Brady Bill may not alter gun violence

By Erick Enriquez
Police Writer

The Brady Bill will have little effect on gun violence in the United States, because most criminals purchase weapons illegally, a National Rifle Association member says.

President Clinton signed the gun-control bill Tuesday, which will require a five-day waiting period and allow for a background check on handgun buyers.

While the bill will apply in the 27 states that have no waiting period or background check for handgun buyers, Illinois is one of the remaining 23 that have those laws.

The law, which will take effect in 90 days, was named for former White House Press Secretary James Brady who was disabled by a gunshot during the assassination attempt of President Ronald Reagan in 1981.

Tony Florio, a Murphysboro gun dealer and life member of the rifle association, said while the government should prosecute individuals who misuse guns, it should refrain from putting more restrictions on the right to bear firearms.

"It (the right to bear arms) must have been really important to our forefathers, next to freedom of religion and speech, for them to make it a constitutional right," Florio said. "We have a right to protect ourselves with guns. If you don't do it yourself, nobody else will."

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said the bill makes a strong statement about handgun violence.

"I understand the arguments where people say it is a constitutional right to bear arms, but at the same time we have to weigh the impact that firearms are having an effect on our country and the loss of lives," Strom said.

The underlying problem is that guns are being used to settle conflicts, Strom said.

AIDS debate causes rage by audience

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—President Clinton Wednesday faced the public rage of an AIDS protester and accepted the criticism that the federal government is not doing enough to find a cure for the fatal disease.

"Talk is cheap and we need action," a protester shouted midway through Clinton's speech to an audience at Georgetown University Hospital marking World AIDS Day. The man, who identified himself as a member of ACT-UP, an AIDS activist group, went unmolested by security and received Clinton's calm attention as he delivered an impassioned, 60-second lecture on the president's performance.

"Stick Willy, the Republicans were right. We should have never trusted you. You are doing nothing while we die," the man said. "One year later, lots of talk, no action," he shouted before security guards finally led him away.

A few hours earlier, the same protester interrupted Donna Shalala, Health and Human Services secretary, and Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders with similar complaints of inaction and failure by the administration to follow through on recommendations by a federal AIDS commission. He accused the administration of engaging in "pretty photo-ops" to demonstrate their commitment but little real action.

TV ads influence gift-giving choices

By Kellie Huttes
Special Assignment Writer

Some Carbondale children may avoid traditional Christmas gifts of dolls and trucks. They instead opt for violent video games because of the influence of media advertisements and programs, a professor says.

Bill Elliott, SIUC associate professor of journalism, said the media, especially television, influences children when they make out their wish lists.

Zachary Cavarretta and Emory Nelms, both 4, are students at SIUC's Child Development Lab. They said they are asking for Christmas toys they saw on television.

"I want a Batman gun, because it's cool," Nelms said. "I saw it on TV."

Cavarretta said he wants a pair of vampire teeth he had seen on television during Halloween.

"It's got teeth on it and when you put it in your mouth you look like a vampire," he said. "I want to scare my mom with it."

Elliott said the level of advertisements and media violence play a role in children's play activities, actions and desires for certain toys.

He said children observe, and under certain circumstances, will act aggressively toward an object or another person.

However, Joel G. Best, chairman of SIUC's sociology department, said he believes toys are not a social problem.

Best said current social movements find it easy to talk about toys in terms of their causes, but toys are a reflection of society's fears.

Changes in society have led to the belief that toys can be trouble, Best said.

Barbie and GI Joe have been criticized for more than 40 years for teaching children social roles, such as traditional femininity and violent behavior, but with these criticisms children become pawns, he said.

Best said home environment and society influences children more than toys. He said research shows that boys, not girls, become more aggressive when they play with guns, and this could be because of varied parenting styles.

Best said children's exposure to media violence does not prompt them to ask for guns or violent toys. He also said media does not influence them to act aggressively.

But Elliott said studies have

New director will intensify public relations efforts

By Shawna Dordevan
Administration Writer

The University's public relations and fund-raising efforts in the Chicago area will be intensified by a new associate director for institutional advancement, an SIUC official says.

Applications for the associate director for institutional advancement, director of development-Chicago region, are being received until Dec. 15 by the SIUC Foundation search committee, foundation director Gola Waters said.

The position recently became available after Chicago area director Gina Gramarosso resigned to work for Drake University, Waters said.

"It is an important position because of the number of alumni and people in the area who contribute to SIUC and its programs," Waters said. "We seek to fill position as soon as possible."

University alumni from the Chicago region is just under 22,000 while gifts from alumni and supporting corporations were at $135,000 as of June 30, foundation treasurer Bryan Vagner said.

The search committee is composed of four members who will screen applicants to work for the recently hired Vice President of Institutional Advancement J. Robert Quatroche, who will take office Jan. 17, 1994.

Quatroche's position will serve as a coordinator of the SIUC Foundation, Alumni Services and University Relations.

University relations officials are involved heavily with public relations around the area, as well as St. Louis and Springfield, associate executive director Dorothy McCombs said.

"There is a large population around Chicago that we try to get the University's message out there to attract students and interests," McCombs said. "We serve as a support for the fund-raising and relations."

McCombs said the area has a large number of constituencies.

Waters said the qualifications for the position include experience in fund-raising and strategies necessary to cultivate and secure annual and major gifts.

EUROPEAN TRADE RELATIONS MAY FALTER — U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher, raising the political stakes in long-stalled world trade talks, said Wednesday that a failure to agree on broad tariff cuts in the next two weeks will severely damage the U.S.-Europe relationship that underpins world stability. Christopher said the United States was unwilling to extend the current Dec. 15 deadline for completion of the negotiations. He called for flexibility on both sides to resolve remaining issues. "There will be no Dec. 16 for the Uruguay Round," Christopher said in reference to the talks that began in Punta del Este, Uruguay, in September, 1986.

NORTH KOREA RECEIVES U.S. WARNING — Following a series of reports of a bellicose North Korea being able to quickly sweep through South Korea, the head of U.S. military forces in Asia stopped in Tokyo Wednesday to deliver a blunt message. "A war between the North and South would be very costly," Larson said. "It would be very costly in the way of human lives, and we certainly want to avoid that at any opportunity. However, let me be very clear: the South would win. There is not a victory option for the North." He said the threat to South Korea has significantly increased within the past year because of North Korea's addition of heavy artillery and "Scud" missiles within range of Seoul, the South Korean capital.

AIDS RAPIDLY SPREADING IN THAILAND — At present in Thailand, AIDS appears to be spreading fastest among females 13 to 20 years old. One such victim is Phenpinit, a 19-year-old former hotel cook who was found to be infected with the virus when she gave birth last year. After moving to the beach resort of Patayya, she said, she was infected with the virus by her husband, who regularly went out with other women. On average, Thais who contract the disease die two years earlier than Americans, and Phenpinit seems resigned to an inevitable premature death.

GUSTY WINDS HALT ENDEAVOUR LAUNCH — Clouds and gusty winds Wednesday forced NASA to scrub its first attempt to launch the shuttle Endeavour on an ambitious 11-day mission to repair the flawed Hubble Space Telescope. The weather outlook was more favorable for Thursday morning, when NASA officials planned a second attempt between 4:27 and 5:38 a.m. EST. Air Force forecaster Dean Hazen said there was a 60 percent chance the weather would be favorable for a Thursday liftoff. Crew commander Richard Covey said, as he left the crew cabin, "We'll go pay homage to the wind gods and come back and try again."

