High court decides in favor of press; publication resumes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled 6 to 3 Wednesday that The New York Times and The Washington Post may resume publishing articles on the origins of the Vietnam war based on documents classified top secret by the Pentagon.

With all nine justices stating their views, the majority held the government had not proved that the national interest would be damaged if parts of the Pentagon papers were not kept from the public.

The three dissenters said the court had acted too hastily. The key votes were cast by Justices Potter Stewart and Byron R. White. Last week they sided with the government and permitted temporary court restraint on publication of the series.

However, having heard arguments and examined secret documents filed by the Justice Department, they concluded they could not say "that disclosure of any of them will surely result in direct, immediate and irreparable damage to our nation or its people" — the core of the government's argument for permanent restraint.

"To sustain the government in these cases would start the courts down a long and hazardous road that I am not willing to travel at least without Congressional guidance and direction," White wrote with Stewart's concurrence.

Supporting the newspapers are they have from the start, were Justices Hugo Black, William O. Douglas, William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall. Siding with the government, as they did last week, were Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices John M. Harlan and Harry A. Blackmun.

The decision was hailed by the Times and Post as well as other newspapers enjoined by lower courts from further publication of articles based on the disputed documents. All planned resumption of interrupted publication.

At the White House, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon was "aware of course" of the court's action and said, "I have no comment on the Supreme Court decision."

Stauber criticizes handling of Allen case

By Sue Roll
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Leland Stauber, assistant professor of government, criticized the University's handling of the misconduct charges he made against Douglas M. Allen, assistant professor of philosophy. He took issue with Allen's interpretation of these charges in a statement to the Daily Egyptian Wednesday.

In a recent story in the Daily Egyptian, Allen placed the charges and the resulting hearing at the "level of Emily Post" where, Stauber said, was merely voicing disagreement with Allen's etiquette and life style.

Stauber had charged Allen with conduct unbecoming a faculty member for alleged remarks he made excusing disruptive behavior by students at a lecture by I. Milton Sacks, visiting professor of government, March 2.

Stauber said he charged Allen, not with participation or complicity in planning the disruption, but with making a "public statement expressing his belief in the legitimacy of conduct on the part of others in the audience at the lecture that constituted harassment of a speaker and disruption of a meeting sponsored by an academic department of this University."

Stauber had charged that Allen made this statement out of a "basic disrespect for the most elemental principles of academic freedom upon which a university simply must be founded."

Stauber said the fact that Allen regards this matter as at the level of Emily Post "is of the very essence of the charge I filed against him."

Allen said there is a question whether there was disruption at the lecture and, if there was disruption, whether his comments approved of it.

Allen said his remarks did not deal with the question of disruption but were directed to other threats to the academic freedom of the University as it becomes increasingly embroiled in government and big business.

"My actual charge involves solely Mr. Allen's attitude specifically toward the right of unhindered discussion of ideas with which Mr. Allen disagrees," said Stauber.

Stauber accused Allen of using "evasive propaganda" in misrepresenting the charges made against him.

Allen's statement that the charge was a complaint against his life style misrepresented the charges because it implied that Allen's general style was at issue when this was not the case, Stauber said.

"One aspect of Mr. Allen's style is, of course, involved, but this is an aspect that has no place in the public conduct of a member of the faculty," Stauber said.

Stauber also took issue with Allen's statement that Stauber's purpose could have been served through other means than formal charges, such as making his opinion known through letters and speeches.

Stauber said this implies that "certain rights should be given lip service but not enforced."

The University's handling of the case has obscured the real issues, Stauber said.

Stauber said Chancellor Robert G. Lyster had relied on the judgement of Edward Hammond, assistant to the chancellor on student relations, without bearing an account of the events by the faculty member who had presided at the lecture.

Hammond had considered Stauber's initial charges and found no violation of the Interim Policy on Demonstrations in Allen's conduct at the lecture.

Stauber said the chancellor "later admitted to me that he had not given Mr.

Hammond adequate guidelines as to how "disruptive conduct" was to be defined."

Stauber criticized the faculty committee which heard the case against Allen for not hearing testimony from witnesses. "This is a peculiar kind of hearing," Stauber said, "which could imply that uncomfortable issues were not being squarely faced."

A lack of clarity in administrative policies and a lack of consensus within the faculty itself exists as to what constitutes disruptive behavior at academically sponsored lectures, he said. This is coupled by a lack of means for enforcing such a policy, he added.

"I have the impression that this circumstance made the committee reluctant to stick its neck out," Stauber said.

Stauber said the committee was put on the defensive on the issue of open versus closed hearings and added that one of the committee members told them the committee had felt it was operating without adequate University guidelines.

Stauber said he believes the committee wanted a "way out" and once one was found it decided to drop the charges. The excuse was the imprecision, vagueness and indefiniteness of the Statutes of the Board of Trustees regarding conduct of faculty.

SIU appropriations bill passes Illinois House

An amended appropriations bill of $100,420,915 for SIU's operating and capital budget was passed Wednesday by the Illinois House of Representatives.

The appropriation includes an additional $2.7 million for personal services and approximately $300,000 for rental paid to the Illinois Building Authority. These amendments were passed by the House Appropriations Committee for consideration by the full House Saturday.

An amendment to a capital improvements bill to restore $906,816 for a security services building at SIU was also passed by the House.

The amended bills now go to the Senate and then to Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie for approval.

Pentagon papers claim U.S. considered nuclear weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top-secret Pentagon papers made public by Sen. Mike Gravel Wednesday disclosed early, high-level U.S. talk of using nuclear weapons in the Vietnam war if escalation brought about a major attack by Red Chinese forces.

"We would not allow ourselves to be blood while fighting them with conventional weapons," Dean Rusk, then secretary of state, told Premier Nguyen Khanh of South Vietnam as quoted in cable to Washington by Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge.

"This meant," the cable added, "that if escalation brought about a major Chinese attack, it would also involve the use of nuclear arms."

The Lodge account of the Rusk-Khanh meeting in Saigon was contained in portions of the Defense Department's study of Vietnam policy development which Gravel read into the record of a Senate subcommittee Tuesday night. The Alaska Democrat had declared the subcommittee in session as a one-man hearing. He is a dove on Vietnam.

His avowed aim was to begin putting the highly controversial documents on the record for the American people, and he said "I am convinced I am in no way jeopardizing this nation's security."

His action was challenged by Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott, who told newsmen Gravel might have violated Senate rules by his action. The Pennsylvania senator said Rule 36 prohibits senators from releasing confidential communications from the executive branch of the government.

Gravel, whose reading of the documents had continued until after 1 a.m., had been expected back on Capitol Hill about noon. In early afternoon, however, his press secretary, Marty Wolf, said Gravel had decided to stay home and make no further attempt until Thursday at the earliest to put more of the Pentagon paper on the record.

The Justice Department has taken legal action to stop various newspapers from publishing the still officially top-secret documents which were first leaked to the New York Times.

The Supreme Court ruled 6 to 3 Wednesday that the New York Times and the Washington Post may publish stories based on the secret Pentagon study. The majority opinion said the government had not proved justification for a restraint.

Information spread on the formal, public record of Congress is privileged for publication, and Gravel acted to give the documents he read into the subcommittee record that status.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana refused to comment on Gravel's action. He said he wanted to discuss the whole matter with a legal aide.

The House, meanwhile, killed 273 to 112 a resolution to direct President Nixon to turn over the full, top-secret 47-volume, 7,000-page Pentagon war study to Congress. Nixon has sent copies to both Senate and House but under restrictions as to their use.

