Nabisco bought for over $25 billion

NEW YORK (UPI) — Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. won a vitriolic $25 billion bidding contest for RJR Nabisco Inc. because the food and tobacco giant's board was "heilbent" on keeping a management group from controlling the company, a source close to the negotiations said Thursday.

After Gramatic dealmaking that ended late Wednesday, RJR Nabisco's board entered into a record merger agreement worth $109 a share, or $25.07 billion, with buyout specialists Kohlberg Kravis despite receiving a bid from the management group that the board called "substantially equivalent."

Kohlberg Kravis, which also owns Beatrice Foods, said it would complete the transaction taking Atlanta-based RJR Nabisco private by mid-January.

To help finance the largest corporate takeover in history, a spokeswoman said the leveraged buyout firm plans to sell some of RJR Nabisco's famous brand names, which include Camel, Winston and Salem cigarettes, Ritz and Triscuit crackers, Oreo cookies, and Baby Ruth, Butterfinger and Lifesavers candies.

The stock of RJR Nabisco, the nation's 19th largest industrial company with 1987 revenues of $15.8 billion, was the most active on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange in mid-afternoon trading, down by 62.5 cents to $92.375 a share.

The RJR Nabisco board did not say why Kohlberg Kravis walked away with RJR Nabisco instead of the management group, but it could come down to emotions.

"Our bid was higher," said a source within the management group comprising RJR Nabisco senior managers, Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. and Salomon Brothers Inc.

"But the board was heilbent

A Chinese journalist visiting campus is no stranger to world events. He attended the first Geneva Conference in 1954.

Duan Liancheng will speak at 1 p.m. today at the University Museum on "Reforms in China and Future Implications."

"I attended the Korean Armistice Negotiations in Korea from July 1951 to July 1953. They talked about how to bring about cease fire. After the cease fire I left for Geneva, Switzerland," Liancheng said.

He attended the University of Missouri School of Journalism for one year and then moved to Chicago where he attended lectures as an unofficial student at the University of Chicago and also worked at various places including a Chinese restaurant.

Soviet parliament paves way for new legislature

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet parliament adopted proposals Thursday paving the way for multi-candidate elections and a new legislature with broader authority, moves considered crucial to Mikhail Gorbachev's political reforms.

But in an unprecedented display of dissent, five deputies voted "no" and 27 abstained in balloting on one aspect of the government reorganization program involving amendments to the 1977 constitution, which were approved.

Supreme Soviet deputies at the ornate Palace of Congresses in the Kremlin broke into polite applause at the end of Thursday's voting, which approved a plan aimed at partly redistributing power from the Communist Party to elected legislative bodies.

Gorbachev smiled broadly, saying the new measures gave the green light to radical transformation of the political system. He said the country now must turn to solving the pressing problems of ethnic unrest and nationalist fervor that have led to rioting and demonstrations in several republics.

"The Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. adopted two important laws, one on elections and the other on changes to the national constitution, by an absolute majority of votes," the official Tass news agency said. "The laws clear the way to radical reform in the Soviet political system."

On 36 changes to the constitution, Tass said 1,344 deputies — many wearing colorful national costumes from the far-flung Soviet republics — cast yes votes on constitutional reforms.

But five deputies voted no and 27 abstained. Diplomats said most dissenting votes were from the Baltic republics — Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, which have criticized some of the amendments dealing with

Thousands still missing after cyclone

DHAKA, Bangladesh (UPI) — Fierce winds and rain Thursday stymied search operations for thousands of people missing after the most powerful cyclone in a century battered much of Bangladesh and parts of eastern India, claiming at least 576 lives, officials said.

In the eastern Indian city of Calcutta, shipping officials said the Indian navy rescued 17 crew of the Singapore-based M.V. Pumori, but reported two sailors still were missing from the container ship that sank during Tuesday night's disaster.

Six crew members from the East German ship Neubrandurg were plucked from the mouth of the Pussur River Thursday, but the fate of the vessel remained a mystery, officials said. Another ship, the Greek-registered M.P. Golden Condor, carrying 21,000 tons of wheat, reported Thursday that it was safe after initially being listed as missing, they said.

Bangladeshi President Hussain Muhammad Ershad arrived by helicopter to the city of Khulna Thursday and was driven to other affected areas nearby before returning to Khulna to supervise relief efforts.

Torrential rains and 110 mph winds powered widespread floods and destroyed homes and crops, and downed electricity and telephone lines across the Indian state of West Bengal and many areas of Bangladesh, 90 percent of which lies less than 30 feet above sea level.

Bangladesh officials said at least 475 people died and at least 1,100 others were missing.

Mexico's new president called illegitimate

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Carlos Salinas de Gortari took the oath of office Thursday to become Mexico's 61st president with the opposition denouncing his government as illegitimate and the nation's second largest party boycotting the ceremony in protest. # Bangles mix lyrics, music, 'Everything'

By Dave Miller
Staff Writer

At first glance, it is easy to dismiss the Bangles as four more pretty faces on the pop scene which lately has been dominated more by models than singers. But that would be a mistake.

As the Bangles demonstrated with their last album, the multi-platinum "Different Light," these four children of the '70s have developed a unique sound, mixing a '60s feel with an '80s edge. This combination was good enough to give the band five hit singles.

Well, three years have passed since "Different Light," giving the group time to perfect "Everything," their new album.

The Bangles' fourth offering is an irresistible blend of impeccable harmonies and carefree lyrics. "Everything" shows the California girls are in for a long stay at the top of the charts, provided they remain together. With the band members making a conscious effort to allow each other to write and perform their own songs, as well as to collaborate, the threat of a breakup is distant.

But, no matter how hard the group tries to give equal billing to each other, vocalist and rhythm guitarist Susanna Hoffs will always be at the forefront. Her radiant looks and diminutive size virtually guarantee that.