GORE SEEKS 'COMMUNITY OF DEMOCRACIES' — Vice President Al Gore, implicitly apologizing for harsh statements some Americans made about Mexico during the recent free-trade debate, called Wednesday for Mexico and the United States to use the new trade pact to help create a "Western Hemisphere community of democracies." As a step toward building that community, Gore said, President Clinton would invite "the democratically elected heads of state" throughout the hemisphere to a summit meeting next year. Clinton discussed the idea with the seven Central American heads of state he met with Tuesday in Washington but left it for Gore to announce.

Books, buyers linked by student business

By Jeff McIntire
Business Writer

University and 710 bookstores traditionally are the places students buy and sell used textbooks, but an SIUC student has added a third name to the list.

Douglas Fritz, a sophomore in foreign language and international trade from Naperville, has established The Book Connection as an exchange for used textbooks.

Fritz said his business buys used textbooks at a higher price than the bookstore, and sells them at a lower price.

Once students provide Fritz with a list of books they want to sell and want to buy, he will add the information to a database and match buyers with sellers.

Fritz will notify the students the Friday before each finals week which books he will buy and which ones he can sell.

If the cost of the books a student want to buy exceeds the amount of money to be received from the books the student wants to return, the student will be required to pay the difference.

If, however, the business owes the students money in addition to the books, they will be given a credit voucher that can be redeemed at the beginning of the following semester.

"The basis of the company is that it's run by the students to help other students," Fritz said.

He said the money saved is worth the additional wait.

Though some students expressed dissatisfaction with the current system at local bookstores, some skepticism was expressed about the prospects of doing business with The Book Connection.

Sarah Hausken, a junior in interior design from Morris, said she believes she does not get enough money for books she returns, but the book exchange has less familiarity.

"I think (the bookstores) should give more money for books in good condition, but I would rather wait until The Book Connection is more established and I know it is trustworthy," she said.

Leslie Robinson, a senior in paralegal studies from Carbondale, said she would not be able to wait until the following semester for her book money.

"I don't think I would want to wait until next semester because, like most students, I need the money for Christmas," she said.

Sheryl Coffman, a senior in paralegal studies from Woodridge, said bookstores should give more money for books, but the additional money from a book exchange would not be worth waiting for.

Jim Skiersch, director of the University Bookstore in the Student Center, said bookstores offer the advantages of immediate money for book returns and used books sell for lower prices.

He said the bookstore sells used books at 75 percent of their original value; 10 percent lower than the percentage listed on the book exchange's flyers.

"Students just don't want to wait until January to get their money back," he said.

Interested students should contact Fritz at 529-3254, and list the books they have to sell and those they are interested in buying.

Bars join in alcohol awareness program

By Lanie Stockman
General Assignment Writer

Eleven Carbondale liquor establishments have accepted a challenge to have events encouraging responsible alcohol serving and consumption throughout the holiday season, coordinator of a new program said.

The program, developed by the Jackson County Health Authority, involves the bars and liquor stores in education of the community and is aimed at increasing the community's awareness of drunken driving, Ann Feliu, coordinator of the program, said.

She said of 77 liquor establishments invited to join the challenge throughout Jackson county, 14 have accepted, with 11 being from the Carbondale area.

Bars and liquor stores can earn points by staging non-alcoholic events and participants with the most points will be given awards at a ceremony Jan. 14, 1994.

Feliu said.

"Liquor establishments are in a prime position to prevent alcohol related incidents," she said.

Linda Parrish, owner of Gatsby's II, 607 S. Illinois Ave, said her establishment is participating in the challenge to promote drunken-driving awareness.

"This is a program encouraged by the city and I don't see any reason to drink and drive," she said

Gay support groups key to ending hatred

A DAILY EGYPTIAN STUDY ON TOLERANCE OF minority groups released in mid-November showed that the higher the education level of SIUC students, the more likely they were to be comfortable with people of different sexual orientations. This correlation is very encouraging, and shows that education is a key to combatting hatred and intolerance. It raises the logical extension that intervening at the high school and college prep level could have even greater potential for curtailing intolerance at the college level.

The past five years have shown a great increase in the number of voluntary high school support groups for gay and lesbian teens. Starting with only a handful of groups on the west coast, now more than 100 exist across the nation. Many of these groups are formed not only as a support network for gay and lesbian students, but as a gay-straight alliance designed to promote understanding among students of differing sexual orientations.

ONE IMPORTANT FUNCTION OF THE HIGH school support groups is that they aid the stress and isolation many homosexuals feel during high school. An increasing number are coming out and discovering their orientation at an earlier age with less anguish. More simply than that, many gay and lesbians need someone they can talk to at times when they do not want to tell anybody, but really need group support.

Being a gay teen and not knowing or having contact with other gay teens can be a traumatic experience for many. The groups also provide youths with positive gay peers and role models so that they can achieve a well-adjusted adolescence.

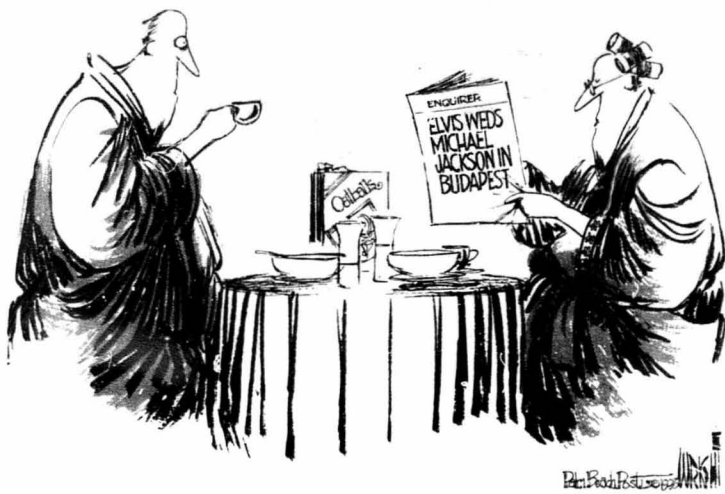

A 1989 U.S. HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES Department report estimated that gay adolescents accounted for almost 30 percent of teen suicides. Homosexual teens have also shown higher than average dropout rates, runaway rates, and problems with drug and alcohol abuse.

Much of this is because of gay teens' struggle to keep their sexual identities secret, and deal with and accept their sexual identities at the same time. The pressure is too much for some to bear. The goal of these high school support groups is to promote a fear-free adolescence and an environment where individuals are encouraged to find their own identities in a supportive manner.

THE FACT THAT MANY OF THESE HIGH school groups have high visibility and are encouragingly open to heterosexuals may signal the fact that gay awareness and gay issues are ready to be addressed by mainstream America. Also, the alternative of voluntary student participation in the high school groups instead of mandating the study of homosexuality in general school curriculum has drawn less backlash from conservative political and religious fundamentalist factions.

