Feminism, environmentalism come together at conference

By Lisa M. Pangburn

Seven women sat around a fire discussing their love for the Earth, the troubles they have gone through in the fight for women's rights and why each of them came to this "hering."

Dana Snyder and her one-year-old daughter, Cassidy, from Muscatine, Iowa, said she came to the gathering because it specifically focused on women.

"I've been doing gatherings since I was 17. This is the first one I've discovered that puts women first," she said. "I think it is very necessary to do this with my daughter."

The second annual Women's Conference took place this past weekend at Black Diamond Ranch, just south of Alto Pass. Approximately 57 women attended the conference.

Kristen Kordecki, a senior in photography from Carbondale and a coordinator of the conference, said the gathering was the perfect way for women to gain knowledge.

"This conference opened up a network to a great diversity of women to receive information," she said.

When the conference began Friday evening, women lived in caravans. So the women knew each other, some were old friends and some came alone, saying they wanted to learn about their individuality.

At sunrise on Saturday the Maribe I. Smith, from Cobden, lectured on aromatherapy — the healing by the scent of essential oils — and the benefits of herbal healing versus Western medicine.

Smith also spoke about sin-fectants used in the home that are safe for humans and pets.

"If you use a mixture of clove and lemon oils to clean your floor or to disinfect your counters, you don't have to worry about your pets or children getting sick from the concoction," she said.

Freddie Waddell, from Makanda, lectured on what women can do to heal the Earth by healing and loving themselves first.

"Sometimes you need to say, 'Beautiful Mother Earth, forgive me for every time I've wasted your gifts,'" she said. "Women as well as men need to realize that everything you do or don't do concerning conservation will come back to us. Everyone needs to take an active role in protecting our planet."

Some of the workshops included topics of women in politics and organic farming.

Tara Nelsen, a junior in zoology from Algonquin and founder of the University Spirituality group, said the workshops were "empowering."

"It was good to hear what I believe voiced over and over again," she said. "I think it is important to have a lot of these things to get back to basics — to go to the basic level of being female instead of being jealous or untrusting."

Jaime Stratis and Amanda Quas, from Rock Island, drove six hours for the conference.

"I didn't know what to expect when I came," Quas said. "It was a spiritual awakening, and I really learned a lot about the Earth as

City Hall comes to SIUC campus

Students missing from meeting to discuss Carbondale concerns

By Brian T. Sutton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

City officials showed up for a town meeting on the SIUC campus to discuss students' concerns with Carbondale Thursday evening, but one thing was missing — students.

SIUC students missed a chance to meet with a citizen group to discuss concerns about the city because, some students say they were not aware of such a meeting.

The Citizen Advisory Committee had a meeting at Grinnell Hall Thursday evening to listen to any student concerns dealing with Carbondale.

The committee, established in the 1960s, is a citizen interest group that acts under the authority of the mayor to elicit Carbondale residents' concerns on various projects. The committee has previously worked on "Carbondale 2000," a report outlining resident goals for Carbondale.

Cleveland Mathews, Carbondale community relations officer, said he was shocked that no students came to the meeting.

"What irritates me is that students complain that City Hall is inaccessible, but that is not the case," he said. "We brought City Hall to campus, and they did not show up."

This attempted meeting was the Gaming convention attracts 650 players

By Jason E. Coyne
DE Arts/Entertainment Editor

Like generals planning troop movements, game players huddled around tables anticipating opponents' moves to gain an advantage in various competitions. With time running out in the competitions and the ninth annual Egyptian Campaign game convention, facial expressions grew intense.

The 1996 Egyptian Campaign drew nearly 650 people during the three-day event.

Troy Denning, a freelance author of 12 Dungeons and Dragons fantasy books, welcomed people to buy his books and offered autographs to enthused gamers.

Denning, who began playing games back in his Beloit College (Wis.) days, found something he liked and made it a career.

"I came across people playing a game (Dungeons and Dragons) in the Arms," the 37-year-old Lake Geneva, Wis., resident said. "Shortly afterward, I applied for a job at TSR (D&D makers) and began editing."

For the Idaho Springs, Colo. native, the reading that spawned his writing career was the only alternative to perennial boredom.

"We didn't have a bowling alley, theater and only one TV station that my dad's rays had tuned in to news," Denning said. "So I had to learn to read, and I thought I could do the same as the authors I was reading."

For vendors of merchandise, like Jeremy Barnhill of D&D Cards and Comics in Dayton, Ohio, a return visit to the Egyptian Campaign was a must.

"They came out last year to the convention and liked it, so we came back this year," he said.

Barnhill, who claims he has played every card game on the market, finds "Magic: The Gathering" his favorite. "You can sit down with people who don't speak a word of English and play a game in about a half-hour," he said. "It's a universal language of sorts, and it doesn't take two or three days to set up like D&D or Battletech."

Mike Alley, a senior in foreign language and international trade from Chicago, served as a judge for "Spellfire," a card game, and "The Board Games," "Tatan" and "Talisma." "You set up the games, spell out the rules and give out prizes," he said. "Playing various games is something Alisy has done since fifth grade."

FREE MARKET ECONOMY IN TROUBLE IN ECUADOR — QUITO, Ecuador—Already a laggard on Latin America's road to modernization, Ecuador now finds itself conducting a presidential election in which the hemisphere's free-market economies are portrayed as the enemy, and the world privatization has almost disappeared from the political lexicon. While elsewhere in Latin America people are discussing how to deepen the liberalization trend, the political discussion in this small Andean country is turning on perceived flaws in the hemisphere's guiding economic model. No matter who emerges victorious, it seems likely that Ecuador will take a different course from that of its neighbors. Given the tenor of the campaign, the next government of this oil-rich and historically insular country is likely to pursue a difficult balance between reducing the state's role in the economy and appeasing anxious workers and addressing the needs of the poor.

