Murder suspect description reported

By Steve Pounds
Staff Writer

Jackson County sheriff's police reported late Wednesday they have a description of a suspect in the murder Tuesday of a Carbondale woman, Lucille Fligor, who was found dead at her home on U.S. 51, north of Boskeydell Road.

A passer-by traveling on U.S. 51 near the time of the murder told sheriff's police she saw a person in an auto fitting the description of a 1975 Oldsmobile Cutlass, which was reported stolen after the murder. The car belonged to Mrs. Fligor and her husband, R.J. Fligor.

The suspect has dark hair around the neck, Sheriff Don White said. Police said that a complete composite drawing of the suspect was not available for publication Wednesday night.

Mrs. Fligor was found dead at 4:55 p.m. Tuesday by her husband. She was apparently strangled with a leather cord, which was later found in the basement of the Fligor home, Don Ragsdale, Jackson County coroner, said Wednesday.

Ragsdale estimated the time of death as between 2:00 and 2:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Sheriff's police reported that witnesses say they saw the stolen automobile leaving the Fligor's driveway at about 3:20 p.m. The car was later found at the 300 block of East Hester Street, where one resident reports seeing the vehicle as early as 3:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Ragsdale said an autopsy found that

Mrs. Fligor had not been molested.

Blood samples were sent to the state laboratory in Springfield, he said, adding that an inquest into the exact cause of death will be held in two or three weeks.

Police report that a possible motive for the murder was burglary. A portable television, 10 guns and ammunition, as well as the automobile were reported stolen.

Sheriff's detective Jim Nesler said fingerprints found at the victims home were being tested at the DeSox crime lab.

Mrs. Fligor, 62, taught elementary education at the Lincoln and Lewis schools in Carbondale for 20 years. She is a graduate of SIU in elementary education, receiving her bachelor's degree in 1946 and a master's degree in 1964.

Mrs. Fligor, who retired from elementary school teaching in 1972 and who also was an SIU instructor of student teachers from 1972-73, ran the Wagoncreek Antique Shop, located next to the Fligor's home.

R.J. Fligor is a retired professor in secondary education at SIU. He started at SIU in 1941 as an instructor of student teachers. Besides eventually holding the rank of professor, Fligor was also an administrative assistant in the University's Extension Service.

Nesler said that 10 detectives were involved in the investigation, including Jackson County sheriff's officials, Carbondale police, University police and state police detectives.

Bakalis balances ticket with Springfield lawyer

By Tom Coery
Staff Writer

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Michael Bakalis said Wednesday that while his party's 1978 ticket is tilted toward Northern Illinois, he feels his selection of a Springfield lawyer as a running mate will help balance the slate.

At a news conference in Marion, Bakalis named Richard Durbin, former aide to Paul Simon when Simon was lieutenant governor as his choice to oppose incumbent Lt. Gov. Dave O'Neal in 1978.

Bakalis admitted that the Democratic slate is made up of Republicans, but he said he believes that the 1978 Republican ticket is tilted toward the north.

"The slate that came out of the caucus did tilt too heavily to Northern Illinois," Bakalis said. "There's no question about that, and I'm not happy about it. If you look at it, though, the Republicans could very well run a slate in 1978 with all but one of the candidates being from Cook County," he said.

Republican slated candidates—James Thompson for governor, Charles Percy for senator, William Scott for attorney general, and Sharon Sharp for secretary of state—are from Northern Illinois, Bakalis said.

Bakalis said that Thompson's pledge to run on his record as governor would work to his advantage.

"I hope he does campaign on his record," Bakalis said. "He has paraded around the state saying that he has worked to cut spending and balance the budget, but what he fails to say is that it was a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate that kept them down."

Bakalis also said that Thompson has failed to deal with the economic problems of Illinois, and said that if elected he would call for an economic summit with Congress.

"This is a major problem in the state," Bakalis said. "I see nothing in the past year that indicates that the governor is cognizant of it all. The economic problems of the state have simply not been given the attention they deserve."

Durbin, who served as Bakalis' campaign manager in 1966 when he ran for superintendent of public instruction, said that he and Bakalis would, if elected, seek to initiate a program to insure homeowners

Answering a question dealing with a recent collapse of a section of Illinois 13 near Harrisburg caused by the shifting of mine-weakened land beneath the pavement, Durbin said that he is investigating a Pennsylvania program providing state-supported insurance for homes built above old mines.

"Not one insurance company in this state will give this sort of insurance," Durbin said. "We've got to realize that there are vast areas in this state that are in danger."

Durbin criticized incumbent O'Neal for not using the resources of his office to meet the needs of the state, particularly those of the state's senior citizens.

"It's my opinion that the lieutenant governor has not addressed the problems of the senior citizens of Illinois," Durbin said. "You have to remember that the lieutenant governor is paid about $37,000 a year, and has a budget of nearly $400,000. We're talking about putting that money to work."

Hill House provides more than drug abuse therapy

By Andris Stramanski
Staff Writer

Editor's Note: This is the first of two articles dealing with Hill House, a therapeutic program in Carbondale.

Fourteen-year-old Lloyd (not his real name) had a hard time relating to people his own age. To make friends with his peers he began drinking liquor and smoking marijuana.

By age 17 he was swallowing barbiturates. One night he was arrested for public intoxication and possession of drugs. He joined the Army to keep a clean record. The army sent him to West Germany, where one of his duties was cleaning the base dispensary.

"Sweeping up where the pills were was the best job I ever had," says Lloyd, who has been in Carbondale's Hill House Residential Cooperative for less than a month.

Hill House is a therapeutic program for people like Lloyd who have behavioral and psychological problems, most of them drug-related. Started by a citizens' group called Carbondale Action Now, the program is in its fourth year.

The program maintains three homes in Carbondale: 300 W. Cherry, 512 S. Beveridge and one on the Giant City Blacktop. Those being treated there—"residents"—live in the homes until they are ready to re-enter society.

Hill House, which has its administrative office at 718 S. University, is a non-profit organization and as such its staff cannot be told whom to take in for treatment. All applicants are carefully screened before they are admitted to the program.

"You can't come here and do nothing and make a force of the program," Paul Reitman, the program's executive director, said.

It costs a maximum of $1,000 for a person to stay at Hill House. The program receives both state and federal funds so no one is rejected solely because he can't pay his way. The residents of Hill House may be there for reasons other than drug addiction, but all have one thing in common—they have problems dealing with society.

Drug abusers, Reitman said, are often thought of as trying to escape from reality, but he feels that concept isn't true.

"Drugs are not an escape from reality," he said. "That's ridiculous. Drugs are a demand for the reality they want."

To help residents get a grasp on that reality the Hill House staff stresses two things—social and self-actualization. Social-actualization, Reitman said, teaches the resident to do something which he believes is meaningful. Self-actualization teaches a resident to realize his strengths and weaknesses.

"You don't try to pretend you're something you're not," Reitman said. While Lloyd is in the home he will get both individual and group therapy. The staff tries to set up a family atmosphere for the residents, all of whom have chores to perform while in the homes.

Reitman said the make-up of the staff plays an important role in the program. The program's staff includes people who have abused drugs, people who have been in prison and people who have led more or less normal lives. The ages of staff members range from 18 to 55.

"The common denominator is that

S. Africans go to polls, Vorster win expected

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP)—Voters defied rain and gales to elect a new Parliament in segregated South Africa and Prime Minister John Vorster was expected to win in a landslide. The country's 19 million blacks are barred from voting. Vorster called elections 18 months early. He was seeking support for a proposed new constitution that would set up separate parliaments for the 4.5 million whites, 2.5 million persons of mixed race and 750,000 Asians. There would be no representation for the blacks, who make up 70 percent of the population. Vorster also wanted a mandate to reject what he called "meddling" by the U.S. and other nations in South Africa's domestic affairs.

Literacy test shows reading OK, math poor

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP)—First scores from the 11-question literacy test that Florida youngsters must pass to get high school diplomas show that a vast majority can read—but about 40 percent can't do the simple math required to compare prices of goods on sale. The test was administered to 120,000 high school juniors. They are the first students who will be denied diplomas unless they pass the test. It covers math and communications skills and is supposed to reflect ability to solve day-to-day problems. Those who fail either portion will be given remedial training, under a special $10 million state program, and will get two chances. If they still fail, they get only a certificate saying they attended school.

Air Force cracks down on pot item sales

RANTOUL (AP)—Owners of two businesses near Chanute Air Force Base say military officials have threatened to blacklist them if they don't stop selling items supposedly associated with drug usage. As a result, the owners say they will stop selling cigarette papers, pipes and magazines which Air Force officials say encourage marijuana use. Owners Steven Skovil and Mike Gifford said they had no choice but to comply with the Air Force's demands—or go out of business. An Air Force spokesman said pipes, papers and literature "could adversely affect the health, morals and welfare of military personnel."

Carter offers support to Mid-East talks

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter said the United States is no longer the "dominant intermediary" in the Middle East. But he offered support to all Arab countries that decide to negotiate directly with Israel. So far only Egypt has seized that initiative. But Carter said he was convinced all of Israel's Arab neighbors—Syria, Jordan and Lebanon—want peace with the Jewish state even though they have not accepted Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's invitation to participate in preliminary negotiations in mid-December.

Adamczyk delays MEG action

By Steve Kropala
Staff Writer

Action by Student Government to challenge the University's involvement with the Southern Illinois Enforcement Group (MEG) will probably not begin until next semester, Student President Dennis Adamczyk said Wednesday.