While Carbondale has no gay-straight high school alliance groups, or neighboring communities, the campus GBLF has opened its membership to the community and has a number of members from local high schools. The large number of heterosexual supporters in GBLF and similar groups who are active members provide greater understanding and communication for both communities.

This may be just the first of many smaller sized steps toward societal tolerance and acceptance of gays, but it is a necessary one. The results of the Daily Egyptian tolerance survey anticipate this trend. The fact that most SIUC students, except those from the lowest income bracket, support equal opportunity for people of other sexual orientations also signal the potential for progress in place of hatred and fear.

Letters to the Editor

Background knowledge needed before criticism

I am a little confused after reading John Vigil's letter on the uncaring conservatism.

As a person who extols the virtues of training homeless and jobless people, what part of the conservative approach offends you?

That homeless should be taught how to take care of themselves, if you teach a man to fish, you will feed him: for a lifetime? I mean, which word didn't you understand?

Both phrases suggest that the jobless/homeless are best served by being taught dependency on themselves (not Big Brother) to lift themselves out of their poverty.

Also, the confidence a homeless person will gain from earning a job through his/her own work (training, education, etc) versus a handout, will transfer into the confidence it takes to keep the job.

Unless I misunderstood, this is in line with your position, isn't it?

As far as Reagan's role in all this, you are backwards.

The number of crazy people is independent on how many institutions we have. See, it is an illness, that is why they call it "mental illness." They have no choice.

I mean, nobody wakes up and says, "Since Reagan did not spend enough on institutions, I am gonna be a crazy person today. That'll fix 'em!"

And about placing these people on the streets, check out the ACLU and other like-minded non-conservative groups who went around winning the release of harmless mentally ill persons on grounds that "it is not a crime, so mandatory confinement is unlawful" and John Doe takes a walk.

As far as conservative activism: It is called the Heritage Foundation, look into it.

Not to mention Jack Kemp's proposals, which would replace dependency with tenant ownership, which was shot down by the Democrats in Congress.

When it comes to criticizing that which you do not know; if you can't walk the walk, don't talk the talk.

—Edward J May, junior, aviation

Society shifts to liberal values of modern age

Again Caldwell preaches to us of old fashioned, conservative values. Anyone so quick to condemn people, for any reason, while preaching of old fashioned values should read the Bible more closely.

Proverbs 14:21 "He that despiseth his neighbor sinneth; but he hath mercy on the poor, happy is he."

Luke 6:35-37 "Be ye merciful, as your Father also is merciful, Judge not, and ye shall not be judged; condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned; forgive, and ye shall be forgiven."

The way to peace, the way to solutions, is to work and look upon every one in the world as your brother.

Did you ever consider the possibility that America is moving away from conservative values because of all the self-righteousness and hypocrisy that seems to go along with the conservative movement?

—Ron Weiss, senior, administration of justice

More police needed behind local bar

I am writing in response to a public thank you I saw in the Nov. 15 issue of the DE.

It was written by a woman thanking a few gentlemen for helping her fiance.

Apparently her fiance was attacked by three guys, and I suppose, beat severely.

This letter is really to question the University and Carbondale police departments.

Recently a few of my friends were jumped outside a local bar.

My friends had done nothing to them. I guess they were just looking for a fight.

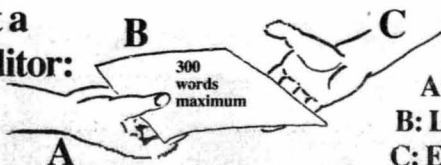

I was wondering why there are so many cops patrolling the Strip area and not the blocks surrounding them.

I know that fights could break out in larger capacity on the strip because of the amount of people there.

I don't see why it is not possible for a few cops to patrol behind and around the bars.

—Eric Patterson, freshman, aviation

How to submit a letter to the editor:

Proven children's exposure to media violence show they act more aggressively than children not exposed.

For example, Ronald Zamora, 15, of Miami, said he killed an 83-year-old woman because he was the victim of subliminal television messages.

Likewise, serial killer Ted Bundy said media depictions inspired him to stalk and kill women.

"I believe it may be a part of aggressive actions, but (media violence) is not a major influence on children's behavior," Best said.

"We tend to assume toys have a power over children, but they really are only props," he said. "Interactions with peers and parents are a child's influence."

Some children in Mrs. Standt's second-grade class at Lewis School said television helped them decide the toys they will ask Santa Claus to bring them.

Anthony Miller, 7, said he wants the good guy action figures from the Fox television program "The Mighty Morphin Power Rangers."

Jonathan Mah, 7, said he saw the video game Street Fighter II in Sunday's newspaper and decided to ask for the game.

Traffic violations give police big headaches

American News Service

Whether it's the stress of getting to and from work, racing to the store or the day care center — or just not paying attention — Du Quoin and Pinckneyville-area drivers are getting sloppy.

"Some of the worst drivers in the world live here in Du Quoin. They think turn signals are an option," says Craig Odum, Du Quoin Police officer.

Odum says traffic violations are a pet peeve of his. "I could follow anybody that lives in Du Quoin for three blocks and be able to stop them for a moving violation," he said. He said turn signals and rolling stops are the worst violations in Du Quoin.

"The law says you have to use turn signals, even when you change lanes," he said.

Another safety problem is at the Southtown Shopping Center.

At 11 p.m. when the traffic lights turn yellow, drivers will stop on the yellow and almost get hit from behind," he said.

He said, none of these laws are hard to understand.

resolving that conflict." Strom said. "Educating people on how to resolve conflict through something other than violence is one answer."

Strom said the Government needs to review more legislation to prohibit the use or possession of a handgun by juveniles.

"Saving lives is ultimately more important than a person's right to carry types of weapons that appear to have very little practical value," Strom said.

Brian Lott, press secretary for Congressman Jerry Costello, D-Belleville, said his office refrained from endorsing the bill because it was a distraction from the debate on crime control.

Illinois will be exempt from the Brady system because the state already has a three day waiting period and a background computer check, Lott said.

"One thing we're concerned about is the perception it is a solution to the overall crime problem when it's not," Lott said. "It infringes on the rights of people who obey the law."

Costello's stance against the bill comes from his experience as a police officer, where he learned that criminals can get guns illegally regardless of restrictions, he said.

"One of the things he (Costello) does is support stiffer penalties for people who buy guns illegally," Lott said.

Christopher Ryan, press secretary for Sen. Paul Simon, D-Makanda, said Simon endorsed the bill as well as shared in its first congressional hearing in 1986.

"It's clear that there are positive implications to having a waiting period," Ryan said.

In 1991, more than 1,700 convicted felons were denied the purchase of guns because of the three day Illinois waiting period, he said.

"Clearly there is a crime problem in our society and this is an affirmative way to address the violent crime problem in our society," Ryan said. "This is a small step forward."

Ryan said Costello's office has a multi-pronged effort to reduce crime in society.

"Sen. Simon has introduced the toughest gun-dealer licensing reform in Congress," Ryan said. "It get tough on fly by night gun dealers who sell firearms from a hotel room, their trunk and the side of the road."

Dave Stricklin, press secretary for Congressman Glenn Poshard, D-Marion, said his office was against the bill.

"We've always felt the Brady Bill was overly restrictive on the rights of law abiding citizens," Stricklin said. "Limits placed on basic freedoms must be as least restrictive as possible."