YELTSIN ANNOUNCES CEASE-FIRE IN CHECHNYA — MOSCOW—Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin ordered his troops Sunday to end all combat actions against rebel Chechnya and announced that a phased withdrawal of federal forces will begin from areas of the break-away republic already bludgeoned into submission. But a simultaneous vow to continue fighting against "terrorist acts" suggested that Yeltsin's latest endeavor to stop the war he instigated 15 months ago was little more than a repackaging of failed initiatives from the past. Yeltsin's campaign-season peace plan, disclosed during a taped address on national television, was prompted by his own earlier admission that he cannot win re-election if the war that has claimed at least 20,000 lives is still raging.

KMART BAYCO AIRS WAGE AND RACE CLAIMS — GILKENSBOPO, N.C.—When Kmart Corp. was scouting for a location to build a regional distribution center, the company found a site on this city's East Side big enough for a warehouse that could contain 35 football fields, and a ready source of labor in the adjacent community. Perfect. To sweeten the deal, city and state officials also clipped in with about $1 million worth of incentives, including sewer lines and a highway interchange. But four years after the distribution center opened, Kmart is embroiled in an ugly fight over the fact it is paying its employees as much as $5 an hour less than it pays at its 12 other distribution centers nationwide. The workers say it is no coincidence that their center is the only one that is unionized and that a majority of the employees here are black.

ASTRONOMERS RACING TO TRACK COMET'S PATH — Comet Hyakutake is erupting in geysers of dust and vapor that resemble upside-down snowstorms as it races toward the sun, setting up a scramble among astronomers trying to track the action. For a few nights last week, the most casual sky-watchers could see Hyakutake (pronounced yah-koo-tah-kay) almost overhead, between the Big Dipper and the North Star, as it streaked close to Earth. Astronomers interested in probing the secrets of the icy ball have had to work harder. Some thought they saw the comet's core breaking up, for example, but the expert consensus is, it's not. "Remember, this thing is so close—and it's moving like a bat out of hell," said astronomer Harold Weaver, of Applied Research Corp. in Landover, Md.

STANDOFF IN MONTANA BECOMES MEDIA EVENT — JORDAN, Mont.—And on the seventh day of the standoff between federal law enforcement authorities and the Montana Freeman, CBS's "Face the Nation" was broadcast from QD's Cafe in Jordan. If anyone in this remote ranching and wheat-growing region of eastern Montana possibly had any lingering doubts they were in the midst of a full-fledged media invasion, they were certainly erased when Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., and local prosecutor Nickolas Murnion strapped on mikes in the back room of QD's and went live with correspondent Phil Jones in Washington. Since last Monday, when two leaders of the militantly anti-government Freeman's movement were snared in an FBI undercover operation at a 960-acre ranch 30 miles northwest of here, Jordan, population 450, has been under siege.

Corporate downsizing expert

Students say professor is knowledgeable as well as modest

By Tammy Taylor
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Even though others say they consider him an expert in his field, a professor in SIUC's College of Business and Administration is modest about his accomplishments.

William McKinley, professor of organizational sociology in the Management Department, said he thinks it is interesting that people call him an expert in the study of organizational downsizing because he has been cited in magazines and has spoken on several radio talk shows.

Organizational downsizing examines why corporate employees are laid off from work. McKinley said he is interested in studying the effects layoffs have on society.

McKinley said his interest turned to organizational downsizing because of recent events in the corporate world. He said financially stable companies lay off employees as a way to make companies smaller and more efficient.

"The practice of reducing personnel for this reason has become very popular because executives feel it is necessary to remain as progressive as other companies that are downsizing," he said.

McKinley said downsizing is not limited to the corporate world.

"To some extent, downsizing is also largely affecting universities and government agencies," McKinley said.

At SIUC, many faculty positions have been lost because they are not being filled after employees retire, McKinley said. In this case, downsizing is not occurring because of layoffs. He said this situation is comparable to layoffs, however, because the University is not actively seeking faculty to fill those positions.

William McKinley

McKinley received his doctorate in organizational sociology from Columbia University and has been teaching organizational theory at the undergraduate and doctorate levels at SIUC since 1990.

Magazines he has been interviewed for include Perspectives, the magazine published by SIUC's graduate school, and the Christian Science Monitor.

David Francis, who used one of McKinley's papers as the topic for his column, "Ideology Influences Corporate Downsizing," in the Jan. 5 issue of the Christian Science Monitor, said McKinley is an expert in his field because he has spent a lot of time studying downsizing.

"Organizational downsizing among companies who are financially healthy is a fairly new phenomena," Francis said. "Dr. McKinley has been studying this since it has become popular, and he gives a reasonable explanation for why downsizing occurs."

Fraternity hosts basketball benefit

By Mary Beth Arimond
Daily Egyptian Reporter

It may have looked like a regular game of basketball from a distance — Sigma Pi fraternity members from different schools meeting together to play a game. The difference in this game, however, was that they were not just playing for recreation. They also were playing for a cause.

Ten Midwestern chapters of Sigma Pi competed in an invitational three-on-three basketball tournament at the SIUC Recreation Center to raise money for the Spinal Cord Society, an international organization devoted to developing a cure for spinal cord injuries and related problems.

Chris Mundschenk, a junior in radio-television from Pontiac and Sigma Pi president, said the fraternity's house mother has a son who was paralyzed in a car accident. She asked the fraternity to get involved in a community event to raise money for the Spinal Cord Society.

He said that in response to her request, he started an invitational tournament with all Midwestern Sigma Pi fraternities.

He said the Spinal Cord Society does not receive any federal government funding, so the money it gets for research is from the money it raises and donations from the public.

"We charged $75 to a team of four who wanted to compete in the tournament," he said. "We then donated the proceeds from 16 teams to the Spinal Cord Society."

He said the tournament was beneficial for the society and the fraternities.

"It works out for the society because they get additional money," he said. "We also have the opportunity to meet additional brothers from all over the Midwest."

