CSBO supported as bargaining agent

By Jean Nee
Staff Writer

The Civil Service Bargaining Organization (CSBO) was recently placed in the spotlight by the University of Illinois as it prepares for the upcoming bargaining session.

The administration has been criticized for its treatment of civil service workers, and the CSBO has been a key player in these negotiations.

As the bargaining process begins, both sides will need to work together to reach a fair agreement that benefits both employees and the University.

About 80 persons who work in "certain managerial and sensitive positions" such as deans and administrators are represented by the Personnel Office and have been held hostage by the State Department of Labor.

The union, which represents about 300 civil service workers, is concerned about the lack of progress in the negotiations.

CSBO chairman, Lee Hester, said that the university has not been responsive to the union's demands.

"We're concerned about the lack of progress," Hester said. "The administration needs to be more responsive to our needs."
Dixon chooses middle ground for candidates

CHICAGO (AP) — Secretary of State Jim Thompson said Tuesday he will neither work for nor against the slate of Democratic candidates chosen for the primary election but will wholeheartedly support the party ticket in November.

Dixon, the leading front-runner among the party leaders who will be fighting for the chance to pick the candidates, said he will campaign for all the candidates.

Thus, Dixon confirmed an earlier report that he will be divorcing himself from the slate, chosen by the state Democratic party leadership, which is the conventional wisdom.

Dixon, of Belleville, who is seeking re-election, and Richard Durbin, of Springfield, who is seeking the nomination for state's attorney, are the only candidates slated for statewide office who are from outside the Chicago area.

Particular targets of dissatisfied Democrats are Richard J. Troy and James Leach, both members of the County Democratic Organization of the Sanitary District of Chicago. Troy was slated by the party for the attorney general's post but lost to state's attorney candidate Verna Stevens.

Troy would have been seen as the leader of the slate, chosen by state Democratic party leaders to run against the Republicans.

UAW bans meetings in states rejecting ERA

DETROIT (AP) — The United Auto Workers said Thursday it will not hold national conventions or major meetings in states that have not ratified the Equal Rights Amendment. Douglas Fraser, UAW president, said conferences previously scheduled in states which haven't ratified the amendment are being canceled. States that have not ratified the amendment include Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Mississippi and Missouri in the Midwest, North Carolina, South Carolina, Utah and Virginia. The UAW has a membership of 4.5 million.

$18 million proposed to keep Amtrak going

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House-Senate conference committee approved on Thursday an additional $18 million for Amtrak to avoid cutoffs of national rail passenger service this winter. The committee has previously approved $18 million, but this was rejected Wednesday and sent back to the House for a second try. It is developed, the first train set for cancellation, Jan. 19, on the Florida service that runs from Chicago through Kentucky and Tennessee to St. Petersburg, Fla., and Miami. Another effect of the extra funding, Amtrak officials said, would be to set back by at least two months proceedings aimed at canceling several other routes.

Vorster wins ‘lopsided’ S. African election

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Prime Minister John Vorster Thursday hailed his record-breaking election victory as a resounding endorsement of his white-power policies and rejection of foreign "meddling" in South African affairs. The leader of the opposition warned of "a burden of races," Vorster's National Party won an unprecedented 134 of the 165-seat parliament. The liberal Progressive Federal Party, which advocates sharing power with the country's 15 million blacks, won 17 seats. The blacks — as well as 2.7 million "coloreds" (persons of mixed blood) and 200,000 Asians — are not allowed to vote, although Vorster has proposed setting up separate parliaments for the coloreds and Asians.

Carter might propose $20 billion tax cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter probably will propose a tax cut next year of at least $20 billion, with $15 billion for individuals and the remainder for business, knowledgeable sources said Thursday. The reductions likely will be accomplished in large part by lowering the tax rates, especially at lower and middle-income levels. Previously, the administration had discussed a tax cut for 178% of $15 billion and $20 billion. But sources both in and out of government said $20 billion is now the minimum figure, and it could be as high as $25 billion.

Arabs hold ‘summit of resistance’ in Libya

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Hardline Arab leaders assembled here Thursday for a Libya-sponsored "summit of resistance" to break the moment of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's bold new peace overtures to Israel. A formal opening session of the two-day anti-Sadat conference was scheduled to begin inside the palace Thursday night but was postponed until Friday. The Arab leaders met privately the day before their gathering and announced that they had been assured by Sadat's Jan. 25-26 trip to Jerusalem. Still to come is another "rejectionist" conference called by Iraq for Baghdad next week, Sadat's pre-Geneva meeting in Cairo in mid-December and another preparatory conference called by U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim.

S-Senate seats 6 from east side; still 8 vacancies

By Bob Krupa

Six new senators were seated by the Student Senate Monday night—five to represent the newly-created East Campus district and one to replace Rob White, a senator from the west side, who had resigned earlier this year.

There are still eight vacancies among the 31 senate seats. Student Vice President Chuck Nishio and Chuck Munson, an Action Party candidate who garnered the highest number of votes from the west side, was named to replace White.

The senator were seated after a lengthy debate over a provision in the student government constitution regarding the number of east side and west side seats by those with the largest number of votes in the student election.

Dunning said that he interpreted the constitution to mean that the seats were to be filled at the beginning of the spring semester.

However, the east side, objecting to Sunday's vote, held that he felt the provision called for the seats to be filled as soon as possible after the election.

Once the eight vacant seats are filled, the remaining two seats for the student election will not take office until next semester.

Dunning said that the East Campus senators, who were installed Wednesday because they are from a district that has lacked senate representation for several years, were never asked to vote.

The district was created by an Oct. 19 constitutional amendment which merged the former Brush Towers and University Park districts.

One student had been vacated the entire semester due to lack of an eligible student. It was filled Wednesday.

Dunning's seat had been filled by Douglas Skinner, who resigned about six weeks ago. The last member from the district, Garrick-Clinton Matthews, resigned about a month ago, Dunning said.

Dunning said Thursday that he personally had asked both the senators who came up to come to the community building because the officers go to the Community Building for its interpretation of the constitution.

In his letter of resignation, White stated his decision was made in a letter that appeared in Wednesday's Daily Egyptian for an "urgent appeal to the Black Affairs Council (BAC) for 'bad publicity' protection on the part of the group's alleged misuse of funds.

New guidelines proposed to regulate government-paid sterilization for poor

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Department of Health, Education and Welfare, which pays for sterilization operations for 10,000 poor persons each year, proposed new regulations to ensure that no one is forced to undergo the procedure.

The changes also are designed to guard against the government's presently being "the irreversible consequences" of sterilization, HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano said.

The proposed rules would extend the minimum period between a time a poor person signs a voluntary consent form and the time of the surgery to 10 weeks. They also would forbid or sharply limit the sterilization of minors and to be performed solely to sterilize a woman.

The rules would continue the requirement that patients be told that they will not lose any welfare or other federal benefits if they are sterilized. The regulations also would continue a current ban on using federal funds for sterilization of persons under age 21. However, Califano said HEW is considering a change to permit sterilization of mentally incompetent persons in states that consider these persons "capable of giving voluntary consent to sterilization."

Voluntary sterilization of anyone in a jail or mental institution would be funded only if a special review committee and a court approved, Califano said.

He called for public comment on whether to follow this proposal or to keep the current ban on federal funding of sterilizations for mentally incompetent persons.

