SIU officials await state budget vote

By Bill Kugelberg
Politics Writer

SIU financial affairs officials say they want a slice of a projected $181 million pie set aside for education in the state budget, but the budget is being blocked by two major tax issues.

Results of the votes on the budget were not available at press time.

Lawmakers can not agree on how to divide the 25-cent income tax surcharge between local and state governments and are having trouble drawing a compromise on how much a tobacco and cigarette tax should increase.

The cigarette and tobacco tax increase would abolish the "Granny Tax," a $6.30 per-day charge for nursing home residents.

Don Wilson, vice chancellor for financial affairs and board treasurer, said he wants the school to receive an increase in support from last year.

"We hope the tax dollar support increases," Wilson said. "Most of the conversation we've heard supports a $2 to $6 million increase."

In fiscal year 1993, SIU was allocated more than $239 million. Of that, more than $167 million was tax dollar support.

Sen. Ralph Dunn, D-Du Quoin, said the budget plan includes an increase in higher education funding by $60 million for the next

U.S. attack destroys compound

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Missiles fired from American helicopters blew up another arms depot and staging compound serving Mohammed Farah Aidid Wednesday as U.N. forces intensified their efforts to disarm the Somali warlord following the shooting of eight more U.N. soldiers Sunday and Monday in Mogadishu.

The Pentagon said that the attack, which began at 7 p.m. Somali time (8 a.m. EDT), was designed to destroy the compound, which had been used as a staging area for the shootings and was laden with mortars, machine guns, ammunition and communications and engineering equipment.

Eleven hours earlier, soldiers from the U.S. Army quick-reaction force in the Somali capital cordoned off and searched a series of buildings, compounds and refugee camps north of the airport, confiscated some weapons and communications equipment and arrested two Somalis.

U.S. officials said the purpose of the highly visible operation was to underscore U.N. resolve to punish challenges by the local militia units and to eliminate the compound as a military threat before potentially violent Somali independence celebrations scheduled for Thursday.

Some Somalis have feared that Aidid's supporters would spark new violence during the celebrations. The former Somali general has been accusing the United Nations and the United States of trying to "recolonize" the country.

U.S. Army Maj. David Stockwell, the U.N.'s spokesman in Mogadishu, told reporters at a news conference Wednesday that the operation "at this point appears to be a success." He said no injuries were reported, either to U.N. troops or to Somali civilians.

The latest foray by U.N. forces represented an effort by the U.N. command to step up its campaign to weaken Aidid's militia. Ultimately, the hope is to persuade members of his political faction to abandon the Somali leader and join in building a new democracy in that

Prof receives funds to aid Cache River

By Sean L. N. Hao
General Assignment Writer

An SIUC professor has received further funding to help reclaim Cache River wetland areas.

Beth Middleton, an SIUC assistant professor in plant biology, recently has received a $66,000, 2-year grant from the Water Resources Center in Urbana, to continue research originally started in 1991 under an SIUC grant from the Office of Research and Development.

Middleton is working with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Nature Conservancy, Illinois Department of Conservation and Ducks Unlimited to improve water quality and restore some of the natural features of the Cache River area.

Middleton has been working with these agencies to find natural ways of reclaiming farmed areas of the Cache wetlands for recreational use.

"I'm looking at what it would take to restore these purchased areas to Cypress swamps," she said. "Their intention is to restore this to a wildlife area for hunting, fishing and canoeing."

New program may decrease alcohol problems

By Shawna Donovan
City Writer

As Carbondale officials look for alternatives to deal with underage drinking and public intoxication problems, a new intervention might be the answer, a health educator said.

The TIPS, or The Training Intervention Procedure by Servers of Alcohol program, enables servers and doormen to prevent underage alcohol consumption by spotting fake IDs and spotting intoxicated people in the bar.

Ann Feliu, a Jackson County Health Department educator, presented the TIPS program to the Carbondale Liquor Advisory Board June 10 and has received some interest from city officials.

"They are looking at it," Feliu said. "These problems need to be addressed and getting the community involved with such a program would be an effective way of solving these problems."

Feliu sent out surveys to 110 liquor establishments last February asking them if they would be interested in participating in server intervention programs. But only eight out of the 110 showed interest.

"The liquor establishments are looking to see what the city is going to do as far as mandating such a program," Feliu said. "I think there should be such a program, whether it is TIPS or another form of server intervention. The city has to take a pro-active approach."

Cutting red tape: SIUC student leaders preparing resolution to speed, simplify SIUC referenda process

By Jonathan Senft
General Assignment Writer

SIUC student leaders want to know why student-approved referendums go through such a long process to be implemented.

The SIUC Graduate and Professional Student Council is working on a resolution that will ask President John C. Guyon to speed up the process of presenting referendums, like mass transit and abortion insurance coverage, to the Board of Trustees after receiving student's approval.

Susan Hall, GPSC president, said the student referendum process now goes from the students, to the president, then to the trustees, and slows down in the president's office.

When the referendum is received by the president, he then pools the SIUC administrators who are most knowledgeable and will be most affected by the decision to discuss the plan for his approval.

No loss expected for teen-age Wimbledon player

Los Angeles Times

WIMBLEDON, England—Is there anybody left in this tournament that can beat Steffi Graf? It's starting to appear doubtful, what with the women's singles field at Wimbledon looking as thin as the grass on Centre Court.

As 17-year-old Jennifer Capriati dropped the ball and her serve in her big chance Tuesday, and with 36-year-old Martina Navratilova waiting around for her to strike a jolly good volley, Graf arrived in the semifinals with winning style and a faulty memory.

