The four schools chosen to pilot Select 2000 have little in common except for the stated goal of returning an ailing greek system to its original standards and foundations. In 1996, SIUC, Villanova University, Northern Colorado University and Southern Florida University were contacted by the National Interfraternity Council to consider being a Select 2000 school. The Select 2000 nine-part initiative includes maintaining higher grades, making chapter houses alcohol-free and substance-free and requiring hours of community serve for greek members. The program was designed by 26 national fraternities that want to implement the program completely by 2000. The initiative has been challenged at SIUC by the SIUC Interfraternity Council, the Graduate and Professional Student Council and the Undergraduate Student Government. All four governments have opposed the implementation and disagree with some of the initiatives of Select 2000, primarily the substance-free housing.

Robert Kerr, greek life coordinator for the University of Northern Colorado, said that Select 2000 was formally adopted Thursday. "We set officially 96 hours into it," Kerr said in a phone interview Tuesday. Kerr said UNC gave fraternity and sorority members a binding vote to determine whether Select 2000 should be implemented at the university. "We looked at how the rest of the schools are doing it, and I really believe this needs to be focused on students because they have to be the linchpin," he said.

A representative from UNC's Interfraternity Council, a representative from the Pan-Hellenic Council and representatives from seven fraternities and five sororities voted on Select 2000. "It passed overwhelmingly," Kerr said. "There was only one negative vote. If they would have said no, we would have withdrawn Select 2000.

Kerr said that months prior to the vote, the university educated greek members about Select 2000 over a six-month period.

"There has to be 100% decision making," he said. "And to do that we wanted to provide an environment in which the students had the necessary information to make informed decisions, not based on emotion or parity, but on fact." Kerr said the students voted to implement Select 2000 because they were educated and because greek membership was suffering. "There seems to have been a 40%-percentage decline in membership in the past few years and academics were not up," he said. "We had to."

Tournament celebrates 20th year

SOCCER: International Student Council sponsors event in hopes of bringing international students together.

KAREN BLATER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Colors of the rainbow representing the flags of different nations filled the stands as international students cheered their teams on at the 20th annual International Student Council Soccer Tournament Sunday.

The tournament's 16 teams consist of 11 to 18 players who play against each other in three weekends of competition. The games began Sunday and end Oct. 18.

"Soccer is a very big deal in our home countries, and we make it a big deal here. Those who compete give it their all," said Ruth Saborio, a junior in finance from Honduras and vice president of International Student Council. "Everyone who plays is very passionate and wants to win."

The ISC sponsors this event during the fall of every school year, and the event is the highlight of the year for the council and the students involved.

"The goal of this tournament is to bring all the international students together and to have fun," Saborio said.

"The objective of the games are to reach a better understanding among each other," said Win Kamal Wan Napi, graduate student from Malaysia and ISC president, said the games are very serious.

"Everyone looks forward to playing," he said. "Soccer is a very big deal to our home countries, and we make it a big deal here. Those who compete give it their all."

Saborio said the completion is the thrill of the year for those involved in international soccer. "It is 100 percent excitement and adrenaline," Saborio said. "Everyone is singing their country's song. Some bring instruments, and they all are waving their national colors.

Coach Ali, a graduate student in geography from the Ivory Coast and the chairman of the soccer tournament, said the soccer tournament is a lot to him and his wife.

One in four women victimized by abuse

UNDERSTANDING: Tuesday's presentation about ways to help victims of domestic violence.

SILVA BEAN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

People who know a victim of domestic violence should be understanding and non-judgmental about the situation, the executive director of the Carbondale Women's Center says.

This was just one of the tips for helping someone in an abusive relationship that was presented by Mary Kay Bachman at a free program Tuesday night at the Carbondale Public Library.

"Love Shouldn't Hurt" was the title of the presentation that is part of a continuing effort to increase community awareness about the growing number of victims of domestic violence. The program, which is part of Women's Safety Week, was sponsored by the Jackson County Family Violence Task Force.