Poshard's office believes that to combat violence in society, the United States should focus its efforts on tough, stiff penalties for people who commit crime, Stricklin said.

"At this point you have to hope that what supporters of the Brady Bill are saying about its ability to make a difference in the crime situation comes true," Stricklin said.

"You have to hope it occurs without the infringement on the rights of law abiding citizens, which concerns people who oppose the Brady Bill."

Stricklin said the Government must be careful in placing restrictions on a right that is one foundation of the constitution.

Clinton was impassive during the outburst and warned off others in the audience who began booing and shouting down the man. "That's okay, that's all right," the president said, "I don't take it personally. I'd rather have that man in here screaming at me than have him give up all together."

The encounter came after Clinton visited with seven AIDS victims, including Larry Singletary, 38, a lifelong Washington resident who told reporters beforehand he had been in the hospital for four months. He told Clinton, as their hands were locked in a long clasp, "The virus might attack my body, but it can't take my spirit."

Singletary engaged in a long chat with Clinton and did a little lobbying, telling the president his hope is "that you appropriate lots of money so research can be done." He had told reporters before the president arrived that he felt the administration's effort had not been sufficient.

During his speech, Clinton offered a modest defense of the administration's efforts to fight the epidemic, recounting its increases in funding for AIDS research and treatment, his appointment of an AIDS coordinator, his willingness to discuss the disease and other steps.

"Part of my job is to be a lightning rod," Clinton added. "Part of my job is to lift the hopes and aspirations of the American people, knowing that as long as you try to lift hopes and lift aspirations, you can never fully close the gap between what you're reaching for and what you're actually doing, and knowing for sure that there's no way I can now keep everybody alive who already has AIDS."

Clinton, who delivered his remarks with a pair of quilts embroidered with the names of AIDS victims as a backdrop, said his administration had done a "good job... if you measure 'good job' in terms of organizing ourselves properly, funding the effort more adequately, identifying some of the major problems in the bureaucracy and going after them."

He referred to an article in the New York Times last Sunday by journalist Jeffrey Schmalz, who died recently of AIDS.

Schmalz lamented that the disease was becoming a forgotten issue even as almost 90 Americans a day die of it, and he rebuked Clinton for not doing enough. The president said he accepted the rebuke, adding, "I invite you to tell me what else you think I can do and to ask yourselves what else you can do."

Clinton's central message Wednesday was that AIDS now affects virtually everyone in the country and in some way has "diminished the life of every American."

For nearly everyone in the country, Clinton said, "The face of AIDS is no longer the face of a stranger. Millions and millions of us have now stood at the bedside of a dying friend and grieved — Millions and millions of us now know people who have had AIDS and who have died of it who are both gay and heterosexual, both."

The position will be responsible for developing, implementing and leading the University's program for identification, evaluation and cultivation and solicitation of annual and major gifts in the region, he said.

The University's 125th anniversary gala, which is planned for the spring, will be a Chicago and was orchestrated Chicago alumni.

Waters said the gala is the first of many planned events and will serve as a kick-off of fundraising and public relations in the area.

Theater size creates intimate mood

Stage Company performs Simon comedy 'The Good Doctor'

By Charlotte Rivers
Entertainment Writer

Ten short stories by Anton Chekhov have been spun into a series of vignettes by playwright Neil Simon, with a common thread interwoven by the character of a nameless writer/narrator.

"The Good Doctor," a comedy presented by the Stage Company, is not typical Simon fare, director Stan Hale said.

"There is some snappy dialogue and Simon's brand of humor is recognizable, but the story lines remain intact," Hale said. "I think we will have people rolling in the aisles."

The Stage Company theater, with a seating capacity of 98, is an intimate setting for productions, Hale said.

"There is not a bad seat in the house," he said.

Bruce Welker, who plays the writer/narrator agreed. Welker, who estimates that he has acted in 215 plays, said he welcomes the smaller size of the theater. This is his first Stage Company production.

"Most theaters are so big," he said. "Here I can have eye contact with the audience. It is fun; a wonderful way to get away from the real world."

Welker, who has played in other Simon works, played the same part in "The Good Doctor" 13 years ago, he said.

"This play is so different than his other plays," he said. "Right now, this one is my favorite."

The play is a series of 10 stories, each with one or two players, for a total cast of 20.

The players include both actors who frequently appear at the theater and some new faces, Hale said.

Bruce Walker, the play narrator, rear, describes a scene with Pete Housman, front left, as Brassilhov, and Barbara Farris, Mrs. Brassilhov, front right, at a play house. Housman was sneezed on by another spectator played by Bruce DeVantier with his acting wife, Cathy Field in the play The Good Doctor.

"The age range is from 16 to 60 plus," he said.

Roy Weshinsky, who co-founded the theater in 1982, said the theater has a selection committee that reads plays almost continuously.

"They make recommendations that the council either accepts or rejects," he said.

"The Good Doctor" opens at 8 p.m. Friday, 8:30 p.m. Saturday (because of The Lights Fantastic Parade) and at 2 p.m. Sunday. It continues Dec. 10, to 12 and Dec. 17 to 19 at the Stage Company on Washington Street in Carbondale.

Tickets are $7 for evening performances and $5 for matinees.

Artists present holiday show be an artist to become a member of the gallery."

The Associated Artists Gallery will ring in the holiday season with its 10th annual Christmas show which opens Friday with a public reception.

The Christmas show, which exhibits a variety of works, including photography and poetry, is expected to be very popular this year, gallery publicist Bob Hageman said.

"We have always had a lot of traffic at this show," he said. "People like to buy local artist's works as Christmas presents."

Hageman said there are about 35 members in the gallery, located at 213 S. Illinois Ave., and about one-third will display exhibits in the show.

Recent membership rule changes now allow anyone to become a member, but works exhibited at the shows are juried by gallery members, he said.

"Not all members of the gallery are artists," Hageman said. "Anyone can become a member — they do not have to

A recent fund-raising program, which was expected to raise money for the gallery, has helped, but Hageman said he hopes it will increase as the Christmas season progresses.

"We haven't seen as big a response as we had hoped," he said. "But it has helped us out. We will keep the program going through the duration of the show."

The program allows people to color or decorate an outline of a hand and make a donation to the gallery.

Hageman said the program would have been more successful if it was at a different time of year.

"In addition to the hand decorating program, our membership has gained close to half a dozen members, so we are happy with that."

The Christmas show will run at the gallery from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday until the end of the month.

For more information, call the gallery at 457-4743.

Rap artist Snoop Doggy Dogg has become one of several music industry figures to advocate via lyrics of his popular songs the use of marijuana.

Musicians promote marijuana smoking

Record labels present artists with varying views toward pot, controlled substances

By Thomas Gibson
Entertainment Writer

Record labels stand behind their artists, even though artists may portray a message advocating the use of drugs, a record label official says.

Rap Group Cypress Hill, Dr. Dre and the alternative rock group The Lemonheads all speak about drugs in a positive and negative manner.

Sheri Moore, public relations director for Ruffhouse Records, said its group Cypress Hill merely states they smoke marijuana, and those who also smoke should not be chastised for it.

Members of the platinum-certified group regularly speak out about their quest to legalize marijuana.