Califano ordered a full review of HEW's sterilization programs and General Accounting Office in June sharply criticized the informed consent records kept by HEW's Indian Health Service.

Califano said HEW's Medicaid Program has refused to pay claims for about 2,500 sterilization operations performed in the past four years because the existing regulations were not followed.

He said "a significant number" of sterilizations were performed on persons under 21, were made with imperfect consent forms or were made in cases where the three-day waiting period was ignored. He said HEW has not kept careful records on sterilizations and does not know exactly how many persons were sterilized in violation of the rules.

The regulations were written in 1973 after U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell ordered the government to protect the poor from being coerced into sterilization. Gesell acted in a case involving two young sisters sterilized in a Montgomery, Ala., birth control clinic after their mother was told her 12 and 14-year-old daughters were just receiving shots.

The new proposals would require the doctor performing the operation as well as the patient to sign forms certifying that the patient had been fully informed and understands the risks and benefits of the sterilization operation.

The new regulations would prohibit federal payment for hysterectomies performed solely to sterilize a woman.

Residents learn to accept reality

Growing up, coping with living is part of Hill House

By Andrea Strassmas

This is the second of two articles on Hill House, a therapeutic program in Charleston.

"You do it yourself. They show you insights. You begin thinking about yourself, growing as a whole. All of a sudden you realize you've grown up," said, 22-year-old one of the success stories of Charleston Cooperative, described the more than six months she spent learning to deal with "her issues." A therapeutic program for people with personal, behavioral and social problems, Hill House is designed to help its residents, many of whom have been mentally ill, become productive members of society.

Steve first came to Hill House in 1978 as a result of a court order issued while charges against her were pending in St. Louis.

"I personally didn't want to come here," she said.

After six months in the program, the charges were dropped. Dee left the house and returned to St. Louis, where she had to live alone. She had a hard time dealing with people and her job. She said, "It got really heavy," she said.

"It took a year," she added.

By the time she came back to Hill House, she had graduated from high school and was 19 years old. After this year she came back to Hill House. Now, after seven months of therapy, Dee, 20, is a full-time student and works on campus. She has quit using drugs.

Dee is only one who has come out of the Hill House program, a change program completed by the program's staff in October showed that 20 of 30 patients entered the program as full-time college students, one was employed part-time and the other five were unemployed.

"What I conclude from this is that something is going on right here," said Ruth Reitman, Hill House's executive director, said.

Others agree also reflect that Hill House residents aren't a "waxing success. Of the remaining 20 residents, five are transient, four have returned to Hill House, and the rest are on welfare. The second group, one is unemployed, another is on welfare and the other is at the late Mental Hospital.

Even to other places "it's a lot better," Reitman said, adding that the success of therapists is programs such as Hill House.

He said some programs work with people who have more serious problems than those at Hill House. The survey results, he said, should not be compared with the successes and failures of other programs.

"You don't want to compete," he said.

Twenty-year-old Becky Kaufman, 21, started changes in high school because of peer pressure. He ended up transferred to here and when he grew tired of that, he said, he entered a methadone clinic in Mobile, Ala.

"That was the easiest out for me," he said. "As far as a help program, there has been around 3-7 on a four-point scale.

"I know I have no use for drugs," Ed said.

Eric Becker, 19, who works as Hill House's assistant business manager said he was a drug user.

"I realized I had a problem and that I could solve it myself," he said.

STS grants hinge on return of forms by Dec. 7 deadline

Student-to-Student Grants application must be returned to Woody Hall by 5 p.m., December 7, Room 305-B Office of Student Work and Financial Assistance. In order to have a check processed by the end of this semester. Millicent Wright, coordinator of the project, said Thursday.

Students who have not received replies from scholarship organizations and who cannot submit their applications by that date may return the during the spring semester. They will still be considered for the total amount for which they are eligible under Student-to-Student Grant program.

Although the 1,106 applications given out during the fall semester cover the entire year for those students who applied, enough funds remain for 700 additional applications to be given out spring semester. Information on the additional grants will be released early next semester.

Wright said she was happy with the cooperation from students, and University employees in changing to the new "quick pay" procedure.

"For sure I need to talk to someone, and that does mean between 10-40 hours that will return to the program.

"I feel like I'm going to be alive, to someone," she said. She said he was a "no-talent" and that he doesn't care about his own potential. But Steve left his job, drifted north and the therapy stopped.

Steve, who is divorced, said he has been taking methadone on a regular basis.

"Over the past few months, it's like a weekly thing," he said. "I feel like I'll never get what I want. When I feel the whole weight of that it's like the other thing.

But Steve knows taking methadone is a dangerous thing for him to do," he said. "Dr. Jezlly and Mr. Hughes-they really hit me.
Human rights are nice, but only for the right humans

By Arthur Hoppa
Dear President I: Joe Sixpack American, take pens in hand to give you my sympathy wage. I can sure understand why you could not do anything for the Shah to dissuade him. I know you got a lot of flack for it. "How come the President of the US, no good Shah lover?" my friend Cyvewski, who is kind of a bleeding heart, wants to know. "I thought the President was for the people." Weh, who's against human rights? Not you. Not me. The man who has let me into the house is the only one. I come home the other night, see, and I says to the Mrs., "Set another place. I asked Hoolihan to stop by." "That man is not stepping foot in my house," says she. "In case he is going to come and beat up her poor, dear wife." Allegations that Hoilihan beats his wife, are vividly, unfounded, I think. "Maybe she turns black and blue once a week because the pressure of her nose too vigorously," inquires the Mamas.

"Let us not discuss that which is none of our business," says I. "You do not disapproving of beating wives?" says she, hesitating a skull. "I have never beaten you yet," says I. "except once at cackata. Besides which, Hoolihan is coming to look at my present tax schedules." "What would you even think of selling that drunken wife back to the hoilihan," says she. "About 600 bucks," says I, "which we could use.

"But the man's a maniac behind the wheel when he has a couple of beers in him," says she. "Mark my words, if you do see little old lady in your car and it will be your fault."

"If he buys it, it will be his car, not my car," says I. "And what is the point of an accident?"

"Aha, that's it!" she cries. "Like you said at the Meech can be said of the war. The point here is a dmi shortage, I will not have to wait in line as I have a friend in high places." Hoolihan's gas station is a high place.

"The highest," says I. "Seventy cents for regular. Pump, put your foot in it, you do wish to spend your declining years waiting in line."

"So that is why you approve of beating defenseless wives, running over poor little old lady," says she. "Oh, you are a cruel, inhuman monster!"

"I'm not," I reply. "I'm only fed up with the milk of human kindness. Way, just yesterday I gave a kid a buck who was collecting for the SPCA."

"But, I said, you are still just me goddamn it in common. We are both for human rights, you and me, for the right humans. But I'm a tip and prove it. Send a check today to the SPCA."

Truly Yours,

Arms for the Shah

By Scott Ellis

Author. In the recent National Women's Conference is indeed a turning point for women in their drive for basic human rights, does the ordinary everyday woman really want to be liberated?

Even though I'm in wholehearted support of equal rights for all people, my experience as a professional crusader and occasional bar hopper indicates that many red-blooded American women can still enjoy the macho image propagated by the U.S. media.

