Future hazy for remnants of a shameful past

These slave quarters located on the third floor of the house built by John Hart Crenshaw in 1838 were part of his slave trade operation in Southern Illinois. The third floor was the highlight of the tour of the house given by George Sisk before the house was closed to the public in 1996.

If the walls of the Old Slave House could talk, they would tell tales of lavish parties thrown by its original owner, John Crenshaw, in the mid-to-late 1800s. They would spin tales of the Crenshaw children playing outside or in the second floor's grand ballroom.

And if those walls could talk, they would tell of the number of slaves held captive on the house's well-ceiled third floor, held in prison-like cells, some no larger than a bathroom stall, and sleeping in wooden bunks resembling small tombs. Given that the third floor has been shrouded in mystery and skepticism, perhaps the walls would speak in a faint whisper.

As the present owners of the Old Slave House — located in Gallatin County near Equality — wait for the state of Illinois to procure funds in its effort to reopen it to the public, its future remains uncertain.

“It’s a shame that it’s not open,” said George Sisk, the house’s owner.

For 70 years, The Old Slave House was open to the public as a tourist attraction since 1930. Sisk’s grandfather purchased the house in 1913. Sisk ran it for nearly 30 years before closing in 1996 due to health problems stemming from the day-to-day operations of the house.

In 2000, the Illinois State Legislature purchased the 164-year-old house, agreeing to allocate $500,000 to the Illinois Preservation Agency to open and operate the house. Two years later, Sisk is still waiting for the state to include the house in its budget.

“The state owns the house now,” Sisk said. “I don’t have anything to do with [reopening it]. It just breaks my heart that it’s not open. People need to see this place and see what really happened here.”

This postcard is a reminder of a time when visitors passed through the slave house owned by George Sisk. The slave house had been in the Sisk family for nearly a hundred years till George sold it to the State of Illinois because of health problems.

Ball rolling toward first on-campus apartments

Students asked input on design of new complex

Brian Peach
Daily Egyptian

Students who like their residence hall’s proximity to classes but don’t like the small, cramped rooms would have another option if the plan to build SIUC’s first on-campus apartment complex is approved.

The Wall and Grand Project — named for being located on the corner of Wall Street and Grand Avenue — proposes to build new campus housing for the first time in four decades.

Ed Jones, director of University Housing, is working with people in the Architecture Department to come up with ideas for construction when it comes time to build in a few years.

Other on-campus apartments, such as the University of Illinois’ Illini Towers, have been around for years and cost thousands more than regular residence halls. They provide students with more living space, additional privacy and an alternative to the regular dorm rooms.

Christine Brizzolara, a sophomore in biology from Arlington Heights, attends the University of Illinois and said she wouldn’t live in residence halls after staying in the more spacious Towers for the past two years.

“Students have to live there, so we want to put the things in that students want to have.”

Ed Jones
director of University housing

“I have my own bathroom and kitchen,” she said. “With the kitchen right there, at midnight I don’t have to order out for a pizza, because I can just pop one in the oven.”

Jones’ goal is for SIUC’s on-campus apartments to be better than what any other school has.

“We want these to be the standard by which all other housing departments are measured. We can’t be equal to them; we have to be better,” Jones said about the proposed SIUC housing additions.

Norman Lach, director of architectural studies, is brainstorming ideas about what the apartments could look like.

“Some of [our ideas] will be way out of their price range,” Lach said. “The cost they’re looking for is a medium-range cost, but they’re looking for high-end quality.”

Jones said the same thing, but he added that he is not sure how much will be spent on the project.

The University will probably use bonds to pay for the housing changes, and eventually, everything will be repaid for through student fees.

Jones said housing is planning to bring in a market analysis team sometime between March and late April, which will form focus groups of students to see what housing options would appeal to them.

“Students have to live there, so we want to put the things in that students want to have,” Jones said. “The more you put in there the more it’s going to cost. But if students are willing to pay for it, then we’re willing to provide it. We want the students to have a say and for their voices to be heard,” Jones said.

Jones said he hopes for the apartments to be sophomore-approved. He wants freshmen to live in the residence halls for at least a year so they can meet people and become

Gore criticizes Bush on budget deficit

NASHVILLE, Tenn. - Former Vice President Al Gore on Saturday criticized President Bush for returning the government to budget deficits in a speech intended to mark his reappearance on the national political stage.

Gore, who lost the presidential race in 2000 to Bush, told a Democratic fund-raiser for this year's congressional elections that while Americans need to show unity in Bush's war on terrorism, "there are choices on other issues where there are differences between the two parties." Referring to the economy, which fell into recession after Bush took office last year, Gore said "our economic house is no longer in order." He complained the trend toward budget surpluses that Bush inherited from the Clinton administration had been reversed while job training, education and health care programs had been slashed.

Bush on Monday is set to propose a $2.1 trillion budget with a deficit of $106 billion that will end a four-year run of surpluses.

Gore, one of a handful of Democrats who could seek the party's presidential nomination in 2004, said he had not yet decided if he will run again after winning more popular votes nationwide than Bush in 2000.

Bush aide defends 'Axis of Evil'

U.S. National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice has defended President Bush's description of Iraq, Iran and North Korea as an "axis of evil." Appearing on Fox television Sunday, Ms. Rice said nobody should pretend there are good regimes in Iraq, Iran and North Korea, and she said the Bush administration will continue to speak with clarity about nations that pose a serious threat.

In his State of the Union address Tuesday night, Mr. Bush used the "axis of evil" phrase to accuse those three countries of helping terrorists and seeking weapons of mass destruction.

The remarks stirred controversy both at home and abroad. Former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said Mr. Bush made "a big mistake" by lumping together Iran, Iraq and North Korea and said his remarks risk alienating U.S. allies in the war against terrorism.

Echoing what President Bush said Friday, Ms. Rice did not rule out dialogue with the so-called "axis of evil" countries, but she said the United States would do what is necessary to ensure the security of itself and its allies.

Third party shoots for Costa Rica presidency

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica - A year ago, Otton Solis broke away from Costa Rica's main opposition party, created his own political machine and announced he was running for president.

He pledges to fight corruption and help the poor didn't get much media attention - until he began catching up with the two main presidential candidates in polls leading to today's election. For the first time in more than a half-century, a third party has a strong shot at the presidency, possibly forcing Costa Rica's first runoff.

Supported largely by the country's growing middle class, Solis has tapped into voter discontent with the two main parties that have controlled the presidency since a coup in 1948.

President Miguel Angel Rodriguez - prohibited by law from serving more than one four-year term - won as a Social Christian Unity candidate in 1998 by promising to reduce the country's large internal debt, attract foreign investment and promote the creation of jobs with decent salaries. Although Intel and other high-tech companies have brought thousands of relatively high-paying jobs to San Jose, many feel Rodriguez hasn't done enough.

Attacking the government's push for foreign investment and free trade, Solis wants to tax imported goods, help local producers and rethink plans to privatize state-run industries. According to a poll published Thursday in El Pais newspaper, Solis of the Citizens' Action Party is running neck-and-neck with Abel Pacheco of the Social Christian Unity Party and Rolando Araya of National Liberation.

Israel confirms tanks enter Gaza

JERUSALEM - Israeli security sources Sunday confirmed its tanks entered a Palestinian-controlled area a day earlier.

In a statement, Israel Defense Forces said four armed gunmen were in the area around Gush Katif, a block of Jewish settlements between Rafah and Khan Yunis in southern Gaza. The IDF said army forces opened fire toward the gunmen, who then ran away. The army forces pursued the gunmen and began searches in the area. The tanks were used as cover during the searches. The Israeli army said all of its forces had now left the Palestinian-controlled area.

Palestinian sources confirmed a meeting earlier this week between Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and three senior Palestinian officials, and said the Israeli leader told them he was serious and willing to compromise on certain issues. It was the first meeting reported between Sharon and Palestinian officials since he was elected.

The Israeli government would not comment on the meeting, first reported Friday by Israel Radio. But a government statement said all of Sharon's contacts with Palestinians are meant to achieve one end - to stop violence and terror - and that no political progress will be made in the region until the Palestinians take certain steps to stop violence.

SIUC professor makes environmentally-friendly invention

Codell Rodriguez
Daily Egyptian

It's a powdery brown substance with a velvet texture that was once thought to have no real use except dirtying hands and crowding landfills.