The Justice Department and Defense Department declined to comment on Gravel's action. The White House had nothing to add.

The administration's initial reaction was to leave public controversy over this aspect of the great secrets dispute up to the Senate.

The contingency reference by Rusk to using nuclear weapons was paralleled by some other disclosures.

One of these was a message to U.S. ambassadors in six capitals which showed that 24 hours before President Lyndon B. Johnson launched his only successful peace talk bid of the war, he sent word to allied leaders that it would probably fail.

As part of the diplomatic preparation for Johnson's March 31, 1968, speech, which led to the Paris talks, his State Department sent the government chiefs of six countries participating in the war a secret preview.

In instructions given to U.S. Ambassadors in their capitals said: "You should make clear that Hanoi is most likely to denounce the project and thus free our hand after a short period."

"Nevertheless, we might wish to continue the limitation on bombing the North even after a formal denunciation in order to reinforce its sincerity and put the monkey firmly on Hanoi's back for whatever follows."

Another of the disclosures was that Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara raised with President John F. Kennedy as early as Nov. 8, 1961, the possibility of attacking North Vietnam.

Gen. Maxwell Taylor, a Kennedy adviser, had proposed limited introduction of U.S. troops into the Mekong Delta, then a source of Viet Cong strength and a region of heavy flooding.

A McNamara report to the President, made also on behalf of his deputy Roswell Gilpatric and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, recommended that Kennedy combine any commitment of troops "with a willingness to attack North Vietnam."

Still another point brought to light was that at the end of 1964—when many high U.S. officials estimated the war was being lost by Saigon—Taylor, then ambassador to Saigon, and his deputy U. Alexis Johnson—both hawks—evidently got so frustrated with the Saigon leadership that they suggested a possible U.S. cutoff.

After an abrasive dispute with Premier Khanh they cabled Rusk that one policy alternative was to pull apart from the Saigon government and withdraw the bulk of American advisers, though continuing economic and military aid. At the same time they warned such a course could mean the South Vietnamese leaders would think they were being abandoned and "would rush to compete with each other in making deals with the NLF"—the National Liberation Front.

The Rusk consultation with Khanh in Saigon in May 1964 occurred at a time of great political and military erosion in South Vietnam following the overthrow and assassination of President Ngo Dinh Diem in November.

Khanh told Rusk the war could not be won unless it was expanded beyond South Vietnam. He specifically asked for a U.S. decision supporting an immediate attack on Laos. Rusk was quoted by Lodge as telling Khanh the United States had suffered 164,000 casualties (including the Korean War) since 1945 and would not again become involved in a land war in Asia.

That beginning led to his assertion about using nuclear weapons if Red China launched a major attack.

Russian cosmonauts found dead

MOSCOW (AP) — The death of three cosmonauts as they were about to land after a record 24 days aloft threw the Soviet Union's future space efforts into uncertainty Wednesday.

How long the Russians wait before sending more men to work on the orbiting laboratory Salute—which the cosmonauts quit Tuesday—presumably will depend on how quickly investigators can find and rectify the problem that killed the crew of the spacecraft Soyuz 11.

Foreign experts believed that oxygen systems failure on the Soyuz 11 probably caused the cosmonauts to die as the controls after the spacecraft had braked for entry into the atmosphere.

The three were found dead in the Soyuz 11 early Wednesday after it made a soft landing in a remote region. It had experienced no difficulty undocking from Salute, which the three entered June 7 to conduct extensive space experiments.

The official news agency Tass announced that an investigation had been ordered. It said all communications with the crew ended after the braking mechanism for re-entry was shut off.

Joseph Kestek, president of the Astronautical Rocket Association of Croatia in Yugoslavia, said he believed the crew died instantly because of a failure in their oxygen supply units. He thought it possible the cosmonauts were unable to react quickly because of their long period of weightlessness.

Human failure blamed

Fire rages; water lacking

Louis Miller, chairman of the Crab Orchard water district board, said Tuesday that "human failure" may have been responsible for a water main not operating Sunday morning when fire destroyed a Lakeland Heights home occupied by three SIU students.

The house, belonging to Donald Booth of Carbondale, and personal items belonging to student tenants Richard Kramer, Richard Laskau and Howard Weiss were destroyed in the blaze but the three escaped without injury. The off-campus housing office has not located the students' current address.

Fire officials reported that when they arrived at the scene of the fire shortly after 5 a.m. Sunday, the back porch and kitchen of the house were on fire. However, they added that much of the house could have been saved if water had been available.

The 1,300 gallons of water carried in the fire truck was insufficient to control the fire, officials reported.

The cause of the fire has not been determined.

Miller said there had been a number of breaks reported in water main during the past months, and these broken mains had to be shut off. He speculated that the water main leading to the hydrant near the Booth home may have been mistakenly shut off.

"My house could have been saved if I had the water," said Booth, and added that the home was University approved and in "good condition." Booth said he has a lawyer looking into the matter to determine "why the water wasn't turned on."

Senate-House disagreement halts draft for one week

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's draft headed into at least a week's limbo at midnight Wednesday after House-Senate conferees failed to reach agreement on a proposed deadline for American withdrawal from Vietnam.

The conferees broke off compromise efforts until next Wednesday, raising the possibility that Congress might not take final action on a bill extending the draft for two years until the following week.

It was the first draft suspension since 1948.

Armed Services chairman of both the House and Senate, Rep. F. Edward Herbert, D-La., and Sen. John C. Stennis, D-Miss., indicated compromises had been discussed to the Senate's draft amendment asking for U.S. withdrawal from the war in nine months in return for release of American prisoners.

But the two conference leaders said Senate conferees stuck by that body's 57-42 approval of the war pullout amendment by Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana. And House conferees refused to budge from the lower chamber's 219-176 rejection of the Mansfield amendment.

Antiwar senators vowed to filibuster any draft extension bill not bearing an acceptable version of Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield's amendment asking President Nixon to negotiate for a nine-month U.S. pullout from Indochina in return for the release of American prisoners.

The Selective Service System said it has halted all drafting and will make no effort to restart it until Congress acts.

A draft spokesman said the Pentagon's 16,000-man call for July and August will not be sent to the states until Congress acts or President Nixon at the Pentagon's request authorizes emergency callup of students and other men with expiring deferments to meet manpower needs.

While House sources have said President Nixon probably will not authorize a call of previously deferred men.

Only the actual draft was threatened.

The Selective Service System for sending men through physicals and other preinduction procedures to maintain a pool for the draft remains in business although some state boards suspended all activity

Bill passed to curb rock fests

SPRINGFIELD, ILL. (AP) — Legislation to curb rock festivals by bringing them under strict health and safety standards was approved with unanimous support in the Illinois Senate Wednesday.

The measure requires mass gatherings to obtain permits and contains an amendment to exclude its application to Cook County

Under the bill, promoters of rock festivals would have to get a permit from the state department of health 30 days in advance and would have to show evidence of sufficient insurance coverage.

The permit would cost $100.

Besides that, the promoters of mass meetings would have to meet health and sanitary ordinances of counties. The bill says that counties may adopt ordinances to regulate the gatherings.

At the gathering, organizers would have to provide medical facilities, water supplies, safe food, land space and grant unlimited access to the grounds by police.

Up to $5,000 in fines and up to a year in jail could be imposed against violators of the proposed law.