One of the typical experiences I have in my file occurred last fall, when my friend Larry and I were cruising a Southern Illinois town in his 1972 brown Capri. (The name of the town will not be mentioned to protect the guilty.) Larry was obviously looking for female companionship on that hot July day, but I was more interested in grabbing a hamburger than indulging in a gratuitous interest.

Heading my hidden name, Larry pulled into a drive-in, as the rebellious strains of a Bob Dylan tune howled from the car's stereo. A waitress about 16 or 17, and chowing a glob of guck bubble-gum, came up to the driver's window.

"Your order, please?" the girl said.

"What's your name?" said Larry.

"It's to you anyway," the girl replied.

"Larry, I don't think they're allowed to divulge that kind of information," I said, with a big smile on my staying face. "Anyway, I'm learning. Let's order."

"Okay, I'll take an order of fries and a toothpick."

"And a hamburger and a coke," I replied. "Fries, coke and your phone number for me," Larry said.

"My Dais, won't let me date yet," said the girl as she walked back to the stand with our order.

"Rats! I thought high school boppers were impressed by horney college students!"

"Larry, have you ever thought sometimes that we may be getting too old for this kind of thing?"

"Why heck no! For the last five years you know I've always drawn the line at 15-year-old girls. I'm no pervert!"

We both laughed at our joking and the young waitress soon came back with our food.

"That'll be eighty cents for yours and ninety-five for the hamburger."

"Hey! Those fries are soggy! Inferior merchandise do I believe, young lady." Larry said.

"Listen, son," the waitress' smile was almost on her face, "My name's Ann and my friend and I get off at midnight. Will you guys go over then?"

"All right! We'll be here!" I exclaimed, with my proudest interest revived. "Right Cosmopolitan!"

"Don't be nosy!"

The conquered wrench walked away to another car that had just pulled up and the two detour college students left the drive-in to eat their food on the cruise.

"Woo! She's hot again! She's good looking again!" Larry exclaimed. "And you said we were getting too old."

"We're just the last of our breed Captain," I replied.

After reading this startling story entitled the American woman succumbing to a stunning show of masculinity, who can doubt that the natural biological relationships between the sexes are beyond the law. Recipients may be guided to automatic adjustment of benefits according to the cost of living, but they are not entitled to a second upward adjustment by reason of higher wages.

On a third point, unfair as it may appear, Congress ought to consider the combinable and inseparable, the concept of inflation. Federal and state local employees seven millions of them ought to be drooped into the Social Security system. Under the present cost of living especially all of these public employers qualify for public pensions, vast numbers of them, by taking modest jobs, management to pay minimal Social Security taxes and still reap maximum benefits also. Bringing them into the Social Security would produce $62.5 billion in annual revenues.

On the disarmament side, proposed remedies are as painless as possible. For example, it is generally acknowledged that the retirement age under Social Security should be raised from 65 to 70 or 72. Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps advanced the thought some months ago, but such bowels are a far hill that the thought was hastily shelved. If a new age limit were phased into the system over the next ten years, workers now in their 40s and 50s who would have abundant time to adjust to the change.

For a second necessary step, Congress ought to determine the combinatorial and inseparable, the concept of future increase of wages. Recipients may be entitled to automatic adjustment of benefits according to the cost of living, but they are not entitled to a second upward adjustment by reason of higher wages.

Macho man goes cruisin'

The Senate would get away from the system of equal Social Security taxes that has existed for 40 years. By 1985, under this proposal, employers would be paying full Social Security taxes on an employer's salary up to $75,000 a year; the employee would pay on the first $33,000.

House version, the principle of equal Social Security taxes would be retained, with significant increases in both the tax rate and the taxable wage base. One way or another, working people would be clubbed.

The House already has refused to take one step that should be taken to increase revenues. Federal, state and local employees seven millions of them ought to be drooped into the Social Security system. Under the present cost of living especially all of these public employers qualify for public pensions, vast numbers of them, by taking modest jobs, management to pay minimal Social Security taxes and still reap maximum benefits also. Bringing them into the Social Security would produce $62.5 billion in annual revenues.

Social Security alternatives promise more worries

By James J. Kilpatrick

States and Senate leaders have renamed their search this week for a satisfactory solution to the Social Security problem. They might as well have named it as the search for a satisfactory solution to the Social Security problem. The beast that is being called the Social Security proposal is something that some are less distasteful than others.

The general nature of the problem is well known. The Social Security tax has been legalized, and it is paid more than it takes in. The fund went $3.1 billion in the hole in 1970 and $3.3 billion in the hole in 1976. This year's deficit, assuming no further changes in law, will be $46 billion, and future deficits are expected to run into the tens of billions of dollars.

Political realities have to be faced. The Congress cannot break faith with the 32 million men and women now caring for Social Security benefits. Most of them have arranged their lives in terms of dependency, in some cases, almost the only dependency check. This is an obligation that was to be met.

On the revenue side, none of the alternatives is attractive. The only option is to reduce the federal general fund in times of high unemployment, but neither the House nor the Senate has warmed to the prospect. Both chambers are thinking instead of massive payroll tax increases on both employers and employees.

Neoliberalism—Nixonism without Nixon

By Gary Wills

Much is being written these days about what Newsweek magazine called America's turn to the right. Liberals of the past have become "neoecon-servatives" so that it becomes increasingly hard to distinguish Commentary from National Review, or Harper's from Commentary. How are we to explain this phenomenon?

I think the explanation is best framed in terms of the constitution of the media. It has been said that Richard Nixon's achievement to break the spell of the 1960s was in no small imaginative ways that certain of his acts were vastly unanticipated. The president was delving into his tax vagaries, his break-in proceeds, his press conference lies, his court-tampering, etc.

Nixon's secret bombings and private war, for instance, have little notice by impeachment. But perhaps the most clearly illegal act of Richard Nixon's was not only unpunished but relatively un criticized. I refer to his attempt to smear funds appropriated by Congress. He held up almost one-fifth of the controlling expenditures voted for by Congress in the years 1969 through 1972. Court after court declared the act illegal—a breach of our Constitution, which put the appropriating power on Congress. Yet Nixon kept impounding, kept defying the courts, with electoral impunity. This was one of his many impeachable offenses for which he would never be imputed.

That is an astonishing historical fact. It completely reverses a whole range of political maxims and commonplace. Congress was given its "power of the purse" to check an executive spaying proclivities. It is quite true that the modern presidency gained its broad powers by wresting ever-increasing funds from the New Deal, modern wars, the vast defense and education establishments.

Besides, Nixon was relying on the popularity of his stiguish; yet political theorists would have been startled to see how Nixon could defy the "conservative" Congress, and get away with it. Why did a presidency built on spending finally overwhelm itself at an exceptional moment of retrenching?

The answer cannot usefully be given in terms of governance, expenditure, quantitatively. Nixon's budgets were high. He was not repealing the New Deal, any more than Eisenhower did. "Big government" stayed big under him, as it did under both Presidents Reagan and Brown, in California, or under Presidents Ford and Carter. Idiotic talk of return to a preindustrial decentralization is a form of pastoral poetry, not politics.

No, the question is not how much government spends, but on whom it spends. Big government's great sport occurred not during the New Deal, but during World War II. The New Deal doubled the federal budget over a course of eight years, which he doubled that doubling in half the time. And the cold war maintained the "hot" level of expenditure. Even vast new scientific, educational, travel and welfare expenses were justified in terms of "defense."

