Crisis in the Coal Industry

Governors encourage miners to negotiate

By Candace Samolinski
Special Assignment Writer

Jim Edgar and other governors are encouraging talks between the United Mine Workers Association and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association to end a strike that is heading into its third month.

A letter was issued on July 30 to the UMWA and the BCOA by Edgar along with the governors of West Virginia, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Ohio and Virginia.

In the letter the governors of these states urged both sides to go back to the bargaining table and resolve the issues in the dispute, which began May 10.

The economic losses affecting the states involved were cited, along with the escalating violence that long has been associated with prolonged strikes.

The strike involves 3,200 striking miners in the Southern Illinois area. The entire population of miners affected in the Region 3 area is 6,000, which includes Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama, Missouri and Arkansas.

Thomas Hoffman, a BCOA spokesperson, said no future talks are scheduled with the union.

"There have been no talks and there are no talks planned," Hoffman said.

"Job security was initially the issue with the UMWA, but we have made proposals relating to that issue. The union wants us to agree to make all newly established mines entirely union."

Illinois Sen. Jim Rea, D-Christopher, said he sent a letter to Edgar requesting that he urge the two sides to reach an agreement.

"Of course we want to get these people back to work, and we are trying to think of ways in which we can help," Rea said. "I sponsored a senate bill to sell $40 million in general obligation bonds; $35 million of this money will go

A Carbondale landlord, fined by the city last week for construction site violations, said the city is trying to harass him.

Henry Fisher, a Carbondale landlord, was fined $11,500 for violating city construction codes. Court proceedings were on July 28, but Fisher did not attend.

Fisher said the city did not inform him or his lawyer of the court proceedings.

"This is just harassment and normal behavior from the city," he said. "I did not find out about the situation until Tuesday morning."

Mike Wepsiec, city attorney, said Fisher's attorney was present at an earlier court date and was informed of the July 28 court appearance.

"Depending on what Fisher's attorney does now, there could be a new court date scheduled," he said.

Wepsiec said Fisher violated construction site plans for an apartment complex he is building at 312 College.

"Fisher was required to construct a fence, trash dumpster, storm inlet, landscaping, mercury vapor light and disabled parking sign," he said.

Wepsiec said the court proceedings on July 28 also involved an earlier case in which Fisher had violated other construction site

Years of research pay off: Scientist close to creating artificial brain

By Sean L. N. Hao
General Assignment Writer

After 50 years of research, SIUC scientist Sidney W. Fox is confident that his work will lead to the creation of a primitive artificial brain.

Fox's discovery hinges on the existence of protocells or primitive cells, which closely mimic the growth and reproductive behavior of modern cells. These protocells, produced under laboratory conditions, are considered the origin of life on earth.

After discovering the protocells in 1959, Fox concentrated his efforts on studying their behavior. The research paid off recently when Fox was able to demonstrate, during his tenure at SIUC, that the protocell also functions as a protoneuron.

"After 23 years of very careful research, I feel sure I can say it without anyone being able to disprove it," said Fox, who is leaving SIUC for the University of South Alabama this fall. "I was sure in 1959 but couldn't say it then, because I didn't have supporting data."

"We've reached the stage now where we can say the first protocell was also a protoneuron because they come together and associate with synaptic behavior," Fox said. "I think all scientists recognize that brains are an assembly of neurons."

Fox said the synaptic or "brain-like" behavior displayed by the protocell answers questions of the origin of the brain.

"These protocells come together to form a protobrain, and if you have a brain, then you're that much closer to understanding how the mind exists and works," he said. "But an association of neurons is

Rumors continue of Magic's return

Los Angeles Times

INGLEWOOD, Calif.—Magic Johnson might still be retired, but he showed once again Sunday night that he still knows how to finish a basketball game.

Before a sellout crowd at the Forum, Johnson made a driving layup at the buzzer to give his "White" team an 181-179 victory over the "Blue" team in the eighth annual "A Midnight Summer's Magic" all-star game.

Although there have been reports of a possible return to the Lakers, Johnson said he had not talked to Laker General Manager Jerry West "or anybody" regarding a comeback.

"I know that once he (West) hears this, that I will probably get a call from him tomorrow," Johnson said. "I know one thing he doesn't need is this headache. He has enough to worry about."

The rumors regarding another comeback began when Johnson announced that he will lead a team of former NBA players on a 20-game tour from October to December. It was reported that after the tour he would rejoin the Lakers for the second half of the 1993-94 NBA season.

"I'm not saying that I am coming back," said Johnson, who finished with 10 points and 13 assists. "But, whatever happens ... happens."

Whether he returns or not, Johnson's annual charity all-star game was again a success in its effort to support the United Negro College Fund. In eight years, the game has raised more than $7 million for UNCF.

Recently named Famer gives eloquent speech

Newsday

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y.—As he worked his way through the opening sentences of the speech he had prepared, Reggie Jackson thanked his father for having helped him develop an ability to speak publicly. For the next 20 minutes, he demonstrated what he had learned. With eloquence equal to the power he once displayed in uniform, the Man of the Month made the most of the moment.

Having delivered so frequently on other high-profile stages, Jackson delivered again Sunday, this time on baseball's ultimate stage, with words and sentiment, grace and touch and a message of importance.

In 21 major-league baseball seasons, he had produced so many moments they couldn't fit on his Hall of Fame plaque. Sunday, the moment was made for him. And it fit perfectly. He wore it well.

He became the 217th person inducted into baseball's shrine on an afternoon of magnitude, gratitude and platitude. His words were received as well as they had been delivered. He had done well, as he had planned to do. No one expected anything else from the man of so many dimensions.

The slugger, who hit more home runs than all but five players in the history of the game, touched them all again in 24 minutes of what he later called "words with a purpose." If he overlooked someone, no one knew.

In closing, and with uncharacteristic humility, he said he knew he wasn't the best player. "All I have to do is look behind me," he said, referring to the 37 other Hall of Famers assembled. "But when they call the roll, sooner or later, they're going to have to call my name."

And then he called his own roll, mentioning, thanking and/or paying tribute to everyone he needed to acknowledge—Whitney Ford, Rachel Robinson and John McNamara, who were here, and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Fran Healy and Sal Bando, who were not.

He acknowledged Yankees, because he played for them and with them and because the cap on his plaque has the most famous logic in the history of professional sports. "People in China know the Yankees," he had said last week.

