Under-21 crowd still heading to Strip

City says downtown business could improve if bars begin to cater to underage students

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC freshman Tim Magill and his friends, all under 21, roamed the Strip Friday watching returning students enter bars. Unlike previous weekends, they were able to enter the Hangar 9, 511 S. Illinois Ave., for its under-21 night.

Magill, a freshman in graphic design from Springfield, said he and his friends explored other downtown businesses before heading to the Hangar.

"We've been walking around the Strip," he said. "We went into a lot of shops. People waiting to get into the Hangar were eating at the restaurants."

City and business leaders say Magill and the thousands of underage SIUC students like him have the potential to help Carbondale's downtown businesses if under-21 nights at bars lure students and their pocketbooks back to the Strip.

The under-21 nights ordinance allows bars to lower their entry age to 18 if they do not serve liquor to anyone, including those over 21, during hours when 18 to 20-year-olds are present.

Sally Carter, Hangar 9 co-owner and Liquor Advisory Board member, proposed the under-21 nights in July, the same month the city raised the bar entry age to 21. She said she realized younger college students lacked a place to see live music.

Carter said if underage shows succeed at the Hangar and elsewhere on the Strip, it could help revive a downtown scene which has faltered since the bar entry age rose to 21.

"I think more people getting downtown is always good for business," Carter said. "We'll have

SIUC freshmen squeeze into dorms with others, wait for breathing space

By Sheila Stowers and Signe K. Skinion
Daily Egyptian Reporters

In a darkened basement in Baldwin Hall, a dorm building in Thompson Point, eight bunks are lined up military style with suitcases piled high next to them.

Amelia Gordon, one of six girls in the room, calls this space home — at least for now.

This year, about 122 students are living in makeshift rooms, waiting to move into SIUC residence halls. There are more students wanting to live in residence halls than there is room for, University Housing officials said.

"It feels like we're in camp, and when this weekend's over, we're going home," Gordon, a freshman in computer science from Chicago Heights, said.

Beth Scally, University Housing coordinator of marketing and public information, said this is the first time in five years University Housing has had so many students living in over-assigned spaces at the beginning of the semester.

Paulette Curkin, University Housing program coordinator, said Housing does not expect the over-assignment problem to last very long.

"Every year, we allocate rooms for over-assignment, but we usually don't need to use them," she said. "When we do, it only lasts a few weeks because some students get homesick and leave, and others decide that starting college right now isn't right for them, so they go home and attend a junior college instead."

Scally said the students were told of the situation in advance.

"We sent out letters before they arrived letting them know about being on over-assigned status," Scally said. "We can accommodate up to 130 students in over-assigned housing."

Scally said the over-assigned rooms in Brush Towers, located in University Park, can accommodate three people. The basement rooms of Baldwin, Warren and Abbot Halls, located in Thompson Point, and Mae Smith, located in Brush Towers, each can accommodate eight students.

Gordon said she received a letter notifying her that she would have to live, at least temporarily, in one of the basement rooms. But she said she did not realize the extent of the overcrowding.

"I knew I was going to be over-assigned, but I thought it was going to be like three people, not five," she said.

Waiver recipients may have to release names, addresses

By Shawna Donovan
DE Government/Politics Editor

SIUC students receiving tuition waivers from state legislators would have to agree to release their names before receiving their awards if a bill in the Illinois Legislature is signed into law.

The bill, which Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar sent back to the legislature with an amendatory veto, would require more disclosure of state legislative tuition waivers at state universities. Six legislators sponsored the bill.

The Illinois tuition waiver policy allows each of the 177 Illinois legislators to waive two four-year public university tuitions each year. Requirements of the policy are that the recipients of the awards must be from the legislators' districts, and one recipient must attend the University of Illinois. The other recipient must attend any other state university.

Edgar sent the bill back to the Legislature, recommending that it include disclosure of the amount of the waiver, the recipient's university and degrees and the resident's home address (to make sure the recipient lives in the awarding legislator's district).

The legislation also would make the information public record.

The bill is in response to an incident last spring when The Associated Press and the Peoria Journal Star printed the names of students who received such waivers.

The records showed tuition waivers were given to some legislators' families and political friends, with some of the recipients living outside of the sponsoring legislators' home districts.

The two media agencies requested the information from state universities under the Freedom of Information Act. Of the 320 names who received tuition waivers in the past two years, 223 were readable.

Following the requests, the University legal counsel attempted to blacken out the information that identified seven SIUC students who had received the waivers.

However, the information was not covered completely when the Schools nix affirmative action quota system

SAN FRANCISCO — Affirmative action is no longer a factor in admission at University of California schools.

The University of California system released new guidelines for admissions, replacing what its regents deemed "a system of artificial preferences." They come in response to a regents' vote last year to ban policies that "use race, religion, sex, color, ethnicity, or national origin as criteria for admission to the university or to any program of study."

Search for murder suspect continues

200 mourn loss of a neighbor

By Brett Wilcoxson
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Police are still searching for a suspect charged with the Aug. 11 murders of two local teenagers that occurred at a party at Carbondale Mobile Home Park, on Rt. 51.

At a press conference Wednesday, Jackson County Sheriff Bill Kilquist announced that a warrant has been issued for Labron C. Neal, 17, of Carbondale charging him with six counts of first degree murder in the slayings of Terrance Durran Mitchell, 16, of Carbondale, and James Austin Campbell, 15, of Murphysboro, both students at Carbondale Community High School.

Kilquist said nearly 100 people have been interviewed in an attempt to identify and locate the person or persons responsible. He declined to say if there are any other suspects. He also declined comment on whether or not a motive for the killings has yet been determined.

One resident of the mobile home park, D. Johnson, said this incident was surprising because the trailer was a common meeting place for teenagers, but she said it was not a dangerous party environment.

"It's a place for young people to get together and be with each other," Johnson said.

A call was received by the Jackson County Sheriff's Department at approximately 2:20 a.m. Aug. 11 from the mobile home park stating that there was a person down. Sheriff's deputies arrived to find Mitchell lying near trailer 138. Mitchell was transported to Memorial Hospital of Carbondale where he was pronounced dead.

Campbell's body was found approximately four hours later in the trailer park near the location where Mitchell's body was found. Campbell also was taken to Memorial Hospital of Carbondale, where he was pronounced dead.

An autopsy revealed that both victims had been killed by handgun shots to their heads, which the

SIUC student charged with cocaine distribution

An SIUC student was indicted Aug. 7 by a federal grand jury in Benton on two counts charging him with unlawful distribution of cocaine and unlawful distribution of crack cocaine.

Chris A. Burns, 23, of Carbondale, a senior in mechanical engineering, faces a minimum sentence of 10 years imprisonment, a maximum penalty of life imprisonment, a $4 million fine and five years of supervised release if convicted on both counts.

The counts stem from violations that allegedly occurred in Carbondale on March 29 and June 7.

Burns was released from custody on his own recognizance and will have a pre-trial Sept. 18 and a trial Sept. 30. Assistant United States Attorney Joel V. Merkel said.

