Bouncer's conviction reversed

By William Hatfield
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A conviction has been reversed for a former bouncer of a local bar who was convicted of battery and aggravated battery after the 1993 death of a club patron.

Martin Todd Lewis, a 1994 SIUC political science graduate, said he was notified Monday that his conviction was reversed after an appellate judge concluded that Lewis and other bouncers used reasonable force when trying to eject Jose Waight, 24, from Checkers nightclub.

Checkers, located at 605 E. Grand Ave., became Detours after the incident until Sunday, when the club was sold and renamed Smiling Jack's, Inc.

On Feb. 5, 1993, Waight, an undecided freshman from South Holland, reportedly refused to leave Checkers during closing and began to fight with the doorman.

Waight was forcibly taken outside and physically restrained on the ground by bouncers until police arrived. Reports stated that Waight died of asphyxiation caused by manual pressure to the neck.

Lewis was one of the bouncers who ejected Waight from the nightclub. Lewis said he went to the aid of the doorman, who was attempting to eject Waight. He said he ended up punching Waight.

Lewis said he did not go outside and help the other bouncers restrain Waight.

Lewis was sentenced on Feb. 29, 1994 to two concurrent terms of 24-months probation, 300 hours of community service and a $250 fine, paid to Crime Stoppers for battery and aggravated battery.

The original manslaughter charges were dropped against Lewis and the other bouncers, Edmund Bart, Jeffrey Judd, Richard Wojcik, Steven Crawford and Charles Hicks.

Lewis, the only one sentenced, said he appealed the decision because Judge David W. Watt Jr. indicated it would be a good case to appeal.

Lewis' attorney, Keith Smith, said the court reviewed the appeal and reversed the conviction Friday at the 5th District Appellate Court in Mt. Vernon.

"The court concluded that Lewis correctly believed that a danger to others existed, that force was needed to avert that danger and that the force he used was reasonable," Smith said.

Smith said the state can seek a petition for a

HEALTHY CHOICES

"Big Mac, Filet-O-Fish, a Quarter-Pounder, French fries, icy coke, thick shakes, sundaes and apple pie—and the cup ran away with the spoon."

The corporate gods at McDonald's could only guess that their commercial jingle would come to represent the typical diet of college students.

But then again, the times are changing. As college students climb aboard the fat-free, health-diet bandwagon with the rest of America, more and more students, including many SIUC students, are going to the extreme and declaring themselves vegetarians.

Meat-lovers discuss obsession with flesh, cow paranoia. page 6

In the College Eating Index, a recent survey conducted by Rolling Stone magazine and Roper Starch Research, 500 American college students were polled on their eating habits.

In response to food choice, 75 percent of the students polled picked pasta over chicken, pizza, chips and candy as the most common food consumed.

Whether it is has to do with cost, increased activism or better health, the '90s college student seems to be more aware of the benefits of a vegetarian diet.

Vegetarians do not eat meat, fish or poultry. Vegans are people who do not eat any of the above mentioned and also stay away from animal by-products like milk and eggs.

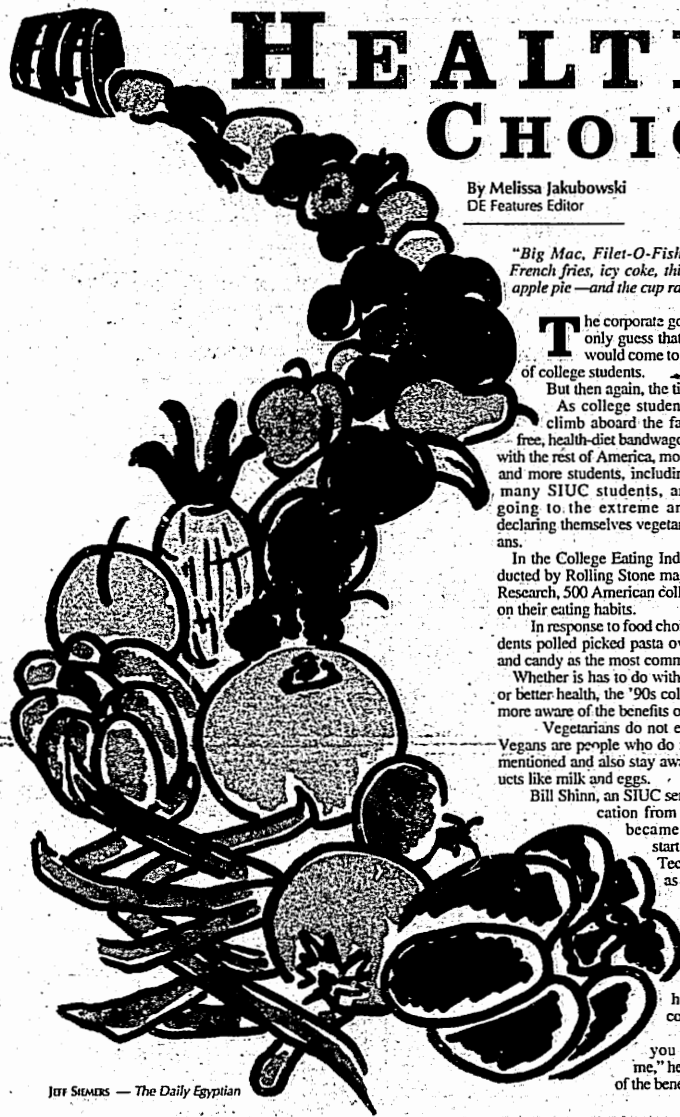

Bill Shinn, an SIUC senior in speech communication from Puyallup, Wa., said he became a vegetarian when he started college five years ago.

Technically, he is classified as an ovo-lacto vegetarian. He does not eat any meat but still eats eggs and milk products.

He said his decision to become a vegetarian was based partially on health and partially on cost.

"I had a few friends that you could say enlightened me," he said. "I discovered some of the benefits about it and read a lot

Student workers get raise, hours cut

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Josh Evans is one of 5,817 student workers at SIUC who just received a 50-cent raise because of a minimum wage increase to $4.75 per hour. But as a result, his work hours may be reduced.

Evans, a senior in advertising from Chillicothe who is working at Morris Library, said library officials planned for the raise, which goes into effect today nationwide.

"I think the bosses knew it was coming," he said. "They hired less people ahead of time. They anticipated it."

Carolyn Snyder, dean of Library Affairs, said the library will cut student workers' hours by 195 hours per week, which is equivalent to five full-time positions, to pay for raises for the library's 200 student workers.

"The reduction will affect services in most areas of the library," she said. Snyder said the cut in the library's student-worker hours means there will be fewer student workers at service desks and fewer students straightening bookshelves.

Snyder said the library's student workforce will be reduced through attrition. As old workers quit or graduate, new ones will not always be hired.

Last year, student workers spent 2,600 hours per week at the library; this year, they will work 2,400 hours per week, Snyder said.

Other changes in the library will include combining the Instructional Evaluation Service point with basement offices and limiting Instructional Support Services videotaping projects.

President Bill Clinton signed the minimum wage increase in August. The wage increases from $4.25 per hour to $4.75 per hour today. By Sept. 1, 1997, it will increase to $5.15 per hour.

Donna Williams, an SIUC Financial Aid assistant, said student workers' wages actually rose to $4.75 per hour on Sept. 22, which was the beginning of the pay period ending Oct. 5.

Students will see the difference on their Oct. 18 paychecks, she said.

Williams said the raises affect every student worker, including those who make more than $4.25 per hour. The ceiling for student wages rose from $5.80 per hour to $6.30 per hour and will rise to $6.70 in September 1997.

SIUC received no additional state money this year to pay student workers, and each department must budget for the raise, Williams said.

Other SIUC officials said the wage increase could affect services or student-

Former SIUC law student will have day in court

An SIUC law student who was forced out of the School of Law had a hearing in Jackson County Court Monday, but because of time constraints, the hearing will be continued at a later date.

Kristopher K. Kilgore, a second-year law student from Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif., had his law school application rescinded this summer because he allegedly did not disclose prior convictions on his application and because he allegedly had a warrant out for his arrest.

Judge Kimberly L. Dahlen heard testimony from Kilgore, from Thomas Guemsey, dean of the SIUC School of Law; from Patrick Kelley, a law professor; and from Eugene Basanta, associate dean of the SIUC School of Law.