He acknowledged Catfish Hunter, Joe Rudi and Charley Finley; the city of Baltimore, New York fans, Gene Autry, Bob Gibson, the Athletics, Frank Kush. In a verbal montage presented in rapid fire, he said playing in New York had taught him "about mistrust, love, hate, support, comfort, bitterness, ego, self-centeredness, hurt, greatness and, most of all, friendship."

Jackson gave them what they wanted to hear, thanking his father for everything, his mother "just for being there," Healy for being his

Olympic festival deemed successful

The Baltimore Sun

SAN ANTONIO, Texas—The U.S. Olympic Festival '93 held its closing ceremonies Sunday night, a fitting end for a city that was holding a coming-out party and for new American athletes looking to burst upon the national scene.

It was a festival that had it all: some great newcomers, a few accomplished stars and athletes who were about to retire, but couldn't.

One of the biggest winners, though, was San Antonio itself. Daily attendance averaged 40,000, and revenue, including opening ceremonies, was close to $2.5 million, festival president Robert Marbut said Sunday morning.

"So we are now only a little ways from our goal of $2.6 million, and we still have another day," Marbut said. "We reached the break-even point around Thursday. I don't think we're an emerging major-league city anymore. We have arrived."

Gary Alexander, director of Olympic Festivals, said from his headquarters in Colorado Springs, Colo.: "This is my 12th year with the festival and second as director, and without question it has to be ranked among the top two or three."

The festival drew a number of big names, such as track and field's Gail Devers, diving's Mark Lenzi, gymnastics' Shannon Miller and weightlifting's Mark Henry.

The newest name to emerge, though, belonged to a 13-year-old who is 4 feet 7 and 77 pounds.

Michelle Kwan, from Lake Arrowhead, Calif., won the individual figure skating title, completing six triple jumps in a long program.

The performance mesmerized a record crowd at the Alamodome, and Kwan said: "I was just riding with the flow. I was just going with it. It was like show time, you know."

There was also a glimpse at the new speedster in track and field, Jonathan Burrell, 19, from Cleveland, Ohio, who won the 100 meters in 10.43, despite pulling a hamstring with just 20 yards left in the race.

Basketball had its share of blue-chippers in Rasheed Wallace and Jerry Stackhouse, two of the most highly touted high schoolers in

Amaya's success moves him closer to NBA

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

Score early and often. That is the advice free-agent players try to follow when trying to impress NBA scouts. Former Saluki star Ashraf Amaya took the advice to heart and to the court, in last week's summer league games.

Amaya started his scoring binge by bunching 13 points in 16 minutes for the L.A. Lakers.

Amaya then went to Sacramento to play for a different free-agent team. He continued his hot streak by hitting for 24 points in the first game, 26 points in the second game and 28 points in the third game.

What could Amaya do in his last outing? Try a 44 point explosion. One-hundred and thirty two points in four games. This came from a guy who was not drafted.

Bill Neff, Amaya's representative, said Amaya did nothing but help his chances to play in the NBA.

"The extra week in Sacramento really helped him," Neff said. "A lot of scouts were watching when he had the 44-point game."

Neff said Amaya was one of the top five players in a summer league that featured some NBA players.

"Ashraf scored 17 points on Henry Turner, who played in the league last year, while holding Turner to ten points," Neff said.

Neff will be sending a videotape of a couple of Amaya's games to Philadelphia and Orlando.

"It's not a highlight film, because those aren't real," Neff said. "Instead we take actual games against other NBA-caliber players and send those."

Neff said both Philadelphia and Orlando have recently made moves that could offer Amaya a shot with them.

The move Philadelphia made

was the release of seven players. This opens up a few more roster spots to fill.

Orlando acquired Anfernee Hardaway through a trade with Golden State.

Neff said the fact that Orlando will have to shell out around $3.5 million dollars to sign Hardaway means some changes will be taking place.

"Orlando is somewhat of a guess on our part," Neff said. "But they are going to need to get some minimum salary players to stay under the league salary cap. One of those players could be Ashraf Amaya."

If an NBA team does not offer Amaya a chance to sign on the dotted line, Europe is offering big bucks. Neff said a Spanish scout recently offered Amaya a six-figure contract, which Neff turned down.

"We think we can get him a spot in the NBA," Neff said. "If that doesn't happen, then he could sign with a European team a little later."

American Lung Association holds bike trek for better health

By Tre' Roberts
Sports Writer

In order to raise money for those who have trouble breathing the American Lung Association of Illinois is holding its sixth annual Shawnee Trails Bike Trek, Sept. 25 and 26.

The trek is an all weekend bicycling event that will take the riders through some of the most beautiful scenery in Southern Illinois, said Helen Saunders, director of the Southern region of the American Lung Association of Illinois.

Saunders said that over the past few years bicycling has become a big sport in the Southern Illinois area that organizing the event seemed like a good way for bicyclists to enjoy themselves and raise money at the same time.

"We needed to find a way to raise money for our programs," Saunders said. "So we looked to healthy people to help out."

"The personal fee to ride in the trek is only $25," Saunders said. "That money is to cover the expenses of coordinating and actually running the event."

She also said there is a $200 minimum pledge per rider before beginning the ride, and that money comes from people whom the riders had sponsored them, prior to the making the ride.

HISTORICAL EFFORTS THREATEN CULTURE — In a rush to preserve what the United Nations has declared a "historical treasure," the state government of Bahia is actually in danger of destroying a leading center of black culture in Brazil. The restoration of a historic district in Brazil's first capital is turning what was practically a slum little into a tourist attraction, displacing its population and cementing the very history and culture it was meant to preserve.

LUST FOR VENGEANCE GROWN IN SARAJEVO — In perhaps the most tragic development of this bloody three-sided war, the cosmopolitan Muslims of Sarajevo—secular, sophisticated, open-minded—are turning away from their ideal of a democratic state in which Serbs, Muslims and Croats can live together toward one ruled by and for Muslims. Brutalized by besieging Serb nationalist forces and feeling abandoned by the West, many people here have begun to reject the tolerant spirit they once prized.

GROUP CURBS PESTICIDES FROM BABY FOOD — Healthy plants. Healthy kids. The first grow up to be food, the others become adults, but with 70 percent of the baby-food market, Gerber sees it as its business to nurture both. So in 1991 the company formalized a policy it had been working toward for years: no detectable pesticide residues in any jar of baby food. Gerber's efforts demonstrate that "mainstream agriculture can provide food with dramatically less pesticides."

CONGRESS LOOKS AT INSURERS' BUSINESS — As this past week drew to a close, the insurance industry could be forgiven if it concluded nobody loves it. No fewer than three House panels renewed attacks on business practices of the industry, especially those of the companies that insure homes, cars and businesses and those that write protection for liability. The activity reflects the steadily growing attention that politicians are paying to the industry.

