SIU colleges to pay for new network

No cuts will be made: Fiberoptic network will cause University to juggle college's funds.

By Donita Pally
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A bond issue to provide a campus-wide fiberoptic network may cost SIU anywhere from $25 to $35 million dollars and require the reallocation of funds from SIU colleges to pay for it.

The internal reallocation of funds from the colleges would pay for an information technology infrastructure that currently is under consideration by the University.

Benjamin Shepherd, vice president for academic affairs and provost, said the reallocation of funds would provide for the laying of a large amount of fiberoptic wire and for the cost of renovating all buildings on-campus, including the dorms, to accept the network.

"These renovations would come with a big price tag," Shepherd said. "We would need large amounts of money instantly, and we would have to float a bond issue and repay it in an installment plan."

Shepherd said no college budgets would be cut, but funds from one budget category would be moved around to another category, and the University administration would have to get a share of the installment plan from the college deans.

"There aren't going to be any budget cuts (for the colleges) but their money will be spent differently campus-wide," Shepherd said.

He said the University is in the early process of developing the reallocation plan, and officials are currently discussing the possibilities.

"We expect to know more after fall semester starts—we'll have more precise information by then," Shepherd said. "I have every expectation that we will go through with the internal reallocation plan."

James Tweedy, vice president of administration, agreed with Shepherd. He said the directors at the budgeting meeting were asked to check on the feasibility of the plan, but no decision has been made.

"We are just in the process of seeing the impact and what it would mean and the services it would provide," Tweedy said.

Shepherd said the reallocation would not affect every college.

"Colleges deemed as priorities will not have to pay a share of the budget," he said.

Priority colleges are those colleges which have been identified and recommended by the faculty senate and graduate council as being high priorities for the University.

Shepherd said the reallocation of funds also would pay for other infrastructure needs, such as repairing electrical distribution for SIUE and Quigley Hall. He said it would

Stotlar: Bomb saved him, U.S. soldiers

By Alan Schnepf
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As the 50th anniversary of the atomic attacks on Hiroshima and Nagasaki nears, a retired SIUC professor reflects on his experience in Nagasaki after the city was devastated by a plutonium bomb.

John W. Stotlar, who taught physical education from 1948 until 1979 at SIUC, was one of hundreds of thousands of U.S. servicemen stationed outside Japan, scheduled to invade the country in early November, 1945. Japan surrendered on Aug. 15 after Hiroshima and Nagasaki were bombed on Aug. 6 and Aug. 9 respectively.

Stotlar, 71, is convinced the atomic bombs saved his life because they stopped the invasion.

"There's no question about it," he said.

An invasion of Japan was expected to be one of the bloodiest battles of World War II, worse than the Normandy invasion, Stotlar said.

An invasion of Japan could have resulted in 1 million American deaths, while the Japanese could have lost two million, he said. The Wall Street Journal also reported that an average of 900 Americans

Disney/ABC deal leaves networks scrambling

Newsday

NEW YORK—It is simply the most exciting merger of two media titans in history.

In what seemed like lightning-speed time, two vast, far-flung companies with interests in virtually every major form of programming have created what will surely be the model of a media corporation for the 21st century.

It is also, of course, the first long-awaited merger between a major Hollywood studio and a major New York-based broadcast network. Fox, naturally, is owned by Twentieth-Century Fox Corp., but no one in his right mind would confuse Fox with the mighty ABC television network. You can almost believe Disney chief Michael Eisner when he says—as he did Monday—that there are "synergies under every rock we turn over."

So much for the hype, which helped send shares of Walt Disney Co. and Capital Cities/ABC soaring Monday. But is there anything about this merger that should give one pause?

First, it is a dramatic representation of the merger-and-acquisition binge that has gripped the entertainment industry since 1985. The powerful—Viacom, Warner, News Corp.—have grown more powerful.

Heat causes water main to break in front of Woody Hall

By Emily Priddy
DE Associate Editor

SIUC had its own miniature "Waterworld" in front of Woody Hall Monday afternoon after a water main broke, spewing water through a buckle in the pavement on University Avenue.

Jerry Lipe, foreman for Carbondale's sewer and water department, said recent hot temperatures probably caused the break, which occurred at about 3 p.m.

City workers had to shut off valves on Mill Street and farther down University Avenue to stop the water before locating the actual leak.

Lipe said.

He said the break appeared to be close to the buckle in the pavement.

"I would say we're close to the break, right on either side of this hole here (in University Avenue)," Lipe said.

Carbondale's streets have a layer of flexible material called a sealer under the pavement, which causes the water to spread out under the street instead of bursting out of the ground with more force, causing more extensive damage, Lipe said.

Jeff Crowell, of Carbondale's utility maintenance department, said the ENTREPRENEURS TRY TO BYPASS IMPORT TAX — TOKYO—Japanese entrepreneur Yasuyuki Nambu wants to become a big-time importer of American cars. So just weeks after the Clinton administration waged a bitter battle to win greater foreign access to Japan's auto market, are Detroit's Big Three applauding his high-profile efforts? Don't bet on it. Nambu—who first made a big splash selling imported designer clothes at discount prices—is among the most famous of Japan's buck-the-system "parallel importers." His strategy is to buy new cars off American dealers' lots, put them on ships and sell them here cheap. By eliminating middlemen—and the car manufacturers' own representatives in Japan—he thinks he can make money undercutting the standard sticker price by as much as 29 percent.

BRAZIL ONE OF HOTTEST COMPUTER MARKETS — SAO PAULO, Brazil— With sales of hardware and software totaling an estimated $9 billion in 1994 and growing at about 30 percent a year, Brazil is one of the world's hottest emerging markets. Three years ago, Brazilians could not legally buy foreign-brand personal computers. In a failed policy aimed at developing its own technology, Brazil enforced a "market reserve," putting this nation of 155 million off-limits to international manufacturers. Today, foreign companies are assembling computers in Brazil and selling them at a booming rate—and at increasingly competitive prices. Brazil is moving fast to make up lost time in modernizing its economy, one of the world's 10 biggest.

