SIUC considers collective bargaining

Low faculty pay prompts talk of new procedure

By Donita Polly
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC collective bargaining proponents will argue tonight that University faculty could earn more if they adopt the procedure, but some SIUC Faculty Senate members say collective bargaining is not good for the University as a whole. SIUC faculty salaries are lower than the average for Illinois universities and community colleges, a study by the Illinois Board of Higher Education reports.

The study found the average Illinois university faculty salary is $47,600, the average community college faculty salary is $45,800 and SIUC's average faculty salary is $44,200. This was reported in a paper compiled by the executive council of the SIUC chapter of the Illinois Education Association-National Education Association, urging adoption of collective bargaining at SIUC.

The SIUC IEA/NEA will hold its annual meeting tonight discussing faculty salaries and how collective bargaining could help negotiate higher salaries for SIUC faculty.

Jim Sullivan, president of the SIUC chapter of the IEA-NEA, said the only way faculty can change policies and get higher salaries at SIUC is by getting legal status through the organization.

"The purpose of the organization is to achieve collective bargaining for faculty at SIUC," Sullivan said.

Collective bargaining is any union-management negotiation.

According to the 1995 NEA Almanac of Higher Education, the average salaries of faculty in 4-year institutions with collective bargaining agreements is $9,354 more than the average in non-bargaining institutions.

Sullivan said without the collective bargaining status, faculty only serve an advisory role at the University.

According to a report compiled by the executive council of the SIUC/IEA-NEA, constituency groups like the Faculty Senate do necessary organizational tasks but are ineffective at causing changes.

The report states that the Faculty Senate and other faculty constituency groups debate issues while others make the real decision.

"We have a lot of positive signals from faculty that collective bargaining is what they need to accomplish things in the future of SIUC," Sullivan said.

However, Paul Harre, an associate professor in the College of Technical Careers and a Faculty Senate member, said the administrators at SIUC are the real decision makers and that is how it should be.

Annual parade draws record crowd

By Signe K. Skinion
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Jack Frost was not nipping at anyone's nose Saturday night as thousands of lights and people lined South Illinois Avenue to make Carbondale's fifth annual Lights Fantastic Parade the best yet, officials say.

Floats ranging from a lighted Snoopy and his flying doghouse by SIU's Alpha-Eta Rho, to a lighted modern art design by Arts In Celebration, paraded down the Strip.

About 1,200 participants including marching bands, the Carbondale Girl Scouts, and even llamas and Shetland ponies participated as everyone enjoyed the unusually warm weather.

Diane Dorsey, chairwoman of the parade, said this year's parade had more floats, participants and audience members than any of the previous years.

"This is definitely the biggest turnout we've had," Dorsey said. "I'm guessing the crowd is bigger because there are places on the parade route that used to be pretty empty, but are packed this year. There are more floats this year, probably by about ten. I'm hoping the

U.S. troops give Bosnian citizens glimmer of hope

Los Angeles Times

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina—Selim Beslagic, the mayor of Tuzla, is a hopeful man.

With 20,000 U.S. troops about to descend on his city in a peace-keeping mission, Beslagic anticipates jobs for his weary people, repairs for his battered roads and schools, and business for the idle cafes and restaurants of Tuzla.

But he also worries about prostitution, drugs, AIDS and other potential trouble that could come with this American invasion.

"We expect more good than bad," the popular mayor said shortly before traveling to Germany, where he planned to pick up a few more ideas by inspecting towns around U.S. military bases there.

This gloomy city of 110,000 people — plus 50,000 war refugees — is about to become the headquarters for the U.S. Army's 1st Armored Division on a mission to enforce a peace that many Bosnians are still hesitant to believe is real. For many here, it is the prospect of U.S. soldiers — distinct from discredited U.N. forces — that finally provides a glimmer of hope. But years of bloodshed, despair and disillusionment temper the enthusiasm.

Throughout the war, Tuzla was the second-largest government stronghold after the capital, Sarajevo. It is a U.N.-designated "safe area" that, while somewhat isolated, never has come under siege like Sarajevo. Shelled on several occasions, Tuzla nevertheless has escaped the wholesale destruction of the capital and other Bosnian towns, and it is relatively stable, despite its large, bitter refugee population.

The city straddles the Jala River and is dotted with drab Communist-

RUSSIA MAY FACE FURTHER CHECHEN CONFLICT — MOSCOW—The Moscow-backed government of Chechnya, fighting to retain control of the republic against a separatist insurgency, on Saturday welcomed a Russian decree that rebels who surrender their weapons in the year-old war may be granted amnesty. But ardent Chechen separatists seem unlikely to relinquish their guns, especially now — just two weeks before controversial parliamentary elections across Russia. Their leader-in-exile, ousted President Dzhokhar M. Dudayev, has vowed to disrupt the elections and launch a new initiative against the hated Russian garrison in Chechnya. Taking Dudayev's vows of violence seriously, the Russian commander of troops in Chechnya warned in a newspaper interview that the conflict might spill outside Chechnya's borders and into the Russian heartland.