Bachman said one in four women will be the victim of domestic violence sometime in her life. These are the tips Bachman addressed to help domestic violence victims:

- Approach the situation in a understanding and non-judging way.
- Acknowledge that it is scary and difficult to talk about domestic violence.
- Share information regarding domestic violence with the victim.
- Support the victim of domestic violence, be a good listener and encourage her to express her hurt and anger.
- Ask her if she has suffered physical harm.

Party Patrol not feasible

While most college students occasionally complain about a stress-filled existence, with little opportunity for leisure, the majority of students seem to possess an excessive amount of free time — at least compared to the rest of humanity.

For example, current topics of concern among us are the parties and the concept of the Party Patrol.

It is evident that we are preoccupied with entertaining ourselves. This is not necessarily a bad thing — but after all, study it won’t be socially acceptable to drink beer upside down.

Because I, too, am often preoccupied with leisure, let us go an address one of our main concerns — the admittedly admirable concept of the Party Patrol.

The Party Patrol comprises of student volunteers, it is to act as a buffer between outlaw house parties and the Carbondale Police, the forces of good.

When a party is becoming too loud! — or in laymen’s terms, “enjoyable” — the Party Patrol will be called in to ask the outlaws to quiet down.

This supposedly will create a friendly relationship between the police and the student body.

I do not believe this concept long and hard (45 seconds) and I’ve decided that although it is well-intentioned, I’m not going to work hard. I’m still thinking between the Party Patrol and a house full of no-goods.

Party Patrol: “It’s been brought to our attention that this party is getting a bit out of hand. Could you please turn things down a notch?”

Party thug: “Uh, no. I don’t believe so.”

Party Patrol: “Seriousness.”

Party thug: “No.”

Party Patrol: “We’re calling the Carbondale Police.”

On the other hand, if we really want to stop those crazy kids from having fun of any kind, I have a better idea.

Have the Carbondale Police hire a couple of wiser college students for about $20 per evening. Send them nans into a house party and have them buy a cup of coffee. Whatever the party hosts are offering. Then the trailer will sneak away outside and try to look the rodent he is — rat on the party by informing the police.

Then, the trailer will go back into the party and steal next to the individual that sold him the cup. As the police bust the party, they know that this is a thing to spend the evening is jail, and who will shove hundreds of dollar sooner.

Not that I’m making sides with the house party goers. But I have a difficult in telling how to police the will to use students to get other student is trouble. I also find it hard to believe that there are actually students willing to go along with this.

Dear Editor,
After reading a longer to the editor published Sept. 16 titled “Food weakens immune system,” I have decided to write the following.

I have heard that when animals are inbred for many generations, then specific traits more likely will have genetic flaws. That, surely, is the weakness of the immune system. From my observations over the years, I have seen what can happen to dogs when inbred over many generations. Some dogs have been known to be born with three legs or to die before being weaned. Some have unknown diseases and, most notably, some dogs have been mentally insane and unhealthy.

These common occurrences, which I will call rare, sets of nature that seems from inbreeding, mainly occurs in pit bulls. Their breeders want to breed the crazed fighting dog. After unexpected results, the breeder then is forced to bring another generation of dogs into the bloodstream.

Mr. Hale, before making such unflinch accusations like “It’s the food that weakens our immune system,” do an honest and thorough research. Over the years, in fact, the average life span of the human immune system has increased by 10 years since 1980, according to the National Census Bureau. Neither of us are brain surgeons, but I think that the increase is caused by a more healthy and nutritious diet, exercise and the positive lifestyle of the world’s people.

When I read things like what Mr. Hale has written, I not only have a hard time believing all the falsehood — entangled with a crafty mind — can serve to mislead people into believing such false grotesqueries by using the news medium. And if you truly and honestly are sold on the idea that it is the food that weakens our immune system, then what plan of action do you have for the world’s future? Personally, I don’t believe that you believe yourself.