LAWMAKERS WORK TO COLLECT MONEY OWED — WASHINGTON—Lawmakers have begun to explore another way to ease pressure on the federal budget besides cutting popular programs and raising taxes: collecting more of the money owed to the government. And a lot is owed, not counting overdue taxes, to a U.S. government well-known as the world's biggest borrower. Deadbeats ranging from former college students and military veterans to foreign governments and domestic shipbuilders lag behind on payments totaling between $50 billion and $55 billion, according to a survey of 100 federal agencies conducted earlier this year by Rep. Carolyn B. Maloney, D-N.Y. The more than $50 billion in overdue debts, largely defaulted loans, compares with $67 billion in delinquent back taxes owed to the government.

AMATEUR ASTRONOMERS DISCOVER NEW COMET — Two amateur astronomers independently of each other have found what could be the brightest comet in 20 years, perhaps giving millions of people their first chance to see one with a naked eye when Comet Hale-Bopp passes Earth during the winter of 1996-97. "This is the most distant comet ever discovered by amateurs. That means that it is probably big and intrinsically bright," said Geoff Chester, an astronomer with the National Air and Space Museum's Einstein Planetarium. Comet Hale-Bopp is well outside the planet Jupiter's orbit, and astronomers say it could take them two weeks to define the comet's probable path. The comet first was sighted July 23 by Alan Hale, in Cloudfcroft, N.M., and Thomas Bopp, in Stanfield, Ariz., independently of each other. They reported the object at nearly the same time to the International Astronomical Union (IAU), the officially recognized clearinghouse for astronomical information. Hale and Bopp said the comet had no tail, and they estimated the brightness at 11th magnitude, well outside visible range.

HATE CRIMES AGAINST ASIAN AMERICANS ON RISE — WASHINGTON—Hate crimes against Asian Americans increased 35 percent last year, with much of the violence spurred by anti-immigrant sentiment, according to a report released Monday by the National Asian Pacific American Legal Consortium. In a significant number of the reported 452 incidents, victims were told to "go home" and "you're not wanted" and looked upon as if they were not "Americans," the report said. Assaults were the single largest category of crime tracked. At the same time, the report said there is a rising tide of popular animosity toward immigrants. The report cited the recent remarks by Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato, R-N.Y., as an example of racism. On a nationally syndicated radio show, D'Amato used a fake Japanese accent to mimic Lance A. Ito, the judge in the O.J. Simpson murder trial, who speaks with no accent. D'Amato later apologized.

School of Law faculty recommends national search for new dean

By Rebecca Hutchings
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC Law School faculty withdrew its recommendation for an internal dean search at the last faculty meeting and approved a national dean search.

Harry Haynsworth IV, former dean of the School of Law, recently resigned and Thomas Britton, associate dean, was appointed as acting dean until the search committee finds a permanent dean.

On April 19, Patrick Kelley, SIUC School of Law professor, moved for an internal dean search and suggested the faculty waive any rules and regulations already adopted regarding position qualifications that would inhibit an internal search, according to the minutes of the faculty meeting.

The faculty voted 18-5 in favor of an internal dean search, limiting it to the members of the SIUC School of Law faculty and staff at the April 19 meeting.

Erick Nordstrom, Student Bar Association President, reported that the law students supported an external search.

At the July 13 faculty meeting, Kelley reported the School of Law dean search encountered problems with SIUC central administration, specifically with the faculty request for an internal dean search.

A motion approving the national dean search was adopted unanimously by the faculty on July 13.

Kelley said the administration requires the search committee to submit a job description and position requirements for a new law dean.

The dean of the School of Law must have the rank of full professor with tenure in the law school, according to the qualifications and competencies of the past position description and the position description proposed by the current search committee June 29.

Kelley said Britton, interim dean of the School of Law, is not a professor of the law school.

Britton is an adjunct professor. According to the Faculty and Administrative Professional Staff Handbook, adjunct appointments are on a term-by-term basis and do not lead to academic tenure.

Kelley said it would be up to the search committee to determine if Britton's status would affect him as a possible candidate for the dean search.

"Those are questions for the (search) committee to determine," Kelley said. "I'm not going to comment on that now."

Britton could not be reached for comment.

High budget not enough to keep 'Waterworld' out of average seas

Sometimes you go into a movie expecting too much and leave disappointed even though the film, for what it is, works fairly successfully.

This is my problem with "Waterworld." Marketed as a high-tech, effects-laden blockbuster, the movie turns out to be a mildly entertaining, campy comedy-adventure. Enter the theater expecting such fare, and you will not be disappointed.

"Waterworld" is set in the far future, after the polar ice caps have melted and all known dry land is completely submerged.

People are unhappy, living unfulfilling lives afloat what little solid material remains, recycling everything, including their urine and the bodies of their dead.

Details like this lead one to believe the film will be a gritty, realistic portrayal of life in a post terra-firma seascape, but nearly everyone involved fails to deliver.

Most people in Waterworld dream of the day when dry land will be rediscovered. The central theme of the movie is the struggle to gain possession of a cryptic tattoo on a young girl's back that some believe holds the key to finding solid ground.

Kevin Costner plays an unlikeli-

Aaron Butler

able loner with gills and webbed feet who slaps the little girl around for making chalk drawings on his low-tech yet resourcefully rigged sailboat.

Costner portrays a poor communicator well, so his inability to fit in with the miserable residents of Waterworld is believable. However, he never shows a glimmer of the intelligence or resourcefulness necessary to build the mad inventor-type rigging on his boat, which becomes the movie's surprise supporting star.