ALGERIAN PRESIDENT OFF TO PROMISING START — PARIS—When Algeria's military-backed government insisted on staging elections two weeks ago, the odds were good for a disaster. The country was, after all, in the midst of a vicious civil war, and key political opponents were either in jail or exile. Yet when former Gen. Liamine Zeroual placed his hand on the Koran last week, officially taking the oath of office as Algeria's sixth president, it was clear that the North African nation of 28 million people had not only survived its election but may well have taken a small step toward peace. Zeroual has already moved to renew his call for a "national dialogue" with Islamic opponents. In one of his first official acts, he closed a prison camp in the Sahara Desert, releasing about 640 Islamic militants who had been held there without trial.

ECONOMISTS UNIMPRESSED WITH GOP TAX PLAN — WASHINGTON—It is touted as a premier example of family-friendly tax relief, a Republican plan to give households a welcome break for the expense of bringing up children. Yet the GOP's proposed $500-per-child tax credit, now embroiled in budget talks between Congress and the White House, finds few friends among economists. The Republican proposal — a $500 credit for each dependent child younger than 18 — would cost the Treasury $147 billion overall by the year 2002, yet it occupies a prominent spot in the GOP plan to balance the budget by then: It would take effect in the last quarter of this year, creating a $125 credit in 1995.

NUCLEAR PLANT FALLS SHORT OF EXPECTATIONS — SPRING CITY, Tenn.—In 1972, when Tennessee Valley Authority executives broke ground on a nuclear plant in this scenic corner of Appalachia, they promised it would provide a quick, cheap and safe means of meeting the power requirements of the surrounding population, which they projected would burgeon. Far from speedy, construction of the Watts Bar 1 facility, completed a month ago, took 23 years. At $7 billion, the price tag for the 1,218-megawatt plant exceeds initial estimates by more than a dozen times and is 10 times higher than comparably sized plants located elsewhere in the United States.

Corrections/Clarifications

In the Dec. 1 calendar, the sponsor given for the World AIDS Day was incorrect. The rally was organized by the World AIDS Day Planning Committee and sponsored by student leaders across campus.

In the Dec. 1 story on World AIDS Day, Erika Kohoutek's name was misspelled.

In the Dec. 1 graphic titled "AIDS cases in U.S. population continue to rise" was labeled incorrectly. The graphic should have indicated that the number of monthly diagnoses of AIDS cases increased from 1,500 in January 1989 to 2,000 in February 1994.

What would happen if I...?: Jason Leers, a junior in Radio and Television from Chicago, hangs Christmas lights for decoration in Warren Hall for the building's weekend Christmas party.

'Tis the season to charge it, or maybe not?

By Cynthia Sheets
Daily Egyptian Reporter

With 21 Christmas shopping days left, Santa Claus, or perhaps his much younger brother, appeared in the University Mall flanked on all sides by mall workers shouting "Merry Christmas" to hundreds of shoppers Sunday.

This may not be the traditional Christmas image of years past, when the holidays meant being with family more than expensive gifts; but some SIUC students say that time is long forgotten.

Josephine Appiah, a freshman in accounting from Chicago, said people have forgotten the concept of Christmas and are thinking only of the presents they will receive.

"People focus on the gifts," Appiah said. "If you get anything for Christmas you should be grateful."

Appiah was shopping at University Mall with Tamica Owens, a freshman in early childhood education from Bellwood.

Owens said she enjoyed Christmas much more when she was a child.

"I would give Santa Claus a bologna sandwich and wait for him to come, but I would always fall asleep," Owens said. "Now, people say, 'I want

Helping children: Black Affairs Council aids community

By Lori D. Clark
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Along with other members of the Black Affairs Council, SIUC senior Jason Irvin helped start off the holiday season by giving, not receiving.

Irvin assisted in handing out Christmas gifts to Carbondale children at the Eurma Hayes Community Center in Carbondale on Saturday, through a program sponsored by the council.

Gwen Fleming, council member, said the children received a variety of gifts ranging from CD players, remote control cars, dolls and books.

Irvin, said the children were appreciative of the gifts they received.

"They were very grateful," Irvin said.

"They were very surprised at the items they received. You can see the kids really like the gifts."

Council and its umbrella organizations sponsor children ages 5 to 14.

The council sponsors six children through the program, and 60 children altogether are involved in the year-round annual program, which is 4-years-old, Fleming said.

Irvin said the council also participates in tutoring programs, taking the children to movies and basketball games.

"It's our way of serving the community as well as the campus. It's our way of giving back to the community."

Jason Irvin
Black Affairs Council member

Irvin said the main reason for the program is to provide the children with mentors.

"We want to give guidance," Irvin said. "Some of the children's lives aren't pleasant, we don't want them to make bad decisions, so we provide mentorship for the children. We go out and spend time with the kids and play with them and talk to them. We want to provide role models through their pre-adolescent development."

Fleming said the program benefits the council and its umbrella organizations as well as the children.

"It gives us an opportunity to interact with the children," she said. "It offers them (the children) someone to look up to. It's an opportunity for us to go to the center and give back to the children and spend time with them. I think it's a positive program and they like it a lot."

Irvin said sponsoring the children gives the organization an opportunity to assist in the community.

"It's our way of serving the community as well as the campus. It's our way of giving back to the community."

Candlelight vigil illuminates the reality of AIDS

By Melissa Jakubowski
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Holding back tears, Erika Kohoutek shared the story of her stepmother, a wife, mother and survivor of AIDS, as an example showing anyone can become infected with the AIDS virus.

"AIDS does not discriminate, people do," she said. "It doesn't matter how you get it, it's everyone's disease and we all have to live with it."