Graf turned back Capriati, 7-6 (7-3), 6-1, after saving a set point she had forgotten completely.

"I did?," Graf said. Yes, Steffi, you did, down 3-5, 30-40.

"I didn't even know," she said. "I mean, I was just taking it point by point at that stage, so I don't know."

After that, it was all very routine for the four-time and defending champion, who is starting to look like someone destined to be holding up some sterling silver hardware Saturday afternoon.

The only players separating Graf from another title are Conchita

Martinez, who greatly prefers clay, and, probably, Navratilova.

The nine-time champion swept past Natalia Zvereva, 6-3, 6-1, setting up a semi-unexpected semifinal against Jana Novotna, who upset No. 4-seeded Gabriela Sabatini.

Novotna, a Grand Slam semifinalist only twice before, scored a 6-4, 6-3 decision over Sabatini and looked forward to meeting Navratilova.

"I finally made it to Centre Court," said Novotna. "It's not going to be too easy to handle that

Hall of Famers at SIUC named

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

Hall of Fame status is reserved for the best. Those who make it give all of themselves in sport or in service. This fall, eight such individuals, comprised of five men and three women, will be inducted into the SIUC Hall of Fame.

The group includes two late greats, a tennis coach, a football player, a basketball player, a track and field athlete and a swimmer.

The late Robert "Doc" Spackman, SIUC's popular athletic trainer from 1957-79, will be enshrined along with Gary Morava, an NCAA champion in vaulting and member of the Salukis 1972 title-winning gymnastics team, who was killed in a trampoline accident at the SIUC Arena in 1974.

Dick LeFevre, who just announced his retirement as men's tennis coach following an unprecedented 36-year tenure, will join baseball standout Steve Finley and former Saluki star quarterback Bill Norwood as the other men inductees.

The women's inductees will be: Bridget Bonds Williams

(basketball), Rhonda McCausland (track and field) and Lori Rea (swimming).

Bonds was the 1987 Gateway Conference Player of the Year, as well as the first Saluki to garner National Sports Festival and Kodak All-District honors.

In 1986 and 1987 Bonds led the Salukis to an unbeaten 38-0 mark in conference play, while racking up a stellar 53-7 record in overall play.

Bonds said the best part of her career was a combination of things.

"Going undefeated in the conference for two years, gaining an NCAA tournament berth and getting to the sweet sixteen rank as my favorites," Bonds said.

Bonds said she feels honored to be selected to the Hall of Fame, as there were so many tremendous athletes to choose from.

Bonds is currently an assistant coach for the women's basketball team, but her goal is to be the one who calls the shots.

"Being a head coach is one of my aspirations," Bonds said.

McCausland was a five-time

Football secondary coach leaves SIUC after two years

Kirby Wilson, defensive secondary coach at SIUC the past two seasons, has accepted a similar position at the University of Wyoming. His resignation is effective June 30.

The former Saluki came to the program in January 1991 from Southwest Community College in Los Angeles, where he served as an assistant.

In a press release, head football coach Bob Smith said no time will be wasted in finding a replacement.

"We will begin an immediate search for his replacement," Smith said. "We hope to have a replacement hired by mid-July."

Smith said Wilson will be missed, but made the move any smart coach would.

"Moving to a NCAA I-A school as a coach, however, was something he had to take as a coach. He will do an outstanding job and I am proud of him."

Saluki player could be draft choice

Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

By the time this article is read, Ashraf Amaya may have been drafted by an NBA team.

The former Saluki has been projected by some to go as high as 33rd or not at all.

Amaya did get NBA exposure when he took part in three important pre-draft workouts, but he is plagued by an identity problem.

Amaya is between 6-foot-6 and 6-8, which means he can either be a small forward or a power forward.

By NBA standards, he is either a small power forward, or a big small forward.

Amaya can rebound and play defense, which would make an ideal power forward, except that some scouts think he is too short.

For the first time, the Missouri Valley Conference has awarded its postgraduate scholarship to a female athlete.

Kelly Firth, 22, from Springfield, received the $2,500 award for her accomplishments as a senior center on the Saluki women's basketball team and for her work with SIUC's handicapped populations.

The scholarship is going to help pay for school while working toward her masters in therapeutic recreation, Firth said.

"I was really excited when I found out I was going to receive the scholarship," Firth said. "I felt honored to be the first female that the MVC awarded the scholarship to.

"Basketball has helped me get my undergraduate degree in the form of scholarships," she said.

"And now it is helping me get my graduate degree, too." Although awarded the scholarship in June, she will not put the money to use for another year, Firth said.

"Currently, I have a graduate assistantship for teaching classes in therapeutic recreation for the next year," Firth said. "After that is over I will start to use the scholarship money."

Although happy to receive the award, she will miss playing basketball for the Salukis, Firth said.

"It's going to feel weird getting the money each month but not playing basketball for the team," she said. "I'll miss it."

Firth has also been involved extensively in working with the community's handicapped population.

Currently she is a volunteer at a

CUBAN LEADER REQUESTS END OF EMBARGO — Cuban Foreign Minister Roberto Robaina, in Beijing, has once again called on Washington to drop its embargo of Cuba, which has for decades been the centerpiece of U.S. policy toward that country. President Clinton should yawn and do so unilaterally — without dignifying Fidel Castro by negotiating with him — simply because the embargo is now as anachronistic as the Cuban leader himself.