The bad guys in this silly epic are the extras from the "Mad Max" movies—several hundred filthy men in rags, driving beat-up jet-skis and living on an ancient oil tanker where they make a lot of rude bad guy noises and talk like professional wrestlers. They are called Smokers, and they fight over packs of Camel cigarettes like wild dogs.

Dennis Hopper is the Deacon, the Smokers' mad leader. Hopper's manic energy barely saves him in a role I suspect was heavily cut when editors removed a rumored 45 minutes from the film before its release. Hopper is cut off in mid-sentence in one scene during the climax, where the storyline and the editing become so chaotic it is almost impossible to make sense of the sinking plot.

Inconsistencies abound. Why do the Smokers drag the obnoxious tattooed tyke around instead of copying the markings on her back? Where does the Deacon get the seemingly endless supply of Camels he throws to his fiending followers? And how did the tobacco survive unspoiled for hundreds of years? If the world is covered with water, where are all the fishermen?

So many questions are raised by this movie that a critical viewing leaves one's head spinning. But if you accept everything at face value, kind of like a Roadrunner cartoon or an episode of the "A-Team," "Waterworld" could be an amusing way to spend two hours and fifteen minutes.

Researcher stalking new bobcat habitats in Illinois

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Reported sightings of bobcats in Illinois pose no threat to humans—all the big cat wants is to be left alone to roam free and hunt, according to Tara Gibbs, an SIUC graduate student in zoology.

Gibbs said the bobcat is secretive and not dangerous to humans unless cornered.

Gibbs is researching the association between the reported bobcat sightings and potential habitats in Illinois.

"We are trying to gain information about bobcats, relying on sightings that people have had," Gibbs said. "There is a lack of information concerning the bobcat habitat requirements, movements and abundance."

Gibbs said the bobcat is an endangered species in Illinois. She is studying potential habitats throughout the entire state by using a computerized geographical information system.

Gibbs said most bobcats are located in Southern Illinois regions such as the Shawnee National Forest.

Carbondale Police having difficulties investigating one of its own officers

By Carey Jane Atherton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Carbondale Police Department's internal investigation concerning an assault complaint against one of its officers has been delayed due to difficulties investigators have had contacting witnesses for statements.

Irvin Maloney, a John A. Logan student, and Michael Maloney, of Carbondale, filed the complaint with the Carbondale Police department more than two months ago. Irvin Maloney said a man in a GMC truck pulled out a gun and threatened him while stopped at the intersection of Rt. 13 and Giant City Road.

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said the investigation has been delayed because both the department's investigators and some of the people involved in the incident went out of town.

Strom said a Carbondale police officer is the subject of the complaint, but because the complaint is still under investigation, Strom said he could not comment on the specifics or identify the officer.

"We are conducting a thorough investigation and it is not complete," Strom said.

Irvin Maloney said his cousin Michael Maloney, an SIUC graduate in university studies, and friend Devon Higgins were in the car with him and witnessed the assault.

Irvin Maloney said Michael Maloney and Higgins did leave town for awhile, but said they had already done an oral and written report.

"We've done everything we were supposed to do," Irvin Maloney said.

Irvin Maloney said he filed an appeal with the city attorney Sharon Hammer requesting the documents pertaining to the police report, so he could take the officer involved to court.

Hammer said that Maloney filed a Freedom of Information Act request, which went to the City Clerk for review. She said the response from the city clerk was that the investigation of the officer was not completed and still pending.

"I personally feel that the bureaucracy and red tape that they (police and city officials) are putting me through is basically for me to lose interest and stop pursuing the case," Irvin Maloney said.

However, Irvin Maloney said that he does plan to pursue the case until the end.

Irvin Maloney said he was driving down Rt. 13, preparing to merge right when the GMC truck cut him off.

"He practically ran me off the road," Irvin Maloney said.

Irvin Maloney said he and the GMC truck were stopped at the Rt. 13 and Giant City Road traffic light when the assault occurred.

Michael and Irvin Maloney said the driver of the GMC truck made an obscene hand gesture, shouted profanities and pulled out a gun when they questioned him about his driving.

The Maloneys said they had wanted to know if the driver of the truck had seen them before he cut them off.

Irvin Maloney said after he saw the gun, they took down the license plate number of the truck and drove to the police station immediately.

Michael Maloney said it was not until after the police ran a check on the license plate and asked them five times if they were sure they had the correct license plate number that they found out the driver of the truck was an off duty Carbondale police officer.

"My heart dropped then," Michael Maloney said. "Anybody will take his word over ours."

In June, Carbondale Police Lt. Bob Goro had said the investigation was almost finished, and Strom had said State's Attorney Mike Wepsiec had been asked to review the complaints.

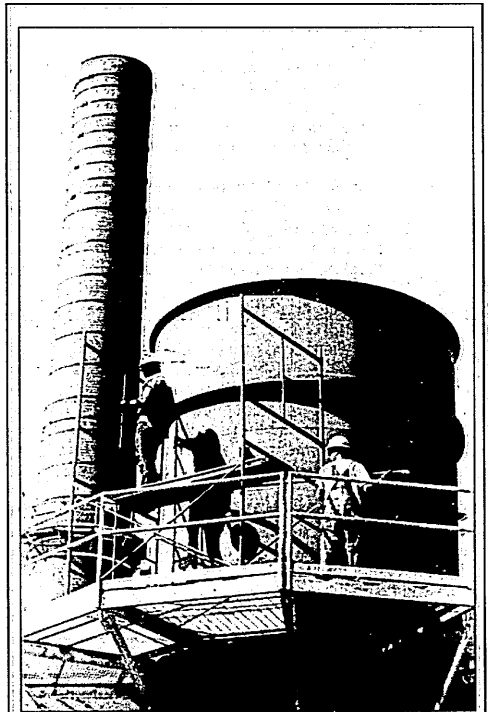

"I think the parts of the investigation he (Wepsiec) asked for he already has," Strom said.

