Full steam ahead:
Rain did not defeat spirit of participants, spectators during cardboard competition.

By Sean J. Walker
DE Campus Life Editor

As the rain fell on Carbondale sailors and friends at Campus Lake struggled to cover pieces of colored cardboard with plastic tarps and whatever else they had handy.

The regatta was in the 1995 Cardboard Boat Regatta fought the slow, steady rain only to drop their boats into the water at Campus Lake and fight the dynamics of cardboard in water.

Many of the boats survived the initial trauma of being thrown into the water, but time took its toll and many of the boats sank.

Dennis Dewey, a junior in industrial design from Coffeyville, Kan., was one of the twenty participants drawn that day to build an instant boat. He

Artists invest time, patience to modeling

Stock cars, tanks, warplanes, and a Klingon warship all appeared on SIUC this past weekend during the 22nd Annual Cardboard Boat Regatta held at Campus Lake.

The Saluki Modelers, a local modeling group, decided to celebrate their first year and to expose the work of local modelers, said the group's president Kennedy Shenberger.

The group, with its eleven student members, has Registered Student Organization status, and is planning events for the fall.

Members of the Lambda Chi sorority and Delta Zeta fraternity were able to fit more than a dozen people in their boat called "The Phoenix" at the 22nd Annual Cardboard Boat Regatta. Despite the weight factor, the crew made it across the line to finish eighth.

Domestic violence addressed

Actions taken to aid victims

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Anna Bixby Women's Center in Harrisburg has seen about 5,000 bailings victims of domestic violence out of jail in the past 36 days, an advocate for the center, told Illinois Attorney General Jim Ryan at a domestic violence conference Friday.

Linda Hayes said victims often end up in jail when both spouses claim abuse, but she thinks it is also the result of a lack of training for some of the police officers in her area.

"This is something that is pretty regular in our area," she said. "I don't want to make it sound like every police officer is among the victims because there are some very good police officers out there. But there are some out there who are very good at throwing the victims in jail. It's the same officers every time."

Hayes said the center, which serves Saline, Pope, Johnson, Gallatin, Hardin, Williamson and Hamilton counties, is on a very tight budget and is severely hindered by the oldest expense of bailing its clients out of jail.

Hayes was just one of the local leaders in the domestic violence field who addressed Ryan at the conference, which was held at the Lessor School of Law auditorium Friday.

The conference was the last in a three-conference series Ryan held to get a better understanding of what his office can do to combat domestic violence in Illinois, he told the

Trade link possible with Vietnam

By Michael D. DeFoe
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As Vietnam continues to develop as an international market, the United States has the potential to gain a profit through grain sells, according to one SIUC official.

Robert Arthur, animal science food and nutrition professor at SIUC, visited Vietnam in May to speak with agriculture policymakers about how the country can improve its swine management practices.

Arthur said once Vietnam improves its swine management practices they will have a need for grain, which the U.S. could supply.

"As the country's livestock industry develops, the demand for feed grain such as corn, barley and sorghum will increase," he said. "When it grows, they are going to have to import what they need. "Vietnam is going to give us an opportunity," Arthur said, although Vietnam has tremendous potential, the country is behind in modern management practices.

"Swine production is their biggest livestock industry right now, and it's on the increase," Arthur said. "But all their livestock productions are behind and not as modern as they need to be."

CHECHEN LEADER REJECTS TRUCE WITH RUSSIA -

MOE 2-22. Chechn| leader Dokur M. Dadyey rejected a truce with Russia and fighting continued Saturday across the breakaway Muslim republic. Officials in Moscow and Washington called the current international gathering here to mark the 1945 victory in Europe.

The air disaster Friday evening and Saturday in the rebel-controlled Jufi Peninsula were proof that government forces in the Indian Ocean island nation no longer have unchallenged mastery of the skies. The attacks also posed an urgent question for President Chandrika Kumaratunga, who must decide whether to try and revive peace talks with the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam that collapsed with a resumption of fighting earlier this month, or go all-out on the battlefield.

CLINTON CRITICIZES COURT'S GUN DECISION

WASHINGTON—President Clinton, in an unusual breach of constitutional propriety, Saturday criticized the Supreme Court for delivering an opinion this week to strike down a law banning possession of a gun near a school. Clinton said he was "shocked and deeply disappointed" by the ruling delivered Wednesday by a 5-4 majority that sharply split along ideological lines. The court, on a 5-4 vote, said that the Gun-Free School Zone law of 1990 was an unconstitutional infringement of the constitutional right to bear arms for the federal government. The court set aside state laws that prohibit the possession of firearms by school children in a clearly unconstitutional decision that, in a party split on the court, was a purely local concern that is beyond the authority of Congress to regulate.