SOME FEDERAL WORKERS MAY GET PAY HIKE — White-collar federal workers are almost certain to get locality pay raises Jan. 1 despite Clinton administration efforts to delay the increases. Although the size of the city-by-city adjustments is yet to be determined, preliminary data point to a raise of not quite 4 percent for workers in the giant Washington-Baltimore region, which stretches from the West Virginia border to the Chesapeake Bay.

DILLON, S.C., BECOMES WEDDING CAPITAL — In the heart of South Carolina an industry has taken root: weddings. Dillon is a town of only 6,800, but in 1991, 12,818 people were married here. There is no natural wonder here to rival Niagara Falls. Dillon's popularity has come about simply because, as the first exit off Interstate 95 in South Carolina, it provides North Carolinians and other non-residents their first opportunity to take advantage of this state's relatively lax marriage laws.

POSTAL WORKER VENTS ANGER IN COMIC BOOK — Last November, when Susan J. Zapolski, a research analyst at Postal Service headquarters, lost her job in the agency's massive reorganization, she went into a "complete depression and demoralization." After two months of anguish, Zapolski took pen in hand and began to draw. Her characters may have been little more than stick figures, but most had an uncanny resemblance to the officials directing the reorganization. Many others working in a large Washington building called "Elephant Plaza" which looked like L'Enfant Plaza, the postal headquarters. When Zapolski finally put her pen down early this summer, she had completed a 50-page comic book.

Attorney General to gather support during SIUC visit

By Bill Kugelberg
Politics Writer

Attorney General Roland W. Burris will visit SIUC Wednesday to announce his plans to run for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination following today's official announcement of his intentions in Chicago.

Burris will begin a fly-around today in upstate Illinois to begin rallying support for his nomination to the governor position.

Dawn Clark Netsch, state comptroller, will announce her candidacy for the Democratic nomination for governor August 9 during a series of news conferences which will begin in Chicago.

Netsch will be at Williamson County Regional Airport Monday at 4:05 p.m. to inform downstaters of her plans.

Rep. Gerald Hawkins, D-Du

Quoin, said all of the people planning to run for the Democratic nomination for governor can do a good job.

"I am certainly not surprised that Burris has announced his candidacy," Hawkins said. "There will be a large field of candidates running for the position and all are qualified. Hopefully, only one will run so we can avoid a primary."

Hawkins said primaries are preferably avoided because they are expensive and sometimes cause a big party squabble.

Sen. Jim Rea, D-Christopher said he thinks there will be four candidates for the democratic nomination for governor.

"It seems we have several candidates running for the Democratic nomination," Rea said. "We have got Burris and Netsch

Looting under control by enforcement officials

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
Police Writer

After losing homes and businesses to the destructive forces of the flood, becoming the victim of looters is an even more terrifying possibility.

Though looting is not a major concern at this time, in the flood zone, local, state and federal officials are taking pro-active measures to help prevent it.

Military intelligence and police are working with state troopers and members of the Illinois Department of Conservation along the Mississippi and Illinois rivers to make sure the areas are secure.

Lt. Col. Richard Austin, of the Army National Guard, said there are currently 230 members of the Guard housed at the Murphysboro High School.

Austin said so far he has not seen any indications of looting in the Southern Illinois area.

Austin said the National Guard and Murphysboro Police have secured a store in Murphysboro, where people from Grand Tower can store furniture.

Two Guardsmen are stationed at the store 24 hours a day.

Karen McNaught, of the Attorney General's Office, said though looting is not a problem in Illinois, individuals should take precautions.

"The best advice is to get your property to a public warehouse licensed by the Illinois Department of Agriculture," McNaught said.

She said individuals should not take matters into their own hands, but call local authorities if they see anything suspicious.

Steve Quigley, public information officer for the Illinois Emergency Management Agency, said a total of 4600 National Guardsmen and women were added to flood sites along the Mississippi Tuesday to secure various access sites and aid the locals.

"People in the flood areas aren't messing around," Quigley said. "They've taken all their valuables anyway and headed for high ground."

Quigley said looting is not a major problem as of yet in the flood zones of Illinois because of tight security at the access roads leading to the flood sites by the National Guard.

"They control access strictly," Quigley said. "You must have a good reason to go in these areas."

Mike Bastien, of the Attorney General's Office in Murphysboro, said there are so many members of the National Guard in the western part of Jackson County that no one could loot without being seen.

"The water is so deep in some of these places that there would be no way to loot," Bastien said.

"There are command posts at each of the roads in the Olive Branch area, so if you're caught looting, you are fined. It's a fantastic operation."

Fred Gay, bureau chief of the intake and screening division at the Polk County Attorney's Office in Iowa, said there has been an increase of burglaries in businesses and residents reported during the more critical period of the flood.

"They weren't stores, it was mostly businesses that were in a fenced in outdoors area, like construction materials," Gay said.

The Des Moines, Iowa Police Department said an infrared helicopter is being used to scan the area for looters.

DUI program works for early prevention

UNFORTUNATELY, A PROBLEM USUALLY receives attention only when it has gotten out of control.

Alcohol abuse has become such a nationwide phenomenon that it can be a problem even before elementary school children take their first drink. In school, youngsters are often susceptible to the message that alcohol is cool and will help you make friends.

What they may not be aware of is that alcohol is the leading cause of death among young adults. Or that by the time they reach college, more than 50 percent of the number of major accidents and injuries to college students are related to alcohol.

That is why programs such as the Local Alcohol Program, which aims at educating students in kindergarten through the 12th grade on how to prevent alcohol abuse and driving under the influence, are necessary for alcohol prevention. By attempting to reach students before the problem begins, programs like LAP are responsible for educating students about the dangers of alcohol abuse as well as providing information on how to combat it.

EDUCATION ON ALCOHOL ABUSE is especially crucial for students in Jackson County. The county has one of the highest ratios of alcohol-related auto fatalities in the state. In Carbondale alone, there were 397 DUI arrests in 1992 and 153, to date, in 1993, according to the Carbondale Police Department.

Because of the severity of the problem in the county, the Jackson County Health Department has been granted $60,690 in state and federal funds for DUI prevention. LAP, which is in its second year, attempts to solve the problem before it starts by dealing with students while they are in the formative stages.

Not only does LAP offer training for teachers but offers high school students DUI prevention in driver's education, physical education and health education classes. LAP also attempts to correct myths, explains alcohol effects on the body and shows how driving tasks are impaired. In addition, LAP offers a public information campaign to promote the "Drive Smart/Drive Sober" message.