Strom said he would like to believe the investigation will be finished by the end of next week, but he said he could not say for sure.

Strom also said that his initial feeling about the complaint—that the reaction of the complainants alarmed the officer involved and the officer took appropriate action—has not changed.

In June, Strom said that "basically what everyone is waiting for is the review by the state's attorney."

Wepsiec has been unavailable for comment on the case for the past three weeks.

Logging law could harm the Shawnee

ONE OF THE FEW PRECIOUS NATURAL resources in Southern Illinois is the Shawnee National Forest. The forest, owned by the U.S. government, provides a natural beauty to the region not paralleled in Illinois. But a new law could put the forest in danger of exploitation by logging companies, giving a bad name to environmentally concerned loggers as well as the government which allowed the legislation to become law.

The new law allows logging companies to harvest federally-owned timber that is classified as "salvage" and repeals environmental protection laws concerning logging for a period of one year. The law is irresponsible and never should have been passed because the chance for abuse on the part of logging companies could permanently scar the natural beauty of the Shawnee. According to the U.S. Forest Service, salvage timber are trees which are sickly, insect-infested and more susceptible to fire. The new law mandates that a minimum amount of this salvage timber is to be harvested. But what is salvage timber? Answering that question has not been a high priority for legislators, because the law was an amendment to the much larger rescission bill, which cuts federal spending by $16 billion.

EVERY ASPECT OF THIS LAW IS SUSPICIOUS. IT is a major step backward from forest protection progress made by environmental groups over the past few years. If there is a concern to rid the forest of the dangers of fires and disease-infested trees, why does the law repeal other laws which would protect the forest from environmental abuses? A minimum timber quota also seems suspicious for a law supposedly drafted to protect the forest. What happens if there is not enough "salvage" timber? An exploitive logging company could continue to cut down trees until it has met the quota, claiming the trees are salvage. There was a proposal in Congress to define what salvage timber is more specifically, but it was defeated. The abuse potential in this law should have been the one argument needed to put this law in the trash while it was still an amendment.

The thing is, what congressman or congresswoman would vote against this? After all, it was attached to a bill which would cut federal spending. A legislator would have to be mighty committed to the environmental cause to vote against cutting the federal budget in order to save a few trees. Before the law was passed, Sen. Carol Mosely-Braun's, D-Ill., spokesperson said she was more concerned with portions of the bill which involved cutting job training and education even though she was aware of the timber portion of the bill. Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., also supported the bill, although he said he supported the specific definition proposal as well. These are Democrats, not Republicans. Simon has a history of supporting environmentally friendly bills. It is suspicious why such an environmentally unfriendly amendment was attached to a bill which was almost guaranteed to pass.

THIS NEW LAW IS MORE THAN A BAD IDEA. IT is a dangerous one, especially for the Shawnee. It is too valuable of a commodity for it to be given over to potential abuse and exploitation, and every attempt to repeal this new law should be made.

Commentary

GOP reversal should continue

The Washington Post

Last Friday 51 House Republicans broke with their party leadership and voted to strip an appropriations bill of 17 provisions that they rightly regarded as an effort not to improve the regulatory process, but to deny the Environmental Protection Agency the power to enforce wide stretches of the law.

The riders were beaten, 212 to 206. The leadership is said to be preparing to bring all or some of them back. The members of both parties who voted no should stand fast. The riders aren't this legislation's only defect. In a single year it would cut the environmental agency's budget by a crippling third and enforcement funds by close to half. But the riders were particularly bad and last week became the symbol of a broader fight within the Republican Party and Congress generally over regulatory and environmental policies.

One of the riders, if restored, would bar the agency from using any of its funds to "develop, propose, promulgate" etc. any clean-air regulations affecting oil refineries. It happens just to have issued a set of refinery regulations that would be nullified.

Another would bar it from taking contemplated action against cement-kiln operators. A third, sought by the grocery manufacturers, would not just kill the anachronistic Delaney clause regarding pesticide residues in processed foods, but basically bar the agency from taking account of residues in such foods generally.

No funds could be used for wetlands protection until the clean-water act is rewritten. The House has passed amendments that, among many other things, would greatly weaken wetland laws.

Senators would be just as happy to leave the law about as it is; the rider seeks, at the expense of all wetlands enforcement, to force their hand. Clean-water provisions having to do with storm-water runoff and an interstate initiative affecting the Great Lakes would likewise be suspended, as would all further spending to clean up toxic-waste dumps if the Superfund statute is not extended by Dec. 31.

Republican whip Tom DeLay, in defending the riders Friday, described EPA as a kind of "Gestapo" within the government. The defectors expressed a different view. They want to rationalize the regulatory process, ease the burden where it has become excessive in recent years, make the system more flexible and keep the ambitions of the various programs within bounds. But they want to preserve the process as well, not abandon it.

Good-bye to good friends

In the 25 years, three months and 18 days at SIUC, I have supervised a large number of student assistants and I have been very fortunate in that they have made my job so much easier.

The faculty using Lawson Hall have been well served by their dedication, work habits, conscientiousness and willingness to go the extra mile to accomplish our goals.

To the current Lawson Hall student assistants, Brad, Dawn, Kelly and Sean—thank you for all you have done this past spring and summer semester. I wish you much success in the coming years in your chosen professions.

Perhaps we can schedule an "attitude adjustment seminar" in a couple-a-three-months.

Parking gripes? Try a bike

In response to Mr. Andrew Ensor's letter to the editor on July 28, I appreciate his concern about parking at SIUC. However, I do not agree with his viewpoint.

First of all, I do not think the parking situation editorial was self-embarassing. A statement of fact was outlined and a fee comparison to other universities in the state of Illinois was given.

Although it is difficult to compare SIUC with the regions of Illinois State or Northern Illinois, there is nothing else better to compare. My experience at the University of Northern Iowa and the University of Madison-Wisconsin indicate the parking at SIUC is convenient and a bargain.