However, Hoffs can maintain the attention she receives with her musical talent.

"In Your Room," the first single from the album, typifies what Hoffs does best. The cherubic singer innocently delivers lyrics which hint at things that would make an angel blush.

Her distinctive voice shines through on "Eternal Flame," a sure hit, and a catchy chorus in "I'll Set You Free" could give Hoffs three trips into the Top 10.

Lead guitarist Vicki Peterson adds a wild streak to the group and the best song on the album — "Crash and Burn." Its whirling tempo and sudden stop terrifically captures the desire to jump in a car and escape. However, Peterson shows that such a trip eventually spins out of control.

Peterson's songs contain a mystic aura and have a harder edge to them. In "Bell Jar," the racing drum beat contrasts with her gliding vocals to produce an intoxicating effect. The group is at its best when it chimes in to sing "Bell Jar" in the chorus.

Vicki's sister, Debbi, provides the tight, controlled drumming that most of the band's material demands. Occasionally she is able to loosen up during songs penned by her sister, which place more emphasis on the guitar and drums as in the psychedelic "Watching the Sky."

Veterans encounter educational barriers

LESS THAN three weeks after being honored for their services on Veterans Day, some veterans in Illinois are encountering barriers on the road to higher education.

When the Illinois State Scholarship Commission renewed its policy for the Monetary Award Program, it seems board members forgot about the veterans. This is nothing new; veterans have been neglected before.

THE REVISION required that veterans use funds provided the Illinois Veterans' Grant Program toward education before they are allowed to use MAP money. This is where the problem lies.

MAP money is restricted to undergraduate work and, by the time veterans use all their IVGP funds, most of them are ready for graduate work and are unable to use MAP money.

THE SNUB WAS not intentional. Board members merely overlooked the needs of veterans. But instead of taking strides to correct the mistake — and it is a mistake — board members are treating the problem as if it were an undesirable side effect.

Robert Clements, director of agency relations for the ISSC, said in order to change the policy, veterans must follow a "procedure to express disagreement" with ISSC rules.

THE PROCEDURE is simple. Those who disagree with the policy must send the ISSC letters stating their disagreement. In other words, board members will not recognize a problem unless they are shown the problem.

We suggest that those who disagree with the policy send letters to the ISSC stating their disagreement. We also suggest not just veterans write the ISSC, but also students, teachers, faculty and anyone else who can write a letter saying, "I disagree."

IF THE ISSC is swamped with letters saying "I disagree," maybe then board members will recognize the mistake and take strides to correct it.

Veterans have long been neglected, and only recently have we begun to recognize their contributions through books, films, television and the dedication of monuments. Let us not take strides backwards in Illinois by denying veterans access to higher education.

Opinions from elsewhere

Chicago Tribune

Ecological purists are trying to convince the public and three government investigating panels that the blackened, blighted state of Yellowstone National Park is just a fascinating part of nature's cycle of death and rejuvenation. Winter's snows will leach nutrients from the ashes into the soil and with spring, carpets of new grasses and flowers will appear to nourish an abundance of wildlife. Tourists will cherish the new Yellowstone as they did the old. And the National Park Service's let-it-burn policy will be vindicated. But it won't work. Those who loved the old Yellowstone ... aren't likely to be satisfied ... by the assurances that the famous lodgepole pines will be fully regrown in just 100 years.

Trimming trees by committee good for comedy, not students

Here's some new material for Henny Youngman. Q: How many SIU administrators, faculty, physical plant employees and outside contractors does it take to cut down a tree? A: Enough to squander as much precious time and money as possible—it's not a funny joke.

Yes, Thompson Woods is in dire need of a trim. As a student I am concerned about a dead tree or branch conking me on my head as I walk through the woods. But a committee to decide which trees to cut down, to me, is laughable if not wasteful.

The administrative uppity-ups here seem to be concerned about the fiscal crunch in education. They have combated this by cutting back faculty and resources in almost every college and department as well as imposing a tuition increase. But, I don't think the administration has cut back enough.

or partly visible administrative or faculty type people watching a person mark a tree for cutting. At least five or six of these people were not vital in order to get the job done. If these people have nothing better to do than watch someone spray paint a tree, then their positions should be re-evaluated and cut if necessary.

And secondly, why do we need a private contractor to cut down these trees? The physical plant budget seems to have enough money to waste on a $20,000 sidewalk sweeper. I'm sure Doc Dougherty could find money for a few chainsaws to arm a battalion of groundskeepers to attack the trees.

This letter is not about cutting down trees. It is about the fiscal irresponsibility the SIU administration exhibits with what little money it does have. Whether the money comes from the taxpayers or students, the SIU administration can find a way to waste it. Do we really need a $20,000 sidewalk sweeper in hard times like these? Does the SIU-C president, as well as the SIU chancellor, need a pay increase in hard times like these—even if they deserve one? I personally don't think so.

This issue of wasting money has been on my mind for a long time, but the hullabaloo over the trees pushed me over the edge. If this letter sounds cynical or sarcastic, all I can say is that it is hard not to be cynical or sarcastic after being here three years and seeing things like paying millions of dollars to a search firm to find a new University president and then one is found among our current army of administrators.

If I were a state legislator, I wouldn't give one more dime to higher education — even though it really needs it — until higher education can be responsible with the money it has. I'm sure this type of waste is costing millions at other Illinois public universities. —Edward Rahe, senior, journalism.

Higher tuition kicks off new year; SIU-C pricing itself out of market

Another year, another tuition raise. What a way to kick-off the school year. With the 18.3 percent increase in tuition next year, international students will have to pay in the vicinity of $2,700 per semester to attend SIU-C (an increase of about 42 percent for the past two years.)