Kohoutek, a junior in English from Chicago, shared the story of her stepmother in honor of World AIDS Day at a candlelight vigil Friday night. The rally was sponsored by the Southern Illinois Regional Effort for AIDS and numerous campus organizations.

Kohoutek said the event was a campus-wide effort to eliminate apathy and stereotypes towards a global issue.

"AIDS is a universal disease and a universal issue," she said. "We wanted to make the rally campus-wide and not just geared toward our group."

"A lot of people have it in their head, it's a gay disease or only the bad people in the world have it," she said. "If these people saw my step-mom, they would be surprised."

Richard Morris, a Carbondale city Councilman, issued a proclamation to recognize Dec. 1 as World AIDS Day. He said the proclamation shows the city's support for those living with HIV and AIDS.

"The city of Carbondale realizes that AIDS will not go away."

Morris said issuing the proclamation is only a small step to show community support for AIDS education.

"It's not only important to recognize the issue, but the community needs to deal with it continually to educate others," he said.

A procession of about 160 people marched in silence from the Student Center to Shyroek Auditorium. The candles illuminated the night as eight speakers presented both statistics and personal experience to the crowd.

Tiffany Ross, a freshman in speech communications from Ohio, said she came to the rally to show her support for people living with HIV.

"People need to realize they don't need firsthand experience to be affected by this disease," she said. "AIDS affects everyone because anyone can get it."

Jeff Lucas, co-director of Gays, Lesbians, Bisexuals and Friends, said he was impressed by the proclamation issued by Carbondale.

"I commend the fact that the city and campus community are recognizing the people in the area that are living and dying with AIDS."

Steven St. Julian, a long-term survivor of AIDS, urged the crowd to remember to use protection during sexual intercourse. He said women need to be more assertive when demanding that a sexual partner use a condom.

"You can't see AIDS," he said. "Maybe a person has it and doesn't want to tell anyone, but most likely they don't know themselves."

Desiree Mills, Wellness Center sexuality coordinator, provided information about the AIDS disease. She said one in every 500 SIUC students may be infected with the HIV virus.

"We have a responsibility to help ourselves be safe and prevent ourselves and others from the disease," she said. "If I save one person from getting the virus, I will continue to distribute condoms on campus."

The money collected from the rally will be given to SIRE, a non-profit organization, to provide for the sufferers of AIDS and their families in the Southern Illinois region.

More diversity on BAC panel needed

THE PANEL DISCUSSION ON RACIAL TENSION led by the Black Affairs Council Wednesday was a positive opportunity for everyone interested in racial relations to express their views and be heard on the subject. There is a lot of anger and hostility related to racial tension, and those emotions must be freely expressed if the root causes of racial tension are to be fully understood. However, everyone connected to the issue was not represented on the panel. There is a rich cultural diversity on this campus, but you never would have known it by attending the discussion.

Most of the panel and audience members at the discussion were African-American, probably due to the fact that the event was advertised as a BAC event. While there is no question that the BAC is an appropriate group to sponsor such a panel discussion, it is possible that the sponsorship of a multi-racial or non-racial group, such as the Undergraduate Student Government, may have attracted a more culturally diverse crowd, and more diverse ideas and experiences to the event. This added diversity may have made the panel more productive and more focussed on encouraging mutual understanding, rather than the mere expression of anger.

AND THERE WAS PLENTY OF ANGER TO GO around. While we recognize and defend the rights of all of those in attendance to freely express their ideas, the DE cannot help but wish some people had chosen to remain silent and refrained from what we see as counter-productive behavior. One of the most troubling comments was made by Minister Enoch X, who repeated a polarizing statement often made by some African-American leaders. He said that black people cannot be racist because black people are oppressed. In other words, Minister X is saying that a black person is justified in any behavior or statement, no matter how offensive and racist. He is saying that behavior that would be considered racist if committed by a white person should not be considered racist if the same behavior is exhibited by a black person because black people are oppressed. We can only assume he means black people are oppressed by white people.

To be sure, the social injustices stemming from slavery in this country have not been eliminated. Some powerful positions are still held by racists, and they still practice racial discrimination. The anger caused by this situation is understandable — it leads to the continued oppression of a large number of people. But taking this anger out on all white people is unjustified, unfair and counterproductive. And defending such behavior may have the effect of making racial tensions worse by alienating those from different cultures who want to lend a helping hand.

AFRICAN-AMERICANS AND OTHER MINORITIES working for racial harmony and equality have another, even more dangerous, enemy than white racists and its name is hatred. Hatred seeks to destroy unity and leave discord in the wake. It is hatred, among both blacks and whites, that keeps the races divided. It is hatred that created and maintains this racial tension that Wednesday's panel discussion was intended to discuss. Troy Alim, coordinator of the BAC, said the panel's purpose was to look at what people see and understand or do not understand about individuals. We believe that this is a positive goal, that it is a productive effort aimed at enhancing racial harmony and that a similar panel should be assembled again soon, but an effort should be made to make the panel more diverse.