Second, if the Daily Egyptian was truly a piece of propaganda, I don't think Mr. Ensor's previous letters would have been printed.

A nice thing about the United States is that everyone has a right to his or her viewpoint. I believe there is a gentlemen currently detained in China who may have a view on propaganda.

Third, if Mr. Ensor is so upset with the fee increase, he could ride a bicycle instead of drive to class. Not only would he receive a bicycle permit at no charge, it is great exercise and is environmentally friendly.

I respect Mr. Ensor's opinions but believe he does not represent the whole campus.

Help us all: Magazine psychology offers disorders to suit every taste

If media advertising is any indication, we are a society of hypochondriacs.

I'm not kidding. Self-help books, columns and programs for living are everywhere. Wherever we turn, we find someone offering us a quick cure for the flavor-of-the-month disorder, be it depression, seasonal affective disorder or repressed childhood memories.

In virtually every women's magazine, readers can find quizzes to help them diagnose any physical or emotional problem they may or may not have, with an accompanying article on the treatment of such problems.

Thanks to magazine quizzes, I will never need to pay a physician, therapist or dietitian.

I have already diagnosed myself with obsessive compulsive disorder, low blood sugar, split ends, terminal P.M.S., weak nails, megalomania, acrophobia and a bad dye job.

In addition, I know that I have a Type A, concrete random (or was it abstract sequential? No matter ...) personality.

Although my fantasies involving Omar Sharif and a 1972 Volvo station wagon are supposedly entirely normal, magazine psychologists warn me that I should be wary of getting involved with any older men just in case my daydreams are early indicators of a possible borderline Electra complex.

In a spirit of philanthropy, I have devised a little quiz of my own to offer guidance to bewildered DE readers everywhere.

Are you a burned-out college student? Here are eight questions to help you identify the warning signals of academic exhaustion.

Please answer all questions honestly. Use either a number-two pencil or — if you can't find one — a tube of lipstick to mark your answers.

Question #1: Have you ever scrambled for pennies because you didn't want to break a quarter?

Question #2: Did you flunk your last poetry exam because you decided to analyze the inner meaning of the lyrics to the "Gilligan's Island" theme song?

Question #3: Do you currently own any furniture constructed of empty cardboard beer cases?

Question #4: Do you consider aerosol cheese to be one of the four basic food groups?

Question #5: Have you ever planned your class schedule around episodes of "Beavis and Butt-head"?

Question #6: Does your method of studying for British literature tests include renting the film "Monty Python and the Holy Grail"?

Question #7: Does your idea of upscale dining involve installing cupholders in your car?

Question #8: Have you ever purchased replacement parts for your sandals to avoid buying new shoes?

If you answered "yes" to any of the preceding questions, you are definitely a burned-out college student and should call either Oprah Winfrey or an attorney to see if there is money to be made from your condition.

If you don't get help from Geraldo, get help somewhere.

have suddenly grown omnipotent.

The simple question: Will such an extraordinary conglomeration of power ultimately be good for American consumers, or for TV companies and producers not affiliated with major players? The Federal Communications Commission and the Justice Department used to examine such questions more closely, but the chief executives at both Disney and Capital Cities/ABC said Monday they believed they could answer any questions raised without jeopardizing the deal.

Second, the Disney/ABC merger instantly recasts the entire multimedia landscape. If this, indeed, is the model for the 21st century, how should Michael Jordan, the Westinghouse chief who is trying to hammer out a $5 billion-plus deal for CBS, be feeling right about now? The answer: worried.

The Disney/ABC deal makes Westinghouse/CBS look especially trivial by comparison. If Westinghouse/CBS goes through, which now seems certain, it will be the union of two hobbled, deeply troubled companies.

CBS is so far behind ABC in so many ways—weaker programming, a weaker news division, no cable networks—that it will take many years to catch up with the Disney/ABC behemoth. Bluntly put, CBS may be left in the dust. Group W—Westinghouse's broadcasting arm—is, in fact, a successful company with interests in cable and satellite transmission. But it has virtually no power base in Hollywood. Disney's power base there is widespread—and widely feared.

Even NBC—still unattached to a major Hollywood studio—instantly becomes a second-class player in the world of global media politics.

NBC has aggressively pursued foreign joint ventures; it has a new international TV service (NBC Superchannel); a barely profitable cable network (CNBC); and a still-unprofitable one (America's Talking). Did we forget to mention significant growth at the network, particularly in prime-time program ratings?

Yet compared to Disney/ABC, this is small beer, indeed. ABC's prime-time, daytime, late-night, news and morning schedules are all ratings leaders. A&E, Lifetime and ESPN—which it has ownership stakes in—are all cash cows. The company also has vast—and, yes, profitable—radio and publishing holdings.

Cuts

cover unfunded mandates and bills that are related to the Environmental Protection Agency as well.

Tom Keon, dean of business and administration, said he does not know how to prepare for the cuts in his college's budget because he has not received any explicit information on the subject.

"I have heard of the possibility that we need cuts, but I've been to the last two dean council meetings and nothing specific has been said," Keon said.

Large crowds poured onto the campus ground, for an evening of music, dancing and fun. The first Sunset Concert featured Soulard Blues Band and was held on the steps of Shryock Auditorium.

WHEN THE SUN GOES DOWN

Another Sunset Concert series comes to a close, but questions still remain about its future

By Dustin Coleman
DE Features Editor

As the crowd dispersed from the Shryock Auditorium steps last Thursday night, the summer 1995 Sunset Concerts came to a close, leaving questions about its uncertain future.

Early in the concert series, city and University officials expressed concerns about the event. Parking, overcrowding, lack of restroom facilities and under-age drinking were some of the issues at hand.

