Carbondale makes slow transition to 21

By Signe K. Skinion
DE Government/Politics Editor

After three years of gradually raising the Carbondale bar entry age from 18 to 21, city officials say the slow transition helped institute the final policy in a peaceful manner and will help deter underage drinking.

Jeff Doherty, Carbondale city manager, said the main reason behind raising the bar-entry age to 21 is to curb under-age drinking.

"There has always been a concern on the city council that with the bar-entry age being under the drinking age more under-age drinking is occurring," he said. "By raising the bar entry age to 21, we are looking at ways to help stop underage drinking."

Even though few people were out late Sunday night, police officials went into Carbondale bars at midnight to check driver's license

At the stroke of midnight Monday morning, Kelli Burns was told to leave Six Bar & Billiards, where she cannot return until her 21st birthday.

Burns, 20, a sophomore in physical therapy from Marion, was one of the 20-year-olds affected by the changing bar entry age on July 1.

The bar entry age increased in Carbondale from 20 to 21 at part of the final phase of the city council's plan to decrease underage drinking.

"Burns said she was approached in the middle of her game of pool and asked for her ID," by one of the bartenders.

When she said she did not have it, she was asked to leave by midnight.

"What are the kids from 18-20 supposed to do?" Burns said.

"It is just a big mess. It's not fair at all. You just can't give this to someone and then take it away

can face fines from $50 to $500, but can face more penalties if caught with a fake identification card.

State records show there are three different fake identification cards, each with the same penalties if a person is caught with one.

The three identification cards are "fictitious," "fraudulent" and "unlawfully altered" and it is illegal to possess, distribute or create one of these cards.

The fictitious card is when the Secretary of State's office creates the card with false information about the identity of the person.

The fraudulent card is a computerized driver's license not created by the Secretary of State's office.

An unlawfully altered driver's license is when the original license has been changed in some way to create false information. If a and escort people under 21 out of the buildings.

Doherty said because the bar-entry age occurred gradually, the last phase, which began Monday morning, allowed for less problems.

"By adopting the bar-entry changes on a yearly basis, it really lessened the impact of the transition," he said.

Sgt. Luanne Brown, of the Carbondale Police Department, said the police will continue doing bar checks to make sure there are no underage drinkers.

Veterans celebrate Independence Day

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Features Editor

While Independence Day is a time for fireworks, barbecues and a day off of work, it is also a time of reflection for the battles America's veterans have fought for other countries' independence.

Cyndi Hanson, vice-president of the Veteran's Association, and a sophomore in special education from Carbondale, said some people drift from the actual meaning of the Fourth of July and get caught up by the holiday celebration.

"I think a lot of people use it as a holiday to set off fireworks and barbecue, but have lost touch with the meaning," she said.

"I'm not saying you have to join the service to remember what the day is, but it's nice to remember how this country has remained free and has helped out so many other countries," she said.

Brian Lutz, president of SIUC Veteran's Association, said the organization is holding a picnic on July Fourth in honor of the area veteran's and the service they have provided.

"We wanted to give veterans a chance to come together and give them a chance to remember what they've done," he said.

Lutz, a senior in political science from Pekin, served in Somalia and in the Persian Gulf. He said July Fourth is the time of year when veterans take pride in their contribution to other countries that have fought for their independence.

state, full-time undergraduates. However, SIUC's tuition and fees is less than the national average by $310.

"In terms of the bigger universities like Illinois State University and Northern Illinois University, SIUC is less expensive to attend," he said. "But the report consolidates all the universities. You really have to be careful when you compare us to other universities."

According to IBHE and University records, SIUC's fall

1996 tuition for in-state, full-time undergraduates is $2,550, compared to the national average of $2,860.

Dyer said the IBHE report is grouping four-year institutions, such as SIUC and the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana, with two-year institutions, like John A. Logan College, and taking an average.

"You really need to compare SIUC to other four-year universities

Moro to face rape charges

By John Lynch
Daily Egyptian Reporter

John D. Moro, the man accused of abducting his daughter from school at age 10 last year, will face charges in Washington, prosecutors announced.

Greg Zampini, prosecutor of Kaitlin Conroy in Washington, said he plans to file charges on about the third week of July and have Moro extradited to Washington to stand trial.

Moro is accused of allegedly raping his daughter Kaitlin in Washington.

Zampini said statements from witnesses and evidence found in Moro's car had established where he was staying in Washington, suggesting he may have raped his daughter.

AMERICAN ALLEGES RIGHTS VIOLATIONS IN JAPAN — TOKYO — A U.S. citizen serving a prison term in Japan is suing the Japanese government for alleged human rights violations that are substantially similar to allegations made last year by a New York-based human rights organization. Kevin Neal Mara, serving a 4-year sentence for importing more than 20 pounds of marijuana, alleges prison officials have placed him in leather restraints and in solitary confinement for days at a time for minor violations. Mara, 32, of Fairfield, Conn., said he received 10 days in solitary confinement for opening his eyes during the reflection period before a meal. Before that punishment began, he said, he was stripped and bound in a leather harness and placed in a "protection cell" for two days. During that time, he was unable to use his hands, which were handcuffed and bound behind his back. He said he was issued a pair of open pants through which he urinated and defecated.

YELTSIN UNDER SECLUSION, DOCTORS' CARE — MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin was secluded at a government rest house outside Moscow under medical supervision last weekend with only his family present, according to diplomatic sources here. Yeltsin's reported isolation at the Barvikha compound, without any campaign or presidential aides just days before the presidential runoff election, suggests he was more seriously ill than the Kremlin has acknowledged. Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin has said Yeltsin had a "cold," and other officials said he had a "sore throat." But the diplomatic sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said it appears Yeltsin, who has a history of heart trouble, was suffering from a more severe malady. Yeltsin canceled several planned events on Sunday, when he was isolated with his family. He was scheduled to meet with liberal economist Grigory Yavlinsky, who placed fourth in the first round of the presidential election last month, but the meeting did not take place. Yeltsin also was supposed to videotape a message to Russian voters, but that session was put off until Monday.

LOCKHEED TO BUILD ROCKETSHIP PROTOTYPE — WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration has selected Lockheed Martin to build the prototype of the next-generation rocketship — known as the X-33 Advanced Technology Demonstrator — that will carry America's space program into the 21st Century, replacing the existing fleet of rapidly aging space shuttles. Vice President Al Gore announced Tuesday from Pasadena, Calif., that the space contractor's appropriately futuristic, wedge-shaped "X-33" design will receive an initial $941 million in development funding through 1999. Lockheed Martin will invest some $220 million of its own money. Under the terms of the agreement, Lockheed Martin's legendary "Skunk Works" team in Palmdale, Calif., will oversee construction of a full-size scale model of the spacecraft by March 1999 and will complete 15 test flights by the end of that year. The entire cost of building and testing a new reusable launch vehicle (RLV) ultimately could be as high as $8 billion, experts estimate.

PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE LIKELY TO REMAIN CLOSED — WASHINGTON — Even a partial reopening of Pennsylvania Avenue would increase the risk of a vehicle bomb damaging the White House, the director of the Secret Service said Tuesday. Eljay B. Bowron, responding to growing pressure to reopen the closed part of Pennsylvania Avenue, said in an interview that the current 330 feet between the White House and the street would not be sufficient to prevent deaths, injuries and extensive damage to the 196-year-old building from a vehicle blast. "(People) say very matter-of-factly that a truck bomb couldn't do to the White House what was done to the federal building in Oklahoma City because of the distance," Bowron said, referring to last year's bombing of a federal office building from a truck parked six feet away. "I'm here to tell you we've done exhaustive studies and that's just flat not true." He noted U.S. military officials have increased the distance between the apartment complex in Saudi Arabia housing American soldiers and security barriers from 100 to 400 feet after the blast last week that killed 19 service people.

Despite state-wide raise, SIUC faculty pay low

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A statewide salary raise for all university employees may not cover all SIUC employees' increased cost of living, and will not narrow the gap between SIUC faculty salaries and faculty salaries at other Illinois universities, University faculty and administrators say.

The Illinois General Assembly approved a 3 percent salary increase for all state universities and junior colleges' faculty, civil service workers, administrative personnel and graduate assistants for the 1997 fiscal year, which began Monday.

Carol Henry, SIUC's budget director, said the Carbondale campus received $3,238,400 from the state budget to increase salaries this fiscal year.

Henry said the raises are merit-

"Some faculty, on average, do better than the cost of living, but a significant portion of the faculty does not."

James Allen,
Faculty Senate member

based, and that each department head decides how much to raise employees' salaries based on factors like teaching, research and service.

Henry said individual raises could be more or less than 3 percent, depending on merit, but that the average raise is 3 percent.

James Allen, SIUC history professor and Faculty Senate member, said the raises are unfair to faculty members who receive less than a 3-percent pay raise.

The consumer price index rose by 3 percent in 1993, the most recent year available. Allen said faculty members must do "extraordinary" work to receive a raise high enough to cover annual inflation.

"Some faculty, on average, do better than the cost of living, but a significant portion of the faculty does not," he said, adding that "perfectly adequate" faculty members' salaries can actually decline relative to the consumer price index.

Margaret Winters, associate vice chancellor of academic affairs, budgeting and personnel, said state universities can reallocate their own money to increase their raises beyond the state's 3 percent, but that SIUC had not done so this year.

Winters said if other state universities spend their own money to raise salaries above the state-allotted 3 percent, SIUC faculty and staff salaries will fall further behind the average salaries at Illinois universities.

Winters said studies of the amount of state universities' raises for fiscal 1997 had not been completed.

An Illinois Board of Higher Education study shows the average SIUC faculty salary for 1994-95 was $45,100. The statewide average was $47,200 the same year.

Winters said the administration is discussing ways to increase faculty salaries, but that the University could not reallocate money for salaries without sacrificing other priorities.

"We'll have to wait and see how enrollment goes (this fall) and then go back to specifics like raising salaries. It's certainly something we're aware of as an issue," she said.

Henry said SIUC salaries rose 3.3 percent last year. She said the amount of the raises is determined by the Illinois General Assembly's budget for university salaries.

"Three percent is not a lot," she said. "The state appropriates dollars based on what they have the ability to pay for. It's about the rate of inflation. Most of the faculty and staff would have liked it to have

Science center suffers from low annual appropriations

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Carbondale Science Center will receive $8,000 less than last year's appropriation from the Carbondale Park District's annual budget, the park board president says.

Robert McGinn, park district board president, said the annual budget was unanimously approved by the board Monday. He said the budget reduces the Science Center's annual grant from $27,000 to $19,000.

Deborah Collette, Science Center board president, said she expected the reduced funding, but she was still disappointed.

"We need all the money we can get right now," she said. "It's a critical time for the Science Center. We're trying to find a new building and facing a decrease in funds."

In addition to the $8,000 cut from the park district, the Science Center's $17,000 per year grant from the Illinois State Board of Education ends in December. The cuts bring the museum's budget for next year down to $52,000.

McGinn said Science Center representatives asked the board for a $27,000 grant Monday, but the board could not raise the museum's allocation. He said the district's museum fund is supported by local off-track-betting proceeds, which are down.

The Science Center is Southern Illinois' only science museum and children's museum. It opened in the city-owned building at 611 E. College in January 1994 and pays no rent, utilities or maintenance.

Collette said the museum may have to find a new building because the Carbondale city government is moving to the new City Hall offices on South Illinois Avenue in September. She said the city has not decided the Science Center's future in its building.

Science Center representatives said the museum's budget for next

Fireworks safety: Use caution and have fun

By Colleen Heraty
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Trails of color in the early night sky with the sudden repetition of loud bangs have long been experienced by the millions of Americans celebrating Independence Day. However, the Office of the Illinois State Fire Marshal (OSFM), warns that fireworks are not toys.

OSFM reported that the use of fireworks sent more than 260 people to the hospital last year, most of whom were children.

In Illinois, all fireworks are illegal unless authorized by local jurisdiction permits, used for supervised public displays.

Types of fireworks include firecrackers, torpedoes, sky rockets, Roman candles, bombs, blank cartridges, toy cannons, and any other type of composition or substance which produces the effect of a temporary exhibitional nature by explosion, combustion, deflagration or detonation, according to OSFM.

The term firework does not include sparklers, smoke devices, trick noisemakers, party poppers, trick matches, snake and glow work pellets and most forms of toy pistols that use plastic or paper caps.

A 1995 survey conducted by OSFM revealed that most people who were injured suffered from second and third degree burns, while others lost their sight or hearing.

Thomas L. Armstead, state fire marshal, said that fireworks pose a threat year round, but with the Fourth of July approaching, the likelihood of fires, injuries and even deaths related to fireworks misuse is even greater.

Larry Ellet, a registered nurse at Carbondale Memorial Hospital, said he has seen a smaller number of people over the years who come in to the emergency room for injuries relating to fireworks.

"People are becoming more educated and more aware of the dangers," Ellet said. "I don't think anyone even came in at last year for injuries on the Fourth of July."

Carbondale Fire Chief Cliff Manis said people should take precautions when using fireworks. Fireworks without warning labels should not be used, he added.

"An adult should always be present around fireworks and water should be handy," Manis said. "They should be lit outdoors, and malfunctioning fireworks should never be re-lit."

Manis said fireworks should never be lit inside metal or glass containers because the containers could explode and cause injuries.

New law dean to focus on skills, bring consistent vision to SIUC

By Julie Rendleman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC's new law school dean says he will focus on skills and value training for teaching candidate lawyers within the college.

Thomas Guernsey

The new law school dean, Thomas Guernsey, who started Monday, was chosen from five other candidates after a six-month nationwide search. Guernsey was associate dean at the University of Richmond Law School before coming to SIUC.

Guernsey will be the fifth dean, replacing Thomas Britton, acting law school dean. Britton took over for Harry Haynsworth IV when Haynsworth left last July.

Guernsey said he was impressed with the quality of the law school.

training to see if we can improve it, even though it is already good," he said.