Fixing injustices with cash is foolish

I would like to respond to Mr. Williams' commentary in the DE on Nov. 14. You believe that African-Americans should be compensated for their treatment in the time of slavery. If you were truly interested in abolishing racism and making this country a better place to live then you would realize that monetary compensation is an idea that would do nothing to contribute to you overall goal. I doubt you will find anyone short of a "white supremacist" who doesn't feel that slavery was wrong and terrible thing; however, hearing the descendants of the slaves complain and beg for compensation to the descendants of slave holders does nothing for the situation and only makes those whiners seem like greedy people who aren't really interested in the plights of their ancestors but rather are only trying to better themselves without actually working for it.

If you gave any thought to the outrageous proposal you so fully support you would see that it is not only unintelligent but unattainable. First of all, if African-Americans want compensation for past atrocities then what is to stop Germans defeated in World War II from wanting compensation from the armed forces that defeated them? Why shouldn't American troops involved in atrocities in the Vietnam War get compensation from the Vietnamese who tortured them? What is to stop the descendants of the Jewish men and women tortured during the Holocaust from wanting compensation from the descendants of the Germans who ran the concentration camps? The list goes on and on. The history of our world is riddled with incidents like slavery.

The Jewish community, for example, has done something much more constructive than complaining and further separating races in this troubled society. Almost every major city in the country has a Holocaust museum. Such museums serve to educate us so that we do not make the same mistake. It is my suggestion that, instead of following the unfeasible ideas of the unintelligent, you form your own opinion; they might not serve you as well as you'd like, but they will do much more good for society.

Clinton stance on Bosnia for good reason

Hey Dan, here's another famous quote to add to your apparently inexhaustible supply: "War is hell," spoken by a man who would know firsthand, William Tecumseh Sherman. This state of "hell" is exactly what Bosnians have been living in for the past three years, and which will continue without American intervention. It amazes me how so many people were quick to risk American lives for Kuwaiti oil but so slow and reluctant to support the use of our all-volunteer forces to put a stop to "ethnic cleansing" in Bosnia.

Senators Dole (R-Ks.) and McCain (R-Az. and Vietnam POW) have recently given their conditional support to the mission and found President Clinton's "rationale" for sending the troops to be clear and justified. That rationale is less about national security and more about sustaining America's role as the leader of NATO and its obligation to help war-weary nations achieve peace. The only "confusion" I have found is in Dan's own perception of this peacekeeping mission. This will be a NATO (not United Nations) run mission led by an American commander. Unlike the UN forces, NATO will also have the armaments to back up that authority.

And since when did Carl von Clausewitz (?) become the reference point for judging leadership capabilities? President Clinton ought to be commended for the leadership he has shown on this politically-risky issue while others hold their fingers in the air waiting to see which way the political winds blow. And I'd think twice next time before quoting Napoleon to second-guess Bill Clinton's foreign policy. Napoleon's military blunders (Russian and Waterloo campaigns) are legendary!

The Bosnian mission is not without its risks and Dan's concern for the welfare of American troops is understandable. But we cannot let the past losses (Vietnam) or political posturing for the '96 election misdirect us from our responsibility as the world's leader and push us back in to the "isolationist" mindset which preceded World Wars I and II.

How to submit a letter to the editor:

Pick a limit, any speed limit

The Washington Post

With the repeal of federal speed limits now a fact, it's fasten-your-seat-belt time in every sense. Governors and state legislators are now free to put their own finishing touches, more or less, on what had been reasonable national safety policy and, depending on where you drive, the sky may be the limit. Already there are governors eager to exercise their new state's-rights authority by letting the limit soar when it comes to driving speeds and junking helmet laws—and Virginia Gov. George Allen is right up there at the head of the pack.

On his monthly radio show this week, the governor offered his version of a middle-of-the-road stand on speed limits. He said he would oppose eliminating limits altogether, but he believes that 70 miles an hour is reasonable in less-congested areas. "Safety is the number one concern that I have on it, but I do think you can have safety and travel 70 miles per hour on a road that's constructed and engineered for 80 miles per hour," Gov. Allen said. This assumes that drivers are engineered for 70 or 80 and if so, why not try 90? Do we hear 100? 110?

Highway safety organizations cite statistics indicating that higher speeds will mean more accidents and traffic deaths, but supporters of the federal-limit repeal question this finding, claiming there is evidence to the contrary. We're about to find out more, with the federal cap set to come off on Dec. 8. Transportation Secretary Federico Pena has asked governors to maintain current limits for the time being, suggesting that the shift in authority is "an opportunity to engage in a national debate" about the country's commitment to highway safety.

But the sad fact is that this debate has been going on in Congress and ended with a strong vote to let the states figure it out. The smarter ones will proceed with caution.

Bellicose budget battle

By Eric Pianin and John F. Harris
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—With a looming Dec. 15 deadline, Republicans and Democrats squandered this past week of budget talks. They argued about the size of the negotiating table, feuded over whose economic assumptions to use and held firm in their positions while waiting for the other side to blink.

While both sides insist there is a way out of the budget morass, White House officials and GOP leaders alike fear it may take another crisis, like the recent six-day partial shutdown of the government, to force a settlement.

Why can't the two sides work through their differences in an orderly fashion? The main reason seems to be that both sides have a stake in obstinance.

Republicans have shown no willingness to accommodate the White House by closing a deal on the remaining six fiscal 1996 appropriations bills that must be signed before the government runs out of money again on Dec. 15. They want to use the bills as leverage to force President Clinton to agree to a long-term plan to eliminate the deficit over seven years.

