitational over spring break, but were up against schools such as Texas, Florida State and Texas Tech.

SIUC head coach Diane Daugherty said her disappointment was not that the Dawgs finished last, but the fact that the team played poorly.

"All the schools there were Southern powerhouses," Daugherty said. "But we didn't play up to our capabilities. "We bit off more than we could chew and we took lunch."

Daugherty put the team through some thorough practice sessions following the LSU invite and thinks she has them ready for this weekend.

"They didn't like finishing last any more than I did," Daugherty said. "We have to work and practice to be ready to play."

The competition at Indiana this weekend does include some tough opponents such as Indiana and Oklahoma, who are ranked in the top 20, but also features some in-state competition with Northern Illinois and Illinois State.

Daugherty said she expects a better finish this weekend now that her players have the first tournament under their belts.

"This should be a lot different from our first tourney," she said. "I don't think you can call what we had the first time jitters, but getting out and playing rounds in competition is really a lot different than practice rounds."

Lieschen Eller will spear the Saluki attack, as she is carrying a 79 per-round average this spring. Eller is already expected to contend for the Missouri Valley individual championship, despite the fact that she is just a junior.

"She hits the ball with so much power and she has learned to control that power," Daugherty said.

Eller has had some wind-aided drives reach near the 300-yard plateau an average of 240 yards a drive.

Dana Rasmus has been playing the No. 2 slot for the Dawgs and has been the most consistent Saluki.

Laura Stefanich and Molly Hudgins round out the three and four positions, with Carrie Hall trying to contribute from the fifth spot.

ISU, Memphis State next for men's tennis team

By Chris Walker
Sports Reporter

The SIUC men's tennis team's recent woes continued on Wednesday with a 7-0 drubbing to the University of Illinois.

The loss was the Salukis fifth in their last sixth matches and it came with only a couple days before the beginning of conference play.

SIUC head coach Jeremy Rowan said the Fighting Illini's strength and depth were key factors in the Saluki loss.

The loss of No. 3 Altan Merchant was also felt on Wednesday, but Rowan said the play of No. 6 Matt McManaway was admirable.

"I was pleased with the way he played," Rowan said. "He can play but he has to believe he can play with these big guys."

Rowan said the shifting in the bottom four of the Saluki lineup because of an injury should be a sm

"I think they are going to adjust," he said. "They know it was an injury and they'll get together this weekend."

Rowan added that No. 1 Andre Goransson had a good second set in his defeat and No. 2 Jean-Sebastien Lafond played solid but was outgunned.

John Garcia was the only Saluki to go three sets as he was edged by Michau Basson 6-4, 5-7, 6-4.

The agonies of the doubles teams continued for the Salukis as their three teams were knocked off handily 8-2, 8-1, 8-1.

Although the Salukis have been struggling, this weekend provides them with a chance to get back on track with matches against Illinois State and Memphis State.

Rowan said he thinks that both matches will be tough but they can win.

"We've seen ISU and we should beat them," Rowan said. "They're alright but I think we're better than they are."

"Memphis State is very good this year and we'll need to play well to beat them."