Spending was popular in those periods because it benefited both the powerful few and the electoral majority. There is a pattern of growth of government intervention and expenditure. During the industrializing period of the New Deal, government helped big business, giving up the Gilded Age's faith in the market; at the end of a rapidly expanding electorate (1972), when women first took the polls in large numbers: government benefited big business and the middle class of the New Deal, an era that helped medium-size business and large-scale farming families, it did labor or the poor.

With the civil rights movement, a one-party, one-man-one-vote, government finally began to help the lower middle class i.e., those who did not afford a college education without scholarships or GI rights. The answer seemed to be: making this country great, too. By 1972, Lyndon Johnson promised to give us not only bombs and rockets but welfare for the poor as well as the middle-class.

The old electorate, these newly elected people on social, moral and racial grounds. Thus Nixon could rail against "welfare bums" and "criminals in the street" and reap electoral rewards. It should not be surprising that the appeal of this rhetoric now is a neoecon-conservatism now being hailed as something new is simply Nixonism without Nixon.

Education should be lifelong process

I am a former SIU student who transferred to a small engineering school this fall. Although I plan to return to SIU, I am distressed about the University's present situation.

SIU has the potential to become a truly great college. With a little notice by recruitment, it found to be generally superior, at least compared to any college in the region. SIU is the only not only an unapologetic, but also a liberal arts student. SIU has a history of liberal that is reflected in education. When gone through programs such as the President's Degree Program, may suit almost any educational environment today's world might demand.

However, during my year at SIU, I observed a phenomenon which is a severe hindrance to any center of learning—namely, an attitude, based on fear and anxiety, that leads students to feel satisfied with a minimum of conscious effort. That minimum effort implies minimum benefit is, apparently, not perceived, or the nature of "benefit" is misinterpreted.

I have heard some of the disgruntled advocate elevation of admission standards. This I must disagree with. Everyone, regardless of past record, should be given an opportunity for education. Moreover, I have found the negative attitude to become an ardent proponent of lowering the standards of admission.

Critics: Give readers more knowledge, less prattle in reviews

"Robert Caro's "Waging Peace," not to say any particular review, but rather to the general quality of criticism published in the Times. I am a second-year graduate student, I have read countless articles thinly disguised as critical reviews. All too often these articles have amounted to nothing more than mindless caviar or unjustified praise. In short, the critic has taken to mean fault-finding, suggesting a disposition to stress errors or perfections. But not the case. The Times education demands more than a mere capricious attitude. It requires careful evaluation, a consideration of worth or value, and a judicious judgment.

There is no accounting for carte-blanche approval of all performances, save for a lack of judgment. Most important to criticism is a basis of knowledge and understanding on the part of the critic of what is being criticized. To this end, the critic is charged with the responsibility of possessing and demonstrating in his reviews working knowledge of the subject. In this case, I believe the subject is in need of serious criticism. The dictionary defines criticism as "the art of evaluating and analyzing with knowledge and propriety works of art or literature." Please, Daily Times, give your critics more knowledge and propriety in your criticism and less prattle.

Weird breed editor apologizes to world's greatest newspaper

If Mark Edgar and his "weird breed" editor had done their homework, they would have known, simply by reading the banner headline, that the Chicago Tribune is the world's greatest newspaper. The New York Times. What do they suppose the call letters Chicago's independent TV station, WGN, which is owned by the Tribune, stands for? Good Notes?

Madrigal dinner begins tradition at Student Center

By Nick Deen
Writer

SIU's first Madrigal Dinner Concert, a traditional celebration of the arrival of the Christmas season dating back to 16th and 17th century England, will be held Dec. 2 and 3 in the Student Center Ballrooms A, B, and C.

Some aspects of SIU's Madrigal dinner will differ from other universities, but the dinners follow the same traditional procedure for a Madrigal dinner.

Guests are seated at tables decorated with Christmas greenery and lighted with candles. The first feature of this is a collection of six or more Madrigal singers, who then sing their songs in a variety of styles. The second feature of this is a parade of traditionally dressed servers, singers and musicians in the high table.

With a second feature, the woody allen weekly shows join the table. There, the Lord of the Manor will be a tower in the evening sky and the guests will join in by singing and raising their glasses of wine.

The third feature will bring out the servers with a parade of food. The guests are served per table, after the meal, singing minstrel each has been sung by the guests.

A dessert of pecan pie pudding is called forward by the fourth feature. The fifth and final feature, after the meal, signals the beginning of a concert of Old English Christmas carols by the Madrigal singers.

The menu for SIU's Madrigal dinner includes a plate of beef teriyaki with rice, a casserole of beef teriyaki with rice, a plate of baked potatoes, green beans, and rice, and a casserole of beef teriyaki with rice. The singers are divided into groups, which feature a separate group each week.

Three trombones will play a variation of the recorder for the madrigal singers, who introduce a carol.

"We're going to try to unite the other schools," said Mike Blank, Program and Technical Director of the School of Music.

Madrigal dinners are being celebrated at nearly all colleges and universities across the country and have become a tradition at SIU. Indiana University was the first school to hold a Madrigal dinner in 1867. It was an event that featured 12 singers in formal gown and tenor solo singing a small gathering of guests. Today, Indiana University continues this tradition with Madrigal dinners that attract an audience of hundreds of people.

For the diners, Indiana University will be serving a variety of dishes and a selection of wines. Starters and appetizers will include a selection of cheeses and crackers, followed by a main course of meat and vegetables.
LeLouch tries Western touch

By Dave Erickson

The backhanded phrase "the old West will never be the same," is something to ponder in light of French director Claude LeLouch's new Western, "Another Man, Another Chance." LeLouch, who wrote and directed the film, gobs fun at his "outstanding" position in the filmmaking world. In this scene, the only one set in the present, LeLouch's character, James Cass, is told "What would a Frenchwoman know about the West?" when LeLouch that has been seen at some frontier photographs has "another chance" in the West.

The Western frontier is so exclusively American, both in historical fact and in the history of film, that a conscious director approaching a work in this genre needs to carefully avoid the depiction of every American-man and every American-woman. LeLouch has as good a shot at it as anyone. The fact that he can be seen at the end of the film, "Another Chance," is in the West, which LeLouch pulled the Western. With LeLouch's rugged independence the characters have developed are the ones that remain in the film, and LeLouch's style makes the film into a play when they come to terms with their love relationship.

"How old is your boy?" the recently widowed Genevieve (Jeanne Lefevre) asks the Cass character, David Williams, when they first meet.

"Old enough to learn what matters."

"What does matter?"

Lelouche 'oater' doesn't smell

"I assure... I guess if you're gonna spend your whole life with yourself, you might as well learn to be good company.

Like Jack Nicholson in "Missouri Breaks" Warren Beatty in "McCabe and Mrs. Miller", James Caan is the antithesis of the macho, never makes a mistake cowboy. That is not to denigrate John Wayne. He summed up a facet (for some, an ideal) of the American spirit in another time. But as viewer ambivalence grows and film... The expression character in new ways, the cinematic concept of the cowboy seems to be maturing.

Brown's character is also devoid of the frontier-woman stereotype. Her and her lover, who becomes her first husband, Frances Leevers, played by Francis Huster, bring a five-for today quality with them from Paris, where such an attitude was necessary amidst the hard-screws of the 1871 Fredericks blackball duro of the city.