The White House, meanwhile, has steadfastly refused to offer such a plan. White House advisers fear a political price for the cuts such a plan would demand. And they figure that Republicans, not wanting to risk taking blame for a second government shutdown, will eventually strike a deal on the 1996 spending bills.

"The White House is pursuing a strategy of failure," a House GOP aide said Friday. "They want to force us to get up from the table, and hell will freeze over before that happens."

By week's end, it was Clinton who blinked. After threatening a veto, the president reluctantly agreed to a $243 billion defense appropriations bill even though he thinks it spends $7 billion too much. With threats from Republicans to block his commitment to send troops to Bosnia, Clinton had little choice but to approve the bill to assure funding for the peacekeeping mission.

Republicans celebrated the enactment of the defense bill, and immediately sought to undercut the president by disputing his claim that he and congressional leaders had agreed to funding for the troops out of the spending bill.

"Any request that the president makes will be sent over here and we will consider it but there has been no final agreement," House Appropriations Committee Chairman Bob Livingston, R-La., told reporters. But a White House official said it was understood in negotiations that Bosnia will be paid for out of the defense bill.

Livingston and other Republicans also boasted that after weeks of standoff over spending issues, the momentum had shifted in the Republicans' direction when the president accepted the defense-spending bill.

"I think that once the defense bill was off the table the administration lost the leverage it really had planned on using from day one for the entire appropriations process," Livingston said. He added that most of the remaining spending bills include programs "that are a greater concern to the president" than to many other members of Congress.

But the White House argued that it will be Republicans who will pay if the clock runs out and there is no deal. Republicans are still "six spending bills short" two months after the start of the fiscal year. One White House official said, "Clearly they'll get the blame if the government shuts down."

The remaining spending bills have been hung up for months over a raft of economic and social issues, in part because of divisions among Republicans.

Each side has a big stake in the outcome of the bills: They fund most of the president's domestic agenda, including the national service program and his education initiatives; but they also include the first wave of deep discretionary spending cuts that are essential to the GOP's larger plan of eliminating the deficit by 2002.

A meeting Thursday that ended with angry accusations that each side was dealing in bad faith demonstrated a paradox of the negotiations—right now, at least, each side believes it can benefit more through loud public disagreements than quiet efforts to compromise.

nice weather didn't play too big a role for the huge turnout."

"When the WSIE float went by, the Master of Ceremonies thanked Jim Rasor, WSIE meteorologist, for the nice weather.

Dorsey, who has been chairperson for the parade every year, said the best part about the parade is watching how the community participation keeps growing.

"Every year before the parade, I think 'this is going to be the last one,' but then there's a turnout like this," Dorsey said. "The greatest thing is for me to look around and see all the people. I'm really excited because there are so many from SIU and so many younger children coming out to enjoy the parade."

Dorsey said the parade has many meanings for Carbondale.

"The parade was started for community spirit," Dorsey said. "Every year it keeps growing, and now it's a wonderful, safe event that draws the community closer together for the season."

Senate

"The administration gets input from all the constituency groups and what may be good for faculty members may be bad for the students," Harre said.

"We, as the Faculty Senate, give input for decisions, and hopefully the administration will make the decision that is best for everyone," Harre said collective bargaining is a "selfish type thing" because if money is given to the faculty, it is taken away from other places.

The meeting's guest speaker will be Hazel Loucks, Higher Education Director of the IEA-NEA. She will address the issue of "Why Organize at SIUC."

Tonight's meeting starts at 5:15 at the United Methodist Student Center/Wesley Foundation, 816 S. Illinois Ave.

The city straddles the Jala River and is dotted with drab Communist-era apartment blocks and spiraling mosques, some of which date back 500 years to the Turkish occupation. The sound of the Muslim call to prayer wafts through the old part of the city at regular intervals.

Tuzla is a city of sinkholes, water rationing, smog and factories manufacturing rubber and chemicals that have been forced to a fraction of their prewar production. Tuzla's name comes from the Turkish word for salt. The town's symbol is the goat.

"We view the Goat of Tuzla as its symbol of resistance and spite to all tyrants of this world and all troubles that may beset this town," reads a city government brochure.

Tuzla: Where reason prevails. Many of Tuzla's residents are eager for the economic boom that they believe the arrival of the GIs will create—like the American New Deal, Mayor Bestagic said. He met last month with Maj. Gen. William Nash, the commander of the 1st Armored Division who was in Tuzla on a get-acquainted visit. Bestagic said Nash promised to help open the roads that Tuzla needs to reach seaports and the highways that connected it to the rest of the former Yugoslav federation before the Bosnian Serb army cut them off.

One of Rabin's bodyguards may have known of assassination plot

The Los Angeles Times

JERUSALEM—Yigal Amir, the assassin of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, kept up his running court dialogue with reporters Sunday, endorsing one of many conspiracy theories circulating since the killing a month ago.

"Why don't you publicize that they killed one of Rabin's bodyguards?" Amir yelled as he was led into a Tel Aviv court for an extension of his detention without charges. Amir said a guard who shouted "the bullets are dummies" as Amir shot Rabin was later killed.

"I can say something that will destroy everything," Amir said.

"Everything until now was a mask." In several court appearances since the Nov. 4 shooting in Tel Aviv, Amir has made a point of answering reporters' questions and making statements to them.