Secret documents published

Under questioning, he added the White House stands by earlier expressions of concern about publication of the documents, including claims that the national security and conduct of foreign affairs would be impaired.

The Justice Department, which prosecuted the government case, had no immediate comment.

The Defense Department also withheld comment although a spokesman said the 47-volume report prepared in 1967 is "still classified as far as we are concerned." It's in the process of partial declassification which officials have said would take about 45 days.

The report was made available to Congress earlier this week but still on a basis of tightly restricted viewing by members only.

Hours before the court acted Sen. Mike Gravel, D-Alaska, has released hitherto secret reports on U.S. Vietnam involvement, using an impromptu subcommittee hearing as a vehicle for giving the material to newsmen.

The very last Paris peace talk

By Arthur Hoppe
Chronicle Features

It was in the 43rd year of our lightning campaign to wipe the dread Viet Narian guerrillas out of West Vhtnng. In Paris the 236th weekly peace talk was just beginning.

"How was the weekend, you Capitalist imperialist aggressor?" politely inquired the East Vhtnngian delegate, Bot Tom Sop.

"Oh, the usual, you creeping Communist menace, you," replied U.S. Ambassador Henry Cabbage in friendly fashion. "Escargot at Maxim's. Sunday afternoon at Longchamp."

"You really should try the canard a la base at the Tour d'Argent, you revanchist Wall Street lackey," helpfully suggested the benevolent, buxom (48-28-36) Viet Narian negotiator, How Bot Diem. "Talk about your base canards..."

"Enough of this comradely chit chat," said the West Vhtnngian Ambassador, General Kris Ma Phut, glancing at his watch. "Let's get this weekly peace talk over with. I've got a date in 17 minutes with a Montparnasse pussycat. As the French say, 'O-ra-ra!' Whose turn is it to go first?"

"Mine," said Bot Tom Sop. "Let's see, we were talking about withdrawal. Okay, if you Americans will withdraw from Vhtnng, we'll talk about releasing your POWs who are eating us out of house and home."

"Oh, no you don't," said Ambassador Cabbage. "You release our POWs and we'll talk about withdrawing from Vhtnng, which is going to cost us the election if we don't."

"Fair is fair," said Miss How Bot Diem. "If you Americans withdraw your troops from Vhtnng, we Asian guerrillas will unconditionally withdraw our troops from America."

"Hold on!" said Ambassador Cabbage. "You don't have any troops in America. That won't work."

"Wait, I've got it!" cried General Kris Ma Phut. "If you Americans will withdraw your troops from America, we loyal West Vhtnngians will withdraw our troops from Vhtnng. Frankly, we never could abide the place anyway."

"Well," said Ambassador Cabbage, rubbing his hands. "looks like we've reached a stalemate again. See you next week, gang, same time, same place."

Unfortunately, a complete transcript of this, the 236th weekly peace talk, was made public. And when the four negotiators met the following week, each was trembling and sweating.

"I take it we have all received the same instructions from our Governments," said Ambassador Cabbage glumly. "We are to agree to an immediate, unconditional withdrawal?"

"Yes," sighed Bot Tom Sop. "From Paris."

"But where is this place where we are henceforth to hold our peace talks," asked General Kris Ma Phut apprehensively. "this South Burpee, Texas?"

"All I can inform you," said Ambassador Cabbage sadly, "is that the finest gourmet delicacy in South Burpee, Texas, is something called a Fightin' Sam Houston Chiliburger."

Exactly four minutes later a peace treaty was signed ending the 43-year-old war, pledging eternal friendship and withdrawing all troops from West Vhtnng, East Vhtnng and South Burpee, Texas.

The easy road of demand

By Jenkin Lloyd Jones
Los Angeles Times Syndicate

THE MAY 23 issue of Chicago's Spanish-language newspaper, El Informador, carries a list of demands, presumably by "the Puerto Rican community," upon the Chicago school board.

The demands number 33, winding up with an ultimatum that the United States get out of Vietnam forthwith, although how the Chicago school board accomplishes that is not clear.

Included are the following:

THE NAME of Tuley High School must be changed to Eugenio de Hostos to honor a Puerto Rican educator.

Tuley must have a Puerto Rican principal and assistant principal. The school must be "bilingual and bicultural," and the school newspaper must be printed in two languages.

Parents and students must have greater supervision over curriculum and disciplinary rules.

The "track" system, conceived as a means of accommodating students of different learning speeds, must go. There must be a "Puerto Rican studies" program.

The school board must do something about the high dropout rate of Puerto Ricans. "Students are more likely to stay in school if they have a Spanish-background teacher to whom they can relate."

"When a large number of students rise up in anger and protest against their principal," reads the manifesto, "it is his duty and that of his administration to mend their ways."

NO DOUBT Tuley High School could be improved. Maybe the teachers are non simpatico and the principal autocratic.

But whoever these organizers are who have arranged the student demonstrations and insisted upon administrative jobs for Puerto Ricans in petitions in which the word, "qualified," never appears, it might be illuminating if they took a look at the history of Chicago's public education.

ALL THROUGH the 19th century the European immigrants came—piling off the boats from New Buffalo and the trains of the Grand Trunk and the Lakeshore Line. They stood bewildered amid their bales and trunks.

These men and women could read few signs, and many could read nothing at all. They couldn't understand the cops or the horsecar conductors. They were easy prey for the job-contract swindlers who spoke to them in their own languages.

But somehow they found tenements and shanties and one of the first things they did was polish up little Hans and Luigi and Lena and Helga and send them off to school.

IT WASN'T easy for Hans, Luigi, and the rest. Kids called them krauts and wogs, bunkies and kikes. They had to learn, not only to read but to speak, an entirely new language, and sometimes they got the language of the railroad yards mixed up with the language of the classroom, and then red-faced and angry schoolmarmes walloped them with straps.

Yet although Mama and Papa couldn't even read the primers there were no demands for "Polish studies" or "Italian studies" or "Greek studies." Instead, they were button-busting proud that their kids were beginning to learn how to make their way in this strange new land.

And if a teacher complained of juvenile misbehavior the first reaction of most old immigrant families was not to get the teacher fired, but to smack the brat.

MOST OF the products of this stiff old system went on to live humble lives. They carried hods and ice, drove cabs and delivered milk. A few went bad and learned to cook alky and knock off trucks. But Chicago grew like an anthill, and as in all anthills it was diligence that built it.

So today at the top of the Chicago business, professional, social and philanthropic pyramids you find the descendants of those old-world immigrants who thought that schools should be run by principals and teachers and that it was the family's responsibility to see that the homework was done.

THE Puerto Ricans, too, have come to Chicago voluntarily. They came because there are too many Puerto Ricans in Puerto Rico and better livings seem to beckon elsewhere. But shortly after arrival, according to the current mode, gratitude tends to evaporate and picket lines are joined.

No one seems to ask if little Pablo is doing poorly in class because, perhaps, his parents were not overendowed with brains, or because the apartment is a mess, or the television blares, or Padre has gone over the hill, or no one cares where the kids are. No, it's the school's fault, and it must be renamed and restructured according to this-her list of 33 demands.

WHETHER the products of this philosophy will do as well for America's future as the products of the thank-God-we-came-and-what-can-we-do-to-get-with-it philosophy is a pretty good question.