Fly ash, which is left over when coal is burned, never deteriorates and cannot be destroyed. However, Y. Paul Chugh, a professor in the Department of Mining and Mineral Resources Engineering, found a use for the substance that will take it out of the landfills, save a few trees and benefit coal mines.

Chugh discovered a way to compress the ash and combine it with a secret formula that can be used as pillars and cribs — a collection of blocks in a cubic arrangement — to provide foundation in coal mines. The finished product is about the size of its wooden counterparts but can support much more weight. It looks like concrete but is incredibly light.

Gus Bode

Gus says: I have some leftover resin.

Could I make a beam out of that?

Chugh looked at the pillar in amazement and simply replied, "You're kidding me."

Chugh wasn't the only one impressed with the results of the tests. Tom Denton, chief engineer at Galatia Mine, said he could see the fly ash being very beneficial for coal mines. Denton has worked with Chugh before and said he does a lot of good things for the coal industry.

"We look to him quite a bit," Denton said. "He looks to take technology and put it in places where we can use it in the industry."

One of the benefits that spoke to Denton the most is that mines would be able to save about 50 percent of the cost. Lumber is expensive, especially in the western part of the country where the wood is softer, and mines have to branch out for reliable lumber. The fly ash pillars, however, should last indefinitely and will not have to be replaced.

Lyle Cline, program coordinator in the Department of Mining and Minerals, said the fly ash's durability is one of the main reasons its support is revolutionary.

"It won't burn, it won't rot and it won't fail," Cline said. Cline said the ash is also beneficial to the environment because it means fewer trees will have to be chopped down to support the mines. It also means a lot less waste will go into landfills.

"If we can use stuff that just goes to the landfill, everybody wins," Cline said.

PATRICK FILE - DAILY EGYPTIAN

Professor Paul Chugh of the department of Mining and Mineral Resources Engineering shows off this beam made from fly ash, a by product of coal. Professor Chugh's research would take the fly ash, which is normally dumped into landfills, and put it to practical uses such as supports for mines.

Chugh said he is not going to stop with the coal mines and is looking to using his fly ash compound in other situations, but is not quite ready to talk about the other ways he's looking to use his fire and waterproof discovery.

He hinted at a study where he is growing vegetation on the compound. Chugh said he and his department are always looking for ways to improve the mining industry and keeping it environmentally safe.

"We've come up with a lot of good ideas," Chugh said. "I really like to be creative. It's just the way I am."

lend a helping hand

Members of Delta Phi Mu spend Sunday morning volunteering at homeless shelter

Jenneé Rommel, a junior in biological science from Quincy, hands José Villeda a fork in the kitchen of the Good Samaritan House. Members of Delta Phi Mu sorority prepared breakfast for the residents Sunday morning as part of their community service hours.

The women of Delta Phi Mu sorority are not culinary artists.

As they crowd around the stove and counters of the Good Samaritan House kitchen frying sausage, flipping pancakes and piecing together sandwiches, a smoke detector is set off, sending obnoxious beeps through the building.

"It's really not a fire," Jenneé Rommel shouts out to the dining hall, reassuring the staff and residents of the home that their breakfast isn't going up in smoke.

The smells wafting from the kitchen on Sunday morning are actually pretty good. Grilled ham and cheese sandwiches, cinnamon oatmeal, pancakes, sausage and scrambled eggs aren't a luxury residents and visitors to the Good Samaritan House, 701 S. Marion St., are used to in the morning. Usually, breakfast consists of stale doughnuts, dry cereal and plain oatmeal, but every once in a while, the Delta Phi Mu sorority tries to make a difference.

So at 8 a.m. Sunday, the members were at the Samaritan House rustling through the mustard-colored cabinets and drawers of the home's retro kitchen looking for foil, pots, pans, dishes and silverware. They laughed as they dodged each other in the small kitchen, each with their own task.

The members of the sorority have each committed themselves to completing 15 hours of volunteer work a month. And while they do anything from organizing food drives, riding horses with physically disabled children and participating in the AIDS walk, most of them find feeding the homeless the most rewarding.

"It's quick, you get to see the effects of it faster," said Marie-Lesly Emmanuel, a sophomore in biological sciences from Chicago. "A lot of the other things you don't get to see the effects of."

The gratification the sorority members feel is something that sticks with them. Mandy Creely, a senior in business administration and marketing from Quincy, fondly remembers a moment she spent a few months ago at the Samaritan House with a woman and her baby. The woman shared with Creely and some of the other members stories from her life that illustrated how she wound up at the home. By the end of the stories, Creely and the other girls were all crying with the woman.

"To know what the people are going through, it makes you feel good to help (when) they're going through a hard time," Creely said. "It makes you more thankful for what you have, and it makes you realize you could do more than what most people do [to help]."

That event is what triggered the sorority's consistent return to the home, according to Angenette Jackson, fundraising chairperson for Delta Phi Mu. Jackson said lending a hand at the Samaritan House is a volunteer activity on which all of the girls in the multi-cultural sorority can agree.

"Our goal is to help everyone instead of just one race," said Jackson, a senior in social work from Chicago.

And while the sorority members only spend about two hours at the house, they brighten the lives of the residents for weeks.

After breakfast, the women usually mingle with the residents and visitors, sharing anecdotes and spreading smiles.

Sunday's visit was the first for Rick Parish, who is staying at the home until a spot opens up for him at a rehabilitation center in St. Louis. He wandered around the dining room as the sorority members cooked, poking his head in the kitchen door to tell them that the food smelled good.

"This is special, what the girls are doing," Parish said. "There's no comparison at all. Most of the food is donated here and you get a cold doughnut and a couple of cups of coffee for breakfast."

Workers at the Samaritan House appreciate the work Delta Phi Mu and other volunteers do because it eases their long list of responsibilities. Todd Thomas, a junior in theater from Kankakee, began working at the house a year ago after his fraternity, Omega Psi Phi, volunteered at the home. After seeing the impact his actions had on the residents, Thomas applied for a vacant position.

"We really didn't know what to expect because we never dealt with homeless people before, but it was very uplifting," Thomas said. "It makes you appreciate what you have in life a lot more."

And after Delta Phi Mu has washed the pile of dirty dishes and wrapped the leftovers, residents of the Samaritan House are already looking forward to their return.

"Every time [the sorority] comes in, the people here are buzzing for the next two weeks, when are they gonna be coming back," Thomas said.

That's because members of the sorority put lots of care into their service project and let the work they do at the Samaritan House impact not only the people they help but also themselves.

Local documentary films explore racial issues

Films produced by area youth shown tonight

Ben Botkin
Daily Egyptian

A young age is not a deterrent for one group of award-winning film producers in Southern Illinois.

Middle school and high school students are slated to receive awards from SIUC for their part in producing three documentaries about black history in Southern Illinois. A free showing of the films and an awards ceremony will take place at 7 tonight at the Student Center.

The three productions were overseen by SIUC cinema professor David Floeter and his wife, Rebecca, who taught junior and high school kids how to shoot and edit film.

"Bessie Coleman," the first film produced, is about a black female pilot who accomplished many feats in aviation and was active in the fight for women's rights. The production was completed by the Floeters' adopted son, Jordan Moultrie, who made the film last year as an eighth grader at Unity Point school.

Moultrie said he hopes the film will help viewers learn about Coleman, who is a relatively unknown figure in history.

Olivia Lopez, a freshman at Carbondale Community High School, heard about the project through Moultrie and decided to get involved. She helped produce "Spirit of Attucks," which delves into the subject of racial segregation with a focus on Attucks County, an all-black school in Carbondale that shut down when integration began.

Lopez said she enjoyed gaining experience from working on the film's production team.

"I learned a lot and came out with a lot of knowledge," Lopez said. "They let us do most of it, but were watching and guiding."

Lopez, who is interested in a career in the performing arts, said students were able to learn about camera angles and how to edit film. The project took devotion and time, with students working many evenings to complete the production.

"It was a lot of fun and a lot of work," Lopez said.

Rob Basanta, a seventh-grader, said working in the production taught him about racial injustices.

"I learned that black veterans weren't treated as fairly as white veterans," said Basanta, who attends Murphysboro Middle School.

