Committee narrows search to 11

HELP WANTED:

At least four finalists for chancellor's job to be decided Dec. 17.

WILLIAM HATFIELD
DE POLITICAL EDITOR

The search for SIUC's next chancellor is coming to a close as the field of 43 applicants has been narrowed to 11 semi-finalist candidates with diverse backgrounds.

"We are going to be meeting with them in the next week or two," Steve Scheiner, chairman of the chancellor search committee, said. "We'll be asking them just what you would expect, 'What would you do if you were chancellor, what you have done in your past career,' and that sort of stuff."

The semi-finalists' identities remain shrouded in mystery, as per the chancellor search guidelines, but Scheiner said the confidentiality likely will cease on Dec. 17, when the committee will narrow the semi-finalists to a minimum of four finalists.

"The semi-finalists are coming here but only in the broad sense because we are still maintaining confidentiality. So we'll meet in some secret place," he said. "But as soon as we arrive at a group of finalists, everything becomes public about those finalists and the secrecy ends."

Scheiner said that once the finalists are selected they will be subjected to numerous open forums and meetings with faculty, students and administrators.

"Those people (the finalists) will then be invited to campus, and will start arriving around the start of spring semester with all the publicity and hoopla and whatever kind of media focus you guys want," he said.

Scheiner said that of the 11 semi-finalists, three are women. He did not know the ethnic backgrounds of the candidates. Although many of the candidates are vice presidents at other schools, Scheiner said their geographic locations, positions and educational backgrounds vary. He would not comment if there are any internal candidates.

"They all have experience, and they all have some reason for us to think they could do a good job at SIU," he said. "They all have a good blend of the characteristics that are within the position description."

Housing adds three new specialty floors

COMMON BOND:

Certain living areas set aside for education, philosophy students.

J. MICHAEL RODRIGUEZ
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

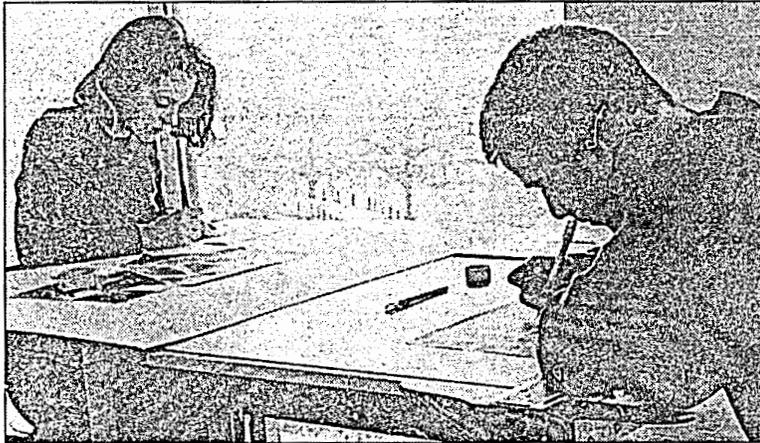

University Housing is adding three new specialty floors at the start of the 1998 school year after faculty commitment and departmental interest brought about the change.

The three specialty floor: will be available for students interested in philosophy, mass communication and education. In addition to these floors, more study and healthy lifestyles floors will be added for next year.

University Housing had specialty floors five years ago but they were discontinued because of the lack of faculty involvement.

The plan was rejuvenated this semester after the introduction of specialty floors in engineering in Brush Towers and Thompson Point and architecture in Brush Towers.

Elizabeth Scally, coordinator of marketing for University Housing, said a department must show interest in helping students that live in the specialty floors.

"We were contacted by the departments and they expressed that their faculty was ready to commit to a project like this," Scally said. "The faculty and student involvement determines the success of these specialty floors."

Scally said it is the responsibility of the faculty in the various departments to visit the specialty floors and to assist students when help is needed. The faculty's first visit to the dorms is at the beginning of the school year.

Thompson Point will feature the special emphasis floor in mass communications, while Brush Towers will have the education and philosophy emphasis floors.

Januari Smith, a junior in radio and television from Springfield, said she likes the traditional ways of calling a fellow classmate if she has any trouble with her homework.

"I wouldn't like it [living on a specialty floor] personally. I spend a lot of time with them in class," Smith said. "With my major everyone is very close-knit. We talk on the phone on a regular basis."

Smith lives on a transfer floor, another specialty floor offered by University Housing, and said she would rather live on a floor with people of the same age than have to live with people younger than her with the same major.

But students do not have to major in the particular field of study to live on a special emphasis floor because some students

University will not sponsor spring event

FESTIVAL: Sponsorship would violate SIUC alcohol policy, create liability risk.

TRAVIS DE NEAL
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC will not co-sponsor a spring event similar to this fall's First Cellular's Main Street Pigout because doing so is a violation of the University's alcohol policy.

"Right now the policy is clear," SIUC Chancellor Donald Beggs said. "We don't sponsor the sale of alcohol, but we sure can cooperate."

The event cooperatively is being planned by Carbondale Main Street and the Student Programming Council. Though the date is tentative, it is planned for one of the latter weekends in April.

Undergraduate Student Government backs the celebration and passed a resolution at its Nov. 19 meeting asking the University to sponsor and cooperate with a spring festival.

Beggs based his opinion not to sponsor a spring event on a recommendation he received from Peter Ruger, general counsel for SIUC. The problem, Ruger said, is a legal definition of "sponsor."

Ruger's recommendation states, "A sponsor has been defined in a Wisconsin case (no Illinois definitions are reported) as a 'person or organization that pays for or plans and carries out the activity.'"

Ruger further recommended that SIUC take a cooperative, liability-free role in a spring event. Beggs said the University

House passes school funding bill

REVENUE: Money for needy schools will come from increased taxes on cigarettes, telecommunications.

KIRK MOTTRAM
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The embattled school funding bill, which fell short by four votes during the fall veto session, finally won the hearts of Springfield legislators Tuesday in a resounding House victory.

House Bill 452 passed 83-31 after several hours of debate, and now awaits Gov. Jim Edgar's signature. Upon its signing, it will deliver $485 million of aid to the state's neediest schools.

The needed revenue will come from a 14-cent increase of the cigarette tax, a gradual gambling tax based on casino revenues, a 5-percent death tax penalty and a 2-percent telecommunications tax increase.