Brad Hagy, the Southern Illinois Spinal Cord Society local chapter president, said the tournament was a great way for the fraternities to feel good about supporting a good cause.

"I think the guys know it's a charity benefit," he said. "They also seem to enjoy coming together to play three-on-three basketball."

"It shows they (alumni) still care about a good cause, and they still maintain communication between the younger brothers by telling them how important it is to participate."

Bill Zaborowski
Sigma Pi fraternity

He said the money that was raised from the fraternities will go to the head chapter in Minneapolis for funding research projects to help find a cure for paralysis.

Brian Blahous, a senior in civil engineering from Addison, said the tournament was sponsored by local businesses in Carbondale and Murphysboro.

"It was nice of all of the sponsors to help us out," he said. "All of the money from them just helps us donate more to the society."

Bill Zaborowski, a senior in advanced technical studies from Addison, said even some Sigma Pi alumni came out for a game of basketball to help the fraternity and the society.

"I think it's great to see our alumni show support," he said. "It shows they still care about a good cause, and they still maintain communication between the younger brothers by telling them how important it is to participate in community events."

Don Raddatz, a senior in radio-television from Oak Forest, said he thinks the tournament was a great idea.

"It's a great way for our Sigma Pi fraternities to participate in a charity such as this one," he said.

Hagy said the society will know how much money was raised by the end of the week.

Students chase after lost canine friends

Tired from countless hours of talking to police and Animal Control officers, and from scouring her neighborhood all weekend, Jennifer Urban had to pinch herself when she saw Onyx, her black Labrador, on Sunday.

Urban, a junior in aviation flight from Orland Park, said she had visited the Carbondale Animal Control office every day since she realized her year-old Labrador was missing Friday night.

Sunday morning, she went to the office once more and saw a black dog sitting in the back of one of the animal control trucks.

"I softly called her name and she jumped up," she said. "I was so excited to see her safe that I almost cried."

Every day, fliers and classifiers regarding lost and found pets go out. According to Animal Control, if owners act fast enough, they might be able to recover their missing pets.

A list compiled by Animal Control states that checking various shelters and kennels is one of the best ways to recover a pet.

Urban said a woman spotted Onyx Sunday morning and called the police. She said she was just checking Animal Control again before she quit looking for the day.

"I was really happy to get her back," she said. "My biggest fear was that a college student picked her up and I'd never see her again."

Failed meeting fault of students and city

SIUC students have a long tradition of complaining to each other about what aspects of living in Carbondale irritate them. Tow truck drivers charging $20 to $25 just to release a vehicle the tow operator hasn't even moved, the whopping $250 fine for underage drinking and a ban on keg purchases after 10 p.m. are often the subject of heated party conversation regarding perceived rip-offs in Carbondale.

The people students should be talking to about subjects like these are city officials. Unfortunately every student on campus missed a chance to do this last Thursday when a city group held a town meeting for the "SIUC section" of Carbondale. No students showed up.

The fault for this lack of communication does not rest entirely on apathetic students, however. Some of the blame should be shared with the city.

Residence Hall Association officials said they were not informed of the meeting until Monday, only three days before it was supposed to take place. On Tuesday, Grinnell Hall, the site of the meeting, had still not been reserved. RHA then stepped in and reserved the hall (which is not even supposed to be used by off-campus groups) and distributed fliers so students could know the city was coming to hear their concerns.

This meant students who were lucky enough to see the fliers as soon as they were put up had two days to prepare for the meeting.

More advance notice about the meeting may have resulted in a better turnout. This would have allowed students more time to fit the meeting into their schedules and collect their thoughts about what irritates them in Carbondale. After all, who wants to complain to the city without carefully thinking out a position first.

We encourage the Citizens Advisory Committee to consider planning another meeting for the SIUC campus with more advance notice and promotion. We also hope if another meeting is planned that every student who complains about the city will direct these complaints to people who are in a position to remedy their problems.

If it is not possible to attend a meeting or another is not held, we suggest taking concerns to city hall. City officials may or may not act on a student's concern, but they can do a lot more than a roommate.

Be aware of alcohol policy at Giant City

Warmer weather usually means that SIUC students will be flocking to Giant City State Park for a day of hiking, barbecuing or just laying in the sun.

Do not plan on partying, however. Alcohol is only allowed in the park during June, July and August. Do not plan on park officials overlooking this policy either; they enforce it.

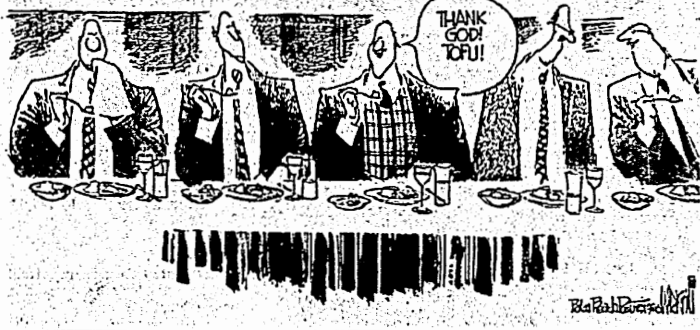

The entrance to the park on Giant City Road (the entrance closest to SIUC) has one medium-sized sign informing users of the rule. Most of the barbecue and shelter areas also have signs stating that alcohol is prohibited in Giant City.

If park users miss the first sign, which is located in a 55 mph speed zone, it is possible — but not probable — to nestle down at a grill without seeing any other notice that they are in danger of getting a $75 ticket if they are drinking, regardless of whether one is old enough to drink.

We think it would be wise if all the barbecue areas had signs about the policy. Practically speaking, many people may not have an inkling that they cannot drink in Giant City because alcohol is allowed in many other recreational areas.

Officials should consider it their duty to make sure everyone knows about the policy before tickets are handed out.