Basanta was involved in producing "Forgotten Soldiers: African American Civil War Veterans of Murphysboro, Illinois," which takes a look at the role black soldiers had in the Civil War. Retired middle school teacher P. Michael Jones helped students with the film's historical research.

Basanta said that learning how to do the film's lighting was a challenge and added that he also enjoyed interviewing people.

"I liked doing interviews the most because you get to hear about peoples' stories and about black civil war veterans," he said.

The 26-minute film will air on WSIU this May on Memorial Day. Rebecca Floeter, who formerly worked with Paramount Pictures before moving to Carbondale, said the upcoming airing is happening much sooner than what she has experienced with previous projects.

"We were used to the L.A. system where it takes a year," she said.

David Floeter said that working with the junior and high school students was a challenging and rewarding experience.

"They were doing the jobs of adults on both sets," he said.

Hughes stamp unveiled at Civic Center

Molly Parker
Daily Egyptian

A deep bass voice filled the room at the Carbondale Civic Center Sunday as Milton McDaniel Sr. told about the troubles of the black slaves and sang their freedom songs.

"And I imagine once they were led to the slave block where they would be sold, they'd sing a song that went something like this: 'Nobody knows the trouble that I've seen. Nobody knows but Jesus.'"

The event was to honor the 25th anniversary of the Black Heritage Stamp Series as well as unveil the newest stamp in the series — a commemorative stamp honoring writer and poet Langston Hughes.

The African American Museum of Southern Illinois also had a special cancellation stamp that could be used to cancel the new stamp. The cancellation stamp will be available upon request at the post office for 30 days.

It states the motto of the museum: Identify, Portray, Preserve. The creator, Tone Buford, said she hopes it serves as a collector's item for Black History Month in Carbondale.

Councilwoman Corene McDaniel let out a shriek of excitement as Carbondale Postal Supervisor Dan Finnegan canceled her stamp. McDaniel said she was excited people came to the event because black history is everyone's history.

"Not everyone gets as excited as Corene about getting their stamp canceled," Buford said laughing.

As the stamp of Hughes was unveiled, the crowd of about 30 broke into applause.

Hughes was a famous poet and author and joins other prominent blacks such as Martin Luther King Jr. and Jackie Robinson in the series.

At the age of 12, Hughes moved to Lincoln, Ill., to live with his mother. It was in high school where Hughes began to write his poetry.

Hughes became a central figure of the Harlem Renaissance, and some of his most noted works of poetry include "The Weary Blues," "The Dream Keeper" and "Shakespeare in Harlem."

After the unveiling of the stamp, artist Kenya Ajanaku and eight children did several African dances.

"My body sways to the sound of rhythm, and I'm caught up in everything that is Africa from the color of my skin to the longing in my soul," Ajanaku said.

The group did a "drum call," an African tradition that the king or elders of the village used to call all people from far and near.

Next, three girls did a dance called "Rainforest," where they twirled to the beat of a drum taking the cue to change motion from the break in the beat.

McDaniel said she heard of the group from one of her customers at the beauty shop and decided to have them come to Carbondale for Black History Month.

"I wish there would have been a thousand people there," McDaniel said about the small crowd. "It's kind of expected though."

McDaniel is hopeful that the museum will be able to find a permanent building to display black history memorabilia, including all 25 stamps in the Black Heritage Series.

Currently, a small portion of the collection is housed in the mall. The paintings, African masks, stamps and photographs will be on display until the end of the month. The mall provided the museum with the space free of charge.

After that though, the collection will go back into storage boxes.

ALEX HAGLUND — DAILY EGYPTIAN

Young dancers dance the Dun Dun Ba, a traditional dance that Kenya Ajanaku, (on drums), learned as his first dance. Ajanaku, a storyteller, was the guest artist at The African American Museum of Southern Illinois' unveiling of the Black History Stamp at the Carbondale Civic Center on Sunday afternoon.

"This is not the kind of stuff that should be stored in boxes," McDaniel said.

She's hoping someone will donate a building for the collection sometime in the future so the museum can proudly display Southern Illinois black history as well as other artifacts from around the world.

It may be a long time coming though for McDaniel, and she knows she has to be patient and hopeful. Perhaps the words of her husband, who sang during the ceremony, best describes the daily struggles of such a large task.

"Nobody told me that the road would be easy. I don't believe he's brought me this far to leave me."

The Daily Egyptian's only source of revenue is through the advertising sold by two separate teams: Display and Classified. The university itself does not provide any funding for the paper's production costs; it only provides the facilities in which to produce it. All computers, newsprint, supplies, and salaries are paid for through advertising revenue. Obviously, the advertising teams have very demanding jobs, and they are full-time students as well. Above is one team of talented individuals who work hard to contribute to our award-winning campus community newspaper: The Display Advertising Team.

Black American Studies major would help increase minority faculty and enrich entire student population

The Black Affairs Studies Program at SIUC has MAJOR written all over it.

The University's black student population is about 12 percent, and Southern Illinois has always had a rich tradition of black history. In the 1960s, the Civil Rights Movement swept through SIUC in the form of black students protesting unfair treatment by administrators and fighting for the restaurants and Varsity movie theater to be desegregated. Even Chancellor Walter Wendler noted that a proposed BAS major should be a part of the Southern at 150 future planning, notwithstanding its notable absence as an agenda item at the Jan. 18 strategy meeting.

State universities such as Eastern Illinois University and Chicago State University offer Black American Studies as a major. A BAS major at SIUC would be an excellent addition to the University's core curriculum. Classes taught in Black American and African history and African-American literature offer students — of all races — a wonderful perspective on black culture. The program would undoubtedly attract more minority professors, which hopefully could work as a catalyst for recruiting more minority and women professors on campus across the board, given that the lack of diversity among SIUC faculty continues to be a source of concern.

A BAS major — on this campus — seems like a no brainer. But creating any new major will take some time. A proposal detailing the nature of the major must be submitted to the department, in this case the College of Liberal Arts. A COLA subcommittee examines the proposal and makes a recommendation to the department council for a vote. If approved, the Faculty Senate's Undergraduate Education Policy committee considers it. From there, the entire senate votes on the major. It then goes to the provost, the SIU president, the Board of Trustees and finally to the Illinois Board of Higher Education for approval.

The University should strongly consider a BAS major in the not too distant future to better represent its black students and the entire region.

The entire process could take two to three years or maybe longer. That time frame may or may not include changes made to the SIUC catalog, course offerings and overall core curriculum. In addition, the University and the state is in no financial shape to tackle such an ambitious move, right now. Bottom line — a BAS major will not happen overnight. Still, that should not scare people away from the idea of exploring it in the future. There's another point to consider regarding a BAS major.

If there are concerns about what kind of financial impact a new major will have on the University, then the process should entail looking at existing majors that are not pulling their weight. Does it make any sense to have a potentially prosperous major on the sidelines while less successful majors are still in the game? Not really. The University would also have to hire more tenured faculty. BAS Director Joseph Brown is the only tenured professor in the program.

There has been a lot of talk about properly representing the people of this region with respect to having prayers at graduation. The University should strongly consider a BAS major in the not too distant future to better represent its black students and the entire region.

The University should strongly consider a BAS major in the not too distant future to better represent its black students and the entire region.

Ebonics? It's just talk.

Lonnae O'Neal Parker
oneall@washpost.com

Voices editor's note: The following piece by Washington Post columnist Lonnae O'Neal Parker originally appeared in The Post on March 23, 1997. Parker attended SIUC and earned her degree in journalism in 1989.

The Oakland School Board caused a firestorm recently when some thought it proposed teaching "Ebonics" in schools. I agree, there is a real danger in that. Teachers might get it wrong. Ebonics needs to be taught in the home. Oh, I wish I had a witness. Stay wit' me now I am an educated woman, and I speak Ebonics fluently. With subtlety and nuance, accent and inflection, and much, much attitude. Fo' real tho', yo' girl can go. At work, I can toggle between software applications in a f'ystroke. I am constantly reading, researching and importing text between applications with different rules, different aesthetics, different sets of assumptions. It kind of reminds me of what black people in this country do all the time. I spend my days al-tabbing through competing realities. I doublethink. Y'all don't know nuf' 'bout that George Orwell. Baby was all that. That 1984 was da bomb, yo.