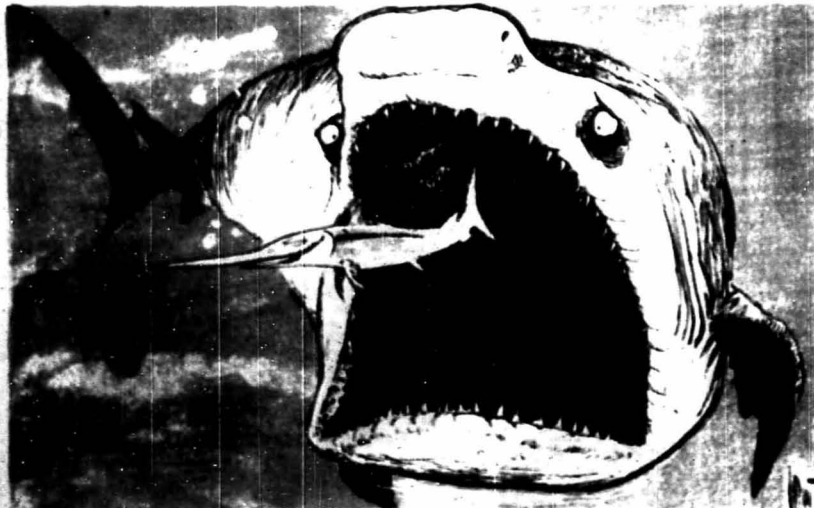

Correction

In an article entitled "Model U.N. delegates take stands" which appeared on page 5 of the Daily Egyptian, Friday, June 25, two typographical errors occurred.

The first paragraph should have read, "Participants in the Model U.N. felt quite strongly as individuals that Communist China should be admitted to the U.N. by a far greater majority than the two-thirds vote required in the U.N. itself for such action."

The second paragraph should have read, "...the participants felt by a convincing majority that Nationalist China (Taiwan) should also remain in the U.N."

In both instances, "U.S." mistakenly appeared instead of "U.N." The Daily Egyptian regrets this compositional oversight.

According to John Beverly, assistant in the Model Cities agency, it is structures like this one which must be removed from Northeast Carbondale.

This is Northeast Carbondale

Two blocks from the Carbondale City Hall is an area of poverty, inadequate housing, no sewers or drains and despair. This is Northeast Carbondale.

According to John Beverly, assistant to Model Cities Director Robert Stalls, Northeast Carbondale has hundreds of substandard homes, rat infested areas, and, because it is the lowest geographical area in the city, drainage problems.

Beverly, Stalls and the Model Cities agency are working to solve those problems.

Beverly said the agency is dedicated to improving the quality of life in the Model Cities area. He said the task includes providing adequate housing, raising employment, aiding children, ridding the area of rats and pests, providing a community center and aiding anyone needing help.

The Model Cities program has completed a year of planning and is in its first year of action. Beverly said additional low-income public housing will be built by the Jackson County Housing Authority. He said a major priority will be to acquire low-interest loans for new home construction.

"People take pride in their own property, and I favor private ownership over public housing," he said.

Beverly said the Model Cities agency is trying to upgrade the life style in the Northeast, and aid people who need help.

"We want to look for both immediate and long range plans," he said. "Our children will probably benefit most from the programs."

Beverly said several new homes have been built in the area, but without proper drainage or sewers construction has been staggered. He said after a rain, water floods many segments of the Northeast.

The Army Corps of Engineers is conducting a drainage survey of the area, with a plan anticipated by fall. Cost of the project may exceed $1 million, according to Beverly.

The streets and roads in the Northeast section also need much work, both paving and repair, according to Beverly. He said some work will be done in the future.

"I can't remember one problem continuing because of inaction on the part of the city," Beverly said. "We are hampered by lack of time and money, but we are making progress, and people have a real desire to help."

Beverly said the most important function the Model Cities agency has performed was to coordinate the efforts of several local, state and federal agencies working in the area.

"With a unified effort we can begin solving the problems of Northeast Carbondale, but as you can see, we have a long way to go," he said.

This abandoned church is located six blocks from downtown Carbondale.

Weekend roughing it brings class together

The intended objectives were to help students to get to know each other and to discover more about themselves. Some of the obstacles encountered required much dependence upon one another. Scaling a 14-foot wall required physical strength and strategy from the girls as well as the men. A silent walk through the woods at night also brought the group of students in Conservation and Outdoor Education 301, closer together. For this exercise the group were linked together by carrying a two inch thick rope. Descending an 80-foot stone cliff was an experience of a different nature for the students as they were depending on their own skills and strength and were trusting the equipment and Project Underway staff. Story is on page 7.

You may never have realized it, but scaling a 14-foot wall, rappelling an 80-foot cliff, crawling through 40 feet of narrow pipe and playing Tarzan by swinging on a giant's rope across a rock and brush strewn valley, can help one get to better know himself, his classmates and instructors.

Bob "Chris" Christie, and Dave Poltz, instructors for Conservation and Outdoor Education 201, decided to take their class of five women and 13 men on a camping trip to the SIU Outdoor Laboratory at Little Grassy Lake the first weekend of the quarter.

Christie said it is important for everyone in the class to know each other's names and personalities. This aids cooperation and group output, he said.

Previous classes that went camping near the end of the quarter suggested it would be better to hold the outing at the beginning so everyone would become better

Scaling walls, rope swinging brings this class together acquainted from the start, Christie and Poltz agreed.

A food committee decided upon a menu and went shopping. Those participating in the outing chipped in two dollars each.

Blue jean clad students met at 3 p.m. Friday, prepared for a night of "roughing it." Campers piled gear into cars and a small bus, eager to begin.

The camp site was Project Underway headquarters, home of the Outward Bound initiative course, near the Arboretum.

Hank Schafermeyer, director of the project, and Tony Calabrese, a Glendale High School gymnastics coach who spends his summers working at Underway, led the group springing through the woods to the group initiative course.

The first obstacle encountered was a 40-foot pipe which everyone crawled through on their stomachs.

The group was divided, going onto greater obstacles, such as the 14-foot wall.

The object is to get everyone over the wall without any aid from those on the far side. Schafermeyer explained.

Getting the first seven over wasn't too difficult. It was the last two who created the need for serious strategy. The group solved the problem by hanging a guy over the wall, having one of the girls grab his ankle and then pulling both of them over the top.

More scratches and bruises were acquired getting everyone over a log secured eight feet above the ground, using the same rules for scaling the wall.

Climbing the giant's ladder was one of the most frightening obstacles, one of the girls commented. As the ladder rose higher off the ground, the space between the rungs grew to about four feet. The climber had to jump from rung to rung without using the sides of the ladder. After reaching the top, the only way down was to climb a rope.

A silent walk through the star line woods was another event which helped bring the group closer together.

Everyone was linked together carrying a two-inch thick rope, remaining silent and not using flashlights.

Some of the students later commented that the night walk helped unite the group because even though there was no verbal communication, everyone seemed to watch out for the persons next to them so they wouldn't fall or be hit by a branch.

At 6 a.m. Saturday the blast of a horn awoke the group, signaling that it was time for the mile run and swim at the beach.

After breakfast, the group packed up for Giant City State Park, where everyone got a chance to discover new skills and capabilities, and trust in others by rappelling 60-foot cliffs.

Rappelling helped build self-confidence as well as trust in the people who tied the knots in the safety harnesses and the ropes, one climber commented.

Agreeing that they had enjoyed the trip, several members of the class commented, "I wish it would have lasted longer."

Christie said there was good cooperation among the group. Often, he added, in a university community everyone tries to be the perfect student and not show weakness.