Following the Nov. 16 MEG referendum, Adamczyk said that he would request the Student Senate to allocate funds to hire an attorney to prevent the University from assigning two SIU security officers, at a cost of $27,000 per year, to the undercover drug enforcement agency.

Adamczyk originally said that the request was to be made at Wednesday's senate meeting. However, he said Wednesday afternoon that he has delayed the request to further examine the merits of possible litigation.

"We're taking a look at exactly what our chances of winning this case in court are," he said. The Student Attorney's office—which will be unable to represent the case in court—will be asked to review the possible consequences of legal action, he added.

If it is necessary to bring the case before the state Appellate Court, as much as $5,000 in attorney's fees may be. He had earlier estimated the cost of local court action at about $1,000.

Adamczyk said that he would probably select the attorney himself. He added, however, he would be open to the idea of having the senate set up a selection committee to hire the lawyer.

An outside attorney will be necessary because the student attorney's contract sales states that the office cannot be used to challenge the University, Adamczyk said.

Adamczyk went on to say that he believes money allocated by the senate from student activity fees could be used for that purpose.

He also said that he sent letters to the members of the University administration and the Board of Trustees informing them of the results of the MEG referendum, in which student voters expressed their opposition to the group by a margin of four to one.

More than 1,900 students voted in the referendum, representing less than 10 percent of the student population.

Adamczyk said he has not formally notified the administration of his intention to hire a lawyer to fight MEG's presence on campus.

His intentions were reported in the Nov. 18 Daily Egyptian and Adamczyk said Wednesday that he has not yet received any response from the administration concerning his plans to challenge the University.

Embargo's end sends overseas gifts on way

Arca residents who have been holding on to Christmas parcels bound for Europe because of an embargo resulting from a two-month dock strike can begin taking those packages to the post office.

Hubert Goforth, Carbondale postmaster, said Wednesday. "With the dock strike ending the embargo has been lifted."

Striking longshoremen in many Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico ports voted Tuesday on a new three-year contract. Union leaders were confident the more than 50,000 dock workers would favor ending the strike, the Associated Press reported Tuesday.

Home destroyed by fire; gas leak ignites blaze

In about three minutes, two SIU students lost their home and belongings when a fire started by leaking gas destroyed a trailer in northeast Carbondale early Wednesday.

Calling the trailer at Tantara Mobile Home Park, New Era Road, a total loss, firemen estimated damage at more than $13,000, and said the two students only saved the nightgowns they were wearing.

Wendee Hughes, 22, a junior in English, and Paula Voitik, 23, a senior in English, smelled smoke and ran from the trailer to a neighbor to call for help. But it burned to the ground before the firemen arrived at about 12:15 a.m.

"It was like an explosion," Hughes said, noting that the officials believe the fire was caused by leaking gas from the furnace or kitchen.

"We lost all our term papers and notes" and about 21 library books, she said. Hughes added that both girls will ask instructors for incompletes in some classes to allow them time to make up work.

Hughes also criticized the Murphysboro Fire Department which said it could not fight the fire until it received a $500 deposit.

Spokesmen for the department said the deposit is required because the trailer was located outside the city limits. The Carbondale Township Fire Department answered the call.

Gas supply ample—for a price

There probably will be enough natural gas in Illinois this winter to meet the demand, but if it's especially cold heating bills could be substantially higher.

Ample supply depends on the federal government not diverting gas to other states, officials of five utility companies say.

"We feel that the biggest threat to our gas supply is an allocation that would divert gas from Illinois to the Eastern states," said Jack Williams of Illinois Power Co. "If we have another real cold winter, people will be crying out for relief."

All the officials indicated they believe the chance for another winter like the last one, or for reallocation of gas from Illinois, is slim.

However, Williams, and officials of Northern Illinois Gas Co., People's Gas Co., Central Illinois Public Service Co., and Central Illinois Light Co., said the gas will cost more this year.

Based on figures supplied by the five companies, the cost of a unit of gas, known as a therm, will be up by an average of about 18 percent. However, if predictions of a more moderate winter hold true, monthly gas bills won't increase by that much, the officials said.

"We feel that it (the gas price) was too low to start with," said Ed Koska of People's Gas. "What good is a low price if you can't get it."

His firm serves nearly one million customers in Chicago and 46 northeastern Illinois communities. Koska says the company does not expect any supply problems.

"The severity of the winter looks normal so far. Even if we have a super cold winter, we're in good shape," said Koska.

Most utilities buy natural gas throughout the year and store it in underground tanks for use during periods of peak demand in the winter.

Sally Anderson of Northern Illinois Gas, which serves 1.3 million customers in northern and central Illinois, said her firm could meet the demand even if this is as cold a winter as the last one.

"But, we never know what is going to come out of Washington," she said of possible reallocation. However, she said this seems unlikely because of the milder weather and the effect of people conserving energy and using alternate energy sources.

"We don't know what the government is going to do but we think it (reallocation) is unlikely," Koska said. "If we have a normal winter, we shouldn't have any problems."

Officials of the other three companies also anticipate no supply problem.

"Warmer weather so far has solved a lot of the problem," Williams said. "The gas supply is adequate for our existing load but it's limited to the number of new customers we can add."

Illinois Power has about 364,000 natural gas customers.

"Our supply picture is good," said Bob Houvenagle of CIPS, which serves about 140,000 customers. "We feel that we could handle the situation even if the winter were 10 percent colder than normal. However, we don't have any gas that can be reallocated."

"We could stand another winter like last winter," said Del Schneider of CILCO. "If somebody takes away our pipeline supply during the winter, that's different."

CILCO serves 176,000 customers. Although they are paying about 19 percent more for gas now than they did a year ago, the cost will drop that much in February. The firm had spread the cost of an emergency gas supply for last winter over a 12-month period which ends early in 1978.

The firm charged $56.68 for 300 therms of gas in September 1976; $58.88 in February 1977; $67.64 in September 1977; and will charge $58.92 in February 1978.

CILCO's price in February will be about 19 cents a therm—the same as a year earlier.

CIPS said the cost of a therm of gas climbed from 16 to nearly 20 cents, when 1976 prices were compared with those for most of 1977.

Illinois Power said a customer in Champaign paid about 17 cents a therm in November 1976, and about 21 cents this November.

In the same period, People's Gas said the cost went from 20.4 to 24 cents a therm.

S-Senate raises president's salary

The Student Senate voted 18-0-4 Wednesday night to restore the salary of the student president to $3,306.75.

The president's salary had been reduced last spring to $2,800. Merrill Crowley, a proxy senator who sat on the fee allocations board last year, said that board reduced the salary because it could find no justification for that amount.

Laura Ducey, east side senator, responded to Crowley's statement by saying that she feels the amount of hours worked by the student president warranted the increase.

Beg your pardon

It was incorrectly reported in Tuesday's Daily Egyptian that Democratic candidate for Illinois Lieutenant Governor Richard Durbin was a member of U.S. Rep. Paul Simon's congressional staff. Durbin was an aide to Simon when the 24th District Congressman was lieutenant governor from 1969 to 1973.

Faculty votes on Judicial Review Board vacancies

All ballots are out for a campuswide faculty election to determine who will fill 12 vacancies on the Judicial Review Board (JRB).

The names of 24 faculty members, slated by the Faculty Senate to serve on the board, appear on the ballots, although there is a provision for write-in candidates. The JRB reviews faculty grievances.

Jo Anne Thorpe, chairman of the senate's Elections Committee, said ballots, all of which were distributed by Tuesday, should be returned to the Faculty Senate office by Dec. 9. Ballots may be returned by mail, using the envelope provided with each ballot.

Two candidates are nominated by the senate for each of the 12 academic units on campus: William Hertz, professor in agriculture industries, and Joe Henton Jones, associate professor in plant and soil sciences, both from the School of Agriculture; Charles Hinderman, professor in marketing, and Richard Osborn, associate professor in administrative sciences, both from the College of Business and Administration; William Gooch, assistant professor in vocational education studies, and Fred Sloan, professor in curriculum, instruction and media, both from the College of Education; Randall Bytwerk, assistant professor in speech communication, and Richard Franzen, assistant professor in speech pathology and audiology, both from the College of Communication and Fine Arts: Melvin Anderson, associate professor in technology, and Ray Nowaki, associate professor in engineering mechanics and materials, both from the School of Engineering and Technology; Seymour Bryson, associate professor in rehabilitation counseling, and Paul Denise, assistant professor in social community services, slated to represent the College of Human Resources; Robert Beck, professor in law, and Darrell Dunham, associate professor in law, both from the School of Law; John Gregory, assistant professor in mathematics, and Gordon Rader, professor in psychology, both candidates from the College of Liberal Arts; George Black, associate professor in Morris Library, Roland Person, assistant professor in Morris Library, both from the Library Affairs Unit; Paraskevi BeMiller, assistant professor in medicine, and F. Susan Ackerman Ross, assistant professor in medicine, both from the School of Medicine; Cal Yale Meyers, professor in chemistry and biochemistry, and Donald Ugent, associate professor in botany, both from the College of Science; and Harold Osborn, assistant professor in construction technology and building, and Michael Walsh, associate professor in the baccalaureate division, both from the School of Technical Careers. The Committee on Committees makes all nominations for senate committees.

they all have varied life experiences. This is truly the melting pot of society," Reitman said. He said this helps the program by allowing residents to relate to the staff. But Reitman concedes it also causes personality conflicts.

"Our major law is to have no violence or threats of violence," he said. "Sometimes we have pretty heated discussions. The problems come out in the open. They have to in a place like this."