Dahlen, a former SIUC law student, scheduled the next court date for Oct. 8.

Protesters blast burner

By Colleen Heraty
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A small group of SIUC students and citizens demonstrated their opposition to the toxic waste incinerator at Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge outside of a congressman's office Monday.

Although U.S. Rep. Glenn Poshard, D-Marion, was in Washington, D.C., protesters gathered outside his office near Route 13 in Marion with signs as passing cars beeped and waved in support of the demonstration.

The incinerator has been constructed to dispose of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) left at the refuge by manufacturing plants decades ago.

When PCBs are burned, they produce dioxin, a known cancer-causing agent.

About 25,000 tons of PCB-laden soil has been burned at the refuge this year, Richard Davis, a project manager for the incinerator, said. Two-thirds of the soil has not been burned.

Dioxin and other contaminants are now in the air, Cathleen Tracy, an SIUC senior in social work from New Lenox and member of the Student Environmental Center, said.

"Breathing in dioxin is my main concern," Tracy said. "I don't want any more in my body. I feel I should have a choice, but they are just putting it into the air. And we are breathing it in."

Cancer is not the only disease linked to dioxin exposure, Tracy said. She cited research by the Association for Birth Defect Children that has shown significantly higher numbers of endometriosis, hormonal dysfunction in developing adolescents, attention deficit disorder and other health problems with children whose parents were exposed to dioxin.

Rose Rowell, from the Southern Coalition on Protecting the Glenn Poshard, D-Marion, along Route 13 in Marion Monday.

Environment, said the protesters were at Poshard's office because they want Poshard to do more research on the issue.

She said protesters hope the congressman may change his position that the incineration is a safe method of disposing of the contaminated soil.

"Out of all the public meetings they have had on the incinerator, there has been total opposition to it," Rowell said in Poshard's office to Victor Turner, a staff assistant to Poshard. "We are not convinced it is safe, and we want it stopped."

Richard Whitney, a graduate of SIUC who is with the National Lawyers Guild, told Turner that instead of incineration, there are alternative ways of cleaning up PCBs without producing dioxin at all.

"These methods are cheaper, not as harmful and very effective," Whitney said. "It is not too late for Poshard to take a morally courageous stance."

Turner listened to the protesters who gathered in Poshard's office and said he would be available to look at any research environmentalists had to offer.

Turner passed out a press release to protesters which stated Poshard's response.

"There are people who disagree with incineration, but we do not know of a safer method currently," the release stated.

Dave Strickland, spokesman for Poshard, said Poshard has done his research on this issue and sees no reason to do anything differently.

"Currently, the incinerator is performing in an environmentally responsible manner and above the EPA's standards," Strickland said. "We support the project to be completed by mid December."

Richard Davis, project manager for the incinerator, said the whole region will benefit from the incineration if it continues.

"If incineration is prevented, this issue will not just go away," Davis said. "We need to carry on with incineration so the refuge can conclude its normal activities — not hazardous waste activities."

Computer thefts could limit lab access

By William Hadfield
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A burglary of about $19,000 worth of computer equipment from a lab last week will affect courses in the University's Electronic Management Program, a chairperson says.

Jan Schoen Henry, chairperson of Information Management Systems, said the theft, which occurred in the industrial electronics laboratory in the C wing of the engineering building, will hurt the program.

"The theft will affect it greatly because the equipment that was taken was used in courses," Henry said. Theresa Mills, SIUC Police office supervisor, said the items stolen were four Zenith computers, a Zenith monitor, five sound boards, five CD-ROM drives, one speaker, five modems and other assorted equipment. Mills said the burglary is believed to have occurred between 5 p.m. Wednesday and 8 a.m. Thursday. She said forced entry was indicated by tool marks on the outside edge of the back door. Police said no one has been arrested in the case.

Henry said the theft also will

Terminally ill have right to end life to alleviate suffering

DOES A TERMINALLY ILL PERSON HAVE THE right to choose to die? This question has become one of the latest controversial topics, largely a result of Dr. Jack Kevorkian assisting the death of dozens of people. Some people question the value of such a practice, claiming that human life should not be terminated under any circumstances, and that assisting the suicide of someone else is nothing short of murder.

However, some people not only think people have the right to die; some people are doing all they can to make it legal. Groups of activists are now rallying in Washington and Oregon to legalize assisted suicides. While many think it is wrong, people should have the right to choose to end their own life, especially in cases where people are diagnosed with terminal diseases.

People have the right to make choices about their lives. Choosing to end it when faced with a terminal disease should be one of those decisions.

As long as a person's decision does not harm other people physically, the right to take their own life should be respected. Some people might not want to see their loved ones die, but that is common.

The truth in many of the cases is that people want to die as a way to end the pain they are in. And while everyone may not agree with that decision, they should respect it for what it is — a release.

When dealing with assisted suicide, the same types of ideas should also be taken into account. Kevorkian was not seeking people out and asking them if they wanted to die. He was contacted by these people because they had made the conscious choice to end their lives. To charge him with murder is ridiculous. The majority of the cases Kevorkian dealt with were mercy killings, where the people involved wanted an escape from pain.

IN MARCH, "COMPASSION IN DYING," A Seattle-based group, won a federal-court appeal. The court declared that "a mentally competent, terminally ill adult" should have the right to receive medical help to end his or her life if they wanted.

In Oregon, a small group won a ballot initiative that allowed dying patients to receive medicine to end their lives. The ruling was blocked by a judge before it became law, but it is now in the course of being appealed. If it is successfully appealed, Oregon will be the first state to make assisted suicide legal.

These types of legal decisions usually have trouble gaining approval because of the topic's controversy. Anything that has to do with people choosing to willfully end their life is often looked at as taboo.

Politicians usually avoid these types of decisions like the plague. But as more and more people are becoming open minded about mercy killings, the practice is gaining. This is a good thing because it shows that the government is starting to look at people as individuals with individual situations.

"Compassion in Dying" focuses on people who are expected to die within six months. A patient must request help, and the relatives must agree to it. These rules are put in place so that no one else can go back and claim that the killing was unethical. But even the families' approval should not be a major influence.

One person's ethics should not be taken into consideration when another person wants to take their own life. Emotional attachment aside, the only vote that matters is the individual's.

Pay parking fines in pennies

This letter is meant to address all SIUC students who operate a vehicle or bicycle on campus. Last Wednesday, I came out of Pulliam Hall after taking an exam to find a parking citation stuck to all 20 or 30 bicycles locked up on the rail next to the stairs, including my own. The fact is I couldn't care less about the $3 fine. As most students know, the University's (and the city's) unlimited and often ridiculous money-making schemes exploit the student, and I for one, am sick of it. Consider this. Who really cares if you lock your bike on the rail? If it's not in the way and poses no potential danger, would it not seem practical? Forget the fact that no signs are posted, and that people lock their bikes there all of the time anyway. The goal of this letter is to send a message to University officials. My suggestion to all students is as follows. Every time you are issued a parking ticket for a petty or otherwise harmless offense, pay the fine. But pay it in pennies, yes, in pennies. Eventually, if this is practiced by enough students, University officials might begin to hear our voice. Like most of you, I don't have a whole lot of extra money to throw around to pay fines for ridiculous and harmless offenses. This is our school. We pay a lot of money to attend class here as it is. I think that we as students are at the point where we must communicate our desires, needs and expectations to those in charge. University and city officials alike. And this goes far beyond the parking issue. Now, if you don't mind, I have a fine to pay. Off to the bank to exchange three crisp dollar bills for 300 bronze pennies.

Anti-logging stance based on facts

I am always amused when someone seeking to defend the Forest Service attempts to educate the environmentalists. They seem to claim exclusive scientific knowledge while discounting the experience, study and observations of anyone who does not want to see the trees cut.

Mark Basinger even goes so far as to claim that Robert Ridgeway may not have really seen the Pine Warbler in the 1800s because he did not kill or photograph one. As usual in letters of this type, there is no discussion of the effects of forest fragmentation on songbird population. There is no admission that the oak regeneration that the Forest Service is supposedly managing is already occurring and doing just fine without cutting the pines. Of course, there is no mention of the financial irresponsibility of below-cost timber sales.