LAP GOES THE EXTRA MILE by not limiting positive messages to high school students. One of the most distinctive ways in which LAP works to prevent alcohol abuse from starting is by addressing individual methods for coping with identity issues.

Because alcohol and socializing often go hand-in-hand in our society, those with low self esteem drink to feel socially acceptable. To help combat peer pressure, LAP addresses the self esteem factor by teaching students as early as elementary refusal skills and how to feel good about themselves without alcohol.

BUT EVEN WITH ALL OF THE ANTI-DRINKING and driving campaigns, alcohol prevention must begin in the home. Parental guidance, combined with programs like LAP, give students an opportunity to beat the problem before it even starts.

...and not only do we regard you as a true-blue American, Senator Nunn, if you don't mind a personal observation I must say I think you have a devastatingly cute butt!

Limiting access to gun sales would save lives, reduce crime

The Washington Post

Over the counter. That's how Gian Luigi Ferri got the TEC-DC9s that he used to kill eight people, and seriously wound six others, at 101 California Street before killing himself in the stairwell of a major San Francisco office building.

A California resident for less than a year, Ferri did what thousands of people in my state do: cross state lines to buy their weapon of choice.

A former Nevada resident, Ferri used a still-valid driver's license to buy one Uzi-like gun in Las Vegas, waited the requisite three days and returned to pick it up. Two weeks later, he purchased an identical weapon at another Las Vegas gun shop.

Because Ferri had recently registered a weapon, he was able legally to take possession of the second TEC-DC9 immediately. (We don't yet know where Ferri acquired the 12 clips with more than 500 rounds of 9-mm ammunition that he had with him when he opened fire.)

Only after Ferri picked up his first gun was the registration card on which he'd falsely reported his address sent to local law enforcement authorities. Had they used a "reverse" phone directory to check his Nevada residence, the police would have found that Ferri lied about his current address to a federal offense. But because Ferri had no prior felony convictions and wasn't wanted for other crimes, he came through the system cleanly.

As a result, eight people's lives were snuffed out.

Ironically, Ferri could have bought the gun he was after in California. Although a practically identical gun, the TEC-9, had been banned by the California state legislature with a number of other assault weapons in 1989, the copy-cat model that Ferri sought had not yet been added to the list of prohibited weapons by the state's attorney general.

Banning the sale of domestic assault weapons won't stop all assault weapon crime, but it will make these killing machines less accessible . . .

A national ban on semiautomatic assault weapons (based in part on their defining characteristics), however, would have made Ferri's mistaken foray into Nevada — undertaken deliberately to circumvent California's assault weapons ban — fruitless.

By depriving Ferri (and a series of demented killers before him) of easy access to weapons of war, a federal ban could have saved lives.

When imported assault rifles were banned by the Bush administration in 1989, the number of such weapons traced to crimes by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms declined by 40 percent while the number of crimes traced to domestic assault weapons increased.

A ban on the sale and possession of domestic assault weapons won't stop all assault weapon crime, but it will make these killing machines less accessible to criminals and maniacs.

If political courage prevails in Washington, a national assault weapons ban will help prevent the kind of carnage that Ferri wreaked in San Francisco from occurring anywhere again.

Ferri's assault weapon of choice — the Miami-made Intratec TEC-DC9 — is typical of its ilk. It's relatively cheap, easily concealed, holds 30 or 50-bullet magazines and can fire as fast as a demented killer or drug dealer can squeeze the trigger. Most sickening of all, Ferri's guns had a special spring-loaded "hellfire switch" (legal even in California) that allowed them to be fired especially fast.

What hunter, what home guardian, what enthusiast needs a machine capable of cutting people in half, of killing dozens in seconds?

Is it too much to ask that restrictions be imposed on the sale of a narrow class of deadly weapons? Must weapons of war, or their callously marketed copies, have a direct and legal path to our streets?

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum is the author of a bill to ban the sale, transfer and possession of 20 different kinds of semiautomatic assault weapons (as well as their copies), and vest in the secretary of the Treasury the power and responsibility to keep that list current.

The bill also would ban the large-capacity ammunition magazines that make assault weapons so lethal.

I'm proud to be an original cosponsor of this essential legislation. Let's vote.

Editorial Policies

Signed articles, including letters, viewpoints and other commentaries, reflect the opinions of their authors only. Unsigned editorials represent a consensus of the Daily Egyptian Board.

Letters to the editor must be submitted in person to the editorial page editor, Room 1247, Communications Building. Letters should be typewritten and double spaced. All letters are subject to editing and will be limited to 300 words. Letters fewer than 250 words will be given preference for publication. Students must identify themselves by class and major, faculty members by rank and department, non-academic staff by position and department.

Letters for which verification of authorship cannot be made will not be published.

toward coal research." Rea said he hopes by freeing up funds for coal research, jobs will be more secure for all those involved in the mining industry.

Rep. David Phelps, D-El Dorado, agreed and said he is also concerned about the strike.

"I know much of our time has been occupied by the flood, but we are entering a phase in the strike where we have to become more concerned," he said. "We are urging the two groups to reach an agreement, if they have not settled by October when we return to session we will have to consider the situation even more seriously."

The union has been without a contract since February and when talks are conducted the focus will be on obtaining job security John Cox, director of Region 3, said.

"In the meantime we will try to keep ourselves busy doing community service," Cox said. "...the average worker is 40 years old and it is not feasible for them to start new careers."

U.S. Rep. Glenn Pogshard, D-Cartersville, said legislators will play a minimal role in the process of resolving the dispute, and if both sides are not willing to make progress there is not much to be done.

"Our office is monitoring the situation," he said. "This situation certainly affects people in our district and we have strongly supported coal research in the past and hope improvements in that area will promote job security."

requirements. Fisher said the controversy revolves around the city requirement that he install a light pole and a handicapped sign by July 26.

"The sign and the light pole were both up by that day," he said.

"We are complying with the site plan, but the city just keeps pushing us to have it done faster."

Fisher said he asked for time extensions on requirements but the city has refused.

"We have asked for extensions for weather and other problems and they have just turned us down," he said.

Another example of the harassment by the city is the building across the street from 312 College, Fisher said.

"I am required to provide 10-11 spaces for five units and the building near mine is required to have only three parking spaces for four units," he said.

"Now what did that guy do special to get those requirements?"

Fisher said his attorney handling the case with the city attorney's office now and he expects a new court date to be scheduled.

is not necessarily a brain." Fox said this is an area where future research is needed.