Teen murders can increase awareness

IT WOULD BE WRONG TO FIND ANYTHING encouraging about the recent murders of two area teenagers. It is appropriate, however, to praise the reaction of the Carbondale community to the subsequent investigation of the incident.

Law enforcement officials said the cooperation offered by Carbondale residents during this investigation was unprecedented. Jackson County Sheriff Bill Kilquist said residents opened up their homes to searches so investigators could be sure that Labron Neal, an at-large suspect in the case, was not hiding out.

Jackson County State's Attorney Mike Wepsiec explained that the nature of the crime may be the reason that residents have been so helpful to police searching for Neal. "People are just incensed that two young kids have been snuffed out — taken away from them," he said.

Even so, the cooperation illustrates what can be accomplished when law enforcement agencies and residents are working toward a common goal. Cooperation can streamline an investigation, and when there's a murder suspect not yet in custody, time can be crucial.

The murders also should serve as another wake-up call to teen-violence. It would take a great deal of naivete to believe Carbondale is not part of a national trend of growing youth violence.

Instead of only mourning the senseless deaths of two teenagers, residents should become involved in trying to attack the problem of youth violence.

The untimely departure of these two boys should serve as a rallying point to address this issue. Failing to do this would be missing an opportunity to extract something beneficial from this tragedy.

Students: Make the most of a fresh start

A NEW YEAR HAS BEGUN, AND WITH IT comes a fresh start for some and a second chance for others.

This may be the first time many students are away from home for an extended period of time. As a result, some may find it difficult to manage their time effectively.

Students might find it difficult setting down certain study times because of so many different things going on at one time. A student away from home for the first time becomes aware of all the choices they are now faced with, and making time for a person's schoolwork is one of the most important decisions.

For some returning students this may also represent a time to make a fresh start. Some students return to campus after being placed on academic probation because their grades may have suffered in the past.

By using past experiences, these students will be more aware of how much time is needed in order to study effectively for classes.

Students should use the time they have while it is still available to them. As the semester begins, students should have some fun while they are at school, but they should not let that interfere with why they are really here.

Getting into a routine early will help when exams and papers begin to pile up later. Don't wait until it is too late in the semester before beginning effective study habits. If a student gets into a routine early enough, it will be much easier to cope with time management later in the semester when it really matters.

DE is wrong about herbicide

First, imagine my surprise upon reading your editorial (Daily Egyptian, July 24) that contends spraying Thompson Woods in an environmentally sound manner by trained, licensed, conscientious people posed a serious health risk to the University community.

After working closely with the Thompson Woods Committee, I can say that if there were the slightest realistic potential of danger to anyone, the forest would not be sprayed. Safety was not merely a concern, it was the primary concern and overrode all other factors involving this project. Second, as an environmentalist I was dismayed by your one-sided editorial bias. Oddly, no one at your paper made any effort to contact us regarding the spraying. Perhaps journalistic ethics have changed since I engaged in the trade, but I always thought that all sides of an issue should at least be explored before an opinion was voiced. I also found it odd that the "controversy" concerning the spraying seemingly had to be solicited by your reporters, rather than appearing spontaneously. It almost seems as if the reporters and editorial staff as the DE are trying to create news rather than merely report it.

And third, since no one at the DE has seen fit to follow up on the story, the person who applied the Roundup that you identified as "Joe" did experience an itching, burning skin irritation the day after the spraying was finished. This malady was a direct result of spraying Roundup and clearly shows the true danger of the use of this herbicide in Thompson Woods. "Joe" got a mild case of poison ivy.

A call for our readers' opinions

Do you have an opinion on a topic relevant to the SIUC population? Do you long to share this opinion with a larger audience than your non-caring roommates? Do you have time to put this opinion down on paper? If you answered "yes" to all these questions, we may have a space in the Daily Egyptian for you.

As many of you who are familiar with this newspaper may already know, we occasionally provide another issues-based forum called "Perspectives" for our readers in addition to Letters to the Editor section. "Perspectives" give a reader more space to express their opinion on an issue than a Letter to the Editor. This semester we hope to run "Perspectives" written by our general audience every Tuesday and Thursday. Here's a few guidelines:

■ "Perspectives" should be no longer than 750 words.

■ "Perspectives" should not be a rebuttal to an opinion expressed in a Letter to the Editor. It should be an original idea that has not been explored in the Op/Ed section of the DE.

■ Personal attacks will not be published. We try to avoid being sued.

■ "Perspectives" must be typed, double-spaced. We don't have enough time to decipher poor handwriting.

The DE reserves the right to not print or edit any submission. If we're altering your piece for anything besides grammar, we'll get in touch with you first.

There you have it. Bring your "Perspectives" to the DE offices in the north end of the Communications Building or mail it to us at:

Building
Carbondale, IL 62901

Please include your name, major, job (if applicable) and a daytime phone number. If your "Perspective" is selected to be published, we will contact you to take a photo that will run with the piece.

Here's your chance to enlighten our readership with your superb logic and wit. Through the DE, your message can reach 24,000 readers instead of a couple of nonattentive roommates. Write now or forever hold your peace.

Taking risks a part of school

Taking risks. This is something most of us must do in life in order to achieve our goals. Whether you are a returning SIUC student this semester, or whether you are just beginning your college career, you have just taken a risk.

Returning students have accepted that completing college may not be the easiest task. But many may have come to the realization that if they do not accept the challenge, they are limiting their future.

Students just arriving at SIUC may be taking entirely different risks. For many of the freshman who are now part of the class of 2000, this may be the first time they have ever been away from the comfort of home. Many are risking being away from their parents for the first time in order to seek out a successful future. The risk can seem great when all of the friends, family and other loved ones who had to be left behind are considered.

I took my own sort of risk this summer. My parents' were divorced when I was an infant, and the last time I had seen my natural father, I was 3 years old. The curiosity that makes me a journalist finally led me to seek my father out after 18 years of not knowing who he was or what my heritage on that side of the family was.

It was a frightening leap, but I took it. And I have now learned something about where I came from and about the history of a side of my family whose name I bear. I also have opened a door to learn more about and possibly form a relationship with the man who gave me life. In taking this risk, I chanced disrupting the strong relationship I have with my mother, who for many years was solely responsible for raising my older brother and I. But the bet paid off; she has been very understanding.

PERSPECTIVES BY MARC CHASE

and our relationship has become stronger. Sometimes the risks that are the most worth taking are also the ones that produce the most amount of tears and other emotions.

Those who become involved in the University community will have the opportunity to take many other risks that carry just as much weight as my example. Students may contemplate running for a student government office, finding a job in addition to their busy class schedules, getting married or they may consider leaving college to pursue tempting employment offers. These are all risks that can change the way students live and view life.

Students will each have their own unique opportunities to take risks, and we all should remember that college is one of the best times in life to step into uncharted territory. The semester marks a new chapter in the lives of everyone at SIUC, and it is up to each individual to write their own legacies by taking their own risks.