To me, it seems natural the attacks on the Forest Service are emotional. After all, if the environmentalists follow Mark's directive to cooperate with local agencies, their opinions, concerns and yes, feelings are ignored. Mr. Basinger tells us that, "The employees of the Shawnee are dedicated to conducting scientifically accurate and precise studies before they approve any project." Why then did they refuse repeated requests to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement for OA 6? We are told that "bad science is not in their moral character." But there are some of us whose morality causes us to believe that it is wrong to manage nature for the exploitation of timber harvesters.

Why shouldn't this be an emotional issue? Just because some people see unbroken forest as important spiritual places that are valuable for more than the board feet of timber they contain, our ideas are rejected.

The old catch phrase of "so-called environmentalists" is used to disparage anyone who has made the simple observation that lands managed by the Forest Service are not more biologically diverse. No jobs will be lost, and no one will have to forego the use of wood if private landowners continue to supply timber for the mills as they have done for years in Southern Illinois.

Rather than dismissing the people who have chosen to bring this issue before the public, perhaps just once you should actually listen to them. Those forests belong just as much to the people with no scientific background as they do to you. They have a right to say, "These are my forests, and I don't want them cut!"

Hay fever remedy needed

The other morning I sneezed 12 times in a row. I woke up before dawn with my head stuffed up again and my eyes itchy. I was "drug-free," as my new husband has taken to calling me when I didn't ingest something the night before to help me sleep.

I staggered to the bathroom, half-tripping on my cat, which was doing that thing many cats do — running kamikaze-like into my path of travel. I harbored thoughts of killing it as I used a fourth tissue to blow my nose. I glanced at my red, swollen face in the mirror. Ugh, I thought, and was seized by that long chain of sneezes, broken into groups of three, then two, then a gasp and chain of profanity followed by one last sneeze.

I have hay fever, and it's driving me insane. I've had a bout with it this time of year ever since I can remember, but this year, it's horrible. It started about five weeks ago and hasn't let up. It has something to do with the record-high ragweed pollen and mold spore count made worse by a lack of rain in the Midwest, something to do with the hurricanes in the East, the fires in the West and the wrath of God in the North and South.

I've always been described as moody, and when I don't feel good, I'm not fun to be around. This should be understandable. I don't expect anyone to be chipper when they're miserable. But on the morning of 12 sneezes, after several

PERSPECTIVES

—by Laura Shaw

inquiries from my poor husband about my health, this came out of my mouth. "I'm fine! Leave me the f#$@ alone!" The long silence told me I had overstepped that boundary of getting to know each other's personal space.

If I'm not screaming at those I love, it's usually because I'm doped up on over-the-counter medicine like Drixoral, Sudafed and Tylenol, Allergy Plus. You'd think that because I've suffered this yearly ailment since childhood that I'd settle on a brand or at least decide if I preferred the non-drowsy to the drowsy formulas. But no, I tend to feel the medicines that really do the job are also the ones that make you feel drowsy. But because I work during the day, I at least want to be coherent, if not able to operate heavy machinery.

So every year, I hope for a new remedy, one that will eradicate my hay fever with one dose. I embark on the adventure in the cold remedy aisle, faced with that enormous wall of choices, totally over-stimulated by brightly labeled boxes with product names ending in -il, -ed, -oral, -est, and -nol promising relief and comfort. I grab one and toss it into my cart, enjoying new hope.

If you're wondering why I don't just go to the doctor, there are many reasons with money, fear of shots and lethargy heading the list. I'm the type of person who won't seek medical help until I have a gunshot wound. Also, I guess I just believe I can wait this out, because when the first frost comes during the night, it will kill everything I'm allergic to. Oh, how I look forward to the newscast when the weatherman will warn us, "It's going to get cold tonight, folks. Bundle up!"

So that's what I'm waiting for — a cold spell to kill the pollen and the mold spores before my husband kills me or my cat.

Bible not acceptable as law

Sean Spence's letter in Thursday's Daily Egyptian is erroneous. Our country was founded on religious tolerance, not Christianity. Christianity may be his way of life, but it is a religious tenet that is common among some Americans, not all Americans. America is a country founded on religious tolerance and equality for all its citizens. Sean would have us believe we were citizens of a theocracy where we are governed by religious tenets and the Bible. If America adopted its laws from the Bible, which version would we use? There are so many out there. The Bible is so clear cut in black and white, how can America go wrong?

The only problem with using the Bible as our legal guideline is the wide variance of interpretations it has, not to mention the fact that so many other Americans' religious beliefs would be overlooked. Sean's biblical quote to me does not define marriage at all. It never states two people of the same sex cannot love each other in a healthy union of marriage. The quote only describes the union of a man and a woman.

Sean, for your information, love comes from the mutual respect, trust and adoration between two people. A man and a woman do not corner the market on love, and that is the beauty of love. Love does not care about gender, color, customs or beliefs. Love is all encompassing and blind.

Sean is halfway there to acceptance of homosexuality. His best friend is gay, and he knows that homosexuals are not really different from heterosexuals. He also realizes that "no one person is God," but he must realize that he must leave passing judgment to his god instead of pointing fingers of condemnation. He is right that the whole issue is "not a case of a person imposing his morals on another." The case is the imposition of religious tenets in the realm of civil rights. This imposition upon America's religious and cultural diversity contradicts "the reasons this country was founded."

Education and tolerance will rid the ignorance of discriminating against homosexuals and others.

Cyprus celebrates anniversary

Cyprus, though comparatively small in relation to the surrounding countries, was destined to play a very important role in the history of mankind and, more specifically, in the history and civilization of the Eastern Mediterranean. Its advantageous geographic location — at the crossroads of three continents and at the meeting point of great civilizations — has been one of the reasons for the historically significant role that Cyprus has played throughout the centuries. At the same time, this also has been the cause for many of the disasters and calamities that have befallen the island.

Cyprus' history is one of the oldest recorded in the world, dating back to the 7th millennium B.C. Settled by Mycenaean Greeks in the 12th Century B.C. and later by the Achaeans, Cyprus evolved into a flourishing center of Mycenaean-Achaean civilization. Because of its strategic position and natural wealth, it became the pawn of various powers that held sway over the region at one time or another — the Assyrians, Egyptians, Persians, Ptolemies, Romans, Arabs, Franks, Venetians, Ottoman Turks and the British. Each of these conquerors left their mark. Nevertheless, the island's character, history and culture have remained predominantly Greek to this day.

The declaration of independence of the Cyprus Republic in August 1960 was the product of a long and arduous struggle for liberation of the Greek Cypriots against British colonial rule. On Oct. 1, 1996, Cyprus celebrates the 36th anniversary of its independence, an independence that, despite the Turkish invasion and continuous occupation of 37 percent of the island since 1974, acts as a strong shield of protection and is a very strong weapon against all its enemies.

The young Republic — armed with a Constitution characterized by experts as a "legal nightmare" — fought valiantly, sometimes against great odds, for the survival of its independence and for the achievement of progress and welfare for the new State, a task in which it succeeded as it is universally recognized. However, on the world's political chessboard, Cyprus was a very small pawn. Foreign political expediencies, interests and intrigues got in the way, thus hindering the young Republic from enjoying the fruits of its hard-earned freedom.

Vegetarianism no longer misunderstood fad

By Colleen Heraty
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Vegetarians were once stereotyped as skinny, pale and generally humorless people who could not possibly be eating a proper diet. But vegetarian celebrities like Madonna, Paul and Linda McCartney, Hank Aaron and Sting are just a few people who shatter that image.

Once seen as a trend left over from a counterculture lifestyle, vegetarianism has gained new respect as a smart, health-conscious way of eating.

The term "vegetarian" includes those who avoid meat products, but usually eat eggs and milk products. "Vegan" refers to those who avoid all animal flesh, including poultry, fish and seafood, and animal products including eggs and dairy. It excludes honey and the wearing and use of animal products including leather, silk, wool, lanolin and gelatin.

The average American currently consumes 260 pounds of meat per year, Lynn Gill, coordinator of nutrition and fitness at the SIUC Wellness Center, said. She said people should cut back on consuming meats if they are concerned about the quality of their diets.