Good start
Successful Pig Out should spark University involvement

Nearly 10,000 people enjoyed the food, fun and entertainment of First Cellular’s Main Street Pig Out last weekend. Now it is time for the University to make good on its intentions to become more involved in community events.

In the eyes of the Pig Out’s organizers, the festival was a complete success. In fact, the turnout was so good it surprised them.

In July, SUIC administrators said they would not sponsor the Pig Out because of uneasiness from past events (the Halloween riots). They did say, however, that if the event was successful, they would consider future involvement. Well, all did go well and now it is time to do something.

The city and the student body came together and had a good time without problems, and Carbondale finally organized its own festival. It is good to see the city create something that could become an annual event for the residents and students can anticipate each year.

With help from the University, the Pig Out could develop into a much bigger event, like the Murphyboro Apple Festival or the Marion Oktoberfest. Events like this are good ways for the city to increase its revenue, tourism and help improve the city’s image.

Many students volunteered time and effort to helping the festival, and the administration should be willing to join in.

If the administration does not become involved in the future, how can the University truly want to improve city relations?

The University is constantly concerned with student recruitment and retention. But the apprehensiveness of the administrators to support such a festival does not seem to be the answer to keeping students in Carbondale.

Although the University did allow the Pig Out to use some of the campus parking lots, the administration needs to take a more active role in supporting and sponsoring events that benefit the students as well as the city.

If the Pig Out, or a similar festival, were to become a yearly tradition, it could become an attractive feature to the school. People outside of Carbondale could begin to focus on the new positive relationship between the city and University, and move beyond petty problems.

Now that the festival is over, the University should take some initiative and start working with the city soon to improve relations and give Carbondale the opportunity to enjoy a festival every year.

Protesters don’t have facts

Dear Editor,

I immediately will apologize for my ignorance, but I seemed to have missed the point along the way in Mr. Enoch Muhammad’s guest column (Sept. 30) — possibly its theme or purpose. I did recognize good iambic pentameter in the column, I believe that belongs to the Hip-Hop aspect he is referring to.

I am quite familiar with the Aloneness of all men and the creation of the heaven and the Earth, but I am obviously ignorant of the fact that he created a 1171 Hop Nation or that he would random “blowing off” all responsibility of work or school on a Thursday. My misunderstanding may stem from the fact that I am not Young or Gifted, and I’m not sure if I’m Alonened or not.

But, it seems very consultancy to Mr. Muhammad’s opinion that “this is an unnatural environment, full of Miseducation and No Representation,” with “Pollinicks and White Collar Slicks in White Supremacist Dominance.” I find this hard to follow. I can’t join the White Student Caucus — seeing as there isn’t one. That would be racist.

I believe the world will be wise if we make it. No one has the right to complain about the world’s atrocities if you don’t use your own deeds or efforts to make an impact toward change.

The voice of one may seem weak, but with cooperation many voices become strong.

A good tribute would be to come together and create ways to prevent and repair harm done in the inner city and all the world rather than pick a good day to play hooky.

help you." Rodman said training in the pool is very important to be successful on the river. "The pool is the greatest place to learn and practice," he said. "When you're in a river, it is very difficult your first time to keep yourself under control." Cummins said the atmosphere of the club makes it easy to learn. "When I first came, five people were in the pool with me helping me out," he said. "They were all very helpful and patient with me. They gave me a lot of advice and took out some and keep trying." Cummins has been kayaking for a year and said that being in the club has given him the opportunity to practice and have fun.

"Being able to hit the rivers are the thrills of being in the club," Cummins said. "Spending time in nature, working with the river, maneuvering around rapids and surfing the waves are some of the best things about the club." As a second-year member, Kenny VanStone, an unclassified graduate student from Paducah, Ky., takes part in the club to be close to his friends. "Some of my best friends came from the club," he said. "As people move on to other things in life, there is always a new generation of members."