PRODUCTION OF WARHEAD GAS TO BEGIN AGAIN

WASHINGTON—The Energy Department is planning a multimillion-dollar project to resume production of a radioactive gas used to enhance the yield of American nuclear warheads. The department is planning to announce this summer the kind of facility it plans to build in producing the gas tritium, and where it plans to build it. The choice is between a huge particle accelerator, using theoretically workable but untested technology, and a nuclear reactor, which would be the first reactor completed in the United States since the 1979 Three Mile Island nuclear accident.

Drug dilemma
Panel discusses 'war on drugs,' legalization, law enforcement

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Students, faculty, and city professionals agreed at a recent forum on drug legislation that the war on drugs is not solving many of the problems associated with illegal drugs, but reached less consensus on effective solutions.

A forum, sponsored by the Carbondale chapter of the ACLU, a panel of guests presented their views on the drug war's effectiveness, then discussed questions with the audience.

Panel member Jerry Molumbry, a former city worker who specializes in treating victims of drug addiction, said access of adolescents to drugs will increase if legal- ization occurs.

"Do we want to provide empty prisons or healthy people?" he asked.

"The age at which adolescents' first use a drug is going down, we now have children using drugs in grade school.

"There would be a short-term savings, as the number imprisoned for drug use is very high," he said.

However, the cost of treating addicts, whose recovery is not easy once hooked, will be very high," he said.

"The ACLU is able to take an outsider perspective on this, but society is about balancing the rights of resources on control of substances and 29 percent on treatment and education," he said.

"We must ensure these numbers, like educational responsibilities away from police and give them to health professionals," he said.

MARIJUANA LAW REFORM SUPPORTERS ATTEND RALLY

Marijuana law reform supporters attend rally

By Jason E. Coyne
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Friday's National Organization For The Reform Of Marijuana Laws rally attracted about 200 supporters with a variety of entertainment, speeches and informational tables.

Chapter President of SIUC-NORMA, Drew Hendrick said the rally was created to get people together to talk about ending marijuana prohibition laws and listen to some good music.

Most of the supporters sat in the sun listening to the music as some broke off into circles to play hacky-sack.

"Don't hide in the closet anymore— we’re people, we’re human, we smoke pot," Hendrick said.

"At some point it will be too late to run from this country: don’t be afraid of the government — yes, and change the laws."

Rick Dmll, lead singer for Cobalt Blue, one of four bands invited to attract support, said police are going after easy targets rather than real criminals.

"It’s a lot easier to go after a guy smoking or growing pot than someone who is a violent criminal," Dmll said.

"We all need here for the reform of the marijuana laws," he said.

Limiting dress poor gang-control effort

IT IS EASY TO UNDERSTAND CARBONDALE Community High School officials' desire to nip possible gang activity in the bud. However, their approach—one that many districts have adopted throughout the country—seems almost Orwellian and as seemingly disregard for students' First Amendment rights.

Several students were understandably upset after being turned away from school-sponsored after-prom activities for violating the school's dress code, which includes a ban on hats worn sideways or backward—a style initiated by gang members in several cities. While the school’s zeal in trying to protect its students from gangs is commendable, it seems a bit misdirected.

If students are involved in gangs, the school's primary concern should be their behavior, not their clothing styles. A student suspected of gang involvement should be encouraged to attend school functions, where he or she will be supervised more closely. Which would school officials rather see—a gang fight in the street, or a few students in class with their pants rolled up? Clothing is no more responsible for gangs than it is for sexual assault, and we have already seen that victims' attire, no matter how suggestive, is not a viable defense for rapists.

Anti-drunk driving program has merit

THE JACKSON COUNTY HEALTH DEPARTMENT and cooperating bar owners deserve praise for their efforts to thwart drunk driving with a program that rewards designated drivers with free soft drinks. According to Robert Oakes, a health educator for the department, the “It's Your Turn” program, funded by a grant from the Department of Health, is intended to promote designated-driver awareness. In addition to promotional materials which will be on display in cooperating bars, the program includes a yellow and black card that entitles designated drivers to free soft drinks at many local liquor establishments.

There is no way of knowing how many lives designated drivers have saved by keeping the car keys away from their intoxicated friends, but it does not seem inappropriate to honor them heroes. It is nice to see local government cooperating with local businesses to reward them a little for their efforts.

Corker will be missed by University

The brief news story on John Corker’s move from the Student Center to the classroom (April 17) failed to capture the impact that he has had on campus. Having just written an article for the University Club newsletter expressing the collective thanks of that organization to Corker for his assistance in successfully launching the U-Club, I collected a number of interesting facts that could have been included in the DE article...

For example, when Corker took over as director of the Student Center, its total income was a little over $4 million; today, the figure is $7 million. Likewise, when Corker came to SIUC in 1976, major areas of the building were empty and the center was open from 9 to 2, Monday through Friday. Corker was the catalyst for change, making many improvements over the years, and deserves a significant thank you from the university community for his service to students, faculty, staff, and the general public during the past nineteen years.

