Walkiria Adams, of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, throws her hands up with other fans while watching the Brazil vs. North Korea FIFA World Cup match June 15 at the bowling alley in the Student Center. Brazil won 2-1 and was No. 1 in the world, while North Korea was No. 105. The top two teams of each of the eight groups in the World Cup advanced to the knockout round after all teams in their respective groups played once, in front of Adams is a vuvuzela, a small, plastic South African trumpet responsible for the relentless hum viewers might notice as background noise during the matches. Several broadcast stations requested that the horn be banned, but BBC reported FIFA president Sepp Blatter said it "is what African and South Africa football is all about — noise, excitement, dancing, shouting and enjoyment."