He said he is very impressed with the student to faculty ratio at the law school because the future of law depends on that ratio.

"The ratio is very good by legal education standards," he said. "The ratio has always been terrible in law schools. It is not unusual to be 30-to-1 faculty-student ratio."

Jeffrey Schuck, president of the Student Bar Association, said Guernsey seems enthusiastic and energetic, with a lot of new ideas. "He had the best sense of direction by wanting to head and reach toward a specific goal," he said.

Guernsey said he will also focus on looking at different technologies to make sure law students have the best skills to practice law.

"I will look at CD ROMs and legal research on-line," he said.

Guernsey said he plans on traveling a lot to develop alumni relationships with the law school.

He moved to Carbondale Sunday with his wife Kathie Klare and his two children, Alison, 15 and Adam, 12.

Speaking out first step in confronting sexual harassment

THE MASTER'S THESIS PROJECT THAT IS displayed in the University Museum is a powerful image of people dealing with sexual harassment. The photo exhibit is a display exploring attitudes toward sexual harassment by using personal accounts of sexually harassed women. The artist said she filed a complaint after she was harassed, but wondered why some do not speak out against harassment.

When people do not speak out against sexual harassment the practice continues. Confronting sexual harassment is conducive to ending the practice in any situation.

The University's policy on sexual harassment defines sexual harassment as "unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, verbal or other expressive behaviors, or physical conduct commonly understood to be of a sexual nature..."

THE ONLY SOLUTION IS TO SPEAK OUT.

If not to the harasser, then to some of the people on campus who can help remedy the situation. In 1994, there were nine requests for information and 19 complaints of sexual harassment at SIUC. Of those, the majority were women discussing situations where they were being harassed by men. Fourteen were complaints by students about University faculty or staff. Seventeen of the complaints were resolved by a department head or dean and resulted in disciplinary action. Those 17 would not have been disciplined had the victim not spoken out.

HARASSMENT CAN COME IN THE FORM OF "innocuous" teasing from a co-worker or superior, professor, staff member or fellow student. If the harassment is in the form of a question, joke or innuendo that may annoy, humiliate or make a person feel uncomfortable, it is no more acceptable than other forms of sexual harassment.

In some situations, the person who is harassing may not be aware that the behavior is defined as harassment of the other person. In this situation, telling the harasser that the situation is uncomfortable can sometimes stop the activity. A person can know it is wrong sometimes only if the victim speaks up.

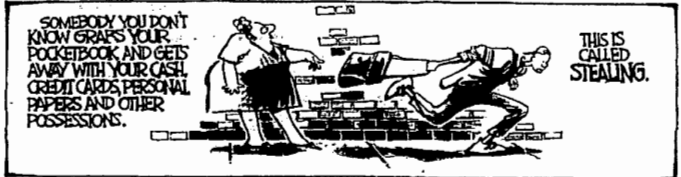

However, there are other situations where the harassment is purposely used as asking for, or implying the two should have sexual relations. In this case, the person harassed can believe there is no way out, because the harasser is a supervisor or professor. But there are several avenues that can be taken to get out of a harassing situation.

THE UNIVERSITY DIRECTORY HAS A LIST of Sexual Harassment Information Advisers that can be used for a confidential query. The adviser listens and evaluates a complaint, offering advice on the situation.

The University Ombudsman or Affirmative Action Officer can act as a mediator to solve a situation between both parties. The third option is to speak to the department head or supervisor of Human Resources, who will investigate complaints.

If someone at SIUC is found in violation of sexual harassment laws, they could receive a range of discipline from oral or written warnings to dismissal from SIUC or the job affiliated with the University. The consequences for the victim are unending — as long as the problem continues.

There is no excuse for not speaking up and putting an end to harassment. If the victim does not speak out to the harasser or to another party who can intervene, the situation will continue and become worse for the victim.

Letters to the Editor

Christian God not alone in pantheon

Here we go again, Mr. Sparks, you say you have lived in Carbondale for over two years, so I must ask if you have ever read the Daily Egyptian before? It seems that some of your statements sound familiar. This same topic and argument has been done over and over. The fundamental Christians go to press to tell those of other beliefs that we NEED God, we NEED to be saved and that the Christian god is the only way this will happen. So if this has been argued before why do I respond again? Its simple really, I am always shocked into anger by how closed minded and insensitive people can be.

There are many beliefs that are still practiced today that were around long before Jesus Christ. These people, like myself, believe in other gods and other ways and we are not evil nor are we wicked or sinful. The people and problems of the "vile" city of Carbondale are no different than any other college town, or any town for that matter. If living in a surprisingly peaceful and diverse town makes you so unhappy why don't you find a place more to your liking and leave those who have no part of your life alone.

My point is that it is not your job to tell people what they need to do or believe. Many will not listen to illogical splutterings of evangelical Christians anyway because more often than not it is not your words but quotes from a book. I ask that you not insist that we all need to find God for I have found them in my own personal, Pagan way.

Ambassadors listen; enforcers react

I would like to address a situation I witnessed in the photography lab on Sunday, June 30.

An exchange student from Japan was bringing a bicycle into the photo lab to shoot it in the studio for a class.

A janitor saw him, with the bike in the hall and told the student that bicycles weren't allowed in the building.

The student, whom I know personally, tried to explain to the janitor that he was photographing the bike for a class. Unfortunately his English isn't all that good, but much better than my Japanese.

When the student brought his bicycle into the studio apparently the janitor felt his "authority was being challenged and called the SIUC police.

When the officer showed up he was very rude and scolding toward this student who was only doing what his instructor told him to do.

After a call was made to the lab manager and the officer was informed that this was indeed a "legal" act, the officer, instead of being an ambassador of goodwill stated that he had to call his supervisor to see what to do.

Maybe it's just me but I don't think it takes a rocket scientist to figure out what should have been done.

Only after speaking to his superior did the officer begrudge ingly leave the student alone. Before he left though the officer scolded the student some more in order to save face.

This whole incident was witnessed by at least three other photography students who felt that it was a clear cut case of harassment.

These exchange students spend a considerable amount of money to come to SIUC and experience our culture.

It's unfortunate that they have to be subjected to this kind of abuse.

It is also no wonder that the enrollment is declining.

'Damn Yankees' reviewer misses mark

I am extremely disappointed with last Thursday's review by Lisa Pangburn regarding the play "Damn Yankees."

The actors didn't miss a beat! Even the young actors were flawless. Who was concerned about what dress Lola (Janelle Moreg) was wearing? She presented an exceptional performance.

I watched "Damn Yankees" unfold with a sparkle and exuberance only the professionals from SIUC's theater department can deliver.

Granted it wasn't a "Broadway production" Ms. Pangburn must be accustomed to, for this I am sorry.

She should stop and think about the blood, sweat and tears that was given by not only the actors but the crews and orchestra as well. It was certainly a hit in my book.

Moro

He said there was probable cause to hold Moro in Washington on rape charges when he was first apprehended Sept. 12, 1995, but Washington held off filing so Moro could face kidnapping charges in Southern Illinois.