Let us all place the ridiculous and overblown notion that SIUC is a party school aside. Each of us is responsible for creating our own reputations, and the only actions that we can accept responsibility for are our own actions.

If the most important risk a student takes is attempting to get into the bars though they are not yet 21, that is the legacy he or she must accept. But the only things the student would learn from such a risk is either 1.) that the student is good at deceiving bar proprietors or 2.) that the student is not a master of deception and now has his or her butt parked before the Jackson County state's attorney.

Some other risks seem to make more sense. Taking a stand and making your views known on campus issues or working alone or with a group to tackle what you consider to be problems or injustices within the SIUC community are such risks. The worst that could happen is that you could fail in your task or be criticized for your views. But at least you would go down swinging for what you believe in, and perhaps you would even learn something about yourself and others. Take advantage of the forum that your student newspaper offers by suggesting story ideas or by writing letters to the editor. Speak your mind, and don't be afraid.

SIUC is one big casino of life. Place your bets on those things that you believe in, expect to lose some of the hands, but always learn from each venture.

Remember the lyrics from a song that was popular when many of us were growing up: "You've got to know when to hold 'em, know when to fold 'em, know when to walk away, and know when to run."

But before you run too far, take time to count the things you have learned from the gamble, and get back into the game.

PERSPECTIVES ARE PUBLISHED TWICE A WEEK, AND ARE THE SOLE OPINION OF THE AUTHOR. THE PERSPECTIVES COLUMN IS OPEN TO THE PUBLIC. TO SUBMIT PERSPECTIVES, DELIVER IT TO THE DAILY EGYPTIAN EDITORIAL OFFICE WITH A PICTURE ID.

Entertainment on the campaign trail

CENTS WORTH - by James Lyon

Exactly when did politicians in this country become entertainers?

For example, Bob Dole spent four of his not-too-many-left-on-this-planet nights plastered across major television networks last week during prime time. The goal here was to show millions of Americans just how happy he was to accept the Republican nomination by throwing a week-long party. The problem, according to the record low television ratings, was that people just didn't seem to care.

Bob Dole was acting. He was trying to be entertaining so people would like him. If you cut through all the hype and hysteria you will realize that Bob Dole was putting on a show for all of us in order to get votes.

If you think about it, that is all that presidential campaigning ever is. Every four years, presidential candidates come into the public eye, and whoever puts on the best show wins. Just think back to how Clinton gained support from younger voters when he played his saxophone on the Arsenio Hall Show. He was giving people a really good show, and they voted for him.

So my theory is to take it to the next level. If politicians want our vote, then I say make them work for it by really entertaining us. I would have loved to see Bob Dole walk up to accept his nomination in a big elephant suit and then hold up the carcass of Socks the cat. Now that would be entertaining, and I would be the first one to cast my vote for him on election day.

Or perhaps, instead of digging into Clinton's past about how he smoked pot in college, he should have lit a joint right there in front of the reporter. Then he could have grabbed the little journalist by the neck and yelled, "Is this what you want to see Bernstein?"

That would be the perfect politician. A person who cuts through all the mudslinging and just embraces the office with a good sense of humor in one hand, and a warrior-like mentality in the other.

Then, instead of the idea of playing up to people in order to gain their votes, this person would win elections by gaining their respect. Imagine that, a president some of us could actually respect and look up to?

But then again, who is to say it wouldn't have been different in the past. I'm sure if Lincoln were alive today he would be on the evening news dressed up like Elvis, turkey leg in hand, asking people to vote for him.

Jake's Leg playing Saturday.

Janet Vaught, Carbondale city clerk, said other bars can apply to the city for the special permit needed to hold an under-21 night, but she said the Hangar is the only bar with plans for such events.

Vaught said live music on the Strip for those under 21 will help the downtown.

Mark Robinson, Liquor Advisory Board vice chairman, said the under-21 nights, because they limit alcohol sales, could make the Strip more attractive.

"I've always maintained that people don't make the Strip bad," he said.

"To make it a place where any people don't want to go doesn't make sense, whether you're talking about students or executives from Mercedes-Benz."

Jeff Doherty, Carbondale city manager, said he supported under-21 nights at bars because students need entertainment options and because it was a good economic decision for the city.

"If the demand is there, there's a business opportunity for someone to step in and address it," he said.

more foot traffic here, so Paglia's (Pizza & Pasta) will do better. Old Town (Liquors) will do better. We've seen a decline in foot traffic since the bar entry age went up."

On Friday, the nonalcoholic hours at the Hangar ran from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Carter said the bar covered its liquor bottles and cut off its beer taps to comply with the city's ordinance for putting on Friday's St. Stephen's Blues show.

She said under the new law, the bar closed briefly when the nonalcoholic hours ended at 10 p.m. Friday. The Hangar reopened at 10:30 p.m. with an entry age of 21, and liquor was sold the rest of the night. Those over 21 who attended the earlier, nonalcoholic show were readmitted at 10:30 p.m. with no additional cover charge.

Carter said two additional underage shows have been scheduled at the Hangar with local bands The Jungle Dogs playing Friday and in pre-law from Chicago, said she does not enjoy living in Baldwin Hall's basement.

"We're underground, and it feels like we're living in a dungeon," she said.

Robinson, Gordon and four other females share one bathroom, one telephone, one desk and five closets.

Scally said the students in over-assigned housing will receive top priority when rooms open up. She said after one month, the students who have not been reassigned to a regular room will receive a credit on their bursar bill. The amount of credit will depend on the length of time students wait to be reassigned.

Gordon said she is looking forward to moving out of the basement rooms. "We're in a concentration camp," she said. "That's what it feels like."

were released to the media.

Jack Dyer, University Relations executive director, said although SIUC is a state university, it is protected under the Buckley Amendment (to the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act), a federal act making student information private, and would not be directly affected by the state bill if passed.

Information on scholarship documents is public information, such as names of the legislators who granted the waivers.

But information about the students who received the awards is protected by the federal act.

Dyer said the bill would make students agree to disclose information (their names) before receiving the waiver.

He also said that student athletes who receive scholarships already sign a waiver agreeing to disclose such information.

Since the names of tuition waiver recipients were printed by various media groups, the University has been training employees for better handling of confidential information and FOIA requests, Dyer said.

The training is part of several recommendations made by former federal prosecutor Frederick Hess, who was hired by the University to investigate the incident at SIUC.

Hess recommended new FOIA policies that include employee training on preparing, sending and disposing of information, reviewing documents before release and consistent policy at both SIUC and the University's Edwardsville campus.

"I will be glad when this thing is put to bed," Dyer said.

The Illinois Board of Higher Education and the University of Illinois are appealing a decision by a Chicago circuit judge in June that called for the release of names of Illinois legislative tuition-waiver recipients to the Chicago Tribune.

Farmers dump bootleg milk

The Washington Post

LANGLEY, B.C. — The telephones started ringing near Grant Tocher's place, warning bootleggers to dump their stocks because government officials were raiding the Fraser Valley. The quick response saved most of them that day, although the G-men did haul away more than 1,000 gallons.