ESTONIAN PRESIDENT SYMBOLIZES COUNTRY — Just 52 years ago, Lennart Meri was a frightened 12-year-old boy deported with his family to Central Russia for the crime of being Estonian. Today, Meri is the eloquent and elegant president of an independent Estonia. He represents his country completely, having suffered as it did dispossession, humiliation and subjugation while never quite losing the deep (although hidden) desire for independence.

MUCH OF IRAQI WEAPONS COMPLEX REBUILT — Iraq appears to have rebuilt much of the weapons complex destroyed during the Persian Gulf war, and could revive its nuclear bomb-making capability, as well as the United Nations eases its sanctions, Congress was told. The assessment came in separate, sometimes conflicting, assessments from Robert L. Gallucci, assistant secretary of state for political and military affairs, and from a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee staff report.

MORE AMERICANS INVEST IN LATIN AMERICA — "Americans," a newspaper editor once observed, "will do anything for Latin America, except read about it." That may or may not still be true, but it is clear that more and more Americans are willing to invest in Latin America. The number of Latin American funds continues to grow rapidly. There are now eight mutual (open-end) funds containing $446 million, and 12 closed-end funds with $1.9 billion — for a total of almost $2.4 billion.

AMERICANS COMBAT CARJACKING ON THEIR OWN — Amid the Cadillacs, Chevy Caprices and Mercedes Benzes in stages of repair on the factory floor at O'Gara-Hess & Eisenhardt stands a white, gold-trimmed Grand Jeep Cherokee. This 4-wheel drive suburban hill-climber is endowed with protective armor to deflect bullets. Perhaps the most astonishing thing about this "personal security vehicle" is who will be behind the wheel. An East Coast businessman paid $50,000 (not including the cost of the car) for "peace of mind." With carjackings up 32 percent in the nation last year, O'Gara and other security professionals say interest in their products among the general public has risen.

PAROLEE FIGHTS FOR RIGHTS OF JAILED MOTHERS — Jean Harris, the former girls' school headmistress who served 12 years for the 1980 murder of her lover, Tuesday advocated special help for jailed mothers and their babies as the star witness at a Senate hearing. Harris, 70, paroled in January after Gov. Mario Cuomo commuted her 15-years-to-life sentence for killing diet doctor Herman Tamower, endorsed an $8 million Senate bill that would allow incarcerated mothers to serve sentences in supervised community programs with their children.

MAN TRIES TO OUTLAW MONOTONY OF LIFE — Who is John Nowakowski that he thinks he can outlaw part of the everydayness of everyday life? His own life, Nowakowski insists, is anything but monotonous. In his spare time, such as it is, he is the elected president of the New Lenox (Ill.) Village Board, and it was in that capacity that he got to thinking about the problem of monotony. Under his prodding, the board is poised to enact sometime in July what has become known as the "anti-monotony" ordinance.

POLICE USE COMPUTERS TO HUNT CRIMINALS — In an office, Chief of Police Al Olsen hunts down child pornographers and pedophiles. And it is through his computer that Olsen pursues them. The handful of investigators who investigate the use of computers in crimes against children acknowledge that child pornographers and pedophiles recognized the opportunity new technologies offered long before law enforcement appreciated what was going on.

Fourth of July players carve patriotic niche

By William Ragan
Entertainment Editor

When Britt Small and his band Festival performed at the dedication of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C., in 1982, he never expected the angry crowd reaction that followed.

Fighting broke out during his performance. But rather than panicking, members of the band managed to calm the audience by walking into the crowd and singing.

And Britt Small announced his status as a Vietnam veteran.

"I'm a veteran. It's something I can't walk away from," he said. "And as a Vietnam veteran it's been pretty hard to make any inroads into the music industry."

Despite being unfairly blackballed by the music industry because of his veteran status, Small and Festival have carved a unique niche in American music through purely independent means.

The band will perform tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Riverside Park as part of Murphysboro's Fourth of July celebration.

Festival had already been touring for 10 years before the explosive incident at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

Small discovered first-hand that Vietnam veterans are often unfairly treated in the United States, and decided that persistence was the key to...

Small established his own record label, Max Stout Records, and his own agency, American Family Talent, to promote his own band as well as uncover the rich musical talent buried in the fertile soil of northeast Missouri.

Branson, Mo. has already become an unlikely musical hot spot, a small rural community with more than thirty theaters, and American Family Talent played a part in making the town a music mecca, Small said.

"The whole point was to book you talent. There's talented people (in the area) not being found," he said.

"If you didn't live near the major music centers you couldn't get anywhere," Small said. "Once you get away from the urban areas they want good clean entertainment ... but they don't want to have to step over bums to get in the door."

Small's band Festival is a 15-piece band that plays a unique mix of country, big band swing and patriotic songs. "God Bless America" is just as likely to be part of a set as "Achy Breaky Heart" or the jazz standard "In the Mood."

The band also injects a healthy dose of comedy into its acts, which only adds to the diversity.