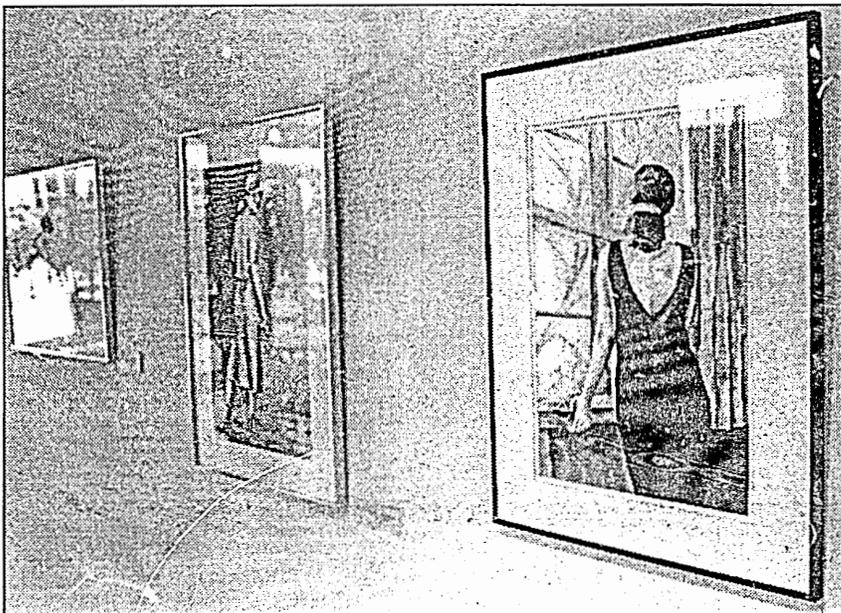

The bill stipulates a new school aid foundation level of $4,225 in 1998, $4,325 in 1999 and $4,425 in 2000. The bill also establishes a $1.4-billion school construction bond program and delivers $35 million for the retiring of construction bond debt primarily in northern Illinois districts.

The bill also institutes several education reforms. It will mandate a restructuring of administrators' contracts, extend the probationary period for tenure and make it harder for educators to renew their teaching certificates.

Opponents of the bill argue that its financial foundation is unstable because casino and revenue profits recently have dipped. Its proponents contend that the bill will provide the

microscopic INSPIRATION

COORDINATION: Artist developed painting talent as a botany student.

JASON ADRIAN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Former SIUC art student Mary Pachikara did not discover her artistic inspiration and skill by eyeing golden sunsets or sweeping landscapes, but rather from looking into a microscope.

As a collegiate botany student in her native India, Pachikara developed acute perceptive abilities by sketching biological specimens at various microscopic magnifications.

These observational skills are represented in Pachikara's watercolor paintings on display through Dec. 16 in the Art Atrium at the Small Business Incubator, 150 Pleasant Hill Road.

"When you study botany in India, you really have to study the subjects under a microscope to learn to draw it," Pachikara said. "You learn a lot of hand-to-eye coordination, and to do a painting or drawing you need that hand-to-eye coordination."

Pachikara also was able to practice seeing the objects she was drawing from a different perspective, and she said that is important to artists.

"When you look under a microscope, you are taught to draw what you see, not what you think you see," she said. "It's a kind of discipline learning to draw what you see."

Pachikara always has been interested in drawing and spent time doodling in her notebooks as a student. Then, as her desire to paint and her skill began to grow, she came across an opportunity to take her abilities to another level in another

December graduates have differing expectations

REAL WORLD: Some are anxious to find employment; others ready to relax.

TRACY TAYLOR
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

For many SIUC students, December is a time for Christmas shopping and celebrating the holidays, but Tiffany Burns is more concerned about walking down the aisle and receiving her diploma than looking under a Christmas tree.

Burns, a senior in industrial technology from Cairo, is one of many students who are graduating from SIUC in the University's first Fall commencement at 9:30 a.m. Dec. 20 at SIU Arena.

With graduation lurking in the near future, some SIUC students already have jobs lined up for when they finish college, but many December graduates are not so sure.

"I don't know what I'm going to do," Burns said. "I guess I'll have to find a job."

Burns said it does not matter where the job is because she is willing to relocate.

"I'll go anywhere in the United States," she said. "I'm not stressing because I can always go to graduate school. I have a severe case of senioritis, so I'm not stressing. I'm just really looking forward to graduation."

Nichole Holmes, a senior in radio and television from Marion, said her December graduation is not making her nervous because she is going to take her time and find a job.

"I'm going to just relax for a couple of months before I start working," she said. "There is no spring break in the real world."

However, Holmes is going into the tough business of entertainment television and is planning on going to Hollywood.

"I'm a little nervous about that (Hollywood)," she said. "But it will be worth it for my career."

Unlike Burns, Holmes said she is not going to attend the December ceremony

Columnist gives resource guide to Morris Library

There often is a great deal of talk about the various inadequacies concerning Morris Library and its staff. People will complain about frivolous things, such as, "This computer won't work," or "I can't find this periodical," or the ever popular and recurring "No one around here seems to know more about a library than my left shoe."

You rarely hear any positive things about the library or the staff. Well, you want to know something? I work at the library, and I'm getting sick and tired of people whining about not finding any books!

Perhaps you patrons of the library will be better served and less apt to insult our library personnel if I clear up some misconceptions about the library and our underpaid staff.

First of all, just because the computer tells you a book is "available" doesn't mean that it's "available" to you. It's "available" to someone, somewhere, in some dimension — not necessarily you in this dimension.

Morris Library is a big place, and, as we all know, things get lost in large places. So the next time you find that a book is "available" yet you can't find it, and you ask a library worker where it is and we say, "Get lost," you need to understand that we aren't being rude. In actuality, we're being quite helpful because that's where the book is — lost.

That's where you need to get to. Get lost.

Second, we aren't computer experts. Just because we've been trained to help you use the computer doesn't mean we can actually physically aid you in your quest for information.

Usually, when someone says they need help with a computer, I'll smile, politely walk over to the computer, then squint at the screen for about 15 seconds (This is my serious look, and it often times fools the patron into thinking I give a damn).