She recommends eating a wide variety of foods including beans, rice, nuts, seeds, pastas, breads, tofu, peanut butter, cereals, fruits, vegetables and soy products.

"Students should be careful not to eat too many dairy products and eggs," Gill said. "They can make for a high-fat, high-cholesterol diet."

from health reasons, some students have expressed other incentives for avoiding meat.

Christine Brinkman, a senior in art from Champaign, has been a vegetarian for five years. She said that although humans have always eaten animals, it does not make the practice right.

"If people are going to continue to eat meat just because people have done it in the past, does that mean we should not try to prevent people from murdering each other, since that has continued to be done the past?" Brinkman asked. "People are learning new practices all the time — new ways to take care of themselves that will help them live a happier life."

Keith Block, medical director of the Cancer Treatment Program in Chicago, provides a Block program nutritional handbook for vegetarian patients or patients who are switching to a vegetarian-based diet.

To replace meat normally eaten for protein, the diet features vegetable proteins including beans, legumes and soy products like tofu.

Block recommends eating whole grains including breads, rice and oats for carbohydrates, which he said help reduce cravings for sweets and junk foods as pick-me-ups.

He said there are many myths

VEGETARIAN SHISH KABOBS

- *green pepper, cut in squares
- *onion, cut in wedges
- *small, whole button mushrooms
- *cherry tomatoes
- *wedges of zucchini
- *small potatoes
- *red pepper, cut in squares
- *chunks of pineapple

MARINADE (Optional):

- Mix in bowl
- *1/4 cup soy sauce
  - *1 inch raw ginger, minced
  - *1/2 cup water
  - *2 tbsp. lemon juice
  - *1 tsp. peanut butter or tahini
  - *1 clove garlic, sliced
  - *1/4 tsp. cayenne pepper
  - *2 tbsp. oil
  - *1 pound tofu

Directions:

Press water out of tofu and cut into cubes. Toss cubes in marinade, cover and let soak, stirring occasionally. Thread marinated cubes onto skewers, alternating tofu with vegetables. Cook under a hot broiler or grill, basting with marinade when you turn the shish kabobs over. Cook until veggies are browned on edges.

Meat eaters take pride in their carnivorous habits

By Kevin DeFries
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Beef — it's what's for dinner.

"No matter what meat or health risk is involved, some SIUC students love eating meat and say there is no substitute for a good steak.

Tony Berezcky, a senior in industrial design, is considered the quintessential meat-eater by many of his friends. He said he loves all animals, but the love is only flesh deep. "I don't hate animals. I always brake for squirrels when I see them running across the street," Berezcky said. "But if I ever see a cow in the road, the pedal will go to the metal. That's good eating."

Berezcky said his favorite meals consist of any large portion of cow. His love for consuming beef is supported by an intense personal hatred for the species, which he believes are preparing for an uprising.

"A cow spit on me at a petting zoo, and I firmly believe it would have bitten me if it had the chance," Berezcky said. "Ever since then, I have felt cows would eat us if they were in our shoes."

On a less personal view, other people just love the taste of meat.

Matt Williams, a senior in radiology, said he loves the bacon and sausage families of meat and some restaurants do not cater to his craving for the sweet, succulent meats.

"I went to three different McDonald's trying to get a Filet-O-Fish with a few slices of bacon, but none of them would do it," Williams said. "Other restaurants charge too much money and only put three or four slices of bacon. I want eight or nine."

Williams said he prefers to cook at home because it is cheaper, and he can put as much bacon as he wants on anything. He said during his last cookout, he served bacon-wrapped burgers, brats and bacon kabobs.

Not one can of corn or green beans was opened for the cookout.

"I find that most people at my cookouts concentrate on eating meat," he said. "They have to because I cook at least a pound of three different meats."

Eating a diet with 60-percent to 70-percent portions of meat might sound pretty grotesque to Joe or Jane Vegetarian. And nutritionists say high protein diets can cause health problems.

"Total protein intake should be based on body weight," Lynn Gill, coordinator of the nutrition fitness program at the Wellness Center, said. "But in general, 15 percent of your calories should come from protein."

Gill said too much protein over an extended period of time can lead to weakened bones, loss of potassium and loss of sodium.

But with a disregard for the nutrition rules, Berezcky and Williams, while eating a BLT with extra bacon, said they were not prepared to make any dietary changes.

"I'm too busy with school and work to be fiddling around with carbohydrates and veggies," Williams said.

Despite the obvious differences between vegetarians and meat lovers, Berezcky said he harbors no hatred toward vegetarians or the people that eat them. But he suggested a book and a word of warning.

"Everyone should read 'Animal Farm,'" he said. "It changed my life, and if animals ever try to rebel, I'll know I did my part in keeping us free. The vegetarians will regret the day."

MATT'S THICK-N-MEATY BLTS

- This is what you need:
- *any kind of sliced bread except pumpernickel
  - *one to two pounds of bacon
  - *butter
  - *mayo
  - *lettuce and tomatoes (optional)

Directions:

Fry the bacon and drain the grease into the yard or sink. Toast the bread to your liking. Keep the butter ready to spread while the toast is hot. Then add 10 or 11 strips of bacon to each sandwich. Finally, add mayonnaise or any other condiment to top off the sandwich.

Vegetarians

about vegetarians not getting enough nutrients. He said most people think vegetarians do not get enough protein or calcium.

"People often worry about getting enough protein if they are not eating meat or poultry, but vegetables can also supply high amounts of protein," Block said. "Calcium, which builds healthy bones and teeth, is not only found in dairy products but in many vegetables and beans."

He said because a vegetarian diet is traditionally low in fat, vegetarians need to make sure they still get the required amount of fat.

"We all need a small amount of fat in our diets for the essential fatty acids, but optimally the percentage of fat in your diet should be below 20 percent," Block said.

Block said vegetarians can turn to seeds, nuts, vegetables and olive oils to get a portion of their daily fat requirement.

In January, the federal government announced that meatless diets can satisfy the requirements of its Dietary Guidelines for Americans.

The health status of pure vegetarians from many populations of the world, according to the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Sciences, was deemed "excellent."

"This is something I can do for myself and my environment."

*Dawn Wright,
Senior in special education*

The prevailing diet among Chinese people is high in plant foods and low in meat, poultry, and dairy products. Studies of the Chinese population show a remarkably low incidence of the diet-related diseases prevalent among Western cultures.

However, members of EarthSave International have found that when the Chinese migrate to Western nations and adopt the high-fat, high-protein, low-fiber diet of Westerners, they incur the same incidence of diet-related diseases. Such diseases include heart attacks, strokes, arthritis, breast cancer, prostate cancer, colon cancer, osteoporosis, diabetes, asthma, gallstones, impotence and obesity.

Dawn Wright, a senior in special education, has been a vegetarian for 12 years and said she never regrets her decision.

"This is something I can do for myself and my environment," she said.

and fitness at the Wellness center, said.

"In the past we have held workshops, but in the past seven years, there has been an increase in attendance," she said.

Shinn said increased awareness is a main reason why many of his peers have given up meat.

"If you can reduce the impact on yourself and the environment, why not do it?" he said. "If people want to try it, I hope they give it their all. I don't call them trendy."

"There are a lot of people who are doing it because it is popular, but at least it's a healthy trend."

Connie Dickman, a spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association and a nutrition consultant from St. Louis, said many of the students she talks with at Washington University's student health program turn to vegetarianism for weight loss.

Dickman said she has seen a definite increase in interest in vegetarianism, but more and more vegetarians are uneducated and end up denying their bodies of important nutrients.

"Beer and potato chips are vegetarian foods, too."

*Bill Shinn,
Senior in speech*

Vegetarians are at risk for fatty diets because of their high intake of cheese, ice cream and junk food.

"A vegetarian diet can be very nutritious and easy to do, but that takes understanding what it means," she said. "There is still a high fat intake because they are not educated."

Shinn said a large percentage of vegetarians are uninformed, but the proper eating habits are picked up in time. However, he said vegetarians do need to be concerned with what they eat.

"Beer and potato chips are vegetarian foods, too," he said.

Even though some college students are picking a healthier diet, many are not applying that attitude to other areas of life, Dickman said.

"They think, 'If I eat vegan, it will be good for me,' but it's not carrying over to other parts of their life," she said. "They still abuse caffeine, alcohol and nicotine."