The purpose of the weekend trip was to show people that they do have fears and weaknesses which can be overcome. In a group situation, these types of events aid in getting everyone to help one another, Christie said.

Ninety-foot waterfall located near SIU

Editor's Note: The following article is one in a series, which the Daily Egyptian will publish during the summer to acquaint its readers with historic and scenic sites in Southern Illinois. The articles and photographs were prepared by a student in a recreation and outdoor education course taught by Robert M. Christie, instructor.

By James H. Brown

Did you know that within an hour's drive of Carbondale you can see a three-step waterfall which tumbles almost 90 feet? All you have to do is step out of your car.

The Carbondale campus is on the edge of the 230,000-acre Shawnee National Forest. This national forest stretches across the entire southern end of the state from the Ohio River to the Mississippi River. One of the most beautiful and unusual natural features of the forest is Burden Falls in northern Pope County and only about a 40-mile drive from Carbondale.

The portion of the forest southeast of Harrisburg contains much wilderness area which has not yet been exploited by industrial man. It has, however, been very much a part of the early settlement of Illinois and contains numerous Indian ruins, relics and many early settlements which retain historic reminders of the past.

Probably the most interesting route to Burden Falls is Route 13 east out of Marion to Route 166 south. This highway passes through the small town of Creal Springs, once a health resort because of the mineral springs in the area. It was believed that the mineral water found there could cure everything from headaches to cancer, when in reality all it did was cause a stomachache. From Creal Springs, continue on Route 166 to U.S. Route 45 at New Burnside. Turning south on Route 45, you will come to a sign that points east toward Bell Smith Springs. This narrow, but well-kept gravel road will lead through several old settlements and churches which were established in the early 1800's. Each intersection is well-marked by the Forest Service and all you do is follow the signs toward Bell Smith Springs. Shortly after you pass a junction in the road which leads toward the town of Stonefort, you will come to a small general store which has been in operation longer than the elderly proprietor can remember. It is an added treat to stop in and chat with him, drink a soda and inspect the old set of balance scales and the antique cash register for which, he says, the manufacturer has offered $100 and one of those new electric ones.

Soon after the general store, you will come to a junction which leads to either Bell Smith Springs or Burden Falls.

When you arrive at Burden Falls, there is a parking area next to the first of a series of three falls which quickly drops about 90 feet. Here is where you can begin to explore the upper and lower portions of the falls by using a foot trail which leads around the right canyon wall and down to the base of the last fall. You can spend the rest of the day marveling at the fact that such a place exists in Illinois and exploring the wild natural canyon that stretches out for miles below the falls.

The area also contains Indian Kitchen. One Horse Gap, Garden of the Gods and other recreational sites.

Senate buries ethics bill

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — The Illinois General Assembly, just hours before adjournment Wednesday, quietly nailed the coffin shut on a so-called ethics bill that would require public officials to disclose in detail their sources of income.

The measure, sponsored by Sen. William C. Harris, R-Easton, was introduced in the wake of disclosures that the late secretary of state Paul Powell kept a $850,000 fortune stuffed in shoe boxes in his St. Nicholas Hotel suite. The measure was sent Tuesday to a subcommittee of the House Executive Committee.

Still in committee is a measure requiring disclosure of political campaign contributions. Neither can be passed before adjournment which is scheduled to come no later than midnight Wednesday.

The bills had lain untouched in Senate subcommittees most of the session. The bills were revived by the news two weeks ago that New York businessman Philip Levin contributed $100,000 to Illinois Republicans at about the time a company he controls received a favorable ruling before the GO's-dominated Illinois Racing Board.

"Naturally, the governor is disappointed," a spokesman for Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie said after the ethics bill was sent to subcommittee.

Rep. Henry J. Hyde, R-Chicago, House majority leader, made a motion to in effect, let the measure die, saying, "I don't believe we have time to consider this bill."

Heavy fighting renewed as N. Viets hit allied bases

SAIGON (AP) — Fighting intensified Wednesday along South Vietnam's northern frontier just below the demilitarized zone.

The North Vietnamese hit the chain of allied bases with half a dozen new rocket or mortar bombardments and ground assaults.

The Allies countered with heavy artillery fire and a succession of B52 raids and other air strikes.

The renewed fighting could be the forerunner of a widely expected North Vietnamese drive toward the coastal lowlands and the major population centers of Quang Tri, Hue and Da Nang.

Reporting from Quang Tri, Associated Press correspondent J.T. Wolkstein said one of the B52 raids hit along "rocket ridge." This is a four-mile stretch running from the southern rim of the DMZ southward to Fire Base Fuller. From this ridge, the North Vietnamese have been tossing heavy rocket and mortar shillings the past two weeks.

Local merchants oppose bottle ban

By Pat Hillis
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Bottlers, local retailers and container manufacturers have joined forces in opposing a proposed Carbondale ordinance that would ban the use of certain non-returnable beverage containers within the city limits.

Their presentations, and those of the bill's proponents were made at a public hearing Tuesday night in Township Hall.

Ron Morris, of the United States Brewers' Association, narrated six presentations against the ordinance by two local businessmen and representatives of the Marion Pepsi Cola bottling plant; the Cairo-Carbondale Coca Cola bottling plant; the Continental Can Company of St. Louis and the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute.

Seven members of last year's fifth grade class of University School spoke for the ordinance. The class had suggested at a Council meeting February 16 that such legislation be considered.

The children recalled their earlier appearance when they presented tape-recorded interviews with five major Carbondale grocers. They said they had expected the retailers to oppose it, but were told by most of the men that they would sell "what the customers like best and bought the most."

Based on national survey statistics, one representative said, the average person discards one and one half bottles per day, bringing the annual Carbondale discard total to more than 4 million bottles.

Dan Dyer, Pepsi Cola representative, suggested a three-fold approach of anti-litter education, strict enforcement of existing litter laws and the development of equipment to combat litter.

Dyer said 90 per cent of Pepsi output in Southern Illinois is in returnable containers. He said he regards discard of his company's container, and not the container itself, as the cause of litter.

Dyer said national surveys show that soft drink containers account for only 5 per cent of all roadside litter and for 13 per cent of solid wastes.

He cited the development of plastic bottles that do not emit noxious fumes when burned and foil-covered paper containers as two methods Pepsi is working on to reduce litter.

William Birch, Coca Cola representative, said the bottlers shared the children's concern about the surface litter problem but their differences lie in how to approach it.

"We frankly admit we contribute to the total problem of litter," said Birch. He added, however, that many "honorably motivated people" attack the soft drink industry unjustly since "our package is so visible." The package is designed to catch the attention of the consumer while it is on the store shelf, he said, but it also attracts attention in the ditch or on the wayside.

Birch displayed 13 products that he said would be "competitors" not affected by the ordinance. He said packages of condiments and other picnic foods not affected also comprise much of the litter in recreational areas.

Birch indicated that recycling was the answer to the problem of waste, containers. He said that "glassphalt" and "glasscrete," which can be used for paving roads and for building, are being manufactured from the recycled bottles.

Paul Reischer of the Boren's IGA store at 1620 W. Main St., speaking as a representative of five area grocers, said that he had to sell what people want. He said if people can't find what they want at a particular store "they have the habit of going where people do have it."

If an effective campaign would be conducted to convince people not to buy the three-way bottles, they would "disappear from grocery shelves," he said.

Reischer expressed concern that the ordinance would "seriously affect his business and have a harmful effect on Carbondale as a whole because people would go out of the city to buy the bottles and cans."

