Saluki quarterback Evans to transfer

By Carlton Spain

Reggie Evans, who came back from a knee injury to become the No. 1 quarterback on the Saluki football team, said Tuesday that he will not return to play for the team in the fall.

Evans, who will be a junior in the fall, said that he plans to transfer to Tennessee State University. "Where I am going I know how the coaches treat their players and I have seen them in game situations," the 30-year-old Evans said, "and I have talked to the coaches."

Evans, who had an injury-plagued sophomore season, had an outstanding spring and moved ahead of returning starter John Cernak. During the May 6 spring game, Evans completed 14 of 26 passes for 92 yards and one touchdown. "My decision to transfer has nothing to do with the team's performance last year, which was 3-8," Evans explained. He added that he is going to a team where he won't feel intimidated by coaches.

The 6-1, 160-pounder from Chicago also said that transferring will give him the opportunity to establish himself academically. Evans will have to sit out a year before becoming eligible to play at another school according to NCAA rules.

Sanaki Head Coach Roy Dempsey and the other coaches were unavailable for comment Tuesday.

Alvin Reed, defensive back on the team said that if Reggie is not happy with what he is doing, it would be best to leave.

During his two seasons with the Salukas, Evans completed 23 of 59 passes for a completion percentage of .390.

Last year, Evans began the season as the backup to Bobby Collins. He came off the bench in the third game of the year against Indiana State and completed four of seven passes for 72 yards and rushed six times for 19 more.

Dempsey had high hopes for Evans and named him his No. 1 signal-caller during the spring.

HEED move may meet legal obstacles

By Mark Peterson

Student Writer

The planned transfer of the Home Economics Education Department (HEED) from its present location in Quigley Hall to Pulliam Hall could be headed for legal snags, Rep. Bruce Richmond said Tuesday. Richmond said that because Quigley Hall was built with money from the Illinois Agriculture Premium Fund, which is derived from the state's share of revenue from pari-mutuel betting at Illinois race tracks, he has become interested in the legal precedent that the move might present.

Richmond also said that right now he is not convinced of the feasibility of the move from Quigley Hall, which he said was built and designed around the needs of the Home Economics Department.

He added that because the transfer would be funded with tax dollars, he is curious to find out what the cost will be. Richmond, a Democrat from Murphysboro, said he became interested in the issue because of the large volume of mail and phone calls that has come into his office from people throughout Southern Illinois.

Because of these questions, which Richmond said need to be answered, he has scheduled a public informational hearing for 10:30 a.m. Aug. 14 in the Mississippi Room in the Student Center.

Richmond said there has been an unusual amount of interest and opposition to the move from former and present students, organizations and individuals who worked to obtain the building originally such as the Illinois Agricultural Association and the Agriculture Alumni Association.

Joyce Crouse, president of the Home Economics alumni society, recently told the SIU Board of Trustees that the move constituted a 'breach of faith with people who tried to get this building, and with the people of the state.'

The decision to transfer HEED from Quigley Hall reflects an effort by the Administration to house departments of the same college in one building. HEED is a department in the College of Education which is based in Pulliam Hall. Richmond said he hoped the information gathered at the hearing will be helpful to SIU officials, faculty and former and present students.

Richmond said Rep. Bill Harris from Marion and Sen. Ken Buzzbee from Carbondale have indicated they will attend the hearing.

Room and board increase '79

By Mike Field

Staff Writer

Students living on-campus can expect to be paying more for their room and board during the 1979-80 school year.

"An increase in the rates for on-campus housing will definitely occur," says Sam Rinella, housing director. "It's not going to be a popular decision," Rinella said. "But it's something that has to be done."

"Rising costs of food, utilities and student wages were cited by Rinella as reasons for the increase."

"Almost all our costs are going up and it's either raise the rates or cut back on services," he said.

The present cost for an individual to live on-campus is $1,520 per year, and that price has stayed the same for two years, Rinella said.

A study of the situation will be conducted in September, with specific figures to be reached by the end of November, Rinella said.

"We will have to consult with all of the student councils first and then the administration," he said.

"Then, after talking to all of these people and being questioned by them, I'll go before the Board of Trustees with the figures."

"That's not something I look forward to at all," he added.

As expected increase utility costs of $450,000 will be, in large part, responsible for the rate hike, Rinella said.

"This is 'rease is not something I want to ask for," he said, "Nobody likes to raise rates. It's just something that has to be done."

Professor: Bogus papers easy to spot

By Joe Sobchak, News Editor
Pacific Research of Seattle, Wash., claims that college students are selling for profit term papers listed in Pacific's catalogue.

Pacific Research's term paper number one, "A Comparative Analysis of the Political Philosophy of Plato and Aristotle," provides the basic differences between the two philosophers, the catalogue claims. Professor McClure said he is solely for research and reference purposes.

"It's corny," McClure said upon first reading the analysis. He said it "might get a C or a B in GSC 102 (the first level of philosophy courses offered by the department) but added, "I'm quite confident it would fail an intermediate philosophy course.

McClure said he is able to identify a bogus paper by indicators extraneous from the work itself. He said that many times rewritten papers will not fit the assignment. Another topper is that the "quality of the prose is above that of the student's normal work, he said.

"We never offer anything to be turned in," a representative of Pacific said. Still, in 1976, Frank Morton, vice president of academic affairs and research, issued a memo to all departments forbidding the display of ads for rewritten research papers on campus bulletin boards. With the exception of one, none of the departments or schools on campus take any affirmative steps to prevent the use of bought or plagiarized term papers by students.