Paul Mitchell, chief executive director of the Student Programming Council, said this year's Sunset Concerts went well despite a few things they need to consider changing for next year.

"This happens every year," he said. "These concerns aren't necessarily new ones."

Mitchell said what made this year successful was the attendance of the community, not just students.

"It made it more of a city event, and not just a University event," Mitchell said.

City Manager Jeff Doherty said that early in the series, there was no intention of ever terminating the concerts, just modifying them in order to address the problems at hand.

Though the City Council has discussed its wish to ban alcohol all together, Doherty said alcohol was low on the list of concerns.

George Whitehead, director and CEO of the Carbondale Park District, said most of the concerns are just rumors, and as far as he is concerned, there was only one concert that posed any type of problem.

Whitehead said the second concert, which featured Reggae at Will at Turley Park, caused some problems with parking and too many people, which happens every year with the Reggae concerts.

"It (reggae) is a popular flavor," said Whitehead.

"But I seriously doubt that the show attracted 5,000 people like it was estimated to have."

Whitehead has been involved with every Sunset Concert series since it started 17 years ago, and said he hopes there will be an 18th year.

"We will do what we can about the parking situation," he said. "And if there are other problems to be addressed, then we will do so."

"But I haven't heard of any other complaints than the ones we hear every year."

Whitehead said alcohol is not even a factor. During one year, alcohol was banned at the concerts at Turley Park.

During the four concerts at the venue, Whitehead said only between 1,000 and 1,500 people showed up, and banning alcohol had a drastic effect on the event.

"We have always had concerns about alcohol-related issues," he said.

"But there have been no incidents that have risen that are alcohol-related."

Nagasaki

were being killed each day as the war went on. "I'm lucky," he said, "I was never shot at once in my entire service." Stollar did eventually make his way into Japan after the surrender. About two months after the bombs were dropped he was assigned to destroy Japanese gun placements along the coast near Nagasaki. About a week later he began working as a military police officer in the city.

He said there were 80,000 dead Japanese when he arrived in Nagasaki and that another 20,000 died from radiation sickness by Christmas.

"It was pretty well cleaned up and we didn't find many bodies," he said. "The only time I found bodies was when we were building a runway for small planes."

Although he did not find many bodies, Stollar said he found several victims of radiation sickness.

"I'd find them on the corner and put them in the jeep and take them up to the hospital," he said. "You could tell what they had."

Stollar said he received a letter from a doctor at the hospital, that upon translation, turned out to be a thank-you note for helping people to the hospital.

As a military police officer Stollar said he became close with Nagasaki's chief of police because the man could not enforce the rowdy behavior of many of the soldiers who had just won the war.

In one instance he said a drunken British soldier, who was acting particularly excessive, was thrown in the brig where he eventually passed out. After a Japanese tattooist was brought in during the night the soldier woke up with "God Bless America" tattooed on his chest.

During a 1988 visit to Japan, Stollar was reunited with the chief's wife and daughter. Although the daughter was only 5 years old during the war, she remembered Stollar visiting her father. "I was lucky the whole way," he said.

Stollar said although he did not have high levels of radiation in his body, there was a higher rate of testicular cancer and a form of bone cancer in the servicemen who were in Hiroshima and Nagasaki after the atomic attacks.

Stollar said he fully supports former president Harry S. Truman's decision to use atomic weapons in World War II and said it saved lives by averting a U.S. invasion of Japan.

Others do not share this sentiment. Robbie Lieberman, an associate history professor at SIUC, said the U.S. did not have to drop atomic bombs on Japan.

"There was a faction of the Japanese government that wanted to negotiate peace," she said. Lieberman conceded there was also a faction in Japan that would fight until the death, but said the war had already been won by the U.S.

She said it is "highly likely" that Japan would have surrendered without either an atomic attack or invasion.

Both Lieberman and Stollar said the atomic attacks of 1945 were partly a power flex of U.S. military power toward Russia.

"It was a sign to let the Russians know we had the bomb and that we would use it," Lieberman said.

Water main

main could have developed either a hole or a split in the underground pipe.

Workers had not located the source of the leak at this writing, but Crowell said it probably was caused by a hole in the pipe, which workers can repair by fitting a stainless-steel sleeve over the leak.

"Most likely it just blew a hole in it, the way it's (the water) acting," he said.

If the leak stemmed from a split in the pipe, workers would have to replace an entire section of the pipe, Crowell said.

Lipe said the break could take from two to 10 hours to repair.

Crowell said at least one lane of University Avenue would be closed during the repair.

Crowell said the amount of time required to find and fix the break would depend on how far underground the main is located. He said the valve for the pipe is 3 1/2 feet below the pavement, but the spot where the leak occurred may be deeper than that.

Despite the buckle in the pavement, Crowell said there was no danger to people driving vehicles down University Avenue yesterday afternoon as long as they did not drive directly over the break.

SIU Police were at the scene to direct traffic around the break and the workers who were repairing it.

Although some cities have to issue a boil order for several days while waiting for water to be tested for safety after a break, Lipe said that is not necessary in Carbondale.

"We've got our own lab and everything, so we don't have to wait on that," he said. "We can get our tests done immediately."

Lipe said water mains break in Carbondale about once every three or four weeks.

"We've had a lot of our mains replaced, so we don't have them (breaks) too often," he said. "They run in spurts. Sometimes you'll get several right in a row."

Crowell said the break should not cause much inconvenience to SIUC students, because it happened late enough in the afternoon to avoid heavy traffic in the area and would be repaired by this morning.

"It couldn't have happened at any better time," Crowell said.

Bobcat

"They utilize any type of habitat, but they tend to avoid extensive farmland and high grass," Gibbs said.

Alan Woolf, director of the Cooperative Wildlife Research Laboratory, said the research is designed to identify critical areas of habitat for bobcats — areas that can hold a healthy population of bobcats.