A place like Hill House, Lloyd said, may just be where he solves his drug problem. An 11-year veteran of several therapeutic programs, he said he has always placed time limits on the programs. He said he would tell himself he would stay in a place for 90 many months and if he wasn't cured by then, too bad.

But Lloyd, who came to Hill House voluntarily, said this time he is not in a hurry.

"It took me 11 years to get here," he said. "It's the first time I've been in a program where I'm not quitting for someone else. I'm not doing it for my wife or my two kids. I really want to stop."

Lloyd admitted it would be difficult for him to stop using drugs.

"I think about getting blasted," he said. "It's going to be really hard for me to shake that. It's hard to shake those 11 years."

Drugs have been an important part of Lloyd's life.

"It's been one of the loves of my life," he said. "I've known it longer than I've known anyone else."

But he is convinced that through his determination he will solve his drug problem while at Hill House, although he said he will probably require some sort of out-patient treatment once he has left the program.

Lloyd's plans for the future include going to school.

"I had a family," he said. "I lost it. I've got two kids I want to get back in touch with. Just to be responsible. That would be a lot for me."

Strikers never said 'die'

Police: Janitors didn't threaten lives

By Mark Edgar Staff Writer

When SIU argued for an injunction against striking workers in October, President Warren Brandt said threats on the lives of supervisors forced the University to go to court to end the walkout.

Now, after a five-week investigation of the complaints, the Security Police reported Wednesday that none of the employees who crossed the picket lines received death threats.

"The whole thing was just blown out of proportion," said Robert Harris, assistant director of the Security Office. "Emotions were high...and it looks like a rumor."

Brandt said the "threats against the lives of employees," who continued to work "and their families escalated" before a court injunction was issued Oct. 12, ending the six-day strike of custodians and campus police.

Brandt said two supervisors, who he did not identify, were threatened in person by striking workers. But officials of the two unions said the strikers were told not to harass persons who did not honor the picket lines.

Harris said the warnings could not be confirmed after talking to those who earlier reported the threats.

"During that time, I'm sure these people really felt that way, but there were no direct threats," Harris said.

He added that the employees may be reluctant to talk, fearing reprisals on the job. "There is always that possibility."

Dennis Adamczyk, student president, said earlier that students who did not support the strike were threatened with losing their jobs.

Clarence Dougherty, director of campus services, agreed Wednesday some students were pressured to honor the walkout, but said the findings show none were threatened to be killed.

Harris said the investigation will be closed unless the Security Office receives additional information on the threats.

A drop in the bucket...

The steady dripping that rings throughout the Communications Building may be halted to the tune of $150,000. That is what it will cost the University to buy a "raincoat" for the roof of the overly porous building. It is hoped the plastic cost will stop the leaking that has caused over $23,000 in interior damages and created electrical hazards with water on outlets and machinery.

Housing Board to crack down on rent evaders

By Gertha Coffee Staff Writer

Jackson County residents who live in public housing and are delinquent in their rent payments may find themselves facing eviction proceedings.

James Seed, executive director of the Jackson County Housing Authority, said a new rent policy will go into effect after January 1.

Seed said the Housing Authority Board of Commissioners called a special meeting to make up a new rent and delinquent rent collection policy after a report that showed one-fourth of the tenants in Jackson County public housing had not been paying their rent on time.

"Prior to this policy, there was no policy that I know of and if it was, it was very lax," Seed said.

Under the new policy, any tenant who is one month delinquent in rent payments, will be contacted by housing officials to find out why the rent is late. If the tenant refuses to talk to officials or if no extenuating circumstances exist, if the resident does not vacate the unit in 14 days, eviction proceedings will go into effect. The proceedings take three to four months and require court action.

However, Seed said, the housing authority will provide counseling for residents who need to make financial arrangements to avoid delinquency.

"Under extenuating circumstances such as illness, accidents or job lay-off, if a person furnishes proof that a hardship does exist, appropriate arrangements will be made for the late rent payments," he said.

Under the new policy, all residents who are presently delinquent in rent payments will meet with authorities and set up a repayment plan that includes paying the regular rent and an additional one-third of that amount until the deficiency is paid.

For example, if a resident's rent is $90 per month and a back balance is owed, they must pay the regular rent of $90 plus an additional $30 per month. This would be a total of $120 until the back rent is paid.

'40s tune still rings true: Little things mean a lot

By Tom Rafferty
Student Writer

"Little Things Mean a Lot" is a popular song from the '40s. The lyrics still ring true over 30 years later—there are very few of us who have not been influenced in some way or another by a seemingly inconsequential event.

To demonstrate that small things can indeed change or influence a person's life, a journalism reporting class gathered information from members of the campus community about incidents that proved to be memorable moments or turning points in their lives.

To Nancy West, a resident assistant in Warren Hall, "Father Christmas" was just another fictionalized character until she met him when she and another friend were vacationing in London. She and her friend stopped in for a cocktail at a plush hotel, and a distinguished, middle-aged man offered to buy them a drink. One drink led to another and he suggested they join him for dinner. While a bit reluctant, they accepted his offer and wine and dined in elegance.

The next afternoon the bellhop rang their doorbell carrying a dozen long-stemmed roses and a note from their dinner partner asking them to join him for cocktails. Thinking that he had ulterior motives, they decided to find out what those motives were.

Over drinks he told them he was an earl who owned a toy factory on an island off the coast of England. He explained he had several daughters himself and hoped that if they ever went abroad they would meet someone who was as nice as he was trying to be. Each Christmas Nancy gets a card signed, "Father Christmas."

Another man influenced the career of Roy Washinsky, assistant professor of English. Washinsky was an accounting major hoping to become a certified public accountant, when he enrolled in a literature course taught by Robert D. Faner, professor of English. Washinsky claimed it was not the content of the course that inspired him to "turn over a new leaf." Instead, it was the personal magnetism of Faner that led him to pursue his present career.

A new leaf was also turned over by Donald MacDonald, associate professor of speech, but he did so because of a lack of inspiration. MacDonald, a former Air Force pilot, flew a group of men into Tan Son Nhat, Saigon, in February, 1968. Hearing bombs exploding and guns firing, he soon found out that a coup was taking place. Three bombers were circling overhead and he was forced to remain where he was. When he was finally able to take off, MacDonald realized how much the war repulsed him. He withdrew from the Air Force a few days later.

While some folks think they're about to take over the world, others need a little extra spark to get them going. This was the case of Larry Guzman, a business major who gave up the idea of getting a job and decided to pursue a college education when he saw how difficult it was for his mother to read a newspaper. Guzman, who will be the first member of his family to obtain a college degree, said, "Education isn't everything, but without it the world would be an empty place for a lot of people."

Other folks try to reject a part of their heritage. When London Branch, research associate for black music, was a youngster around Mounds, Ill., his friends tried to get away from that "old fogey music" that their parents liked (blues and jazz) because it reminded them of the racial prejudice that was an integral part of this nation.

Branch, however, is researching the same "old fogey music" because of its importance in his heritage.

"It is the music of my people. It is the music I've grown up with," Branch said.

Branch's research is geared toward the history of blues and jazz in Southern Illinois. Branch said he and many others believe that jazz music has become America's classical music. He added that this research has been "a labor of love for a good many years."

These tidbits tend to confirm that "little things mean a lot" in people's lives. Remember them the next time you have a hull in yours.

New book exposes judiciary's lust for power

By James J. Kilpatrick

Now and then a book comes along, so stunning in its impact upon society that it finds its own place in the political and social history of a period. Such a book has just come to hand. It is Raoul Berger's "Government by Judiciary."

In bull-like tones that ring with a scholar's authority Berger exposes and denounces the trend toward judicial usurpation of political power. He charges the Warren Court with effectively amending the Constitution in the school segregation and reapportionment cases. He concludes with a fervent plea for a turning back to old principles of judicial restraint.

In one sense, there is nothing much here that is new. Twenty years ago, at the peak of controversy over Brown v. Board of Education, hundreds of Southern lawyers, scores of Southern editors, and even one Southern justice, James Byrnes of South Carolina, said very much the same things. Dozens of pamphlets appeared, expounding the intention of the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment. In 1857, I myself wrote a book, "The Sovereign States," arguing the very case that Berger argues now.

Our Dixie fulminations fell upon deaf ears. In those days it was automatically assumed that any Southerner who attacked the Court was not truly opposed to usurpation of power; he was opposed only to integration of schools.

No such taint attaches to Berger. Born in Russia in 1901, he came to the United States and was naturalized as a child. He took up the study of the violin with such skill that in his twenties he soloed with the Cleveland Orchestra and became assistant concertmaster in Cincinnati. Then he turned to the law and fashioned a brilliant second career in both federal service and private practice. In 1970, he went to Harvard as a Senior Fellow in American legal history. He gained national attention in 1974 as a leading authority on presidential impeachment.

"Government by Judiciary" crowns Professor Berger's distinguished career. It is not the easiest reading of the autumn. Freightened with 1,600 footnotes, the text does not race, but rather chugs to its inevitable conclusion. The railroad metaphor is not bad. Berger's thesis cannot be sidetracked; he gathers momentum as he goes along; and his scholarship packs the massive authority of a locomotive.

Berger is not the first legal historian to sift the debates of the 39th Congress, searching for the meaning of the Reconstruction Amendments, but his meticulous examination of the evidence stands in a class by itself. Neither is he the first law professor to emphasize the importance of determining the "intention of the framers." A century ago, Thomas McIntyre Cooley of Michigan termed intention "the very polestar of constitutional construction."