If that doesn't work — and incidentally it has not to this date — I'll move the mouse around and start clicking on random icons.

"But I've already tried that," the patron will whine.

"Yes," I'll reply, "but were you squinting?"

If the random clicking doesn't work, I'll inform the patron that I need to go speak with my computer expert boss. I'll then walk back into the private office area and drink some water while I simultaneously make up a semi-valid sounding computer problem. This way I don't have to bug my boss.

"Our modems aren't co-facing properly with the matrix drive on the first floor," I'll explain.

"Fortunately — for you — we have a few backup terminals on the eighth floor. You should check them out."

"Thank you, you've been a big help," they'll reply, hopping onto an elevator.

"Fortunately — for me — I asked you for assistance."

"That may be," I'll think to myself, "but unfortunately — for you — the eighth floor is a figment of my imagination."

Of course, by the time they figure this out, I'm in the basement putting history books on the shelf in the wrong order.

Finally, to wrap things up, here are a few more helpful library hints, and some of them are even fairly accurate.

1.) You check all books out at the Circulation Desk on the first floor. Just because you find a book on the fourth floor doesn't mean you check it out on the fourth floor.

2.) You cannot check out periodicals — unless, of course, you hand me a $20 bill, upon which I will drop the periodical out of a third story window into your eager hands. Yes, $20 might seem expensive, but can we really put a price on knowledge?

3.) Oftentimes people forget their copy cards in the copying machine, and then they come around and ask if we have found them. Yes, we have found them — and no, we aren't giving them back to you.

4.) For the love of God and all that is holy, the library bathrooms are not to be used as rendezvous points for some misguided romantic trysts. I used to think the writing on the wall was for entertainment purposes only, until I was informed otherwise by my knowledgeable and red-headed Saluki Patrol roommate. Folks, it's 1997, there are diseases — and for God's sake it's a public restroom. Let's get real.

Well, that pretty well sums up everything I know about Morris Library.

I generally "work" in the late afternoons on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, so take my advice and schedule around.

(Editor's Note: Josh's column is for entertainment purposes only, and in no way expresses the views of other Morris Library staff workers).

Our Word

Crunch time

Diligence is required during the last 13 days of the fall semester

THERE ARE 13 SCHOOL DAYS LEFT UNTIL the official end of the fall 1997 semester. And for many students, this may be proof positive that 13 is indeed a very unlucky number.

Because simply put, now is the time to get serious, study and catch up in our coursework.

Thoughts of performing scholastic miracles may run rampant in many students' minds during these last few weeks of school. It does not matter if we are wide-eyed, first-semester freshmen, or grizzled veterans anxiously awaiting the Dec. 20 commencement ceremony — all of us will be scrambling to pull out all the stops necessary to pass our classes with flying colors.

FACE IT — THESE LAST DAYS REPRESENT our last chance to get our acts together before finals. This period symbolizes a crunch time more hectic than that found in any athletic game, a deadline more demanding than found in any newsroom and a last stand as crucial as Gen. Custer's.

Of course, we want our academic endeavors to withstand a better fate than Custer's band of soldiers. Still, many of us will spend too much energy complaining about the stress we will have to face instead of getting the job done.

We may form lines outside of our academic advisers' offices, hoping we can find a shoulder to cry on in the world of academia.

We may use the office hours that our professors provided for us at the beginning of the semester — for the very first time — in an overdue effort to seek help.

We may even call Mom, Dad or a therapist to get us through the remaining weeks leading up to our final exams.

AND, AS WE ALL KNOW, EXAM ANXIETY during finals week is a different nightmare altogether.

But that upcoming stress may be eased substantially if we recognize the precious time before us as it truly is: a gift, not a seasonal curse. Use the remaining days of the school year wisely.

If students need to reacquaint themselves with instructors to evaluate their progress in courses, then students should save themselves some pipe dreams and start making some appointments.

If students are only now attempting to finish major projects — i.e. research papers — that have been put off for the last 13 weeks, students should make Morris Library and/or the nearest computer labs their second homes. Party time is over, and procrastinating further is academic suicide.

IF STUDENTS HAVE TO BALANCE TIME between work and studies, then organize a strict schedule and stick with it. If students have not talked to employer ahead of time, then alert them now about other responsibilities. The same advice applies to students with families — organize time and communicate the stress of the upcoming weeks to others.

And even if students have been holding their head above water this semester, then strive to earn the highest grades possible. This is not the time to slack off.

This is the time to adjust our priorities, take responsibility for our actions and get to work. We cannot just cross our fingers and expect to pass our classes — that require a lot of hard work and diligence during the next 13 school days.

AND IF WE COUNT THE WEEKENDS, WE really have 17 days with which to work. That is, if weekend entertainment takes a backseat to the primary reason we all are enrolled at SIUC: getting a degree.

"Our Word" represents the consensus of the Daily Egyptian Editorial Board.

SIUC should consider having a soccer team

Dear Editor,

Walking toward campus recently, I heard the noise of crowds and drumming. I assumed it was half-time of the Saluki football game at McAndrew Stadium. As I moved closer, I realized the noise was coming from another direction. The racket came from Stehr Field, the site of the International Soccer Championship Cup semi-finals taking place that day. The Greek Originals team was playing Palestine-Africa, and the crowd — which appeared to be hundreds but sounded like thousands — was chanting, drumming, shouting and waving flags.

I wondered how a Saluki might react to this kind of frenetic and raucous support. About all anyone ever hears about soccer at SIUC — the ISC tournament — are some details regarding fan or player violence and strange combinations of the two. It is easy to overlook what it is implied by this — these teams really do care about winning.

While watching the finals this year, the tournament organizer mentioned that security wasn't always a necessity, although prominent throughout many of the matches. He was right, though, in dismissing security for the final. There was no fan or player violence that couldn't be controlled by the referee.

Not too long ago, Sports Illustrated ran an article on the best pick-up basketball games in the country.

If such an article were to be written on the best soccer leagues and tournaments in the nation, the ISC Tournament would be among them.

SIUC doesn't have a soccer team — it's something they might consider. Given the players at SIUC, they could probably compete on a collegiate athletics level (perhaps NCAA).