Same-sex marriages not improper

I was appalled to read the letter to the editor (Daily Egyptian, March 28) "dehumanizing" same-sex marriages. The man, wife and child "family" may have been the ideal family in America, but America is supposedly based on the right to be free and have the right to make your own choices about your "own" life. Why should America as a whole decide what constitutes a family? If you want to live your life with a man or a woman and call yourself a family, then who is to say that is wrong?

What is wrong with America today is racism, hatred and bigotry. This is what helps cause the downfall of civilization. If we did not have any of these things, just imagine what the world would be like. It would be full of love and respect for all life.

Most people say this lifestyle is immoral because their parents told them so. But what the parents did not realize is that there were just as many gay couples in their days as there are now. In the past these couples were forced to stay in the closet. Now "gay America" is making a move for the better. One out 10 people in the United States is gay, lesbian or bisexual. I'm sure they did not get together just to start a new gay society hundreds of years ago to try to bring the downfall of their country (which should allow them to be themselves to begin with).

I say more power to my gay, lesbian and bisexual friends around the world. Keep up the good work and maybe someday someone in power will realize the meaning of rights, freedom, liberty and justice for all.

Flood changes federal land thinking

The Los Angeles Times

It was quite a spectacle: Man gives back to nature. U.S. Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt pushed a button last Tuesday at Glen Canyon Dam and 45,000 cubic feet of water per second — enough to fill the Rose Bowl in 7.2 minutes — roared down the Grand Canyon. So began a bold new chapter in federal river management in the West.

How times change. Less than 35 years ago, the dam was built to harness the power of the mighty Colorado River and generate electricity for several Western states. But depriving the Grand Canyon of the river's natural flow upset the ecosystem. The waters that once flowed warm, red and muddy (Colorado means reddish brown in Spanish) came cold and clear from the depths of Lake Powell.

Life-giving nutrients have become trapped in the sediment that piles up behind Glen Canyon Dam.

Consequently, two fish species — the Colorado River squawfish and the bonytail chub — have disappeared and two others are endangered.

The lack of river sediment is not only starving aquatic life, it is eroding beaches and sandbars in the canyon. The sediment trapped by the dam means that riverside beaches are no longer replenished with sand. As the beaches erode, canyon walls face weakening, a development that could jeopardize hundreds of archeological sites in the Grand Canyon.

So now, at Glen Canyon, the federal government for the first time has opened the floodgates of one of its dams to renew the environment and habitat of the Colorado. Scientists believe that careful flooding will redistribute sand and mud below the dam to other parts of the canyon's river system. Though they disagreed on just how much water should be released, they all agree that the week-long flooding will help to restore the natural balance of the canyon.

The power industry, not surprisingly, is rather unhappy with the experiment. Its officials cite the extra costs and inefficiencies of releasing water during a period of low electrical demand and pumping more water than the power turbines can handle. But to its credit, the Colorado River Energy Distributors Association, a group of 100 utilities that buys much of the electric power from Glen Canyon Dam, has said that "if science supports the idea of periodic flood flow, we will accept the verdict."

Science and engineering helped to harness the natural power of the Colorado River for creature comforts. Now it's time to give back to nature so all creatures can better enjoy a renewed Grand Canyon.

This editorial appeared in Sunday's Los Angeles Times.

With tears in her eyes, a Washington correspondent for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch accepted the School of Journalism's Alumna of the Year Award Thursday night.

Kathleen Best, who attended SIUC from 1977-1979, received the award during a banquet at the Giant City Lodge.

She said she was very emotional while receiving the award because winning reminded her of her father who passed away in 1993.

Her father, Robert E. Best, won SIUC's Master Editor Award in 1987.

"It is a very difficult time for me right now because I lost my father," she said. "Another reason is that I am leaving the St. Louis Post-Dispatch after working there for 13 years.

"It's rough when you put your heart and soul into something and then pick up and leave everything behind."

The event was part of Journalism/Communications Week at SIUC.

As part of the week, guest speakers attended panel discussions and gave speeches and workshops for students.

During the week, Best was a guest speaker at panel discussions

"I also wanted to preach the message that newspapers aren't dead and to tell students not to be afraid to enter the journalism profession because the field will not disappear like some critics think it will."

on covering state government and presidential campaigns.

She has covered politics in Springfield and Washington D.C. for most of her career and attended graduate school at Springfield's Sangamon State University in 1980.

Donald Jugenheimer, director of the School of Journalism, said Best was nominated by journalism faculty for the award.

He said after being nominated, the winner is chosen by the school's Advisory Committee, which is composed of three faculty members, two students and Jugenheimer.

"We felt that Kathy possessed strong experience in covering government," he said.

"She has shown students that they can be a journalism major at SIUC and move on to the political centers of the United States."

Best said she came back to SIUC to share her knowledge with students as well as to answer questions about entering the journalism field.

"I wanted to give practical lessons and advice about reporting and writing," she said.

"I also wanted to preach the message that newspapers aren't dead and to tell the students not to be afraid to enter the journalism profession because the field will not disappear like some critics think it will."

Ronald Willnow, deputy managing editor for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, who worked with Best for 13 years, said she left the paper to become the assistant city editor at the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

"She is a thorough and decisive writer," he said. "She knew how to ask the right questions. She always had a knack for telling the public exactly what they wanted and needed to know."

"I remember playing a game called Dungeon way back when," he said. "Then I got into D&D, which we did not play by the rules until we got a little older."

Alley came to the convention to meet with gamers outside his regular realm of play.

"I play with people across campus," he said.

"Being in contact with all these people gives you the opportunity to play with people from all over the U.S."

Megan Janiszewski, a convention committee member, said this year's turnout was the biggest yet.

"We've had 625 people up to this point," she said. "It's getting a little cramped though, because all the Magic players have taken up space."

well as women on a whole."

Straitis said the conference was a comforting weekend.

"It seems less and less these days that I run into someone who believes in the same things as I do," Straitis said.

"This gathering reminds me it is good to have the standards and beliefs that I do."

Linda Olson, president of the Quad Cities chapter of the National Organization for Women, said the environmental and women's movements are a marriage.