Cari Harris, coordinator of student discipline, said that most cases of cheating and plagiarizing are handled by the academic departments in which they occur. "It's normally handled as an academic offense," he said.

Harris said the penalties could range from nothing to flunking the course for which the paper was plagiarized to expulsion from the University.

Cases for expulsion would be handled through the Office of Student Life. Harris said he did not know of any students expelled from SIU for plagiarism.

Peter Buka'ski, chairman of the Department of Cinema and Photography agrees with McClure that a bogus paper is easy to spot. However, has taken further action by photocopying parts of term paper catalogues relevant to cinema and photography students. The copies are distributed to faculty members, who watch for students papers with similarities to the descriptions in the catalogues, he said.

Students allowed additional time for fall fee deferment

By Jill Mitchell
News Writer

Because of the late timing of financial aid assistance for students, fee deferments will begin a week earlier this year, Will Travelstead, assistant dean of Student Life at SIU said.

Travelstead said that most financial assistance comes in after the first week of school and this time the pre-registration of some students waiting for aid has been completed. Students do not have the money readily available to pay fees and then have to be reimbursed, he said.

Pre-registered students seeking a fee deferment must complete a deferment contract before Friday, Aug. 21. Registered students or those who have to pre-register have until Thursday to fill out the claim. Students begin to defer fees, Travelstead said.

A new condition for fee deferments has been put into the works this semester. Students applying for deferment must have a fee statement. The fee statement must show a minimum of six hours and carry a minimum balance of $65. This will change in the spring when the minimum balance required will be $75.

Students can pick up the necessary deferment contracts in the Student Life office, Student Work and Financial Assistance office, International Student Services office or the Business School.

Travelstead said that there are some guidelines on the contacts that people must know about before they can have the forms filled.

For example, students must pay off all previous indebtedness to the University and personal loans must be able to guarantee payment of tuition and fees. Also, a verification letter must be received by the registrar, and any bursar's hold clearances must be submitted. Students will have to complete a deferment application (in duplicate) to the Student Relations office.

Travelstead said that students with questions about the statement may receive only a two- or three-week deferment. Deferred students must still wait on the fee statement. There will not be extensions on the due date.

Travelstead said there are two types of fee deferments processed. Students must defer their own fees in person and sign the forms themselves.

Students can begin the spring semester deferment process after the week of Oct. 30.

No such disclaimer is required when orders are placed by telephone.

In seven days, the term paper and a bill for $22-$45 for the five-page paper, a $5 C.O.D. charge and $2 for special delivery—arrived at the post office.

George McClure, chairman of the Philosophy Department, evaluated the paper.

"It's corny," McClure said upon first reading the analysis. He said it "might get a C or a B in GSC 102 (the first level of philosophy courses offered by the department) but added, "I'm quite confident it would fail an intermediate philosophy course.

Job information publication expanded

By Deb Browne
Staff Writer

Information about the number of University job openings will be available to more prospective students through expansion of the Employment Opportunities bulletin and its mailing list, according to Doris Turner, chairperson of a Women's Caucus committee that pushed the change.

In the past, the bulletin listed only civil service jobs and was sent to civil service employees.

Now it lists nearly all faculty and administrative professional staff as well as civil service openings, and is sent to all University employees every Tuesday. Graduate assistantships are not listed Turner said.

The bulletin is sent to those who have worked for the bulletin expansion with the Caucus committee since last fall, said that the expansion was designed to help women compete for jobs despite what she called the "Old Boy's network," although the expanded list will help both men and women.

"We told the fellows go out for lunch, or wherever they meet, they tell each other about job openings," Turner said. Turner said that the committee was originally formed because, "We were concerned that many women on the campus were underemployed...by the time they found out about the jobs they were usually filled."

Affirmative Action Officer Mary Helgeman said that professional jobs, like directors and coordinators, that have been traditionally advertised plagiarized. In journals, are now advertised locally in the bulletin "to spread the word further."

Marian Davis, a civil service representative on the Caucus committee and secretary in affirmative action, said that persons in positions of control in each vice presidential area are responsible for contacting affirmative action as soon as they are ready to hire.

Personnel Services, Affirmative Action and Career Planning and Placement will file back issues of the bulletin, which does not list job qualifications.

The civil service job hotline (536-2161), which operates 24 hours a day, will carry faculty and administrative openings. Help staff openings are mailed to the room, according to a spokesperson in personnel.

Davis said the expanded bulletin has received a lot of positive feedback.

"It certainly solves the problem of 'I didn't hear about it' or 'I didn't see it,' because if you can read, you'll know," she said.

Final issue

This is the last issue of the summer semester. The business office will be open from 9 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday during break. The Daily Egyptian will resume publication on Monday Aug. 21.

Editor cruises out of newsroom for last time

By Scott Elise
Editor in Chief

My life will be going through several fundamental changes. I'm leaving the editor in chief's job at the Daily Egyptian, graduating from SIU, getting married and having kids.

But even a bigger change awaits me this month, a change which will result in a whole new life, because I'm no longer go cruising for women with my pal Larry. Marriage will undoubtedly end my crusin' days, days of cruising around the Market Street area with my buddy and I would stalk the boulevards for prospective mates.

Several months ago, when I was a general assignment reporter, I wrote a column for the education section, and I thought that one of such adventure at a drive-in in my home town. Although I can't tell what happened, it did pick up our curiosity that evening. I promised Larry and the girls parents I wouldn't tell anyone about it, and the girls paid me $20 to keep quiet. I can tell you how Larry reacted when I told him about my forthcoming marriage.