"If we identify these sites, we can protect and manage them," Woolf said. "We are concerned with the well-being of a group of bobcats, not just one."

Woolf said researchers are using the bobcat as an indicator of the ecological health of larger areas.

"If a bobcat population can thrive in a particular habitat, that means a lot of other species can survive in that area," he said.

In the future, Woolf said, researchers plan to trap some bobcats and put radar collars on them to find out what type of environment is needed to fulfill their needs.

"We are trying to establish some benchmark so we can judge how well the bobcat is doing in these environments," Woolf said. "The radar will allow us to get a better insight into how the bobcat uses its habitat."

The research project is funded by SIUC's Cooperative Wildlife Research Laboratory and the Illinois Department of Natural Resources Federal Aid Project.

Jerry Rice's world, where one play is like any other—whether it's the Super Bowl or the second day of his 11th NFL training camp. On this particular California morning, with the temperature expected to soar into the 90s, the stakes are not nearly as high as they were six months earlier, when Rice sliced through a humid south Florida evening with 10 catches and three touchdowns in the San Francisco 49ers' 49-26 rout of the San Diego Chargers in Super Bowl XXIX.

But to Rice, the venue is unimportant. The execution of his assignments is all that concerns him.

"There might be a lot of guys out there who feel that once they get on top, they can relax," Rice says outside the 49ers' training camp locker room, a few minutes removed from his dazzling work on the practice field. "But to me, that's the worst possible mistake you can make. When you go onto a football field, it's no time to take in the scenery. Any time I'm out there, whether it's practice or an exhibition game or the Super Bowl, I'm looking to make plays."

Most of Rice's plays, of course, are well-chronicled—from his Super Bowl XXIV most-valuable-player performance after the 1989 season, to his NFL-record 139 career touchdowns, to his Super Bowl extravaganza last January.

But to those who know Rice best, it is what happens when the camera lights are off that best illustrates his singular brilliance.

It is what happens under a searing sun in late July during seven-on-seven drills, or in a punishing series of offseason workouts, or when almost no one else is watching that makes him the most dominant receiver the game has ever seen. Arguably the most dominant player at any position.

Even at age 32.

"I have been around great players at their particular positions, guys like Joe Montana and Ronnie Lott," 49ers coach George Seifert said. "But Jerry probably exploits all of his abilities more than any player I've ever seen."

Festival

Rellinger said she plans to compete in a racewalking event in Michigan before the year is out. She hopes to better her time there as the courses are usually in good condition and the weather is also good.

While Rellinger said she would love to compete in the Olympics, she is not very optimistic about her chances.

"I think it is unrealistic because I would have to better my time four minutes," she said. "It will be dependent on conditions too."

"I had a very smart race, a lot of the people that I beat are faster than me."

Rellinger said she had never had a personal coach before, but once she decided she needed a coach, it wasn't hard for her to ask DeNoon to fill that role.

"I saw Don at some of the races that I was competing in," she said. "I was told that he was voted coach of the year by his peers."

"If his peers voted him that then that means a lot about him as a coach."

DeNoon who is recovering from an injury but also racewalks competitively, said once he begins training everyday again they will be able to push each other.

"Once it gets to the point that I can train consistently we will definitely enhance each other," he said.

SIUC athlete Brian Miller also competed at the Olympic Festival in the shot put, but his results were unavailable.

12,000 miles.

"If I'd have known about it (world tour) I would have been in to do the whole thing," Klucter said.

The two begin their journey on Oct 31 in St. Louis and will complete the 968 mile trip on Nov 18 at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C.

circumstances, he can succeed as a head coach. Unfortunately for Fisher, the circumstances are all wrong in Houston.

Rich Kotite, New York Jets; Even before his first game, Kotite has scored a major victory—ridding last year's 6-10 team of several players who didn't belong. Does that mean the team is ready to go to the playoffs this year? Not by a longshot. Still, the future looks bright on a team ravaged by one disappointment after another.

Ray Rhodes, Philadelphia Eagles: Rhodes did a masterful job last year of molding the 49ers' defense, which had six different starters from the end of 1993. Now don't go looking for similar results in Philadelphia this year, not with a team that doesn't have enough talent to compete for the NFC East title. Give Rhodes a few years, though, and Philly is back in the playoffs.

Mike Shanahan, Denver Broncos; Shanahan immediately gutted last year's team, getting rid of nearly half the roster. Maybe Shanahan wants to do what he can before it's all over for John Elway. Regardless, it's an uphill climb for the Broncos, who are now comprised largely of over-the-hill free agents.

Mike White, Oakland Raiders: Of all the new coaches this year, White inherits the most ideal situation: a veteran team with a legitimate shot at going to the Super Bowl. Playing in Oakland could help, considering the fan support. Then again, practicing in Los Angeles and playing the equivalent of 16 road games could take something out of the team by the end.

Green Bay Packers defensive end Reggie White concedes he had problems getting motivated during the offseason because of the team's lack of participation in the free-agent market. Green Bay didn't sign any free agents of note, and is having trouble getting Keith Jackson and Mark Ingram, both acquired in trades from the Miami Dolphins, to report to camp.

"I will admit it," White said. "Because we hadn't signed any guys, I was kind of discouraged."

White said a pep talk from his wife, Sara, convinced him the Packers will be OK. Sorry, Sara. But considering the Packers' salary-cap problems, that sounds more like wishful thinking.

The Eagles haven't had much luck with first-round draft picks in the '90s.

Cyclist Millette to cross country

By Jason E. Coyne
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Chris Millette will be cycling close to 1,000 miles across the land of the free this fall in the final stage of the AXA World Ride '95. Although bicycling for the 23 year-old physically disabled man is a new experience he said he will begin training for the October 31 departure within the next week.

"Getting in shape is up to me," Millette said. "The first day of the trip we'll be going about 90 miles and I don't want to be dogging behind everyone the first few days."