"I was so touched and so moved with how I connected with the women here the first time I came to the conference," Olson said.

"The energy and the spirit of the forest see me through the urban battles of every day," she said.

"Unless women move ahead in sync with Mother Earth, it will all be for nothing."

areas.

SAN DIEGO—Illegal immigrants at a privately run jail at Miramar Naval Air Station set fire to mattresses and sheets Friday, spreading panic that left more than two dozen prisoners injured and two cell blocks severely damaged.

About 10 prisoners who were disgruntled over the loss of canteen privileges at the newly opened jail started the fires, and as black smoke filled the cell blocks other prisoners tried to escape, according to U.S. Attorney Alan Bersin.

Bersin said he would not term the incident a riot because the guards never lost control nor did prisoners escape; the controlled

The incident was put down within 45 minutes by a task force of civilian and military law enforcement and firefighting personnel.

The 28 injured prisoners, suffering smoke inhalation and minor cuts, were taken to civilian hospitals.

None of the 210 military prisoners, who are housed separately at the Miramar brig, was involved.

As a precaution, the 134 federal prisoners who were not injured were returned to the Metropolitan Correctional Center in downtown San Diego.

All but a handful are illegal immigrants suspected or convicted of felonies, authorities said.

keeping the dog.

As Vigil took his morning walk last week, he spotted a small puppy in the middle of U.S. Highway 51 in Carbondale.

"There was a little puppy in the middle of the highway with all these cars coming," he said. "I was like 'Holy Cow! This little dog is going to get run over.'

"She was so cute and helpless. I had to help her out."

He said that even though his roommates wanted to keep the dog, he knew they made the right decision to put up fliers to locate the dog's owner.

"After seeing the happiness on the face of the people when they saw their dog, I knew we did the right thing," he said.

Rianna Braden, a junior in marketing from O'Fallon, said she would have never found Lucy, her 8-month-old collie mix, if she had not acted fast.

Braden said the first step she took was to call the Animal Control office and the Humane Shelter, on Rural Route 2 in Carbondale, to file a lost pet report. She said she also posted fliers with Lucy's picture around town and offered a reward. "I offered an award because she was so cute," she said. "She was only three months old at the time. I thought someone might keep her, and I hoped this would be an incentive to give her back."

Three days later, Braden received a phone call from the Humane Society about a dog that matched her description. She said Lucy had traveled all the way to DeSoto before she was found.

Braden said she took the advice of the Humane Society to take more precautions to avoid the situation again. She said she had an identification microchip placed under Lucy's skin.

"It costs about $20, and it is permanently under her skin," she said. "If she is ever picked up again, a shelter can scan her, and all of her owner identification shows up. I missed her too much to have this happen again."

According to the Animal Control Office, some steps to take to find a lost dog are:

- Placing fliers around town with a photo and accurate description.
- Checking neighborhoods and local parks.
- Filing a lost pet report with nearby animal-control centers.
- Visiting the shelter every two or three days.

management, said McKinley is a leading expert in corporate downsizing.

He said McKinley is a very dedicated scholar and is one of the first people to research the downsizing phenomena.

"Professors like Dr. McKinley are modest because they are not likely to trumpet their own achievements," Terry said.

Kathy Rust, a research assistant for McKinley, said his expertise lies in the way he analyzes the causes behind downsizing. She said others have explained downsizing as a way to cut costs, but McKinley examines it for its human aspects.

"Dr. McKinley views downsizing as much more than an economic solution," she said. "He has the ability to take a situation like downsizing, which is not very simple, and look deeper to find the true underlying causes."

Accused war criminals surrender

The Washington Post

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina—Serbia Saturday handed over to the International War Crimes Tribunal in The Hague two Serb soldiers who took part in a massacre of unarmed Muslim men from the U.N.-designated "safe area" of Srebrenica last year, and Croatia announced that one of its generals, wanted for war crimes, would surrender Monday.

The important breakthrough for the fragile Dayton peace accord occurred as Secretary of Defense William J. Perry began a two-day visit to Croatia and Bosnia. In remarks to reporters, Perry hinted that the United States and its NATO allies might take action to capture the two most-wanted indicted war criminals in Bosnia.

Serb leader Radovan Karadzic and Gen. Ratko Mladic.

Perry traveled to Zagreb, the Croatian capital, with Gojko Susak, the powerful Croatian defense minister who had been in the United States for lung surgery at a U.S. Army hospital. During the flight, officials said, Perry convinced Susak that the Croatian general, Tihomir Blaskic, must surrender to the war crimes tribunal to answer his indictment for involvement in the destruction of 14 Muslim villages in central Bosnia during the Croat-Muslim war of 1993-94.

"Blaskic is going to The Hague Monday," Susak said after talks with Perry. "I spoke to Blaskic today and can say with certainty he will travel to The Hague Monday." The leaders of Bosnia, Croatia and Serbia pledged in the Dayton peace agreement last November to cooperate with war crimes investigators, but arguments over the issue of detaining suspects has gnawed at the accord. The U.N. tribunal on war crimes in the former Yugoslavia has indicted 57 people—46 Serbs, eight Croats and three Muslims. Only two of those indicted are in custody, both Serbs.

The delivery to The Hague of Bosnian Serb soldiers Drazen Erdemovic and Radoslav Kremenovic, neither of whom had been indicted, and Blaskic's promised surrender, are welcome news for those implementing the Dayton peace accord, which has stumbled recently because ultranationalists on all sides of the conflict are angling to form their own ministates in Bosnia.

third in a series of meetings to elicit comments from the citizens about the city.

After the committee finishes the meetings, it reports the concerns of the citizens who attend the meetings to the mayor.

Some students living in the campus dorms said they do not recall seeing fliers announcing the meeting posted in the halls.

Jeff Pearce, a junior in automotive technologies from Marshall, said he vaguely remembers reading something about the meeting but was not interested anyway.