Last night, I called home to ask for more money so that I can survive through another "inflation." When I told my dad that there might be an increase of 18.3 percent in our tuition, "Sir," do you know what my old man said? "Son, although our country's economy has been doing quite well for the past two years, with an average growth rate of about 8.5 percent, my two annual increments still can't pay for the 18.3 percent increase in tuition."

"Sir," if you know a bit about world economics, you'll realize that not many of the developing countries can enjoy this kind of growth rate. In fact, a lot of countries, where most of the international students come from, are either facing recession or small growth rate?

This means that their parents will not have the privilege of having an annual increment. So, where can they find the extra money to fill your pockets.

Well, this seems like a family problem to you, but, "Sir," if you have so-called "helicopter vision," you'll notice that our family problem will eventually become yours.

Simple logic, (I learned from GEC 208,) if you have two same quality products and they are priced differently, ask your kids which one will they buy? By the way, I just stopped two of my friends from buying your product.

Again, if you extend your "helicopter vision" a bit further, you'll also realize that the problem someday will hit the American society. It'll come to a point where only those who are wealthy can afford to go to college. What happens to the rest of them? They still need to learn how to earn their living. Where are the opportunities? (Inside your pockets, I guess.)

If time and tuition fees could form a linear system, then probably this system wouldn't last long. Let the increment be a justified amount and don't let this system collapse under your tour of duty. —Tan Wee Teck, senior, electrical engineering.

Computer underworld has darkside

By Miguel Albas
Staff Writer

Computer viruses received national attention when a Cornell University graduate student unleashed one into the Pentagon's defense computer department network in November.

But computer viruses are not the only subjects dwelling on the dark side of the computer underworld.

Along with computer viruses are trojan horses, the worms that create them, dangerous bulletin boards, trap doors, blackholes, a variety of other foul computer generated monstrosities and the most celebrated of all, the hackers.

The use of this highly symbolic computer lingo may sound confusing, but becoming familiar with it will defuse some of the mystery surrounding computers and how they work.

In the computer world, the star players are the programmers. They are responsible for writing the instructions that give computers "life." These instructions are known as programs.

Programs can be written to do many different tasks. There are programs which start, or boot, the computer.

Another type is application programs, like Msc Write, Chart Master, Donkey Kong or Lotus. They allow the user to perform a particular task like writing, performing mathematical calculations, playing a game, or creating charts. There are a wide variety of application programs available on the market.

Application programs are recorded onto computer disks. The disk, with the recorded application program on it, is referred to as software.

Programmers are only limited by their knowledge and expertise in creating programs. A vast majority of them are decent, law abiding individuals who want others to benefit from the programs they have written. However, there are some whose motivation and intentions are questionable.

Programmers who create destructive or socially useless programs have been dubbed "worms" by the computer underground. These so-called worms use their knowledge and expertise to create programs that wreak havoc among users.

Charlie Campbell, associate director of computing affairs, said the University will take steps to deal with individuals who participate in such activities here at the University.

One of their foul creations is called a virus. A computer virus is a set of instructions, a computer program, that attaches itself to other legitimate programs like the ones that start, or boot, the computer. Viruses can also make hosts of application programs and sometimes data files. Data files contain information like sales results or text of a term paper.

A virus is silent and invisible, so the unsuspecting user may never know it is there. Meanwhile the virus is doing its damage.

A virus changes the way a computer works internally, although everything may appear to be working normally to the user.

A virus is socially dangerous because it can replicate and transfer itself, like a real biological virus. If a user inserts a clean disk into a computer that has the virus in memory, the clean disk will become infected. Every time the infected disk is used the virus secretly continues to create further damage, altering the data on the disk until the virus is activated and the damage becomes apparent.

As users unknowingly share contaminated disk, they are spreading the virus.

Generally, viruses can be separated into two categories, destructive and non-destructive. Depending on the programmer's intention, the virus may just play a harmless joke on the user to completely erasing all the information on the disk.

Along with the virus, the programmer writes the antidote, another program that will track and kill the virus. Usually, this antidote program is sold to the user who has contracted the virus.

One popular non-destructive virus is called Cookie Monster. Computer systems that are infected with this virus experience a sudden clearing of the computer screen. The word "cookie" appears randomly, eventually covering the entire screen demanding a cookie. The system will be tied up until the user types in the letters c-o-o-k-i-e. Any other response will have no effect.

On the other hand, there are destructive viruses. One of these types of viruses hit Faner Lab in October and has since been keeping all campus labs on the alert. It is called the Pakistani virus and so far the damage created by this data-scrambling virus has been undetermined by lab officials.

However, at least 200 computer science students experienced problems because of the virus when it surfaced on campus in late October.

"We have a Lotus project due soon, but it's not going to be done on time because the kids were using infected Lotus disks," one affected student said.

The Pakistani virus was created by two brothers, Amjad and Basit Farooq, to discourage the use of selling illegally copied software, called bootlegging. Soon, the infected versions of the Lotus program they were selling to American tourists for as low as $5 reached and spread throughout the United States.

The Pakistani virus only becomes visible to the user after it has transferred itself an unspecified number of times. After this, the virus changes the disks' volume name to BRAIN, then it is only a matter of time before the virus explodes, scrambling the data on the disk it has infected.

Faner Lab officials were quick to respond to the virus, erasing the virus from all the Faner IBM personal computer software and continually monitoring it for any changes in addition to distributing information on how to deal with the virus. However, because users may not know they have infected disks, the virus may still be spreading with no guarantee of its eradication.

Until now, the virus has only surfaced in the Faner lab, the largest of 20 microcomputer labs on campus that is widely used by both students and faculty.

Lawrence Hengehold, director of computing affairs, said students should practice good housekeeping rules when using computers. This involves killing any virus that may be in the computer's memory by turning it off before inserting any disk.