They have been known to light joints in mid-performance as well as backstage at the Billboard Music Awards.

Moore said even though there are certain video shows that may not play the group's videos, it is not a deterrent in selling records.

Evan Dando of The Lemonheads wrote a song titled "My Drug Buddy." The connotation is completely different from trying to promote drugs it addresses an experience he had with his friend.

Dre's album "The Chronic," which was at No. 1 on the R&B charts for a more than six weeks, is titled for a potent strain of marijuana and bears the motto "In Bud We Trust."

The CD also features an art rendition of a pot leaf. Snoop Doggy Dogg who rapped solo on three of the tracks on "The Chronic," also is an advocate of marijuana use.

His debut CD "Doggystyle," has him posing with a joint in his mouth.

Sheila Elridge, former publicist for Dre, classifies the apparent trend to tout the use of marijuana as "junior rebel stuff indicated by fashion and style."

She said it is not the record labels' job to censor groups because of what they say. The labels are in the business to make the product available to people when they buy it.

Moore said people buy records for the music, not because groups like Cypress Hill wants to legalize marijuana.

She said kids will react to music and not to someone who takes drugs.

"Shaking your finger does not do anything and announcing to the world that you take drugs does not either," Moore said.

Moore said there are more potential drawbacks to an image linked to drug abuse, but points out there are drawbacks to any image.

"You can be too squeaky clean, too," she said. "I would like to believe it all boils down to whether people like the song or not."

Drug use embedded in entertainment lifestyle

By Thomas Gibson
Entertainment Writer

Entertainment industry executives say the death of actor River Phoenix is a result of the business' vicious reward system, which congratulates creativity and artistic talent with drugs and alcohol.

Christi Cash, promotional director at Giant Records, said musicians who advocate drug usage live by the notion that illegal drugs help them create.

"Record labels stand behind the artists who glorify drugs because they have a freedom to voice their opinion," she said. "In addition, it doesn't hurt that the group might sell millions of albums and the label just lets them go on."

Political awareness statements often are made by artists disparaging drug use, but Cash said musicians and actors are not practicing what they preach.

"Most of the musicians and music stars are using drugs at an alarming rate. It has started happening recently (at its highest rate) since the '70s," she said.

Cash said the drugs of choice for the young and care restless are Ecstasy, marijuana and heroin.

Ken Dancyger, associate professor of film at the prestigious New York University, said since film became a popular part of American culture, the industry has offered wealth to those who succeed.

"The people most of whom were young had more money than they could spend, so they over indulged in drinks and drugs," he said.

Drug usage was kept in the parameters of that certain group - getting high and partying was the thing to do after they had it all, he said.

Dancyger said being a movie star in the early part of the century was a part of the "American dream." Rock and rap music's recent popularity has now become a part of the scene, he said.

"Society will emulate these stars in whatever they do because they want to be just like them - not so much the money, but the glamour and attention," he said.

Dancyger said the stars themselves draw strength from past stars they admire and might conduct themselves in the same fashion. For example, F. Scott Fitzgerald, one of the best authors of the 20th century, lived a flamboyant lifestyle, he said.

"Fitzgerald indulged in almost anything that was glamorous - though full of talent, more than any young author his age - he drank his life away dying at a young age of an alcoholic death," Dancyger said.

Dancyger said he has noticed how the new generation is rapidly moving back to the flashy lifestyles that the 1920s and 1980s had to offer, but with a different flavor.

He said today's world is very different than his generation, which donned leather jackets and wore Levi jeans, drinking liquor until the late hours of the night.

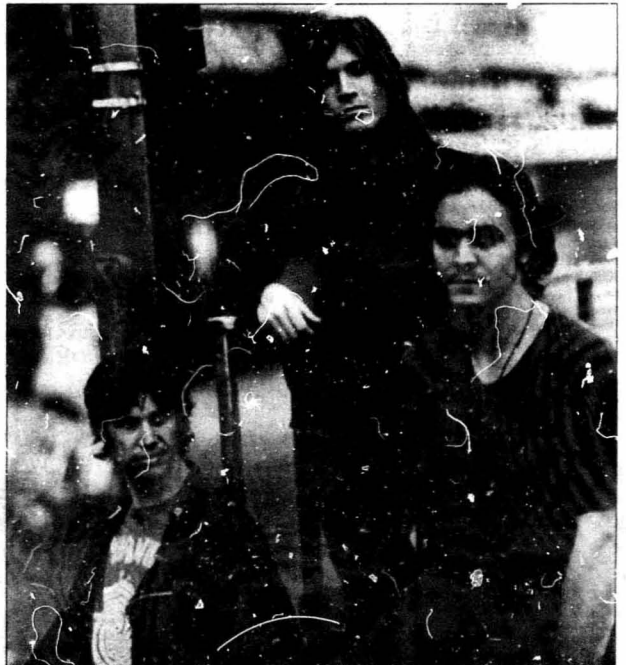

Dancyger said the major difference between the stars of present and past is most of the stars do not practice what they preach.

A motto of punk rock excess said by Debbie Harry (Blondie) was "Live fast, die young, stay pretty."

Changing political environments affect policy making—professor

By Troy Schultz
General Assignment Writer

The move to merge the field of politics with the academics of political science was the topic in an open discussion Wednesday sponsored by Pi Sigma Alpha in the Student Center.

Barbara Brown, a SIUC professor of political science, told audience members that political practitioners are looking toward individuals involved in the academic side of politics to instruct them in creating a more efficient and effective government.

"There is a generational change in the White House to turn to people who possess analytical skills for public policy making," Brown said.

"Even municipal governments are turning to trained professors of political science to bring their body of knowledge into the actual process of governing."

Brown, an active participant in politics as well as an instructor in the discipline, sees more people like herself becoming more of an asset.

"I am challenged by playing this intermediary role," she said. "It broadens my experience and body of knowledge by being involved in the political world, and in the classroom."

Brown hopes there is an increase in demand for the services of people who choose to serve in this practical approach.

Marc-C' Pufong, president of Pi

Sigma Alpha, said the goal of the discussions is to foster a relationship between the educational experience of political science with the people in Government.

"This is a chance for instructors of political science and people of government to come together and discuss the state of political science and the government in general," he said.

The final discussion for the fall semester will be Dec. 8. The guest speaker will be John Jackson, professor of political science and dean of the College of Liberal Arts.

Pi Sigma Alpha will continue to offer the open discussions from 12 to 1 p.m. every Wednesday in the Student Center.

Holiday handiwork up for grabs at sale

By Sean L. N. Hao
Special Assignment Writer

The annual Holiday Craft Sale has grown in the last 15 years into a showcase for local and regional artists and craftspeople.

Jeweler and sculptor Allan Stuck said the event has grown since he first participated more than two years ago.

"It's a way for craftspeople to put their stuff in front of a large group of people," he said.

Stuck, who specializes in designing wedding rings and stone carvings set in precious metals, said it can be hard at times for struggling local artists to make a living at their chosen profession.

"It can be difficult to make a living in a town of only 27,000," he said.

"This is something I enjoy doing but it's hard work," Stuck he said.

Debra Johnson-Jones, arts and crafts coordinator for the Student Center, said the crafts sale has grown recently into a regional showcase.