Of milk. As much again was dumped down drains and otherwise gotten rid of in an incident that caricatured

Canadian agriculture policy at its bureaucratic extreme.

The seized and wasted milk was produced illicitly, outside the centralized "supply-management" structure under which the government assigns production quotas for dairy, poultry and some other farms to keep prices up.

When Tocher and his neighbors insisted on milking their cows and selling the product to a local cheese company without the government's permission, it triggered fines, lawsuits and, ultimately, last month's raid.

report states probably killed them instantly.

Police determined from the interviews that a party held at trailer 138 saw many party goers come and go, and that both marijuana and alcohol had been present. Witnesses said that there were no disputes at the party that could have led to the killings, and that the party had a relaxed, enjoyable setting.

The funeral services for the victims were last week. Campbell's funeral was Thursday at the First United Methodist Church of Carbondale. There were approximately 200 mourners present.

Joe Russell, a classmate of Campbell's who attended the funeral, said Campbell was a good friend.

"He would help out anybody that needed help," he said. "They wouldn't have to ask twice."

Mitchell's funeral was at Olivet Freewill Baptist Church in Carbondale Friday. Approximately 200 people, including numerous young people — some crying, some showing forced, supportive smiles — embraced one another in a somber scene after services.

A cross with a lone ribbon now stands where Mitchell's body once lay next to trailer 138. A message from an anonymous person is written on the middle of the memorial. It reads, "To the only nigga I could trust in the world, we'll all miss you folks."

Kilquist said that the community has been extremely helpful in the investigation, and he said he also had a theory as to why. Kilquist said many community members have allowed investigators to search their homes in the middle of the night.

"Some of these people are tired, fed up, and they're just not going to take it anymore," Kilquist said.

Since the time of the press conference, an additional warrant has been issued by federal authorities charging Neal with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution.

Neal was last seen at his home at 300 S. Dixon St. at approximately midnight Wednesday. Neal is a black male, is 5 feet 11 inches tall, weighs 140 pounds and has a medium complexion.

The Jackson County Sheriff's Department is actively seeking Neal, and anyone with any information is urged to report it to the Jackson County Courthouse.

Beggs tackles declining enrollment

By Dylan Fenley
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Student retention and recruitment are what Donald Beggs, who assumed the role as SIUC's interim chancellor Saturday, says are his top priorities.

Beggs, former dean of the College of Education, replaces former Chancellor John Guyon, who announced his resignation this summer. Beggs will serve two years as chancellor while a permanent replacement is sought.

Donald Beggs
"When you look at the loss of students between their freshman and

Beggs said he feels that SIUC is in a state of financial distress, and the key to resolving this is improving student retention and recruitment.

"When you look at the loss of students between their freshman and sophomore years, you get very concerned when almost a third of the students do not return for the sophomore year," Beggs said. "We need to assess why, and we need to interact with today's student as to what they think should be done in the departments and the colleges and the University to provide better support for students."

Since 1991, SIUC has experienced a steady decline in enrollment from 24,869 in fall 1991 to 21,247 in spring 1996. SIUC administrators have attributed declining University revenue to the drop in enrollment.

Beggs said he intends to work with the Undergraduate Student Government to receive input from a wide range of students on how to update student support services to improve retention. He said he also intends to work with deans of SIUC colleges to restructure course schedules to allow students who attend school in the summer to graduate in less than four years.

"You can talk about student enrollment, but the most direct way to immediately impact that is to work with the student: who have already made the decision to come here," Beggs said. "Let's try to provide an environment that is supportive for them for staying here."

Beggs said that he already has invited a group of representatives from throughout Southern Illinois to meet with him and provide input on

Paper evolves with new leadership

By Melissa Vaughn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Changes in news coverage and advertising sales at the Daily Egyptian, along with a new managing editor, will lay the groundwork for the future direction of the paper, editors say.

Leading the paper this semester is Lance Speere, interim faculty managing editor; Marc Chase, editor-in-chief and Jason Langs, advertising manager. Goals that the three have set beginning this fall include focusing more on student interests in stories, increasing advertising sales and expanding entertainment coverage.

Chase, 21, a senior in journalism from Wheaton, has worked seven semesters at the DE and is in his third semester serving as editor-in-chief.

"The goal for this semester will be a blueprint for taking the DE in a new direction," he said. Chase said the improvement will show a reflection of the student population by finding the student angle.

"We'll try to find the student element in every story," Chase said. "If our stories are focusing on politics, we also will illustrate how politics affects students. Students need to know not only what is happening but what it means to them. If we didn't make a greater effort to do this, we would not be a student newspaper."

Along with regular news stories and features, Chase said the DE has beefed up the government section because of local, state and national elections this November. Chase said he is excited by the changes being made within the news department and is pleased with the core of editors he will be working with. He said he is looking forward to working with the new reporters on staff as well.

"Something else we are really excited about at the paper is the beginning of a new entertainment

Class of 2000 plans for future

By Travis Akin
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Editor's Note:
This is the first story in a continuing series of DE articles focusing on four individuals from the class of 2,000 throughout their career at SIUC.

For Melaniee Bardley, the challenges of college have been something she has been waiting to experience since she was 9 years old, when she says she fell in love with the legal system by watching the "People's Court" everyday after school.

After arriving at SIUC last week, Bardley, a freshman majoring in pre-law from Gary, Ind., discovered an unexpected challenge — one of frustration — as she searched for her name on the room list for her dorm and found it missing.

Bardley wanted to get her belongings moved in and begin to get settled into her new life. She ended up waiting three hours before housing officials were able to straighten out the snafu and get her a room assignment.

In a new and strange place, this only added to Bardley's anxiety.

"It was really hot out, and I just traveled six-and-a-half hours," Bardley said. "I just thought I could pick up my things, carry them up and get into my room."

But Bardley said the delay in her room assignment has not quelled her excitement for being at college.

She, like many of the class of 2000, have come to SIUC with mixed feelings of fear and excitement.

Bardley said she has high expectations for herself. As a freshman on a basketball scholarship for the SIUC women's basketball team, she said she hopes to earn a place on the team and perform well. She said she will be able to keep up with her schedule as long as she stays focused and sets goals for herself.

"The main thing is to set small short term goals," she said. "I have a tendency to give up on things. As long as I stay focused on what I am doing, I won't have any problems." Another freshman, Justin Robey, a pre-med major from Carbondale, may not have the same hassles as someone moving in from out of town. But he said he has some of the same expectations for future success that Bardley has.

Robey said he looked forward to college life because he felt like he was moving on to bigger things. He is only a freshman and already is the secretary of Gays, Lesbians, Bisexuals and Friends, a campus organization.

He said high school gave him many opportunities, but he looks forward to the diversity and freedom that college has to offer.

Freshman would like to be role model

By Christopher Miller
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Delano Scott

Delano Scott began reading at the age of two, was named an honorary city official when he was just a teenager and now has high hopes of becoming Carbondale's first black pediatrician.