Hengehold also suggests having disks checked by computer lab personnel before use.

"If you think your disk is infected bring it into the lab," he said. "Let the lab people check it out."

Users also can place a write-protect tab on a disk. This prevents anything from being written onto the disk. All the software in the Faner lab has since done this to all the disks and will fine anyone who removes them without authorization.

Mainframes.

Hengehold said a virus was planted in the University's mainframe that interrupted the user by drawing a Christmas tree on the screen. It was named the Christmas tree virus. The virus was found and erased.

Fortunately, viruses do not cross breed. A virus written for an IBM will not work in an Apple computer.

Other universities also have had their share of virus problems. Labs at the University of Illinois at

Champaign have been infected with viruses such as SCORES, nVIR and SNEAK, all of which work exclusively on the Macintosh computer system. That University also has experienced the IBM Pakistani virus problem.

Dan Beebe, a senior in mechanical engineering at the University of Illinois, works as an operator at the Computing service office. He said 70 to 80 percent of the computers at that lab site were infected with viruses. "About 400 people come through here at peak hours, there is no way of knowing how many people have been infected," he said.

"A lot of the 21 computer labs here have been infected," he said. "This university will never be virus free as long as people continue to write these things."

Beebe said the University is distributing modified versions of Vaccine, a program that detects viruses.

"Vaccine automatically loads itself when the computer is booted up," he said. "If a file is infected, it will not allow you to open it." In this manner, infected disks can be identified.

Universities, banks, government institutions and private citizens are all at risk from viruses.

A relative of the virus is the trojan horse. A trojan horse does the same thing a virus does, except it can't replicate and transfer itself. Computer programmers can take a trojan horse and turn it into a virus.

This type of program is called a trojan horse because, like the original one used by the Greeks to get into the city of Troy, a user must knowingly accept the program. If one accepts a trojan horse without knowing what it does or what it is capable of doing, they are at risk.

Sometimes trojan horses are helpful programs. The displays that pop up on a computer screen when a special function key is pressed is one form of a trojan horse, one that is activated by the user.

Some trojan horses become activated when the user types in or performs some undetermined task on the computer. Computer programmers have become very sneaky at what they do. A program that appears to do one thing may also be doing quite another behind your back.

The best way to avoid trojan horses is not to accept any programs that you are not familiar with or that someone else has not checked out for you. Like viruses, trojan horses also come in destructive and non-destructive forms.

A different world exists in the linkup between computers and electronic bulletin boards. These electronic bulletin boards are like regular bulletin boards where people tack on posters, leaflets and other paraphernalia for others to see or take.

With a machine that allows computer signals to be transferred through telephone wires, called a modem, personal computer users are able to talk with other computer systems far away.

With a modem, computers can leave messages for everyone to see, or post computer programs for others to take and use on electronic bulletin boards. Personal computer users can hook up with bulletin boards and copy the programs that have been posted. This practice is known as downloading. The programs that are posted are supposed to be public domain programs. They are not copyrighted.

Some bulletin boards are in the care of companies that charge for their use. Others are privately owned.

Bulletin boards become dangerous when users place infected programs on them. Since bulletin boards are a source of programs, some programmers post infected programs hoping that many others will copy and use them, passing the virus along.

In such a case, a program called Flu Shot was posted on a bulletin board. The program was meant to detect and monitor anything that was being written onto a disk. It was a program that detected viruses.

The creator of the program put out three versions of Flu Shot on bulletin boards. They are widely used.

Ironically, a programmer tampered with the third version of Flu Shot and added a virus to it. The programmer then posted the infected version of Flu Shot on a bulletin board and named it Flu Shot, version four. As users began passing this tainted version of the program along, they discovered the change. The originator of Flu Shot created a fifth version to restore the damage created by the fourth, infected version.

Once a bulletin board gets the reputation for distributing tainted programs, its use diminishes because users no longer trust it. This is why private bulletin boards are closely guarded and are shared only among close friends and trusted users, private bulletin boards are usually free and offer a way in which computer users can exchange information and programs. Hengehold said computer users who frequently trade copied software with friends or through electronic bulletin boards run a higher risk of getting a virus on their disks. He suspects that's how the virus entered the University's system.

The most celebrated and most ingenious of computer users are called hackers. Converting their computers into axes, they chop and hack their way into closed computer systems like banks, governmental agencies, private corporations, the list goes on and on. Anyplace that uses computers and links them together via telephone lines is at risk from being trounced upon by a hacker.

Hackers and worms both share a common interest and expertise. They understand computers extremely well. The better programmers become at programming, the better and sneakier their computer viruses become. Likewise, hackers are driven by a sense of curiosity and a desire to out explore new computer systems and the thrill of adventure that accompanies it.

Many have credited hackers with vitalizing the computer industry by providing innovative approaches and creative software applications. But hackers are also responsible for a great deal of computer foul-ups.

Institutions are always on the lookout for new information and technology that can be used to keep the hackers, viruses and other potential dangers at bay.

More recently the law has taken arms against viruses. The Computer Virus Eradication Act of 1988 may become the first law specifically declaring writing and spreading of a virus illegal. The bill is currently under judicial review and could be made law by the end of next year.

Donald Burleson was the first programmer to be caught and successfully prosecuted for creating a virus. His virus destroyed thousands of records belonging to a security brokerage and insurance company where he used to work. Burleson was tried under Texas state law and faces a possible two to 10 year prison sentence in addition to a fine up to $5,000.

In Illinois there are laws that declare computer abuse illegal.

Senate Bill 1335 added article code 16D to the Criminal Code in December of 1987.

The year old addition defines and explains the penalties for three areas of illegal computer activities.