Berger's gift is to bring it all together. He finds "no trace of an intention" in the records of the 29th Congress to indicate that the Fourteenth Amendment was intended to encroach upon state control of schools and suffrage. Members of the Warren majority, in his view, simply imposed their own notions of decency and fairness upon the Constitution. Earl Warren himself did not merely "shape" the law; "He upended it; he revised the Fourteenth Amendment to mean exactly the opposite of what its framers designed it to mean."

"When the judiciary substitutes its own value choices for those of the people," says Berger, "it subverts the Constitution by usurpation of power." He poses a sobering question: "How long can public respect for the Court, on which its power ultimately depends, survive if the people become aware that the tribunal which condemns the acts of others as unconstitutional is itself acting unconstitutionally?"

It is too late, Berger concedes, to roll back the segregation decisions. "That is more than the courts should undertake and more, I believe, than the American people would desire." But he pleads for a fresh start: "The judges might begin by curbing their reach for still more policymaking power."

"I assert the right," says Berger, "to look at the Constitution itself, stripped of judicial incrustations, as the index of constitutional law and to affirm that the Supreme Court has no authority to substitute an unwritten Constitution for the written Constitution the Founders gave us and the people ratified."

SIU supports equipment, not athletes

This letter is written in response to the article in the Nov. 16 D.E. on women athletes not being sent to national competitions. I feel it is very sad for a top school like SIU to run its women's program the way it does.

Is it true that women athletes are not sent to nationals because SIU needs the money for equipment? Is SIU more supportive of its athletes or its equipment?

If I were a woman athlete and were told that if I qualified individually for national competition but wasn't being "competitive enough" to go to nationals, I don't think I would ever consider running again for SIU. What more of an honor could it be to qualify individually or as a team by national standards? Is SIU such an elitist school that an incoming athlete would have to choose between running for SIU and meeting SIU standards, or running for another school and meeting national standards, in order to compete nationally?

There should not be any difference in deciding whether to send a team or an individual to nationals. In both instances, SIU is represented.

I think it hurts the athlete to know she has done her best after months of hard training only to learn that her school feels she is not good enough. I don't see why any athlete would want to compete for any school which treated her that way.

Carter owes two more apologies for Shah's visit

The Iranian students' heroic demonstration in Washington once more revealed the hypocritical nature of American government's foreign policy. While Mr. Carter—"the great advocate of human rights"—was "honored" to receive the savage Shah of Iran at the White House, the Washington police were beating up the Iranian students who were protesting against the Shah's repressive regime and its paid servants who were shipped to Washington from Iran, and various corners of the United States, to distort the reality of the oppression in Iran.

This hypocritical nature of the U.S. government's foreign policy has not been limited to the case of Iran alone. In fact, whenever the profits of the U.S. corporations have been at stake, the American government has taken a similar position. Our government's support of dictatorships around the world—in Chile, South Korea, Jordan, Morocco, Vietnam and South Africa—testify to the same general trend in American foreign policy.

Mr. Carter did apologize to the Shah for the "temporary air pollution in Washington" (which resulted from tear gas bombs thrown at the Iranian students by the police), but he never realized that he owed two more apologies: one to the people of Iran for U.S. support of the Shah's dictatorship, and another to the American people for deceiving them on the issue of human rights.

Library organization lacks consideration for students

There is definitely room for improvement in the library system at SIU. Not only is there an apparent general ignorance of what is contained in the library but also there is an apparent ignorance of where the items are.

The most obvious lack of organization is in the treatment of the periodicals and journals which students are not supposed to reshelve. I have noticed that from Friday to Sunday periodicals are generally not reshelved and are therefore effectively removed from circulation and unavailable to students. There seems to be a lack of consideration for the needs of students, particularly those who use the facilities on weekends.

I would suggest that some kind of central receiving area be set up so that at least the students would have one particular place instead of a dozen to look for the missing journals. It might also be helpful if the library requested that students restrict the use of the periodicals to the floor on which they are shelved. Either that or extend the library staff so that periodicals can be reshelved without the two-to-three-day delay.

I would be interested in getting a reply to this either from the library or from other interested students.

Reviewer was blind to Talbot's new spiritual identity

This is in response to a recent article reviewing the John Michael Talbot concert by the D.E. staff writer, Dave Erickson. Erickson phrased it well when he said "A spiritual warmth flowed." I appreciated his thoughtful recollections of the band scene and culture of the late '60s. However, the review was mainly concerned with the past history of Mason Profit rather than the concert.

As a former fan of Mason Profit and a participant in the culture from which they were born, it's easy to relate to Erickson's memories of the "Wild Goose, flowers and beads." Yet, as any member of the audience would be quick to point out, these things were no longer present. There was a new quality of life that emanated from John Talbot, as well as many who were in the audience that evening. Talbot attributed this new quality of life to the fact that someone had touched him. He has come to know the love of God through Jesus Christ. He now sings of a new life, a new kingdom, and a new master to which he belongs.

Thus, Dave Erickson was correct in speaking of a "spiritual warmth" that existed at the concert and the need for a "personal experience," yet the theme of his article drifted to Talbot's history rather than to the reality of his present life in Jesus Christ, which was the main emphasis of the concert.

African students' dialogue furthers goal of unity

The synthesis of current discourse and bickering among African students may be more productive than some may imagine.

No one is under the illusion that besides color, geographical proximity, opposition to apartheid and domination coming from either Saudi Arabia, France or Britain, we Africans have a long way to go in forming a common value system—let alone one flag and one nation.

The squabble between Gaid Alade and Joseph Ngonwiko could have been avoided had, according to Gaid, the Daily Egyptian printed the whole content of his two-and-a-half page response rather than an arbitrarily picked synopsis of it on Nov. 3.

Regardless of the Daily Egyptian's dissection or summary of Gaid's letter and the diatribe expressed by both writers, it is refreshing to see that both are striving for a common goal: African unity. Furthermore, with due deference to one's opinion, I congratulate especially Mr. Ngonwiko for his reconciliatory letter and for making a long stride forward from his previous stand, which inadvertently or not portrayed him to be opportunistic, or mildly less patriotic in championing the African cause.

Warren Brandt, the students are looking for you

Who is Warren Brandt? Most students on this campus can answer that question, but how many have seen him or talked to him? For the president of such a large university he manages to stay pretty invisible.

We, the members of Students Concerned About Brandt, feel he should make more contact with the students of his university. Let us become aware of him and he aware of us.

Warren Brandt, where are you?

Referendum indicates board support for MEG is 'unenlightened'

The SIU Board of Trustees appears even more unenlightened in its decision to continue University support of MEG with the arrival of statistics from the student referendum. These clearly represent the current emotions felt toward such a waste of University time, manpower and money.

It is obvious that the Board of Trustees has not taken the time to look at the track record of MEG, nor the many allegations which have been made both in court and in the press. The board chairman stated that there had been no arguments made for the removal of this organization.

Had the board looked any further than the end of its noses, or had it not been persuaded by persons who might have a vested interest in MEG, it would have immediately formed an ad hoc committee to investigate the illegalities, drugs, dope addicts and ineffectiveness which run rampant in this charade which the school pours $27,000 into annually.

It is evident that either there is a great deal of behind the scenes pressure being applied by someone not wanting to lose a personal gold mine, or the board is being downright naive in its knowledge of the tactics of MEG.

Bike-car collision injures student

A junior in clothing and textiles, Lesa Frazier, received minor injuries when the bicycle she was riding was hit by a car at the intersection of South Illinois and East Grand avenues.

Frazier was crossing South Illinois Avenue Tuesday when she was hit by a car driven by John Pirman, a senior in microbiology. The car was traveling south, University police said.

Police and Pirman took Frazier to the Health Service where she was treated for bruises and abrasions and then released.

LITTLE SWIMMER

LAS ALAMITOS, Calif. (AP)—Nine-month-old Fred Garcia III has become the youngest person ever to pass the beginner's stage of the Red Cross swimming test in Greta Andersen's swimming school here.

For his achievement, Fred received Miss Andersen's gold medal from the 1980 Olympics and a Red Cross certification card, which he promptly attempted to eat.

The son of Dr. and Mrs. Fred Garcia blew bubbles, bobbed his head and swam 30 feet. He floated on his back 30 seconds and bounced back up when pushed to the bottom in 5 feet of water. He did all this after only 15 swimming lessons.

The Red Cross test also required that he jump into the pool and swim, but since Fred couldn't walk yet, he just sat on the ledge and fell in.

Cheech and Chong to perform

Back in comedy circles again, Cheech and Chong will be headline performers when they bring their comedy show to the Arena at 8 p.m. on Dec. 9.

Appearing with the duo will be the Sanford and Townsend band. They are most noted for their top 40 hit "Smoke From a Distant Fire."

Cheech and Chong will be presented in the Arena's Focus 4 stage set-up with seating available for 4,000. Their pantomime-type humor and brash comedy became familiar nationwide when their first two albums "Cheech and Chong" and "Big Bambu" went gold.

Since those two, two other albums "Los Cochinos" and "Cheech and Chong's Wedding Album" have also gone gold. They use contemporary comedy in their routine capitalizing mainly on the late 60s and early 70s drug scene.

The members of the team, Tommy Chong and Richard (Cheech) Maria began their respective careers in rhythm and blues. Their first association was in an improvisational group known as City lights patterned loosely after Chicago's Second City.

After City Lights the two went to Los Angeles where their comedy struck at the right time in the right place. Since then they have played concert tours except for a few years which have been relatively quiet.