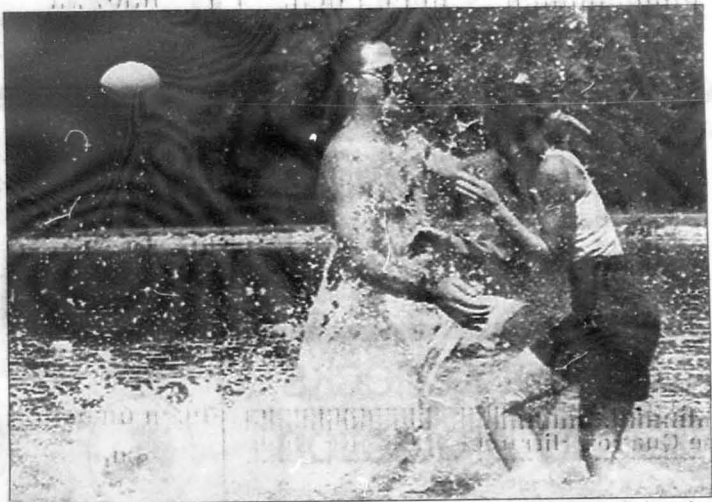

But there is also a human element to the group as well, exemplified by its decision to play venues such as nursing homes and state penitentiaries, as well as Small's dedication to Veterans' issues and Prisoners of War, he said.

Small is currently serving as Deputy Chief of Staff of the National Vietnam Veterans' Coalition in Washington, D.C., and is working to bring the more than 100 P.O.W.s in southeast Asia that he claims are alive.

Small said himself and his band are still often unjustly labeled as mindless flag-wavers.

"We're misunderstood as being pro-military and pro-government,"

Sports store to close after 25 years

By Erika Bellafiore
Business Writer

Bleyer's Sports Mart has been in business for 25 years, but like many Southern Illinois stores it is shutting its doors.

The store, at 718 S Illinois, was established on the Strip in 1968 by Frank Bleyer, the original owner of the building.

Rocky Bleyer, owner since 1982, said he was ready for a change.

"I'm ready for a switch," Bleyer said. "I'm tired of the business, and I'm going back to school to study finance."

No jobs will be lost, because the two full-time employees and four part-time employees were notified months ago that the business was closing, Bleyer said.

"My employees have jobs lined up for the fall," Bleyer said.

James Prowell, executive director of the Carbondale Chamber of Commerce, said when people are in business for a long time they get burned out.

"Twenty-five years is a long time to be in business," he said. "It's hard work and time consuming."

The store will be closed sometime between Aug. 1 and Sept. 1, and the building will remain vacant.

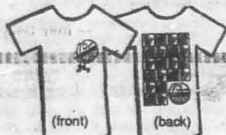

There are advantages and disadvantages of having vacant buildings in a city, Prowell said.

"The advantage of having empty buildings is that there are places that are readily accessible if someone is going to open a business," Prowell said. "The adverse effect is the indication that there may be a lack of prosperity."

Mandatory checks offer city protection

AFTER YEARS OF DISCUSSION, a proposed landlord licensing system that would address student and city rental housing concerns is finally underway.

The licensing system for landlords would require mandatory rental inspections on a regular basis and would allow detection of homes in poor conditions and in violation of safety regulations.

Not only will regular mandatory rental inspections detect those homes that need repair but will motivate upkeep of homes and could be instrumental in catching problems conducive to health and safety hazards before they start.

AS IT IS, CARBONDALE LANDLORDS have operated under a voluntary compliance code since 1984, making it necessary for a tenant complaint or landlord request before rental property is inspected. Prior to 1984, the city was without any code.

In July, a city committee will discuss the need and the requirements for a license to rent homes. As they do so, they must forge ahead to make this a reality for students and city residents.

Rental property in Carbondale makes up about 71 percent of the city's occupied dwellings and it is feasible that some landlords may have not had their houses inspected for many years.

OTHER LONG-TERM BENEFITS of the licensing system should also be weighed when viewing requirement issues. According to a 1983 book called Rental Housing in the 1980s by Anthony Downs, as physical improvements in rental properties increase so does the likelihood that property values will stabilize or increase.

Despite the numerous benefits, the debate about licensing and its focus on health and safety hazards has taken a slightly new twist.

Student leaders have voiced concerns that if mandatory checks are implemented, they will be used to check for other violations as well, such as zoning violations and house parties. Those who oppose zoning laws have been the most vocal in the debate.

Zoning laws within Carbondale require that no more than two unrelated people are allowed to live together. R1 zoning, which is used for the majority of the city, is for single families and allows for no more than one unrelated person.

GRANTED, HEALTH AND SAFETY REASONS should be the paramount reason for mandatory rental checks. After all there are other ordinances addressing zoning laws and house party violations.

But if adopting the mandatory rental licensing means these laws will become part of the inspection package, then they should be abided by.

As task force leaders continue to discuss mandatory licensing, they must remember that the original intent of mandatory licensing is to protect students and the community.

Mandatory licensing finally would provide the transient and the city population who rent housing units a foundation to stand on.

Style of first lady changes over years, ends era of long-suffering political wife

Los Angeles Times

Two stories about first ladies in the newspaper last week brought home how the role of the president's wife has changed in the last two decades—and our deep ambivalence about the job.

On the same day we read about the death of Pat Nixon—the "perfect political wife"—we learned the courts had ruled that Hillary Rodham Clinton is a "de facto" government employee, and as such is not required to invite the public to meetings of her health care task force.

In obituaries, Mrs. Nixon was described as loyal and long-suffering. In news stories, Mrs. Clinton was described as having attained a victory; one report said the federal appeals court had "acquiesced in Mrs. Clinton's ambitious views about the role and powers of the first lady."

The timing of these events makes it impossible not to compare the styles of these extraordinarily different American political wives.

People seemed to react to the headlines about Mrs. Nixon the way they would to an ink blot: Those who considered her the ideal first lady read something sinister into descriptions of how she is the last of her breed. To their way of thinking, there is an implicit message that Mrs. Clinton is behaving the way first ladies should.