DE insert not political favoritism

In response to the student editorial in Thursday's paper (April 27), I have reached a heightened level of frustration with the attitudes of students, and self-appointed student leaders on this campus.

The article begins with stating, “Countless DE editorials have called upon the board of trustees to give greater attention and place more emphasis on the concerns of their customers—the student body.” This letter clarifies that students being ignored in the process of adopting future decisions and the school's administration's lack of 'students-first' student concerns.

What-the Daily Egyptian editorial and the students are upset about realize is that students have dealt with their own hatred in these matters; and can blame no one but themselves when issues of life or death increase once more. There are more than 100 advisory committees and organizations on this campus, all of which have student representation—and many have a student majority. However, due to a lack of student leadership on behalf of the student body, many of those representative positions are left unfilled, and when student concerns are left unfilled. This is the way one finds the campus administration. In fact, if student leaders took their role more seriously, and filled the vacant positions on the university board, they would include those student leaders in more decision-making roles. There was a time on this campus, and not so long ago, that student leaders were given full access to information and their opinions carried the force of a 20,000 member constituency. Unfortunately, now the approach is purely antagonistic and no one benefits, least of all the student body.

Carbondale chapter of Sigma Nu receives charter after 18 months

By Carey Jane Atherton

Daily Egyptian Reporter

After a year and a half of hard work the members of the Sigma Nu fraternity were officially welcomed into the SIUC Greek system Saturday night.

Derek K. Hirshata, Sigma Nu alumnus, said the Sigma Nu Grand Treasurer Austin Landry presented the members of Sigma Nu with their official charter.

"It's like a license to be called Sigma Nu," said Brian Zalewski, alumni adviser.

Hirshata said members put an immense amount of effort into obtaining the charter.

The beginning of Sigma Nu at SIUC came in 1993 when Michael Osborne, a senior in management from Peoria, took the first step to bring Sigma Nu to SIUC from Northern Illinois University.

He was a Sigma Nu at NIU and had a lot of friends who were interested in starting a fraternity.

"I just saw the opportunity to start my own chapter," Osborne said.

Greg Peelman, Sigma Nu president, said when the group started organizing they knew it was going to be difficult, but they had no clue as to the extent of the work involved.

Peelman said the first step was to pass through the Inter-Fraternity Council and the Inter-Greek Council. He said their next step was persuading the school to recognize them as a local fraternity.

Peelman said the hardest part of the process was attaining recognition from the Sigma Nu national headquarters and getting a charter.

Chris Hanson, a senior in mechanical engineering from Springfield, serves as a judicial officer and works for the fraternity.

"It was basically a test period to see if we could support a fraternity," he said.

Peelman said the national organization of Sigma Nu required the fraternity to publish a petition including biographies of all members, future plans and programs and the agreement with local Sigma Nu alumni, he said.

Hansen said now that Sigma Nu has its charter, the goals for the fraternity are straightforward.

"We want to reorient Sigma Nu with some merit on this campus and add some strength to the Greek system," he said.

Sigma Nu was founded in 1869 by three individuals seeking to establish a fraternal organization without the involvement of hazing, which was common at the time.

Hansen said the house has stayed true to this founding aspect, and any hazing or similar activities involving Sigma Nu would result in a revocation of the fraternity's charter by the national organization.

Regenbaugh, who had to build the Wardhogs. The A-10 Warthogs, a red and black 1,577 Ford F-250 with a trailer hitch, worker, and cutting torches, was made from scratch by Charlie Ryder. The Mint was made 90% from beer cans and brass, and has movable tachos, steering, suspension, and body parts, he said. Ryder spent more than 1,600 hours on the truck, which it would cost more than $200,000.

Stoned said: Ryder’s model was closer to his vision than represented the exact essence of modeling.

"What embodies the art of modeling is to replicate, as close as possible, what you are modeling," he said. "Charlie Ryder controlled one of the world’s best modelers."

Post Breakup, a modeler from the Quartz was won first prize in this Saturday category, said when he startet to model, he had to experiment quite often in order to get the bottom line down. "But once you finish a model, it stands well with all stations."• •

Regenbaugh, who had to build his stitch boat as a final project for 3-D design class, worked for an entire week on the project and was sponsored by MAAB, a local paint company.

"MAB sponsored me and I could take whatever I wanted from the stores to build the plane, like paint, brushes and tape," he said. "I finished it and got a trophy. But I won the trophy so it wasn’t worth it." After spending a week on the project, Redenbaugh said he was not sure it would work at all. "I just hope they toped the day off," he said. "I felt like I had accomplished something.”

Jake Tenent, a freshman in cinema and photography from Lagrange, captured a first-place finish in heat seven.