With professional soccer clubs in the United States recruiting directly from the ranks of college teams, SIUC could become part of the connection circuit using its access to native-born and foreign talent. Hundreds of internationals come to the United States to get tryouts with teams here.

Still, this doesn't really matter to the participants of the ISC tournament representing their squads or their nation — or occasionally someone else's nation. Players here just play the game the best they can — because like a common language, it's part of them.

DE coverage of woods important

Dear Editor,
I wanted to write this letter to commend the Daily Egyptian for continuing the coverage on the Thompson Woods issue. Thompson Woods has been neglected for so many years, and it will take many years for it to get back to good standing. There are a few places that still need to be worked on. However, professor Philip Robertson has really started to lead the fight in resurrecting the woods.

We at SIUC are lucky to have Thompson Woods to walk through every day. It is such a beautiful area that leads us from class to class.

I remember when I came down to visit SIUC to see if I wanted to attend college here, and I noticed the impressive environment around the campus. Along with many other details, the beauty of this campus made me want to attend this school.

I am very proud of our campus, and I hope that when people walk through Thompson Woods they remember that we are one of the few campuses that have such an area.

So next time you walk through Thompson Woods, take a minute and enjoy the scenery.

New resource office opens

INTERNATIONAL:
 Organization that studies water usage relocates to SIUC.

JASON FREUND
 DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The precious resource of water is a topic of discussion and concern throughout the world, and an international water organization that focuses on such topics will be locating its headquarters at SIUC starting May 16.

Benedykt Dziegielewski, associate professor of geography, said the International Water Resources Association focuses on the availability and use of water for ecological and human usage.

"The mission is to collect and pass on information and news about developments in economics, education, health, law, sociology and technology related to water resource management," he said.

"Contributing to the solutions of water problems in the international arena is a very worthwhile cause."

John Jackson, vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and provost, said bringing the organization to campus will enhance current operations.

"We're most pleased to move this prestigious organization to SIUC," he said. "We're already the home of the University Council on Water Resources, an international organization devoted to water policy."

"This will complement what we're already doing."

Jackson said the organization will give SIUC worldwide exposure.

"We're going to be center of publication and research, not only in the United States, but literally around the world," he said. "It's good news all around."

Robert Jensen, acting dean of the College of Liberal Arts, said the organization will allow expansion for students and faculty.

"It's (the organization) is a very good thing that will add prestige to the Geography Department and complements the research of many of our faculty," he said.

Dziegielewski said he hopes to start a research arm of the organization at SIUC to bring grant money for faculty research.

Jensen said the organization will help with a new doctoral program being developed in environmental resources management that will include geography, geology and agriculture.

"It's a new Ph.D. unlike anything before that will enable students to get a degree and the professional training necessary for a career in resource management," he said.

The association was founded in 1972 by the faculty at the University of Illinois. Its offices are located at the University of New Mexico, which did not seek to extend its contract with the association.

Dziegielewski, who will act as the executive director, said SIUC applied for the contract three years ago, but came in behind the University of New Mexico.

"We came in a very strong second," he said. "On the basis of our earlier proposal and the recent proposal (submitted Oct. 17), this was approved three weeks ago."

Dziegielewski said the contract extends through 2003, when the University could extend the contract. He also said having the association on campus will benefit students as well as the University.

"The educational benefit of having the organization here is it is of great value to our program and to our students," Dziegielewski said. "As funds become available we'll probably have graduate assistantships and student work opportunities."

Jackson said students definitely will benefit from the organization being located on campus.

"It has direct implications for graduate students and indirect implications on undergraduate students," he said. "There will be (graduate) assistantships and just be stronger in the area of water research."

Jackson said the SIUC office will be responsible for organizing yearly meetings, conferences and maintaining memberships. Dziegielewski said his priorities include developing a strategic plan for the growth and development of the organization and also to develop a Web site.

Dziegielewski said the University will spend $48,597 each year for partial salaries and graduate assistantships within the new office.

"This is seed money because the school is expecting to bring external funds to the University as a result of having this organization here," he said.

Dziegielewski said the rest of the money will come from the organization itself. He also said he hopes to eventually repay the University and allow the organization to become self-sustaining.

"I am quite confident that this could be a stand-alone operation," he said.

Dziegielewski said the University also will use in-kind time release contributions to reduce the required work loads for him and his associate director, Rolando Bravo, an associate professor in engineering.

"Instead of doing administrative work here or professional services," he said, "the school will allow me to devote this time to furthering and running the organization."

The organization has 1,250 members in 110 countries, and Dziegielewski said he hopes to increase the number of members significantly.

"I'd like to double the membership," he said, "by the year 2000."

LAPD now embraces video cameras

LOS ANGELES TIMES

Six years after the video taped beating of Rodney G. King rocked the Los Angeles Police Department, Chief Bernard C. Parks said Tuesday he is embracing the video camera and plans to make it standard equipment on all new patrol cars.

Installing video cameras in squad cars was one of the key recommendations of the Christopher Commission, which proposed more than 120 police reforms following the 1991 King beating.

Parks said an LAPD pilot program had been languishing for years and he wants the department to join the growing number of police agencies throughout the nation that use such equipment.

He said the specially equipped squad cars will save lives, reduce police liability and assist in criminal and personnel investigations.

The chief's plan, presented Tuesday to the Police Commission, was immediately hailed by police reformers and rank-and-file officers.

"It's an excellent move for the department to make," said attorney Carol Watson, a board member of Police Watch — a community-watchdog group that monitors police misconduct. "It will have a salutary effect on keeping situations from escalating — both by suspects, who should be told that they are on videotape, and by officers, who will know they are being videotaped."

The video tape of the King beating, shot by a bystander, dramatically drove home the power of the camera to document police activity. Ever since, video cameras have been used by the public and police departments to verify police misconduct as well as vindicate officers who are falsely accused of mis-are undecided but have an interest in that specific field.

Ben Beyer, a freshman in architecture from Rockford, lives on an architecture emphasis floor and said that living on a specialty housing floor has been convenient for him because he lives with students who have similar schedules and problems as he does.

"I would regret not living here," Beyer said. "It keeps me straight. I figured it would help me by not always having to go to teachers but to friends on the floor that you have classes with."

Living on a special emphasis floor has improved Beyer's grades and his study habits.