Those who applaud Mrs. Clinton's more involved style seem to read the homage to Mrs. Nixon as an implicit criticism of Mrs. Clinton.

All interpretations point to the continuing confusion in this country over what we expect from first ladies.

On Friday, a long line of people stood in the hot afternoon sun, waiting to pay their last respects to Mrs. Nixon. Surrounded by immense floral arrangements, flanked by a Marine honor guard, her body lay in a lacquered coffin under a spray of white and yellow roses inside the Richard Nixon Library & Birthplace in Yorba Linda, Calif.

Most mourners said similar things about Mrs. Nixon: She was quiet and strong, like iron, a great lady, patriotic, private, hurt. She was a wife from that era, they said; she suffered in silence.

Some were offended when asked to reflect on how the styles of first ladies have changed, on how Mrs. Nixon compares to Mrs. Clinton: "Their names shouldn't be used in the same sentence," said a woman who walked precincts for the GOP in 1968, the year Richard Nixon was first elected president.

Bruce Herschenson, who worked in the Nixon White House, puffed on a cigarette outside the library and reflected on the sentiment underlying the newspaper headlines and stories proclaiming the passing of an era with the death of Mrs. Nixon.

"When people say it is the end of that school of first ladies," he said, "I think they are saying that how it is now is how it should be. And I could not disagree with that more. I think first ladies should be like Denis Thatcher was when the Cabinet came to call—invisible."

Just after I spoke with Herschenson, a library employee handed me a press kit. It contained a list of "notables" expected to attend Mrs. Nixon's private funeral service the following day.

"Accompanying wives, etc.," it said, "not necessarily noted."

My guess is that Pat Nixon, who was 81 when she died last week of lung cancer, spent a good portion of her life being "not necessarily noted" for the things she did. (She was noted, however, for the things she wore—most dramatically, the "respectable, Republican cloth coat" her husband described in his famous "Checkers" speech during the 1952 presidential campaign.)

I was surprised to read in Julie Nixon Eisenhower's 1986 biography of her mother that Mrs. Nixon was deeply disappointed in 1971 when her husband did not nominate a woman to one of the two vacant spots on the Supreme Court. She also supported the Equal Rights Amendment, and had spent 16 years working, quitting when her first child, Tricia, was born.

Still, despite some feminist stirrings, Mrs. Nixon never had a cause higher than her husband. She once said: "A wife's first duty is to help and encourage her husband in the career he has chosen."

When you think of Barbara Bush, you think of literacy; when you think of Nancy Reagan, you think of drug abuse prevention.

When you think of Pat Nixon, you think of Richard Nixon.

And when you think of Richard Nixon, you think of Watergate.

"Few women in public life have suffered as she has suffered and done it with such grace," said the Rev. Billy Graham at Mrs. Nixon's memorial service Saturday.

The era of the long-suffering political wife, I hope, has come to a close. I say this in no way to disparage Pat Nixon, but to recognize that for many women who find themselves grappling with the demands of public and private life, Hillary Clinton's example may prove the more liberating one.

war-racked country. Western strategists say privately that the rebuilding cannot begin in earnest until ordinary Somalis become involved and force the current warlords to share their power. Once that is done, they say, the government can begin work on reviving the economy as well.

Aidid, whose home and headquarters were destroyed earlier this month in a retaliatory raid for a June 5 ambush that killed 24 Pakistani U.N. soldiers, remained at large Wednesday despite a U.N. order issued two weeks ago for his arrest and detention.

Western diplomats say U.N. authorities know where Aidid is and have been tracking his movements among safe-houses in Mogadishu. But they deliberately have not arrested him yet because of fears that the capture might spark a shootout that could injure Somali civilians.

Authorities say a team of U.N. lawyers is in Mogadishu researching the legal ramifications of various proposals on how to deal with Aidid once he is in custody. They say U.N. commanders probably will let the situation cool a bit before arresting him.

Also unclear is how the U.N. command plans to strengthen its 18,541-person military force in Somalia over the next several weeks in the wake of Aidid's uprising — and the resulting U.S. and allied retaliation — earlier this month.

Middleton's research on the Cypress swamp began in spring 1991 with seed dispersal studies in the swamp and along the banks of the Cache. She said her research has shown that the river carries more than 80 species of plants along its length.

Max Dutchinson of the Nature Conservancy, said they are looking for ways to put back the original forest that once grew in the Cache.

"Putting the forest back will slow runoff and decrease erosion, leaving less silt in the water."

Middleton said her research indicates that reclaiming the swampland habitat will require reforestation.

"What little natural flooding that occurs drains too quickly for any seeds to germinate," she said.

"When the emphasis was on farming the land, they were quite successful in making these areas much drier than they had been. The main objective now ought to be how to reforest these areas."

Dutchinson said this type of work has been limited because of the small sizes of the land that is owned by the agencies. He said the Army Corps of Engineers is considering methods of reforestation area-land should that prove to be the best solution.

"We're not ready to put water in to create natural meandering swamps," he said.

Dutchinson said the agencies have acquired and opened 29,000 acres since the first tract of land was purchased in 1969. He said the agencies plan to obtain and restore 60,000, out of the 500,000 total land surrounding the Cache River. Middleton is researching ways to undo the damaging effects that farming has had on the natural seed population.

She said much of the wetland seedbank is destroyed fairly quickly once the land has been farmed.

"The main tree species like Cypress and Tupello are gone within the first year," she said.

Reforestation of the area would also benefit the 36 rare plant and animal species located there. Dutchinson said the area contains several animals that have been listed as endangered species.