"What we need to do now, is create the conditions that would cause an association that has the properties of a brain," he said. "I feel this can be done because evolution did it." "We all have brains."

This latest development in Fox's research was presented to members of the International Society for the Study of the Origin of Life earlier this month in Barcelona, Spain.

Aristotle Pappelis, a professor who helped Fox, said their presentation opened a lot of eyes.

"Many people had not realized that this research had progressed to this stage," he said. "Despite this, our papers were very well received."

Fox said his work really started once the existence of the protocell was determined.

"In 1959 we realized we had a protocell but we didn't know what the properties were," Fox said. "We still needed to find out if these things that looked like cells had the properties of cells."

"For the next 20 years we studied these properties and discovered that almost all were present in modern cells," Fox said.

Fox said the only difference is that in the protocell these functions are slower and weaker.

"The things that you find true for modern cells you also find true for protocells," Fox said. "Their ability to divide and generate electrical responses all seem to be the same."

The protocells discovery and the proposal that it was the earliest life form caused a stir in 1959. Fox used Webster's definition of life to determine the state of the protocell.

Pappelis said this is the most commonly used definition of life.

"It's difficult to define all the properties of a living system," he said. "But Webster's is commonly accepted by scientist and laymen alike."

"Many people had not realized that this research had progressed to this stage"

—Sidney W. Fox

John Yopp, dean of the graduate school, said much of Fox's research is now accepted.

"The synthesis of these protocells which have neuronal properties has been verified by scientists in Arizona, Maryland, and Munich, Germany," he said. "His work is well recognized but it still hasn't realized it's full potential and full impact."

"That will come when more people read his work and repeat his experiments," Yopp said. One reason Fox's research has gained so much attention is because it addresses problems with current evolutionary theory.

Fox said Darwin's theory of natural selection needs to be revised to allow for more cooperation in life's early stages.

"Darwin's theory states that there are two main evolutionary steps, variation and natural selection, with natural selection being the more important," he said. "What we have found is that the essence of evolution is the variation step."

Fox's theory proposes that amino acids follow a determined rather than random path to form these protocells. These Amino acids group together in water and when heated they form thermal proteins which in-turn form protocells.

"The self-ordered manner in which amino acids of various sizes and shapes form into protocells indicates this," Fox said. "I think that Darwin would agree with us if he had the information that we now have."

Fox said the thermal protein that comprises the protocell has many other future industrial applications.

"These proteins also have anti-aging and memory enhancing potential," Fox said. "I think these are very important medical developments and so do others."

"And that comes directly from our work."

Swollen rivers ring St. Louis in pool of devastation

Los Angeles Times

ST. LOUIS—By sneak attack and brute frontal assault, the surging Missouri, Mississippi and Illinois rivers contaminated two more water treatment plants swamped historic brick storefronts, backed sewage into homes and sent thousands fleeing.

Sunday, the Mississippi tore three boats from their moorings near the Gateway Arch. One, a riverboat, drifted to a downtown bridge and lodged there.

All three rivers were due to crest in this area this week, and it was uncertain how high they will rise. With the Missouri and the Illinois bursting into the Mississippi just to the north, authorities said they would not be surprised by a river stage here of 50 feet or more.

Most of the city stands high on a bluff, and a flood wall guarding a vast, low-lying industrial zone is designed to stave off 52 feet crest.

But confidence, once high, was being hedged. "We are hoping there will be no problems" with the wall, said Jim Brown, a spokesman for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. Even if the crest is below 52 feet, he said, the water is exerting enormous pressure on the St. Louis defenses. Minor seeps and leakage were apparent Sunday.

"It is almost impossible to predict what is going to happen," said St. Louis Fire Chief Neil Svetanics. But "we're not giving up. This city is going to continue fighting."

The floods have so far killed 45 people, submerged 16,000 square miles of land and destroyed $10 billion in property and crops.

On Sunday, with part of the western suburb of Chesterfield all ready underwater, the floods wrested more control in an arc around St. Louis and continued to spring surprises until late Sunday night, when the riverboat, which houses a fast-food restaurant, broke free. Witnesses said they saw sparks shooting from the craft before it drifted away. The boat's deck was flled with crushed railings, smokestacks and other debris.

A minesweeper and a barge used as a landing pad by tourist helicopters also broke loose and headed down the swollen river. All navigation has been banned for fear that wakes could weaken levees.

Officials immediately began voicing concern about the numerous other boats moored along the Mississippi around downtown St. Louis. They include two riverboats: the Admiral on the St. Louis side and the Casino Queen across the river at East St. Louis.

"We are concerned about anything getting loose because if it bumps into the flood wall or floodgates, it could cause catastrophic damage," said Lt. Robert Sidall of the U.S. Coast Guard.

To the northwest, at St. Charles, Mo., the Missouri River pushed a row of sandbags aside to pour into a 30-square-block area, including restored buildings from the 18th and 19th centuries, a trailer park and housing subdivisions.

To the northeast, at Alton, Ill., the Mississippi seeped under a two-week-old levee and resurfaced, behind the barrier, in the basements of renovated brick restaurants and shops. Fire department pumper trucks sent jets of water soaking back out over the sandbags, to no avail. The city's water treatment plant, serving 73,000 customers, also succumbed.

In south St. Louis, along the River des Peres' junction with the Mississippi, police and firefighters knocked on doors, urging 1,500 residents to leave an area now known locally as "Gilligan's Island" for its increasing isolation amid the waters.

Nearby, all 51 of the propane tanks stored at a Phillips Pipeline Co. facility were loosened and dangerously close to floating away or into each other. Officials said a fire was ignited Sunday evening, apparently by an electrical switch left on at a nearby pumping house. It was quickly extinguished.

About 90 minutes later, a second fire was reported inside the pumping station, but this too was doused. Efforts by divers to drain the tanks were suspended until authorities could survey the area for other fire hazards.

Group angered by violent advertisement

Critics say jean ad promotes murder

The Washington Post

The triple image of the bad James Dean knock-off aiming a revolver point-blank at the reader wasn't so much the issue. Visuals alone probably wouldn't have set off a ripple of outrage in the commercial white waters where today's shock-value advertising clashes with consumer sensitivities. Not the large-type "How to teach your children to love and care." But the smaller print beneath it that read:

"MODERN CHILDREN need to SOLVE their OWN problems: teaching kids to KILL helps them deal directly with reality-but you learn SO much quicker when you give them a guiding hand! Make them proud and confident! Man, if they never learn to blast the brains out of their neighbors what kind of damn FUTURE has this COUNTRY of ours got???"