A couple of weeks ago, I crossed Larry, his car parked in our favorite girl-watching spot on the Park Plaza Shopping Center lot.

"I heard about your marriage," he said.

"Yeah, Listen, Larry, I wanted to..."

"Okay, man, don't beat around the bush. Congratulations. All things must pass into many happy returns, and all that jazz," Larry offered. "Whatever happens, happens."

"Larry, I want you to be a groomsman in my wedding."

"I'd rather be something different," he replied.

"Larry, you're about 26 years too old to be the ring bearer."

"Will, Larry said, "How about me being an observer?"

"An observer, an official observer. I'd stand about 25 feet behind the preacher, with my arms folded, and look at you as you go through everything, make sure it's okay."

"Sure, Laura's Catholic and she says the area behind the priest who will marry us is sacred ground."

"Oh well, the priest can perform an exorcism on me if he wishes."

"Sounds like a bad omen to me."

Lately, I have been going through a renaissance in my marriage ceremony, and we parted company for the evening, after he spotted a blonde in a Camaro that he'd never seen in town before.

Yes, those crusin' days with the Captains were fine, but I'm giving them up for even finer days as an all-inclusive American husband. I find it very satisfying to be away in my journalistic career after I leave the DE.

I started here as a press room worker in the backshop, after bugging Production Superintendent Si for a job. Today, I'm a production manager and I feel okay back there, until the last day of the 1977 summer semester. I was demonstrating what I thought was the solution to a proper week-long back shop fiasco. I host to a couple of new workers. But I forgot to include the back shop shop them out of shape so badly that they couldn't be used again.

However, discounting my mistakes, backshop workers on this paper, under the expert eyes of Phil and his assistant, Ed Buring, are sending me professional I've seen on any newspaper. I thank the typesetters, makeup and people, camera workers and press room people for cooperating with us egoistic writers in the newsroom.

And the business and advertising departments, under the guidance of Adrian Como, are to be commended for another semester of work that was well done.

In the newsroom, I was very lucky and fortunate indeed to have the technical guidance. Journalism I have ever met, Managing Editor Bill Harmon. After agonizing through a year of his red pen, I learned enough about more writing than I can ever thank him for.

My haggard looks, along with the reporters and editors in the newsroom. An editor can plan and order, he can make assignments and through that, he can make a newspaper. It was the biggest staff, and the last one. We were sharp, and hard work made the newspaper read well.

She also had the nerve to tell me when I might be wrong or when I might be right. Without which I appreciated and made out our coverage look very good. She is grateful to do the same.

Beth Porter was the best news editor I have ever seen on the rim, and Bob Allen and the rest of the news editors were such that most of the style and grammatical errors in the copy that we were always making are gone. They, quite simply, were incredible to work with.

Pat Kariak and Tony Davies, city reporters this semester and editors in past semesters, will be graduating with me this summer. Their good work will be missed by future readers.

Today Editor Dave Engstrom, who is the only person on the staff who has hair longer than mine, is also leaving the par-par after several semesters of top-notch effort.

So many staff have come through with good work—Ed Lempson, Mike Field, Sports Editor George Csmak, and the rest of the reporters—even though summer is usually slow time for news stories.

Bruce Haggarty, who has kept the DE tradition of fine editorial work in his endeavors as editorial page editor. He has my best wishes for a successful fall semester as editor in chief.

The photography of Mike Gibbons and Brent Cramer was also good. They provided that much-needed pictorial sum-sum to break up the gray pages of the DE.

Though it sounds like a cliche, there is no way that I have time to thank everyone. I have a deadline to meet, even on this column, and I'm already three hours late. But honest, I want to thank all the teachers, reporters, backshop personnel, editors and everyone associated with the School of Journalism for letting me work on the Daily Egyptian. It was fun.

Well, it was almost always fun. It was fun when Evan Smith sailed in the newsroom in his gangsta outfit and tried to write Gus Budes. It was fun when George "The Mad Serbian" Csmak stole my Hawaiian shirt and merrily sang "Billie Jean" while back shoe, it's time for me to cruise out of the DE newsroom for the last time.

And last but not least, I have to give thanks to journalism instructor Hugh Morgan for his asking me to try and make this column something memorable. Well Hugh, I tried. And if you, as ever are hard-up for a date on a cold Southern Illinois night, give me a call. There are a couple gals in my house town who'd love to go out with you.

U.S. policy on Africa is inconsistent

"New African policy." This promise was made by Jimmy Carter who, with these promises, the cold war syndrome remains in the formulation of U.S. foreign policy in Africa.

Since World War II, American foreign policy has revolved around the stock strategy of contain the Soviet's with communist, attempts to thwart the Kremlin and destabilize unfriendly regimes to Somalia, Ethiopia and Angola. The result was the Bay of Pigs, Chile and the Vietnam fiasco, to name a few.

At an increasing rate, Africa is becoming another showcase for American interventionism. U.S. policy can vary from country to country, but it has not offered positive action except for majority rule rhetoric.

Further, the evolution of events in the Horn of Africa reflects a failure in management of U.S. foreign policy. In early 1977, the Carter administration rescinded direct supply of arms, despite repeated appeals by the Saudis to help their invading brothers against the Soviet backed Afghans. The response to the Soviet aggression was that the White House was mute, except for calling for peaceful negotiations. An issue upon which we always dreamed, the negotiations, was a capitulation to the abandonment of Soviet aggression.