Ebonics is more than slang and fractured verse and fodder for political pontification. It is, for me, subtext, context and pretext. It is the filter through which all of my ideas flow. It is my first language, the one I think in. The rest is just translation. That's real. Sometimes I'll have an "Ebonics moment" in front of the water cooler or standing at the mirror checking my lipstick. It is a word, a turn of phrase, a gesture or a meaningful look. It is a way of understanding the world and of understanding you-self, seldom seen by people in the office. Lessin' they black folks. It is the reason why black people downtown, who they be unknown to one another, almost always speak when passing. It is a tacit acknowledgment: We out here, ain't we? For a creative writing assignment, I once wrote a letter in Ebonics and had a professor — tryin' to school yo, girl — tell me, "Educated black people would not talk like that." I was like, yo, R'An' (I a Woman, yo? To say he didn't get it would be an understatement. Maybe I need to 'splain myself.

Check it: I grew up steeped in the classics. I was a journalism major in college and I am fond of citing the philosophical underpinnings of a free press as an argument for diversity. I can talk Dante, and Bronte. *But you know, I gets to bring a El Ha'ry Belfortie. And y'all be straight sleep on that Racamne Sante, see. Ebonics is the spoken rhythm of my home. It is kickin' it with the sisters while washing dishes and watching "Star Trek," "Girl check out Number One, baby is fine. And it punctuates the sweet, intimate moments spent at play with my little girl. Dat mommy be rikkbin' on dem baby toes. Ebonics is not unknown, it is not misunderstood, even by those blacks who would have you believe in its absence. For a generation, it may be a shameful little secret. A way to distinguish one kind of black from another. Negroes from African-Americans. But it is the tradition we all come from. It is one not unfamiliar to Colin Powell, a tradition that gave rise to Thurgood Marshall and Clarence Thomas. *MCs act like they don't know, but you know Clarence get to them family reunions and be talkin' up some stuff. He from Georgia too. Please.

I've seen white people claim not to get it. But oh, they want to. These are the same folks at the office Christmas party singing: Whachoo want? Baby I got it! Whachoo need? You know I got it. (They ain't fo' respect, chile.) When it comes to Aretha Franklin, or the Temptations or B.B. King, white folks "get it" all day long, because they understand there is a range of emotion that simply cannot be expressed in standard English. *It's got to be infused, embellished, You feelin' me? It is the reason black people gave the world jazz and rap. It is why we sing the blues. It is creative, resilient; fluid. And for me, it is my ticket to ride: uptown and downtown. It reminds me that if I get too far from where I started, I'm lost. *An' you know, forget where you come from an' you might get to thinkin' nobody'll eve' try'n' send you back.

So my husband and I might could break into Ebonics at the Smithsonian with my daughter. *No shame to our game. Because dance is a pas de deux and the Bankhead Bounce. Because French is the Champs-Elysees and the French Quarter. Because Spanish is Madrid and a rose in Spanish Harlem. And because the world is so much bigger than subject-verb agreement when I sing to her, *You are a chocolate star! Though you may not be a bass guitar, baby but... It's all good. My daughter giggles. She doesn't think I'm ignorant, and she never questions my education. She be lookin' all like, oo-ooo, represent, represent. 'Cause my baby know. That mommy of school. She jus' be keepin' it real. Peace Out.

Get rid of the cars!

My niece talked me into going to her high school Friday and speaking to her class about my Navy career. I was flattered at first that she would ask — thinking she was that proud of me. When I got there, I found out I was homework. It was Resource Management class, teaching the kids life skills for the real world. Everyone else was handing in reports with a newspaper article stapled to the front. My niece handed in me. What's more, she would have had to do a report a week if she had not arranged for a guest speaker. At least she didn't staple anything to me.

Chancellor Walter Wendler is working on a real world study of his own. After several car-versus-pedestrian accidents this year, he is looking for a way to reduce the mayhem. I'm not sure how much he's looking to pay for the study, but I'm willing to give him an answer for free: eliminate the cars. SIUC tried lowering the speed limit to 20 mph and promptly racked up another accident. No surprise actually; the people who breeze through the crosswalks in their cars aren't likely to be worried about such small niceties as a speed limit. They're worried about getting to their next class or back to their apartment before their roommate drinks the last can of Milwaukee's Best.

Eliminate the vehicular traffic on campus and no one can get hit by a car on campus.

Chances are, the driver was watching for a cop with a radar gun instead of who might be in the crosswalk. The pedestrians are not much better — someone needs to let them know that a crosswalk is not a bullet-proof vest. There are a lot of careful, perhaps justifiably nervous pedestrians on campus who watch the traffic, and either wait for an obviously attentive driver (like a cop) or no traffic at all before venturing into a crosswalk. For every one of those, there are two or three that will blindly step out into a crosswalk, wrapped securely in the knowledge that they have the right of way.

Even worse, there's likely to be one of those who will actually race a car, knowing that if they get to the crosswalk first, they have the magical right of way. So what can be done? Eliminate half of the problem. More cars is not the answer.

Tales from Oz

BY DAVID OSBORNE
ozzie@talesfromoz.com

Parking is so bad now, if we made everyone drive, we'd end up playing bumper cars in the parking lots. Better perhaps to go the other way. Eliminate all parking inside of Lincoln Drive. We can save some money at the same time by eliminating the need for the proposed footbridge over Lincoln Drive at Neckers, as well the expense of putting in speed bumps.

All we would need inside of Lincoln Drive are a few strategically placed handicapped spaces. The Parking Division could be reduced, saving further money. And anyone parked illegally on campus could be required to forfeit their vehicle. Think of the money we could make at the next police auction. Of course, this means the parking lots outside of Lincoln Drive are going to become prime real estate. So treat them like that. Lease the individual parking spots for a significant amount per semester and make them assigned parking. Before selling them, make the lessee prove his or her residency, and if they live within a reasonable walking distance of the campus, advise them to get a bike.

Again, violators would have their cars towed and auctioned. Hey, it will work! Eliminate the vehicular traffic on campus and no one can get hit by a car on campus. The money saved through reducing street and parking lot maintenance could be reinvested in more buses for those who are suddenly pedestrians again. And maybe even valet parking for those who pay the price for a premium place to park. Just a thought.

O'Malley puts 'principles over politics'

DEAR EDITOR:

The best way to fight for the lives of babies who are murdered each day is to vote for State Sen. Patrick O'Malley. He is the ONLY gubernatorial candidate, in either field, that is 100 percent pro-life, has a record to prove it, and has been vocal in saying that he will continue to fight for the lives of the unborn. Jim Ryan was once a critic of abortion. However, with less than 11 weeks remaining until the election, Ryan has not yet clearly articulated his position on abortion. All he has given voters is a campaign ad designed to obscure his stance on this issue. Ryan seems to be attempting to sweat out the primary in hopes of basing his position on abortion on what he thinks the voters in the general election want. Ryan, like Gov. George Ryan, has no personal principles and is merely a political puppet. I don't want a governor like that. At a time when the GOP is straying from its fundamental principles and Illinois' government is riddled with corruption, Senator O'Malley is just what the GOP and residents of Illinois need.

Some left out of Southern at 150

DEAR EDITOR:

Much media coverage has been given to "Southern at 150," an ambitious plan unveiled Friday, Jan. 18, by Chancellor Walter Wendler in which he assembled and called upon a select population of what he terms "big thinkers" to assist in devising long-term, large scale plans to help SIUC realize its potential for excellence by the University's 150th birthday in 2019.

While I truly commend Chancellor Wendler for his efforts, I also can relate to Gus Bode, the quintessential undergraduate cartoon character who is quoted in a front-page insert of the January 22 Daily Egyptian saying, "Doesn't anyone care about what I have to say about campus?" Well, Gus, maybe not, but if it makes you feel any better next time does it seem to matter what elected labor representatives think — at least not enough that the presidents of SIUC's two largest unions, the Faculty Association and the Association of Civil Service Employees-IEAVNEA (ACSE), were invited to participate.

As one whose plate is very full, this writer truly did not need another committee appointment. While I am proud to serve as president of the largest civil service union at SIUC, I am also privileged to have been elected as Labor's Representative for all the other unions, excluding Faculty Association, on the Chancellor's Advisory Team (CAT). As such, I view of much greater importance the fact that the omission, intentionally or otherwise, sends a clear message of insensitivity for the negotiated (union) employees of Southern Illinois University.