Zemple said if Moro is found guilty on these charges, he could receive a maximum sentence of 136 months or a minimum of 78 months in prison in addition to the 30-year-sentence he is currently serving in Illinois. Moro kidnapped his daughter, Demetria, at gunpoint from her Giant City classroom on Aug. 28, 1995, and fled to Washington, where FBI agents apprehended him after a two-week nationwide manhunt.

Moro, 34, of Centraillia, was arrested by FBI agents Sept. 12, 1995, outside an apartment building in Ellensburg, Wash.

Moro was originally sentenced to 35 years in prison after he was convicted of armed violence, aggravated unlawful restraint and unlawful use of weapons.

Patricia Gross, Moro's attorney, argued his sentence was excessive for his crimes.

Judge David W. Watt Jr. later reduced Moro's sentence by five years.

Gross could not be reached for comment on the new charges brought against her client.

Moro is currently being held in the Jackson County Jail awaiting extradition to Washington.

like Illinois State and Northern, and, even though it's considerably larger, the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana," he said.

According to the IBHE report, Illinois state universities averaged $3,432 in undergraduate tuition and fees, while the national average for undergraduate tuition and fees is $2,860.

Larry Juhlin, Student Affairs associate vice chancellor, said the report shows SIUC as one of the least expensive state universities.

"I think our tuition is one of the lowest next to the other four-year state universities," he said.

"And out of student fees, we're fourth or fifth in the state."

killed to protect the basic rights of everyone," he said. "Independence is a way of life only a few countries get to enjoy. You have to feel good fighting for that cause."

While some people question risking American lives for the independence of foreign countries, veterans feel that the fight is a worthy cause.

Dana Welge, a junior in speech communication from Hillsboro, served in Desert Storm.

She said Independence Day reminds her of the liberation of Kuwait.

"The day they were liberated from Iraq, they were as happy as we were when we became independent from England," she said.

She said seeing all these countries moving toward democracy makes a person appreciate his or her own independence.

"It makes you appreciate your own country and what it stands for," she said. "The people in Kuwait were really happy to see us. You know you are fighting for something worthwhile."

Age

McDowell, 19, a junior in computer science from Chicago, said the city may be trying to cut down entertainment for college students.

"SIU is not located in a large enough city with other social outlets for students. The bar age should go back down," McDowell said.

Some students believe that because of a lack of student involvement, the bar entry age increase was put into effect.

Shasta Stevenson, 20, a senior in aviation and forestry from Western Springs, said she was dissatisfied with the bar entry-age increase. She said students should have been more vocal about the change by attending city council meetings.

"It could have been prevented if the students had actually done something," Stevenson said.

"The students have nothing to do down here if they are under 21," Stevenson said. "Keeg parties will definitely increase and cops will bust more of them."

Some younger students say the bar-entry age change will not affect them because it does not change their life style.

Darceus Ogunbiyi, 19, a sophomore in radio-television from Chicago, said there are still ways for students to entertain themselves.

"People will still find a way to sneak into the bars if they really want to go," Ogunbiyi said. "I would rather go to the movies, have a house party or just hang outside the bar."

The bar-entry age increase will not bother Ronnie Webb, 20, a sophomore in business from Chicago.

"I waited to turn 20 so I could get into the bars and now that I am 20 I have to wait another year before I can get in," Webb said.

Allison Dugan, 20, a junior in elementary education from Western Springs, said she would like to see the bar age remain at 20.

"It's too bad the bar-entry age had to change because some bars, may close and definitely lose business," Dugan said. "Now, SIU should have more activities and functions that will decrease underage drinking."

Although some students think there should be more activities for the under-age crowd, others see it as an improvement to the bars.

Clinton warms up campaign themes

The Washington Post

CHICAGO—President Clinton made a whirlwind visit today to the city where he will be renominated in less than two months and used the occasion to sharpen some of the main themes that he will carry into the fall campaign against presumptive Republican nominee Robert J. Dole.

Speaking to a wildly partisan audience from the National Council of Senior Citizens, Clinton delivered a full-fledged campaign stump speech in which he extolled his record and warned that "the last thing we need to do is to reverse a course that is working."

On the economy, anti-crime legislation, Medicare, Medicaid and numerous other issues, "we were right and they (the Republicans) were wrong," he said, using a variation of the title of a book written by his chief 1992 campaign strategist, James Carville.

And in November, he added, voters will have "a very clear choice." "You know where I stand and you know where they stand," he said.

Clinton said he knew he was "preaching to the saved" and the largely elderly audience of about 1,000 responded with chants of "four more years" before, during and after his speech.

The president's 10-hour visit was closely tied to preparations for the general election battle against Dole and the Republicans.

After polishing his stump speech before the senior citizens group, he attended a fund-raiser for Rep. Richard J. Durbin, the Democratic nominee to replace retiring Sen. Paul Simon (D) in a key contest in the battle for control of the next Congress.

Tuesday night, Clinton attended a second fund-raising event for the local committee that is hosting the Aug. 26-29 Democratic National Convention here, where he and Vice President Al Gore will be nominated for a second term.

In between those events, Clinton, whose appetite for junk food is legendary, found time to stroll through Grant Park, sampling items at "Taste of Chicago," an annual summer festival that features food from dozens of Chicago restaurants.

Accompanied by Mayor Richard M. Daley (D), the president nibbled on a cheeseburger, jerk chicken, pierogi, cheese corn bread, barbecued pork and rice, and tandoori chicken.

Asked if he hadn't had "more than a taste of Chicago," Clinton said, "I'm just trying to be fair."

year will not be enough to pay its own rent at a new location, estimated to cost between $20,000 and $30,000 per year, and support a staff and its exhibits.

Jim Mueller, Science Center executive director, said it is too early to tell how the museum will compensate for the funding cut by the park district, but he said the center's hours could be cut and the maintenance and construction of exhibits could be affected.

"We were on a tight budget before, doing everything on a shoestring, and now our shoestrings have been cut," Mueller said.

Fireworks

He said people should go to a fire department supervised public fireworks show instead of lighting fireworks personally because the people who will use the fireworks at the show are licensed and trained to handle them safely.

The fire department will have two firemen and an engine at the side of the Arena Thursday evening to overlook the Lions Club fireworks show.

Manis, who has been fire chief for 26 years, said he has not seen any problems at fireworks shows the department has supervised since he has been here.

The fire department has been monitoring several tents in the Carbondale area which are selling fireworks, he said.

"We make sure the fireworks are legal and have proper labels," Manis said.

Under the Fireworks Regulations Act, safety requirements exist for stores selling fireworks: smoking is prohibited; signs stating "Fireworks for Sale" must be displayed; and fireworks cannot be displayed in glass cases where the sun shines through the glass.