Tickets for the Cheech and Chong and Sanford and Townsend Band concert will go on sale Thursday at the Arena South Main Lobby Box Office. Beginning Friday, tickets will be available at the Student Center Central Ticket office and the Arena Ticket Office.

Prices for the concert range from $6, $8.50 and $4.50 with a 50 cent discount available to students.

Nielsen: Fewer people see TV; networks, advertisers worry

NEW YORK (AP)—A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings show that fewer people are watching television this year, sparking a controversy that pits the advertising industry against the three major networks because of the money at stake.

"We're concerned," ABC Vice President George Karamadis commented Tuesday in a remark typical of the networks. "It's kind of a wait-and-see thing. Right now we're just very cautious about it."

What's causing the concern is a decline since last year in the figure for the Homes Using Television—HUT—of a 8 percent during daytime and nearly 4 percent at night. This can have a direct impact on revenue.

Just as magazines guarantee their circulation, networks base the cost of a commercial minute on an estimated audience. If the size declines, advertisers won't pay as much for a minute.

"If we continue to see a decline in the long term, then this could have the effect of reduced advertising expenditures for TV," said Michael Drexler, senior vice president of Doyle Dane Bernbach advertising agency. "But this is not going to happen overnight."

The networks say they are waiting for the results in about two weeks of the November "sweeps," in which 100,000 households nationally keep diaries that measure the audience of local stations. Through their Committee on National Television Audience Measurement, the networks also ask Nielsen on Nov. 1 for data to back up its numbers.

Several advertising agencies—and Nielsen—say they are already convinced the numbers are accurate on the basis of a similar diary analysis in October of 23 cities, including New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. In addition, a second ratings service, Arbitron, showed a downward trend that confirmed Nielsen's October figures.

A Nielsen spokesman put the declines at roughly 1.2 million daytime viewers and a quarter of a million at night since a year ago.

"It does not appear to be a function of methodology and research," Doyle Dan's Drexler said. "In fact, it's real."

Added NBC research chief Bill Rubens, who referred to the network committee's study and the Nielsen November sweeps. "Until the work is completed, I think anybody's opinion of what is going on is merely speculation."

Peoria places weather in hands of early groundhog

PEORIA, Ill. (AP)—Will Chuckie the groundhog play in Peoria? He'd better or Mayor Richard Carver will be miffed.

Tired of cold weather, Carver has proclaimed Thursday Groundhog Day in Peoria.

His declaration reads: "Even if the groundhog sees his shadow on that day, we will have no more than six weeks of winter in this glorious and progressive community of Peoria."

The projected weather forecast is for clouds and possible rain.

The traditional Groundhog Day is Feb. 2 when the woodchuck awakens from his winter slumber, sticks his head out of his home in the ground and looks around. If the sun is shining and he can see his shadow, he is frightened and crawls back into the hole.

This is supposed to mean there will be six more weeks of winter weather. If it is cloudy, however, the groundhog stays out of his hole, indicating that spring weather will soon come.

But where is Carver going to get a groundhog this time of year? They're all supposed to be hibernating.

The Glen Oak Park Zoo has the answer: "Chuckie" a 20-pound, 2-year-old groundhog.

"He's in his winter quarters and has burrowed a hole in the bedding and straw in his cage," said Barbara Jesse, 23, one of the keepers of the 500 species of wildlife at the city-run zoo.

"Chuckie is not in deep hibernation. He's just drowsy and eats only twice a week instead of twice a day. But I think we can wake him up enough to take him outside Thursday for a command performance for the mayor. We wouldn't do it for anybody else. I hope Chuckie won't drop off to sleep. He may be too sleepy to be scared by his shadow if the sun is out."

Carver said he wasn't especially a believer in the groundhog legend.

Physician relates kidney disease to blood pressure

CHICAGO (AP)—High blood pressure is being increasingly recognized in children as physicians become more aware of it, a Los Angeles radiologist said Wednesday.

And when it is diagnosed, kidney disease often is found to be the cause of it, he said.

The radiologist, Dr. Philip Stanley, presented a study of 31 children and adolescents with hypertension caused by disease of the blood vessels of the kidney at the annual meeting of the Radiological Society of North America.

Stanley, who is affiliated with Children's Hospital of Los Angeles and the University of Southern California, said the study he conducted with his colleagues is the largest ever presented. The children involved ranged in age from less than 1 year to 19 years, including 18 males and 13 females.

An estimated 1 to 2 per cent of all children are hypertensive, he said, and 75 to 80 per cent of them have a secondary cause. Of these causes, kidney disease is the most common, he said.

Those with kidney disease as the underlying cause have extremely high blood pressure—110 or greater, much higher than those of those who have essential hypertension, that which has no underlying cause, he said.

These children have normal urinalyses, so the disease may not be immediately suspected without other tests.

It is important that children with high blood pressure caused by kidney disease be identified because surgical treatment can cure it in 95 to 100 per cent of cases, Stanley told a news conference.

This treatment usually involves a bypass graft of a vein to replace the diseased blood vessel, although removal of one kidney sometimes is necessary.

The radiologist said pediatricians should be more aware of the possibility that young children may suffer from high blood pressure and take this measurement, at least periodically, as part of examinations.

If the disease escapes diagnosis, he pointed out, it can lead to stroke.

'Miniature ecosystem' shows chemical effect on environment

CHAMPAIGN (AP)—University of Illinois researchers have developed an aquarium-sized glass box containing a miniature environment to test chemicals which might endanger future generations.

The tiny world, known as a miniature ecosystem, was developed by Robert Metcalf, professor, as a way to test some of the more than 28,000 chemical compounds which are created each year and added to the two million already in existence.

"About 1,000 of the new ones made each year will be environmentally important because they will be made on a big enough scale that they could cause problems," he said in an interview.

Since creating the tiny world in 1967, Metcalf has worked with the Environmental Protection Agency, the Food and Drug Administration and the World Health Organization in efforts to test the effects of various chemical compounds on the environment. He has tested about 200 chemicals.

The tiny world usually contains a mound of sand in which sorghum plants are grown. They represent all food crops. There also is a lake, complete with fish and other forms of aquatic life. Caterpillars crawl along the sandy bank.

To perform a test, Metcalf labels a chemical with a radioactive atom, then puts it into the ecosystem. The radioactive atom allows him to easily trace the path of the chemical through the plants, soil, water and fish.

Such testing for the chain-reaction effect of chemicals had not been done before, he said.

If he is testing a herbicide, he may apply it directly to the sand in which the sorghum is growing. If it's a chemical given off by industrial smokestacks, he may apply it to the air in the glass box. Or if it's a pesticide, it may go directly onto the plants.

"We've branched out way beyond the pesticides," he said. "We've looked at the heavy metals like lead and cadmium...possible carcinogens. It's a very versatile tool."

What this tool does, at a cost of about $250 for a 40-day test, is trace the movement of a chemical through the various forms of plant and animal life in the box.

The effects of rain and erosion may carry a herbicide from the ground, down the hill into the lake. Then, one of the important determinations is how well the compound dissolves in water.

Metcalf says if it doesn't dissolve well in water, but does get into animal fat quickly, there is a potential danger. Such a chemical, once washed into the lake, would be absorbed into the body of fish, which may be eaten by other forms of life, including humans.

For example, Metcalf tested one chemical that is given to animals to fatten them quickly. "We know for sure it causes cancer in humans. We found that it would go right through the animal, be excreted and come out in the fish, which is a bit disturbing," he said.

Because of the nature of Metcalf's research and the results it produces, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Food and Drug Administration have provided funds to support the work.

He also has worked with the World Health Organization, which was looking for a pesticide to kill black fly larvae along rivers in Africa. The flies were carrying a disease that caused blindness.

Metcalf tested one proposed pesticide and found that it did not break down in water, but determined that a slightly modified version was much more biodegradable and safer.

Some of Metcalf's work simply has confirmed what scientists believe would be the characteristics of a chemical in the environment.

But he also has gotten some surprises, identifying several hundred new environmental products, "whose identities weren't suspected as break-down products before." In other words, chemicals which have a given set of characteristics by themselves may produce entirely different effects when they combine with elements in the ecosystem and produce other compounds.

"It's like playing a complicated game to find out what the new compounds are," he said.

Bigfoot sightings scare small town residents

LITTLE EAGLE, S.D. (AP)—Indians in this remote hamlet on the Standing Rock Reservation are so convinced that Bigfoot is roaming nearby that some are carrying guns or moving out.

"I couldn't stand its running around shrieking all night," the Rev. Angus Long Elk said of the coyote-like screaming noise attributed to the legendary creature. "It was doing it all the time," he said. "And about two weeks ago my wife saw it at night while she was down by the river. She's been afraid ever since and wanted to leave."

So with others, the Long Elks are moving away from Little Eagle until the Bigfoot furor settles down. Some who have decided to stay are carrying rifles or tranquilizer guns.

Twenty-eight sightings of Bigfoot — an ape-like creature whose existence has never been documented despite sporadic sightings in North America — have been reported in Little Eagle since September.

During the past, numerous sightings of such creatures have been reported throughout the West, particularly in the Pacific Northwest. Many have been proven hoaxes, most recently a May 15 claim by a half-dozen passengers on a bus headed toward Vancouver, British Columbia. Four men later admitted they had staged the incident with a $200 monkey suit and should-be pads.

The Sioux on the 2.3 million acre

Standing Rock Reservation, which straddles the border between North and South Dakota, call the creature "Taku He." In the Pacific Northwest, it is known as "Sasquatch."