The world of computers is relatively young, since the mid 1970s. No one is quite sure where all of this will go. The laws are just changing to cover these new threats posed by dangerous programs and the programmers who write them. It will be interesting to see what is awaiting the computer underworld and all of its inhabitants.

PROFESSOR, from Page 1—

Chicago and attended lectures at U of Chicago. My eldest daughter was born in Chicago. She came to SIU-C and through her I met Dr. Woo (professor in history) who has become one of my closest friends."

Tien Wei Woo said Liancheng is the most distinguished journalist in China.

He has worked at People's China magazine, the first foreign language magazine, the Beijing Review (earlier known as the Peking Review) and for six years was director of Foreign Languages Publishing, an umbrella organization in charge of book publishing units, magazines and printing presses.

"In 1985 I resigned. I went back to actual writing as a freelancer and started teaching because I was sick of being a bureaucrat. Since then I have been teaching at Beijing University."

Liancheng is a professor in international cross cultural communications—the study of cultures and how to communicate.

He is the author of several books and pamphlets on international topics and is working on his next book.

For years, he said, the Chinese media was considered an instrument of government policy and the media people accepted this concept.

In the past 10 years there has been reform in China similar to Gorbachev's perestroika. This reform also has affected the media.

"The media is still considered a mirror reflecting government. A vehicle conveying government policies to the people, but there is still the search for that right point of balance to whether the media is closer to the people or the government."

Liancheng said investigative reporting with more literary style and description is blooming in China.

"The press has been printing more and more muckraking. They've been printing attacks on government corruption and bringing to light social remedies to housing shortages, environmental pollution and water pollution," Liancheng said.

Bassist Micheal Steele, often introspective in her songs, delivers smart lyrics in "Complicated Girl" that suggests she is singing from experience.

In "Everything," the band's lyrics sometimes lack focus but its floating harmonies come to the rescue to even make the forgettable songs listenable. The Bangles seem perfectly comfortable in turning out hit singles about relationships, as they did on "Different Light."

Although the band's strength lies in its harmonies, it would be nice to see the band take a chance on its next album and inject more rock into its pop. In concert, the Bangles let their hair down and do just that. If they find a way to pack that live punch with their harmonies in the recording studio, the result could be deadly.

and determined not to let (RJR Nabisco President F. Ross Johnson) get a hold of it.

Published reports said the final bid by the management group led by Johnson was worth at least $25.42 billion, several million more than the winning proposal that is nearly twice the size of the previous record takeover of Gulf Oil Corp. by Chevron Corp. in 1984.

Some board members apparently were enraged by Johnson's attempt to take the company private in a deal that at first included provisions by which he and other senior managers would individually reap as much as $100 million.

Johnson also appears on this week's cover of Time magazine under a banner proclaiming "A Game of Greed," which reportedly further alienated some board members.

"When they saw that, they were going to let anybody get the thing but Ross," the source said.

The final round of bidding for RJR Nabisco, which effectively was put on the auction block Oct. 2nd when Johnson made public a $75 a share takeover proposal valued at $16.9 million, turned into a bitter and bizarre spectacle as Kohlberg Kravis and the management group each improved their offers after a company-imposed deadline for bids Tuesday.

At the time, the two suitors each made bids in the $101 to $110 a share range, worth about $23.2 billion to $23.4

billion. But a special committee studying the bids, which also included a proposal by First Boston Corp. valued at a minimum of $23.7 billion but contingent on the use of a soon-to-expire tax loophole, informed the management group that Kohlberg Kravis had topped their offer by as much as $5 a share.

"They misinformed the management group," the source said. "They said they weren't even close because they wanted management not to get it."

After the news leaked that the two bids were in the same range, the management group went public with a $108 a share offer Wednesday afternoon.

sovereign rights in the 15 republics, saying the measures concentrate even more power in the central government.

But officials said many objections had been taken into account in the final version of the draft proposals approved at the end of a three-day meeting of a body that has never dared to say no to the Communist Party.

The other key vote Tuesday by the nominal parliament that only meets for a few days each year gave its unanimous approval to a law setting guidelines for multi candidate elections of a Congress of People's Deputies — a vote effectively disbanding the Supreme Soviet to make way for a more genuine legislature.

"Comrade deputies, this line-up of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet is having its final session," Gorbachev said before the vote. "If no need emerges to convene an extraordinary session of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet, today's sitting will be the concluding act of its rich political history."

The new body of some 2,000 members will elect an executive president and select from its ranks a smaller parliament that will debate and vote on issues for several months each year much like a Western parliament.

Tass said Soviets will vote March 26 in an election to nominate congress deputies and until that time the Supreme Soviet will continue with its functions.

The new laws will limit to two five-year terms the length of office of all senior officials, including Gorbachev, who serves as president in addition to leader of the Soviet Communist Party. However, the new compact parliament and the president will be elected by the Congress of Peoples Deputies and not directly by the people.

Gorbachev said a special plenum of the Communist Party Central Committee will be held in June on ethnic problems.

Health Service technologist honored for work in region

By Daniel Wallenberg
Staff Writer

An award for outstanding commitment to health care in Southern Illinois was recently awarded to Muriel Narve, a medical technologist administrator with the University Health Service.

Quality of Life Service, who issued the award, is a charitable health agency that serves 15 counties in Southern Illinois. It gives a Quality Service award annually to someone in the health field in Southern Illinois.

Narve said that usually physicians are nominated for the QLS award. When she was informed she had won, she felt she was not deserving of the award.

said, "She has dedicated her entire life to Southern Illinois and was extremely deserving of this award."

Narve holds two degrees from SIU-C, a bachelor's degree in physiology which she received in 1970 and a master's degree in occupational education with an emphasis in physiology in 1976.

Narve said that the most enjoyable part of her 22-year career at the University is her interaction with the students and the overall atmosphere of the University.