"The Barn Owl, which nests in the Cypress tree, Big Eared Bats and the Great Blue Heron would benefit from forest restoration," he said.

Liquor board chairman Mark Robinson said the program seemed interesting.

"Such a program looks interesting," he said. "Some form of training program probably would be beneficial but there needs to be more interest from the community."

Feliu said server intervention programs have been mandated in northern Illinois.

"I know in Chicago and Peoria they have mandated server intervention and training programs," Feliu said. "If Carbondale were to promote server training, I think it would prevent a lot of problems because the city would be taking a pro-active approach."

"The program would reduce the risk of intoxication among people who are in the bar because under state law intoxicated people cannot be served," she said.

Greg Graves, University Teletrak manager, said his employees are TIPS certified through the company.

"We have an instructor who is certified to train employees through the TIPS program," Graves said. "It has helped our establishment a great deal."

Barbie Priest, a University Teletrak waitress from Carbondale, said she has been certified since the establishment opened in 1992 and the program has helped her identify possible problems.

"It has helped me to spot people who are intoxicated, and it has helped me deal with them," Priest said. "In some cases, we have called cabs and offered them food and coffee before they left. We wanted to make sure people are alright before they leave."

If employees take the $15 per person certification course, the establishment will get an insurance discount and it will invest three years into the servers' career by being certified, whether or not the employee stays at that establishment.

Mike Spiwak, Undergraduate Student Government president, said the program or some kind of intervention training is needed.

"The TIPS training program is needed but I think a bouncer training program should be implemented as well as some kind of server intervention program," Spiwak said. "The intervention program can only do so much as far as preventing someone from becoming intoxicated."

"If the bars do something like TIPS, it should go beyond recognizing an intoxicated person," he said. "An independent agency should come in and train bouncers how to respond and react."

Feliu said bar or liquor management should support employees.

"If the management supports employees with getting involved intervention training, such a program can do wonders as far as preventing accidents and taking responsibility for serving alcohol," Feliu said. "If the management does not support employees, it would defeat the purpose." After all, it starts with the server," she said.

The TIPS program was started in 1989 under the Illinois Department of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse's BASSET program.

GLBF celebrates 4th of July with picnic

By Patti Dulik
General Assignment Writer

The SIUC Gays, Lesbians, Bisexuals and Friends organization will celebrate the 4th of July while promoting campus unity and gay awareness, members say.

GLBF and area residents will celebrate Independence Day with a potluck picnic July 3 at Giant City.

Heath, Karch, co-director of GLBF and junior in electrical engineering, said the picnic is an excellent opportunity to promote campus and community unity.

"People are becoming more aware of gays and lesbians," he said. "Unlike other minorities, there's nothing that sticks out, that says you are a gay or lesbian.

"A picnic is a good way of getting our community to say, 'Hey, we're here with a lot of people. We can do a lot of things.'"

Everyone is invited to attend the picnic at Shelter No. 2 from noon until 10 p.m.

Heather Peet, a senior majoring in radio and television and political couldn't come at a more awkward time for some Democrats.

WASHINGTON—Congressional Democrats, who have pushed for greater political freedom for the nation's 3 million civil servants, are likely to get what they want when the Senate returns from its Independence Day recess.

Most Republicans, with the notable exception of Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, oppose efforts to liberalize the Hatch "no politics" Act.

The House already has passed legislation to revamp the 54-year old law. The Senate, after a procedural skirmish Thursday, will take it up the week of July 13. Opponents will try to kill, stall or amend the bill (to exempt IRS and FBI workers) by Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio. But vote counters say it's all over. The president is prepared to sign whatever Senate-House conferees approve.

Ironically, allowing feds to run as candidates, run campaigns or take other off-duty political roles science, said she is not gay but plans to have a great time at the picnic.

"They're a nice bunch of people," she said. "To me, it's just a normal picnic, like any other, but it also gives me a chance to show my support for the gays and lesbians."

Todd Schlender, co-director for GLBF and a junior in journalism, said the picnic will be your average Fourth of July social activity.

"It's going to be a reunion of people to get together and meet the other people in their community," he said. "I'm trying to stop that. We can't afford to expend our children the way we have because we've been doing it for economic reasons. It irritates some people that somebody will go and die so that somebody can keep his bank account." Small said.

Festival also puts a strong sense of family across in its performances. Small's 9-year-old daughter and 15-year-old son play with the band, and all of the members are close, he said.

"We started as a social experiment," he said. "We lived communally for 20 years. There's a lot of camaraderie. We've had a really good time."

Small said the band hopes to salute veterans through its music, at the same time releasing the tension of such an emotional issue, like last year when the band triumphantly returned to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial to perform.

"There's a healing process to what we do," he said. "We've had a profound effect on our audiences."

The Britt Small and Festival concert is sponsored by Patriots Bravo Co. Tickets are $10 and includes draft beer, soda and

If the referendum involves student affairs, the president will consult Harvey Welch or Jean Paratore; if it is academic, he will consult Benjamin Shepherd.

Hall said the president's approval is important to the process of getting plans implemented.

She said she would like to see the referendums passed through chain of command faster.

Jean Paratore, associate vice president for student affairs, said the student referendums are non-binding plans, which means they are not orders and are subject to the approval of the president.

"Usually the referendums are passed at the end of the year, like the mass transit referendum," she said. "If the plan does not reach the trustees in time, the referendum can not be implemented for the next school year."