Regardless of its name, many of the 60 Little Eagle residents fear that Bigfoot — or several of the creatures — are hiding in the thick scrub cottonwoods that surround the community, says Gary Alexander, whose general store has become the local Bigfoot information center.

Alexander said the creatures have been described as between six and nine feet tall and weighing 600-900 pounds. He said one of the larger animals is reported to be dark in color and another is light-colored. A third Bigfoot reportedly is smaller, at about six feet and 400 pounds, he said.

LeMar Chasing Hawk said he was confronted by a Bigfoot lurking 10 feet away on a path bordered by scrub bushes outside his backyard. He said the incident occurred one September night and that he has carried a rifle for protection ever since.

"I didn't stay around long enough to find out what it looked like," he added. "I turned around and ran for home and didn't look back."

Little Eagle residents have decided on a variety of ways to cope with the Bigfoot problem.

The Long Elks, residents for five years, are moving to McLaughlin, 14 miles to the south.

Handheld X-ray machine produces instant images

WASHINGTON (AP) — A handheld X-ray machine which produces an instant image has been developed by a scientist who got the idea while studying energy sources in space.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration, in announcing the new device, said it has high potential for emergency and other field use in medicine, dentistry and industry.

Possible applications might include examination of a football player's bone injury on the field, detection of welding defects or gas leaks in pipes or as a portable battlefield instrument in wartime.

The device is called a Lixiscope, for low intensity X-ray imaging scope. It was developed by Dr. Lo I Yin, an X-ray researcher at NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md.

It is an outgrowth of Yin's research on a concept for studying energy sources in space by converting their X-rays to visible images.

"Any device developed for X-ray astronomy studies, where there is a scarcity of X-rays, should have techniques of obvious value in medical fluoroscopy where there are many X-rays," Yin said.

He said the concept became feasible when the Army released previously classified details of an image intensifier which enables soldiers to see objects in the dark. It was developed by the Night Vision Laboratory at Fort Belvoir, Va. In addition to the night vision unit, the portable X-ray machine includes a small radioactive source and an X-ray phosphor screen. It is powered by a single pen-sized battery.

The squeeze of a trigger unshields the radioactive source, sending a low dosage of X-rays into the object being examined, Yin explained. The X-rays passing through the object are absorbed by the phosphor screen, which converts them to visible light.

The night vision unit, which employs fiber optics, intensifies and channels the visible light to its viewing screen for image display. Instant pictures of X-rayed objects can be made quickly with an attached camera, using a radioactive exposure about 1,000 times weaker than the conventional X-ray machine, Yin said.

Several research institutes in the dental and medical fields have indicated an interest in participating in a cooperative program to evaluate the Lixiscope.

They include the National Institute of Dental Research, Bethesda, Md.; the Duke University Medical Center, and the College of Dentistry and the Cancer Research Center, both part of Howard University in Washington, D.C.

NASA has built a prototype model of the unit. Officials estimated production units would cost less than $5,000.

Police whitewash town in anti-crime campaign

FORT MADISON, Iowa (AP)—Fort Madison police have painted a six-foot-wide white strip on the back side of downtown buildings in a four-block area. There's no beautification campaign under way, it's an anti-crime measure.

"The purpose of the white paint is to make a person stand out," Capt. Paul Bartholomew said of "Operation White Way."

The alley behind the buildings was full of nooks and crannies, overgrown with vines, brush and trash. But since the white paint and security lights were added and the area was cleaned out, the business location rate in this southeast Iowa city of 14,000 has been cut in half and local merchants have saved an estimated $14,000, police say.

Bartholomew said his 25-person force investigated an average of 91 burglaries each year for the past four years. But so far this year, just 46 burglaries occurred, he said. Because of the lights and white paint, he said, six burglary suspects were apprehended at the scene during June alone.

Archway 'queen' gains honor

By Michael Gonsales
Staff Writer

Elizabeth Meehan says that when she enters the Archway Center for handicapped children she gets a greeting that the Queen of England would envy.

To the handicapped children who live there and attend classes at Archway 80-year-old, silver-haired, Meehan is as respected as any queen.

Recently Meehan's volunteer work at Archway, located on Tower Rd. in Carbondale, was recognized by the Illinois Council for Exceptional Children (ICEC).

"We wish to honor you for your outstanding work with handicapped children at Archway School," begins a letter from Beverly H. Johns, ICEC awards chairperson.

The letter informed Meehan that she had been selected as the recipient of the ICEC's citation award the highest award given to a non-member of the ICEC.

"I was amazed I didn't even know there was such an award!" Meehan, who is called grandma by the children and staff, said.

Meehan, who volunteers her services from 8:30 a.m. to noon Monday through Friday, will be presented with the award Thursday at 5 p.m. in faculty lounge of the Wham Building.

Born in Chicopee, Mass., in 1907, Meehan retired as an assistant professor of education in 1968, after 35 years with SIU.

After her husband, Timothy E. Meehan, died of a heart attack in 1955, Meehan decided to take up teaching as a profession to help support her daughter and two sons.

She became interested in exceptional children, children who are both physically and mentally handicapped, when they were being brought to the church she was attending in the St. Francis Xavier Church, 383 S. Poplar. Meehan has worked at the Archway Center since '71.

Elizabeth Meehan

"My title at the center is volunteer grandmother," Meehan said. During the day she will help feed the children, massage their bodies and talk with them.

She said she is paid for her volunteer work with the love the children at the center give her.

Meehan said, "God has been so good to me. This is my way of saying thanks."

Dolly comes back to fresh goat milk and loving family

BELLEVILLE (AP)—Hello Dolly. Well, hello Dolly. It's so nice to have you back where you belong. Dolly the deer was returned Wednesday to her owner, John Kreher. She had been stolen from his yard Monday night.

"I bought her when she was three weeks old and for four months have been caring for her," said Kreher, who has goats at some other farms on his property. "Someone just lifted her over the fence and took her away. It broke me up."

"I offered a $50 reward for her return," he continued. "But this morning my son woke me up and told Dolly had been returned. I could tell by the marks she had been lifted over the fence and had been led for the house. She rushed to me, and she followed me to the barn like a dog."

Lawyer found innocent in hospital killing

CHICAGO (AP)—A lawyer who has advocated the rights of the mentally ill was ordered Tuesday to undergo psychiatric treatment after being found innocent of murder charges by reason of insanity.

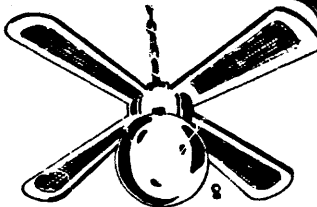

Edward J. Bennett, 34, a former law professor at De Paul University, was found innocent on Nov. 10 of charges that he killed a fellow psychiatric patient.

Circuit Court Judge Louis

Garippo on Tuesday ordered Bennett to undergo out patient psychiatric treatment with his psychiatrist.

During Bennett's trial, four psychiatrists testified that Bennett was suffering from a "manic-depressive illness" when he fatally stabbed William Bennett, no relation, a fellow mental patient at Northwestern Memorial Hospital last May.

Carbondale roots begin in Northeast side

By Mike Gussman
Staff Writer

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of articles on Carbondale's northeast side.

The seed from which Carbondale grew into one of Southern Illinois' major cities was planted in the northeast side of town.

Wood structures were built directly to the east of the Illinois Central railroad tracks around 1852. The streets were mud, the trees were many and houses few.

Black families moving north began settling in Carbondale's northeast side shortly after the close of the Civil War. Many of the blacks found employment at the Meyer and Lord Railroad Tie Factory, N. Marion St., built on the northeast side of town.

The neighborhood remained racially mixed until the early 50's when the whites moved out, say several residents who have lived in the northeast side since the turn of the century.

Born in 1912, William Hayes has lived in the northeast side all of his life. "It has always been a residential area, although family-owned general stores, adjacent to their homes, were common," Hayes recalled.

One of the more memorable general stores was the one located at 401 N. Gum St. Neighborhood children used to buy penny candy, cakes and bubble gum at the store which was run by a man called "Old Man Ivy." The brown shingled structure still stands.

Joyce Bryant remembers the store as the place where they would go to hang out on Saturday night. "Or we would dance at the Blue Moon Cafe on Wall Street. We were good kids who would occasionally fight, but we never got into drugs or anything."

Bryant has lived in northeast Carbondale all her life. "I lived on Brush Street for 20 years. And now, I've lived the last 18 years on North Marion."

She remembers that hobos would wander from the train tracks and into the neighborhood. "My mother would feed and sometimes give the hobos money." Bryant said, recalling the "very peaceful neighborhood where no one ever locked their doors."

William Hayes

Bryant graduated with 18 other students from Atucks High School, 410 E. Main St. The all-black high school is now Carbondale High School's Vocational Center.

"Only two of my classmates still live in this neighborhood," said Bryant, adding, "At first it was my ambition to leave. Now, I don't think I could live anywhere else."

Hayes is also happy living in the neighborhood. He is the patriarch of one of the northeast sides more prominent families. The Earma Hayes Center is named after his wife, his son Richard is an affirmative action officer with SIU and his two other sons and six daughters have entered professional and para-professional fields.

Hayes recalled his wife's early days in the community when she would accompany her father, Azias Clinton Jones, a minister with the African Methodist Episcopal Church, as he visited the sick and worshipped with fellow church members.

Nettie Morgan, Hayes' daughter said, "By accompanying her father, she was, in a sense, involved in community service. She would later join the PTA and the League of Women Voters."

Earma Hayes died in January of 1970. Two weeks before her death she went to Washington, D.C., to take part in a White House conference on food, nutrition and health.