"We not only show area crafts, but artists from Missouri, Kentucky, Indiana and Tennessee sell here as well," she said.

She said more than 75 artists and craftspeople will sell hand-crafted items ranging in price from $3 to around $140, including holiday decorations, ceramic ware, jewelry, woodwork and glass-blown toys

"Students and staff look for gifts to take home that are unique and one of a kind," she said.

Among some of the more unique non-holiday related items are the erotic jewelry of Dave Dardis, owner of Rain Maker Studio in Makanda.

Dardis, who creates erotic art with heating bronze rods and using wax to form jewelry and sculptures, said the show is one of the largest of the Christmas season in the area.

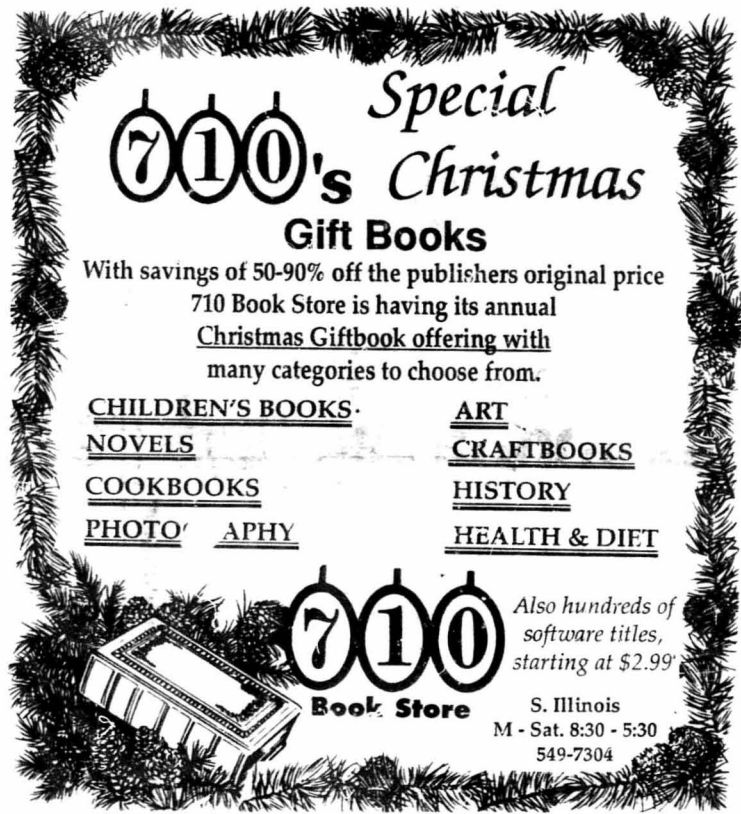

Dardis said the art sells well at SIUC, as well as the other shows he attends while spending five months out of the year attending crafts fairs.

"It offends some people and makes others laugh, but it always gets a response," he said.

The show gives local artists exposure during a crucial period of the selling season, Dardin said.

"It reestablishes them for the rest of the year and allows them to keep in touch with people," he said.

The Holiday Crafts Fair starts today in the Hall of Fame Lounge and the International Lounge of the Student Center and will run through Saturday.

"It's something that'll benefit the community."

The SIUC Wellness Center, Carbondale liquor establishments and the health department are part of the Health Safety Challenge.

Barb Fijolek, coordinator of the Wellness Center's drug and alcohol program, said the center is involved in the challenge on a support level by educating bartenders and providing other information to the community.

"I'm pleased that bars on the Strip have a positive attitude to this — they've tried to be helpful and reduce risks and make a safe and healthy holiday," she said.

Fijolek said that in addition to the challenge, the Wellness Center will run a pledge program from 4 to 7 p.m. today at the Student Recreation Center, where students can pledge not to drink over the holiday period and get their picture taken with Santa Claus for free.

"This is the thing students are most likely to die from while they're in college — a drunken driving accident," she said.

Choir to provide seasonal music, Christmas cheer

By Stephanie Moletti
Entertainment Writer

Although holiday music will be the emphasis, audience members will get a peek inside the heavens during the "Christmas Collage V" at John A. Logan College.

An evening of Christmas music will be presented by the John A. Logan Choir under the direction of Karen Sala, associate professor of music at the college.

"We present a formal, candlelight concert," Sala said. "The performance consists of two sections, with the first being the heavier, older, more classic Christmas music and the second being a lighter 'frightlight' selection of songs."

The choir will perform holiday classics including "Hallelujah Chorus" from Handel's "Messiah," "Angels We Have Heard On High," "Mary Had A Baby," "It's Beginning To Look A Lot Like Christmas," "Winter Wonderland" and "White Christmas."

The show will end with "Jingle Bell Rock" and an appearance from Santa Claus. Santa will pass out candy canes to children in the audience, Sala said.

"We're playing for all ages," she said. "It really turns out to be a nice evening of music and theater."

A one-act holiday play, "Best of Intentions," will give the audience and the choir a break from the music.

The play was written by Steve Falcone, professor of English at the college.

Falcone gave the short story as a Christmas gift a few years ago to colleague and play director, Tom Oliboni, a history professor at the college.

Oliboni, an SIUC graduate, adapted the short story for the stage.

"I adapted it to the stage, but it didn't take a lot. Steve (Falcone) stresses the human voice," Oliboni said. "It's a great story."

"I want it to be a surprise for the audience," Oliboni said. "We have one stage performer and several voice performers (actors heard but not seen.) We're trying a variety of new things. We have tech workers on stage making appearances during the show."

Kent Atchison, 20, of Carbondale, is the only actor on stage during the 15-minute performance.

"I'm the only one on stage, so I have to maintain the audience's focus," Atchison said. "It's a little more challenging and taxing than some of my other performances."

Falcone said his short story was meant to be read at Christmas.

"It's heaven in a modern story with God as many voices," Falcone said.

This is the third original play performed by the John A. Logan Theater Department and the second of Falcone's to be performed.

His first play was "Paris Sketches," performed earlier this semester.

The performance is at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday in O'Neill Auditorium at the college in Carterville.

The evening's performances will be preceded by a buffet dinner.

There will be Christmas caroling in the dining area during dinner by the Chamber Ensemble. Reservations are required for the dinner.

Buffet tickets are $8 for the general public and $4 for students. Tickets to the performance are $4 for general public and $3 for students and children.

For ticket information contact the Office of Cultural Affairs at the college, at 549-7335 extension 416.

1993 Fall Semester Final Exam Schedule

The examination schedule attempts to avoid examination conflicts by providing separate examination periods for Tuesday-Thursday lecture classes. Other information about final examinations is listed below:

1. The class final exam period is scheduled based on the meeting time and days configuration listed on the first line of the class entry in the Schedule of Classes book (which should be the same as the first printed line for the section on the registered student's schedule print-out). For example, a class section is listed in the Schedule book on two lines in the manner:

09:00 - 10:50 W TH

The listed starting time for the first line of the entry is "9:00". The meeting days of that first line are "T TH", and therefore are in the category "Only T or TH or T TH". The Exam Date and Period is by the attached Fall '93 Final Examination Schedule to be Tuesday, Dec. 14 at 7:50 a.m. - 9:50 a.m.