Since neither President Walker nor Chancellor Wendler bring to their respective posts any experience working with unions, it is perhaps not surprising, though none the less disturbing, that our two top administrators could overlook this important sector. They are force-1, at this point, to rely on advisors who should know better. In this case, unfortunately, it would seem they were not well served.

Terms such as "shared governance" and "collegiality" roll easily off the tongue but prove much less palatable when it comes to actual implementation. Brushing away the fluff, it all boils down to respect or, as seen here, lack thereof. At a time when the Faculty Association is about to enter into negotiations with the University, and ACSE stands in total support of that effort, it is more important than ever that the "big thinkers" who put together task forces such as "SIUC at 150" exercise greater care in consciously promoting inclusiveness and fostering good will among all members of the SIU family.

Natty Bumpo's view on race from behind the shop counter

When I am not studying literature or working for a newspaper, I am a liquor store clerk who deals with all kinds of people.

Our American ideals were forged in shops like my place of employment: locations of social gathering where people came together to purchase necessities, read the latest edition of the newspapers and catch up on the latest gossip.

Being a liquor store clerk is the best job I have had as a journalist. I see everyone from the community as they come in to select their poison. Whether you're a great big king or a little street sweeper, sooner or later we all dance with the reaper — and the reaper's name is alcohol.

Everyone has their poison and at the store, everyone is treated equally despite their selection of convivial libations or their skin tone. Our store is a place where one learns that in this life, it takes all kinds — and believe me, we see all kinds of people coming through the doors.

We hardly have to deal with the general social issues and concerns about race that tend to occur in most public thoroughfares and marketplaces, but only because of the minimal presence of intolerance within the doors of our store.

While a dirty joke is expected, a racial slur is unacceptable — no matter whose mouth it is uttered from on either side of the counter. Intolerance will not be tolerated.

When it comes down to it, we are a crew of clerks and not a murder of crow-black attired clergy. We only supply the church with the wine for its sacrament, but do not administer it to the congregation. We are rough around the edges, but we are good people.

Throughout my time at this store, I have come to know interesting people from all walks of life, all of whom have a story to tell and a voice that deserves to be listened to or heard — regardless of their skin tone.

So when it comes down to what has been passing for the race conversation at this campus, in this community and through their overlapping media outlets, I honestly have to say I decline entering a statement in the usual fashion of statements thus far made by others.

What I do have to say is very short, very limited, and to the point.

I am Christian Hale and I AM NOT related to that pinhead white supremacist who shares my last name and who once attended our law school. If I could, I would rip off my last name and beat him over the head with it for all the trouble sharing the same last name has caused me at a burgeoning, non-racist, journal-

Earth for all people through a spirit of love and compassion for all — despite what humans have done to His redemptive message.

I also believe that Crown Royal whiskey and Jose Cuervo 1800 tequila are very suitable liquors that warm the palate and are served best when chased with an ice-cold lager.

Much as in my moderate Christian life and practice, I do not limit my journalistic viewpoint of the question concerning race to a merely black-and-white perspective or rely on political-correct posturing to get my points across.

Instead of blaming others through allegations of wrongdoing or skirting the blame when allegations are laid out by others, the question we need to be asking is: What are we prepared to do about bringing our race discussion to the multicultural level?

SLAVEHOUSE

What "really happened" there is where the house's mystery begins. Crenshaw, a successful businessman in the mid 1800s, owned what was then a profitable salt mining enterprise near the Saline River, which earned him the title, "King of the Gallatin Salines." For years, Crenshaw was believed to be major slave trafficker.

Evidence uncovered in 1999 by house researchers Jon Musgrave, Ron Nelson and Gary DeNeal directly linked Crenshaw to the kidnapping of free blacks and indentured servants, who were then sold back into slavery. Letters dated as far back as 1827 documenting the recorded sale of captured slaves by Crenshaw were discovered at the Illinois State Historical Library in Springfield.

But construction on the Old Slave House began around 1834. The house was completed in 1838. Did Crenshaw build the house to use it to traffic kidnapped blacks? House researcher Gary DeNeal believes so. "This house is an architectural anomaly," he said.

The house's unusual design also adds to the kidnapping theory. A carriage door on the side of the three-story building once led directly into the house. Researchers believe slaves were brought in from carriages and ushered to the third floor without notice. Skeptics have said the third floor was used for everything from guest quarters to a fruit cellar.

However, the kitchen was located outside — not unusual for houses built at the time. And the decrepit and cramped conditions of the third floor seemed ill-equipped as a place for guests. Evidence notwithstanding, DeNeal said there has always been two schools of thought concerning the stories about Crenshaw's old home.

There are two ideas about the house. One, that the stories about the house are false and the whole thing is a hoax. Or that it's an unseemly story that shouldn't be told even if it did happen. These two ideas have become one over time," DeNeal said.

House Researcher Jon Musgrave would like to see a private group come in and run the house on a year-by-year basis until the state finds a place in the budget for it.

"There is no reason why it shouldn't be open," he said. "But it can't be a Gallatin County project. I always felt that a regional entity should come in and run it until the state can take it over. But it looks like that won't happen."

At least not this year, Musgrave said. But Sisk is set to move out this May. If the state can't come through by then, Sisk will have to sell off hundreds of valuable artifacts and antiques, some as old as 100 years. One possible item includes a map dated in the mid 1834, which counts among the state's population free and enslaved blacks, though Illinois was presumably a free state. It is the only such map in existence. Another is a ball-and-chain that was there when Sisk's grandfather brought the property.

There were 27 such ball-and-chains sprawled out in the field, but his grandfather sold most of them for scrap iron. The last remaining is on the third floor. Yet, there are those who believe the region would be better off if the place were burnt to the ground, Sisk has said. "Those who believe in the truth, as well as the legend about the Old Slave House fear the place won't be there for too long once Sisk moves out.

"People have wanted the house gone for a number of years," DeNeal said. "If that house were gone, we would have lost a tangible artifact to a dark chapter of our past."

Proposed on-campus apartment complex

These plans are just one of hundreds of different designs which may provide ideas for architects to use in the construction of housing apartments. The numerous plans may not be used in the immediate future. The apartment development will be constructed at the corner of Wall Street and Grand Avenue. As part of The Wall and Grand Project. more adjusted to college life. Jones said that none of the plans are final, and he needs to further discuss them with Larry Dietz, vice chancellor for Student Affairs and Enrollment Management. Dietz will in turn talk with Chancellor Walter Wendler, who will then talk with President Walker's office before the Board of Trustees has a chance to approve the plan.

"We're looking years down the line before all this stuff happens," Lach said. "There hasn't been any housing built on this campus for 40 years. They're just taping and band-aiding things up right now."

Today's Birthday (Feb. 4). Some years you go forward, but this year you'll go back. Review what you should know by now, and dig into it even further. An old area of study regains your interest, as you discover all sorts of new treasures. To get the advantage, check the day's rating: 10 is the easiest day, 0 the most challenging.

Aries (March 21-April 19) - Today is a 7 - This is not a good day for a team effort, even if your team is raring to go. More planning is required. Seems like you've been doing nothing else. You're advancing, and thereby encountering a whole new set of problems. Take 'em one at a time.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) - Today is a 7 - Stand back a bit and let someone else speak for you. This person can state your case better than you can. Besides, that frees you up to do something else. A strong advocate for your cause is a solid investment.

Gemini (May 21-June 21) - Today is a 7 - It may be difficult to express what's on your mind, especially when it comes to money. Get your facts straight before you speak. In about 10 days, it'll get easier. From now until then, do the homework.