As a medical technologist, Narve draws blood and has acquired the nicknames of Dracula and Vampire. "If it makes the students feel better, it's (the nicknames) all right with me," Narve said. "Just as long as they don't cry."

Narve's career has allowed her to travel to several foreign countries to lecture, conduct seminars and share techniques.

In 1976, Narve said she was part of the first medical group allowed in the Soviet Union where, along with a diverse group of medical people from around the United States, she visited Soviet hospitals and clinics.

But Narve said it was a trip to China that changed her outlook and insight toward her profession and life itself.

"When you visit a foreign country," Narve said, "you come to appreciate our freedom and our wealth. You realize that there is more to life than materialistic awards."

Narve is involved in a national research project dealing with the prevalence of the AIDS virus on college campuses. SIU-C is among the universities participating in the study.

In the past when such opportunities arose something happened to keep her here, Narve said. "Maybe this is where I'm supposed to be."

The most enjoyable part of Narve's career at the University has been the interaction with the students.

"I asked the lady on the phone if they had made a mistake," Narve said. "I didn't think I would have a chance."

Linda Daniels, public awareness manager at QLS

Forestry club sponsors sale of Christmas trees

University students, faculty and staff won't have to go far this year to shop for a Christmas tree.

The Forestry Club kicks off its annual Christmas tree sale today on the east side of McAndrew Stadium. The sale will be held through Sunday from 8 a.m. to dusk.

The club ordered 450 Scotch pines, which were shipped from western Michigan, and they also have a few Douglas fir, said Kraig Moore, president of the club.

The trees are fire retardant treated, range from 3 to 8 feet and cost $3.50 per foot. Moore said the club also is offering delivery of the trees.

Homeless youths estimated at 2 million across country

CHICAGO (UPI) — The plight of the young homeless has reached crisis proportions with about 2 million people between the ages of 10 and 21 living on city streets across the United States, a Senate subcommittee chaired by Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., was told Thursday.

"These young people represent all social and economic classes, all racial and ethnic groups," said the Rev. Sid L. Mohn of Travelers and Immigration Aid of Chicago. "For the most part, no one provides for the well being of these youngsters without homes. They survive — when they survive — outside the parameters of our existing child welfare system."

Simon, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on the Constitution, conducted the nearly three-hour hearing at the Dirksen Federal Building. The senator was responsible for getting a $5 million grant program for homeless youths included in the drug bill recently signed into law by President Reagan.

The money is targeted for programs to help homeless youths between the ages of 16 and 21.

Simon, reading from a staff memo at the hearing's beginning, quoted a Los Angeles County study showing if a youth had not resolved his or her homeless situation within a year, the youngster's life expectancy is no more than another five to seven years.

"I'm not fooling myself — and I don't think anybody in Congress is fooling themselves — that $5 million is a serious assault on the problem," Simon said.

"It is a tragedy for any human being to live without a home but especially for children because many of these kids have been rejected by both parents."

Government blocks release of Iran-Contra documents

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government, in a move that could prevent Iran-Contra defendants from going to trial, has permanently blocked release of documents in the case containing "state secrets of the highest order," the White House disclosed Thursday.

President Reagan had no direct role in the decision, made unanimously in July by his national security advisers, but defended it. "The things we're blocking are the things that duty requires we block," he said. "These are things that are national security secrets."

Earlier Thursday, White

House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater revealed the decision to forbid the use at trial of the sensitive documents in the criminal case pending against ex-White House aide Oliver North. Fitzwater said determining whether the prosecution against North can go forward is entirely up to U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell.

Independent prosecutor Lawrence Walsh, who has spent nearly two years building the Iran-Contra case, had no immediate comment.

Reagan, asked if the decision was a "back-door way" to keep North from facing a jury, said, "No, this is something that from the very beginning we knew we would have to do."

Fitzwater said the decision to block public disclosure of certain categories of information was made by Secretary of State George Shultz, Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci, CIA Director William Webster, National Security Agency chief William Odom and national security adviser Lt. Gen. Colin Powell.

Asked whether he would be disturbed if the move caused charges against North to be dropped, Reagan said, "The law must take its course."

Launch of Atlantis postponed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (UPI) — NASA called off its first shot at launching the shuttle Atlantis on a secret military mission Thursday and rescheduled blastoff for Friday, weather permitting, because of dangerous shear winds more than eight miles up.

The next attempt to launch Atlantis, its crew of five and its classified payload — believed to be an exotic $500 million Pentagon radar reconnaissance satellite — was scheduled for 6 a.m., according to sources.

NASA, barred by the Air Force from providing details about the mission, would only say that blastoff was planned between 6:32 a.m. and 9:32 a.m.

Thursday's delay was a disappointment for commander Robert "Hoot" Gibson, 42, a Navy commander; co-pilot Guy Gardner, 40, and Richard "Mike" Mullane, 43, both Air Force colonels; Air Force Lt. Col. Jerry Ross, 40; and Navy Cmdr. William Shepherd, 39.

"They took it in their stride," launch director Robert Sieck said. "Everyone accepted it and is looking forward to the next attempt."

1989-90 student directories could throw USG for a loss

By Brad Bushue
Staff Writer

Student directory coordinators from the Undergraduate Student Government were informed that they would be charged $5,000 for the printing of the 1989-90 student directory.

The USG usually receives $3,000 for signing a contract with the current printer.

Losses of about $17,000 on the 1987-88 directory and $9,000 to $10,000 on the 1988-89 book were cited as reasons for the publisher's proposed contract change, according to Tim Hildebrand, who is in charge of directory distribution.

Paul Peterson, regional sales manager of North Carolina-based University Directories, said, "We are looking to turn the problem around, from a losing situation to a winning one."

Peterson said the charge was essential to continue the quality of service offered to the University.