The Diesel Jeans ad appeared halfway through the glossy pages of reviews and interviews in the April issue of Spin magazine.

"The last thing we need is someone who is trying to appeal to youth with an advertisement that says the best way to deal with neighbors is to blow their brains out," protests Martin Mawyer.

As president of the Christian Action Network, an advocacy group concerned with preserving traditional values, he collected "thousands of signatures" on a petition protesting the ad.

"We're not some right-wing religious group," says Mawyer, insisting CAN isn't usually in the business of being a moral watchdog.

Meanwhile, the Manhattan area-code telephone number furnished "for more information" in the ad rang with a couple dozen calls a day—99 percent of them complaining about the ad. "It is not promoting killing people, it is promoting jeans," says Rae Chapman, Diesel's director of operations in New York.

"Most of our complaints came from Midwestern places where they have a different view of things. Nothing shocks people in New York City or Washington, D.C."

On April 1, Mawyer took CAN's protest a step further. Attorneys for the Christian Action Network filed a formal complaint with the Federal Trade Commission (FTC).

Every year, the FTC receives approximately 50,000 complaints from consumers about everything from unreliable products and rip-off car repairs to bogus credit services and deceptive advertisements.

Ordinary advertising accounts for less than 5 percent of the complaints the agency receives.

The FTC encourages consumers to notify it about troublesome products and advertising, asking they explain their concerns and, when it is advertising, enclose a copy of the ad, or note the station and time that it aired if a broadcast commercial.

But it does not resolve individual consumer complaints, nor do all advertising complaints fall within the FTC's reach. "The types of things we are most concerned about are usually things that aren't all that clear to consumers," says Lee Peeler, the FTC's associate director for advertising practices.

Basically, the agency's jurisdiction includes deceptive, misleading, false or unfair advertising. A company that promotes a product as "environmentally safe" when scientifically it isn't, for instance, might expect a knock on the door by FTC investigators. But Peeler advises, that's not the kind of case most ordinary consumers can complain about knowledgeably.

On the other hand, cases like the one it settled in June involving unfair marketing of 900-number ads directed at children are within the grasp of concerned parents. So is some false advertising, such as the case it brought recently against "infomercials" about purported cures for obesity, baldness and impotence. Individual consumers often are alert to safety problems in advertising.

But the Diesel ad? At worst, it may only be offensive, says Toby Levin, an attorney in the FTC's advertising practices division. "Taste claims are not ones we can regulate."

Knowing full well the FTC's jurisdiction and the protection that the First Amendment affords free speech, even if it's offensive, CAN's attorneys hoped to convince the FTC the Diesel ad crossed that legal line.

United Mine Workers of America rally to gather support for their concerns about job security. The rally was this summer at the Pinckneyville Fairgrounds. More than 12,000 people gathered to hear UMWA president Richard Trunka.

Trickle-down effect of strike hurts business

By Shawna Donovan
Special Assignment Writer

Southern Illinois businesses are caught in the middle of a repressed economy as part of the trickle-down effect of the continuing United Mine Workers strike.

Mike Vessal, Illinois Department of Employment Security and labor economist, said individuals and communities feel the strike's negative effects on the economy.

"A miner who makes more than $40,000 a year and is suddenly striking will become more conservative of his spendable income," Vessal said. "Southern Illinois has felt the affect already with businesses tightening up because people change spending trends. "The strike will not have a visible affect until it has dragged on for six months or later because some businesses have withstood such a shock, especially fast food."

The UMWA is striking Peabody, Zeigler Old Ben, Arch of Illinois and Consol Coal companies in Illinois. Nine other states are involved in the strike with Bituminous Coal Operators Association companies.

Larry Rollinson, director of West Frankfort Economic Development office, said the effects of the strike are creating a financial disaster.

"Unfortunately we are seeing the affect of coal miner's strike and the CIPS lock-out," Rollinson said.

Ditman Walker, manager of sales tax research for the Illinois Department of Revenue, said the coal companies are feeling the affect more than the state.

"State-wide affect is not that drastic because the sales tax will be distributed according to population," Walker said. "The coal companies are losing money because they are not producing much."

Vic Svec, Zeigler Old Ben spokesman, said the coal economy is fine.

"Some communities are seeing the result of the pro-longed strike but the coal business is withstanding despite the strike."

Walker could not release the amount of sales tax they receive from the striking coal companies because it is confidential.

Rollinson said the VF Factory Outlet in West Frankfort and other retail businesses have been affected the most.

"Things were going good until six weeks into the strike," Rollinson said. "Then everybody stopped buying as much."

"We hope this strike get over soon," he said.

John Cox, UMWA Region 3 director, said local economies and families are the victims of a strike.

"The local businesses and families have been disrupted because the union has been without a contract since February and nobody wants to spend money that might not be there later," Cox said.

Violence, vandalism become unwanted parts of life for coal community during labor strike

By Shawna Donovan
Special Assignment Writer

A car window is shattered because it has a union sticker on it.

A coal company superintendent's family is harassed on the street.

These are acts of violence and vandalism that have become a part of coal community life during a miner's strike.

Violence and vandalism associated with striking mine workers are not unusual a law enforcement officer said.

Bill Wilson, Franklin County sheriff, said when a miners go on strike, violence is natural.

"Tension builds up naturally," Wilson said. "Harassment and vandalism occurs when the tension gets too much to take."

"Since the United Mine Workers have been on strike, it has been pretty peaceful" he said.

"There has only been 50 complaints of flattened tires, harassment and broken windows," he said.

Zeigler and Peabody Coal Companies, members of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association of which the UMWA is on strike with, have experienced some violence since the May 10 strike broke out.

Joe Kegel, Peabody Coal spokesman, said there has been some incidents of vandalism and violence.

"There has been rock throwing, name calling and other forms of harassment on normal everyday activities at the mine from strikers," Kegel said. "It is an on-going situation we have to deal with when there is a strike."

"It is an issue we deal with by employing private security guards and we call the proper authorities when there is a clear violation of the law."

But John Cox, UMWA Region 3 director, said the Solidarity 1993 strike is peaceful.

"We have seen accounts of violence towards miners, but not so much the miners causing the trouble," Cox said.

"It has been pretty peaceful and we have been keeping the calm by sandbagging along the Mississippi River and talking to our miners each day," he said.

"There has been only one person arrested since the strike began May 10," he said. "The violence comes from both sides, it is not one-sided."

Cox said coal companies have been known to hire out-of-state workers to replace striking workers and it causes violence.

"The tensions will get worse if the companies hire more workers who are non-union from other states," Cox said.