For the past three years, Jen Schrober, a sophomore in political science from Chicago, has kept up with a vegetarian lifestyle. She said she still drinks, and her two vegetarian roommates still smoke cigarettes.

"I'm a drinker," she said. "There are plenty of meat-eaters that drink and smoke. Just because I'm a vegetarian does not mean I'm going to be religious about my health in general."

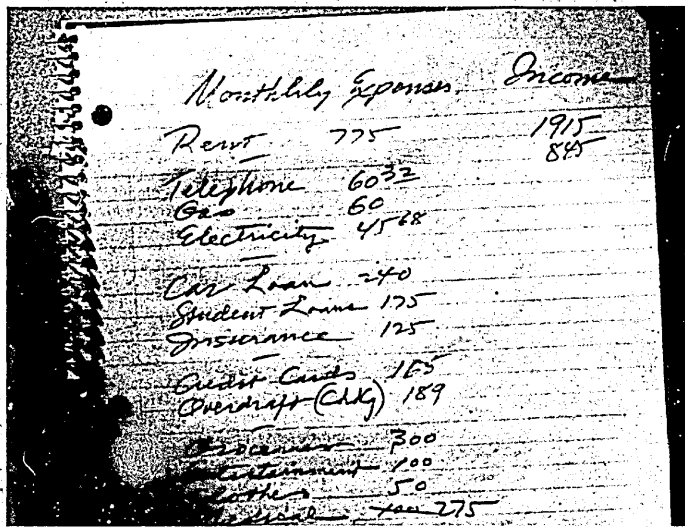

But her roommates Donna Perkins, a sophomore in a minor in administration of justice from Tinley Park, and Julie Grumbach, a sophomore in elementary education from North Brook, agree that increased health is a benefit of becoming a vegetarian.

With the increase of vegetarian products accessible to young consumers, some students are breaking away from the red-meat dinners and are trying to create a "healthier" future.

"My father has really bad blood pressure," Perkins said. "I keep on trying to get him to try a veggie burger."

"I like to joke around and say that it (unhealthy habits) makes up for the vegetarian part."

Simon prepares for teaching role

By Dylan Fenley
Daily Egyptian Reporter

U.S. Sen. Paul Simon met with University administrators this past weekend and made final preparations for beginning his post-Senate career as an SIUC professor next semester.

Simon, D-Ill., met with John Jackson, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, and Joe Foote, dean of the Mass Communication and Media Arts College, to discuss details of his position at SIUC.

Simon will teach two courses in the spring: Political Science 321: The Legislative Process, and Journalism 495, a proseminar on nonfiction writing.

Simon's political science class is open to students of all majors, although there is a prerequisite of GEB 114, Introduction to American Government and Politics.

Jackson said Simon's political science class is expected to fill quickly, although it has a large section size. Simon's journalism class is only open to senior journalism majors.

At a fund-raiser Sunday at his Makanda home, Simon said he was looking forward to coming to SIUC.

"It's a great honor to serve in the U.S. Senate," he said. "But I will enjoy relaxing and being at home."

Foote said the senator looked at offices Saturday, talked with administrators and chose the textbook for his journalism course.

"He was on campus this weekend and saw where he fit into the class schedule," Foote said. "He seems to be turning more of his attention toward this (his teaching)."

Simon looked at several possible locations for his office, including space in the Department of Agriculture Building, located across from the technology buildings, Foote said.

Jackson said he looks forward to Simon's presence on the campus.

"Of course he's going to be a United States Senator till the end of December, and that's a pretty demanding job itself," Jackson said. "But I expect him to start getting moved in here sometime in December."

In addition to teaching classes, Simon will serve as the chairman of the newly-founded Paul Simon Public Policy Institute, which will research methods for increasing public involvement in the political process.

Simon said one of the bipartisan institute's projects will be to research ways of bringing religious community members into the political process.

"The religious community is not involved in public policy," Simon said. "This is a moral challenge kind of thing."

Simon served in the Illinois General Assembly and as lieutenant governor of Illinois before being elected to Congress in 1974.

Simon and his wife Jeanne live in rural Makanda. He said his decision to teach at SIUC was partly motivated by the proximity of the University to his home. The University has budgeted for Simon's payroll for the next three years.

Jury screening confirms weakness in Simpson case

Los Angeles Times

SANTA MONICA, Calif.—The goal is clear: To pick 12 people who can judge the O.J. Simpson civil trial fairly. But the jury selection process now slogging along in Santa Monica has picked up an important subtlety as well.

Lawyers on both sides use their interviews with prospective jurors to tease out tips about the effectiveness of their arguments and the credibility of their witnesses.

In effect, it is become a focus group. And it is revealed some surprising trends. Just sitting in on a few hours of jury selection makes clear that the criminal trial made so many indelible impressions that the plaintiffs start at a disadvantage with many jurors, even though everyone has promised to give both sides a fair hearing.

rehearing or can attempt to appeal the case to the Illinois Supreme Court.

However, Stephen Norris, the deputy director of the State's Attorney Appellate Prosecutors, said no further action will be taken.

"The appellate court's decision is consistent with the finding of facts from the district court," Norris said. "There is little basis for us to seek to overturn the appellate court's decision."

Lewis said waiting for the appeal has made him feel as if his life has been on hold for three years.

"People who saw me on the street thought I wasn't just the man who punched him but that I was the man who killed him," Lewis said.

Lewis said he is glad the charges have been reversed.

"I feel great," Lewis said. "I didn't feel I had done anything wrong. I think we were all victims — me, Jose Waight, my family and Waight's family."

Waight's parents, Delcie and Adelbert, could not be reached for comment.

affect the student use of the lab.

"We will most likely have tighter security on all the labs, which means less student access," she said. "This is sad because we always had an open-door policy for students."

Henry said much of the equipment taken was used as instructional material for the courses Circuit Analysis, Microcomputer Maintenance, and Electronic Systems Analysis. She said students practiced computer assembly, maintenance and servicing with the equipment.

William Devenport, an assistant professor and the instructor of Circuit Analysis, said a theft like this makes things difficult.

"When you work this hard to get ahead of equipment, you hate to lose it," he said. "But it's not something we can't overcome. Nothing is irreparable."

Devenport said he will be working with the industry for the next three months to get the equipment replaced.

"It's very frustrating because I feel these thieves have really stolen from my students," he said.

Despite the theft, the lab course, which has 18 students in it, will continue, Devenport said.

"They did not take all the equipment," he said.

"And we will still be able to continue labs."

Dennis Reimer, senior in electronic management from Shelbyville and a student in the course, said before the theft there was one computer for every two students. Now there is one computer for every four or five students.

"I'm not happy with the theft because it hurts our program," Reimer said. "We're going to have to share computers and get through the rest of the semester."

Devenport said the equipment will be of little value to a thief because it was used for industrial training. He said all the equipment is tagged with an SIUC identification number, and its street value will probably be only a few hundred dollars.

HOW TO USE THE BATHROOM.

You're probably saying to yourself, any four-year-old knows how to use the bathroom. But you may not know that you use more water in the bathroom than anyplace else in your home. In fact, between the toilet, the shower and the sink you can use up to 55 gallons a day.

Multiply that by the number of homes in the world, and that's a lot of natural resources going down the drain.

Now, we're not saying you should stop taking showers or brushing your teeth. We're just suggesting some simple bathroom training. For instance, when you're brushing your teeth, turn off the water.

Do the same when you're shaving.

And just because your shower sounds like an opera

hall, don't feel the need to sing one.

Shorter songs make for shorter showers. And for the biggest culprit of them all, the toilet, try putting a weighted jug in the tank. It will help save water every time you flush. Plus, don't forget to turn out the lights when you leave. You'll be helping to conserve electricity.

Save up to 15% more water by installing a weighted jug in your toilet tank.

And oh yeah,

if you don't think you'll remember

these things, take this newspaper with you the next time you go.

Wage

-work hours, but they are still deciding how to handle it.

Bill McMinn, Intramural Recreational Sports director, said more than 400 students work at the Recreation Center and the other campus sports facilities. Office representatives will meet this week to decide how to pay for the raises.

He said measures could include cutting utility costs or new equipment purchases but should not include cutting the Recreation Center's hours of operation.