Scott, 18, a freshman in chemistry from Carbondale, is attending his first semester at SIUC with the help of a scholarship fund created by an outgoing chancellor.

Scott is the first recipient of the John C. Guyon Scholarship. Guyon came to SIUC as the dean of the College of Science in 1974. Prior to that, he was a chemistry professor at the University of Missouri and Memphis State University.

Guyon recently resigned his post as SIUC chancellor, the highest campus administrative position. The amount of the award is $1,000 per year for the next four years. It is awarded to a student planning to major in science.

Scott said he plans to major in chemistry, attend medical school and eventually practice medicine as Carbondale's first black pediatrician. As a doctor, he hopes to become a role model for minority children.

Scott spent high school playing football, singing in the choir at church and school, as well as volunteering.

With all that, he still was dedicated to his studies and graduated in the top 7 percent of his class.

His volunteer work earned him an honor from Carbondale city officials. He was one of 66 students

"They told me there's nothing I couldn't do if I put my mind to it."

Delano Scott, Scholarship recipient honored by the city for community service.

Out of the students honored, 10 were chosen as honorary Carbondale city officials.

Scott was appointed city clerk for the day and dedicated the honor to his late mother, Willie Scott.

Scott said important influences in his own life include his father, Benjie Scott, and his late mother, who had their son reading by the age of two.

"They told me there's nothing I couldn't do if I put my mind to it," he said.

This semester, Scott said he plans to serve the campus as a Saluki Patrol officer.

Between classes and chamber choir rehearsal, he might be found walking his beat, enforcing University regulations.

Scott said he was surprised when he learned he had won the scholarship. He said he was not even aware he was nominated.

Scott said he has been counting the days until classes begin.

He said he plans to continue his dedication to school and extracurricular activities.

Scott said he is looking forward to the open class schedule and the number of extracurricular activities available to college students.

He hopes fewer students will leave Carbondale for college after graduating high school.

"A lot of kids want to get away from Carbondale to get an education," he said. "I'd like to see more of them stay here."

He said some area high school students need to realize that they do not have to look far when choosing where to attend college.

"SIU is a great university," said Scott. "With all those resources in your backyard, you ought to take advantage of them."

27-ton monument languishes unwanted in police warehouse

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—About the only way you are going to catch a glimpse of the Presidency Bicentennial Monument, an imposing 27-ton granite and bronze statue honoring America's presidents, is if the D.C. cops bust you for drugs.

That is because the 17-foot-high monument is sitting in the warehouse of the police department's narcotics unit, lost in a bureaucratic tangle of federal regulations, White House correspondence and congressional hearings.

And it does not look as though the statue, which depicts a towering bald eagle taking wing over the American flag and the image of George Washington, will be busting out of police custody any time soon.

Sure, the bird's hosts have grown fond of it. D.C. police Sgt. Ralph Wax declares it "really beautiful." But confiscated drugs keep piling up, and the monument is in the way, said Wax, a narcotics officer.

"I just wish we could get it out of here. We could use the space," he said.

Howard Tullman, 50, of Chicago, one of a new breed of investors who put money into the creation of public monuments for the spinoff profits, expected it would be difficult to get the piece approved for display on federal property. "But this has been worse than we ever imagined," he said. "I would have thought the president would be proud to have this at the White House."

But Tullman has been informed that President Clinton has more pressing tasks right now — including keeping his job. And Washington has no shortage of monument requests and proposals, thank you very much.

It looks as though the big bird will stay cooped up — and Australian-born artist Brett-Livingstone Strong has had enough.

"It was very hard to complete," the Culver City, Calif., resident said.

"I want it unveiled but don't know what's going to happen to it. I'm pretty much tired of the whole thing. I'm eagled out," Strong said.

Still, Tullman is undaunted. Eventually, he is convinced, the shrine will grace the lawn of the White House.

Bill Nave saved these kids from drowning.

improving SIUC's image and recruitment.

Beggs said another priority he has as interim chancellor is completing an inventory of the University's programs and degrees. He said most of the programs offered at SIUC are quality programs, but he said some less popular programs may have to be eliminated. Beggs said he is not decided which programs will be eliminated.

"We have some programs that have very low enrollment and a very small graduation rate," Beggs said. "We've got to assess whether we could use those resources better to support programs that are able to attract students."

section," Chase said. "There will be a weekly entertainment section, packed with great coverage of Carbondale's weekend life. I think it's something the students of this University really want and need to have."

Along with the new reporters, the DE also will be working with a new interim faculty managing editor.

Speere, from Russell, Kan., took over the job after Lloyd Goodman, who served as the faculty managing editor for two years, accepted a position as director of Student Publications at the University of Texas at Arlington.

"I can't think of a better replacement for Lloyd Goodman than Lance Speere," Chase said. "Lance is very student-oriented and understands the student population. He will give us the latitude to keep the paper going."

Speere has worked for the paper as a graduate assistant and a writing coach since 1994. Speere also edited the on-line version of the DE during the summer semester.

Speere's term as interim faculty managing editor will end May 15, 1997, and the DE is searching nationwide for a permanent replacement, Speere said.

Donald Jugenheimer, director of the School of Journalism, said the potential replacement needs to be excited about working with college journalists.

"We're looking for someone with professional experience and who is willing to work with students," he said.

Speere considers the changes being made as improvements which will challenge everything the DE has done in the past.

With the new weekly entertainment section, Langs' advertising department will have an expanded section for ads.

Langs, 21, a senior advertising major from Manhattan, is starting his second semester as the student advertising manager.

"There is more freedom in college than there is in high school," he said. "It takes a lot more self discipline."

"You don't have someone telling you what to do anymore."

While Robey is excited by the opportunity to accomplish "bigger" things at a large school, some incoming freshmen are a little nervous about the size of SIUC.

Kristy Schmidt, a freshman in accounting from Lisle, said she came from a small high school and has to do some adjusting.

"I come from a school of 450 kids," she said. "I'm not used to a school this big."

"When I sat down to register, it was like playing Jeopardy with such a long list of classes. I just took whatever sounded interesting."

Schmidt said she is looking forward to meeting people and finding out what opportunities are available for her while she gets her degree.

"I am going to concentrate on getting a higher education, but I believe in enjoying yourself while you do it," she said.

Academics was an important concern for Jabari Sampson as well.

Sampson is a freshman with an undecided major from Chicago.

He said he believes a college degree is crucial to success.

"If you do not go to college you won't go anywhere," he said.

Sampson said he hopes to get his diploma in four years and to succeed in whatever career he chooses.

The class of 2000 has many things to think about as they go to classes on Monday.

Bardley already has overcome some obstacles to a childhood dream that has taken her many miles from home but has many more to face as the semester develops.

"I soon hope to be able to find my way around and not get lost too much," she said.