Tom Hoffman of Eastgate Liquors said the ordinance would "quite frankly destroy us as a retailer." Hoffman, a member of the Board of Directors of Illinois Liquor Stores, and the Carbondale Liquor Store Association, said he was speaking for the Carbondale liquor stores. Hoffman said beer sales comprised 45 to 60 per cent of his business and that 50 per cent of the beer is in cans or one-way bottles. He said he probably would have to hire additional help to handle returnable bottles. He said this would force him to "raise the price to meet the overhead."

David Smith, of the Continental Can Company of St. Louis criticized the "very narrow" scope of the law and suggested "it might even be thought of as discriminatory."

Smith said that, according to a National Academy of Sciences survey of 29 states, cans comprise 15 to 16 per cent of roadside litter. By passing the ordinance, Smith said, "you are banning 15 per cent the problem and doing nothing about the other 85 per cent."

Competing containers help to hold the prices of beverages down, Smith said, and the ban on cans might bring on a price hike.

Kent Wold, of the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute, said he opposed the ordinance because "it discourages innovations of new products," and that recycling was a better answer to the litter problem.

KKK was once active in Illinois

SIU historian disputes origins of Klan

By Pete Brown
University News Services

For a long time, historians have held that the Ku Klux Klan sprang up in the antebellum south as a kind of "democratic" revolution against the prevailing Reconstruction government. It was, traditionally, a reaction against the post-war Republican system which threatened the Old South's lily-white elite values.

Now comes a young historian who disputes the view because of a not too well-known fact: The KKK existed in at least two northern states—Indiana and Illinois—between 1867 and 1875. In the latter, its activities were concentrated in the Southern Illinois counties of Franklin, Williamson, Jackson and Saline.

Edgar Raines of Murphysboro, an SIU history graduate, now studying for his doctorate at the University of Wisconsin, has written what is probably the definitive study of the "first" Klan movement in Southern Illinois. It wasn't nearly as bloody or demonic as the KKK episode of the 20's, but it was ugly enough.

To set the stage, Raines describes these four counties as dominated by actively racist political leaders and inhabited by people to whom violence was almost second nature. One of the leading political figures, General-to-be John A. Logan, was a sponsor of the Illinois Black Law of 1863, which prohibited the entry of blacks into the state.

Oldtime Williamson County historian Milo Erwin wrote in 1876 that up until that time, 285 murders had been committed in that county. Only one person was hanged.

In these days, almost everyone opposed temperance. The first building in Marion was a saloon. The area was strongly Democratic and politics, says Raines, was a major unifying force. The four counties were relatively isolated from outside-world influence and communication.

Before the Civil War, the belief was widespread that Southern Illinois would join the confederacy. But Logan sided with the government—even though his brother-in-law raised a company and took up arms for the South.

During the war itself, the area was awash with conflicting loyalties. Union army desertion was rampant and for some months in 1863 a whole squadron of federal cavalry had to be garrisoned in Marion to quell the activities of defectors. The southern-sympathizing Knights of the Golden Circle enjoyed a membership of 1,000 in Williamson County alone, according to one writer.

Outside influences began to assert themselves with the influx of Unionist refugees into Southern Illinois and the advent of railroads. Then, in 1867, a Williamson County feud known as the "bloody vendetta" erupted between two sets of families—the Hendersons and Simeys on one side and the Bullinners and Crains on the other. It had nothing to do with politics, but the two parties nevertheless aligned themselves with the feuding principles.

It was against this background, Raines says, that the KKK evolved. The earliest known date of organization is put at 1867, when Aaron Neal, a southern Klansman, set up headquarters in a saloon at Snookport, a backwoods hamlet in Williamson County.

On Dec. 14, 1871, 40 nightriders swooped down on the farm of John Baker, near the Williamson-Franklin County line. They drove the family into the night, and burned down the house. More burnings followed.

Next spring, robed and hooded Klansmen yanked wealthy Union County farmer Isaac Vancil from his bed and told him he'd be hanged if he failed to meet KKK demands. He didn't make one of the conditions and he was hanged. That touched off public outrage and the governor, John Palmer, offered rewards for the killers. Subsequently, a grand jury indicted 25 Williamson County men for murder but the case went to Franklin County on a change of venue and all were acquitted.

Klan activity varied for a couple of years and another group called the "Regulators" sprang up in Carrier Mills in 1874. But the Klan itself showed in force again the fall on the farm of Henry Carter north of Marion. They told him to get out of the county in 40 days. Carter and his family repaid with bullets and the nightriders scattered.

They surfaced next year in Jackson County, routing people from both and whipping them for whatever transgressions the Klan had imagined. A counter-Klan vigilante group formed in Murphysboro.

Meanwhile, Klan organizers in Franklin County initiated a blacksmith who, it turns out, was an informer. He revealed Klan plans to do in two leading Franklin County citizens, Capt. John Hogan and John Maddox. The Governor rewarded Sheriff James Mason to round up a posse until such time as state arms and munitions were available for an all-out effort against the KKK.

On the night the KKK chose to hit Maddox' farm at Crawford Prairie, Sheriff Mason's posse lay in ambush along the road. In the pitched battle that followed, one Klansman was wounded so badly he thought he was dying. After his hooded cohorts fled, he revealed all their names.

Forty-five Franklin County men were arrested but an attempt to try them in a Mt. Vernon Federal Commissioners court—on charges of

Allyn Building to be remodeled

By University News Services

A $500,000 remodeling project on the 60-year-old Allyn Building is expected to get under way this fall.

Main items in the renovation program are the addition of an elevator-stairwell wing on the south side, a revamped heating and air conditioning system and new wiring and lighting improvements.

This, according to Associate University Architect Carl Bretscher, will convert the building into a general classroom facility.

Now occupied by the School of Art, the building is inaccessible to wheelchair students and has no air conditioning.

Three buildings will be remodeled this summer to take care of the School of Art. They are the first-floor industrial education wing of Pulliam Hall, parts of the first and second floors of the Good Luck Glove building on South Washington Street and the former School of Journalism barracks office west of the James W. Neckers physical sciences building.

Apparent low bids totaling $146,340 have been received by the campus architect's office for renovating those spaces. Bids will be submitted to the Board of Trustees for approval.

A new School of Art building is included in SIU's master plans, but completion may be late in the 70's, according to architects. Some basic art programs will be moved back into Allyn when it's remodeled, but the entire structure is slated for general classroom purposes when the new School of Art facility is realized.

Other improvements planned for the Allyn Building are a new roof, new toilet rooms and plumbing, replacement of doors, windows and hardware, wheelchair ramps, new partitions and decorating, and a sculpture exhibition court.

Painting, drawing, printmaking and sculpture studios will be set up in the Good Luck Glove building, mostly in an 11,000 square foot section of the first floor.

The Pulliam Hall wing will be renovated for ceramics, glassblowing and metalsmithing studios.

Most of the barracks space will be used for art education classes.

Funds for the Allyn project were released by Gov. Richard Ogilvie in April.

Summer's storms requires caution

By University News Services

Summer is the season of thunderstorms, and where such storms develop, lightning usually is a natural phenomenon. The most destructive forms of lightning are the bolts that reach the ground by some type of conductor. They merit the respectful attention of all persons.