"In 1991 (when the minimum wage rose to $4.25 per hour), we did avoid cutting back hours," McMinn said. "But this will obviously have some consequence."

Jackie Ballard, a junior in communication disorders and sciences from Bardstown, Ky., who works at Woody Hall and the Recreation Center, said the wage increase will have mixed results.

"It'll help out, but it will also mean inflation," she said. "The cost of living is going to raise. I don't know how much it will help in the long run, but in the short term, it will help."

Ed Jones, University Housing director, said none of the 400 student jobs in housing are in jeopardy, but his office will monitor and may cut some cleaning and food service workers' hours.

"We have a few less people in certain jobs, and we've had them work a few more hours (to compensate)," Jones said.

T. J. Rutherford, Student Center associate director, said the 330 student workers employed by the center could lose some hours to pay for the raise. Another option is raising prices at the Student Center, he said.

"No one came around and said because of this, we'll have to cut student hours," he said. "There have been no across-the-board cuts. We're just trying to make the best of it."

David Kral, an undecided sophomore from Indicee, said he makes more at his jobs back home than at his student job at Woody Hall. He said in rural areas like Carbonade, more people work for minimum wage.

"It's good that they finally raised it," he said. "People deserve more money."

WIDB back on air today

By Travis DeNeal
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Like the mythical phoenix, radio station WIDB-cable FM 104.3 will rise from its ashes of burnt equipment and end a seven-month hiatus by returning to the air at 8 a.m. today, a WIDB employee says.

Morgan Grammer, a senior in radio and television and chief engineer for the station, said the morning broadcast is possible because of the new equipment purchased to replace the thousands of dollars in equipment destroyed by an electrical spike early last semester.

Although the Undergraduate Student Government provided some money to the station, WIDB drained its reserve savings account that is set aside for emergencies.

Dave Goode, a junior in radio and television and WIDB's general manager, said he expects student interest in the station to increase now that it is back on the air.

"We've already generated a lot of interest," he said. "Going back on the air will only generate more."

Goode said the station's 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. format will consist of "churban," a combination of urban, dance and rap numbers, as well as mainstream modern rock.

In an effort to increase exposure to the station, a $5 kit to connect students' radios directly to WIDB using the current on-campus cable TV system is available. The kit also will transmit cable TV channels, like MTV, in stereo.

Cartoons attract more than kids

By Sheila Stowers
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Aaron Young gets up at 9 a.m. every Saturday morning to watch cartoons. During the week, he spends about six hours in front of the tube watching cartoons.

Like many cartoon viewers, Young is not a child. He is an SIUC sophomore in classical guitar performance from Carbondale.

Paul Siefken, public relations assistant at the 24-hour cable channel, Cartoon Network, said 32 percent of the channel's audience is comprised of adults, many of whom have been watching cartoons since they were children.

Young said he has been watching "Bugs Bunny" since he was a child and still laughs at the rabbit's antics.

"Bugs Bunny is one of the coolest people that ever was," he said. "He keeps his cool no matter what."

Young said he watches a lot of the cartoons on Nickelodeon, including "Ren and Stimpy," "Rugrats" and "Real Monsters." He said watching those programs helps him relax.

"It's just something to think about other than real life for awhile," he said.

Some students said the believe cartoon characters can provide insight into human nature.

Jason Pritchett, a sophomore in French and art history from Carbondale, said characters like Homer Simpson from "The Simpsons" are true to life.

"Many cartoons, such as 'Dr. Katz' and 'The Simpsons,' have more metaphysical truth in them than most philosophy books," he said.

Young said he believes cartoons can help people develop a new perspective on life because they often depart from reality and force the audience to rethink their view of the world.

"People that write cartoons look at things in a different light," he said.

Siefken said that his network does not try to label specific cartoons as being only for adults or only for children because often children and adults enjoy the same shows.

Siefken said that although many new cartoons like "Space Ghost Coast to Coast" and "Cartoon Planet" have gathered a large following among college students, older cartoons like "The Flintstones" and "The Jetsons" are still popular with adults who watched the shows as children.

Young said after years of cartoon viewing, Bugs Bunny is still his hero.

Just think of it," he said. "How many people could smile at you after you drop an anvil on their head?"

PRSSA volunteers boost migrant camp education

By Travis Akin
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As the rain beat down on the mobile homes of a migrant camp day care center, children were laughing and passing a ball around a circle in game of "hot potato" that a group of SIUC students taught the children how to play.

Some of the 68 children at the Su Casa Day Center met new friends and learned some new games when a group of SIUC students volunteered time to help the children in their education Friday.

Six SIUC students in the Public Relations Student Society of America spent two hours with the children at the Su Casa Day Care Center/Migrant Education located at the Migrant Labor Camp on Old Route 51 in Cobden. The students gave the children notebooks, crayons and candy.

The center is part of the national Migrant Headstart program. The purpose of the center is to help the children of migrant workers, who are mostly Spanish-speaking, learn English and eventually go to public schools.

Sitting around a table, PRSSA students patiently helped some of the small children put puzzles together. In another room, one group of children were taught how to play "hot potato."

While there were only six students from PRSSA present, they all said the time spent at the center was worthwhile.

For the PRSSA community service co-chairwoman, the afternoon's activities were a chance to fill a community need.

"We get a lot of money and support from the community for our activities," Betty Jo Williams, a senior in public relations from Anra, said. "This is one way to give something back to the community."

Williams said she hoped more people in the community would become more aware of the center and help out.

"We want people to recognize that it is here and that they need help," Williams said. "We would like to make coming out here an annual thing for PRSSA."

The children appeared to enjoy the visit from the PRSSA students. Their laughter filled the room as they formed a line and made train noises while they romped around the room.

Rebecca Harszy, a head teacher at Su Casa, said she was glad PRSSA members took the time to play with the kids and to give them gifts including crayons and pencils that will help them learn.

"The community has been really helpful," Harszy said. "When we take field trips and go to parks, the area towns have been really helpful by working with us and making the trips fun for the children."

Harszy said field trips and games like "hot potato" are the methods Su Casa uses to teach the children to get ready for school.

"The children learn through play," Harszy said. "A typical schedule for a day involves learning to put toys away and learning personal hygiene methods like brushing their teeth. We also have a reading time. The plan is for them to blend more easily into the public school system."

Learning through play involves using word associations with objects including doors and windows, Harszy said.

"I think the programs here at Su Casa are great and are needed," Harszy said. "When I came back from the Peace Corps in Honduras, I knew I wanted to do something for the Spanish-speaking population in Illinois, and I applied for this job. And I have been doing this ever since."

Another instructor, Karen Sperry, agreed with Harszy that Su Casa was needed. Sperry said she has enjoyed her work at the center.

"My experience here at Su Casa has been very rewarding so far," Sperry said. "Sometimes it can be very nerve racking dealing with little children all of the time, but usually it is a very good experience."

WIDB

Goode and Grammer said there already is a bumper crop of students willing to volunteer their time at the station, but more are encouraged to apply.

"We have the desire to entertain and train students," Grammer said, noting the current staff is comprised of 60 to 70 people. "When we're going full tilt, the number will be closer to 90 or 100."

Both radio workers agreed those who work at WIDB have a good chance of doing well in the broadcast profession.

"We have an alumni base of over 1,200 people working everywhere from CNN to B96 (in Chicago)," Grammer said.

It will not be all smooth sailing for WIDB, though. Grammer said a continuing lack of crucial equipment and the continuous quest for financial resources will perpetually threaten the station.

"We have $10,000 worth of equipment ordered that hasn't come in yet," Grammer said. "And we need $22,000 more just for the bare essentials."

Grammer said WIDB chopped $10,000 from its latest proposed budget and is operating with only one phone line to save an additional $1,000.

"We have cut all nonessentials," he said.

The studio equipment also is in a precarious situation, Grammer said the cuts in cost have temporarily left WIDB without protection from another electrical spike.

"We have an alumni base of over 1,200 people working everywhere from CNN to B96 (in Chicago)."

Morgan Grammer, WIDB chief engineer

"It's a risky electrical situation," Grammer said.

When equipment for the production studio arrives, the station will be able to create commercials to generate revenue and lessen its financial burden, which Goode estimates at $30,000 to $40,000 annually. Until then, the station will be forced to get by with its limited resources.