"... more advance notice was needed to have students take a vested interest."

"I did not see any fliers posted or hear anything," he said. "I may have read something, but I don't remember."

Jennifer Arter, a sophomore in political science from Chicago, said she did not hear about the meeting but would have been interested in attending the meeting.

Both Pearce and Arter said they were busy with school and would have needed more planning time to attend the meeting.

Mathews said he gave fliers about the meeting to be posted in the dorms to Paulette Curkin, University Housing Programming coordinator.

Curkin said she gave the fliers to housing coordinators and mentioned the advisory committee meeting at Tuesday's Resident Hall Association meeting.

She said the coordinators were aware of the meeting, but there was not enough time to get the word out to students.

The Resident Hall Association is a group of student representatives that live on campus, acting as a liaison between the students and University Housing.

Curkin said two days was too short of notice to schedule the meeting and expect students to show. She said the fliers were not very noticeable and only mentioned that a civic group was coming to campus.

"This was a good idea, and the effort was well intended," she said. "But more advance notice was needed to have students take a vested interest."

Curkin said she let Resident Hall Association sponsor the committee meeting.

"They said they would have it taken care of," she said. "Monday was the first time we had heard anything about this meeting. Tuesday they did not have the hall reserved, and that's when we stepped in."

Mathews said that City Hall is open to students who are willing to meet with city officials and discuss concerns. He said citizens also can address the city officials at council meetings.

in the fifth inning with five more "insurance" runs.

The Saluki bats pounded all three UNI pitchers sent to face them, producing 12 hits in the game.

"The game was especially satisfying once we jumped out to the 6-0 lead," SIUC coach Dan Callahan said. "We didn't coast. We hit the ball today like I know we're capable of with Hairston, (junior first baseman Aaron) Jones, and (junior second baseman Jay) Mansavage leading the way."

In the previous games of the series, SIUC defeated UNI in both games of the double-header Saturday, 4-2 and 8-5, but lost Friday 4-3 in 10 innings.

Senior pitcher Greg Harrier relieved Hatten after nine, and walked in the winning run of the game in the bottom of the tenth inning to end it, 4-3.

Callahan said the team's ability to rebound after losing the first game of the series twice, consecutively this season, show its desire to win.

"I'm really encouraged to see how the team has bounced back two weeks in a row after losing the first game," he said.

"These two games were battles today (Saturday). We had to scratch and claw our way back in both, so you really have to credit these kids after losing a heart-breaker yesterday."

University, Indiana State University and Florida Atlantic University in their division to gain an appearance on national television April 13th 1:30 p.m.

The team consists of 18 members, and both men and women cheer leaders have been incorporated to make up the squad.

The squad has an advantage over the other teams since most of its male members have talent and experience according to Esting.

"The men on the team combined have 18 years of experience," Esting said. "With that kind of experience you have to be better."

Jeremy Cramm, a senior in exercise science from Decatur and captain of the team said he teaches cheerleading camps during the summer, he is familiar with most of the teams they will face in the national competition.

"If everyone gets over their nervousness and anxiety we will be all right," Cramm said. "We are just as good as anybody else, and we are capable of competing with anybody."

Christie Breen, a senior in marketing from Effingham, said the team has worked hard and should perform well in the competition.

The team has adapted fine to some of the adjustments made along the way such as losing two key members of the squad, changing the original music for their routine and modifying stunt moves Breen said.

Lou Piniella finally realizes he can manage in majors

Newday

PEORIA, Ariz.—Lou Piniella said he would never do "that" again, which was right and too bad at the same time.

It was in his office in the delirium of the Reds' startling sweep of the A's in the 1990 World Series and just the sort of thing newspaper writers like to write about. It was the abused fellow telling the abuser where to go. It was Dagwood proving himself in Mr. Dilbert's face.

It was Lou Piniella, with the broadest of grins on his animated face, clenching his fists in front of his body, leaning forward as if to a microphone and exulting: "I can manage! George, I can manage!"

If the writer happened to like Piniella and recalled how he was made to squirm for two seasons before he was fired from the Yankees, it was the perfect exclamation point for what the manager had accomplished.

Now here is Piniella as the manager of the Mariners, conqueror of the Yankees in the wonderful baseball restoration of last October, saying he had grown up—even if That Man had not. "At Cincinnati, that was a stupid thing to say," Piniella said. "That was a dig. You don't need that sort of thing and you learn from that. That was something that shouldn't have been said."

He paused; got a little of that old

"My, my whole purpose as manager was to stay in New York and win with the Yankees ..."

*Lou Piniella

look on his face and showed the stammer he gets when he tries to be profound or real earnest. "I-I-I-I," he began, "you know what, I-I-I-I got rid of some ghosts."

"But I didn't need to say it. What the hell, you learn. You win with humility."

Profound. Even one-sided, considering the comparison. Piniella played 10-plus seasons as one of the most popular Yankees. He was a star in the great 1978 comeback from 14 games behind; which his Mariners virtually duplicated last season. In 1984 he retired to become a full-time coach, became manager in 1986 and general manager in October of '87 in one of That Man's whirlwind brainstorms, and the next June was manager again and blown out the door at the end of the season.

"My, my whole purpose as manager was to stay in New York and win with the Yankees, my No. 1 purpose," he said. "It didn't work out that way. I had to go elsewhere to prove to myself and probably to other people that I could be successful." Piniella raised his right hand to display his 1978 Yankee championship ring. "I had it on when we beat the Yankees," he said. "I have it on now."

It was his learning experience, however ill-advised it was. He had no managing experience and was one of those people who thought a man could go almost directly from playing to managing in the big leagues. As updated by Buck Showalter, That Man thinks managing is "simple." Piniella recognizes now that it would have served him to have gone to manage a year or two in Triple-A. It would have made him a better manager quickly, even though his team won 90 and 89 games his first two Yankee seasons, "not chopped liver." But it was always fated for him to be pushed off the pinstriped cracker. That's how it is.