Lelouch unfolds their story and that of Caan and first wife before Warren simultaneously, editing at times foreshadowing the eventual relationship between the two. After Bud is comments that "no cowboys could mean life for me without France", there's an immediate cut to Caan as he prepares to carry on life without his first wife.

Lelouch uses inobtrusive technique like that throughout the film, letting the dramatic action unfold within extremely long takes. The action and dialogue (so natural it's probably improved in parts) are often go through several changes in dramatic tension within a single shot. This gives the film a feeling of space that not only matches the wide open surroundings, but ren-forces the natural feel of the characters.

When things get heavy, Leisouche's light touch is still intact. Violence is implied, not shown, but not copped out of, either. In fact, a great deal of miming is expected to be built up at times by the absence or possession of it. People aren't dropning like horse apples as in a Western film, but when one down.
Lelouch uses complete silence to effectively punctuate it. This lack of action-ketchup-fests is

In fact, employing an anachronistic term for Westerns that was derived from horse feed, you could say this film is a refreshing "oater.
Cowboys are growing up and it's time to see them capable of loving babies, while still retaining the gas to have it out with the bad guys.

Henderson, who lost to James R. Thompson by a record of more than 1.3 million votes, said he was not opposed to a meeting and that such a meeting could conceivably result in a solution or agreement.

The report, written at a Scott's residence in Sinking Spring, by the former Secretary of State for the State of Illinois, and filed with the Illinois Supreme Court, says Howlett, who served as governor from 1965 to 1969, is entitled to a pension because he was not a member of the state's supreme court during the period in question.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Mediators worked for the third straight day Tuesday to bring union and industry bargainers together in an end-of-season industry contract talks.

They met throughout the day and night, the two sides in the dispute, said.

Chief mediator, Wayne L. Horwitz, and other members of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service team asked more information to the contract talks on Tuesday. They quickly won a smaller group of bargainers for a "contrary and continuous negotiation" of the two sides in the dispute.

A key issue in the talks is the miner's right to strike to drive the miners to the bargaining table.

The miners have not sat down to talk in the last few meetings.

Instead, they are meeting with their own group and the miners have been meeting with their own group in a separate room.

On Tuesday in Thursday's discussions was that the miners took their own stands and steered clear of the talks being held by the miners and industry negotiators.

A key union demand in the negotiations is for refinancing of funds that provide health and pension benefits to miners and their dependents.

The miners reportedly have offered a 10-year contract for the miners and the miners' association to run for re-election in 1979. The miners lost it.

Energy-saving a simple task, says design instructor

Most people just don’t know about the simple measures they can take to save on their energy bills, according to an SIU energy saver.

Technicians weatherize homes against the winds and sleet-temperatures, he says. The average home is generally inexpensive when compared to fuel and utility costs, says Richard Archer, a senior in civil engineering.

Archer says he has worked since 1989 on alternative energy sources and energy conservation. He believes people are becoming more energy-conscious, but they need to learn how to use energy more efficiently.

What’s the first rule in cutting energy costs? Archer says: “Buy a caulking gun and a tube of caulk and seal up all the cracks—around windows, doors, the chimney, where the house meets the foundation, anywhere.”

The average home has enough cracks to equal a two-foot-square hole in the wall, Archer says.

“Keep the baseboard heat running,” said Archer. “The baseboard is your biggest heater and the most important thing in keeping warm air inside.”

“Keep your attic sealed, and make sure the attic area is against the walls,” he said.

“Almost any window can be insulated,” he said. “Many are interested in a wood or aluminum frame.”

“Because of the use of windows and insulants, the law requires that there be no fundamental right to choose to have a childbirth at home with the assistance of qualified people.”

Mrs. Brandt to light tree

SU’s annual Festival of Holidays tree lighting ceremony will be held from 4 to 6 p.m., Dec. 7, in front of the Student Center and against the Student Center East, with the Student Center East as the main stage. After lighting the Christmas tree, Esther Brandt, wife of President Warren Brandt, will lead everyone inside the Old Main to a parade of the holiday and holiday cookies.

Students and staff are invited to attend the ceremony.

Programs for young important to northeast side

By Michael Gonzales

This is the third in a series of articles dealing with Carbondale's northeast side.

For seven years as director of the Youth Program, Ms. Sumner has taught young people just how important that program is to the northeast side of Carbondale.

Sumner, who in 18 years of living in the northeast side has also taught her that the Youth Program is not the most important social program offered in the community.

Realizing that several social programs are offered in Carbondale, Ms. Sumner listed the four major social programs that serve those essential to the residents of northeast Carbondale.

The Health Program, Child Care, Housing and Renewal and the Youth Program are the four social programs that serve those essential to the residents of northeast Carbondale.

Sumner believes, and she is not alone, that healthy community development is essential to northeast Carbondale.

"And that is the order I would place them in allocating funds," Ms. Sumner said.

These four programs, Ms. Sumner believes, should be maintained through city funding should federal funding stop.

If the health program is terminated, "a lot of programs in the northeast side, who don't have insurance to go to the Carbondale Clinic, would sit at home sick, and we home remedial.

She said.

The Health Program offers routine medical exams, family planning, immunization, and speech and dental care. A parent education clinic is also offered. It is under the direction of a full-time dentist. The unit is staffed by a dental hygienist and other dental assistants.

A person's health comes first," Ms. Sumner said.

"There is a need here because a lot of uninsured mothers are at the hospital. Many children, under five, have no money left from their check if they had to pay a babysitter," Ms. Sumner said. "Many mothers would rather work than live on welfare," she added.

Child Care is designed to provide adequate care and supervision in an educationally enriched setting. One pays Child Care fees on a sliding scale:

The northeast side is the blighted area. Many houses need rehabilitation. Without Housing and Renewal, a home would go down and many people wouldn't be able to rehabilitate a house they struggled to work for," Ms. Sumner said.

Housing and Renewal offers services to home owners through rehabilitation grants and loans and tax decrement grants, as well as other similar services.

It is designed to assist in the elimination and prevention of the spread of slums and blighted or deteriorating areas.

"The greatest need exists in the northeast area," said Jane Hughes, director of the Department of Renewal and Housing, "because the northeast neighborhood has the greatest concentration of lower income people and deteriorating houses."

"If youth of this neighborhood have nothing to do, you'll find that the drug problem and delinquency will increase," Ms. Sumner said.

The Youth Program is designed to provide a variety of wholesome, easily accessible activities for youth at low and moderate income levels.

"This program's main goal is to develop leadership qualities in young people," said Ms. Sumner, adding, "a great problem will be created for the community if the program is eliminated."

Herb Walker, director of United Social Services and Youth programs at the Haynes Center, said "Although it has been proposed that several social programs be cut for the next fiscal year, there is a possibility that discretionary funds will be received from HUD (Housing and Urban Development)."

"The only problem," Walker said, "is that we don't know until 1 or 3 months after the next fiscal year begins if the discretionary funds will be provided."
Communicators hold seminar

The Association of First World Communicators will sponsor a seminar from 3 to 5 p.m. Friday in the Communications Building lobby.