"No production studio means no commercials," Goode said. "If we can't make commercials, we won't have any income. It's a big circle."

Grammer and Goode are prepared to continue to fight for WIDB, which celebrated its 25th anniversary last year. Alumni came from across the nation to celebrate.

One alumnus from Organ Grinders recording studio told WIDB employees of a fight to keep the station on the air in 1972. The alumnus pledged to help WIDB with its recent resource bind, Grammer said.

Goode said he thinks the struggle will be worth the reward.

"We'd like to come back in 1996 years and see it still going," he said.

School funding concerns Senate candidates

By Emily Priddy
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Education funding and economic concerns were key issues in a televised debate between the candidates for 115th Illinois House District representative Sunday night on campus.

The debate, sponsored by the Jackson County League of Women Voters and aired live on WSIU-TV, pitted Republican incumbent Mike Bost against Democratic challenger John Rendleman.

Rendleman criticized Bost for supporting a flat-grant funding program for Illinois schools, saying the grant shortchanges students downstate.

"I think it's wrong that our kids are forced to compete with $4,000 per pupil when kids in the wealthy suburbs (of Chicago) receive $15,000 per student," Rendleman said. "We start the next funding cycle a quarter of a million dollars in the hole. I don't think that does anything to fix the disparity."

Rendleman accused Bost of putting politics ahead of Southern Illinois' interests by supporting the Republicans' Quality First education plan.

The Quality First plan includes a flat-grant funding provision that gives more money to schools with higher student attendance rather than basing state funding on property values, as traditional plans have done.

Like previous plans, Quality First gives more funding to northern schools, but Bost said the plan still helped districts in Southern Illinois and was a necessary compromise.

"If I were the only legislator that had the opportunity to vote, I would have brought every bit of the money to Southern Illinois," he said.

Bost said the Quality First plan brought $90 million to local school districts, and no districts lost money.

Rendleman and Bost both said the economy in Southern Illinois needs legislative attention.

Bost mentioned that since he took office in 1995, 600 new jobs have been created in Southern Illinois through the construction of state prison facilities.

But Rendleman said it is not enough to rely on state jobs as a means of improving the economy.

"The first priority for Southern Illinois is to make sure that we have economic development," Rendleman said. "We need to make sure it's not just jobs that are doled out by the state."

Rendleman said improving Southern Illinois' infrastructure can play an important role in attracting industry to the area.

Rendleman suggested that a four-lane highway between Carbondale and St. Louis would help draw manufacturing companies to the region.

"I think we need more vision than just saying that the Department of Transportation needs to fix the potholes on (Route) 51," he said.

Bost said he supports the creation of private enterprise zones to attract businesses.

Bost mentioned that the Clean Air Act has caused many Southern Illinois coal mines to shut down because companies do not have adequate equipment to burn the high-sulfur coal without creating air pollution that exceeds federal standards.

Bost said industries that manufacture products that allow Southern Illinois coal to burn more cleanly should receive tax incentives to locate in the area.

Rendleman and Bost are scheduled to attend a public forum from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Friday at the Murphysboro High School.

The election is Nov. 5.

Brown, Luechtefeld agree on welfare, crime, income tax

By Emily Priddy
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Candidates for Illinois' 58th Senate District have fewer differences than similarities on many of the issues facing Southern Illinois if their comments at a recent debate are any indication.

Democrat Barbara Brown, a part-time SIUC political science professor, and state Sen. Dave Luechtefeld, R-Okawville, expressed similar views on issues including welfare reform, crime and a proposed graduated income tax for Illinois.

Luechtefeld said welfare spending should help people become more self-sufficient.

"We've spent trillions of dollars to try to do away with poverty and to try to help people, but we have created a situation that is simply intolerable," he said. "We have to create a situation where we break the

"We have to make sure that people are going to assume personal responsibility."

Barb Brown,
Senate candidate

dependency on this type of system."

Luechtefeld said job training and job-search assistance are important in reducing the number of people on welfare.

In addition to helping people find jobs, Brown said the state should provide assistance to those who cannot make enough money on their own to be entirely independent.

"We have to make sure that people are going to assume personal responsibility," she said. "To do that, we have to make sure that we provide an adequate safety net for those that fall through the cracks — especially the children. We have to make sure we provide for their needs."

Both candidates said increasing the number of jobs available in Southern Illinois also could help reduce crime by enabling people to earn an honest living and provide for their families.

"How do you change people's morals, standards and values?" Luechtefeld said. "Provide good jobs, get them off of welfare, and then maybe families will improve. And things will turn the other direction."

Brown said giving local police departments more support also can help reduce crime.

"Many of our problems with crime can be solved if we give adequate support to our local law enforcement officials," she said.

Both candidates expressed doubts about the benefits of a proposed graduated income-tax system.

The federal government now taxes individuals with higher incomes at a higher rate than those with lower incomes, but federal officials are considering switching to a flat-rate tax to cut bureaucracy and help middle-class citizens.

Illinois currently uses a flat-tax system, but state lawmakers have discussed the possibility of going to a graduated income tax.

Luechtefeld said he does not think the state should switch to a graduated-tax system when the federal government is questioning the value of such a system.

"Before I'd be willing to simply go to a graduated income tax in the state of Illinois, I think we need to sort out this issue," he said.

The graduated income tax has been suggested as a way of funding education while providing property-tax relief to homeowners in Illinois, but Luechtefeld said using flat-rate income-tax revenue could accomplish the same thing without complicating the state's income tax system.

Brown agreed that more discussion and study are needed before lawmakers decide which tax system to use.

The debate, which aired live on WSIU-TV Sunday night, was sponsored by the Jackson County League of Women Voters.

Brown and Luechtefeld will speak again at a public forum sponsored by the league at noon Sunday in the Arts in Celebration's Chautauqua tent at Evergreen Park.

Power-hitting Orioles truly wild card for Cleveland

Los Angeles Times

BALTIMORE—They have two living legends, a 19-game winner, a guy with 50 home runs, seven others with 20 home runs or more and a manager who represents a link to the franchise's glorious past.

All that and the wild-card Baltimore Orioles are almost no one's pick to knock off the Cleveland Indians when their best-of-five division series begins Tuesday at Camden Yards.

"Obviously, we're the underdog in this series," Oriole Manager Davey Johnson said Monday. "We had some great ballgames against Cleveland this year — mostly offensive showings. I expect it to be more offensive, but in a playoff series, you can never tell."

In most ways, the Orioles are the epitome of 1990s baseball. They hit a ton, play the field well enough, but can not pitch a lick at times.

David Wells, Tuesday's starter against Cleveland's Charles Nagy, was so ineffective in his final three regular-season starts that Johnson skipped Wells' last scheduled start.

so the left-hander will be going on six days' rest.

"The last three starts were hideous...no doubt about it," said Wells, 0-1 with 21 earned runs, 21 hits and eight home runs given up in those three starts.

Worse, Wells (11-14) suffered a stiff neck after being doused with ice water, beer and champagne as the Orioles celebrated their playoff berth Saturday. He could not throw Sunday, but said he was "about 90 percent better" after playing catch Monday.

The Indians, the American League Central Division champions for the second consecutive year, led the majors with a .293 team batting average. And although they can not match the Orioles' power, they can come close.

Plus, with Nagy (17-5), Orel Hershiser and Jack McDowell, they have the formidable starting rotation the Orioles do not.

Cleveland's probable lineup for Game 1 features seven batters with averages of .300 or better, led by designated hitter Kevin Seitzer, who hit .326 during the regular season.

AMY STRAUSS — The Daily Egyptian

SIUC women's tennis player Molly Card, a junior in health education from Terre Haute, Ind., battles it out with a player from Louisville, Ky., Saturday afternoon at the tennis courts by SIU Arena.

Tennis

Freshman Heather Markoff and sophomore Andrea Martin failed to produce points at the number five and six seeds and two doubles. With Markoff recently being suspended from the team, the recovery of senior Patricia Zihler from tendon surgery becomes all the more important.

"She (Zihler) just gives us a lot more depth in singles and doubles," Auld said. "She is very optimistic as far as wanting to get back and help the team." Zihler is not expected to play until the spring season if all goes well.