Paratore said, for example, the students decided to have the elective termination of pregnancy covered under their health insurance in April 1992. It was January 1993 before the students were able to make insurance claims.

"Right now, we are not even sure when the mass transit resolution will reach the Board of Trustees," she said.

Not all referendums deal with student affairs, some are SIUC changes are academic.

Benjamin Shepherd, vice-president for academic affairs, said when the referendum is academic, the president usually consults with him before he approves the referendum.

Shepherd said referendums can take the form of the any new academic requests, like the additions or cuts to programs that are taking place.

Shepherd said there are many steps to passing referendums.

"The faculty passes the referendum, then it will go to the faculty senate," he said. "From there, it will come to me, then to the president, to the chancellor, then finally to the Board of Trustees."

When the referenda involves student affairs, the plan is usually originated by the students, then it will go to student government.

Paratore said it is important to note that all parties in the process, whether it be president, the chancellor, or the originator of the referendum can not approve it and hold it up.

Shepherd said the steps are called the Campus Regular Planning Process, which has been in effect at SIUC for several decades.

Hall said things would be better if the president would speed up his approval process.

"After the ratified referenda results are passed to President Guyon, I would like to see the

SIUC music school launches adult band class

By Karen Ham
Entertainment Writer

When the SIUC School of Music presented Carol Van Rossum with the opportunity to play the saxophone again, she was hesitant. "I hadn't played in 26 years, and I didn't know what I was getting into," said Van Rossum, a resident of Carbondale. "But once I made the commitment to play again, I was glad I did."

For the first time ever, the School of Music launched the Adult Beginner Band program for people who want to learn to play an instrument, said Kathy Schwarzkopf, a music instructor with the program.

"For many people, this program has become a chance to fulfill a dream," Schwarzkopf said. "This is their chance to do something that they've always wanted to do."

Schwarzkopf said the original idea for the band was to appeal to older and retired people, but the responses came from a diverse crowd.

"We have people ranging from 20 to 60-years-old," she said. "But because the class is offered on weekday afternoons and we had a diverse response, we have a smaller group than we thought." Robert Weiss, director of the program, said while planning summer classes last December, he thought an adult band program could work at SIUC.

"Other cities have a community band, but there were none close enough to our area," Weiss said. "I'd like to see a community band evolve out of this idea, so we're starting with an adult beginner band."

The six-class series is designed to combine music theory, listening skills and exercises as well as instruction on individual instruments.

"On the first day of class, the students got to decide what instrument they wanted to play. They were like kids in a candy store," Schwarzkopf said. "Many people came in with an idea of what they wanted to play, in fact everyone wanted to play saxophone, but many have changed to different instruments."

The instruments and music are included in the $40 fee and supplied by the school, Schwarzkopf said.

"The fee is especially my incentive to stick with it," Van Rossum said. "But I also enjoy it very much because of the people I've met. These are nice people from different areas of the community and we're all centered around music."

"I think these people are really brave to come out and try something that they've never done before, and find themselves in a new situation," Weiss said.

Schwarzkopf said the camaraderie between students is one of the reasons people decided to join.

"Not only do they build friendships in this environment, but it's something different to do," Schwarzkopf said. "People assume that when you get older, learning stops, that's not true."

"There's something about the typical mind that keeps people young," she said.

When the class ends on Saturday, July 24, the group hopes to play a concert, Schwarzkopf said.

"This offers them a sense of accomplishment," she said. "I hope that an intermediate group could be formed for those that have finished beginner, I'd hate to see them drop what they've learned."

Van Rossum said she also would like to see the group continue.

"Southern Illinois University and other higher education institutions will benefit greatly by this increased funding and won't be forced to raise tuition prices and other services because of budget restraints," Dunn said.

Rank-and-file lawmakers returned to Springfield more than a week ago to following a 23-day absence. They were sent home so

Gov. Jim Edgar could work with the four major legislative leaders on the sticky issues of the budget.

The lawmakers returned to their desks, disappointed in the progress which had taken place.

Sen. Jim Rea, D-Christopher, said splitting surcharge revenues by the planned 75 percent for state government and 25 percent for local government would hurt the smaller municipalities.

"I've said all along that the money from the proposed surcharge allocation is not enough," Rea said. "It is going to make it very difficult for local governments."

Lawmakers also are having a difficult time deciding on how much the cigarette tax should be.

"I didn't want to vote for the cigarette tax increase," Dunn said.

"I think it will hurt the retailers of the state, especially around the border counties."

State Rep. Gerald Hawkins, D-Du Quoin, said he does not think the increase on cigarettes will have much of an impact on the state.

"The cigarette tax is not going to have the effect that a 75 cents-a-pack increase would have," Hawkins said. "But the tax is there in lieu of the granny tax."

The "Granny Tax" would be abolished under the current plan.

Rea said the cigarette tax increase will encourage bootlegging in Southern Illinois.

House Speaker Michael Madigan said he would only back an 8-cent-a-pack increase.

But Gov. Jim Edgar supports the 25-cent increase and said that the 8-cent increase would not raise enough revenue.

Skeletal find stumps local enforcement

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
Police Writer

The recent discovery of skeletal remains in rural Williamson County, has forensic experts facing a challenge to identify the person, a state policeman said.

The partial remains of an unidentified person were discovered in a southwest field about 9 a.m. and local police were immediately alerted.

Lt. Robert Emery, of the Illinois State Police said because they are working with so little information it is going to be a difficult case to solve.

Forensic experts have been contacted and will examine the remains as soon as possible.