When the Saudis and Soviets came to the rescue of beleaguered Ethiopia, Washington accused them of unwarranted intervention in Africa. To the contrary, the Organization of African Unity denounced Washington's, clients, such as Iran and others, for their support of Somalia. Its reaction to the Soviet and Cuban presence was silence approval in a bid to preserve Ethiopia from dismemberment by Somali and conservative Arab forces.

The overriding question is "Does such an inconsistent U.S. policy, the outcry over the presence of Cubans, serve or promote U.S. interest in Africa?" Unfortunately, the majority of African nations agreed with America's outcry over Cuban presence as self-serving.

The Cubans are in Africa for the mere fact that they have been invited at the request of nations that were aggressed by their neighbors, with Ethiopian case in point. The Russian and Cuban flow into the continent cannot be curtailed until the United States formulates a sound foreign policy. This confrontation policy led the United States to side with those who are responsible for the rise of Angola and Angolan civil war, and probably in the Horn too.

Despite promises for a "new African policy," events under the Carter administration indicate that no drastic change is to be expected. If this syndrome will take place, even though the present policy has failed to serve U.S., as well as African, interests.

Press not open in Bourne case

By Joe Sobczyk
Staff Writer

Dr. Peter Bourne, President Carter's chief advisor on drug abuse, said he is more receptive than ever to a cloud of controversy which has the birds of journalism swirling above like a flock of self-righteous sparrows. Bourne did not resign because a Virginia State Pharmacy Board for "identity theft purposes" confiscated his prescription written by him to a fictitious person. He resigned because one of the birds suddenly began to sing about Bourne's use—or at least his preference—of drugs. The reporter compromised journalistic ethics in the manner in which the story was disclosed.

Gary Cohn, a reporter for columnist Jack Anderson, wrote that there was no material proving Bourne's use of marijuana and cocaine at a party given by the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML) in Washington. Cohn was at that party and was more than a passive spectator.

What is at issue here is what Cohn and Anderson failed to mention. Anderson neglected to mention that Cohn was also invited to the NORML party. He also participated fully in the coverage.

Such a method of newsgathering raises the spectre of entrapment. The police powers of this country have been abominated against the use of this technique, and the press should take heed.

Ma Bell's is only place in town

By Lerl Amored
Associate Editor

My support of the monopolistic telephone company ended abruptly this summer.

Prior to June, I had accepted the rationale for having only one phone company—the "economy of scale" theory which says that one set of telephone lines will provide cheaper and better service than competing lines. Besides, the Federal Communications Commission and the Illinois Commerce Commission regulate rates and serve as a watchdog for the public.

But then I had my first run-in with Ma Bell.

Applying for my first phone was more of an ordeal than I had anticipated. The "phone agent" concept was supposedly designed to make getting a phone simpler and more convenient. After my 90-minute trial by fire, I can only conclude that either my definition of simple and convenient is 180 degrees off, or Bell is considering what getting a phone was like previously.

There was the expected red tape—name, address and occupation—plus some. My social security number, privileged under the Privacy Act, was also needed. When I asked the telephone service representative the reason for requesting the number, she seemed honestly shocked that anyone would question the telephone company's wisdom. "Why? Don't you have one?"

I suppose that a telephone was in making and I had already spent an hour more in the building than I cared to. I gave her my name and address and phone number were also needed to complete the application for service. The fact that I am 22 years old and my parents are not legally responsible for any debts I incur was not a factor.

Then there were the rules.

I was required to make an advance payment of $5.00 because my credit rating is unsatisfactory. I had had a perfect payment record for 10 months on my Dorn Dial card, but one full year of payments is required.

I was luckier than some, however. One customer, also a service agent, was allowed to advance payment of $5 and a deposit of $70 because she had never had service with GTE before.

One hundred fifty-five dollars is a lot of money to put out, even if it will be returned or credited to your bill.

My phone installation fee was $22. I had thought I would not have to pay this since a jack was already in my apartment and I would be picking a phone up at GTE's office. But a call from another employee revealed that no phone had been connected in my apartment for six months and a serviceman would have to come out to check the connection. I later found out that even if they had been able to connect the phone from the connection in my apartment, the service agent would still have to charge me.

The service man came four days later ("the soonest time we have") and spent less than one minute completing his work.

GTE can make these demands and charge these fees because the market for service is not open. Consumers have the choice of using the service or doing without. The consumer will continue to have to wait for service and pay high deposits until the company's monopoly is broken.

Unfortunately, the consumer can do little about this. As one customer at the phone start complained when a frustrated man left the building after a 45-minute wait, "He'll be back; this is the only place in town."
SIU health service system is unique

By Jill Wieland

Staff Writer

The University's Health Service Program offers a wide variety of services, from preventive care to emergency room treatment. The program is funded by student fees, and it is the most unique student health program in the state.

There are many reasons why the SIU Health Service Program is unique. First, the entire medical fee of $6 is refundable for certain courses or services. Second, the program is not equally or consistently funded. The university pays for two-thirds of the fees. The students pay for the remaining one-third.

Students who use the health service program have a choice of seeing a health service provider on campus or going to their own provider. If they choose to use their own provider, they must pay for the service and then submit a claim to the university for reimbursement. The university will then pay for the service if it is covered by the insurance plan.

The university offers a variety of health care services, including walk-in clinics, urgent care, and specialty care. The university also offers a wide range of classes and workshops on health topics.

The university's Health Service Program is unique in that it offers services that are not available at other universities in the state. The program is also unique because it is funded by student fees, which are not available at many other universities.

Jewelry evokes shaman imagery

CHICAGO (AP) - A fascination with bones and the symbolism of primitive m-idee and men inspired southern Illinois artist Freida Littlefield to incorporate these elements in her work, which now is being exhibited at the Illinois Arts Council.