"Everybody who takes that job thinks, 'It's going to be different for me,'" he said. "But I probably didn't handle the owner as well as I could. I was probably too stubborn, too combative."

Underdog Syracuse ready for Wildcats

The Washington Post

NEW YORK—To many fans and oddsmakers, the NCAA men's basketball championship game between Kentucky and Syracuse Monday night is a foregone conclusion. According to conventional wisdom, the Wildcats locked up the title when it beat Massachusetts in Saturday's semifinals.

Thus, talk Sunday was predictable, with the Orangemen reminding reporters of two of the biggest upsets in championship game history: Villanova upsetting Georgetown in 1985, and North Carolina State shocking Houston in 1983.

"We're going to shock the world," Syracuse guard Jeff Cipolla said Sunday, as the players and coaches from both teams gathered at a Times Square hotel. The teams tip off at Continental Airlines Arena in East Rutherford, N.J., at 9:22 p.m. Monday.

"I feel it would be up there with the Villanova-Georgetown game back in '85," added Cipolla, whose team defeated Mississippi State Saturday.

"If we do win this game, it would be all over the world—how one NBA player, John Wallace, with four just-average players, got the job done."

Cipolla played high school ball at Christ the King in Queens, and he was surprised to learn that his alma mater, which had not lost a game all season, recently had been upset in the state play-offs by Manhattan's Rice High School.

Cipolla, however, takes solace from the parallel he sees.

"Rice was the underdog, just like we are," he said. "They won the state championship, and hopefully, we'll win the national championship."

Kentucky (33-2) is used to being the favorite because it has been favored in every game this year. But its players insist they are not underestimating Syracuse (28-9).

"They're not a Cinderella team," Kentucky guard Tony Delk said.

"They won 29 games. You can't look at it like they're the underdogs. Someone has to come in as the favorites, and it was us. But I don't think we get caught up in that. They won 29 games, and that's a lot for a Cinderella team."

All season, the Wildcats have repeated the motto: "Live in the precious present." The line comes from a story Coach Rick Pitino reads to the team before each season.

"It was about not thinking about the past and not trying to live in the future," guard Tony Delk said.

"It's about just trying to take care of the present."

Pitino reads the tale to his players in part because he understands the enormous pressure they are under to live up to the Kentucky teams of the past.

The school has won five men's championships, and, like national champion UCLA last season, the Wildcats are competing against their past as much as they are competing against their current opponents.

"I told our players, you can't say there's no pressure," Pitino said.

"You have it. I have it. But we can make it good pressure, pressure that makes you focus better, play better defense, rebound better, run faster, jump higher. ... If you can turn it into good pressure, then that's good. If you worry about it and it makes you feel nervous, that's bad pressure."

Speaking of pressure, the Wildcats love to apply that to opponents via their full-court, trapping defense. Last season, Kentucky forced Syracuse to commit 33 turnovers and beat the Orangemen, 77-71.

This game matches two teams with different styles. The Wildcats, who average 91.9 points per game, prefer an up-tempo game, while the Orangemen, who average 76.5 points, like to slow the game down with their 2-3 zone defense and physical half-court offense.

Kentucky has the vaunted depth, with forward Antoine Walker leading the team by playing just 26.8 minutes per game.

Two deep at every position, the Wildcats got 26 points from their reserves against U-Mass. By comparison, Syracuse got just two points from its reserves against Mississippi State.

April Fools' Day to provide some serious sports action

By Allan Malamud

The Los Angeles Times

Notes on a Scorecard
On April Fools Day, I am trying to figure out the significance of the California Angels finishing first in the American League exhibition standings and the Los Angeles Dodgers first in the National League.

The Angels' 21-10 record is the best in franchise history.

That must mean that the on-again, off-again, on-again sale of the controlling interest in the club to the Walt Disney Co. hasn't been playing mind games with the players.

The sooner something happens, the better for everyone," Manager Marcel Lachemann said. "But we've had so many other things to focus on. Besides, we have no control over a sale."

Eric Karos says the new playing surface at Dodger Stadium is a lot faster than the old one.

"I had to lunge for a ball hit to my left last night," the Dodger first baseman said Sunday. "There will be a lot more hits here this season, but you'll see fewer runners scoring from second on singles because the grass is shorter."

Tom Lasorda on criticism that the Dodgers are braggarts: "A couple of things were said a few weeks ago that we'll have to live with. But I want our team to think it can win. The first step to success is self-confidence."

The Dodgers will play seven of their last 10 games against the team that is supposed to give them their toughest competition for the NL West title, San Diego; but won't play their first game against the Padres until July 1.

Unless the Wildcats suddenly turn into Fat Cats, I can't see Syracuse giving Kentucky a contest Monday night.

It's doubtful the Wildcats believe the headlines that proclaimed them national champions after their victory over Massachusetts in the semifinals.

This is a team that doesn't have an ego problem.

All those high school All-Americans don't complain about their lack of playing time.

Neither do they show off.

Come to think of it, sportsmanship has made a comeback in the NCAA tournament. There has been little flaunting, taunting or jive talking and not an excess of high-fiving, either.

Massachusetts finished the season with the best record among Division I schools, 35-2.

Congratulations to the Final Four for shooting a solid 77 percent from the free-throw line Saturday.

In the 1987 NCAA semifinals, Jim Bocheim's Syracuse Orangemen defeated Rick Pitino's Providence Friars, 77-63, at New Orleans. That time, Bocheim had the superior personnel.

Most underrated Kentucky player might be center Mark Pope, who impressed a lot of us when he played for Washington.

Thumbs up to CBS for concentrating its camera work on the players, not the coaches.

Cigar showed the mark of a true champion when he withstood the stretch challenge of a good horse, Soul Of The Matter, to win the $4-million Dubai Cup on a night when he had trouble handling the track.