They will attempt to identify the body and determine the cause of death, Emery said.

"What we're doing is crossing our fingers and hoping the experts can help us," Emery said.

A Williamson County Coroner's office official said an inquest will be conducted after the investigation is completed.

Emery said they also are trying to contact a dental expert to examine the remains.

The case is being investigated by the Williamson County Sheriff's Office, Williamson County Coroner Monte Blue and the Illinois State Police.

"If we're lucky all they will tell us is the approximate height," Emery said. "There is not enough of the pelvis or the skull to identify if the body is a male or female."

Emery said the area where the body was discovered has no criminal history.

Gateway champion and five-time NCAA qualifier, who still has the highest finishes of any Saluki trackster ever at NCAA outdoor and indoor, meets, notching ninth and seventh place in the shot put.

Rea was a four-time NCAA All-American in 13 events, a 14-time Gateway champion, and the second N.C.A.A. postgraduate recipient in school history.

Rea has since been in the 1985 World Championships, the '85 and '87 Goodwill Games, the '87 U.S. World Championship Trials, and the '84 and '88 Olympic Trials.

SIUC Athletic Director Jim Hart said he is proud of this year's inductees.

"There is a wonderful mix," Hart said.

"We have exceptional athletes, a great coach, and one of the finest ambassadors of good will ever associated with our program. Many of their contributions live on. I couldn't be more pleased."

Spackman's induction will make history, as he becomes the first individual other than an athlete, coach or administrator to be selected for the school's Hall of Fame.

Spackman was a valued member of Saluki athletics for 22 years, an associate professor in Physical Education and a coordinator/physical therapist at the SIUC Student Recreation Center for five years.

Spackman was renown in physical fitness and sports medicine, authoring books, developing patents and appearing at symposiums throughout the U.S.

Morava received the Nissen award, recognizing the nation's top gymnast, in 1972.

In '73 he was selected to compete for the U.S. in the World University Games in Moscow.

LeFevre's 443 victories rank him as the second winningest SIUC men's coach ever.

His teams were ranked in the NCAA top twenty four times, including a No. 10 ranking in 1971.

Finley was followed up a standout college career with a solid showing in the pros.

The center-fielder led the Salukis to two MVC titles and an appearance in the 1986 NCAA regional.

He still holds SIU's career record for runs scored (175).

Norwood has traveled three different paths on his way to the Hall of Fame.

Norwood was a great athlete, distinguished alum and university advocate.

At SIUC, he was an honor student who starred for the football Salukis. After graduation, he pursued a career in aviation, became United Airlines first black pilot, and has subsequently received widespread acclaim for an extraordinary commitment to his profession. Norwood has also served on SIU's Board of Trustees for nearly two decades, while chairing that group twice.

so I just hope that I can stay calm, you know, and play a good match."

For anyone who was guessing what effect Sabatini's French Open defeat by Mary Joe Fernandez would have,

Sabatini led, 6-1, 5-1, 40-30 — the answer is that she's in recovery.

Sabatini said the Fernandez match had no effect on her losing to Novotna, who was 2-9 against Sabatini.

"I mean, a defeat like at the French happens not very often, and I think I'm playing very good tennis," Sabatini said.

She said her concerns lies elsewhere, but time is needed now.

"I'm not concerned about that. I just need to take some time off now and get ready."

Capriati seemed ready to knock off Graf, which would have been something of a landmark.

Graf was 7-1 against Capriati, having lost only at the Olympics.

Graf double-faulted to start the ninth game, trailing 5-3.

And when Capriati smoked a backhand passing shot down the line for set point, Graf was on the ropes.

The only problem was, she didn't know it. She didn't know the score.

"I'm trying to do that," she said. "Usually when I go on the court, I try not to think of the score. ... Sometimes it works, sometimes it doesn't. Probably it worked very well today."

Afforded a chance to win the set against Graf, Capriati sent a forehand crosscourt, but wide. She made another unforced error on game point, another forehand long, and Graf was off the hook.

Graf jumped to a 5-0 lead in the tiebreaker and the match was basically over.

Afterward, Capriati said her main problem had been Graf.

"Once she just starts rolling, she starts rolling, you know?" Capriati said.

Considering that Graf has won four Wimbledon titles, most everyone does know.

Even Navratilova realizes what she is up against, but likes her chances anyway.

"The closer I get, the better I feel about it," she said.

Navratilova said keeping the game in perspective is a very important part of Wimbledon.

"But you can't go too much based on your last match or else you would be a total yo-yo," she said.

Navratilova said she often times listens to her heart.

"Sometimes it's hard to produce your best tennis at a place like this. You just win on near more than on form sometimes. ... I'm playing good tennis, period."

"Forget my age, it doesn't count."

residential house in Carbondale working with traumatic brain injured adults 50 hours a week.

"I help with reorienting the residents to everyday living," Firth said.

"I just help them get little things done."

Firth has also been involved in SIUC's Special Olympics and has been a respite care provider for a disabled child the past three years.

During 1992, she served as director of the 4th annual Rolling Saluki Wheelchair Basketball Tournament and was a physical therapist aid in the United Cerebral Palsy Land of Lincoln program.

The award was the most recent in a respectable list of achievements for Firth, who graduated last semester with a cumulative grade point average of 3.47 and a perfect 4.0 for the semester.

This year she was named the recipient of SIUC's NCAA Woman of the Year Award, which honors deserving individuals for excellence in athletics, academics and community leadership.

Firth is a great athlete and a very caring person, said Saluki women's basketball coach Cindy Scott.