"It was decided by Carbondale's Model Cities Staff to name the center after my mother as a result of her bringing residents from the northeast neighborhood together with the professional and University communities to look at the neighborhood's problems," Morgan said.

Recalling her own childhood, Morgan said, "I can remember Gum and Green Streets becoming so flooded we would put on our swimming suits and jump in."

She also recalls, "We all couldn't afford to see movies, so my father would go and then come home and tell us the plot in vivid, colorful language."

Her father also remembers those days.

"It didn't seem so difficult back then because everyone was in the same boat," Hayes said.

He does, however, remember working eight hours a day at the Illinois Central Railroad, "maintaining the steam engines and then the desels when they came along," and then coming home to work three more hours mowing lawns and cleaning basements.

Jones-coached U.S. team finishes 2nd in Intercontinental Cup Games

By Bud Vandervelt
Staff Writer

Coach RIch Jones' baseball teams are usually strong in the fundamentals of the game. However, it was a fundamental mistake that deprived the United States team, coached by Jones, of a chance to win the Intercontinental Cup Games last Friday in Managua, Nicaragua.

The U.S. had the best overall record in the competition (12-3), but the Americans lost the championship game to South Korea, 5-4, on a two-run single late in the game. The U.S. had beaten South Korea twice earlier in the competition.

The nine teams in the competition played a round-robin schedule to start the tournament and the U.S. won all eight games in the initial round. After the round-robin, the six countries with the best records played a series of games in which each team was eliminated after suffering two defeats.

The Americans won four more games in the second round and dropped a 4-0 decision to Nicaragua. South Korea reached the title game and avenged the two earlier losses to the U.S.

The winning hit for the Koreans came after they successfully executed a double steal against the U.S.

"We told our players before the game that if they (South Korea) had runners on first and second and tried a double steal, we wanted them to try to throw out the guy at second instead of third," Jones said. "They pulled that double steal late in the game and our catcher was ready to throw to second, but nobody was covering. Then they got the base hit and won the game."

Jones said he was pleased with his team's performance, especially since the U.S. players had little time to prepare for the competition. The squad worded out in Florida for five days before leaving for Nicaragua, while the other teams at the competition had the advantage of playing together longer since they were the national teams of their respective countries.

One of Jones' players was Saluki catcher Steve Stieb, a senior from San Jose, Calif. Jones had two other catchers on his squad and he said he divided the playing time among all three. He said Stieb played as well as the other catchers, but he felt an obligation to play all three.

The Saluki mentor said he was impressed with several of his players. His best hitters were Mark Johnston, an outfielder from South Alabama, Les Pearsey, an infielder-outfielder from Arizona, and Terry Bogner, an outfielder from Oklahoma.

Jones said his two best starting pitchers were Bill Bordley, a left-hander from Oklahoma. The U.S. team also received bullpen help from Jack Lazorko of Mississippi State. The 21-year-old righthander led the team in wins and saves.

The U.S. won the Intercontinental Cup games in 1975 and Jones was an assistant coach that year. He said the South Koreans have made much progress in baseball since then.

"They weren't even competitive in 1975, but they certainly are today," Jones said. "Their pitching is a lot better than it has been in the past. Before, they only had two or three pitchers, but this year they came in with five or six who did a commendable job."

"They also hit and run the bases much better than they did in 1975. The must have learned a lot by watching baseball in Japan."

Jones said Japan and Puerto Rico also had respectable teams. He said he was impressed by the way the tournament was run in that the eating arrangements and living conditions were first class.

Just as politics often plays a role in the operation of the Olympics, it also had an effect on the Intercontinental Cup Games. Cuba had been expected to field a team, but it backed out three days prior to the competition because of the political strife in Nicaragua. Jones said the baseball competition was not affected by the country's political problems.

"We played in five different cities and we had no problems at all," he said. "I wish Cuba would have been there because it is supposed to have an outstanding team. I hear the Cubans have four or five players who could play in the major leagues right now."

Jones said the team did not have much time for sightseeing while in Nicaragua since there was a game almost every day. He said they did have a chance to see some of the damage caused by the earthquake in Managua in 1972.

Women gymnasts await season, hopes for 11th national title

By Steve Cooran
Staff Writer

When the women's gymnastics team opens its 15th competitive season at 3 p.m. Saturday at Southeast Missouri, it will be starting its attempt to capture its 11th national championship. Coach Herb Vogel has put the women on a four-phase development program.

Phase I has been a training program the women have been on since August and has been geared to develop the suspected potential of five "unknown" freshmen.

"Phase I emphasizes the development of strength, flexibility and endurance as well as the acquisition of high risk-high difficulty skills by both the freshmen and the returning apparatusmen," Vogel said.

"The next is somewhat a preseason competitive test to see exactly what we have accomplished and what adjustments must be made in Phase II of the training program," he said.

Phase II of the program is highlighted by two-a-day practices during the Christmas break and beginning Jan. 11, the team will embark on a competitive training program that includes 10 meets in 17 days.

"Phase II dual meets," Vogel explained, "are designed to bring much-needed experience to our unknown freshmen and refine our routines before engaging in Phase III."

Phase III is scheduled for February when the Salukis have six meets scheduled. The results of the meet will take on added significance because the scores will be used later in the year to seed teams in the National Collegiate Championships should SIU qualify.

Phase IV, according to Vogel, will be the month of March when SIU will need to qualify from state to regional and if all goes well, the four-phase program should boost the Salukis into the National AAUW Championship in Seattle, Wash.

The improvement of the freshmen figures to play a vital role in teams' hopes for a successful season. Chris Wuenach, Pam Conklin, Patti Trivet, Ellen Barrett and Dolly Moran will all be starting their first year of collegiate competition.

Geth Sheppa, a gymnast for the SIU team for three seasons before a knee injury she sustained last year forced an end to her gymnastics career, is now an assistant coach for the team. She sees the lack of experience as being a problem but still has high hopes for the team.

"A couple of them have never worked some of the events," she said. "They need to gain some confidence. They need a little more endurance and experience."

"They work hard and are easy to coach," Sheppa said. "You don't know how good they will be until they get into competition."

The only three returnees from last season's team are junior Linda Nelson, sophomore Cindy Moran (Dolly's older sister) and Laura Hemberger.

Cindy Moran tried to compare this year's team with last year's team which finished 10th in the nationals—the lowest finish ever for an SIU women's gymnastics team.

"We have a lot less experience than last year," she said. "For the amount of time the team practices, their efforts didn't really prove that worthwhile as far as their scores nationally."

"But this year, just the way the coaching program is set up, we should do a lot better. When you haven't got that much experience, consistency is usually a problem," she said.

Vogel should get plenty of assistance in coaching the team. In addition to Sheppard, Carol Pietruszewski, former men's gymnast Steve Sheppard, and an SIU dance instructor will help instruct the gymnasts.

Injuries have already taken their toll on the Salukis as Dolly Moran will have to sit out at least the first two meets and Hemberger will not be available to compete until after the Christmas break.

The team's next scheduled meet will be the "Battle of the Sexes" when it will face the men's gymnastics team Monday night.

Saluki wrestlers to entertain strong Oklahoma State team

142 pounds—Saluki Paul Hibbe, 9-13 last year will wrestle Lee Ray Smith. Smith was 19-4 last year, won the Big 8 Conference and placed fifth in the NCAA meet.

150 pounds—Freshman Ricky Stewart will test Saluki Daie Ewert, who was 1-19 last year.

150 pounds—Saluki Russ Zintak, 10-17-1 last year, will wrestle Cowboy freshman Dave Schultz.

167 pounds—Cowboy Paul Mezin, 2-2 last year and a two time All America at 150 pounds, will test Saluki Joe Jones or Dennis Humaker.

177 pounds—Freshman Tim Jensen will wrestle Cowboy Daryl Nonasmith, 13-0-1, last year.

190 pounds—Eric Wain, 24-4-3 last year and a Big 8 champion, placed fourth at the NCAA's last season for the Cowboys. He will battle Saluki Tom Vizzi, 11-17-2 last year.

Hwt.—Two time NCAA champion Jimmy Jackson, a 300-pounder, will test Ken Karwowski, 7-20-1 last year. Karwowski trained Jackson 11-6 before getting pinned last season.

Long says his team will have to wrestle very well to defeat the Cowboy Grapplers.

"We can't afford to make mistakes," he said. "We have to be sound fundamentally with no miscalculation of technique, with a lot of poise and a great deal of patience."

"We'll have to execute very sharply with precision," he said.

Lambert: Lettermen will start in first SIU basketball game

By Jim Misunas
Sports Editor

Saluki basketball Coach Paul Lambert feels it's best to go with a sure thing.

Lambert plans to start five of six lettermen in the 7:35 p.m. Saturday basketball opener against Roosevelt at the Arena.

We're going to start five of the six lettermen, Lambert said. "The returning players have maintained their consistency and have looked really strong."

Two starters return from last year's team—Gary Wilson and Wayne Abrams. Wilson, a junior, averaged 12 points and eight rebounds per game last year. Abrams, from Atlanta, led SIU with 117 assists while averaging eight points a game.

Lambert said the other starters will be chosen from the other four lettermen—Barry Smith, Al Grant, Milton Huggins and Dan Kieszkowski.

Smith, from Eldorado, averaged two points and two rebounds a game. Grant, a 6-9 sophomore, averaged three points and four rebounds a game while being the first man off the bench last year.

Huggins shot 50 percent enroute to a five point average and Kieszkowski averaged two points a game in spot duty last year.