"Tension seems to rise when that happens and more violence occurs," Cox continued.

Cox said the issues facing strikers are job security and retiree benefits.

Miners complain the benefits are insufficient and will be gone soon with other mines opening and not hiring union workers.

John Patterson, a UMWA retiree from Johnston City, said the 1993 strike is different.

"The young guys are going to have it a lot worse if they lose," Patterson said.

"It seems with the different laws now it is will be harder for strikers to win because a coal company can open up a mine and it does not have to employ the union," he continued.

"In the 1970s, strikes were more violent with complaints of assaults," he said. "This strike seems peaceful right now."

The UMWA strike is going into its third month without successful negotiations from either side.

Financial instability leaves miners' families concerned

By Candace Samolinski
Special Assignment Writer

Everyday passersby see people like Jeff Bagwell walking the picket lines, but what they do not see are the financially-burdened families behind the men and women of the United Mine Workers Association.

Bagwell, a resident of Zeigler is a second-generation miner and an underground motorman at Consolidation Coal Co. Peard Lake Mine. He has been a coal miner for 23 years and is now faced with increasing instability in the mines.

The miners went on strike May 10 because of concerns about job security. The strike involves 6,000 miners in Region 3 which is comprised of Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Western Kentucky, Arkansas and Alabama. Of this region 3,200 of the miners are located in Southern Illinois. Bagwell said he makes $112 a day when the mine is operating. The family currently receives selective strike assistance in the amount of $150 bi-monthly.

Strikers on picket lines struggle to cope with scaled-back paychecks

Bagwell, his wife Mary and their two children have never experienced a strike before as a family, although Bagwell has been involved in one in the past.

"I was involved in a strike that lasted 103 days before, but we did not receive strike assistance," Bagwell said. "We receive $150 bi-monthly from the strike assistance fund now so that makes it a little easier. When you are on strike for 60 days it goes up to $175 and so forth to a maximum of $225."

Bagwell said he has examined his choices and decided to remain a coal miner for the time being.

"Since I have 23 years in with the mine, it is hard to pick up and go somewhere else," he said. "If I am given the opportunity to go to another mine facility operated by the same company to work in the future I would most likely consider that. My destiny is where the work is right now."

Mrs. Bagwell said some people do not understand why her husband and just does not go back to work.

"People are always asking why he won't go back to work," she said. "What they do not realize is that if they go back to work the situation will not get any better."

Families like the Bagwells can continue to look to the strike assistance fund, but it seems unlikely it will offer them with an adequate income for an extended time.

"My father was a miner for 44 years and I have three uncles and a cousin who have worked in the mines," Bagwell said. "What we are all concerned with is job security I have 23 years with the mine now and if they shut the mine down in a year they do not offer us any opportunity to go to other mine operations."

Mrs. Bagwell said she knew the miner's would go on strike in advance so she has been preparing by cutting back on expenses.

She was not employed previously, but has been working in her sister's flower shop and baby-sitting for extra money.

"I knew about a year to six months before that they would be going on strike," she said. "I just did not buy anything and tried to save as much as I could."

The area of Zeigler has been hit hard by unemployment and the U.M.W.A. strike has not been easy for the community.

Mrs. Bagwell said it is family unity that helps them to make it from day to day.

"There are so many people in Zeigler that are unemployed," she said. "Our families have been very understanding since they have been through the same thing."

The Bagwell's experience is similar to that of many other mining families across the country. The coal industry has long been a major source of employment for many people in West Virginia, Ohio, Virginia, Missouri, Alabama, Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Western Kentucky and Pennsylvania.

But Mrs. Bagwell said it is not possible to carry out daily routines as they have in the past.

"We have had to cancel the dentist appointments and the kids are always asking to go somewhere, but we just do not do anything anymore," she said. "Even going to the grocery store we have to watch every little thing. I believe we will be able to make it as long as we are careful of what we spend."

Flood-fighting sandbag supplies provided by various organizations

By Karen Ham
Special Assignment Writer

While volunteers fill countless sandbags around-the-clock to hold back the cresting Mississippi River, little consideration has been given to where sandbag supplies come from.

Since July 1, more than 13 million sandbags have been filled in the Army Corp of Engineers' 300 mile district between Hannibal, Mo and Cairo, Ill., said Ken Kruchowski, media representative of the Army Corp of Engineers.

"We've been providing sandbags since around July 1, Kruchowski said. "But the actual sand is coming from local highway districts throughout the counties."

The Jackson County Highway Department has hauled more than 800 tons of sand between Murphysboro and Grand Tower for sandbagging, one official said.

Rita Morefield, of the Jackson County Highway Department, said the sand hauling effort has been taken on by more than one agency.

"We're only one of the groups hauling sand to sandbagging sites," Morefield said. "Various hauling companies are transporting the sand."

Morefield said the majority of the sand Jackson County Highway Department is receiving is provided by Jackson County Sand and Gravel of Gorham.

"There are other places that are providing sand, but this is where most of ours is coming from," Morefield said.

"The highway department doesn't normally stockpile sand -- we get it from elsewhere," Morefield said.

But along with the high volume of sandbags being filled comes the price of providing supplies, said Kruchowski said.

"Depending on the type of sandbag used, the cost can vary from 22-to-33 cents apiece," Kruchowski said. "We're mainly getting ours from a number of St. Louis sandbag companies."

Likewise the price of sand varies depending on type and weight.

According to the Southern Illinois Sand Co., the price of sand can range from $1 to $3.30 per ton. Most of the sand used for sandbagging, however, is fill sand, which costs $1 per ton, on average. Forty tons of sand is needed to fill one sandbag.

The cost for supplies is absorbed by the Army Corp of Engineers and highway department funding, which is ultimately collected from taxes, Kruchowski said.

Morefield said although funding can cover some supplies, the highway department is hoping for federal reimbursement.

The highway department estimates it has spent more $4,000 on sand hauling to date.

DE to end publication for summer

The Daily Egyptian's last summer issue will be distributed Wednesday.

The Daily Egyptian's classified advertising and business offices will be open 8:00 a.m. to noon and 1:00 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Aug. 5 through 20.

The Daily Egyptian's first fall semester issue will be distributed Monday, Aug. 23, which is also the first day of classes. Advertising deadline for the first issue is Aug. 18.

Regular business hours of 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. will resume Aug. 23.

FAMILIES, from page 7

A positive side of the issue is the strike has allowed Bagwell to spend more time with his children.

He said he has had the chance to do a lot of the things he never had time for in the past.