Cancer (June 22-July 22) - Today is a 7 - You're still facing all sorts of problems, including a few technical difficulties, but you're not facing them alone. You have a powerful person on your side. If you feel overwhelmed, call for help.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22) - Today is a 7 - You're a natural-born leader, but lately you've felt more like a follower. Don't fight it. Learn as much as you can from the experience.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) - Today is a 6 - Make time to work on your schedule and rearrange your priorities. Some things you wanted to do now will have to be postponed, but other opportunities arise. A conversation with a person you love brings support and encouragement. Make the call.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct 22) - Today is a 7 - Love is going to have to wait while you take care of business. Promise to meet tomorrow night instead of tonight. If you hustle, you'll have done enough by then to justify (and pay for) another wild fling.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - Today is a 6 - Evaluate your plans with a critical eye. Now is the time to decide what to toss and what to save. Sell the valuable stuff so that you can buy something special. Nothing says you have to lose money on this deal.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - Today is a 5 - Most things will take longer than expected and require more effort. Start shopping for the next big item on your list. An insider tip could lead you right to it.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Today is a 7 - The things you try that don't work are actually very helpful. There'll be about three or four of them before you find the thing that does work. Don't give up.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - Today is a 7 - Pay attention to what's going on behind the scenes. That's where the action is. Ask a few questions and get the clues you've been after.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20) - Today is a 6 - You're more decisive now. You can see that some of the tasks on your list no longer need to be done. Scratch them off without a twinge of guilt. This makes the rest much more manageable.

SIU's talented inside duo for the Salukis second half uprising.

"Jermaine Dearman set the tempo at the start of the second half by getting after the boards, and then we got it in to Roberts and this was one of his better games against a good team on the road," Weber said.

Creighton had not lost an MVC home game since the Salukis beat them in Omaha two seasons ago, and it seemed well on the way to extending that streak early on when the Salukis played more like chumps than champions.

Playing in the hostile territory against the swarming Creighton defense, the Salukis were a jittery team in the first half. SIU didn't handle the ball confidently, and when Sylvester Willis flat out dropped a routine inbound pass from Marcus Belcher with three minutes left in the first half, it was one of 13 crippling Saluki first-half turnovers.

Excluding Roberts, all nine of the Salukis who saw action in the first half were guilty of at least one turnover.

Meanwhile, Bluejays forward Kyle Korver did what he does best — shoot the 3-ball and shoot it with remarkable precision. Korver, who finished with a game-high 27 points, drilled all four of his first half three-point attempts, his final one giving Creighton a 48-34 halftime bulge.

"We just weren't relaxed enough," Williams said. "The second half we did a much better job with their trap, and of course we kept them from scoring as much, so they didn't press as much."

Creighton didn't fold without making the Salukis work, and maintained its lead after the initial SIU flurry. But Darren Brooks followed his own miss to finally put SIU on top 63-61 with 8:24 remaining. A Korver three pointer drew the Bluejays back to a 66-66 tie, but Brad Korn put SIU ahead on the next possession and the Salukis led the rest of the game until Creighton forward Mike Grimes was fouled by Roberts and made his free throws to tie the game at 77 with 4.5 seconds left.

Then Bowden made his fatal mistake, Williams finished the Bluejays off and the Salukis exchanged hugs and high fives on the way off the floor.

Although nobody was bigger than Roberts in leading the SIU comeback, Korn's 15-point effort couldn't have come at a more opportune time. He made several big buckets to keep the Salukis in the game, and his stickback after a missed Williams free throw quieted a ruckus gym by putting SIU back in the lead.

Korn said he was just doing his part on a day a gutsy effort was needed.

"It was the conference championships, basically," Korn said. "We've got to take care of business the rest of the way obviously, but beating them here is pretty big."

Labeling his team's lackluster defense at the start of the second half as the difference in the game, Creighton head coach Dana Altman accepted blame for his teams Dr. Jekyll/Mr. Hyde act.

"I just did a really poor job of getting them ready for the second half, and we obviously weren't clear on how we wanted to guard their high-low action because we made some brutal mistakes there," Altman said.

Now the sprint to a three-for-the-taking MVC championship begins for the Salukis. Both SIU and Creighton have seven games remaining, with the Salukis having a slightly easier schedule courtesy of one extra home game and the rematch between the teams slated for the SIU Arena on Feb. 20.

Nobody was more jubilant after the game than Roberts, who led the Salukis with 18 points despite a lingering flu.

"I've never won anything in my life except for high school, so I'm just real hungry to win a championship," Roberts said.

Thanks to a gritty second half Sunday, Roberts may not be able to say that much longer.

falling victim to Williams' trap.

"I was pretty surprised," Williams said. "I knew I didn't have much time so I just heaved it up there. [Bowden] was still running at me. I don't think he expected me to step right away, so it was a good break for us."

Bowden was distraught afterwards and struggled to explain the final seconds.

"He kind of forced his body into me and got the call," Bowden said.

Saluki guard Marcus Belcher missed two free throws with 22 seconds left, making it appear that SIU's season-long free throw woes would doom them again. But Bowden bailed them out.

Predictably, the call incited the wrath of the Bluejays fans, but the Salukis were similarly displeased when Roberts was called for fouling Grimes a few minutes earlier amid the chaotic din in the auditorium.

"They called a foul with four seconds left, and I'm going to say don't call that one," said SIU head coach Bruce Weber. "If you're going to call the one at four, you're going to call the one at point-three, so that's just part of basketball."

For players, jewelers, winning the ring is the thing

By Andrea L. Stapp
The Providence Journal

PROVIDENCE (KRT) - The Super Bowl. It's all about touchdowns, field goals and huge, diamond-encrusted rings.

While details of the game may fade, and T-shirts end up in the rag bag, the sparkling, at-times gaudy, Super Bowl ring is an icon that lasts.

"It's with you forever. Fame is fleeting," said Peter Cronan, a linebacker for the Washington Redskins when they won Super Bowl XVII in 1982. The 47-year-old Cronan, now president of Merrill Corp., in Boston, wears his ring every day.

He enjoys the attention the ring attracts, and was devastated when he lost it playing golf several years ago. Cronan had the manufacturer craft a new one - after all, winning a Super Bowl ring is "quite an accomplishment."

"Running an organization, it's a good reminder of what is necessary to achieve goals," Cronan said.

Since the first Super Bowl in 1967, there has been a ring for every champion. Covered in jewels, and worth thousands of dollars, they are portable trophies only a select few ever get to slip on their fingers.

"The reason they play is for that ring. In reality, it's priceless," said Steve Alic, a spokesman for the National Football League. "That piece of hardware is something that is cherished for generations."

The competition to make the rings is as fierce as the battle they are created to commemorate. Every year, jewelry manufacturers, such as Jostens Inc. and Balfour Sports, jockey for the rights to craft the winner's ring.

Designs are presented. Demo rings are cut.

The football team is free to choose who designs and manufactures the rings, unhampered by NFL licensing rights. The NFL just sets aside money for the rings. This year the league is willing to cover the cost of 150 rings up to $5,000 each - about $750,000. If team owners want to spend more on the rings, the sky is the limit.

Rings have been known to cost up to $20,000, according to industry watchers. So nailing the contract is a lot like winning the Super Bowl of ring manufacturing.

"Winning the Super Bowl ring is not what you call a big financial windfall. But it's got great public-relations value for the company," said Mark Cassutt, a communications manager for Jostens in Minnesota.

The company that wins the contract usually makes pendants and rings for the spouses of the coaches and players as well as commemorative rings for fans. Jostens, which manufactures high school class rings in Attleboro, has won the contract to create the Super Bowl rings for 23 out of the 35 champion teams.

The company designed rings for the last three Super Bowl winners: the Baltimore Ravens, St. Louis Rams and the Denver Broncos. Last year, Jostens made 120 rings for the Ravens coaches, players and the team's office staff and water boys.

Each 14-karat gold ring was covered in 200 diamonds, the most Jostens has ever put on a ring, according to Cassutt - about three carats' worth. It also carried the Ravens' shield, the score, the NFL banner, the inscription "set the standard," a miniature replica of the Vince Lombardi trophy rising out of the stadium, and if it was made for a player - his name and number.

Pinpointing trends is a key to winning the contract. In recent years teams have demanded bigger, brighter and bolder Super Bowl rings. The first ring in 1967, made for the Green Bay Packers, had just one diamond.

"Each year, the team owners and players would like it to be a little more extravagant - more diamonds, more intricacies - they have to make a bigger, better ring every year," Cassutt said.

Track and field hits a bump in the road

Men's, women's teams face tougher competition

Samantha Robinson
Daily Egyptian

After starting the season against mediocre teams, the Saluki men's and women's track and field teams went up against tougher competition. The men's over the weekend were welcomed, but the Salukis did not fare as well as they would have liked to.