Lambert said Grant, who was troubled by tendonitis on the knee, has been practicing well lately and is vying for a starting spot. The other five returnees started in the Salukis' 80-71 victory over the Czechoslovakia national team Nov. 16 at the Arena.

The Czechs defeated SIU's Missouri Valley Conference rival Wichita State, 81-72, in one of its exhibition games.

Lambert rates freshman Christopher Giles, Scott Russ and Jac Cliatt as the top newcomers.

Giles is big enough to rebound well and is a good enough ballhandler to play," Lambert said. "His defense has improved better than any of the other freshman. Jac (Cliatt) and Scott (Russ) have also done well."

Lambert says the final Saluki intrasquad scrimmage at Du Quoin Nov. 23, helped him evaluate the freshman. Lambert pitted the lettermen against the freshmen in the third scrimmage game.

"The game showed that the freshman as a team can't sustain an attack offensively or defensively," he noted. "The experience of the veterans told."

"Individually we saw some good things, but not team-wise," Lambert said.

Lambert, who has compiled a 100-74 record in seven seasons at SIU, said he plans to work the freshman in with the lettermen as the situation dictates in the Roosevelt game.

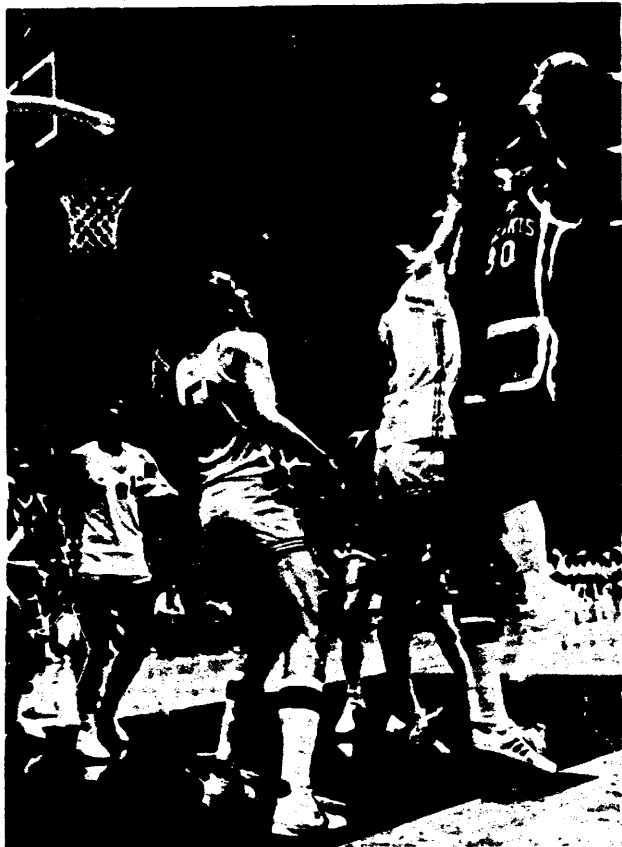

Besides Cliatt, Russ and Giles, other freshman recruits are Anthony Frazier, Charles Moore, James Orr, James Linn and Joe Ossola. Other squad members are Bob Mickleton, Brian Colbert and Wendell Cooper.

Roosevelt, which SIU defeated 95-58 last year, is 1-2 after three contests. Roosevelt beat MacMurray, 100-89 and lost 99-87 to Wisconsin-Superior and 93-88 to Lewis.

Lambert said Roosevelt can score a lot of points and likes to fast break, but he said he isn't really concerned what kind of game Roosevelt plays.

"You have to prepare yourself and be concerned with your own game," he said. "We'll be concerned about keeping ourselves under control. We'll want to move the ball offensively."

Lambert said he is unsure how his team will react to playing its first game. He said past teams have usually done well. Last year, SIU downed No. 18 ranked Missouri, 68-55, in the season opener.

Ernie Branston

Saluki forward Gary Wilson scored high to shoot a jump shot over Vlastibor Klimes of Czechoslovakia national team Nov. 16 at the Arena. The Salukis open the regular season Saturday night against Roosevelt at the Arena.

No. 2 ranked Cowboys to wrestle Salukis at Arena

By Jim Misunas
Sports Editor

The Oklahoma State Cowboys, the No. 2 ranked wrestling team in the country, stampede into Carbondale for a 7:30 p.m. Thursday dual match at the Arena against the Salukis.

Admission to the meet is 50 cents for SIU students with a fee statement and free for students who possess a $6 athletic event card. Admission is $1 for everyone else.

Saluk: Coach Linn Long, starting his ninth season at SIU, says the Cowboys reputation as one of the nation's top teams has been earned.

"Everybody says Oklahoma State is a powerhouse and I'd have to agree with that," he said. "They are very proud of their program and put a lot of emphasis on it. They have very sound wrestlers—they don't whip themselves."

The Cowboys are a well balanced team throughout all 10 weight classes, Long said.

"Year-in and year-out they have a very balanced line-up," Long said. "Any of their people are able to do the job. They're all pretty equal."

If Thursday's match was handicapped on the basis of past records Oklahoma State would be a top-heavy favorite to defeat the Salukis.

The Cowboys are ranked second in the nation by Amateur Wrestling News.

The ratings are based on returnees from the previous year's NCAA meet. The Cowboys return wrestlers who scored 67 points in the 1977 meet.

No. 1 rated Iowa State returns wrestlers who scored 70 points. The Cowboys were 15-2 in dual matches last year, as they lost to Iowa and Wisconsin.

The Salukis were 5-18 in dual matches last year and advanced one wrestler, Clyde Ruffin, to the NCAA meet. Ruffin won in one match and lost two in the meet.

The matchups for the meet will be: 118 pounds—Saluki John Gross, 20-1 last year, will wrestle Cowboy Kevin Nellis, a transfer.

126 pounds—Cowboy Doug Duell, 3-2 last year, will test Saluki Bill Ramsden, 16-20 in 1978-77.

134 pounds—John Starr, 5-4 last year for SIU, wrestles Roger Roberts, who was 9-2 for the Cowboys last year.

Dempsey cites many reasons for Saluki turnaround

By George Coolak
Staff Writer

Rey Dempsey and his coaching staff sat in the football office of the Arena making plans for recruiting. There were no more injuries to worry about. No more turnovers and poor execution of plays to contend with—for a while anyway.

And in the aftermath of the Salukis' lowly 3-8 record, Dempsey talked about the reasons for the turnaround from last season when the team was 7-4.

"I was disappointed by our record," Dempsey said, "because I feel that we could have won two more games than we did. Both Drake and Indiana State were within our reach (SIU lost 14-9 and 13-9, respectively)."

The second-year coach said he and the coaches "knew it was going to be hard to have a good season. We lost 14 starters and Gary Linton, who was supposed to take over where Andre Herrera left off, got hurt before the season started."

Injuries like Linton's were numerous and had a definite effect on the performance of the team throughout the season. Kevin House, the speedy sophomore split end from St. Louis, missed a number of games due to a shoulder operation. On defense gigantic Curt Underwood missed more than half the season at defensive tackle due to a leg injury and cornerback John Palermo suffered a knee injury against East Carolina that required surgery and forced him to miss the remainder of the season.

"Injuries were a key factor," Dempsey said, "and it was a struggle for us to be consistent. These others. It was also tough for them because when we'd lose, it was hard to bounce back."

But injuries weren't the only keys to the downfall of the team, which is in a rebuilding stage right now. Dempsey cited mistakes on both offense and defense as major factors.

"On offense we couldn't get the line blocking well enough to move the ball," he said. "Our quarterback was shaky throughout most of the year. There were just too many turnovers in the way of fumbles and interceptions and penalties on big plays. We were also inconsistent in execution of plays. We had parts of games where we executed well, but a good team has to execute on a high percentage. We couldn't develop it."

"On defense the guys played well most of the year, but the big play hurt us. It wasn't just the pass or just the option—they both killed us. We just couldn't hold at crucial times."

Dempsey stressed that it was not one of these factors by itself that one could pinpoint and say "this was the reason for the poor season," but it was a combination of these reasons.

"There were also many intangible things like the difficulty to get leadership on the team," Dempsey said. "Last year we had vocal leaders like Matt Bailey, John Flowers, Tommy Ippolito and Randy Habbe, and then we had a silent leader in Andre (Herrera) who was a quiet-type who showed his leadership through his running. This year, though, it seemed harder to build team unity. The reason was that we had so many younger players who were unfamiliar with both our system and playing with the others. It was also tough for them because when we'd lose, it was hard to bounce back."

The team also had a number of coaching changes, and this took some getting used to, Dempsey said, because it takes time for the coaches to learn the players and vice-versa.

Dempsey and his assistants are busy recruiting players for next season to help replace the seven graduating starters. On offense the Salukis will be minus the services of tight end Greg Warren, offensive tackle Chuck Blume, quarterback Bob Collins as well as reserve running back Linton.

Defensively, starters Dan Brown, the captain and linebacker who led the Salukis in tackles this year, defensive tackle Marty DeVolder and defensive back Timmy Cruz will be gone next year. Other reserves who played a major role in the season were linebacker Billy Hadfield and split end Jim Zumbahlen.

But the player who will probably be missed the most is punter Steve Mick. Mick averaged 41.5 yards per kick for the Salukis.

"We'll have a tough time replacing all of the graduates," Dempsey said. "They were all good players. Brown led the team in tackles, so his replacing will be tough. Cruz, too, will be hard to replace because defensive backs are hard to find. Mick's loss is an important loss. He was a consistent punter for us."