Some suggestions for using care during thunderstorms in the interest of safety come from Frank A. Bridges of the Civil Defense office at SIU. Lightning is the result of developing attraction of negative electrical charges in the ground for positive charges in the clouds during a thunderstorm. They move towards each other through a conductor that may be a tree, a building, a utility pole or some other object that is taller than the surrounding surface.

That is the reason persons may be struck by a bolt of lightning in an open field, on a golf course or in a body of water. It packs a tremendous wallop, as is evident from splintered trees, shattered utility poles, exploded buildings, or dead livestock near a fence where lightning has hit. The bolt also may generate heat in the energy discharge, setting fire to buildings or forests. Government reports show that, on the average, more persons are killed by lightning each year than die in tornadoes or hurricanes.

Farmers working in the field with tractors and metal implements having contact with the ground should get off the equipment and take shelter in a protective building or an automobile. Automobiles are considered good protection from lightning during a storm, but field implements often are struck by a bolt.

Persons should avoid standing or walking in an open field where they become a logical conductor for grounding a bolt of lightning. Isolated trees in a field and wire fences also attract lightning.

If no building or automobile is handy for shelter from the storm, head for a ditch, cave or head-high clump of trees in open forest area. Next best thing to do is lie flat on the ground.

Boaters, swimmers, fishermen with metal fishing rods, and golfers with clubs and cleated shoes are good targets for a bolt of lightning if they do not get to a place of safety.

Bridges suggests that persons indoors during a thunderstorm: avoid standing in open doorways or near open windows with screens, fireplaces, stoves, and plugged-in electrical appliances because if lightning strikes near the house or hits the building, the charge may enter by any of these items. Avoid using such electrical appliances as hair dryers and electric razors, or talking on the telephone during storms because lightning striking utility lines near the house may travel into the house through the wiring.

New site for complex

This new site plan for the $8.9 million Co-Recreation Building and playfields brings the complex closer to Brush Towers student residence area (bottom). The plan was approved by the Board of Trustees, after hearing that construction could start in 1972 with the entire funding from money built up from a $15 quarterly student welfare and recreation facilities fee. The building complex is shown at top center, north of East Grand Avenue. Building at upper left is Newman Center. Peripheral loop road shown would link system with future Mill Street underpass. Job incentive by proposed state program

CHICAGO (AP) — A spokesman for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said a reform bill to be put before the Senate next month would provide "fiscal relief" to give aid recipients incentive to find and hold jobs.

John D. Twinn, administrator of the Social and Rehabilitation Service of the HEW, said in a news conference the measure would provide nearly a million jobs at a cost of $5.5 billion.

Twinn said the bill is intended to insure equal benefits to welfare recipients nationwide by providing a floor of $2,400 for welfare families.

"This is not a guaranteed annual wage," Twinn said. The recipient would have to register for work in order to be eligible for benefits.

Paul E. Barton, chief of special projects of the Office of Policy Evaluation and Research of the U.S. Department of Labor, told the news conference the bill would provide 400,000 training programs and 200,000 public service jobs.

Busch remains active following election loss

By Ed Donnelly
Student Writer

Unlike many candidates who lose elections, Tom Busch did not fade away into obscurity.

Busch, Action Party's 1970 nominee for student body president, was defeated by Tom Scherschel.

"Tom Busch is the most conscientious and dedicated student leader to emerge during my term as president," Scherschel said in his farewell address.

Busch recently was appointed "right hand man" to Ed Hammond, assistant to the chancellor for student relations.

Oliver Caldwell, assistant to President Emeritus Delyte W. Morris, said recently, "I am glad to see a person of Tom's intelligence and character getting into the University administration."

"There is no ceiling to Tom's future, for he is an able young man who does well in anything he undertakes," Caldwell said. "The world will be changed by young people like Tom."

As assistant to Hammond, Busch will work as internal administrator of the student activities office.

He will advise Hammond on the staffing, employees, personnel needs, secretarial management and vacation arrangements of the office personnel. Busch's only external function will be as Hammond's representative to University committees and organizations.

"I am in it for the experience but my goal is to attain for the students a positive spirit between the University and the Carbondale community," Busch said.

Tom Busch

community," Busch said.

Busch, 26, is from Champaign and a recent graduate of the Department of Government. He entered SIU in 1963. He left school in 1966 to serve a two and a half-year term in the Naval Reserve "that took me rambling all over Europe." He reentered SIU in June, 1968, and became active in student government.

Following his unsuccessful campaign for student body president, Busch served as a special assistant to the secretary general for the annual Model United Nations Assembly.

"Buzz" Spector, student government leader and founder of GRASSROOTS Magazine, said, "Tom was the only defeated candidate who remained in politics and became instrumental in retaining student government following the closing of school last May."

Busch testified before the Illinois General Assembly as official student body representative on the closure of the Carbondale campus.

Busch rose as a leader in establishing the Coordinating Task Force after the University was closed in the spring of 1970.

"It served as a center for facilitating a process of coordinated action among all elements of the University community," Busch said.

One such action the task force undertook was the publication of a newsletter.

Busch graduated as a member of the Sphinx Club, an activities honor society. His name also appeared in Who's Who among Students in American Colleges and Universities, 1970-71 edition.

In addition to his new post, Busch is chairman of the University Center Programming Committee and vice chairman of the Student Advisory Committee to the Illinois Board of Higher Education.

conspiracy to prevent citizens from exercising their constitutional rights—was a failure.

By then, however, the guns and ammo had arrived from Springfield and independent militia-type companies formed up in Williamson, Franklin and Jackson Counties. That and the wholesale arrests effectively broke what power the Klan had enjoyed. It vanished until the 1920s.

What were their motives? Raines says the Klansmen of the north were against infidelity, slander, "sharp land trading," bad debtors, laziness and suspected murder, among other things. Drinking was OK, though. In fact, the reason they were out to get Capt. Hogan was because he prosecuted a barkeep who sold whiskey to a minor.

Public and press were shocked to learn that the arrested Klansmen weren't red-necked livery stable

You got lawn gripes? Try SIU's 750 acres

By Gene Charleston
Student Writer

If you ever have complained about mowing your lawn, think about mowing the grass on the SIU Carbondale campus—all 750 acres of it.

Joe Widdows, superintendent of buildings and grounds, has six to eight men busy every day keeping the lawns neat at SIU, and it's a full-time job.

Most of their time is spent mowing, with time out to pick up trash. So much litter gets on the lawns, the men riding the mowers carry bags to put it in, according to Widdows.

He, however, still isn't happy with the way the campus looks.

"I've never had a campus that looks this bad," Widdows said.

He feels that most of the problems concerned with keeping the campus neat are caused by economics. About half of his normal 40-man crew has been laid off, because of a lack of funds.

Although litter on the lawns is a large part of the problem, Widdows doesn't feel that students and faculty at SIU are any worse than anyone else. He said that the only places where litter is really a problem is in the housing areas, with an abundance of broken bottles around Brush Towers.

So, the next time you have trouble looking your lawn mower in the eye, be grateful. You might be mowing a campus.

Student work director heads state-wide unit

By University News Services

Frank C. Adams, director of the Student Work and Financial Assistance Program at SIU, will head a committee to survey student work programs in Illinois.

His appointment to head the group was made by the Joint Council on Higher Education steering committee on which Roland Keene, assistant to the system vice president on the Carbondale Campus, is chairman. The joint council is composed of representatives of the state-supported universities of Illinois.

Keene said the council is interested in the study to become fully aware of the importance of this phase of University activities as a means for financial assistance to students as well as a potential means for the universities to be responsive to the social needs of the state.