The women competed in the 28th Indiana Relays where they had only one first-place showing by Noa Beidler in the 800-meter run with a time of 2 minutes, 18 seconds.

The only other strong showing for the women was in the high jump. Junior Latrice Gray came in second with a jump of 5 feet 6 1/2 inches.

Out of a total of 17 events, the Saluki women placed in 12. Even though they won one event, they placed in the top five in six events.

Since this was an unscored event the results do not affect the team's overall standing. The results do however show them how they stack up against other teams and where they need to improve.

"Competition was tougher than earlier, but everyone stepped up and performed at their best," said junior Katie Meehan.

The men, on the other hand, traveled to the University of Illinois to compete in the Carlo/Health Alliance Illini Classic.

One of four teams competing, the Salukis placed in 11 of 15 events.

Two of the first-place finishes were by Adam Judge in the 35-pound weight throw (20.88m) and Jeff Young in the 60-meter hurdles with a time of 7.89. Judge's throw was a personal best.

Adding to the men's final standings were second place showings by Marvin Primo (200 dash) and Doron Giat (3,000 run).

The event for the men was also unscored but was still important as it gave the team an opportunity to see how they measured up against upper-echelon teams.

"Many people were not in their usual event, but there is no excuse as to why we performed the way we did," said senior captain Joe Zeibert.

To sum up the one-day event for the men Zeibert said, "the coach was not happy."

Now that this past weekend is in the books, the men are looking forward to the Iowa State Invitational Feb. 8-9 in Ames, Iowa, while the women are gearing up to compete in the Cannon Classic IV in Indianapolis.

Wichita defeats Ind. in overtime

Illinois State 63
SW Missouri St. 68

Northern Iowa defeated Bradley, 67-61, earlier this season.

Evansville 67, Drake 78

Drake moved into sole possession of seventh place in the MVC as the Bulldogs completed a regular-season sweep of the Purple Aces in front of 4,147 fans at the Knapp Center in Des Moines, Iowa.

Luke McDonald, the second-leading scorer in the MVC, led Drake (10-11, 5-6 MVC) with 20 points, and Andrew Sola added 17 points and 10 rebounds for the Bulldogs.

Evansville was led by Tobias Brinkley and Clint Cuffie, who each scored 13 points.

With the loss, the Purple Aces fell to 4-16 and 1-10 in the conference.

Indiana State 84
Wichita State 87, OT

Wichita State moved into a three-way tie for fourth place in the Valley with its overtime win against Indiana State Sunday in Wichita, Kan.

CC McFall led the Shockers (12-10, 6-5 MVC) with 24 points, while Kelyn Block led the Sycamores (4-16, 2-9 MVC) with 25 points.

Bradley 67
Northern Iowa 81

Chris Foster scored a career-high 28 points as the Panthers pulled off their first ever regular-season sweep of the Braves.

Northern Iowa (12-8, 7-4 MVC) had three other players scoring double figures as the Panthers shot 52.9 percent from the field in front of 3,790 fans at the UNI-Dome in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Danny Granger led the way for the Braves (7-13, 4-7 MVC) as he put up 15 points and pulled down 12 rebounds in the losing effort.

Bradley U. senior falls one place short of Olympic team

Erin Hardy
The Bradley Scout (Bradley U.)

PEORIA (U-WIRE)—Bradley University senior Matt Savoie nearly skated his way into the upcoming 2002 Winter Olympic Games when he earned fourth place at the State Farm U.S. Figure Skating Championships Jan. 10.

Savoie, a political science major who has been figure skating competitively since age 9 and who has been a major contender at Nationals since 1999, fell just one place behind the three-man cutoff for the U.S. Olympic Team.

"I was disappointed initially in my performance, but really, I didn't do terribly, and I know I should be proud of the work I did over the entire week," Savoie said about the competition, which took place in Los Angeles and included both long- and short-program segments.

He earned third-place ranking for his short program Jan. 9 and said the jubilant audience reaction to that performance was the highlight of the contest for him.

"It was incredible. They were just exuberant, and I really appreciated it," he said.

He said that the response gave him confidence when he performed his long program.

Savoie said he had not been satisfied with some elements of that program this year, but that it was good to know that those who followed the sport for the entire season noticed his improvement.

Some spectators felt Savoie should have placed higher at Nationals because third-place skater Michael Weiss fell several times during his program.

Savoie endured a rush of questions on that topic after Nationals, but he himself didn't question it much.

"Obviously there's a reason he placed higher than me," he said. "A lot of questioning is always an issue in our sport because people are determining what's good and bad."

Weiss joins 2002 Champion Todd Eldridge and runner-up Tim Gobel on the U.S. team.

Savoie said Nationals are "naturally very stressful — it decides what you're going to be doing for the next season."

He has been skating at Nationals, the senior level of competition, since 1999. He began skating when his parents enrolled him in classes one sweetly hot summer.

"I liked it because it was indoors and cold. I didn't want to be outside," he said.

So far, he has won 10 championships and placed in dozens more. He recently placed first in the Hershey's Kisses Challenge, a team event, and earned the bronze medal at the 2001 Nationals. He said his third-place finish at the Grand Prix in 2001 was his proudest moment.

"It's an invite based on international performance. I competed with the best in the world," he said.

From his years of skating he said he has learned to deal with adversity. It also has given him higher self-esteem.

"I get a lot of personal satisfaction from doing something well," he said.

Savoie certainly has impressed his followers, who have created numerous fan pages on the Web.

One sports commentator wrote on a Web site that he was glad he and viewers were able to "tear our eyes on the future of men's figure skating in the U.S."

His coach, Linda Branan, is also among his fans.

"He has come a long way," she said and praised "his ability to jump and learn quickly" as his greatest assets. She said some female fans have another reason for watching him, though.

"On one Web page they keep saying he has a great butt!" she said.

Savoie certainly has made a name for himself. He is the first skater featured in Skating magazine and U.S. Figure Skating Online's "Getting To Know You" article, which offers a quick glimpse into skater's lives.

In the segment, Savoie divulges that his favorite movie is "The Goonies," he'd love to meet Venus Williams and learn a new language and even answers the question, "Describe a skating outfit from the past you wish you had never worn."

With his busy schedule, will he even have time to watch the Olympics?

Though he wishes all the skaters good luck, Savoie hasn't decided yet whether he will watch the games on television, but he isn't planning on it.

"It's hard knowing I could have been there... I'll probably find something better to do, like homework," he said.

It's safe to say Savoie won't be relaxing any time soon. He returned Monday from the Four Continents competition in Korea and will be training until late March for the World Championships in Nagano, Japan, site of the 1998 Winter Olympics. He has an alternate on that team for the past three years and is looking to make the team this spring.

"There's always a chance to get on the team. It would be a really good ending to this season," he said.

While practices and competitions do fill up a lot of his time, Savoie also has his academic responsibilities and enjoys college life. He typically trains about three hours per day and travels nearly one and one-half months of the school year. With rare exceptions, he said his instructors have been very accommodating.

In his free time he reads and spends time with friends and is contemplating attending law school after graduation, though he also is entertaining the idea of a professional figure skating career, according to Branan. And, of course, he is practicing for the 2006 Olympics.

"It's hard to think about the future when I am so busy with skating," said Savoie, who will graduate in May.

He said he missed having a "typical" college experience but he is happy with his choice.

"I always lived at home, never in a dorm, I didn't do that freshman thing, but it was so much more convenient. The benefits of keeping it this way outweighed the costs," he said.

Georgia Tech assistant coach resigns over false resume issue

Joseph Person
Knight Ridder Newspapers

ATLANTA (KR) — For the second time in less than two months, a football coach with ties to Georgia Tech was forced to resign because of inaccuracies in his biographical information.

Rick Smith, hired by new head coach Chan Gailey as the Yellow Jackets' defensive coordinator Jan. 25, resigned Friday after a special subcommittee found that Smith provided false information in his bio on two different occasions while at Tech in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Smith, 53, claimed that he played football and baseball at Florida State University, when he did neither. Smith said earlier this week that he wasn't sure how the misinformation ended up in his bio, first appearing in the Jackets' 1983 media guide.

But the subcommittee's search uncovered a questionnaire from 1977 in which Smith had handwritten that he played baseball for the Seminoles.