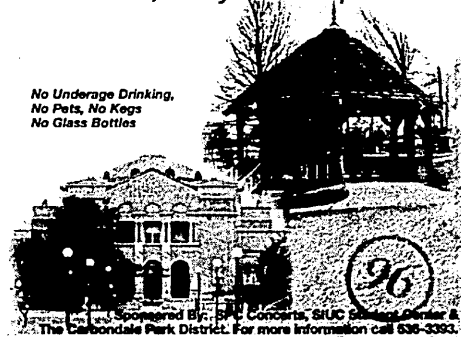

"It scares me that something as simple as a sparkler can get as hot as 1800 degrees Fahrenheit, and remain hot enough to cause serious burns," Manis said. "Even though fireworks are legal, it doesn't mean they are perfectly safe because they

Postal workers picket privatization

By Julie Bury
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The idea of the federal government turning the U.S. Postal Service over to private companies had some union postal workers picketing the Carbonade Post Office as a form of protest.

Local members of the American Postal Workers Union organized an informational picket on Monday. Postal workers say selling the U.S. Postal Service to private businesses would be a threat to mail service quality, and that the public should be informed of this possibility.

Union president Mike Gunter said the picket was not only a day of protest, but also the anniversary of

" I don't think America will allow (privatization) to happen."

Mike Gunter
President, local American Postal Workers Union

two events: the U.S. postal service coming out from under control of Congress to become an independent government corporation, and the creation of the American Postal Workers Union.

"We thought this would be an appropriate and symbolic day for an informational picket," Gunter said.

The post office remained open while picketers outside handed out informational literature to post office patrons.

Union literature distributed at the picket stated that if Congress decides to sell pieces of the U.S. Postal Service to private companies, it would have negative effects on overall mail service.

One example given in the literature of negative impact possible from this privatization is higher costs to the consumer.

Costs could rise because companies would buy into mail service to make a profit, possibly charging more to mail a letter.

The literature also stated that rural and inner city mail delivery may become more expensive and complicated, since it would not be profitable for a company to offer rural areas mail service and companies may not be willing to operate in inner-city areas. Gunter said the U.S. Post Office is self-funded and does not use tax money to supplement its income.

"This establishment is totally self-supported," he said. "We don't have to turn a profit, only break even. Only occasionally do we have to raise stamp prices to keep up with postal costs. Businesses would want to make a profit from the mail service."

Gunter said he does not think attempts at privatization will be successful.

"I don't think the American public will allow that to happen," he said. "We just came out here to remind them what might happen if it did."

Open mic night: beginners take spotlight

By Lisa M. Pagburn
Daily Egyptian Reporter

This summer has been a breakthrough for aspiring musicians wanting to test their boundaries as entertainers due to a new event called "Open Mic Night."

This is the first summer Booby's Beer Garden, 406 S. Illinois Ave., has had Open Mic Night every Wednesday. It is a chance for beginning musicians to perform in front of an audience. James Flanagan, one of the managers at Booby's, said the night has been going over well.

"The night gives people a chance to get together and jam," he said. "It always seems to go over really good." Greg Sellek, a senior in computer science from Wonder Lake, has performed at Booby's and said even though he was nervous, the chance to play was a great experience. He said he played and sang his own style of music.

"It was really fun being able to get up in front of people you don't know and play guitar with my friend," he said. "I think it was nice to play whatever we wanted."

"It really was really a good time, but when the people who you are playing for start tapping their feet or stop talking to hear you play, that's a pretty cool feeling."

Joe C., from Soundcore Music, schedules the bands or artists that wish to perform. He said the night is a melting pot of talent.

"It's a great opportunity for those musicians to get into the music scene," he said. "Most everyone plays a lot of experimental music, but it always is well received."

C. said the musicians must sign up before 9:30 p.m. on Wednesday and the eight slots that are available are get filled very quickly.

"We fill the slots on a first come, first serve basis, and we've always had them fill up fairly fast," he said. "Sometimes we've had to turn away people."

Chad Minier, a senior in music education from Benton who plays in The Alright Blues Band, said the Open Mic Night is a chance for him to play with musicians outside his band.

"Open Mic Night is a great experience all around," he said. "It's a chance to jam with other people and learn more about other types of music."

Sellek said anyone who wants to play in front of an audience should try performing at an Open Mic Night.

"It's something that really helps you get used to dealing with an audience," he said. "I've also played at the Hanger 9 for an open mic, but they're not having it this summer. Musicians need to really get out and practice what they love — music."

person is caught two or more times, the charges are either a Class 3 felony with two to five years in prison and up to a $10,000 fine, or a Class 4 felony with one to three years in prison with up to a $10,000 fine.

Doherty said the city does have programs to help local businesses who wish to provide alternative entertainment for the under 21 crowd.

"We have small business loans and low interest loans and can assist businesses in many other ways if there is a demand for alternative entertainment," he said.

Canada cuts budget, privacy

The Washington Post

TORONTO—Canada has transformed itself in the last few years from a bloated, deficit-ridden social democracy into one of the leanest public economies in the developed world.

Prime Minister Jean Chretien, who said almost nothing about cutting spending when he ran for office in 1993, has led the budget cleanup with more success than nearly any other Western leader.

The nation that the Wall Street Journal called "an arrogant member of the Third World" for its poor finances 18 months ago is now expected to balance its budget by 1998, as in nearly all of its 10 provincial provinces. Even now, Canada has the smallest budget deficit relative to its economy of any of the Group of Seven industrialized nations, and just now it had the second largest.

Never as government leary as Sweden, France or other European social democracies, Canada has nonetheless pooled itself on having some generous social programs that those in the United States, including all King University, have seen as the college education, free health care and generous pensions.

Now, programs are being cut, although it is unclear how other public services, such as university tuition, will be affected. Unemployed businessmen need to find other work. Free health care is harder to get in Toronto and other large, welfare programs like child care will have to be cut.

British Columbia, already known for its high unemployment rate, is asking themselves whether there really is much difference any more between Canada and its neighbor, Oregon.

Dole receives $1 million from casino interests

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Robert J. Dole raised $1 million from casino interests in Atlantic City on Monday evening — a score that is part of a big-casino campaign season during which the nation's gambling industry has bet record amounts on presidential politics.

Not counting Dole's Atlantic City haul, and not counting President Clinton's attendance last month at a Democratic National Committee fund-raiser in Las Vegas that raised $500,000, gambling interests so far have given Dole and Clinton eight times as much money as they gave during the entire 1992 election cycle, according to figures compiled by the Center for Public Integrity.

The explanation for this sudden generosity is twofold. First, the casino industry is richer, more widespread and better organized than ever. Second, the casino business is very worried about pending legislation in Congress. The House has passed and the Senate is considering a bill that would give subpoena power to a commission that would examine how the casino industry operates.

The industry wants to kill the commission's subpoena power. To that end, it has been funneling campaign money to Dole and Clinton as well as to GOP and Democratic leaders in Congress and to the national war chests of the two main parties.

"The gambling industry plays the game of political roulette. It plays both sides by laying down two big stacks of chips — one on red and one on black," says Charles Lewis, executive director of the Center for Public Integrity, a Washington-based good-government group.

Having failed, so far, to strip subpoena power from the Senate bill, the gambling lobby has used the strategy of delay on Capitol Hill. That, however, might also be failing.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., despite personal reservations about the need for a commission, plans to bring the bill to the floor for a vote this month, according to Susan Irbly, his press secretary. Once it reaches the floor, it is expected to pass easily.