2. Classes should plan to hold their final examination in their regularly scheduled class rooms. The space scheduling section of the Office of Admissions and Records will forward to departments information relative to the location for examinations for those classes that cannot hold their examinations in their regularly scheduled rooms because of a space conflict. This will be done sufficiently in advance of the final examination days to provide adequate notice for all. Classes that meet less than the entire semester should hold their exams during the last regular class session prior to final examinations.

Please note that University policy indicates that exams are not to be given prior to exam week, or at times other than those scheduled.

3. Students who find they have more than three examinations on one day may petition, and students who have two examinations scheduled at one time should petition their academic dean for approval to take an examination during the make-up examination period on the last day. Provision for such a make-up examination period does not mean that students may decide to miss the scheduled examination time and expect to make it up during this make-up period. This period is to be used only for students whose petitions have been approved by their dean.

Golebiewski and Beth Diehl on the league's academic all-conference team.

Locke said the latter shows there is more to a successful volleyball program than the won-loss ledger it will ultimately be judged on.

"I would really like my program to be evaluated overall: not just wins and losses," Locke said. "I am certainly happy we have a lot of positive things happening outside of the court. It means we have good student-athletes."

Those post season academic honors capped an up-and-down season for the Salukis that saw them go from the high of beating conference powerhouse Northern Iowa Sept. 24 to the low of a late-season four-match losing streak that ultimately cost them a shot at the tournament.

Included in that streak was a crushing home loss to Bradley Oct. 29.

It was the second loss to the Lady Braves this season after SIUC had forged a 13-0 mark against BU in the all-time series.

Those two losses hurt the Salukis the most of their nine league defeats, as the Lady Braves' presence in the four-way fourth-place tie bumped SIUC out of contention.

Ironically, it was Bradley that made the most progress along with SIUC from their 1992 finishes. Picked to finish sixth and seventh, respectively, the Lady Braves and Salukis exceeded expectations to tie for fourth with Wichita State and Indiana State.

"I told the kids there was no way we were finishing seventh. I was not going to let them practice or play like a seventh-place team," Locke said. "I knew for a fact they were better than seventh place."

or second team next year."

Several other Salukis on a team comprised of nine freshmen and sophomores gained another season of experience while posting solid numbers.

Junior Kim Cassidy teamed with Golebiewski to solidify the setter slot, while Diehl showed twice — Sept. 25 against Drake and Oct. 9 against Wichita State — that she is capable of single-handedly carrying the team on her shoulders.

Steen capped off a strong two-year stint with the Salukis with a solid final season, while junior Mariko Fujita and sophomores Alicia Hansen and Shelby Best provided much-needed depth off the bench.

Parke came back strong from her injury and turned in a solid second half of the season.

Three first-year players stepped in to provide some offensive punch and hope for the future.

Freshmen Jodi Revoir and Jenny Parks showed promising power, while fellow frosh Becky Chappel chipped in strong defense and serving.

That serving was non-existent in the Salukis' home and conference opener Sept. 7.

SIUC committed 24 serving errors and dropped a five-game decision to Indiana State.

The loss, one Locke called one of the bigger disappointments of the season, dropped SIUC to 1-3 through four games.

The Salukis rebounded to win six of their next eight matches, but Locke could only imagine the start the Salukis could have had.

"We had a very good season, but it started out with a little more promise than it ended with," Locke said.

"Having to adjust the lineup didn't really hurt us, but I feel like we would have been stronger had we started out the season the way we planned."

The Salukis got revenge on the Sycamores in their final conference match Nov. 10.

Down 2-0 and facing elimination, SIUC fought back to win the next three games and snatch victory from the jaws of defeat.

The road win was only the fourth on the season for SIUC, but Locke said she felt her team was more competitive away from Carbondale than in the past.

"I thought we played better on the road," Locke said. "We didn't win the number of matches I expected, but I thought we performed better. I think that was progress."

The Salukis can look for further progress in 1994 as SIUC will return five starters and 12 letterwinners. Locke said she hopes to sign three players in the spring, but said the team that could take SIUC into the top four in the conference is on campus right now.

"I think (the program is) ready to take the next step," Locke said. "The expectations are going to be extremely high and we are starting right now."

While Locke and her Salukis are looking ahead to '94, Locke said she can look back on '93 and take some hope from her third season as SIUC's head coach.

"It makes me feel like the work, the loss of sleep, the tears and the nervousness were all worth it," Locke said.

"It is going to be worth it, because I have this feeling that we will be a better team next season."

"This past season leaves me with a lot of hope for 1994."

"They won't be swimming scared, they'll be taking care of thing's that count."

On the women's side, SIUC will try and continue their early season success and get back on track after losing at Michigan in their last meet. Their overall record this fall is 5-2, but head coach Mark Kluemper said the his squads confidence is intact.

"It (Michigan meet) was a temporary disappointment and they realized what they were up against," he said. "We're back to basics now and back to hard work."

With close to half the season already in the books, this weekends invite carries with it a preview of what to expect down the stretch. Even with teams like Kansas and Nebraska awaiting the Salukis in January, the swimmers can't overlook the importance of this meet.

"This is the highlight of the first half of the season and other than our conference meet and the NCAA Championships, this is our biggest meet," Kluemper said.

Lisa Holland, Laura Humphrey and Kathy Braeken are just a few of the Saluki swimmers making waves this season. They'll face some stiff competition this weekend, though, as Ball State, Missouri and Illinois State are among the stronger swimming schools

Kluemper hopes being at home will give his athletes some kind of advantage, since they'll be able to sleep in their own beds and eat on their own schedule.

"Just being at home is a big advantage," he said. "They know the pool and its lighting and it makes a big difference."

"Throw in a home crowd and it all blends in to provide us with a big advantage."

The swimmers will take the blocks for the first time on Friday evening at 6 o'clock p.m. and action will resume Saturday morning at 10 o'clock a.m.

Coach questions blame for stunt

Newsday

There are so many questions for the coach—deep hard looks inside himself and into his team—and no satisfying answers. Only more questions, and painful thoughts that make Tom Casey's blue eyes fill with mist.

Should the coach have seen something that told him Michael Macias would lie in the darkened road and defy cars to hit him?

Was there something the coach should have said or done that would have prevented a young man from shattering his life with stupid bravado?

Is it the nature of what football teaches—hit; play with reckless abandon; if you play not to get hurt you're sure to be hurt.

"I don't think it's football. I don't think Michael died that because he's an athlete," Casey mused Tuesday. "I don't have any answers. I just go back to young people saying, 'It won't happen to me.' I just don't understand what it will take for young people to understand."

Surely, as sympathetic as we may be to a 17-year-old who looks forward to the therapy and to the invitation to play on the wheelchair volleyball team at Kessler's Rehabilitation Center in West Orange, N.J., there is no missing the point that Michael Macias brought it on himself just as Len Bias did with cocaine.

He brought it on himself and shattered the life of the young woman who was driving, and Macias' own fragmented family.

Do we blame art because a film about college football, "The Program" has a scene in which the stars of the team prove themselves by lying in traffic, and then life imitates art?

An 18-year-old was killed and his friend injured when they defied cars and trucks in Pennsylvania the same weekend, a 24-year-old in New Jersey was killed attempting the stunt three days later.