An appearance by Cigar in the Hollywood Gold Cup on June 30 would be the most widely anticipated of any horse at Hollywood Park since Triple Crown winner Seattle Slew attracted 68,132 fans, but ran out of the money behind J.O. Tobin, Affiliate and Text in the 1977 Swaps Stakes.

For two second-place finishes this year, Soul Of The Matter has earned $860,000.

Best hockey game I've seen on the tube all season was Michigan's 3-2 victory over Colorado College in overtime for the NCAA title.

Prediction: Kentucky 82, Syracuse 63.

Pair of Dawgs provides spark in 12-1 victory

By Chad Anderson
DE Sports Editor

The Saluki baseball team received a preview of things to come in future years from two of its talented freshmen players Sunday, as the Dawgs pounded the University of Northern Iowa, by a score of 12-1, into the frozen tundra of Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Freshman third baseman Jerry Hairston tied a school record for most doubles in a game with three, and also drove in three runs for the Salukis.

While Hairston provided the offense, freshman pitcher Jason Frasier (1-1), who had received very little run support from the offense in his previous two starts, surrendered only one run on five hits, while striking out seven in his seven innings of work, and cruised to his first collegiate victory behind timely defense and abundant offense from his teammates.

Southern (13-12, 6-2) split the game wide open in the third inning by sending 12 men to the plate, and scoring six runs on five hits to make the score 6-0.

From there, the Panthers (11-13, 4-4) never recovered. UNI scored its only run in the third inning, but the Salukis answered

Cheerleading squad looking to qualify for nationals

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC cheerleaders hope to take their breathtaking maneuvers to the television screen by qualifying for a spot in the national cheer leading contest April 5 in Daytona Beach.

Nancy Esling, cheer leading team coach, said this is the Salukis' first time competing, and they are learning a lot about putting a routine together and actually performing it.

"We've had some great practices and we have elements of greatness, but putting the routine together is difficult," Esling said. "Some of the moves we are practicing we have never done before."

Esling said the competition will be strong, and in order to qualify, the squad cannot wobble while performing any of the stunts.

"We have to hit all stunts and mounts solid," she said. "We cannot walk with it, we have to nail it."

SIUC will compete against Steven F. Austin University, Northeastern Illinois University, University of North Carolina-Charlotte, University of Massachusetts, James Madison

SIUC Golf

Saluki golfer scores big on, off course

Molly Hudgins leading squad by example

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Molly Hudgins, a member of the SIUC women's golf team, may walk soft, but her scores and work ethic indicate she carries a big stick.

"Hard work and dedication are the two greatest aspects in playing golf," she said.

Diane Daugherty, SIUC women's golf coach, said Hudgins is a classic over achiever.

Hudgins is a member of the student senate, captain of the golf team, representative of the Student Athletic Advisory Board for the team and a member of a number of organizations.

"She pours her heart into everything she does, and her class work shows it," Daugherty said. "She is the hardest worker I ever have coached or seen."

Hudgins, a junior in business, picked up her first golf club six years ago during her junior year at Carbondale Community High School.

"Most people start at a young age," Hudgins said. "I worked hard to make up for lost time."

In high school Hudgins played softball, basketball and volleyball, and her parents were always trying to get her out on the greens; but she found it boring until she actually played she said.

"One of my coaches took me to play, and I got addicted to it," she said. "I found it challenging. I wanted to play everyday, and I still do."

The Carbondale native said she appreciates the opportunity coach Daugherty gave her to play at SIUC. She said one expectation she set on herself was not to let the coach down.

Daugherty said it was Hudgins' work ethic that landed her a spot on the team. Hudgins has shot in the 70s in five of her last six tournaments, and has been SIUC's top scorer in four of her past five outings.

"I thought she could play at the four or five spot on my team by the time she was a sophomore, she qualified for every tournament, and this year she qualified for number one," Daugherty said. "This year she has been our lowest scorer for more than half our tournaments."

Hudgins has taken it upon herself to become a leader by example for her teammates.

"I want them to see what I do, and see how hard I work to make them have the desire to play better," she said.

Hudgins said her greatest adjustment to the game was acquiring patience.

"I am a perfectionist, and it was hard for me to accept that I wasn't going to hit every shot every time," she said.

Every other sport she played allowed her to be aggressive, but when it came to golf, Hudgins said she had to learn to relax.

"Golf is more laid back, and I have to calm myself down and not go all out on every shot," Hudgins said. "I am learning most this year about golf, experience is teaching me the finesse of golf."

Since Hudgins short game has improved since she first began playing golf she has learned to score when she is playing "subpar."

"The coach has emphasized to score ugly or pretty," she said.

Between the Lines

The NCAA Tournament comes to a close in the college basketball national championship game tonight in East Rutherford, N.J., as underdog Syracuse collides with Kentucky. Syracuse is the first fourth-seed to reach the national championship game, and the lowest seed to play in an NCAA Final since Michigan, a sixth seed, met Duke in the 1991 title game. Syracuse ousted Mississippi State in semifinal action Saturday night, 77-69, while Kentucky knocked off Massachusetts, 81-74. Kentucky will be going for its sixth national title. The Wildcats last championship came in 1978 under head coach Joe B. Hall.

St. John's University has its eye on a new men's basketball coach. A published report says Florida State basketball coach Pat Kennedy will be named the new head coach at St. John's. The Newark Star-Ledger says Kennedy could be named the new coach as early as Wednesday.

Kennedy would replace Brian Mahoney, who was fired after four seasons with the Red Storm. St. John's finished a disappointing 11-16 this past season, while Kennedy guided the Seminoles to a 13-14 mark this year.

Darrell Robinson, once one of the world's top sprinters in the world, is in a coma after drinking antifreeze in a suicide attempt. Robinson, 32, was taken to Harborview Medical Center in Seattle, after police found him unconscious in a car in a parking lot. Robinson was the 400-meter national champion in 1986, when he was ranked No. 3 in the world in his event. According to his sister, Robinson suffered from mental illness and had sought help