Drunk boating hazardous to health, safety

The Washington Post

As boating season gets into full swing, the U.S. Coast Guard and the Marine Police are bracing for distress calls, near collisions and other boating mishaps.

From chugging beer at the helm to operating at top speeds, and without knowing port from starboard, many boaters take risks that wind up causing serious injury and death. Boating accidents killed 840 people in the United States last year, 60 more than in 1994, according to the U.S. Coast Guard. Boating-related fatalities now rank second only to car crashes as a cause of transportation deaths in the United States. More people die in boating accidents every year than in airplane crashes, train wrecks or in bus accidents.

"Most surprising to me are the things people will do on the water that they would never think of doing on land," said Capt. Tony Stimat, chief of the Coast Guard's office of Boating Safety.

Accident investigations by the U.S. Coast Guard and the National Transportation Safety Board show that about 80 percent of boating fatalities could be avoided if boaters would take a few simple precautions and use common sense.

"These are preventable injuries," Stimat said. "They occur because boaters didn't do something that they could have done to control it."

Rule No. 1: Boats, Alcohol Don't Mix

Alcohol is the leading cause of marine accidents, according to the National Transportation Safety Board, which investigates transportation-related accidents.

"Many people fail to take into account that simply being on the water affects the senses. "When you are out on a boat, the sun, the wind, the vibration and the movement can impair your reaction time to the point it would reach if you were legally drunk," said Elaine Dickinson, chairman of the National Safe Boating Safety Council.

Police Blotter

■ A student from John A. Logan college was injured Monday when the bus she was riding in struck the overpass on Grinnell Drive. The injured passenger was treated and released from Carbondale Memorial Hospital. The 1982 Ford bus sustained more than $500 damage and is owned and operated by the University.

■ Clifton W. Reynolds, 23, of Anna, was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol after being stopped Friday on U. S. Route 51, south of Pleasant Hill Road. Reynolds was apparently driving on the opposite side of the road in a no passing zone. He posted his driver's license and $100 as bond and was released.

■ Dennis D. Parker, 31, of Carbondale, was arrested and charged with violation of an order of protection filed by his wife. Parker apparently went to see his estranged wife at Evergreen Terrace after she had filed the court order against him. Parker was taken to

Jackson County Jail

He was also arrested for disorderly conduct by SIU police at Evergreen Terrace on June 28. He was released on his own recognition.

■ Jason V. Dansby, 19, of Carbondale, was arrested for retail theft and aggravated battery at the SIU bookstore on June 27. Dansby allegedly struck a store employee while shoplifting and was taken to Jackson County Jail.

■ Dwayne R. Edwards, 28, of Carbondale, was arrested by SIU police for forgery and unauthorized use of a credit card on June 27. Edwards was also charged with home invasion that occurred on May 13.

Model found dead in home

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—The body of actress-model Margaux Hemingway, granddaughter of legendary author Ernest Hemingway, was found Monday in her Santa Monica studio apartment a half block from the beach.

Hemingway, 41, who had not been seen by friends in several days, was identified through her dental records, authorities said.

"There is no sign of forced entry or foul play," said Santa Monica Police Sgt. Gary Gallinot. "We have no evidence of suicide, no note or anything like that. But we're not ruling it out."

Hemingway's body was discovered by friends who had stopped by her apartment with a workman. Hemingway, older sister of actress Mariel Hemingway, had moved in a few weeks earlier and her friends had planned to help her complete some improvements to the studio and help her finish moving in.

When they found her door locked, one of them climbed a ladder to peer into a glass door, and saw the body inside.

Hemingway had a history of eating disorders and alcohol abuse and spent a month at the Betty Ford Center in 1988.

"For a time, I was living the life of Ernest Hemingway," she told a magazine writer.

"I think alcohol drove my grandfather to suicide, but I'm still alive because I did something about it."

Hemingway was 5 when her grandfather killed himself with a shotgun at his home in Idaho.

Two years ago, when she returned from a trip to India, she was treated at a mental institution after a period of bizarre behavior.

The last time Hemingway's friends or neighbors saw her was Saturday evening.

"She looked haggard and disturbed," said neighbor Peter Osterlund, who spotted her walking down Main Street in Santa Monica.

"I remember thinking she was a sad figure."

Hemingway first gained acclaim at 19, just a year after embarking on a modeling career, when she appeared on the cover of Vogue and a number of other fashion magazines. The six-foot-tall model then signed a $1 million contract with Fabergé Inc. to promote their new perfume, Babe.

That same year she starred in "Lipstick," her movie debut.

Hemingway, unlike her younger sister who won acclaim for her performances in "Manhattan" and other films, was unable to sustain a successful acting career. The constant dieting and hard drinking took its toll, she later said.

Breakthru for Headache Victims

The cause of most headaches, including chronic, tension, stress, even severe and "migraine" type headache has been revealed by recent research at the nation's most prestigious research hospitals.

There are several causes of severe headaches often diagnosed as migraines. The more rare causes of "migraine" type headaches include circulation, aneurism, toxicity and tumors.

Researchers are now convinced that neck malfunction accounts for at least 80% of all headaches. As the most common cause of all headaches, neck problems are very often missed.

After a review of treatment methods, research teams have concluded that manual manipulation of dysfunctional joints of the neck can restore joint function. This improved joint function decreases nerve and muscle irritation, thereby relieving the cause of headaches.

The American Back and Neck Center is now offering a FREE consultation and functional exam to evaluate your case. If abnormal neck function is found, may be you are among the 80% group of headache victims that can be helped.

Russians prepare to vote

Los Angeles Times

KRATOVO, Russia—After his constitutional stroll around the lake Wednesday morning, Alexei Vlasov will tear himself away from the bird song and serenity of his country retreat here and board the local train for a bumpy, 90-minute ride to smoggy Moscow.

The train may well be crowded, and if so all the more satisfying for the 72-year-old Vlasov, who is breaking his bucolic reverie to cast a ballot for President Boris N. Yeltsin.

The incessant "vote or lose" warning broadcast by the president's nervous reelection team appears to have been heard loud and clear in verdant playground of the privileged like this dacha enclave 40 miles east of Moscow.

From young entrepreneurs to well-positioned pensioners, all of Kratovo is galvanized for Wednesday's watershed decision on whether Yeltsin wins a second term as president or is replaced by Communist Party challenger Gennady A. Zyuganov.

Fears of complacency among the electorate are misplaced, at least among these civic-minded summer people.

Yeltsin backers have been warning for weeks that a future of freedom and democracy hinges on voter turnout, that apathy among the affluent could leave the decision about who will lead Russia in the hands of an impoverished few — a scenario that would favor Zyuganov.

Every attempt has been made to maximize the turnout. The runoff has been moved up to midweek from the traditional Sunday for fear too many would escape to the countryside during a July weekend. Special polling stations have been created at railroad stations and airports for those on the move.