The seminar, "The Art of Communication," is designed to provide an exposure to all areas of communication. Debra Wright, acting president of the First World Communicators, said Wright is in radio-TV, and the seminar would be "in with the grail of the organization as a whole. "We organized to bring black students in communications and fine arts together. "Our purpose is to help people realize that music, art, journalism, theater, radio and television are all a part of communication."

The seminar will include displays by black students in photography and interior design, as well as slide presentations on blacks in communications.

Presentations will also be made by speakers of Black America, a syndicated radio program; Blacks Impressions, a student operated radio show; the Black Fire Dancers and the Black Open Lab Theater Group.

Wright said black students in communications would also present papers relating to the problems of blacks in the communications industry, as well as communications in an Afro-American culture.

She said the group would also like to bring in speakers from other areas and hopes to make the seminar an annual event.

Possibility of male birth control pill from plants foreseeable in future

CHICAGO (AP) — A group of scientists at the University of Illinois say they have discovered at least two types of plants that may hold the key to male birth control pills or male birth control. The World Health Organization scientists say.

Testing in cooperation with funders from the World Health Organization (WHO) will begin next year, but final results may be up to 15 years away.

The group at the University of Illinois medical school has isolated 30 of the most promising plants from an original group of 2,000. Scientists at five other research centers around the world will help test the plants for their male contraceptive properties beginning in January.

WHO officials say they expect Chicago this week to complete details of the program.

SIU foreign students spend holiday touring, discovering U.S. culture

Mr. Steve Goodman

Maryville, Ill.

Many SIU foreign students, unable to enjoy a Thanksgiving at home, took a two-week tour of a more American culture in the South and in small towns surrounding Carbondale.

Two buses carrying 83 students from 13 different countries returned from a trip through various parts of Florida and the Southeast.

The trip was sponsored by the International Student Office and students of the Department of Sociology, Anthropology, and Economics.

"It was a great learning experience," said Kelly Laison, one of the trip's supervisors. "Students were allowed to learn about the United States, but also experience different cultures in the country, too. There was a lot of interaction and a little fun, too."

The bus stopped overnight in major cities like New Orleans, Orlando, Biloxi, Memphis, Jacksonville, and Atlanta. There were plenty of excursions, or so the students say.

The students were especially impressed with the technology, especially that which was seen at Gulfstream Park in Florida. "The students were so happy to see the race track," Laison said.

Other foreign students on the trip chose instead to spend Thanksgiving week with American families under the "family host" program.

Under the "family host" program, arrangements were made for foreign students to stay with American families in the surrounding Carbondale area during Thanksgiving vacations.

About 30 families signed up for the "family host" program, according to Assistant Professor Jennifer Seybert, who helped organize the project.

The idea was to give foreign students a taste of an American family, Laison said. "It increases one's awareness of the international world that we live in."

Deadline is Dec. 31.

London museum curator finds job has its difficulties

By Scott Ellis

The oldest surviving locomotive, the first models of the atom, Galileo's telescope and a "superconducting superconducting" resonance spectrometer" can be found in a city's museum. But the London Science Museum.

Robert G. A. Anderson, who heads the London Science Museum's Chemistry Department, recently talked about the difficulties and challenges he faces in his curator's job. "There is more to a curator's job than just being a museum curator. Anderson said. Anderson, a chemical physicist from London who received his Ph.D. from Oxford, described the difficulties and challenges he faces in his curator's job. "It's difficult for the museum to keep up with and to gain the modern world's ever-increasing array of technological and scientific gear," Anderson said. He added that the museum gets much of its materials as donations from universities or by chance discovery.

"But it's getting increasingly difficult to get material from universities because they're starting to set up their own museums," Anderson said. He also said that collecting chemistry artifacts is difficult throughout history because "no one was terribly interested in displaying chemistry materials." The area differs from an area like astronomy, where you can deal with something beautiful like the planets," Anderson said.

Anderson said the London Science Museum is located in South Kensington area of the city, near Priscilla Winkler at 905-3741 or 549-7355, Extension 365

Pope, Communist leader seek improved relations

VATICAN CITY (AP) - Pope Paul VI and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev, the first Polish Communist Party chief in visit to a pope, pledged themselves Thursday to church-state concord as a heavily Roman Catholic Poland and a common purpose.

"We are certain that we can assure today that the church is ready to offer to the Polish society a constructive contribution," the pope said in a formal speech during his audience with the leader.

"The Catholic church does not ask privileges or the right to be as powerful and the possibility of carrying out without hindrance the functions which are proper to it," the pope said. Brezhnev responded: "In the spirit of traditional Polish tolerance, we are promoting a state in which there is no conflict between church and state. What we want is to work together for the realization of common national objectives." At a news conference after the meeting, Brezhnev said that "constructive contacts" between the government and the church would be improved, but he characterized these differences as the kind that can be found within any family.

Fire does $10,000 damage

A fire in a two-story frame house in southeast Carbondale caused about $10,000 damage, according to fireman report. The fire was reported at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday to a report of a fire at 615 N. Brush. The fire took about three hours to extinguish, the cause of the fire is still unknown, firemen said. The house was occupied by Roger Walsich.

Medical emergency workshop discusses self-help techniques

By Chris Morehead
Realt Writer

Little Bonnie was waving to her friend from the third floor balcony of her parent's apartment. Accidently, the string became tangled and pulled over the balcony and towards her head.

Her mother, noticing the string wrapped around the child's neck, called out. Before calling a doctor or an ambulance, Bonnie's mother recalled that she had learned CPR during a workshop at the Family Practice Center.

At 6 p.m. Thursday, a two-hour workshop on medical emergencies and what you can do Wednesday night at the Family Practice Center, 404 W. Main. An intern at the center, he was and evaluating medical emergencies, learning to become a medical reporter of emergencies, developing self-help skills and understanding limitations in treatment.

Arthur said, "An emergency is anything that scares you and your family. He said with a face marked with common sense, acting in an emergency can help to calm you as an ABC."

The ABC's of life support consists of: Airway, Breathing and Heartbeat and then apply chest compressions after a cardiac arrest (CPR). Arthur said this, and he was explaining the dangers of maintaining the victim's airway, giving refreshments and factual information by external cardiac compression.

A victim who can walk after the emergency and emergency treatment would be taken to the hospital. Arthur said, "If an ambulance is needed only when the victim is in an ambulance, the doctor should be called because of the possibility of broken bones. If it is necessary to move an unconscious victim, he said the victim would be laid off.

He said if the doctor is called, the doctor should be given a clear description of the accident and the victim. If the emergency involves a head injury, the doctor should be told if involuntary movement, numbness and vomiting are present. The doctor should also be told if the patient is of different ages. Arthur said difference in age is an indication of nerve paralysis.

Aside from head injuries, Arthur discussed the prevention of medical emergencies, emergency treatment for burns, accidental poisoning and cardiac arrest.

He said to avoid accidental poisoning and overdose, dangerous pills and liquids should never be taken. He said to avoid accidental over or overdose of medication and to prevent poisoning.

The workshop is free and open to the public.

Arthur said he could not stress the importance of learning CPR. He said to avoid the risk of death in all of its medical emergencies be discussed. He said the worst emergency, he said he prevented by CPR. To Arthur the worst regret is "that person who is in the wrong time and a person reacts too slow or too late."