The Illini, according to Tenent, took him an hour and a half to make, but only cost him $300 to supplies. Tenent said he was happy to finally get it all in the water and find out how it would do.

"The best part of the day was to be able to make my own boat and race it," he said. "Finally getting out there to see if you spent so much time and effort into to see if it would work or not."

Some of the boats had themes that were along with the design, and Kelly Holpe, a sophomore in aviation from Wisconsin, captured the 3rd World War.

"We launched water balloon boats at other boats to splash water on them, or just hit the boat," she said. "The design was good, but we sacrificed for design, which showed us down so we didn’t win. We had a lead in the last 50 yards, but it didn’t last."

Every boat started out facing forward, and the participants’ wish to have a three-member crew finished backward. The A-10 Warthog came in third place out of four bases in the eighth heat.

"It was a blast," she said. "The tall fell off so we finished backward."

not to equal that of gold," Hendricks said. "If a person is paying the price of gold for a flower that grows on a plain that grows worldwide, that is just ridiculous."

"Kind" is high quality marijuana that usually grows in an indoor controlled environment which yields the highest THC content, he said.

"Slang" is low quality Mexican pot with a low percentage of THC, the psychoactive drug in marijuana. Tara Hyden, a member of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, said prohibition is unnecessary and violates citizen's rights.

"Millions of people have already quit smoking tobacco, without decreasing prison time or paying large fines," he said. "We have also cut the number of drunk driving fatalities by a third in the last decade by putting drunk drivers in prison, not by putting drinkers or brewers in prison."

"There was a lot of corruption, a lot of crime, and then when the prohibition was ended in the early 1930s, all the crime stopped — the petty was taken out of it," she said. "I'd like to see the same thing take place with marijuana."

Ruben said drug abuse cannot be compar­ably eliminated as long as people enjoy taking them — and drug dealers are not evil, just addicted.

"Psychoactive drugs are pleasurable — that's why people use them," he said. "As long as psy­ choactive drugs have been used, they have been abused, people have be­en doing what their lives require." Hendricks said drugs are more dangerous when illegal because the government cannot control regular quality.

"Under prohibition, drugs people have used for centuries become con­centrated poisons," he said. "Cocaine is now even more deadly than it was a decade ago — almost as deadly as heroin."

Hendricks said prohibition looks ridiculous.

"Psychoactive drugs have been used for centuries become concentrated poisons," he said. "Cocaine is now even more deadly than it was a decade ago — almost as deadly as heroin."

"I'd like to see the same thing take place with marijuana," said Hendricks.

This must be the end of the regular season. People who cover hockey can tell, because most of the remaining games are being played in the past week or two, since everyone was in playoff mode. The last night or two is a time for the season to be decided, as the teams try to win more or less, or whatever.

When it comes to picking the winners of major awards, a blank here or there could be telling. But we must pick with one eye closed—in this case, the eye that faces west—because this lackaday-attended, neutral-zone targeted season contained no interconference play.

Nevertheless, awards are made to be given out and argued about, so here is one set of picks (mentally unofficially for the NHL awards:

Hart Trophy: Eric Lindros of the Flyers had the breakthrough season we were all waiting for, leading in scoring and pushing his team to the top of its division. Rare is the things player who comes to live up to his promise, and Lindros, 22, has. Get comfortable with him, because this isn’t his last. Honorable mention goes to Mark Messier of the Rangers, the best team leader in sports, Janniknj of the Penguins and Owen Nolan of the Nordiques. The Red Wings have too many good players for anyone to one out the hat, — Judd (top defenceman): This is a different story, Paul Coffey of the Red Wings. — Calder (top rookie): Though he slipped in the closing weeks of the season, we’re going to ignore Scottie Peter Forsberg, 21, of the Nordiques and particularly Paul Kariya, 20, of the much-improved Mighty Ducks. But Washington’s 2-10-5 and his peak when Carey came up from the AHL. The others didn’t have quite the same impact. — Van Ausdale and Joel Herscher together,” she said. "I'm starting training again tomorrow."

The SIUC baseball team is finding its way since the Salukis dropped their fifth straight game after the 1-5 Missouri Valley Conference meeting. Playing well in the MVC season, the Salukis have a chance to make some noise in the post-season.

Saluki catcher Becky Lis has been a consistent hitter in the season, hitting .326 with 28 home runs and 106 runs batted in. Lis has been a key player in the Salukis' success, as she has the highest on-base percentage (.420) and slugging percentage (.838) in the MVC.

The Salukis have a opportunity to make a statement in the post-season, with a chance to advance to the MVC Championship.

The Saluki softball team may find it's season history repeated by losing to Bradley in the first MVC playoff game. The Salukis are looking for a strong performance against Bradley to move on to the MVC Championship.