Millette said he will be training and riding in the tour on a special hand-pedaled bicycle.

The senior in therapeutic recreation from Grant's Pass, Ore. said before he was paralyzed from the waist down in a 1986 car accident he aspired to ride across the states on a bicycle.

"I've got the opportunity to ride nearly 1,000 miles across the country," he said. "So it'll be a great experience for me."

Before he took up cycling Millette finished third in a "Wheels of Fire" race in Seattle, Wash. when he primarily competed in wheelchair races. Millette was named the 1994-'95 MVP for the Rolling Saluki basketball team and also was one of 12 chosen to represent the USA Junior National Basketball Team in 1994.

After graduation in December 1995 Millette said he hopes to head back West to be closer to his family.

"I want to have an internship at a disabled ski program somewhere in the West," he said. "After that I would like to go back to Oregon and work in recreation."

tour is Carbondale resident, Karla Kluter.

The ride may be one of toughest challenges Kluter has had to face, she said.

"Personally it's probably the biggest challenge I've taken on," she said. "It'll be one of the neatest things in my life."

"It's real cool—I can't wait."

The 41 year-old productive activity coordinator at the Center for Comprehensive Services in Carbondale has been cycling nearly her whole life. She said she has been trying to rack up mileage in recent weeks to prepare for the long riding days that lie ahead.

"I've been riding about 200 miles a week to get in shape for this," she said. "We will be riding about 500 miles per week during that final stage."

The riders will be on the final stage of the 14 stage world tour that has taken participants from Moscow through the heart of Siberia to the Ural mountains and into China and Japan.

Kluter is concerned that the November weather could make the ride more difficult.

"It could be snowing in some of the places in November," she said.

Carbondale athlete walks to Festival medal

By Eric Helbig

Carbondale resident Cheryl Rellinger, coached by SIUC women's track and cross-country coach Don DeNoon, finished second in the women's 10,000-meter racewalk at the U.S. Olympic Festival in Colorado Springs, placing the highest she ever has in the Olympic Festival.

Rellinger, a native of Buffalo, N.Y. said this was her fourth Olympic Festival and her previous best finish was fifth at last year's event.

Rellinger said the Olympic Festival is probably the second most competitive racewalking competition that she has ever been in. She ranks the Pan Am Cup, from which she was disqualified for a technique violation in 1994, as being the most competitive that she has competed in.

Rellinger said it was a thrill for her to compete in front of the large crowds at the Olympic Festival.

"It was really fun competing in front a large crowd," she said. "The largest crowd I had ever competed in front of before was in Edwardsville at the Olympic Festival last year."

Rellinger said her next step is to try to earn a time that is fast enough to qualify for the Olympic Trials. She said her year's best time is not quite as fast as the Olympic Trials' standard of 49 minutes and 45 seconds, but she thinks she has a good chance.

"I'll need to get a time sometime this year," she said. "The times were very slow in Colorado, as I expected them to be because of the altitude."

New coaches face tough campaign

Newsday

The three-letter mandate is simple: W-I-N.

Unfortunately for the Coaching Class of '95, it's a lot more complicated than that. So complicated, in fact, that only one member of the nine-man group figures to follow through on that edict this year. And what about the other eight? Well, at least there's some solace in long-term contracts.

Here's a look at how things shape up for the new coaches:

Rich Brooks, St. Louis Rams; The Rams' savior? Hardly. After taking over at Oregon in 1977, Brooks' teams were a combined 91-109-4. But thanks to his Rose Bowl run last year, Brooks has been entrusted with helping the Rams emerge from three straight years of double-digit losses. Lots of luck, Rich.

Dom Capers, Carolina Panthers; Carolina General Manager Bill Polian went on an offseason shopping spree to give his new coach plenty to work with. Only one problem. With San Francisco in the division, it's going to take years to win the National Football Conference West. A playoff spot in three or four years? Now, you're talking.

Tom Coughlin, Jacksonville Jaguars; Don't expect miracles from the former New York Giants' receivers coach, who gets his first shot as an NFL head coach with expansion Jacksonville. But through free agency, the expansion draft and the regular draft, Coughlin has quickly assembled a respectable roster that's capable of winning six games right out of the blocks.

Dennis Erickson, Seattle

Seahawks; On the field, Erickson is a brilliant offensive coach; off the field, things couldn't be much worse. Not only did the Seahawks fail to re-sign a number of key free agents, but Erickson was arrested in mid-April for drunk driving. Only a few days later, one of his former star players at Miami, Warren Sapp, was reported to have failed seven drug tests while at the school. And his top veteran receiver, Brian Blades, was charged last week with manslaughter in the shooting death of Blades' cousin.

Jeff Fisher, Houston Oilers; Fisher is a terrific young defensive coach who could be in over his head, considering he doesn't have much to work with on a roster gutted by free agency and trades in 1994. Given the right

Rice dominates position, looks to improve his play

Newsday

ROCKLIN, Calif.—Jerry Rice strides purposefully to the line of scrimmage, his fingers wiggling almost imperceptibly as he peers to his right toward quarterback Steve Young.

Rice then takes a quick survey of the defense, and the sense of urgency stems palpable as he prepares for the snap. A hushed crowd looks on. It is time for another big play from the greatest wide receiver of all time.

Young completes his snap count, and Rice instantly begins his upfield journey. His pattern is simple—a fly down the left side—yet as any defensive back who ever has looked into Rice's eyes from across the line can tell you, it is almost impossible to defend. This play would be no exception.

After 15 years, Rice is past his opposing cornerback, his arms churning and his legs hovering close to the ground as he reaches top speed. Young steps back, waits patiently, and makes his throw. Rice, now a good five yards behind his man, looks over his right shoulder, makes the catch and sprints toward the end zone. Touchdown.

The fans jump to their feet and start screaming in appreciation. All 350 of them. Welcome to