Conspiracy theorists have been circulating reports that one of Rabin's bodyguards died mysteriously after the assassination, implying that he may have been killed by members of the security services who wanted to cover up the fact that they knew Yigal Amir planned to kill the prime minister. The conspiracy theories have been fueled by the disclosure that Avishai Rabin, a right-wing activist who knew Yigal Amir well, was an informant for the Shin Bet internal security service for years.

Ravin, who was arrested after Rabin's assassination but later released, has denied being an informant. But senior members of the security service have confirmed that he was. Some conspiracy theorists believe that Ravin must have known that Amir planned to kill the prime minister and say that he must have passed that information on to his Shin Bet handlers.

According to this theory, Shin Bet, which provides bodyguards for the prime minister, wanted to catch Amir in the act of trying to assassinate Rabin.

this gift," and a lot of other materialistic things.

"The packaging of Christmas as a time for spending is not a new one. Philip Burke, a senior in psychology from Mt. Vernon, said he thinks the commercialization of Christmas has been a problem for a long time but not one he was always aware of.

"I didn't think about it when I was younger," Burke said. "I associate Christmas with music and family, and a lot of people associate it with eating. But not many people would say they associate it with Jesus Christ."

That statement does not bother Meagan Manske, a senior in political science from Palatine. She said she does not think Christmas is a religious holiday anymore.

"And I think that's a good thing, because it leaves the holiday open to celebration for everyone," Manske said. "I associate Christmas with not just a day, but a season to spend with people I care about."

Elder Beerman would not comment, and JC Penny's and Montgomery Ward's store managers could not be reached for comment.

Bill Gates, Microsoft owner, newest American legend

The Washington Post

In the past we've made legends of generals, saints, scientists and cosmic thinkers. Now, a computer nerd.

When Bill Gates visited Washington last week, he wasn't here just as the man worth $13 billion. He wasn't coming simply as the greatest entrepreneur of our era, as various people have called him. And he wasn't coming as Chairman Gates, head of Microsoft Corp., the world's biggest personal computer software company.

Instead, he came in a new role, author and prophet, offering in his first book to be our guide to the future. Both media and public eagerly accepted the offer. In recent days Gates has appeared on "The Late Show With David Letterman," the "NBC Evening News," a David Frost interview, the cover of Newsweek, and in countless newspaper stories. He has also given numerous speeches to big, rapt audiences.

He has become a symbol of American supremacy in computer technology. Gates is the face that people use to humanize one of the world's fastest growing industries, a source of immense change in the way people work, study, play and fight. With his success, Gates has helped rekindle confidence in the American Dream: that someone with a good idea and an appetite for work can inspire an industry and become the richest guy around.

"I'm an optimist," Gates declares. "I think this is a wonderful time to be alive," he gushes in print. "There have never been so many opportunities to do things that were impossible before."

At age 40, Gates still seems like the super-smart kid down the block, the one whose face was always pasty from long hours indoors with books and secret inventions. His hair can't quite stay properly combed. His glasses still seem a smidgen too big. His slouch-shoulders hunched forward, chin sunk in-would make a mother groan. The scrawled signature on the books he autographs looks like the penmanship of a seventh-grader.

Like all legends, Gates in real life doesn't always live up to the myth. He is not an inventor or scientist, but someone who has written reams of software programs. One of the most crucial ones, the software that became the cornerstone of Microsoft, was based on work that Gates licensed from another firm. He's an intense businessman, who can turn to biting sarcasm when he disagrees with a proposition or doesn't like an interviewer's question. Employees at Microsoft still describe some project review meetings with Gates as resulting in "blood on the walls."

His competitors often go into long monologues about Bill, the industry's Darth Vader in a sweater-but then refuse to be quoted, saying they fear retaliation from Microsoft. It's not jealousy, they insist. They contend instead that Gates has become a monopolist, and is using his strength in one field to unfairly bully his way into other new businesses.

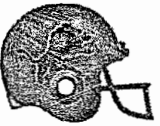

The critics extend to the antitrust watchers in the U.S. government, who have been investigating Microsoft for five years. Last year, after the Justice Department moved to block Microsoft's proposed $2 billion acquisition of Intuit Inc., the company abandoned the deal.

But for the most part, Americans seem to welcome the man. "When you're nervous, you look for heroes," said John Staudenmaier, a professor at the University of Detroit Mercy and editor of "Technology and Culture," a quarterly scholarly publication. In a technological world whose pace of change can leave us dizzy, we need someone who speaks the language of bytes and bandwidth, someone who knows how to boot the ornery digital machine back to life when it crashes.

Consumers the losers of direct-mail marketing scams

The Los Angeles Times

IRVINE, Calif.—They arrive in the mail, in official-looking envelopes, bearing promises of riches and exciting awards: "The recipient is guaranteed to receive a 1995 Pontiac Grand Am or $15,000 cash!"

Such direct-mail and telemarketing gambits have exploded, law enforcement experts say, and have yet to exploit their next frontier: cyberspace. But even in their current form, such mailbox temptations are proliferating throughout North America, with law enforcement agencies cracking down on so-called "boiler room" operations.

Even through the mail, such schemes are scoring a fortune off consumers. Americans now lose more than $40 billion a year to direct-mail enticements because they neglect to read the fine print, want something for nothing, or simply don't know their rights, said Polly Baca, director of U.S. consumer affairs and special assistant to the president.