Hildebrand said University Directories' announcement of the charge came as a complete surprise to him and other directory coordinators when representatives of the publisher informed them of the change at a Nov. 16 meeting to observe the progress of the directory.

Before agreeing to the charge, the project's coordinators must seek bids from other printers, Hildebrand said.

If University Directories' contract is accepted, the USG will not have to pay $5,000 for the 1990-91 directory if the printer makes a profit on advertising sales. Peterson said University Directories has set a goal of $25,000 in advertising sales for the 1989-90 edition of the directory, a 32-percent increase over sales for this year's directory.

In a report to the USG senate Wednesday, President Bill Hall said that some local advertisers told University Directories salespersons they would purchase advertising space in the directories if the phone numbers of SIU-C faculty and staff were included because "they have the money."

Alvin Jones, director of University Electronic Communications, said combining the student and faculty and staff directories has been discussed before but would be "impractical" because of a difference in information availability.

Jones said the addresses and phone numbers of faculty and staff come out before the students' information.

The USG senate approved a bill to fund the USG with $5,000 Wednesday so the money would be available if needed when directory coordinators chose a contractor to print the 1989-90 directories in January or February.

Ingram's teams in tough tourney

By John Walblay
Staff Writer

The swimming and diving 'ears head into the deepest water yet this season at the Crimson Tide National Invitational Tournament, which starts today in Tuscaloosa, Ala.

The Salukis face five nationally-ranked teams including second-ranked Florida.

"This is no doubt the biggest weekend of our young season," swimming coach Doug Ingram said.

The opening dual meet features the Saluki women facing Texas A&M, while the men's team competes against Clemson.

Alabama, Arizona, Indiana and Iowa also will be competing in the tournament.

In its second year, the tournament's three-day competition has teams advancing to the championship rounds and the losing teams dropping into consolation rounds.

Last Year the men's team placed third and the women finished sixth.

The men's team, ranked 15th nationally, is expected to have a tough time defeating Clemson, which comes into the invitational with a 4-0 record. The Tigers are traditionally ranked among the best in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

If the Salukis defeat Clemson, they will face the winner of the Florida-

Alabama contest.

Ingram compared the possible contest against Florida to the recent Saluki game with Villanova.

"To meet Florida would be like our basketball team facing Villanova," Ingram said, "We'd like to cash in like the basketball team did. It would be the biggest meet our staff has been involved in."

Ingram said the women's team will have a difficult time with Texas A&M considering the Aggies' experience.

"Based on their returning NCAA qualifiers and their juniors and seniors against our youngsters, I'd have to say we are the underdogs," Ingram said.

from some players at the end, but more than 50 percent of the Salukis gave 100 percent through the final snap of the season.

Add to this fact the effort had to come when the crowd often gave just half an effort at best. Football crowds were not exactly bringing down the house this season, and the final home game with Northern Iowa was simply a disgrace. No one is surprised the students want to flock home for Thanksgiving break, but doesn't Rhoades and crew deserve a bit better?

Above all, these accomplishments stacked up under an entirely new staff, with the exception of offensive line coach Rod Sherrill. Rhoades and his team deserve high praise from the University and surrounding community.

Football is over, but with some of us, it isn't forgotten.

Greene relying on new recruits

By David Gallianetti
Staff Writer

Ron Greene and his Indiana State Sycamores are tired of the cellar. In the 1988-89 season, they plan on doing something about it.

"I think we are very pleased with the progress so far," said Greene, whose team currently sports a 2-0 mark. "They're doing what we want, they have a good work ethic."

"Maybe we can finally get out of that dreaded cellar we've been fighting."

Much of the Sycamores success will ride on the shoulders of sophomore Eddie Bird, who set a career-high scoring mark of 39 against Boston College earlier this season.

"We would hope that he can improve and show consistency," Greene said. "I think with any outstanding player you're looking for consistency day in and day out, something that we can count on."

"He's getting into shape, but I think he still has some work to do in that projected area."

Greene also will look for major contributions from a recruiting class which includes freshmen Mike Boles.

Rakers and (Cathy) Kampwerth," Scott said. "We had Murray State down 10 at the half, and couldn't put them away. That's what disturbs me the most. The game resembled too many of our losses last season."

Rakers and Kampwerth each scored 10 points and combined for 18 rebounds in the Salukis' opening loss to Murray State, 68-64.

The team also will look to seniors Tonda Seals and Dana Fitzpatrick for leadership against a Boilermaker team they played well against last season.

Seals scored a career-high 20 points against Purdue, and Fitzpatrick added 14.

"We're not afraid to play anybody," Fitzpatrick said. "If this team plays the way it is capable of, we can play with anyone."

The top 20 assault doesn't end there for the Salukis. They head to Diddle Arena in Bowling Green, Ky., to play sixth-ranked Hilltoppers of Western Kentucky. The game will be at 2:30 p.m. Sunday.

Western Kentucky is coming off a 69-60 pasting of Gateway favorite and co-conference champion of last season, Illinois State. They out-rebounded Illinois State, 60-29.

The Hilltoppers, 26-8 last season and a Final Four team in 1985 and 1986, have averaged 25.5 wins over the past six seasons in compiling a 85-7 (.924) winning percentage on their home court.

SIU-C, however, leads the hard fought series 5-4, winning the last two meetings.

Scott's team faces early test with No. 16 Purdue

By Robert Baxter:
Staff Writer

The women's basketball team will take the floor at 7:35 tonight against the Purdue Boilermakers, the first of two top 20 teams it will battle this weekend.

Purdue is coming off a stunning upset of No. 3 ranked Texas, which vaulted the Boilermakers into the 16th spot on the Associated Press poll.

It is the first time in Purdue's history that the women's team has been Tipoff: SIUC-C Arena (10,014), Carbondale, 7:35 p.m.