"I did more homework the first two weeks of school than I did my entire senior year [of high school]," he said. "About four or five of us usually do our homework at the same time every night. You get more accomplished when everybody on the floor is doing the same thing."

Beyer said that having one's major as a specialty housing floor is an opportunity that people should not pass up.

"I believe that having a special emphasis floor to live on is a major benefit," he said. "If you're serious about your major, living on a special emphasis floor is definitely a good choice."

Forty spots are open in each of the three new floors and Scally urges students to meet the contract renewal deadline of Jan. 27 to assure a spot in one of the specialty floors.

Students who are interested in getting their major as a specialty floor must talk to their department, but Scally said it is too late for University Housing to add another specialty floor for next year.

Scally said that University Housing is still in the evaluation process on whether or not this program has been successful. She said that she had looked over some of the evaluations, and students have responded in a positive way.

"We have run a survey that is not completed yet," Scally said. "It's been a real positive experience for the students, but as far as grades we cannot tell yet."

DATES

•Jan. 20: Contract renewal for University Housing begins.

•Feb. 20: Last day to reserve a room for 1998-99 school year.

•March 6: First housing payment due.

If a student turns in a contract, there is no obligation to live in University Housing until the first payment is made.

"There are just so many different things that I can do," she said.

Many students are focused on December commencement, but they are not the only seniors who are making plans for the future.

Kelii Rander, a senior in education from Evanston, is graduating in May and is actively seeking her future.

"I think I'm prepared to go out in the real world, but the future is so uncertain," she said. "I want to be an administrator, but teaching comes first."

Rander said the final semesters of college are more pressure-filled than the ones early in her college career.

"You can't just say, 'If I mess up on this one I have time to make it up,'" she said. "Because if you fail a class or get a bad grade in a major class, you can't make it up."

There is no spring break in the real world.

NICHOLE HOLMES

Terrence Boyd, a senior in administration of justice from Washington, D.C., is neither excited nor nervous about his December graduation because he is staying in school to complete a second degree.

"I want to work for the Secret Service or the FBI, and with two degrees I have a better chance of making it," he said.

Boyd said it is not difficult to find a job after college if students research jobs and give themselves plenty of time before graduation to find work.

Boyd said students give up the safety net they had in college when they graduate.

"There's not too much pressure in college, but when you get out of college, people expect you to be responsible and adult," he said.

Burns said she will think about what comes after college after she graduates.

"I'm just ready to graduate," she said. "I'm looking forward to Dec. 20, at 9:30 a.m. — graduation."

International students at SIUC find American alcohol laws insulting RESPONSIBILITY: U.S. one of few countries with restrictive drinking rules.

KAREN BLATTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

While vacationing at Disney World with his family as a 16-year-old, Byron Gale was stunned that he was not able to drink from the goblet of wine that was on the table in front of him.

"I couldn't drink with the rest of my family," Gale said. "It was like an insult to my family that I could not drink in the restaurant."

Gale, 24, a senior in physical education from Athens, Greece, said that since he was 7 years old, it was tradition in his home country for him to drink with his family on special occasions. Although he has been to several foreign countries, he was first unable to drink when he was in the United States.

It is a custom for many international students to drink at an early age, Gale said. He said that many cultures consider moderate drinking, such as sipping wine with meals, an enriching part of life.

Gale said many cultures, such as that of the Greek people, believe in educating their children about the proper use of alcohol before the children have to find out for themselves — the hard way.

"I was taught to drink in moderation and not to abuse the system," Gale said.

Carla Coppi, assistant director of International Students and Scholars, acknowledges the cultural differences, but she makes it her responsibility to teach international students about the laws for alcohol in the United States.

"During the International could be part of a social group that is over 21 years old."

Gale is not alone in his distaste for the U.S. age-related alcohol restrictions.

Charalambos Charalambos, a senior in marketing from Cyprus, said being allowed to drink when he was young helped him to get over the need to drink excessively when he got older.

"We have the freedom to do things (like drinking) when we were kids," he said. "By the time we turn wine." Not being able to drink in Carbondale has affected the view that Charalambos has regarding America in general.

"Before I came here, I thought that America was a land of freedom," he said. "I changed my mind when I compared it to my country."

Gale said even being of legal drinking age, he still feels juvenile going to bars in Carbondale as compared to Greece.

"I feel like a little kid wearing a band around my wrist (stating my age)," he said. "I feel like I'm going to the roller rink."

Coppi said that the subject of drinking does not come up in her conversations with international students, but she can understand their feelings.

"It's our law," she said. "Regardless of whether it is frustrating or not, they have to abide by the laws."

Even though some students have a problem with not being able to drink, Coppi said most international students are more concerned about grades instead.

"Students are very focused in academic excellence," she said. "Everything that stands in the way of excellence is discarded."

I felt restricted in what I could do.

BYRON GALE
SENIOR FROM ATHENS, GREECE

Student orientation we go over the drinking laws," she said. "We do know that it is culturally different, but out of respect we have to tell them this is the law and they have to abide by it."

When Gale came to SIUC at the age of 18, he was not of legal drinking age. Gale said he felt restrained in Carbondale because he had always been able to go out to bars and drink with friends at home.

"I felt restricted in what I could do," he said. "I wouldn't feel like I 24, we did all the stupid things when we were teenagers.

"We did all these things when we were young and now we're just more mature."

Gale said he also was amazed with U.S. alcohol policies when he attended church one Sunday, and communion took place with grape juice instead of wine.

"I felt insulted by not being able to have wine," he said. "I understand why they do it, but churches around the world all have real country.

As a student in the School of Art and Design at SIUC, Pachikara said she was able to broaden the subject matter of her artwork.

"When I came to SIUC, I was only drawing landscape and still life," she said. "It was at (SIUC) that I learned to draw and paint from a model."

Pachikara said SIUC was the place she began to develop and utilize the various mediums in painting and drawing. Her use of oils and charcoal evolved into more complex mediums such as pastels, acrylic and the medium that created all the paintings in her current exhibit — watercolor.

The attention to detail Pachikara developed in her botany classes is evident with the young child's candid glare in the painting "Innocence," or the lush color flowing in and out of each petal half in any of her many "Flowers" paintings.