The state attorney general's office has sued Direct American Marketers—or DAMI, as it calls itself—on two occasions, ending up with a court order that forced the company to sharpen the language of its fine-print disclosure to conform with the law.

"I'm not sure he wants anything to do with us anymore. Two years ago he was named the player of the year in his league, last year he comes in here and tears up his knee and this year he goes one for six."

With the win SIUC runs its record to 2-0 for the first time since the 1993-94 season, when the Salukis finished the year with a 23-7 overall record.

Herrin said this was a big win for his young squad early in the season.

"This was a great victory for us," he said.

"They (ODU) were picked to be No. 1 in their league. The win meant a great deal to our basketball team."

The Salukis will practice the rest of the week in preparation for their first home game of the season Sunday against Florida Atlantic.

Tip-off is scheduled for 1:35 p.m. at SIU Arena.

to Cooke. In addition, it will donate 100 acres adjacent to the stadium site, valued at about $2 million, for the recreation center.

A few obstacles remain. A coalition of civic groups and individuals who live near the Wilson Farm have filed a lawsuit seeking to reverse the County Council decision to change the zoning for the site. No court date has been set.

Also, the council must hold an evidentiary hearing, probably later this month, in which Redskins officials will need to answer questions under oath. The council then will vote on whether to approve the site plan.

Glendening has not said how he hopes to fund the state's contribution to the Redskins' stadium project, but he likely will need budget support from the Maryland General Assembly, which convenes next month.

The agreement comes at a time when the county government is reeling financially and officials are desperately searching for good news on the economic development front.

and Timberlake deserve medals of honor for going above and beyond the call of duty.

Dadzie and Timberlake both averaged only 2.4 points per game last season, but have turned the intensity up a notch by averaging 17 ppg between the two of them.

A complete team effort is the only way the Salukis can win this season.

If any one player loses focus or dedication, any hopes for post season play are eliminated.

son play are eliminated.

Two consecutive wins to start the season is as much as anyone can ask from this squad.

They have played their hearts out, and won the old-fashioned way—with tenacity.

This team is not flashy, unlike last year's squad which sent three players to the professional ranks, they fight for the ball and hustle on every play—a coach's dream.

Whether they win ugly or big, each victory surpasses the preseason expectations set on this young and inexperienced team.

As Al Davis said, "just win, baby."

Salukis dethrone Monarchs, 73-65

By Chris Clark
DE Sports Editor

The Saluki men's basketball team used a second-half offensive surge and tight defense to overthrow the Old Dominion Monarchs 73-65 Saturday night at ODU/Scope in Norfolk, Va. to start the season 2-0.

SIUC forward Jaratio Tucker came up big for the Salukis again against the Monarchs, scoring 18 points on 5-of-13 from the field and 8-of-10 from the free throw line.

Against Northern Illinois last Wednesday, Tucker scored 20 points including six of the Salukis last 10 points in a 65-63 win in DeKalb. Through two games, Tucker leads the Dawgs in scoring, averaging 19 points per game.

After a closely-fought first half, SIUC trailed 33-32 going into the locker room, but the Dawgs caught fire in the second half.

The Salukis lit up the scoreboard in the second half, outscoring the Monarchs 41-32 with a 14-for-26 performance from the field, including hitting 3-of-6 from behind the 3-point arc.

Saluki basketball coach Rich Herrin said emotions ran high in the locker room at halftime only being down by one at the half.

"We knew that we would need a great effort to be able to beat this team," he said. "There were a lot of emotions in that locker room. We were confident that we could be successful."

"If we had been down by 20 points or something, it may have been a different story."

All five of the Dawgs' starters finished the contest in double figures. Center Aminu Timberlake scored 14 points, while forward Scott Burzynski and guards Johnny Dadzie and Shane Hawkins contributed 11 points each to go along with Tuckers 18.

Herrin said he was pleased by the output of his starting five.

"We had great balanced scoring — all of our starters were in double figures," he said. "It was a great team effort and a great win."

Herrin also said the bench also contributed in a big way in the Salukis' win.

"We got good play from (Reggie) Nelson, (Monte) Jenkins and Shane Wells grabbed a big rebound late in the game," he said. "We got good play from everyone and they all had a hand in the victory."

SIUC's defense came up even bigger-against ODU, holding the Monarchs to 32 points and not allowing them a single field goal in the final six and a half minutes of the ball game.

Herrin said SIUC was able to shut ODU's offense down because the Dawgs kept switching its defenses.

"We switched defenses from man-to-man to zone and back again," he said. "Sometimes it takes a while to find one that works and we were fortunate that they both worked. They didn't score in the last six minutes or so."

The Dawgs also held ODU center Odell Hodge to six points on 1-of-6 shooting. After suffering a season-ending knee injury at SIU Arena in an 88-74 Saluki victory last season, Hodge vowed revenge. ODU's junior center said he was going to put up 40 points against the Salukis.

Herrin said the combination of Burzynski and Timberlake tired out the ODU star.

"Burzynski and Timberlake did a heck of a job on him (Hodge)," he said. "To be honest, he ran out of gas. He just got tired."

Redskins owner signs deal for new stadium

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON -- After months of contentious negotiations, Maryland and Prince George's County leaders reached an agreement Sunday with Washington Redskins owner Jack Kent Cooke that cleared the way for a new 78,600-seat stadium in Landover, where the team could begin play as early as 1997.