The work of Adams' committee will include exploration of size of programs, how student work relates to academic programs, chief objectives of the programs and problems which confront student employment directors. Other members are John Griffin of the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, Larry Matejka of Illinois State University, Normal, and Lyman Ross of Eastern Illinois University, Charleston.

Average of three kids to a family is too high TAURANGA, New Zealand (AP) — An average of three children a family is too high for population control says Dr. E.W. Hutchison, chairman of the Tauranga hospital board.

He said this size family would double world population in a few decades.

New cage schedule should push atlas sales

By Ken Stewart
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

Rand McNally's road atlas may hit the best-seller list at SIU as the basketball season nears.

With a magnifying glass and a little patience, Saluki basketball fans may be able to find Fullerton, Cal., Alpine, Tex., and Warrenburg, Mo.

These are the lesser-known towns where some of the even lesser-known schools are which Southern will face on the 1971-72 schedule, still subject to approval.

Major schools like Texas, Georgia Tech and Wisconsin were replaced with Central Missouri, California State-Fullerton, Wisconsin-Milwaukee and Sul Ross State.

All but one of the games against the new small college teams on the schedule are set for the SIU Arena. The season opens with the Sul Ross State College Lobos visiting the Arena Dec. 1.

How did Sul Ross get on the Saluki schedule?

"We contacted SIU because we wanted to take a northern trip," said Lobo coach Chester Story.

Asked if the Alpine, Tex., school was upgrading its basketball program, Story said "we like to think of it that way."

Southern and Indiana State are the only two "major" schools on the Lobo schedule.

The Lobos are members of the NAIA, a shade lower than the NCAA college division. They finished 12-14 overall and 9-9 in the Lone Star Conference last season.

The conference mark was good enough for fifth place in the ten-member league which includes Texas A & I, Howard Payne, Sam Houston, Stephen F. Austin, Southwest Texas, McMurray, Angelo State and Tarleton State.

There should be a fast-moving game when the Lobos come here in December. Like the Salukis, they like to move the ball.

"We concentrated on the post game last year, feeding the center," said Story, "because we didn't have the good outside people to run."

"We'll be running more this coming year with our new people," he said.

The Lobos have seven lettermen returning but only two starters.

The two starters coming back are 6-7, 235-pound center, Ed Osborn, the tallest member of the team; and all-conference Leonard Sparkman, a 6-4 forward from Gary, Ind.

The Lobos will get an added boost from transfer Leon Walker, a 6-1 forward who led all Florida junior college scorers with 27.3 points per game last season at St. Petersburg Junior College.

Sul Ross has been moving up since Story took over the coaching reins two years ago.

The Lobos won 10 games in two years before his arrival and improved to 30 games the next two years.

Alpine is a sleepy mountain town 100 miles from the Mexican border, or 150 miles south of Odessa.

Still can't find it? How about 200 miles east of El Paso?

Of course, Rand McNally was well read in New York when the Salukis took the NIT crown in 1967.

Number one netter

SIU's number one singles tennis player Jorge Ramirez is about to let the ball have it in a match on the campus tennis courts during the season. Ramirez was eliminated in the first round of the NCAA tournament two weeks ago by Bryan Gottfield of Trinity, 6-0, 6-3. The Salukis finished 16th in the meet. (Photo by John S. Burningham)

Crockett will run, too

Meriwether takes on world sprinters next

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Dr. Delano Meriwether already has proved himself to Americans. Now he's set to make a believer out of international track athletes.

The 28-year-old hematologist, surely the world's fastest part-time athlete, ran a wind-aided 100-yard dash in nine seconds flat last Friday to win the National AAU title at Eugene, Ore. (Ivory Crockett of SIU, two-time AAU champion, finished fourth in 9.2 seconds. Earlier he was clocked in 9.1 seconds in the preliminaries, a new school record.)

This weekend, he'll be competing here against the Russians and the World All-stars (Crockett will also compete.)

Meriwether's performance at Eugene brought to a climax the storybook saga of a man who began serious running competition less than a year ago. It also earned him a berth on the U.S. team that will compete in August at the Pan American Games in Cali, Colombia.

Meriwether was the sensation of the indoor track season, not only because he was a rank beginner who knocked off established stars but because he runs in swimming trunks held up by suspenders.

Amateur Athletic Union officials say, however, that Meriwether will have to wear the same uniform the rest of the American team wears at Berkeley.

Because of his work in blood research and patient care, he gets to run in practice maybe two or three times a week. "I don't have anything against daily workouts. I just don't have the time."

Most world-class sprinters have muscular thighs, but Meriwether is greyhound-like at 6-2 and 158 pounds. Track coaches say there's no limit to how fast he could run if he lifted weights to build up his muscles. They also think he'd be uncatchable if he ever puts together the basic fundamentals of sprinting: starting and sustained acceleration.

He stunned track experts at Eugene by saying, "I usually start coasting at 70 yards, but today I kept pumping my arms. That's how I got second place finisher Jim Greene. I also got out of the blocks with the gang. That's amazing, for me."

The 9.0 clocking would have been a world record if it hadn't been for the aiding wind, which was slightly over the allowable limit for records.

Correction

There will be fewer major college teams on the SIU 1971-72 basketball schedule, but three more games than last year.

The Wednesday edition of the Daily Egyptian said there would be "fewer foes." It should have read "fewer major foes."

Also, the Salukis won the game in 1967 against Kentucky Wesleyan before a record turnout of 10,200 in the SIU Arena. The score was 52-51.

Southern's two losses that year were away games at Southern Methodist and at Louisville. The Salukis went on to take the National Invitational tournament championship in New York.

Soul league forming

A six-team "soul" basketball league is being formed immediately.

Teams can organize and register at the Model Cities Youth Office at Attucks Multi-Purpose Service Center and the squads will compete in the SIU Arena.

For more information, call University Services at Carbondale, 453-3321.

AL ponders Senators shift to Dallas

DETROIT (AP) — All 12 owners of American League teams huddled Wednesday over the financial woes of the Washington Senators with some discussion centering on a possible transfer of the team to Dallas.

Senators' owner Bob Short told newsmen during a luncheon recess that he had lost what he called "a substantial amount" since he paid $9.5 million for the team two years ago.

Asked about the numerous rumors that a move of his franchise to Dallas was imminent, Short replied, "I do not want to move to Dallas. I never wanted to. I never intended to but that doesn't mean I won't move it."

Daily Egyptian Sports

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn and American League President Joe Cronin sat in on the meeting which apparently was called on short notice at a motel at Detroit's Metropolitan Airport.

Cronin played down the importance of the meeting. He said, "We talked about a number of things. Bob Short hasn't made any application to move. We discussed his financial situation. It was an open discussion, nothing formal...it was a preliminary to our regular meeting in August with the commissioner."

Short said he did not feel the meeting was called specifically to discuss his problems. Asked if he expected them to be solved at the session, he replied, "No, I don't."

Asked if his club was for sale, he replied, "It has been for sale publicly in every newspaper in the country for the past 18 months but there have been no buyers."

Asked if there was any possibility of the Senators going into bankruptcy or of his going to the American League for money, Short declined comment on the first part but on the second part said, "I will take it from wherever I can get it."

He indicated he was striving to solve the team's financial woes without moving to Dallas although he did say of the Texas area, "I think there is a baseball opportunity in Dallas-Fort Worth. There is a baseball opportunity in Toronto and in New Orleans, too."