Michael Onken, a professor in the School of Art and Design and one of Pachikara's former instructors, said the visual pleasure of Pachikara's paintings stem from her wonderful ability to use color rather than analytical expertise developed in her botany classes.

"The paintings are personal responses. They aren't analytical," he said. "I think she's more of a poet than a scientist."

No matter where Pachikara's perceptive painting abilities ripened, the juicy and bright colors of her flowers or the dim and bewildered angle of the painted figures make it easy to believe Pachikara when she says watercolor is her best medium in which to work.

"It's my strongest medium because it is much faster and more challenging than oil or pastels," she said. "It is very difficult to work over watercolor and hard to correct. There is little room for error."

"When it works, the end result is sometimes much better than you anticipated."

The Mary Pachikara watercolor exhibit is free and is open to the public from 8 a.m. until 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday. If any art enthusiast is interested in taking home one of Pachikara's watercolors, the paintings are for sale.

should cooperate with the proposed event.

Until 1992, SIUC had its annual Springfest celebration, a bring-your-own-beer music festival. The University canceled Springfest after the 1991 event, where attendees hurled beer cans at others while watching a band.

From 1993 to 1995, SIUC had the Dawg Days of Spring, a nonalcoholic version of Springfest, which was canceled because of a lack of participation.

USG President Dave Vingren said he wants specific details concerning how much the University will cooperate, and how much it will allow Student Programming Council, which is pushing for the event, to participate.

"I understand the problem of liability," he said. "We need to work together to work our way around that."

Andrew Daly, an SPC member who is working to develop the spring event, said SPC passed a proposal Monday outlining the festival.

"SPC intends to have a spring event including ourselves, all Registered Student Organizations, the city and possibly including alcohol," Daly said. "The main thing is to work with them (administration) in doing this event. We need to sit down and work with them to figure everything out."

If allowed, the extent of SPC's role in the event eventually will be determined by University administration, Daly said.

Joel Fritzier, program manager of Carbondale Main Street, said his organization will continue to work with the University to bring the event to the community.

Even though the University will not sponsor the event, Fritzier said he is pleased that SIUC is at least officially cooperating with the festival.

"I thought it (Beggs' decision) was quite positive," Fritzier said. "I'm glad the University is working with us and the community at a closer level."

Cohabiting diminishes desire for family, increases tolerance for divorce

WASHINGTON POST

Young people who cohabit become less eager to have children and more tolerant of divorce, according to a study by researchers William G. Axinn and Jennifer S. Barber of Pennsylvania State University.

Participants in the study were interviewed at 18 and again at 23 with questions about marriage, divorce, and preferred family size.

None of them had cohabited at the time of the initial interview. Among the questions were, "If you could have just the number you would like, what number of children would you want to have when your family is completed?" and "If you did not have (answer to question 1) children, would your next choice be (one number lower) or (one number higher)?"

A detailed history was kept of the participants' living arrangements during the intervening years.

By age 23, 43 percent of the women and 24 percent of the men had married, and almost 33 percent of both men and women had cohabited.

In addition, "35 percent of the women and 39 percent of the men experienced living in group quarters, 44 percent of the women and 48 percent of the men experienced living with housemates, and 23 percent of the women and 32 percent of the men experienced living alone."

The researchers found that "young people who have cohabited desire significantly fewer children and are significantly more approving of divorce than young people who never cohabited."

In addition, "the more months of exposure to cohabitation that young people experienced, the less enthusiastic they were toward marriage and childbearing." Is it possible that the participants who cohabited already had a less favorable view of marriage to start off with?

It has been known that, generally speaking, being married leads people to view single life more negatively, the researchers noted.

Similarly, surmised Axinn, a professor of sociology, it may be that "cohabitants, who perhaps once looked forward to marriage and children, learn an alternative lifestyle that teaches that marriage and child-rearing are not necessary."

Magnets used in study found to reduce pain

WASHINGTON POST

Using a magnet to treat pain may not be as wacky an idea as it sounds. In a recent study of 50 patients, application of a small magnet to painful muscles and joints was far more effective than application of an identical but non-magnetized device.

Participants in the study had significant pain for at least four weeks because of post polio syndrome, the name given to the muscle weakness, fatigue, pain and other symptoms that can occur in adults who had severe polio when young.

They were asked to assess their pain on a 10-point scale when a sensitive area ("trigger point") was touched.

A small magnet or a placebo device (neither doctors nor participants knew who got which until after the study) was taped to the area and left for 45 minutes. When it was removed, they were again asked to gauge their pain. Twenty-two out of 29 patients (76 percent) who were treated with a real magnet reported improvement, compared with only four out of 21 (19 percent) who were treated with a dummy magnet.

Furthermore, among those who reported improvement, the average decrease in pain score was 7 for the magnet group and only 4 for the dummy group.

"We cannot explain the significant and quick pain relief reported by our study patients," wrote the researchers, from Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, in the November issue of the Archives of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation.

IRS has taxing problems

WASHINGTON POST

When Arthur A. Gross, the new computer czar at the Internal Revenue Service, decided to recruit technology executives for the IRS, he put a little snap into its humdrum job ads.

In bold type, the ad said IRS wanted managers to overhaul "the world's most complex and sophisticated computer systems." The newly forming executive team, the ad said, would "rebuild America's Tax System."

The ad included in capital letters: "PLEASE NOTE: THESE POSITIONS ARE NOT FOR THE FAINT OF HEART."

Inside the staid agency, the ad created a stir. It wasn't the way the IRS usually did things, a number of insiders sniffed; besides, what did Gross mean by this "faint of heart" stuff?

Months later, Gross, a former New York state tax official brought in to fix the IRS's aging and overburdened computer system, points to the results: 2,000 inquiries and more than 850 applications. Gross hired six of them.

"I've approached this position in a single-minded, probably very driven way," he said. "There's that old story — sometimes you have to break a few eggs to make an omelet. It's been a challenge here for the organization to accept some of my personality traits."

The next few years will be technologically risky for the IRS, where many employees remain stunned by the harsh and emotional charges of taxpayer abuse that poured out at recent Senate hearings.

necessary relief for schools struggling to provide adequate education for their pupils, and that these schools cannot wait for alternative legislation to surface. They also champion the education reforms, saying they will heighten the quality of teaching and ensure academic standards.