The show, continuing through Aug. 11, consists of two series of works, including some jewelry, which look like faces from a surreal culture. Every piece is finely done. But beyond the evocative bone patterns for the art, the work is engaging in the way the rituals of strange religions are intriguing.

Littlefield lives in Murphysboro and says she studied anthropology at the University of California at Berkeley and holds a graduate degree in fine arts.

The most interesting pieces in the Arts Council show are the stick puppets, which incorporate some of the symbolism of shamanism. Littlefield believes that a priest or medicine man can influence good or evil spirits.

They have such names as "Eagle Lady," "Coyote Lord," "Jack Rabbit Count," "Frog Coins," and "Bland Duke."

They are in the form of Chinese paper shadow puppets and Indonesian buffaloes that stick puppets, which the artist recalls having seen at a museum in New York. All evoke images of druids who think they have skull-like heads and are but few means masked.

"My fascination for bones began years ago when I collected them on beaches or in mountains. I was further enlightened when I first saw the incredible delicacy of human skull bones in an anthropology class. Bones are our structure. When we die, they are the last thing to décor, pose," said Littlefield.

She points out that "In shamanism, the skull is consistently a collective symbol for rebirth and renewal."

Littlefield said, "It has nothing to do with death as a finality but rather in an integral part of the cycle of life and death, degeneration-regeneration."

Her jewelry also carries the imagery of bone and shamanism and such objects as turtle earrings, a bone poppet. ""Moon Woman Bracelet."" A handsome hand mirror has a hook in the form of a skull.

NEW YORK (AP) - After five years away from the studio, the Moody Blues, England's biggest selling groups, released a new album that sounds like it could have been made before the group's break-up. But instead, the album includes songs written before the group's 1973 breakup, as well as some recently recorded tracks.

Each summer since 1973, the group has toured. The band has sold more than 100 million copies of it's albums across the world, with hits like "Horse with No Name" and "Nights in White Satin."

The album, "Moody Blues and Sound," is expected to be released this week, featuring tracks like " Seventh Son," "Ribbon of Time," and "Loreley." The album is the group's first new release since "On the Threshold of a Dream," released in 1991.

Refugees talk on America

Refugees from Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos who live in Southern Illinois will discuss their adaptation to American life, in a program at 3:30 p.m. Monday, on Channel 12, KFVS-TV.

The program will cover what it’s like for refugees from Indochina to make their homes in the United States, the history of ethnic groups in the country, and the refugee program.

Moody Blues album like old times

"We weren't apart for as long as most people think," said Hayward. "While we were recorded 'Seventh Sojourn' in 1972, we were still on the road in the middle of '73. We decided we needed a break from each other and didn't want to get back together. We've each other continually since then, and the only question was when it would be."

The rock world—and the Moodies themselves—have changed considerably since the band first scored with "Go Now," a 1966 hit featuring Denny Laine, now with Paul McCartney's Wings. The current lineup—Hayward, Pinnock, Ray Thomas, bassist John Lodge and Drummer Graeme Edge—released seven bestselling albums together and toured to good notices in the early '80s.

But the stakes are much higher now. Superstar groups currently sell five or three million copies of a single album, not just the 500,000 to stabilize for studio albums. While the Moodies in the late '70s might have hoped to sell several thousand fans to the Felt Forum show, they've expected to draw 60,000 people to football stadiums throughout the country, singing to fans 30 years their junior.

GM customer wants full value

By Marc Wilson
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO—More than ever Joe Siwek is convinced that he can't fight city hall—or General Motors.
Siwek was the first person to protest when he discovered in the fall of 1975 that his 1977 Oldsmobile had a cheaper Chevrolet engine.
"I went and bought the car and it wasn't what I paid for. I didn't want trouble. All I wanted was for them (GM) to tell the people what they're doing so people can get what they paid for," Siwek said Tuesday.
His protests caused the Illinois Attorney General to sue GM. More than 40 state attorneys general joined in the suit against the automaker as nearly 67,000 other customers found their luxury autos have Chevy engines.

"The GM lawyers treat me like I'm trying to run GM. I just want what I paid for, that's all," said Siwek, a retired Chicago Transit Authority worker who quit a part-time job so he could attend the trial.
"It was so confusing, so much trouble. I don't want trouble." So Siwek, one of 110 customers named in the suit, stopped going to court.
"Then I didn't know what was going on except what I read in the papers. Nobody called me or anything." In mid-July, Judge Frank McGarr of the U.S. District Court in Chicago approved $200 million settlement that will agree to pay $5 million or $200 to each person who unknowingly bought an Oldsmobile with a Chevy engine.
"I don't get nothing," Siwek said.

"No $200, no notice, no nothing," will $200 make up for the cheaper engine? "It's still not what I paid for," he said. That's all I want.

John McPhee, assistant Illinois Attorney General, said Siwek had a chance to protest the settlement in court. "He chose not to.
McPhee said Siwek can still go to court for a better settlement as an individual "if he doesn't accept the $200 and doesn't sue the warrant." Will Siwek fight GM further? "I can't afford it," said Siwek. "I'm tired of lawyers. I ain't got nothing. They got everything. They do anything they want. I'm tired of trouble."
Rickover chooses SIU student

By University News Service

A graduating senior at SIU has been chosen by Admiral Hyman Rickover to enter the U.S. Navy's nuclear training program.