"In the past I never got to go to their baseball or softball games," he said. "Now that I have more time, it makes me wonder how I ever got all of this done when I was working."

Bagwell said he would discourage his children from following in his footsteps.

"Right now the mining business is not stable, but I believe it will be in the future. I would encourage my children to look to other professions than coal," he said.

"Unless they went into the scientific aspects of it, I see a big future for the coal industry maybe past the year 2000, if I knew then what I know now I would not be in the coal business," he continued.

The mine workers are allowed to earn money through odd jobs, such as painting and repair work.

Bagwell said although the mine does not encourage its workers to go out and look for work, it does not prohibit it.

"Odd jobs to earn a little extra do not interfere with the money received through strike assistance," he said.

"We have had one person who took full-time employment somewhere else, but no one else has done that."

First sign of fall begins with NFL

The Baltimore Sun

If it's the first week of August, that must be football in the air...

The Los Angeles Raiders are still unbeaten, something they were not able to say at any time during the exhibition or regular season the last two years...

The Los Angeles Rams are fighting mad...

USC newcomers will begin practice Wednesday for the Aug. 29 opener in the Disneyland Pigskin Classic against North Carolina at Anaheim Stadium...

UCLA is preparing to open camp late next week for its Sept. 4 opener against Pacific 10 rival California at the Rose Bowl...

Ram Coach Chuck Knox spent nine hours at the movies Sunday. But don't ask him whether he liked "The Firm," "In the Line of Fire," "Jurassic Park" or "Sleepless in Seattle" better. He was watching Saturday's scrimmage against the San Diego Chargers at Cal State Fullerton...

"Besides evaluating individual performances, we analyze plays that we might want to change," said Knox, who broke down the film with his coaches for five hours and then showed it to his players for four hours...

He tried to downplay the fights that broke out after both Charger touchdowns, but said players ought to think twice about throwing punches during the regular season, when they will be subject to fines and suspensions...

The Ram publicity department printed 3,000 rosters. When the supply ran out early, they printed some more. Many of the fans wore San Diego caps and T-shirts. Of course, the Padres deserve some of the credit for the early interest in the Chargers...

Ram rookie tight end Troy Drayton, who has the best initials in football, wears a "TD" earring...

TD caught a 14-yard touchdown pass from Jim Everett and called it a confidence builder. "I'm harder on myself than the coaches are," the second-round draft choice from Penn State said...

How seriously did the Chargers take the scrimmage? The defensive players held hands during their huddles...

friend and McNamara for "dignity, sensitivity and stepping up when very few others did."

He said, "I think Mickey (Mantle) was the original Mr. October. Thank God it didn't stick."

He spoke of role models and American heroes and vowed to be effective as both now that he had been "anointed."

He said his comments about race were toned down from what he originally expressed in his first draft of the speech six months ago, but he got his point across — thanking Jackie Robinson for opening the door, Gibson for keeping it open and lamenting that the knocks of others who preceded them never were answered.

Jackson was, of course, the centerpiece of the wonderful afternoon provided by this charming burg that was identified as "the village of museums" by its mayor.

He was the only player included.

Two baseball writers, Leonard Koppett of The New York Times, New York Post, and New York Herald Tribune, and the late Bus Saidt of the Trentonian received the J.G. Taylor Spink Award.

Through it all, he never wavered. He stayed strong, though afterward he conceded that Friday had been a tough day for him and that he sought refuge 10 miles out of town.

Chuck Thompson, longtime voice of the Orioles, received the Ford C. Frick Award.

But the day belonged to Jackson, as did so many of the days in his career with the Athletics, Orioles, Yankees and Angels.

The only chants of the afternoon were for Reg-gie, Reg-gie.

Don Fehr of the players union was jeered, George Steinbrenner received a mixed reaction.

This being an afternoon, for a Yankee, and with the Mets so tainted by recent developments, Frank Cashen was booed loudly.

But nothing detracted from Jackson's moment.

Through it all, he never wavered.

He stayed strong, though afterwards, he conceded that Friday had been a tough day for him and that he sought refuge 10 miles out of town.

"It would have been easier if I wasn't the only one going in," he said.

"People expect a lot out of me. I had to get out. But I understand that and I can deal with it. A Hall of Famer has responsibilities. They're responsibilities I can handle, responsibilities I want."

ride, said that the Shawna: Trails Bike Trek is always a well organized and fun event.

McDonald said there are always lots of support vehicles out on the trails, plenty of food and water for the riders, and all the vehicles have radios so that everyone is always in constant contact with each other. There is even an emergency medical technician.

"Helen has always done such a good job organizing the event," he said. "I feel comfortable doing it. I know everything will be taken care of.

"A lot of rides are often not set up as well. Sometimes you might have to go 30 miles without any water stop. But with this, everything is where it should be."

The Trek's course will start on Saturday and end on Sunday in Vienna, with a Saturday night stop at SIUC's Touch of Nature on Little Grassy Lake. A 40 and a 100 mile ride will be offered on Saturday, and 40 and a 60 mile ride will be offered on Sunday.

Saunders emphasized that the ride is not a race.

"We encourage people to set their own pace, to challenge themselves and meet their own goals," she said. "But safety is first, always. We don't want anyone getting hurt out there."

In past years, the trek has raised an average of $15,000 annually for the ALAI, and they are hoping for a turnout of around 60 riders, Saunders said.

the country, headed to North Carolina.

But freshman guards Derek Anderson of Ohio State and Burt Harris of USC put up the most impressive numbers, averaging 21.8 and 18.2 points, respectively.

It went as predicted for Devers. She won gold medals in the 100 hurdles, the 100 and as a member of a 4x100 relay team.

Lenzi won two gold medals, but had to have a great dive on his final attempt to win the 3-meter event.

Miller won the all-around title, and Henry used his 5,000-calorie-a-day diet to help him lift 326 pounds to win the gold.

No one was more disappointed than hurdler Greg Foster, the 1984 Olympic silver medalist and three-time world champion, who clipped three hurdles and finally stopped running a little more than halfway through his 110 meter race.

That was supposed to be Foster's last race in America. It won't be.

"I'm just quitting on a note like this," Foster said. "I can't."

Neither could diver Scott Donie.

Donie, who won a silver medal in the 1992 Games in Barcelona, Spain, walked off the 10-meter platform Friday.

He then climbed down the ladder and told officials he wasn't going to dive anymore.

"When I was in the middle of that handstand, I just asked myself why I was continuing to do this. All the fun had drained out of this for me," he said.

A day later, Donie was competing in the 3-meter dive.

Yes, this festival had it all.