"A lot of people don't know each other when they join, but soon they become really good friends," VanStone said. "Always looking for some more members."

"If you don't mind getting a little wet and like to be involved in a thrilling sport, then you should get out to the pool and try it," he said. Rodman takes the time to make sure new members get the best training.

"We do our best to pass on what we have learned," he said. "We aren't instructors. We just take the time to pass on what others had passed on to us." VanStone said the time he spends on a kayak is relaxing and a great way to spend time in nature. "When you are going down the river, you don't think about a thing," he said. "You're out there, having fun. You're out on a river, looking at the mountains around you in a very beautiful natural setting. That's what kayaking is all about."

CASTING CALL:
Theater rookie shows limited acting ability but good stage presence.

KELLY SMITH
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The Theater Department ended its four-month search for the final cast member of "Arcadia" Monday when Mike Redmer stepped forward and provided Woodstock, his pet box turtle of 17 years, for use in the production.

"The Theater Department had contacted me before, but there was some miscommunication," said Redmer, a graduate student in zoology from Itasca.

"It didn't really work out until I was contacted by a friend in the Theater Department and found out they were still without the turtle.

Woodstock is adjusting to his new acting career well, said Pat Immel, the play's scenic designer and a graduate student in lighting design and technical direction from Oshkosh, Wis.

"He's going to steal the show," Immel said. "During practice, one of the actors set an apple on the desk (where the turtle will remain for the most part). It looked about like a person trying to bite a basketball. "He would try to bite the apple, and it would just roll away. He just kept chasing it down until I told someone to give him a bite."

Woodstock will symbolize the tie that binds centuries together in "Arcadia." The play's plot revolves around a love story set in both 1809 and present day.

"Arcadia" opens at 8 p.m. Oct. 3 at McLeod Theater located in the Communications Building. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the general public. For more information call the Theater Department at 453-5741.

Licorice may cause pulmonary edema

WASHINGTON POST

Licorice lovers, it's possible to get too much of a good thing. While diarrhea is usually considered to be the most severe complication of eating too much licorice candy, two Utah physicians report in the September issue of the Western Journal of Medicine that a licorice binge appears to be responsible for pulmonary edema—swelling caused by excess fluid around the lungs—in an otherwise-healthy 64-year-old man.

Physicians James J. Chamberlain and Igor Z. Abolnik report that the man was admitted to the Salt Lake City VA Medical Center complaining that he was having trouble breathing. When he was admitted, the man's blood pressure was elevated; it measured 180/80. The man reported that during the previous three days the only deviation from his usual routine was that he had eaten four packages (about 2 1/2 pounds) of Hershey's Twizzlers, a licorice candy.

and go with her to the hospital if she decides to seek medical attention.

• Provide available information for the woman on where to seek help or assistance.

• Inform her about legal protection available under abuse prevention laws.

Symptoms of an unhealthy relationship may include a tendency on the part of the abuser to isolate the victim.

Bachman used the example of a woman in rural Franklin County whose husband would take the phone with him every morning to work so that she would not be able to call anyone.

Figures from the Illinois Coalition Against Domestic Violence show that the majority of batterers are victims just with their wives or female partners. Five to 10 percent of batterers commit acts of physical and sexual violence against people other than their female partners.

Bachman said that when trying to understand why men batter, people often want to look for what is wrong.

"Violence is a choice," Bachman said. "It is a myth that battering is just a momentary loss of temper."

Bachman said many women remain in abusive relationships because they are afraid of further violence.

A study done by the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence states that women who leave their batterers are at a 75-percent greater risk of being killed than those who stay.

Bachman said the reason for this is that the abuser loses control of the victim when she decides to leave, and this can cause the abuser to become even more violent. For the relationship to be healthy, Bachman said there should be trust and support between the partners. Respect is another important aspect in maintaining a healthy relationship.