Mark Zager of Troy will be the first graduate of an engineering technology program to go to the Navy's Nuclear Power School in Orlando, Fla., according to Navy records. Zager will get his degree Saturday at commencement ceremonies at the Navy's Nuclear Candidate school at Newport, R.I., first stop on his way to a berth in the nuclear navy.

Zager hadn't even considered the military until he began interviewing for jobs with private engineering firms. Then he said he began thinking of the navy's training program, the prospects for immediate responsibilities, and the prestige he knew he was sitting in Admiral Rickover's office in Washington, being interviewed by the man who is known as "fathers of the nuclear submarine" and head of the Navy's nuclear propulsion division, asked Zager a few questions and dismissed him. "On the way out a secretary said I'd been accepted," he said.

At SIU, Zager's 3.7 grade average on a 4.0 scale kept him on the Dean's List most of the time. He attributed his interest and talents in electronics technology to a "good electronics program at Triad High School."

He earned a two-year associate degree in electronics in the School of Technical Careers before going into the technical degree program.

Farmers' debts growing

Union 5AP-A farm management specialist says the owners of large farms in Illinois are borrowing more money each year to operate their farms and live. Del Wilken of the University of Illinois says 41 percent of all the money used for farm operations and living expenses during 1977 was borrowed. That was an increase of 13 percent from 1976, he said.

The average amount borrowed per farm increased from $12,546 in 1974 to $19,700 in 1977.

The figures were obtained from 118 farms who have agreed to participate in a farm management and record-keeping program. About 8,000 are enrolled nationwide.

The survey shows that operators on large farms owned more of the land they farmed in 1977 than in 1974. Wilken said that means they spend more on taxes and on payments for their debts.

Wilken said farmers who keep good records are able to make timely and sound financial decisions on a month-to-month basis, and the result is higher profits.

农民的债务在增长

联合5AP-一位农业管理专家表示，在伊利诺伊州的大型农场主每年借用更多的钱来经营他们的农场和生活。德勒·威金是伊利诺伊大学的一位农业管理专家，他说，1977年，农场主们借贷的百分比为41%。与1976年相比，增长了13%。他说明，平均每家农场的借款金额从1974年的$12,546增加到1977年的$19,700。

这些数据是通过118个同意参与农场管理及记录保存项目的农场获得的。大约8,000个农场被列入该计划。

这项调查显示，大型农场主在1977年拥有的土地比例高于1974年。威金说，这意味着他们支付更多的税款和债务付款。

威金说，那些有良好记录的农场主能够及时并明智地做每月的财务决策，结果就是提高了利润。

I on the motion portrayal. The Court heard Amendment protects First Amendment case.

Some Pacific hurricanes developed that far but with little damage.

Frank's concern lies with the explosive population growth in threatened areas in Florida and along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts which attract people with sunshine, surf, and sand.

There are coastal locations where the population concentration is so large, evacuation is impossible on the existing roads with the lead time we can provide with our warning.

Frank said.

He added that about 30 percent of the 37 million residents of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts have not experienced what the weather service classifies as a major hurricane.

"That has led to an 'it can't happen here' attitude which is building into the parade of a terrible tragedy," Frank said.

He said local officials in developing hurricane emergency plans, collecting the weather service for help. He said individuals can help themselves by doing a safe shelter in advance, planning evacuation routes and listening for weather service warnings.

Elaine was the last big hurricane, slammed the city in 1942.

But like others hitting Florida in recent years, Elaine was an isolated storm and not one of a series which the population concentration is so large, evacuation is impossible on the existing roads with the lead time we can provide with our warning.

Auto maintenance is prevention

By Kevin Spradling

With the end of the summer only a few days away, many drivers and others will be packing their cars and heading off on long trips. While making those last minute, hurried trip preparations, don’t forget about the car that is going to take you on those long trips.

Evers’ years, thousands of people find themselves stranded on the roadside because they did not take a few minutes to check their cars before they left. Some of those mechanics who are best left to the experts with the proper equipment know that preventive maintenance is simple enough to do yourself. Though none of the items in this preventive maintenance checklist are difficult to check or repair on your particular car, many will apply to everyone. If you have noticed some of these problems, they are best left up to a qualified mechanic especially before a long trip.

A simple but important place to begin is with fluid levels— either the radiator full (Never remove the car when the engine is hot to check or receive a face full of steam and burn you instead). Be sure to drain and check any other form of fluid and replace if necessary. One of the common fluids is probably life saving. If you have noticed any strange noises while turning the wheel, also check the fluids inside each cell and refill as necessary. Any visible fuel lines inside the battery should be covered with clean water. If your car is equipped with a “maintenance” battery, check the “eye” to make sure the battery has a full charge. Also remove any corrosion on or around the battery with a wire brush or a solution of baking soda and water.

If you have noticed that the car operates rougher on a new road, it is probably adjusted. Your look for brake fluid leaks and have an inspection system checked. Inspect the air filter. If it is dirty, clean or replace it.

Check the tires for uneven wear or damage. Check the tread depth using the head of a Lincoln penny. If the Lincoln Lady’s head is less than 1/16” above the level of tread, you need a new tire or at least a repair or replacement. If the tread wears too much, you need to rotate the tires and check the pressure on each tire with the proper pressure. If the tire is out of balance, you need to balance the tire. Check the spare tire in your emergency kit. A flat spare will not do you any good. Also avoid mixing tires, that is, radial with bias ply tires, if at all possible. None of this sort can result in severe handling problems.

Are your shock absorbers up to par? A simple test is to press down hard on each corner of the car and then release. If the car bounces more than two times before it levels, your shock absorbers may be going soft and may not be able to handle a heavy load adequately.