Next up for the Saluki women is the SIUC Invitational this Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Respect

Saluki running back Coe Bonner rushed for 185 yards Saturday and three touchdowns. Bonner also had two receptions good for 49 yards, plus three kickoff returns for 56 yards. Put two and two together, and you get 290 total yards, or the second-best, single-game, all-purpose performance in league history.

Senior offensive lineman Steve Jones, who played a major role in Bonner's success Saturday, said if respect is still lacking, it will not be for long.

"I guess other teams are taking notice of our hard work," Jones said. "If they aren't, they will be." "We're rolling right now," Watson said. "We're able to hit on all cylinders. When we need to throw the ball, we're able to throw it. When we need to rush it, we rush it. I feel good about the soundness of it (the offense)."

"While it may not dominate the Gateway, SIUC's defense has made its mark.

Defensively, SIUC ranks third in the league in rushing defense, holding opponents to 3.3 yards per carry. But the passing game is an area that needs work. SIUC ranks No. 5 in pass efficiency defense, giving up 114 points from the air.

Senior defensive tackle Daryl Holland said the Salukis' running game gained some ground in terms of passing with Saturday's win, but the passing game needs to improve before respect comes full circle. "We've picked up some respect

"We got some respect but not total respect, and that is what we want."

Daryl Holland, Senior defensive tackle

as far as the running game," Holland said. "They are still going to test us in the air. So we are going to have to tighten up in our passing game."

"We got some respect but not total respect, and that is what we want."

Watson attributes SIUC's success to the players on both sides of the ball that have stuck around and put stock into the Saluki program.

"Our players are maturing, and they understand what direction leadership is trying to take them," he said. "These kids have bought into our program. We started it back in 1994.

"Some of them have come in here and hung with us through some tough times."

Saturday's win was a definite boost to the Salukis' program. Whether or not it will serve to earn the respect of other teams has yet to be seen.

But in the mind of Saluki quarterback Phil Shellhaas, respect from within is the single most important element to this 4-1 team.

"We know we established something here two springs ago," Shellhaas said. "For us, respect is expected."

If Train A leaves Newport at 8 a.m. traveling 72 mph and Train B leaves Springfield at 8:25 a.m. traveling 73 mph and the distance between Newport and Springfield is 86 miles, when will the two trains pass?

Handwritten solution:

$$D_1 = 72t$$

$$D_2 = 73(t - 25)$$

$$D_1 + D_2 = 86$$

$$72t + 73(t - 25) = 86$$

$$72t + 73t - 1825 = 86$$

$$145t = 1911$$

$$t = 13.2$$

Bonner earns offensive player of week

Coe Bonner

Saluki running back Coe Bonner earned offensive player of the week honors for his 185 yard, three touchdown rushing performance in SIUC's 38-35 win over Illinois State Saturday in Normal. Junior linebacker Arglistia Scott took defensive honors, while senior defensive back C.J. McDavid earned special teams' honors. Senior offensive lineman Steve Jones was awarded offensive line honors.

Saluki senior punter Mark Gagliano continues his assault on national rankings among punters. After five games Gagliano remains the nations top punter with an impressive 49.08 average per punt.

Three games open playoff action today

Major League baseball begins its annual fall play-off spectacle today with a trio of games as the Baltimore Orioles host the Cleveland Indians while the Rangers march into New York. On the National League side, St. Louis hosts San Diego while the Atlanta Braves defend the World Series championship by hosting the Los Angeles Dodgers Wednesday afternoon.

Imagine that — the Braves and the Indians in the playoffs?

Exhausted Woods drops tournament

Tiger Woods withdrew from this week's Buick Challenge in Pine Mountain, Ga., and he may have hurt himself in terms of sponsorship. Woods said he needs a break from golf. "I realized last night that I was actually mentally exhausted and that if I played, I would be doing a disservice to myself and to those who came to watch me play," Woods said. The Buick Challenge would have been Woods' fifth tournament since turning pro last month.

'98 All-Star Weekend to be in New York

NBA Commissioner David Stern has announced the New York Knicks will host the 1998 All-Star Weekend at the often referred to "World's Most Famous Arena" of Madison Square Garden. The Knicks will host the NBA All-Star Game's Saturday events and the 48th annual NBA All-Star Game on Sunday for the first time ever. The 1998 game marks the first time New York has hosted the game since 1968, when it was at the old Madison Square Garden on 49th Street.

Salukis on road to respect

By Michael DeFries
DE Sports Editor

With its 38-35 win over Illinois State Saturday, the football Salukis may finally be rolling on the Gateway Conference's road to respect.

"I would not expect anybody to be taking us lightly after what we have done thus far," Saluki Coach Shawn Watson said. "People will be taking notice."

What the Salukis have done so far is compile a 4-1 overall record, its best start since 1991, and an unblemished 1-0 record in the Gateway, which is its best league start since 1992.

Respect has not come easy for the Salukis in recent years. But the wheels of respect are definitely in motion thanks to the Salukis' solid performances. Watson said prior to Saturday's contest with the Redbirds, earning respect was a common goal.

"Our players were excited about getting into conference play and excited about having the opportunity to earn the respect like they felt they deserve," Watson said.

A 1-0 league record alone may not be enough to earn the respect from other conference teams, but rest assured, it is not a bad place to start.

"I think respect is a week-to-week thing," Watson said. "How much respect they really have will depend on how their coaches handle them during the week, which we can't con-

rol. I always tell our players, no matter who we play, we always have respect for them."

If any area of the Salukis' game deserves the utmost respect, it would no doubt be the offense.

SIUC's offensive statistics have been constant from week to week all season and have surely been enough to raise the brow of even the most doubting teams.

SIUC's offense, which has shown a remarkable improvement since

Watson began to head the program in 1994, racked up a season best 430 total yards against the Redbirds Saturday — 286 on the ground and 144 in the air.

The Salukis have been tops in the conference in total offense all season, with this week being no different.

SIUC ranks second in the league in rushing offense and third in passing offense.

SIUC outmatched by Louisville

By Kevin DeFries
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC women's tennis team played pumped-up doubles tennis, but the effort proved to be too little too late.

Saturday's matchup with the University of Louisville was determined by a slim one-point margin, meaning that if SIUC could have won one more match, the Salukis would have walked away victorious.

But the cold hard fact is they lost 5-4. "We knew coming out of the singles it (the doubles match) was very critical," Coach Judy Auld said. "Anytime you play a team like Louisville, you need to come out 3-3 because it is really hard to win all three doubles."

"But I was really proud of their effort. They put a lot into the doubles matches."

Auld said she thinks the team could have gotten a little closer in some of the singles matches, but the team was having its troubles. The team had difficulty with the get go, falling to Louisville in one, four, five and six-seeded singles.

Senior Liz Gardner, the top-seeded player for the Salukis, fell 6-1 and 6-2 in a battle that looked as if she was hitting her shots. But on paper, she looked more like she struggled.

"I wasn't playing well at any point during the match," Gardner said. "I need to play better and more consistently."

Junior Helen Johnson lost her match at the four seed in a battle in which she showed signs of a comeback after being down 5-2 in the second set. But after a valiant effort with an emotionally charged crowd cheering her on, she lost the second and final set 6-4.

"It helped me a lot," Johnson said. "It was kind of funny, but when you have the support of the crowd, it helps in the match."

While battling Louisville's fourth seed, Johnson had to brave an unforeseen problem when she was stung by a bee.

"It hurt," Johnson said. "I have never been stung before, and I was surprised that only one area hurt."

But despite the sting and the singles loss, Johnson carried some momentum from her comeback attempt into her doubles match. She was teamed with junior Molly Card, who won her singles match 6-2 and 6-3 at the two seed. Card and Johnson won the match 8-2.

"Louisville is always one of our biggest rivals," Card said. "We were really pumped to win all three of the doubles."

Gardner and junior Sanem Berksoy, the Saluki's top doubles team, also had split results in singles competition with Berksoy, winning 6-3 and 6-4. The match's momentum changed three times with SIUC coming out strong and going up 4-3. But the lead changed hands when Louisville went up 7-6 in the race to eight.

"We have this thing where we don't like to lose," Gardner said. "We just had a real desire to win, and we had a lot of support."

Gardner and Berksoy finished strong with a 9-8 tie-breaker victory.