Patty Schuh, Senate Republican press secretary, says the casino and cigarette tax base is stable and will provide a steady stream of funds to the schools most in need. She contends that the gaming industry has exceeded all of its financial expectations.

"When riverboat gambling was implemented there was no way to tell what would happen," she said. "It blossomed into an multi-billion industry. Now there's an opportunity to allow them to still be competitive and to increase our tax revenue."

"This is certainly beneficial legislation."

Some are surprised by the margin of victory HB 452 enjoyed. George Clowes, managing editor of the School Reform Newsletter published by the Heartland Institute, was stunned by Tuesday's developments. Clowes rejects the bill because, he says, it does not adequately reform education.

"This bill isn't good for Illinois, and it's not good for the children of Illinois," Clowes said. "There is no relationship between spending and achievement. There is no guarantee whatsoever that these additional funds will produce better quality and raise achievement levels."

"This will do nothing for the schools."

Sen. Dave Luechtefeld, R-Okawville, voted for the bill when it was called in the Senate and is satisfied with Tuesday's House vote. He maintains that problems in the education system still abound and will continue to plague Illinois' schools. But, he says, HB 452 delivers two of the most needed mandates: raising the foundation level and establishing a bond construction program.

"Most schools will get considerably more money," Luechtefeld said. "We have a lot of schools that don't have a lot money to spend per student. This gives them what they need to give the children adequate education."

Luechtefeld also said the bill's provisions provide a steady source of revenue. However, he denies that spending money will solve all of the problems imbedded in the education system.

"I think this bill gives more stability to the system," he said. "But schools have lots of problems that money doesn't necessarily solve. Most of the problems are society's problems like broken homes."

"There will always be problems in something as complex as education."

semi-finalists from a pool of 20 applicants in mid-November. Previously they narrowed the 43 applications to 20 candidates.

SIU President Ted Sanders ultimately will choose the next chancellor with University input. Sanders has expressed interest in presenting the new chancellor to the SIU Board of Trustees in February.

The search committee commenced in July with an eye toward replacing Donald Beggs, the acting chancellor until July 1.

Beggs said he remains uncertain of what he will do after July 1, but said that he is focusing on positions outside of the University.

As he is a tenured faculty member, Beggs said he could return to teaching. He said, however, that he is looking externally and that he is not "limiting his options."

NFL coaching pool lacks minority balance

INEQUALITY:

Minority coaches scarce despite dominance of black players in league.

WASHINGTON POST

Nearly 70 percent of players in the National Football League are black, but just 26 percent of the coaches are black, meaning there is a greater racial disparity between players and coaches at the professional level than at the major-college level.

Of the 390 coaches at all levels of responsibility in the NFL, 100 are black, according to a Washington Post study. Among the 100 black coaches, there are five coordinators, two assistant head coaches and three head coaches — Philadelphia's Ray Rhodes, Minnesota's Dennis Green and Tampa Bay's Tony Dungy. Ten head coaching jobs opened after the 1996 season. None was filled by a minority.

"I've said many times that it was a source of concern," NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue said last week. "But the people who were hired were outstanding people. But it was still a source of concern, and we're working on it."

Green Bay Packers offensive coordinator Sherman Lewis, who is black, received widespread attention last winter, when — despite helping his team win the Super Bowl — he did not receive a substantive interview for any of the NFL's head coaching vacancies.

In June, Tagliabue convened a day-long seminar to examine the process for hiring head coaches. Five owners and 10 executives and coaches, including Green and Dungy, attended.

New England Patriots owner Robert Kraft, whose team had one of the 10 head coaching vacancies, said after the seminar: "This is a business where people hire friends, people you know. ... There's got to be a way to have exposure to a (more diverse) list of people from which to choose. We have to get a better information flow."

The NFL has commissioned a national head-hunting firm, Russell Reynolds Associates, to compile a database with detailed profiles of all potential head coaching candidates. College coaches also would be included.

"We would like to get away from people relying totally on the old networking system," said Gene Washington, the NFL's director of football development. "When Team X fires a coach, the consultant goes to them and says, 'What are you looking for? What fits the profile of your market?' The hope is that by doing that, the black coaches who might not get a call or a thought will at least be brought to the surface."

Tagliabue said the issue will be discussed at an NFL owners' meeting Dec. 9.

And Minnesota's Green said he has been encouraged by steps the league has taken after a "clearly disappointing" situation last year.

"We have to look at the criteria of a successful coach," Green said. "Being a coordinator should not be the only criteria. ... We need to expand the pool and bring more people in" as candidates.

Some NFL and team officials have said that a potential head coaching candidate such as Green Bay's Lewis ironically could be limited by his success.

Tagliabue said owners who make a head coaching change often feel compelled to hire a replacement as quickly as possible. Teams often fire the head coach shortly after the regular season ends, but the NFL has a rule prohibiting teams from interviewing members of other teams' staffs until their seasons are over. The Packers, and Lewis, did not finish their 1996-97 season until the Super Bowl in late January.

Asked what would be a reasonable goal for the round of hirings after this season, Tagliabue said: "I don't think you can get into quotas or goals. You can take steps to ensure the process is both deep and fair. Deep in the sense that there is a diverse pool of coaches getting serious, in-depth consideration."

Racial gap widening in NCAA football coaching

YOU'RE FIRED:

Post-season cuts leave already thin minority percentage even smaller.

WASHINGTON POST

As the 1997 football season draws to a close, and universities begin the annual ritual of firing and hiring coaches, the reality for many blacks in the profession is that white men still dominate all levels of big-time college football coaching.

Half of all students who receive athletic scholarships to play football on major college teams are black. Yet, this season black men served as head coach at only eight of the 112 universities that field those teams.

Two weeks ago, the number of black head coaches in the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Division I-A shrank to six as Temple's Ron Dickerson resigned under pressure and Louisville's Ron Cooper was fired.

Dickerson had toiled for 21 years as an assistant coach at six universities. He said he applied for seven head coaching positions and was rejected each time. When he landed a top job five years ago, it was at Temple, whose football team is a perennial loser.