Hamas, Hezbollah linked to South African vigilante groups

Newsday

CAPE TOWN, South Africa—Security agencies say fundamentalist Hamas and Hezbollah are the main external supporters of a shadowy group of militants who have been instrumental in mobilizing South Africa's Muslims in an armed vigilante campaign against gangsters and drug dealers.

In briefings prepared for senior officials in the government of President Nelson Mandela, intelligence officials say the group's objective is to undermine the state. A copy of the report was made available to Newsday.

Israeli diplomats in South Africa and local Jewish groups have in the past year argued that Middle Eastern terrorists are operating in South Africa.

But the report is the first indication that the Mandela government is taking the threat seriously. Last Monday, officials quietly dispatched a top team of detectives from the National Intelligence Agency in Pretoria to Cape Town to coordinate an intensified investigation.

Leaders of the militant groups named in the report dismiss any suggestion of terrorist links as a smear.

Others caution that South African intelligence, a majority of whose operatives are holdovers from apartheid days:

They say that South African intelligence is notorious for dressing up propaganda as fact, and may have based its report on scant evidence.

"This thing about Hezbollah has been going around for a long time, and until I see the evidence, I don't believe it," said Ebrahim Moosa, director of the Center for Contemporary Islam at the University of Cape Town.

To the chagrin of Washington, South Africa maintains friendly relations with both Iran and Libya, which the United States considers to be supporters of terrorist groups.

But at mass rallies, and in interviews, leaders of local Islamic groups openly question the legitimacy of the current government, inaugurated two years ago after the first democratic elections that followed decades of white minority rule.

In addition to executing a gang leader two weeks ago in full view of police and media, to popular acclaim from a public frustrated with runaway crime, leaders of the movement also have called for a "jihad" against the government and have threatened the lives of senior officials.

In the intelligence report, updated daily from Cape Town, officials say that Islamic fundamentalists have established camps across the country for training in explosives, hand guns and rifles, and rocket-propelled grenade launchers.

Perot accepts Presidential nomination

Los Angeles Times

VALLEY FORGE, Pa. — Ross Perot Sunday accepted the nomination of the political party he founded, attacking the two major party nominees as captives of "special interests" who will not have the political fortitude to balance the budget and bring down the national debt.

"Can we count on the two political parties to solve these problems?" he asked about 2,000 Reform Party delegates meeting here where George Washington and his Revolutionary War troops spent the winter of 1777-78.

"They are the problem," the Texas billionaire exclaimed.

Perot's themes echoed those of his upstart independent campaign in 1992, when he received more than 19 percent of the popular vote.

Many observers believe that most of those votes probably would have otherwise gone to the Republican ticket headed by then-President Bush.

Perot's appeal seems to have waned this year. The party mailed ballots to the 1.1 million voters who signed petitions in the past year seeking a place for Perot on state ballots, but only about 50,000 returned their ballots by mail, computer or e-mail.

Perot won about 65 percent of the Reform Party vote, compared with 35 percent for Richard D. Lamm, a Democrat when he served three terms as Colorado's governor.

Lamm, speaking before Perot at the party's national convention, vowed to continue working on behalf of a third party in American politics but pointedly did not say he would work for Perot in his campaign against President Clinton and Republican nominee Bob Dole.

"The two major political parties are not going to reform our campaign and election system," Lamm said. "Our two major political parties are not going to be able to govern in the long-term interests of our children."

Lamm's running mate, California businessman and former Republican Rep. Ed Zschau, said he would not support Perot, whom he described as lacking the temperament and the experience needed of a president.

Perot has yet to name a vice presidential candidate to share the Reform Party's space on the ballot with him this year.

Appearing on CNN's "Larry King Live" immediately after addressing the party delegates, the candidate said he had decided to accept the $30 million in federal campaign funds that he qualified for on the strength of his showing in the 1992 election.

TWA crash commemorated; two more bodies recovered

Newsday

NEW YORK — The one-month anniversary of the downing of TWA Flight 800 was marked with prayers and tears this weekend.

At St. Patrick's Cathedral in Manhattan, N.Y., Cardinal John O'Connor celebrated a special mass Sunday offering words of comfort to more than 3,000 people, including 300 friends and relatives of the victims. On the beach at Smith Point County Park on Fire Island, near a shrine made from flowers thrown into the sea by mourners, friends and families had gathered at sunset Saturday for a mass with Bishop John R. McGann of the Diocese of Rockville Centre. A makeshift altar was adorned with candles and flower baskets.

In Catholic tradition, a requiem Mass is usually offered 30 days after a death or burial.

"This is where I find strength — with those who knew Jill and understand the pain," said Carol Ziemkiewicz of Rutherford, N.J., whose daughter Jill, a newly hired TWA flight attendant, was killed on Flight 800. At St. Patrick's, she wore a picture of her daughter pinned to her dress with the inscription: "My daughter Jill, TWA Flight Attendant, I Love You."

Off the coast of Long Island, recovery efforts continued Sunday. Two more bodies have been recovered since Friday, the Suffolk Medical Examiner's office reported, bringing the number of bodies recovered to 206 of the 230 who died July 17.

Argentine TV reflects freedom of democracy

Los Angeles Times

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — If one measure of democracy is the freedom to make fun of the government, a quick round of channel surfing suggests that democracy is thriving in Argentina.

On one channel, a popular program gleefully replays the (alleged) lies and verbal pitfalls of public figures such as the union boss who declared roguishly, "For the country to make progress, what we should do is stop stealing for a couple of years."

On another show, a satirical newscast dispatches brash "reporters" to ambush mayoral candidates, interrogate police chiefs and fluster the education minister by demanding that she name the capital of Sri Lanka.

And a popular TV character is Rivarola, the king of parasitic public servants, a sleazy bureaucrat who lives to make money without working. His motto: "This country

"The formality of politics has faded. The reaction of television has been, 'If the politicians don't take themselves seriously, why should we?'"

Pablo Sirven
Television critic

has enough for everybody."

The styles of the programs differ, and the content ranges from brilliant to silly. But they share an irreverent, satirical edge. They are products of a recent trend that blends comedy, politics and journalism in an exuberant confrontation with the powers that be.

During Argentina's military dictatorship, which ended 13 years ago, stern colonels ran the TV stations. And the elite in many Latin American countries still use direct and indirect censorship to control the airwaves.

But Argentina has experienced its longest period of uninterrupted democracy in six decades.

Television has become an instructive, occasionally chaotic mirror of a society in which freedom of speech is exercised with relish.

"It reflects the consolidation of democracy," said Miguel Rodriguez Arias, producer of the show "The Legs of the Lie."

"The more years that pass, the less fear ... people have to express themselves — even though the politicians still fear television the most."

The obsession with political humor, analysts say, results partly from the free-wheeling political style that has flourished since President Carlos Menem was elected in 1989.

Even as a provincial governor, when he cultivated the charismatic, sideburned image of a rural strongman, Menem enjoyed mixing with the Buenos Aires jet set.

Earlier in his term as president, he made the rounds of gossipy talk shows and serious interview programs alike, singing tangos, playing soccer with the national team and answering personal questions with amiable candor.