Group: Few women are execs

The Illinois Commission on the Status of Women is awarding a $250 grant to Charlotte Water Commissions to help women learn to control their lives and duties. Women said statistics indicate that women are entering the workforce, as elementary and senior high schools are starting to today. We want to find out what can be done to reverse this trend.

Woman abuses father, age 81

CHICAGO—AP—For a week, 81-year-old C. V. Aronson, was charged to a radiator in his bathroom. His 13-year-old daughter looked and led a hamburger every other day.

She said he did this to her by a man named Red and his 19-year-old daughter, who had a jar of food and said it kept out of jail.

Police found Darlene LaRocca, the man’s mother, who led a husband to the apartment.

"With women,” said the apartment, "you have to overlook some things.”

Police took Mrs Washington into custody on the morning of April 19. Washington explained the severe beating when her father refused to press charges.

Washington told police her daughter a man married to about 150 pounds and 6-foot-5, chased his ankles to a bathroom radiator and tied his hands to the shower curtain rod July 25 and left her alone.

During that time, police said, the man beat him with a hammer and knife and remarked on his dislike of cash and checks.

They led him a hamburger every other day and when police found food from the taco truck, robbery investigator John ¶. Washington was listed in good condition Tuesday at St. Joseph’s Hospital suffering from bruised kidneys and his face was also disfigured and suffered from minor cuts. "I told them to turn her loose,” Washington said.

Washington said from his hospital bed, "I don’t want it in the paper. She needs her to just sit and show her how much authority I have."

Washington said his wife or other family members.

Miss Washington unhitched her horse Sunday and he managed to escape from the room. He staggered outside, then greeted the man who saw him and summoned police.

City plans to build sidewalks

The city of Carbondale is planning to construct sidewalks in the Fairview Acres area on the west side of Carbondale, according to Bill Boyd, director of Public Works.

The sidewalk project is part of the five-year Capital Improvements Program. Boyd said last Wednesday. Funding for the project would come from the public benefit revenue raised for the program, he said.

The project has been opposed by some west side residents, according to Boyd.

There was a group of persons living on Lark Street who went before the city council a few weeks ago, and told them they didn't want to pay for the sidewalks," Boyd said.

Boyd said the residents on Prowood Drive would be paying "$1,000 or upward," depending on Boyd said the residents on Prowood Drive would be paying "$1,000 or upward," depending on the size of the person's lot. He said the "city would pay half of the cost if the residence was on a corner. In addition, the city would pay for sidewalks — repairs, or for the repair of an intersection, according to Helen Wentziger, a city council member.

Boyd said that a lot of persons want the sidewalks but don't want to pay for them.
Educator: Freshmen need basic skills

By Charles Roberts
Associated Press Writer

Basic skills like reading, writing, counting and just listening have evaporated for some new university freshmen, if they were ever learned at all, says Educator. And some students have already begun to feel the pinch.

"If you include community colleges, it's not unreasonable to say that 80,000 students will be in some kind of remedial courses," says James Furman, executive director of the state Board of Higher Education.

He said the cost of such courses reaches $1 million.

A standard college minimal competency has become such an issue in recent years that at least 20 states have laws to assure it. In Illinois, said Furman, the state Board of Education has been working cooperatively with school districts to develop minimal competency.

When they speak about measuring up to rock-bottom standards, educators aren't referring to mastery of calculus or ability to speak before large crowds or to convey easily about trendy new books. "It's the ability to go to the grocery store and have an idea of what the grocery bill is amounting to," said Furman. "And what kind of resources you need and the ability to read and write letters to employers. Unfortunately, not anything very elaborate at all."

But educators find those skills lacking in some new students.

Earl Lazarson, vice president and provost of Southern Illinois University in Carbondale, spoke about the problem in an address to teachers and students Jan. 31.

"The level of achievement in reading should imply comprehension of the editorial pages of newspapers, current events, journals, literature, history and geography," he said.

And all he wanted in speaking skills are "clarity and coherence in the presentation of thoughts or positions and an appreciation of courtesy in discourse."

By Mary Jo Lazarson had issued a memo to teachers and students calling for an Academic Resources Center. Its mission is to help students meet the level of standards the center is to establish.

Lazarson said students who find their way into normal university courses blocked by shortcomings in high schools will be at a disadvantage in their studies and in their work.

"I think of the things you could expect in a single interview with the tutor in those areas in which you need help," he said in an interview. "And we would also be self-teaching devices such as film strip and tape recording machines, academic advancement counseling."

"Students who take remedial courses would lose a considerable amount of time getting into real university work," he indicated.

"I would expect that for some it might be a question of a month's work in one very specific area. For others it might extend over a period of a year."

Lazarson said high schools should be held responsible for turning out students who haven't mastered the fundamentals.

"Society's problem," he said. "I think one of the keys to the situation is the last 20 or 30 years has been the advent of television and the convenience of the amount of time that lower school students have spent in innumerable diversions and simply doing the homework."

Lazarson also is convinced that "the weakening of the family in the post-World War II, post-Vietnam generation has contributed to it. It would be doing a disservice to society, that the high schools are not doing their job. I don't think it's anywhere as easy as that."

But Furman believes that "putting a lot of blame on high schools is to bring a little more respect than the facts suggest."

"It's clear that some graduates of high school are not adequately prepared to enter college and do reasonably," Furman said.

"Numerous studies from school officials educators decided that everyone has a right to schooling beyond high school and found that they all didn't have equal preparation for more advanced courses."