At a time when race-based affirmative action policies are being broadly debated, Dickerson's struggle to rise through the coaching ranks typifies that of many blacks in college football coaching.

"It was tough," Dickerson said shortly before his resignation. "I still think it's a good-old-boys-type system. When there's a search out there, there are very few African Americans that are recommended to get the job."

The hiring issue also matters to black athletes, such as University of Southern California running back Delon Washington, who says they look to black coaches as role models. "Coming from a predominantly black high school, I didn't want to go to an environment where there was just one black coach," said Washington, a senior at USC, which has five black assistants on its coaching staff this season.

A Washington Post study of the 112 head football coaches and their 1,213 assistants in the NCAA's Division I-A found that few blacks held positions of authority this season.

Nine percent of high-level assistant coaches, known as coordinators or associate head coaches, were black. Major-college football teams typically have a head coach, two coordinators who oversee offensive and defensive strategy, and about eight assistants. Twenty-six percent of the lower-level assistant coaches this season were black.

Black head coaches are likely to have more black assistants than are white head coaches, the study showed. Teams headed by black coaches this season had an average of four black assistants; teams headed by whites had an average of two.

Coaches, players and administrators said in recent interviews that black coaching candidates are discriminated against in subtle ways. They attributed the racial disparity to a hiring network that largely excludes blacks and helps white assistants rise to the top. They also pointed to a perception that the pool of qualified black candidates for top coaching jobs is small. And some said athletic directors fear losing financial support from boosters and alumni if they hire a black head coach.

"There are a lot of schools that are not committed to (racial) diversity," said Cedric Dempsey, executive director of the NCAA, the major sports association for colleges and universities. "It's a national social problem. We certainly have not made the progress that was anticipated out of the civil rights movement. We're beginning to slide."

Some officials in college football say progress is being made. They note that, prior to the departures of Dickerson and Cooper, there were more black head coaches this season than in any previous.

"This is individual institutions' prerogative," said Roy Kramer, commissioner of the 12-school Southeastern Conference. "I think institutions are making that commitment (to hire black coaches) across the board."

In Kramer's conference, there never has been a black head football coach, but the number of black assistant coaches has increased. In 1977, 7 percent of all SEC assistant coaches were black. The Post's study showed. This year it is 22 percent.

"There has been some progress," said Andy Geiger, athletic director at Ohio State.

Saluki women face Murray State less than 36 hours after returning from Puerto Rico trip.

SHANDEL RICHARDSON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The SIUC women's basketball team enters tonight's contest against Murray State University at the end of a difficult road trip, so the Salukis must treat the Racers with extra care, despite dominating the team in recent years.

The Salukis returned to Carbondale late Monday night from Puerto Rico, and coach Cindy Scott has seen signs of fatigue.

"I think they are very tired. I'm tired. I think we're all tired," Scott said. "We had to get up at 8 a.m., which was 6 a.m. our time, and we got here about 10 last night. So it was one bad trip back."

The Salukis have won the last 11 matchups in the series with Murray State, including a 93-65 spanking at SIU Arena to open the 1996 season. Heading into the fourth of the team's five-game road trip, SIUC hopes to even its record against the winless Racers.

But the return of four Murray State starters and seven letter winners from a year ago gives Scott a reason to be concerned.

"I think Murray is looking for a little revenge because we beat them here bad last year," Scott said. "I'm sure they want a little payback for that one."

Junior guards Sarah Higgins and Bobbi Coltharp anchor the 0-3 Racer squad. Higgins leads the team in scoring and rebounding, averaging 15.5 points and 5.8 rebound per game. Coltharp is the second option, dropping in 14.8 points a contest.

SIUC senior guard Beth Hasheider and junior O'Desha Proctor have not performed well offensively so far this season and will be looked upon to counter Coltharp and Higgins. The two combined to shoot 10-for-30 from the field in Puerto Rico, but each recorded two steals in the win over the University of Puerto Rico-Mayaguez.

Proctor said she has been suffering from early season jitters after missing the first two games of the season against Northwestern University and an exhibition game with Sports Tours. Proctor's reason for missing the two games has been undisclosed.

"I think I have been in too much of hurry to do things, and I was rushing my shot," she said. "I just have to go out and try to contain (Higgins and Coltharp) on defense because I know my offense will come."

Offensively, the Salukis have relied heavily on inside scoring early in the season. Senior center Theia Hudson, the Missouri Valley Conference's fourth-leading scorer, leads the way at 17.8 points per game. Sophomore forward Melaniece Bardley and freshman Maria Niebrugge chip in with 9.0 and 7.4 points respectively for the Salukis.

But Scott does not seem to be concerned about the team's lack of perimeter scoring because of the team's solid play in the paint.

"I'd like to see us shoot the ball better," Scott said.

"But Theia Hudson has been a mainstay, and I hope Melaniece can get her game going like we think she is capable of because she is very talented."

The Salukis' road contest against the Racers of Murray State University will begin at 7 tonight in Murray, Ky.

work hard for the win.

"It looks like they did (dominate the game), but we just missed shots," Scott said. "We had great shots that we didn't finish. Duke did not dominate at any point in that ball game even though they were up by 20 at the half. We made Duke sweat."

"The Salukis had the opportunity to beat Duke, but they shot just 30 percent from the field in the first half and trailed by 23 points at half-time. The Salukis dug a hole for themselves that they could not overcome in the second half. SIUC did have a 7-0 run in the second half, but they never caught Duke.

Scott said the 77-40 win over the University of Puerto Rico-Mayaguez Sunday was a game the Salukis should not have even played.

"It was unfortunate that we even had to play them," Scott said. "It counts as win. That's about all it does for us. We got to see (freshman) Tiffany Traylor play point, and I thought she did very well. So from that standpoint, it was very helpful to us."

against Detroit Mercy was that center Theia Hudson played about 20 minutes because she was in foul trouble. Hudson had to sit out almost 10 minutes in the first half alone, but she did manage to put up 14 points, despite the limited play.

Scott was pleased with Hudson's performance, but not having her in the game was a factor in the loss to Detroit.

Hudson came back and scored 18 points against Duke in a losing effort while making the All-Tournament team.

But even though the Salukis lost to Duke 76-54 in the second round of the tournament Saturday, Scott thought the Salukis made Duke