Although the president's profile has lowered with the years, his initial anything-goes accessibility set a new tone, according to TV critic Pablo Sirven, author of two books on the media. Politicians have developed a frank, informal attitude, he said.

"The formality of politics has faded," Sirven said. "The reaction of television has been, 'If the politicians don't take themselves seriously, why should we take them seriously?'"

Argentines have an obsession with the hustler or con artist. The slang abounds with terms such as "trucho," which means fake or scam, and "chanta," which means swindler.

As the democracy has matured, the public has come to see its elected representatives in this context, Rodriguez said.

"After the dictatorship fell in 1983, being a congressman was respectable," Rodriguez said. "Today, a congressman is a chanta. The image has deteriorated."

The combination of nonstop corruption scandals and an unfettered media generates plenty of material, said actor Miguel Del Sol.

"Politicians do incredible things, things you couldn't make up — they hand it to you on a silver platter."

German officer's departure boosts crime rate in Bosnia

The Washington Post

MOSTAR, Bosnia — German police Capt. Werner Stock arrived in Bosnia in October 1994 with a mission. The highly decorated officer had been dispatched to this divided city to establish a plainclothes police unit of Muslims and Croats capable of investigating the criminal gangs that run this southwest Bosnian city.

Stock created a unit to study car thieves and other crooks. He patched together a network of reliable paid informants. Last February, four days before a mob of Croats tried to kill Hans Koschnick, the European Union administrator of Mostar, Stock was tipped off about the plan and passed the information to Koschnick's office.

But in April, Stock said, he resigned as head of the Special Investigations Branch of the Western European Union's police unit in Mostar. Western sources in Mostar say Stock was forced out by a conservative Western European Union police colonel who was not interested in fighting Mostar's mob. Six other senior German colleagues left in protest.

Today EU officials acknowledge that the gangs controlling Mostar are stronger than ever. Recently they have expanded into drug trafficking, prompting the concern of some U.S. officials.

The tale of Stock's rise and fall in Mostar illustrates the problems inherent in Western efforts to deal with Bosnia. While ultranationalists and mobsters carve the country up into ministates and spheres of influence, the men and women sent by the West to stymie this process are often fired, sidelined or ignored.

A "don't-rock-the-boat" mentality has settled into the West's mission in Bosnia, even if that means allowing the partition of a European country recognized by the United Nations, Western officials stationed throughout Bosnia said. Those who fight this trend say they face insurmountable odds and stultifying bureaucracy.

In the 18 months he spent in Bosnia, Stock said he became convinced not just of the possibility that Bosnia would become ethnically divided, but of the danger that life there would become completely criminalized. That danger, he said, is already a headache for Europe.

Bosnian car thieves are believed to have stolen at least 6,000 cars in Germany alone since the war began, moving them through Mostar and exporting them to Italy and beyond, according to estimates developed by Stock's anti-car-theft unit.

Given the ties of Bosnia's Muslims to Islamic extremists in the Middle East, the criminalization of Mostar could also spell trouble for the United States.

Despite intense U.S. pressure on the Bosnian Muslims to cut their links to Iran and other radical Islamic states, Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic continues to cultivate such connections.

New investment plan saves time and trouble

The Washington Post

With all the talk about future troubles in the Social Security system, planning for retirement may well mean looking out for yourself. Once that involved working toward a traditional pension, one your employer established with a plan of defined benefits to be paid out as long as you lived. Now the employee savings plan, the 401(k), is rapidly replacing the traditional pension. Employees make decisions on what the investments are to be, but employers administer the plans.

Study those 401(k) statements carefully. The Labor Department, acting earlier this month to close a loophole, will require employers to invest 401(k) employee contributions more promptly.

While the vast majority of plans are well-run, Labor

Department investigators say a number of employers had taken undue advantage of regulations that require employee contributions to be invested as soon as possible and no later than 90 days after the savings are deducted from paychecks.

Under the new requirement, which will take effect in six months, employers will have to deposit 401(k) funds to employee-designated investment accounts within 15 days of the end of the month in which the paycheck is issued. The quicker deposits will increase the value of 401(k) plans nationwide by $76 million in 1997.

Some corporate benefit plan administrators are grumbling about extra paperwork resulting from the rules. But the 23 million workers now participating in 401(k) plans deserve timely postings to their retirement accounts.

Mental illness has warning signs, too.

Withdrawal from social activities. Excessive anger. These could be the first warning signs of a mental illness. Unfortunately, most of us don't recognize the signs. Which is tragic. Because mental illness can be treated. In fact, 2 out of 3 people who get help, get better.

Both Mays and Kennedy are new to the Saluki offense but both are expected to produce solid numbers for the team.

So what does Bonner think of Carpenter's predictions?

"I think 1,000 yards is very possible," Bonner said. "I feel as long as we are healthy, we can go. We both know the offensive line."

And we all know Bonner has the ability to run. Last season Bonner finished third in SIUC's rushing column with 349 yards.

In addition to their rushing roles, both Carpenter and Bonner will pose a threat with punt returns this season — an option that has worked well in the past.

Last season, the Salukis led the league in punt returns with 372 yards in 30 returns.

And what does coach Shawn Watson think about his backs?

"We are a pretty solid football team across the board," Watson said. "We're going to run it."

"I think we have the potential to have a real potent running attack because of the line that we have and the quality of backs that we've got. We will have some kids who will rush for some yards. There's no doubt about it."

There is also no doubt about how pleased Watson is about the field of backs he can put on the field this season.

But does he believe SIUC has the best backs in the conference?

"It's hard to say because I don't know what everybody else has got," he said. "We've certainly got as good as backs as anybody in this conference — and as a group — as anybody in the country at this level."

There is no question the Salukis will shine this season. The talent is there, as well as the drive, and with a schedule consisting of seven home games, anything can happen.

Just ask Carpenter. "The confidence level is high right now," he said. "We're going to take it one game at a time of course, but we are going to do everything it takes to win each and every ball game."

"I think we've got a winning record — that's guaranteed."

Anaheim Stadium's infield gets thumbs down from DiSarcina

Los Angeles Times

BOSTON — The groundskeepers in Anaheim Stadium will be happy to know their infield no longer ranks at the top of Angel shortstop Gary DiSarcina's list of "Worst Fields I've Ever Played On."

After watching Wil Cordero's potential inning-ending, double-play grounder take a wicked hop over third baseman George Arias' shoulder, clearing the way for Boston's three-run sixth inning Saturday, Fenway Park's infield drew the wrath of DiSarcina.

"I don't want to hurt any feelings, but this is the worst infield I've ever stepped on," said DiSarcina, who for years complained about Anaheim's infield, which underwent a make-over in July.

"There's no way a big-league game should be decided by field conditions. That was a double-play ball and it almost hit George in the chops."

DiSarcina said almost the exact same thing about Anaheim Stadium's infield after a 13th-inning grounder bounced over Chicago shortstop Ozzie Guillen's head and gave the Angels a 9-8 victory over the White Sox. But what one field gave the Angels in June, another field took away Saturday.