"I believe violence happens because of lack of equality," Bachman said. "It is about one person having control over another."

Thursday's story is the fourth story in a seven-part series about Women's Safety Week. The story will explore sexual assault and how it relates to women.

determine how we can be an active, viable greek community and we decided to make the necessary adjustments.

Kerr said UNC will progress slowly on the alcohol initiative. "we're looking to be substance-free by fall of the year 2000," he said. "This is a programmatic process. It is not going to be a push of a button and we have instantaneous substance-free housing. We are taking small steps instead of one giant leap."

Like SIUC, Kerr said select 2000's implementation has faced some opposition.

"Some students think this is an unpopular initiative and ask. "Why are we the trailblazers?" he said. "But absolutely anytime an organization starts to look at the future, any intervention suggestion of change is met with some degree of resistance opposition."

Kerr said the University of Northern Colorado is beginning to identify alternatives to alcohol parties at chapter houses.

"We want students to be able to have a good time and blow off steam without jeopardizing their health with alcohol," he said.

Kerr said the university is looking at using the recreation center as a social outlet. "The expectations of Select Southern Florida College is that this is the first in a series of steps which lead to prohibition," Kerr said. "We are evaluating where student desires and interests lie with Select 2000 principles when applied to greek life, but at this point we will not force students to do Select 2000," Leighton said. "We are working using self governance with students to develop a policy that is student-generated and student-created."

Southern Florida College is also piloting the program. The college is a private and has six national fraternities and five national sororities.

A college homepage estimates its typical undergraduate student enrollment is 1,600 students.

Brad Bishop, the director of greek life at the college, was unavailable for comment.

In Thursday's paper, part two of the series will examine how Select 2000 is progressing at SIUC after opposition from student government and the Interfraternity Council.

Mahay said the team performed well overall, but a few mistakes took away some points.
"We were hoping to finish in a conditioned. The performance shows how much they can come out with a 21-0 deficit and pull the game with their legs," Quarles said. The team is beginning to feel the Grooves and is adapting the kind of work ethic he believes is critical for the team to succeed.

"I think the second half of the last three games really speaks for the way they have responded," Quarles said. "I think these losses are becoming tougher for them. I think their work ethic is improving.

Another positive aspect of the loss is the play of the offensive line that opened up holes for SIUC to play an aggressive running game.

Quarles said the play of the linemen, including the spark that sophomore Jim Lawhorn generated on the field, helped.
"Kevin Shinkins, led the team. "Last year we started like a ball of live approach, there are still some things we need to do. As the game progressed, he tapered off some. But I think he could be a pretty good offensive center for us."

Quarles said he had confidence in his offensive line, and that after watching the footage of the game, he would not change his mind in going for the point conversion.

The confidence Quarles placed in his team was noticed by starting center Kevin Shinkins, who still has to ice his ankle, and Capone, who is suffering from a neck injury.

SIUC sports clubs play hard

TRAVIS AXEN
DAILY EDDYSON REPORTER

SIUC Sports Club teams kept a busy schedule last weekend, with several teams competing in multiple events in Carbondale and throughout the state.

Men's Rugby

The men's rugby team won at home 55-21 against Illinois State University Saturday. After SIU scored a try at the beginning of the game, SIUC came back with a score and dominated the rest of the game.

Club president Mark Bechler said the team had a balanced attack, with five team members scoring in the game. "It was a good team effort, and we came out strong," Bechler said. "They scored at the beginning of the game, but right after that we scored and gained the lead. We came out strong with our offense to get this victory.

Bechler said the team did have one injury in the game. Senior Ryan Zastro suffered a concussion that we scored at the beginning of the game, but right after that we scored and gained the lead. We came out strong with our offense to get this victory.

Women's Rugby

The SIUC women's rugby team has only allowed one try in three games and now has a record of 3-0 after beating Western Illinois University 55-21 Saturday at the Sports Club Playfields.