Direct-loan program still under siege

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—It is a centerpiece of the Clinton administration's education agenda, a federal program that fundamentally changes how college students get billions of dollars in tuition loans. But direct lending, which begins its third year this week with more than 1,700 schools on board, is still under siege.

The program, which allows college students to draw loans directly from the federal treasury through campus financial aid offices, is facing assaults on several fronts: Congressional Republicans continue to push for cuts in its administrative budget — the House Appropriations Committee voted to strip $70 million from it last week — and rival private lenders aggressively challenge its competence.

The Education Department has just shuffled top managers of the loan program. And several hundred colleges and universities that had planned to join this year have delayed the move for a year or backed out entirely. The new loan program is a key issue in ongoing budget wars between Republican leaders in Congress and the Clinton administration.

A record number of students are borrowing a record amount of money to pay for college because other forms of financial aid — such as grants or work-study programs — are not keeping pace with college costs.

Many Republicans, and some Democrats, on Capitol Hill are expressing serious doubts about the Education Department's management of direct lending and want strict limits on the number of schools that can participate.

But Clinton officials, charging that Republicans are responding to political pressure from banks and loan guaranty agencies that profit from the $25 billion student loan industry, have been pushing to expand the program. They contend it is much cheaper and more efficient for students and for the federal government.

In two years, direct lending has captured about one-third of the nation's student loan volume.

"How anyone can say that this program is on the ropes is nuts," said Education Undersecretary Marshall S. Smith. "We've only lost about five of our first 1,300 schools. That's an incredible track record."

Smith said the only reason some schools planning to join direct lending this year are waiting or dropping out is because they cannot be certain Congress is going to maintain funding. About 200 of the 600 schools the department intended to add to direct lending this year have backed out.

Skeptics of direct lending contend there is far more to be concerned about.

The department recently re-assigned the director of the program and replaced him with an official scheduled to leave the federal government at the end of the year. That shuffle has raised questions about the program's leadership. The department's inspector general also has criticized aspects of how direct lending is being managed. Earlier this year, errors by a contractor hired by the department led to delays in processing hundreds of thousands of student financial aid applications.

Since students get loans straight from the federal treasury through direct lending, banks and guaranty agencies, dominant players in college loan programs, have no role. Under the traditional system, which many universities still use, students apply for loans from banks or other lending agencies that get federal subsidies to keep interest rates low and to cover student loan defaults.

Republican leaders say that process has helped more than 75 million students attend college, with minimal federal meddling, over the past 30 years, and there is no need to change it.

Many campus administrators say the new system has eliminated paperwork, allowing students with loans to settle tuition bills quickly.

Grandfather, already oldest sprinter, to defend title in Olympic 100 meter dash

The Baltimore Sun

LONDON—And you thought Carl Lewis was a little too old to be sprinting.

Meet Linford Christie. He's a 36-year-old grandfather who swears he's the guy to beat in the men's 100-meter dash at the 1996 Summer Olympics.

Monday, Christie ended months of uncertainty by announcing he will represent Great Britain and defend his 100 title in Atlanta. And just so he won't be bored in America, the place he calls "the front yard of sprinting," he says he will enter the 200 and the 4x100 relay.

What makes Christie think he can win again? Ego, of course. But also experience. He is already the oldest Olympic sprint champ ever, claiming his 100 gold in 1992 at age 32. "Age ain't nothing but a number," he says. "There's too much emphasis being placed on people's age. Whether you're 16 or 60, if you can do something, then you're able."

With the rise of the "professional" Olympics dominated by full-time athletes, age barriers are being broken every four years. Yet Christie's bid to win at 36 is nearly incomprehensible. But with a body-builder's torso and an uncanny ability to block out distractions, Christie races like a man a decade younger.

"You want to be immortal," he says. "Every time there is a sprinter coming up, you want people to say, 'Will he be as good as Linford?'" Born in Jamaica and raised in England, Christie is track and field's late bloomer. He is also one of the sport's more volatile personalities, clashing with officials and the media. His British teammate, Derek Redmond, once called him "a balanced athlete—with a chip on each shoulder."

Less than a year ago, Christie appeared in a television interview and emotionally announced he would not compete in the Atlanta Olympics, saying he was being ill-treated by the media.

Christie and his family had been subjected to numerous tabloid stories, including the revelation that his teenaged son had fathered a child out of wedlock.

Christie also labored under the burden of being a star in a country that has few black sporting heroes. In his autobiography, "To Be Honest With You," he writes that in Britain racism "has become institutionalized," and is "ingrained so cleverly that you can't do anything about it."

"People believe that black people in this country, that we're not patriotic," he says. "But we are. We (black athletes) bring racial harmony. We show that people can go out there and work together."

Playing in specialized wheelchairs, William's and Yun's chairs have the rear wheels centered inward on a 45 degree angle at the bottom.

"These chairs allow for increased mobility and a tighter turning radius," Yun said.

Yun's chair also featured a single front wheel, mounted under a protruding steel bar.

"Pretty soon, chairs such as Ki's will be illegal for wheelchair tennis," Swanson said. "If that front bar gets caught in another chair's spokes, you can stop that person from moving."

"Equipment is really important, especially in wheelchair sports," Williams said.

Players strap themselves in with a seatbelt that holds them tight to the chair.

Williams and Yun stressed the importance of communication on the court.

"Communication is very important in doubles, because unlike non-wheelchair players, instead of having one man play forward, near the net and the other teammate at the baseline, wheelchair players usually stay at the back of the court," Williams said.

Jordan said he wishes more people would get involved in wheelchair sports.

"It's more exciting than people realize. It takes as much ability to do wheelchair sports as it does a person walking," he said. "Take the time to find out and check out where we're playing and come out," Jordan said.

The team began playing together over two years ago and was assisted by Swanson and Jordan.

"I started playing because it was something to do, but now it's fun winning with Earl (Jordan) all of the time in doubles and a lot of people don't realize that a player like Dave, (Williams) in a lot of cases can beat a lot of walking people."

"I think people have seen too many Jerry Lewis Telethons and all those people in wheelchairs, Yun said. "They don't know what's out there."

"If you look into it, there's really some phenomenal athletes and the only thing that separates them is that their sitting down instead of standing up," Yun said.

"I never will forget what my therapist told me," Williams said. "He said 'that by the time you think of all the things you can do — there's no time to think about the things you can't do.'"

While in Chicago, O'Neal debates returning to Magic

Los Angeles Times

CHICAGO—Dear Vlade, come back, all is forgiven. ...

Whether it was good manners or a declaration of principles, Shaquille O'Neal, the object of the Los Angeles Lakers' desire, for whom they stripped themselves of their starting center, said he intends to stay in Orlando, Fla.

"Orlando is my first option," he said as the Dream Team opened practice Monday.

"I've been saying that the whole summer. I just want a fair deal. Money's not the main issue."

However, he has said it before and, again, stopped short of actually saying he will return.

He pointedly suggested little interest in the Lakers or Southern California, where he has hung out so many summers. However, his agent, Leonard Armato, said that was to keep him out of trouble after widespread reports of a "done deal" with the Lakers.