Records: Purdue (2-0), Southern Illinois (0-1).
What to watch: The Salukis are trying to break a school record of five straight losses that extends back to last season. Purdue is rolling after upsetting No. 5 Texas 76-71 last week.

ranked. "We'll have to play extremely well to stay on the same floor with them," Coach Cindy Scott said. "They are big, and very physical, and shoot the ball extremely well."

Purdue beat a Texas team, which lost in the Midwest regional last year to eventual national champion Louisiana

Tech, with a starting lineup of three sophomores and one freshman.

The Boilermakers' devastating attack is led by freshman MaChelle Joseph (24 ppg), and sophomore Joy Holmes (19.5 ppg).

The Boilermakers accuracy at the free throw line — 76 percent — has also played a major role in their early season success.

"Purdue has some of the best young players in the country," Scott said. "To beat Texas with such a young lineup, says plenty.

"The key for us will be how well we handle the full court pressure. We have to protect the ball and keep our turnovers down."

Last season, the Salukis were leading Purdue at the half by nine in West Lafayette. But the Boilermakers, helped by 28 of 38 from the free throw line, poured on the second half heat and came away with a convincing 82-67 victory.

Men ready for a Showdown

Salukis put 3-1 mark on line with host team Austin Peay

By David Gallianetti
Staff Writer

The Salukis will take a 3-1 record to Clarksville, Tenn. this weekend as they participate in Acme Boot Showdown hosted by Austin Peay.

The tournament will get underway at 6 tonight with Georgia Southern taking on LaSalle. The Salukis will play the host Governors at 8 p.m. A consolation game will be played Saturday at 6 p.m. with the championship scheduled for 8 p.m.

"I feel we can beat any of the other three teams, but all these teams are tough," said Saluki coach Rick Herrin. "We are surely looking to win it, but it will take two tremendous games."

Austin Peay enters the contest at 2-0 with a 106-97 win over Marshall and a 89-55 win over Lander College. The Governors, who are averaging 98.5 points per game, have added a quick transition offense with guard Keith Rawls averaging 21.5 points per game.

"Austin Peay is a very good basketball team, and they play the run and shoot," Herrin said. "We are going to play up-tempo, but we have to make sure we get back and not let them run at will."

Georgia Southern also enters the tournament at 2-0 with a 68-56 win over North Carolina-

West looking to change NCAA training rule

By Megan Hauck
Staff Writer

Charlotte West, associate athletics director, wants to change an NCAA rule that prohibits university athletics trainers from administering to high school athletes.

West, who also serves on the NCAA Council, said she will draft an amendment to the rule next fall that would permit university athletic trainers to care for high school athletes.

"We would like to allow our trainers to work on high school athletes," West said. "We feel like it would be a service to area schools, which is one of SIU Athletics' goals."

The rule was put into effect to prevent coaches from pressuring students who were treated at a university into joining that university's athletics program. However, most local high school coaches do not agree the NCAA rule could be used as an unfair recruiting advantage.

John Helmick, head football coach at Carbondale Community High School, said the rule does more harm than it prevents.

"It puts us at a disadvantage," Helmick said. "It may be that the athlete can't get to a doctor right away, and then you're not sure if he's even getting the proper treatment."

Jennifer Stanley, volleyball coach at CCHS, agreed that the rule was a good deterrent against an otherwise lucrative recruiting tool, but said the advantages of amending the rule far outweigh the disadvantages.

"It would be a good thing if they could change it because the high schools in this area are lacking trainers," Stanley said, "but I can see where the athlete may feel beholden to a university."

Sally Perkins, an SIUC athletics trainer, supports changing the rule because area high schools do not have trainers.

"There are no trainers from Mount Vernon down," Perkins said. "I think the feeling with the trainers here is to provide proper care for any athlete, in high school or out."

West also disagrees that university trainers treating high school athletes could effectively sway the athlete to attend a university. "I personally don't think athletes would go to a certain school just because they have had their ankle taped or knee worked on there," she said.

West said allowing university trainers to treat high school athletes would provide a laboratory settings for university students studying to be athletic trainers.

High schools would be responsible for supplying adequate insurance coverage and supplies, West said.

"We couldn't do it if it were a cost to us," she said. "Once you have the training personnel and facilities, there's really not much more cost involved."

Season's end doesn't mean fans forget

Before everyone jumps on Rich Herrin's bandwagon, there is one order of business that needs to be cleared up. Namely, the end of the football season.

Although the Salukis' 4-7 record didn't have many heads in I-AA football turning, Rick Rhoades and his group deserve more than a mention before all the nets in the Arena heat up.

First, the Salukis, down 17-13, made undefeated conference champ Western Illinois sweat as they had the ball one foot from the goal with seconds left before time ran out.

When SIUC invaded Commonwealth Stadium in Lexington to battle the Kentucky Wildcats, the Salukis entered the halftime locker room tied at 7. Kentucky entered the game a 3-point favorite, but won just 24-10.

Thanks much in part to the wishbone offense, eight Saluki rushers racked-up over 100 yards, the first time in the football program's 75-year history.

Two Salukis, Brad Crouse and Rob Mason, were named to the first-team All-Gateway team, while Chuck Harmke was named to the second-team and Ron Kirk honorable mention.

A solid foundation for next season has been laid. The Salukis will have depth at offensive line, two quarterbacks with game experience and an above-average defensive line just to name a few bright spots.

The Salukis received top-notch play from freshmen Scott Gabbert and kicker John Bookout, both of whom would have been deserving of Newcomer of the Year honors, if the Gateway had such an award.

Every Saturday the Salukis hit McAndrew Stadium turf, it was with winning on their minds and a desire to play as hard as they could. Granted, Rhoades himself admitted there was a lack of production