In another document, this one typewritten and dated the spring of '82, Smith is said to have also played football at FSU.

In reality, Smith received a baseball scholarship from the Seminoles, but injured his knee before arriving on campus and was cut by coach Jack Stallings before ever playing a game.

"They tell me there was a piece of paper they found in my file at Georgia Tech from '83," Smith said Saturday morning. "In the '83 press guide it was in there and it was put in there because they found something.... It was in my handwriting that I had written it down, that I had played football at FSU."

Smith's resignation comes on the heels of former head coach George O'Leary's own resignation from Notre Dame on Dec. 14, five five days after leaving Tech to take the job. O'Leary had inaccuracies in both his academic and athletic background that remained on his bio for nearly 20 years.

In a press conference Saturday, Tech officials also announced that newly hired wide receivers coach Tommie Robinson would keep his position, despite a mistake in his bio. The school also will enact a stricter procedure for collecting and verifying the accuracy on the bios of new hires in the future.

The press release announcing Robinson's hiring last month listed him with a master's from Troy State, when in fact he still several credit hours short of his degree.

According to the subcommittee report, a secretary for the Dallas Cowboys, where Robinson interned, prepared a bio sketch for him that included the master's claim.

That bio then was sent to Oklahoma State, where Robinson unsuccessfully attempted to have the information removed last year in his only season on the OSU staff.

Robinson approached Tech sports information director Mike Stamus after he was hired last month and told him he hadn't completed his master's.

"In Coach Robinson's case, there was just one question mark and he wanted to correct it," Tech president G. Wayne Clough said.

Conversely, the three-person subcommittee felt Smith's falsehoods were more widespread. In addition to the FSU claims, the 1984 and '85 Tech media guides also say that Smith was drafted by the Pittsburgh Pirates; Smith said he had discussions with a Pirates scout when he was at Tallahassee (Fla.) Community College, but was never drafted.

"He had the opportunity right there to say it was wrong, and he didn't," Clough said.

Added Tech athletics director Dave Braine: "It was a history. Not just one thing."

Smith had the false information removed from his bio from 1997-2000, but it reappeared last season when he returned to Kentucky as a defensive backs coach.

"When it came back on my bio this year, they (committee members) said that I didn't go to the SID office and tell them it was wrong," Smith said. "Ultimately, because I didn't go to (Kentucky SID Tony Neely) and tell him it was wrong, they felt I knew it was on there and I didn't have the courage to go in and tell them it wasn't true."

Smith, who has received no guarantees that he will be rehired at Kentucky, said he won't bring legal action against Tech.

"I'm not going to sue. I'm not that kind of person. They made their decision and I have to live with it... I wasn't trying to deceive them," Smith said. "All I can do is hold my head up high and pray to God that people will forgive me and give me a chance."

Saluki comeback crushes Creighton

SIU moves into first-place tie with Bluejays

OMAHA, Neb. — The SIU men's basketball team walked into the locker room angry and embarrassed Sunday at halftime of its put-up or shut-up game at Creighton.

An hour and a half later, the Salukis strutted out of the gym winners of their biggest game of the season and in superb shape to be MVC champions.

A lightning quick run at the start of the second half enabled SIU to immediately eat into a 14-point halftime deficit, and the Salukis hung tough in the wild final minutes to defeat Creighton 79-77 in front of 6,861 fans at a noisy Omaha Civic Auditorium.

SIU head coach Bruce Weber was disgusted by what he saw early, but came away delighted by his team's second half resilience.

A fiery SIU locker room at half-time awakened the Salukis from their daze in time to salvage a mammoth victory.

"Especially in a big game it was disappointing, and I think they came out with a little more determination," Weber said. "Obviously, we played a lot smarter and better basketball."

A pair of Kent Williams free throws with less than a second left after Bluejays guard DeAnthony Bowden oddly fouled Williams behind the three point arc boosted SIU in the end, but the opening of the second half, is where the Salukis changed everything.

SIU rode the capable shoulders of Rolan Roberts and far superior defensive intensity to hit Creighton with a 10-0 run to open the second half, slicing the Bluejays lead to 48-44 just three minutes in. Roberts had six of those 10 Saluki points, while Jermaine Dearman added the other four.

"We just wanted to take it slow, and get back into it, but it just came so quick," Roberts said.

The second half resurrection tied SIU (19-4, 9-2 MVC) with the Bluejays for first in the Valley, but in reality puts the Salukis in the drivers seat to win the conference. Creighton (14-6, 9-2 MVC) has a more difficult road in the final weeks including a rematch with the Salukis in Carbondale.

Last-second foul saves the day for Salukis

OMAHA, Neb. — Creighton guard DeAnthony Bowden found himself lost in the moment, and Kent Williams knew just what to do.

After Bluejays forward Mike Grimes delivered a pair of clutch free throws to notch the score at 77 with 4.5 seconds left, Saluki guard Darren Brooks rushed the ball upcourt and found Williams on the left side several feet behind the three-point arc.

Instead of making Williams be a miracle worker and probably allow the game to go into overtime with the Salukis missing fouled-out center Rolan Roberts, Bowden inched too close to Williams.

The result? Williams made the kind of play you'd expect from a basketball savvy veteran accustomed to winning. He leaned toward the basket and drew a controversial whistle with just three-tenths of a second remaining.

Williams earned three free throws because he was in the act of shooting, nailed the first two before missing the last one intentionally, and elevated his team to its biggest win yet in a magical season.

It's easy to call Bowden's play boneheaded, but without the luxury of being able to call a timeout to set up its defense, the Bluejays have to live with one of their better defenders

Carbondale provides a minority of Patriots fans, only Rams despisers and supporters

In Carbondale, the Super Bowl was not played by the Rams and the Patriots, but by the Rams and a team that was not the Rams.

As one would expect, Carbondale was dominated by St. Louis fans at area bars on Sunday. But a significant minority were not fans of Kurt Warner and company, and it had nothing to do with the Patriots. They were Rams haters.

"The Rams are the worst team in the National Football League," SIU student Mike Castro said Sunday at Sidetracks. "It's not that I don't like them, it's more of a hate thing. I hate all the St. Louis sports teams."

His sentiments were not unique. According to most Chicago area students, it's a Bears fan's duty to hate the Rams.

"I'm a Bears fan," SIU student Mike Day said at Mugsy McGuire's. "St. Louis and Chicago are rivals, so I can't go for the Rams."

Brady Smith, who just moved to Carbondale from Jacksonville, Fla., was at Mugsy's with his young daughter, Londyn, who is a Rams fan.

Smith is anti-Rams because they are heavy favorites, not because of team loyalties.

"I like underdogs," Brady said. "I usually like to see teams with a lot of ego and hype get put in their place. What better place to do that than the Super Bowl?"

Londyn likes the Rams because "they are a good team," although her father said she was brainwashed into liking them by her classmates at Unity Point Elementary School.

Rams fan Gary Hatfield criticized Rams' head coach Mike Martz for his playcalling throughout the game, specifically passing the ball on obvious running plays. Hatfield has been a Rams fan for 30 years, dating back to when the team played in Los Angeles with Roman Gabriel as their quarterback.

Londyn, Hatfield and other Rams fans watched in disbelief at Mugsy's as the Patriots edged the Rams on a 48-yard Adam Vinatieri field goal.

Londyn, who would have won a prize package at school if the Rams had won, high-fived other Rams fans in the bar when Ricky Proehl caught a touchdown pass with 1:30 left to tie the game.

But Brady and other anti-Rams fans got the last laugh. They screamed, jumped and expressed their hatred of the Rams using unprintable words when Vinatieri's field goal soared through the uprights.

"I'm a diehard football fan," Brady said after the game. "I love to see close games, especially when my team wins." Hatfield was disappointed after the game, but didn't hold any grudges against the Patriots. He blamed the Rams for playing poorly.

"Hey it was a good game, it really was," Hatfield said. "We came up short for a lot of reasons."

Patriot fan Andrew Scavongelli, who lives in Marion said the Patriots success was destined.

"Honestly, with everything going on right now, how can a team called the Patriots not win," Scavongelli said referring to the September 11 attacks. "Everyone's a patriot right now."

Brady and Londyn, like the nation after September 11, quickly put aside their differences.

After a short celebration, he hugged his daughter saying "good game."