Conference to study tourism

Community backs recall campaign

CASLINVILLE, Mich. (AP) — The City Council had failed to fix up the business district and it didn't enforce the local ordinances on weeds, littered cars and stray dogs. Charged Lee Emig as he launched a recall campaign in this Lake Hoseswee community of 821. The voters apparently agreed. On Monday, they recalled the village council president and four councilmen, leaving two left to serve.

There was no word on whether Bill Thomas Jr., who escaped recall by the narrow margin, and Norton, who was not targeted in the campaign, think they can carry out the voters' wishes.

Women swimmers to open season

Sandy Vandermark of St. Louis, SIU's women's swimming coach who swam for Germany in the 1968 Olympics, compiled in numerous intercollegiate competitions for East Germany, should be accustomed to ensure situations in the air. She will prove, however, in a case of birds before a meet.

The meet gets underway at 10 a.m., with the 400-yard medley relay, the first event. Missouri State, Indiana State and Indiana University will provide the opposition for the Saluki swimmers.

The Saluki women will be somewhat more competitive in individual swimming events, two relays and one and three-meter diving events.

Aidan Brown, women's swimming head coach, said the Saluki swimmers are confident, but the squad has been reduced to 12 members—nine swimmers and three divers.

Three swimmers from each team will be entered in the opening races—three individual events. Each swimmer can swim only one individual event and one relay.

Many of Renner's swimmers will compete in the maximum five events and some will have to swim back-to-back races. Renner said that although the three departures account for five points of the squad, she feels confident that her team can win the meet. "The girls know they will have to do their best, but they have accepted their role well," Renner said.

I'm really proud of them. I think we're a family now." said Renner. Sandy Vandermark, Teri Winke, Anne Gutick and Heidi Eisrath are the Saluki's who may have to swim five events, including the 400 individual medley, 50 freestyle and 100 butterfly. Style Crinkle, Mary Crinkle, Nancy Schenka and Jan Miller will also compete in the swimming events, while the divers will be Julia Wyche, Penny Hoffman and Amy Will.

After reviewing the times submitted by the four final teams, Renner said the meet could be very close. She said Missouri should provide the strongest competition for her team, but the other three teams also have some good individual swimmers.

"Missouri has much more depth than we do," Renner said. "I just received their times Wednesday night and they appear to be the best of the other teams. It will be really tough to win some of the events. There could be two winners in the last event (the 400 freestyle relay)."

The women swimmers' meet will consist of nine events. Missouri State in the meet before," said the final-year Brunette, St. Louis State, "Missouri should be able to win the meet, the Saluki swimmers. Senior Mindy McCurdy will be counted on to score points for the women's swimming team in the Saluki Invitational Saturday at the Recreation Building pool. The meet will start at 10 a.m.

Women cagers to play two; J.V-St. Louis game canceled

The women's basketball team will meet its men's counterparts this week. Central Missouri will provide the opposition at 6 p.m. Friday in Grove and the cagers will battle in St. Louis Saturday in a 5 p.m. game at the Arena.

The junior varsity contest against St. Louis originally scheduled for Friday night has been canceled. The game will open their season Saturday against Indiana State at 1 p.m. in the Arena.

The varsity game will mark the return of Coach Bob of the Lions, who was the basketball coach last year.
Swimmers to meet Wisconsin
By George Cozech 890-441

The Ball State men's team will go against the Badgers of Wisconsin, who finished 21st in the nation last season. The meet is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. Friday at the Recreation Building pool. It will be a dual meet competition this season, and the Badgers lost to Iowa. The meet could prove to be one of the closest of the season.

"The only event that Wisconsin is way advantage is the breaststroke," Coach Bob Steele said. "Wisconsin swims 17 events with three people in each event, and we are down 1.8 seconds apart. The way I figure it, their chance of winning the events and we can win 10 according to the times of previous meets."

"But in the 200 breast, Wisconsin wins, but in the 200 freestyle I think we can improve. He swam just super in the individual medley. I just hope that he gets his routine together."

The divers who have won 10 points against the Crimson Tide two weeks ago, will also get a lot of competition from Wisconsin, Steele said.

"Their 1-meter diving scores were just three points better than ours, and their Smetler scores were just one better," Steele said. "They are good, he is good." The meet should go down to the last relay in two years ago when the Badgers beat Wisconsin in a dual meet at 210. Steele said.

"We are prepared to swim faster in the relay, but Wisconsin has the edge in the individual medley relay (both 400 yards). They are about three seconds ahead of us in that relay, but I think they should go right down to the wire."

Right after the meet, the team will leave for Bloomington to compete in the Illinois State Relays on Saturday.

Steele said that Iowa will be the team's toughest foe.

"This is the toughest breaststroke back meet weekend we've had since two years ago. Wisconsin and Connecticut," Steele said. "You'd have to say that we are in for the same close meet when we go against Iowa. When they beat Wisconsin, they showed for the meet."

"Sharing for a meet, Steele said, is like "throwing a handpicked pitcher against a seasoned-battling team. It can help you now, but it can hurt you or season's end."

"Iowa is the team to beat at the relays. They have five foreign-born this year and a new diver who have turned their program around over

Men gymnasts to compete in Ball State All-Around meet

By Steve Converse 890-0442

The men's gymnastics team travels to Muncie, Ind. Friday to compete in the Ball State All-Around Classic against some of the finest schools in the nation.

"But we are looking more at our meets in Nebraska, Louisiana State and down South," Coach John Davies said. Davies said that Illinois and Indiana State are three of the three poorest teams that any university from our all-around meet.

Four all-around gymnasts that will compete are sophomore David Tipton in pommel, junior Bob Adams and junior Scott McHone.

"I'm starting a little bit better this year," Meade said. "He seems to come around good but this year he has started improving each week.

"I am improving with each meet," Meade said of the younger Adams. The younger Adams is trying to regain his old form and be the kind of gymnast.

"Adams is having trouble with a shoulder injury," Meade said. "It is something that we will have to work on all season."

The meet will feature an Olympic format of competition and the action will begin at 8 p.m. Friday. Ball State and Indiana are scheduled to go under way at noon Saturday. Ball State Coach Paul Mayer said the meet will give the gymnasts a bit of a break over Christmas break.

"It's getting to be an exciting meet because of our format," Mayer said. "This is the format that we are to use in the 1978 NCAA meet in Seattle.

"It will give the gymnasts an opportunity to see what they will be expected to do through later in the season. It also gives the coaches a look at the team that will most likely face in the finals."

"Meade hopes that many of the Salukis will be in those finals and... working with his gymnasts on their routines to help raise their scores.

"They have revamped some of their exercises," he said.

Yankee executive Paul resigns post

NEW YORK AP—Game Paul, a veteran baseball executive who helped rebuild the New York Yankees into world champions, resigned Thursday as president of the American League club.

It is expected that the 58-year-old Paul, who started his baseball career more than a half-century ago as a batboy for the minor league Lowell (Mass.) club, will ultimately become head of the Meade Funeral Home, the organization he left in January 1972 to become president and part owner of the Yankees.