"The question is, how much quality should be sacrificed to expanded education," Furman said.

Lazarson said colleges and universities always have helped students in need of help. "I think that the thing that has dramatically drawn attention to the situation is the fact that in the last few years there has been the decline in college test scores relative to the norm," he said.

Like most other colleges and universities, Lazarson said, "We have many entering freshmen who show appropriate competencies as far as our level of achievement on standardized tests are concerned, but when it comes down to the necessity of being able to write a comprehensive English paragraph, performing computations, something is lacking."

Lazarson is less interested in finding the culprit than in solving the problem.

" Rather than attempting to assess blame, I think that the most important thing is to directly address the problem and that's what we're attempting to do," he said.

Tapes to aid job interviewers

By Nat Williams

Student Writer

Much has been written and done to aid the job applicant, but how about the employer who gives the interview? Allan Lachman, assistant professor in political science, together with William L. Curnow, a social student in liberal and other students in the theater and radio and television departments, is currently producing two video-tapes to help employers hire people legally and effectively.

Lachman explained the tapes, which consist of scripts written by human relations and professional groups via SIU theater students, show a well-structured candidate interview.

"We didn't want to present the right and wrong way of giving the interview," he said. "Hopefully the presentations will spur discussion among those watching and help them in their methods of interviewing. That's the purpose of the film; they are to be used as a starting point for discussion."

The tapes, which are intended to be used mainly by small-town governmental officials, are also designed to help the employer put the applicant at ease.

"We hope that these tapes will help the employer conduct a better interview by structuring it," Lachman said. "The interviewee should be given an indication of whether he is going to work out or not."

Lachman said that the tapes would ideally be a considerable help to small-town government officials at a relatively low cost.

"I think it can help," he said. "But the main problem is getting people in small towns to know about the tapes and how to use them."

Lachman said that two copies of each of the tapes will be sent to each state personnel department.

Wholesome Garvey is hard to stomach

Just about everybody has their favorite major league baseball player. These days for many it may be Pete Rose, who in his pursuit of a record set by a favorite of another generation, Joe DiMaggio.

Other present day favorites probably include Lou Brock, Bruce Sutter, Jack Clark, George Foster, Yoda Blue, Tom Seaver, Jim Rice, Nolan Ryan and maybe even somewhat of a medico like Roger Metzger.

However, along with the favorites, everybody also has their un-favorites or those players you would most like to have to speak for your children's history books. These are the players that have passed, their lives locked in a room with Howard Cosell, Mike Wallace and other associated diseases. These players include, names like Reggie Jackson, Willie Montanez, Derrell Thomas, Tom Foil, Bill Lee and last, but not least, Steve Garvey.

You say "Steve Garvey? Why he's one of the most "C" players in the major leagues." All American-type first baseman for the Los Angeles Dodgers. He's been the National League MVP once and now has been the MVP of the All-Star game. Besides all that, he has a beautiful wife and he is so clever on "The Gong Show" that's really why Garvey belongs on such a list. How can you possibly like a guy who plays ball in Los Angeles, where the rainy-out games can be counted on one hand and the sun always shines, making it difficult not to look like a Hollywood movie star? Following this line of reasoning, it would be easy to dislike the entire Dodger team which is true. However, let us not get sidetracked, because it is our purpose to carefully dissect Garvey...

Can you imagine the fun it would be to watch filmclips of Garvey striking out for an entire evening? Or better yet, wouldn't it be fun to go to a Garvey every time he comes on the field with his good guy-in-the-white-hat routine.

After the All-Star game this year when Steve Garvey was accepting his MVP award and saying what an honor it is to play in the game and how he couldn't care less why anyone would want to miss playing in such a contest I nearly fainted the hash. A person can only take so much wholesomeness.

Years ago I may have been able to admire OK Garv but a tragic twist of fate caused him to fall in extreme disfavor. A couple of years ago when Lou Brock stole an all-time major league record number of bases he was snubbed as the league MVP in favor of who? Some guy who had only a mediocre season for a team that never got raised on at home. yeah that Marvby Garvey...

I've heard enough about this Garvey and the telia is still around setting an example that misguided middle-aged men with barbeque hocks with their sons will live by.

Evan preparing for hockey season

By Nick Ruotolo

Summer camps are slow-paced and leisurely for most people, but for Chris Evin, returning for her last year on the women's field hockey team, summer is no vacation.

Evan attended field hockey camps at universities in Michigan and Pennsylvania. The camps were part of a reduction program that determined which players were to attend the National Sports Festival in Colorado Springs, Colo. The National Sports Festival, an operation aimed at a broad-based improvement of the slumping U.S. Olympic program, ended this week. More than 20,000 athletes competed in 25 sports there, preparing for the 1980 Olympics. Although she did not attend the festival, Evan survived every set of player cuts until three days before the camp phase ended.

There were "C" camps held at four sites, each with 30 to 80 participants. Less than half of these, including Evan, survived cuts to advance to "B" camp at Penn State University, University Park, Pa. Of these at "B" camp, 30 were chosen to train at the sports festival. Many of the participants at the festival will play in the 1980 (time) Women's field hockey will debut as an Olympic sport in 1980. I think Chris did quite well, I'm very glad she went," said Julie Ulrich, women's field hockey coach. Iller helped other players in fundamentals at an "A" camp. To be eligible to attend the tryouts, a player had to be recommended by coaches at a camp or team that qualified for the NAIAW tournament.

"I'm not disappointed about not attending the festival because I didn't expect to make the top 30," said Evan and honor student in physical education. "I went primarily to improve my skills and..."