"We are hoping to take first place and win that $500 prize," Raftis said. "We were dominant in every aspect of the game. We were the better team." Bechler said the team's defense shut down opponents — the offense is taking charge of the game.

The team scored 50 points in the first half, and club president Brett Raftis said she was impressed by the rookies to play in the second half. "We were dominant in everything," Raftis said. "We had a solid line that was much quicker. We ran a lot of plays, and we ran right by them. We also were in a better shape than they were."

The team will be competing Saturday in the Heart of America Tournament in Kansas City, Mo. The tournament is for women's teams and 32 men's teams.

Raftis said she expects her team to do well in the tournament. "We are hoping to take first place and win that $500 prize," Raftis said. "I expect our toughest competition will come from the U.S. Air Force Academy."

The team will leave at 3 p.m. Friday, and fans interested in attending the tournament can call Zastro at 536-6677.

Men's Soccer

The men's soccer team was 3-0 after beating Western Illinois University 56-0 Saturday at Stehr Field, but the University of Illinois put a stop to the team's winning streak.

"It was a good team effort," Bechler said. "We came out strong with our offense to get this victory."

Men's Rugby

The men's rugby team headed into the Saluki Invitational last weekend at Stehr Field, but the University of Illinois put a stop to the team's winning streak. SIUC beat Vincennes, Ind., 5-1 Saturday on Saturday, the club beat Eastern Illinois University 4-0.

But Sunday morning, the team fell to the U of I 1-0, giving the team a record of 4-0 on the season. SIUC finished third in the tournament, while U of I defeated the Springfield Soccer Club 3-2 in the championship game Sunday.

Club president Adam Kaiser said the team simply had no substitutions and lost because everyone began fatigued. "We were a much better team," Kaiser said. "We just had problems closing. We also had no subs."

The team will play Wabash Valley Sunday at Stehr Field.

Footbag Tournament

The Chaos Footbag Club sponsored its second annual outdoor footbag festival last weekend at the Saluki Invitational last weekend at Stehr Field.

Chargers keep Junior home

The San Diego Chargers signed six-time Pro Bowl linebacker Junior Seau to a five-year contract extension Tuesday. The contract will keep Seau in his native San Diego with the Chargers through the 1997 season. Financial terms of the contract were not disclosed.

Junior Seau

For SIUC men's golf coach Leroy Newton, the difference between his team finishing at the top instead of the bottom of the field is at the D.A. Bellingham Intercollegiate Monday was a few bad holes.

After two consecutive top-10 finishes this season, Newton's Salukis finished 10th in the 18-team event at Illinois State University in Normal by finishing a three-team round total of 906. SIUC posted in opening-round score of 302 Sunday and followed that with a second-round score of 299.

But the Salukis finished with a final-round mark of 325 Monday to finish 74 strokes behind the top finishers in the University of Northern Iowa and Iowa State University. Newton said the cause of his team's struggles Monday was a poor showing in the team's final holes.

"We've improved a great deal," Newton said, "but winning matters most. We've just got a good tournament slip away. We couldn't have won it, but we could have finished pretty high there. It's just the fact that the last couple of holes killed us." Newton's Salukis finished individually by the...in 908. Drake University ended the tournament with a score of 803 for third place, while host Illinois State University finished fourth with a total of 989.

"It's a long way to assure that Junior will always be a member of the San Diego Chargers," general manager Bob Miller said. "There's a lot of baseball people's eyes for free agency for an NFL player to be drafted by a team and stay with that team and develop into a star." Miller said.

The Salukis were led individually by the play of John Raski, Raski opened with an even-par 71 and finished with rounds of 73 and 78 for a 10th-place finish and a 222 total. Ryan Pickett and Craig Castille each finished in 67th place after firing a three-round score of 235. Pickett shot rounds of 77, 75 and 81, while Castille finished at 76, 76 and 83.