"He and I are very concerned," said Armato, "there will be accusations of tampering if there's any inference Shaq is expressing interest in a specific team other than Orlando."

The Orlando Magic is still thought to be the front-runner since salary-cap rules allow it to offer O'Neal anything.

On Monday, O'Neal said he had no problem with Magic Coach Brian Hill or Penny Hardaway.

O'Neal is known to have complained about Hill. People close to O'Neal have focused on Hardaway, whose "Li'l Penny" commercials made him a Nike star.

O'Neal, who endorses Reebok, even made an ad in which he knocked a puppet that looked like Li'l Penny off the sofa, but that was all in fun, he says.

"I'm the type person," O'Neal said, "I take care of my own and I take care of my family. I'm glad for Penny, and I'm glad for Penny's mother, his grandmother."

"We're all in this together, but when it comes to outside business, I'm in outside business just to set things up for my family in the future. Not to compete with (Michael) Jordan, not to compete with Penny. 'Cause I'm going to get mine."

The question is, where?

Both Herrin and West agreed that players leaving college early to play professionally is not necessarily hurting the game of basketball. But they are concerned when high school players start entering the NBA draft in large numbers.

"The only way (to stop that from happening) is through education," West said. "There are a number of summer camps they could attend which tell them the chances of making an NBA team — less than 1 percent actually make it."

Herrin said the number of high school players actually selected in future NBA drafts depends on the quality of the athlete.

"I think it depends on how great the player is."

Rich Herrin, Slnuki basketball coach

"I think it depends on how great the player is. But I don't think this is something that will continue," he said. "The two high school kids that were drafted (Kobe Bryant by Charlotte and traded to the L.A. Lakers and Jermaine O'Neal by Portland) have excellent potential. "Kevin Garnett did it, and look at Shawn Kemp. He never played a day of college basketball and look what he's been doing in the NBA."

Teammates find confidence on court

Rolling Salukis ranked No. 1 in division

By Bruce S. Lorenzana
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Paul Mallory — The Daily Egyptian

David Williams, a member of the Rolling Saluki Tennis team and a junior in therapeutic recreation from Springfield, Mo., concentrates on returning the ball. Williams is nationally ranked number one in singles and doubles in the A division of wheelchair league.

SIUC has something no other college in the nation has — a four man tennis team, that competes in more than 50 tournaments per year.

The difference is that they play their matches seated — in wheelchairs.

Ki Yun, a sophomore in business from Colorado Springs; Dave Williams, a junior in therapeutic recreation from Springfield, Mo.; Earl Jordan, a senior in recreation from Chicago and Rich Swanson, a graduate student in recreation from River Forest, Ill., are SIUC's wheelchair tennis team. They have been practicing for their up-coming tournament, July 5-7, to be held in Birmingham, Ala.

Williams, ranked No.1 in singles and doubles in the A division, with his partner Yun who has been playing wheelchair tennis for eight years.

Jordan and Swanson, teammates since their interest in tennis began two-and-a-half years ago, are ranked No.1 in class C and have to move to a higher level of competition because they consistently beat their opponents.

Sponsored by the Office of Intramural Recreational Sports, the team garners most of its financial support from fund-raising activities by calling on friends, former staff members and businessmen to solicit funds.

The team also received a grant from the United States Tennis Association, (USTA) in 1994.

"Playing tournaments for points, trophies or occasional cash, the biggest reward is self-confidence," Williams said.

"Wheelchair sports, for a lot of people, helps their self-confidence," he said. "After my injury, I had a problem with confidence."

"Wheelchair sports have helped me regain it. Now, for me, it's a matter of doing well in tennis. I get recognized for my abilities on the court, which makes me feel good," said Williams.

Staying in school recommended over NBA draft

By Chris Clark
DE Sports Editor

Allen Iverson, Marcus Camby, Shareef Abdur-Rahim, Stephon Marbury and nine other players selected in the first round of last Wednesday's NBA draft have something in common.

They are part of a record-number 36 underclassmen that made themselves available to be drafted by NBA squads. The move has also fueled a debate over whether the draftees' decisions to gamble on making millions of dollars in the NBA versus staying in school is being made rationally.

SIUC Associate Athletic Director Charlotte West said the reason for the increasing number is the lure of big-time money and a new rule instituted by the NCAA.

Charlotte West

The rule states that a college basketball player can make himself available to play professional basketball, and as long as he does not sign a pro contract or one with an agent, he can regain his college eligibility.

"Most players will now be testing the waters, because they can do so without forgoing their eligibility," she said. "Some players make themselves eligible to see what their market value is."

"It's a new program, so we haven't had a chance to evaluate it and see whether it works or not."

Saluki men's basketball coach Rich Herrin agreed with West, but said money is not the only factor involved in players wanting to go pro.

"It's money, the exposure they get and the confidence," he said. "More players are playing, so there's more ways to make money playing basketball."

There are more teams and there is a greater opportunity for these kids to play professionally.

Last year, former Saluki forward Chris Carr decided to skip his senior season and make himself eligible for the NBA draft. He was selected in the second round by the Phoenix Suns as the 56th overall pick.

Herrin said he was not one of the many people that tried to get Carr to stay in school.

"I didn't push him to stay because that's an opportunity he's got to take," he said. "It's a gamble, of course, but I wouldn't try to make him stay."

"I must say I was surprised by the progress Chris Carr made between his freshman and junior seasons, and I wasn't sure it was a great decision, but I was by no means against it.

"It turned out to be a great decision for Chris."

Although Carr was drafted, many other players are not, and West said that is the biggest chance these athletes take.

"Each case is individual, but most of the time I would encourage the athlete to get their degree, because that's for life," she said. "I would tell them the degree is important, because the life span of an NBA athlete is short."

"Many players are leaving college when they're not as mature as they should be and sometimes have a hard time adjusting to the large jump in their incomes and responsibilities."

Between the Lines

Mike Tyson must choose between facing British fighter Lennox Lewis or losing his WBC title. Lewis is the number one contender for the belt, and was paid $4 million to let Tyson fight WBA champion Bruce Sheldon.

After fighting Sheldon, Tyson appears to be planning to fight Evander Holyfield, but if he does, he will lose the WBC belt, and Lewis will fight Olive McCall for the title in September.

After undergoing an angioplasty last Wednesday for to clear a coronary artery blockage, Los Angeles Dodgers coach Tommy Lasorda was released from the hospital Monday. Lasorda said that although he feels good, he is not sure if he will rejoin the team for Thursday's game, saying he plans to take the advice of his doctors.

St. Louis Cardinals shortstop Ozzie Smith, in his final season, was named to the National League All-Star team Tuesday. Left out of this year's team was Montreal Expos Henry Rodriguez, excluded in favor of New York Mets center-fielder Lance Johnson.

After being eliminated in the first round of the Western Conference playoffs, the Phoenix Cardinals have hired former Calgary Flames assistant coach Don Hay to lead the team. The Cardinals have given the Flames a third-round pick in the 1997 draft as compensation for hiring Hay with two years remaining in his contract.