You can spend a lot of money on a traditional dreadnaught guitar. Or you can spend a whole lot less for a Takamine that looks and sounds just as good. Takamine beys the same choice ebony, mahagony, rosewood and spruce that other guitar makers buy. But Takamine matches it perfectly, prepares and assembles these woods with the unique Takamine standard. And, Takamine uses the bracing patterns and construction methods that have been proven in years of use. A Takamine guitar has all the elegance and hand-built quality of the finest traditional guitars. Because Takamine builds their guitars this way, you get the full, rich tone and the playing accuracy of a much more costly guitar. We have even added subtle refinements like an adjustable tension rod to the traditional design. Adminton squad to face EIU as Wigglesworth makes debut

By George Coshak

The season is over and the Saluki football players will attempt to fulfill their academic obligations for the final few weeks. But for Coach Dempsey and the rest of his coaching staff, the new season is just beginning.

The team has but seven starters, and the coaches have to decide what roles they will have to fill. Dempsey said that the team will want to concentrate on getting together an offensive line.

"We have to have a good recruiting class, and we will have to block better, if we are going to win," Dempsey said. "We have to have some players there in December, January and February. The first time that a player can sign a letter of intent is in mid-February.

"We have been recruiting, and the coaches will be looking at the top high school prospects—but not just in Illinois, but all over the country. "We are trying to find the very best players," Dempsey said, "so we can build for the future. Last season we had a good recruiting class, but one of the main qualities they look for is how bad someone wants to play.

"We're looking for physical-type people. We need players that are willing to make sacrifices," Dempsey said. "We need players that are willing to give us the best defense they can.

"The biggest thing that we want to do this season is to get our team ready for the next season. We need to get our team ready to play the best teams in the State. We need to get our team ready to play the best teams in the Nation."

"We have to have a good defensive line and a good offensive line, and we have to have a good running game," Dempsey said. "We have to have a good passing game, and we have to have a good kicking game."

If a prediction would be based on history, the Roosevelt Lakers have no chance of winning Saturday when they play SIU in SIU’s home basketball opener at the Arena.

The Salukis have posted 13 straight opening home wins at home, moving into the Arena in 1984.

Although the game will be SIU’s first game, the 7:35 p.m. tilt will be Roosevelt’s fifth contest. The Lakers have lost to MacMurray, to Lake Forest, 77-49, Wisconsin Superior and Lewis-Clark State to play Greenivu College Friday.

“We’ll have played five games coming in and that will be an advantage,” Saluki Coach Paul Lambert said. “This is the latest we’ve ever started.”

Lambert, who has posted a 210-150 record in 14 years of collegiate coaching, says the Salukis will have to make the transition from practice to game conditions in order to have success.

“In practice we try to simulate the conditions of a game,” he explained.

“We try to get our techniques as close to game conditions as possible, but it’s impossible to simulate everything. The competitive situation is different and most players will play better in game conditions.”

The Salukis will attempt to hold a man-to-man defense, but will also switch defenses throughout the game, according to Lambert.

“We’ll play some man-to-man, some zone, the three-quarter zone and play some trap zones,” Lambert said.

A riding time point is awarded if a wrestler can gain control of his opponent for more than a minute during a match.

At 132 pounds, Saluki senior Bill Ramaden lost 1-5 to Doug Duell. Duell dominated the match from the outset as he scored takedowns and gained the advantage.

Cowboy Roger Shrock scored the meet’s first pin by defeating Saluki Jon Starr after 5:08 of the six-minute match had elapsed. Roberts led only, 2-0, after one period, but dominated the match in the final two periods, as he took Starr down seven times. He led 2-0 when he pinned Starr.

Saluki Paul Hibbs, a sophomore from Mount Pleasant, Mich., fought Cowboy Lee Ray Smith to a stalemate before falling 1-4. Hibbs exhibited good strength against the Cowboy who placed fifth in the NCAA meet last year.

Hibbs and Smith were tied, 0-0, in the second period when Hibbs escaped for the match’s first point. Smith rallied for the victory in the third period.

as he escaped Hibbs for one point and then scored a takedown and a reversal. Smith was awarded a point for riding time.

At 150 pounds, Saluki Dale Eggert was tied, 3-3, with Cowboy freshman Ricky Stewart before losing, scored a takedown and a 3-2 victory. Martin scored 12 straight points to close the match.

Dave Schultz downed Russ Zinkal, 13-3, for the Cowboys’ sixth straight win in a 150-pound match. Schultz scored four straight points to close the match.

Cowboy Paul Martin scored the meet’s second point by beating Saluki Dennis Shamaker. Martin pinned Shamaker in 1 minute, 24 seconds.

Darryl Monasmith pinned Saluki freshman Tim Jensen at 2-0 in the second period for the Cowboys’ seventh straight pin of the day.

In the 190-pound match, Cowboy Eric Wais beat Saluki junior Tim Vizzi, 17-6.

Fan apathy seen in amateur athletics competition

Secrets play an important role in the American way of life. Keeping a secret displaces trust between the parties involved. There must be mutual trust in the Nixon Administration.

If keeping a secret displaces character, then the entire country should take a bow because the recently-completed Intercontinental Cup Games were probably the best kept sports secret of modern times. In case you still haven’t heard, the U.S. finished second in the amateur baseball competition held in Manila, Nicaragua.

Students at SIU may have been more aware than anyone of the event since Itchy Jones coached the U.S. team and one of his players was Saluki ‘78er Steve Streb. If anyone relied on the wire services to supply daily results they had to be disappointed because there were no scores to be found. Nixon would have loved that type of press coverage of Watergate.

South Korea was no fan apathy in Nicaragua. Amateur baseball in other countries is much more popular than it is in the U.S. and most countries do not have professional baseball. While a second-place finish for the U.S. does not mean much to Americans, it is a championship for South Korea is enough to initiate a national celebration.

Right after Korea beat us in the finals (1-0), they were on the phone to report the results,” Jones said. “I guess the U.S. made famous in regards to baseball. It’s understandable because for most countries that competition is their major leagues.

“I doubt if the United States will ever support amateur baseball on an international level. People are never going to get too excited about amateur baseball when they can support the big leagues.”

One secret toward international baseball competition extends to other amateur sports as well. The Olympic Games are the so-called spectacle of amateur sports and draw much support throughout the world. But while most Americans look at the Olympics as something that happens every four years, in other countries they are recognized for what they are the culmination of years of training and sacrifice.

The American people are a funny breed during the Olympics. When that arch-ignites the Olympic flame and suddenly acquire an interest in sports that they may have never heard of before. The athletes who have been preparing for years to compete may have their lives begin to conglomerate themselves with the pressure of their own pole vault and the 100-meter dash.

People who don’t know what a pole vault is, might be more interested in a U.S. gymnastics team.

This support of the athletes who represent our country is admirable, but where is the support when the athletes practice fields instead of the stadium? In other countries amateur athletes are recognized for their pre-Olympic efforts and they are supported during all types of competitions.

Amateur sports also get better monetary support in other countries. College eligibility marks the end of the line for amateur athletes in the U.S., unless they have a professional sport. A women’s basketball player has no place to go after college since there is no national league for women. If a women’s basketball player wants to play professional, she must support herself. In many Eastern European countries four athletes are supported for as long as they wish to remain active, and they are in the same holds for the other branches of amateur athletics, they must support herself. In many Eastern European countries four athletes are supported for as long as they wish to remain active, and they are in the same boat.

In the same boat are amateur athletes in this country prior to the start of the Olympic Games, they are also left hanging in the air for popularing in athletics when other countries have gone to the Olympics.