"You always hear that Boston has the worst defense in the league, but they also have the worst infield," DiSarcina said. "Not just the dirt, the grass too."

"So when you hear that (third baseman) Tim Lincecum or (shortstop) John Valentin has 18 errors, you take it with a grain of salt. And if you see Naehering needs dental work or (first baseman) Mo Vaughn needs his teeth replaced, you'll know why."

A Houston hand specialist diagnosed Chuck McElroy's injury as a strained abductor tendon in his left thumb, and the reliever will remain in Houston until at least Wednesday, when he will be reexamined.

McElroy, who hasn't pitched since Aug. 10, will probably go on the disabled list, but General Manager Bill Bavasi said he wasn't sure when he would make a roster move.

Amaya leaves Vancouver, headed to Bullets

Former Saluki basketball standout Ashraf Amaya is headed for the Washington Bullets after being released from Vancouver Wednesday. Last season, Amaya led the Grizzlies in field-goal percentage (.495) and averaged 20 minutes of playing time per game. Amaya spent four years with SIUC, (1990 - 1993) and earned Missouri Valley Conference player of the year honors in 1992.

Jourdain loses position with Bills

The Buffalo Bills released former Saluki football stand-out Yonel Jourdain Thursday. Jourdain, a running back by trade, spent two years with the Bills before losing his job to Darick Holmes last year in training camp. Jourdain appeared in 17 games over the last two seasons with the Bills. Jourdain was a four-year starter for the Salukis from 1989 to 1992.

Smith diagnosed with slight knee sprain

Dallas Cowboys running back Emmitt Smith, who suffered a slight left knee sprain during Saturday's pre-season game against Denver, was diagnosed with a first-degree sprain of the medial collateral ligament and will miss two to four weeks. Smith could possibly play in the Cowboys' opening game of the season against the Bears.

TENNIS

Ifner appointed new men's tennis coach

Brad Ifner has been appointed as SIUC's men's tennis coach. Ifner, an assistant at Purdue University the past two years, replaces Dave Pascal, who resigned his position. Ifner, a native of Highland, began his tennis career at Eastern Illinois University, where he earned three letters as the Panthers' No. 1 singles and doubles player. As an assistant at Purdue, Ifner served as the Big Ten Championships Tournament director.

GOLE

Newton replaces Shaneyfelt as golf coach

Leroy Newton, a former Saluki, will take over as the SIUC men's golf coach. Newton replaces former coach Gene Shaneyfelt, who was released in July after serving four seasons. Newton graduated from SIUC in 1967. For the past two years, Newton coached at John A. Logan College, where he led the Volunteers to a second place ranking among Division II schools last season.

BASKETBALL

An Arizona newspaper is reporting that Barkley will be sent to Houston for guard Sam Cassell and forwards Robert Horry, Mark Bryant and Chucky Brown.

Saluki running back Karlton Carpenter catches a pass during Friday's practice session at Arena Fields.

PAT MAHON — The Daily Egyptian

Saluki backs predict a winning season

By Michael DeFord
 DE Sports Editor

In the mind of Saluki running back Karlton Carpenter, no team in the Gateway Conference can hold a candle to SIUC's corps of ball carriers this season.

In fact, Carpenter's confidence in this season's team of backs is so strong that the returning sophomore has predicted that SIUC can run over any opposition that dares stand in its way.

"With me, Coe Bonner, Oran Mays and Rodney Kennedy, we're unstoppable," Carpenter said. "There's no other backfield like us in the conference."

It is a pretty bold statement coming from Carpenter, considering that his team finished fourth in the Gateway's rushing column last season.

However, Carpenter is SIUC's leading authority on rushing and he is a key member on a corps of backs itching to explode.

"We've got some backs this year — I mean some backs — and we can all move the route," he said.

Last season, Carpenter led the Salukis in rushing with 556 yards, including 1,100 all-purpose yards.

Although he was forced to sit out spring drills because of an ankle injury, Carpenter said he is confident he will return true to form this season.

His confidence goes far beyond himself and his fellow backs. Carpenter said he believes the Salukis have a solid offensive line as well.

Thanks to the line, he said, two Salukis will be able to put up big numbers this season, which begins with a home opener against Central Arkansas Aug. 31.

"The offensive line looks real good," he said. "I see holes and they're looking real good to me."

"With these backs that we've got, we should have at least two with 1,000 yards — and that's being realistic."

Both Mays and Kennedy are new to the Saluki offense but both are expected to produce solid numbers for the team.

Dawgs lose star basketball recruit

Despite loss, coach is still confident of team

By Kevin DeFries
 DE Assistant Sports Editor

SIUC basketball recruit Damon Parks was a gamble that simply did not pay off, head coach Rich Herrin says.

"We knew we were taking a chance with Parks," Herrin said. "He would have been a great addition to our team, which is a little short on depth this year."

The Dawgs lost Parks Wednesday when coaches learned that Parks did not fulfill the necessary academic requirements at the junior college level.

Parks, a 6-foot-8-inch forward, who played for Lake Land College in Mattoon last season, was a four-two-four player. That means Parks first attended a four-year university, Southwest Missouri State, and transferred to a two-year college in order to bring his grades up to once again play at a four-year university. Once a player opts for the four-two-four plan, that athlete must graduate from the two-year university before gaining eligibility at a four-year university, which Herrin said Parks did not do.

"He is a talented player who has the ability to make it academically," Herrin said. "He just didn't make the grades."

Parks averaged 26 points and 16 rebounds per game in his last 10 games at Lake Land and has championship experience from his high school days at Ben Davis in Indianapolis, where he led his team to the state championship game.

Despite the loss of Parks, whose 6'8" frame would have made him the third tallest Saluki on this year's roster, Herrin said the team still has a bigger lineup than last year.

"We didn't build our team on a gamble," he said. "If we got Parks, fine, it would be a plus. But we will have a great team without him."

Herrin said five players will work on battling inside the paint including:

- James Watts, a 6-foot-9-inch center/forward
- Rashad Tucker, a 6-foot-7-inch guard/forward
- James Jackson, a 6-foot-6-inch forward

- Jamie Veach, a 6-foot-7-inch forward

- Chris Wright, a 6-foot-6-inch forward

The signing of Wright will help relieve some of the sting felt by the loss of Parks, Herrin said.

Wright averaged 15 points and nine rebounds per game for Kaskaskia Community College while earning a 3.0 grade point average.

"Wright is a very stable and versatile player," Herrin said. "His assets are his defensive rebounding and tremendous outside shot."

Wright played high school basketball for Edwardsville, where he helped lead the team to the state tournament in 1993 and 1995.

The Salukis were lucky to pick up a player like Wright so close to the season because every team looks for size and talent, according to Herrin.

He said sometimes chances just have to be taken when recruiting players.

"Recruiting is a tough game," Herrin said. "I would take a chance on getting a player like Parks again."