Since the incident on Oct. 16, Casey has tried to visit Macias once a week as he fights the paralysis doctors think is permanent. "Were there signs I should have seen?" Casey said. "I'm a bachelor. I spend a lot of time alone, time reflecting on a million-and-one questions."

Casey's eyes were full as he spoke. "I try to help them grow to be responsible adults," he said. "That's infinitely more important to me than any Xs and Os I might teach. Having reflected many, many times, there were no signs."

"Michael was fun to be around. You see kids who hate practice, kids who see practice as a step toward the game; Michael loved to be around practice. I have not met many people who loved life and those around him more than Michael did."

Saluki aqua squads host invite with top competition on blocks

Anyone who hopes to squeeze in a workout this weekend at the SIUC Student Recreation Center had better be ready to fight a crowd.

Starting Friday, a wave of swimmers and divers will invade Carbondale for the 25th annual Saluki/Missouri Valley Conference Invitational. The seven-team field will include squads from Ball State, Cincinnati, Northern Iowa, Western Illinois, Southwest Missouri and the University of Missouri.

The Saluki men's team is coming off a dual meet loss to the highly touted Michigan Wolverines and posts a 1-2 record this fall. Ball State and Cincinnati are being counted on to provide the Dawgs with their main competition, but head coach Rick Walker said this year's field is one of the strongest he's seen.

"This is the deepest I've seen the competition at the invitational since I've been here," he said. "A variety of teams are strong and have a chance to pull a win off."

SIUC swimmers that look to cause the biggest wake at the invite are Pete Bonebrake, Greg Beaver, Matt Hollingsworth and Randy Roberts. The four seniors are the go-to guys this season and this weekend's meet will be an opportunity to showcase their talents, Walker said.

This year's swimmers are progressing faster than the '92 team said assistant coach Tim Kelly. Kelly said this weekend is another chance to improve the team's times.

"Looking back at where we were at this point last year, we're way ahead," he said. "We look for some lifetime best times this weekend, and this meet is always a stepping stone to where we're going."

After taking on Michigan and its No. 2 national ranking, Walker said his team is not going to back down from any challenges this year.

"After swimming against some of the people at Michigan, our athletes will not be intimidated by anything they see this weekend," he said.

Locke satisfied with season despite near miss

By Kevin Bergquist
Sports Writer

SIUC volleyball coach Sonya Locke did not want to hear it.

Locke did not want to hear the message on the other end of a phone call to Des Moines, Iowa on the night of Nov. 12.

For that call to Drake University would determine if her team was going to the Missouri Valley Conference post season tournament.

The news was not good.

Bradley had beaten Drake, 3-1, earlier that evening, so an almost two-month struggle for the fourth tournament slot came to an end for the Salukis. Their season would end the next night.

But, while SIUC's 1993 season ended on a losing note — a loss to Arkansas State in the Saluki Quad finale — and the Salukis were left to ponder missed opportunities, Locke chalked her third season as coach, here a success.

"It still has left a bad taste in my mouth that we did not make the tournament by one match," Locke said. "I am not happy about it, but having a winning season for the first time since 1989 is very exciting for me.

"One match above .500 or 10 matches above — I think that is progress."

The Salukis did finish one game over the break-even point at 14-13. Their conference mark of 7-9 was also a game better than last season's 6-10 record.

While a look at the numbers shows minimal progress, the SIUC program made strides both on and off the court that showed Locke her program is headed in the right direction.

Two Salukis — junior Deb Heyne and sophomore Heather Herdes — were all-conference selections, while both were joined by senior Brandi Stein and sophomores Kim

The SIUC basketball team blitzed Athletics in Action with 62 second-half points on its way to a 101-93 exhibition victory.

All five Saluki starters reached double figures on the night, with Paul Lusk leading all scorers with a 24-point effort.

SIUC head coach Rich Herrin said he was happy with his team's effort.

"We beat a very good basketball team tonight," Herrin said. "They came from eight down in the last 55 seconds to beat Notre Dame."

AIA got the early jump on the Dawgs, however, as Eric Bamberger hit two threes and two inside buckets to help stake his team to a 16-10 lead.

But the Dawgs answered with an 11-0 spurt over the next two and-a-half minutes to take a 21-16 lead.

Tim Pace scored seven of his eight points during the stretch and Mirko Pavlovic chipped in the other four.

Pavlovic said the team is playing well and is going to be even better once Marcelo da Silva returns to the floor.

"I think Marcelo will be a real spark for us," Pavlovic said. "He's been playing really well in practice and is going to make us even better."

AIA answered with some stiff defense to come back and eventually lead by five before going to the half with a 42-39 lead.

The Dawgs hung tough behind Pavlovic, Pace, and Marcus Timmons, who combined for 26 of the team's 39 first-half points.

Timmons, who led the team in rebounds with nine, said he is feeling more comfortable on the floor.

"Rebounding and running the floor are my strongest points," Timmons said. "I'm feeling more relaxed out there, last year I was still a little uptight."

The keys to the second half were the emergence of the other Saluki starters and free throws. Lusk scored 20 of his 24 in the second stanza, Chris Lowery scored 11 of his 13 down the stretch, Chris Carr hit for 12 of his 17 and Timmons added nine to finish with seventeen.

The Salukis also kept AIA at bay by knocking down 28 of 36 free throws, for 78 percent, in the second-half.

Lowery and Lusk did their tour of duty at the line, each nailing 11 from the charity stripe.

Another stripe that paid big dividends for SIUC was the three-point arc. The Dawgs hit 7 of 17 from downtown, with Lusk leading the pack on a 3 for 5 performance.

AIA tried to rally behind Michael Porter's 14 second-half points, but could not get any closer than 86-82 before the Dawgs scored seven of the next eight points to take a comfortable 93-83 lead with two minutes to go.

Herrin said he was happy with the way the attack was balanced.

"We had five players in double figures tonight and that's impressive," he said.

AIA coach Sharm Scheuerman said the officiating on the night's game was unbalanced.

"We expect to get less free throws than other teams on the road, but tonight was ridiculous," he said. "They shot the ball well, but we still had six more field goals than they did."

Spotlight shines on many spikers as Heyne, Herdes lead way in '93

By Kevin Bergquist
Sports Writer

Many faces shined in SIUC's surge from sixth to fourth place. None shined brighter than Heyne. Sidelined for two late-season losses to Illinois State and Bradley, Heyne still was the league's top biter at .328—4, mark second only to Locke in Saluki history.

Heyne, who finished 1993 entrenched in the top 10 in most league categories, produced her strong season despite playing out of position as a middle blocker.

Heyne was forced to play middle after Locke's first choice, sophomore Kelly Parke, was sidelined half the season with a hand injury. Heyne's play drew the attention of the league's coaches as she was named first team all-MVC.

"I kept my fingers crossed the whole time that the other coaches would recognize her and they did, and I am excited about that," Locke said. "I am glad they did because she wholeheartedly deserved it. It was just plain hard work."

Herdes, the spark plug of an emerging sophomore class, also was an all-conference pick, as she was named to the honorable mention list. Herdes was right behind Heyne in most categories, despite playing the right side, where Locke said little attention is focused.

"There are a lot of good players in our conference, so being recognized at that position is good," Locke said. "Hopefully, it will help her and she can make first