The pact was solidified with the signature of Prince George's County Executive Wayne K. Curry, allowing Cooke to build a $166 million stadium near the Capital Beltway on a site known as the Wilson Farm, government sources said Sunday. Curry, who repeatedly has questioned whether the stadium would truly benefit the county, had been the remaining impediment to Cooke's plan.

Cooke and Maryland Gov. Parris N. Glendening also approved the agreement, as did Elizabeth M. Hewlett, chairman of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The commission owns the property, which will be sold to Cooke for $4.1 million.

"I'm very happy with the deal, and I'm glad he (Curry) signed it," said Cooke, reached at home after Sunday night's Redskins game.

"I wish he would've signed it weeks or months ago when he should have, but I'm happy."

Under the terms of the agreement, Curry, Cooke, Glendening, Hewlett and their representatives were forbidden to discuss details until a news conference scheduled for Monday.

Coupled with last month's announcement that the Cleveland Browns will move to

"I'm very happy with the deal, and I'm glad he (Curry) signed it."

Baltimore next season, the Redskins agreement will mean that Maryland, which has had no National Football League team since the Colts departed in 1984, soon will have two.

It also ends Cooke's seven-year search for a new home to replace the NFL's smallest venue, Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Stadium in the District of Columbia, where the team has played since Oct. 1, 1961.

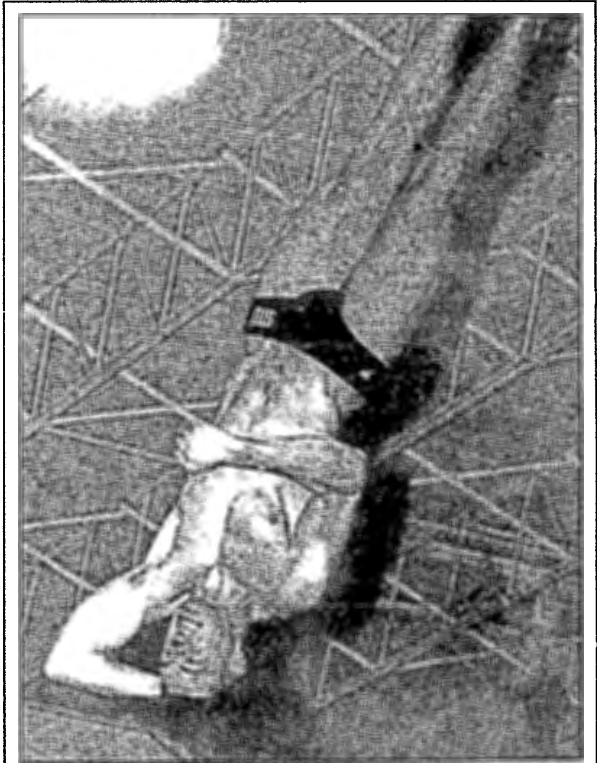

Since 1988, public opposition has prevented Cooke from building in the District, Alexandria, Va., and Anne Arundel County, Md.

Besides paying to build the stadium, the 83-year-old Cooke will devote $4.6 million to help the county build a community recreation center and assist a charitable foundation.

The state will contribute $78 million to build access roads, parking lots and other facilities around the stadium.

The county will contribute $4 million, which will be the proceeds of selling 200 acres

Do the twist: Saluki diver Alex Wright attempts a dive Sunday during the MVC Swimming and Diving Championships held at the Recreation Center swimming pool this weekend. Both the SIUC men and women repeated as champs.

Dawgs' 2-0 start in 'rebuilding' year better than most predicted Bravo and congratulations to the men's basketball team on its 2-0 start in a rebuilding season.

After dropping its two exhibition games this season, the Dawgs have won convincingly against Northern Illinois, 65-63, and Old Dominion, 73-65 — both times on the road.

In fact, SIUC and North Carolina are the only teams to defeat ODU in its last 16 home games.

It is the way in which the Salukis have won that is impressive. They have won with clutch shooting, good defense, and leadership.

With Shane Hawkins being the only returning starter from last season's NCAA Final Four Tournament team, many looked for him to carry the offensive load.

Hawkins himself said this before the game at NIU about his shooting performance in the preseason, which he shot 3-13 against Athletics in Action, and his role on the team.

"We're going to play nine or 10 guys, and we can't rely on one player," he said. "All the shots I missed, I was wide open. Obviously, the shooters have to shoot well for us to win."

The shooters Hawkins was referring to have stepped up their play, and given SIUC a balanced attack. Jaratio Tucker and Scott Burzynski have made the biggest contributions for the Salukis down the stretch. Tucker scored 20 points against NIU and 18 points at Old Dominion. Burzynski has also started this season exactly where he finished last year — hitting the three in clutch situations.

Burzynski put SIUC ahead 45-44 against ODU by hitting a key three-pointer with 14:09 left — one his three in the game.

It is true, though, that everyone has contributed in the victories. SIUC's up-tempo, run-and-gun style of play demands that every player performs in a role and plays hard — wearing the opposition down. Such was the case during the ODU game in which Aminu Timberlake and Burzynski held ODU star Odell Hodge, who had predicted a 40-point night against the Dawgs, to a measly and irrelevant four points.

SIUC's starting five all scored in double-digits against ODU, and three of them did the same in the NIU game.

Aside from Hawkins, Tucker and Burzynski, Johnny Dadzie and
