All upperclassmen who have not applied for readmission for the fall quarter should do so immediately, Miss Marjorie Shank, registrar, has warned.

Dr. Eugene E. Fair, dean of the University College of Education, will outline the theme of the conference in a talk "School Reorganization—A Practical Problem in Professional and Public Relations."

A panel of teachers and administrators will then examine the question, "The Teacher's Responsibility in School Reorganization."

In the afternoon, the institute will break into group sessions to consider what school reorganization means to (a) children and youth, (b) to teachers, and (c) to the community, after which each group will report back to the general session the gist of its discussion.

Health Officer Is Speaker in Class

Dr. Roy W. Harrel, head of the district health office in Carbondale, gave a lecture last week to the home nursing class on causes of communicable diseases. Many factors contribute to the spread of these diseases, care taken of them in the home, and responsibility of the community in controlling them are two of the important factors, Dr. Harrel said.

Typoid shots are now being given on the campus at the health office.

Begin Work on Tunnels

Excavation for tunnels leading from the proposed new power plant is underway as shown above.

CONSOLIDATION OF SCHOOLS

Illinois is being forced to consolidate its schools because of the teacher shortage, higher salaries for teachers, and the decline in rural population.

If this occurs everyone will be affected in some way or another. West Virginia began consolidation and reorganization in 1933 due to poverty. Kentucky started in 1920. Some of the southern states made recent advancement for other reasons.

In Illinois the subject of consolidation or reorganization is a controversial question. Many areas do not want to give up their one room schools. A lot of money is being spent for which poor service is being received which cannot be avoided under the present system. In the small rural school with four to six pupils the per capita cost is over $300.00 and in larger schools it is less than $100.00.

The meeting at S.I.U. on July 31 is a forward move to help everyone to become informed on this controversial question. It is important that all concerned be followed for the next 100 years.

If America spent as much money for education as she does for cosmetics or liquor (as shown in a recent Reader's Digest article) failure to adopt the best plan would not be so important.

—Clara C. Taggart.

PUBLICITY

Looks like Southern's students took the advice of a recent Egyptian editorial suggesting the new name "Southern Illinois University" be made popular. It has been in the news columns of at least two large metropolitan newspapers, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and the Chicago Sun.

Why be pessimistic about the effect on the school when articles appear about the removal of the editor of the university's publication? Southern can benefit from the school spirit of the student who write about their university in stories accepted by widely read newspapers. The millions of people in the many states who may read these articles are not likely to see through this clever publicity. After all, the stories deal with personalities principally, though some of the tales of the publications counsel which are mentioned are likely to prove favorable implications of the principals of the university to those readers who view the conflict with indifference.

The attention of those many readers is called to the fact that Southern has a school paper that can count important state officials among its readers. They are told the school is state appropriate that it isn't just a private school whose student tuition is determined entirely by the funds necessary for its operation. The stories were accepted by papers with large circulations which should prove the happenings here at S.I.U. are important to many people—people who have an interest in the university.

This publicity has served as an introduction to many people who will see and hear the name "Southern Illinois University" long after this conflict and the individuals involved no longer make news.—Hilmar Schuetz.

THOUGHTS ON THINKING

Some of the leading educators tell us the great aim of a college education is to produce a group of independent thinkers. Men and women who will have ideas—ideas that will make a good world and a better society to live in.

Some students do a lot of thinking and they do have some big ideas. But never do they reveal them. While others are full of ideas so full that they are constantly expounding their ideas. Oftentimes they are like good advice, not worth much — if it were there wouldn't be so much given away free.

When we are thinking, we are on the right path and we can make two blades of grass grow where none has grown and catch the mice without a trap. Yet, now our path is overshadowed and our ideas are dwarfed by the one dark thought—Three-hour Final Examination.

One professor was very congenial to his class. He said, "The class has one hour coming out your examination short and take it." Three cheers for him.

—L. A. Lockard.

KEEP IT BRIEF

If you think your stationery looks odd when you cross out "normal," it may ease your feeling to know that Vassar college had to remove the word "Female" from its name, and thus left a huge gap of blank space between Vassar and College Vassars. Looking at the title "Vassar—College" perhaps did know that a crusading woman editor persuaded Mr. Vassar (yes, there was a Mr. Vassar) to eliminate the ugly word female from the name. Shortened names have been popular. Coe College once was known as the American Institute for the Academic Assumptions of the Arts and Sciences. Try that out on your penman!

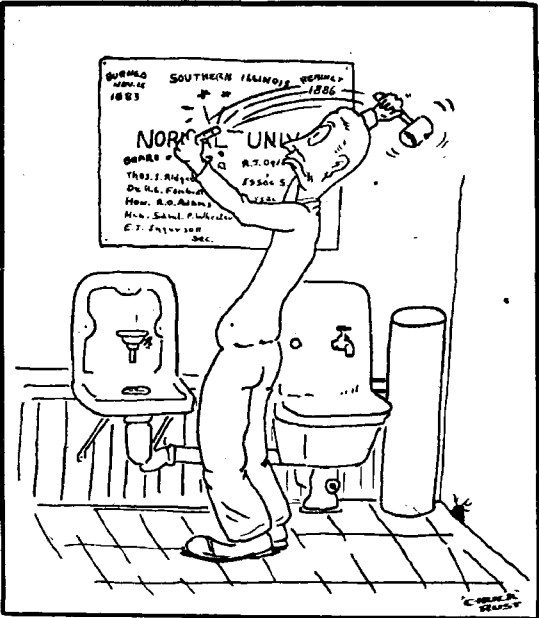

Perhaps now is the time to switch that Southern accent to an accent on Southern.

Offside to highway depot. That street sign at Illinois Main still contains that ugly word, "normal."

Bohrad Paintings Recalled

Recent successes of artist Aaron Bohrad, who has become widely known for his war paintings and others, have reminded Southern students of the time when Mr. Bohrad was an art student in residence here. The above painting, "The Road," is a product of the artist while at Southern. One of Chicago's famous art critics, later wrote the words of a feature article in Life magazine. Bohrad was at Southern in 1942-44.

Although the title of the above Bohrad painting is not known, it too was done while the artist was at Southern.

Woes of Cleobelle

Cleobelle is a young girl from Illinois who has large feet, a plain face, heavy legs, and a discriminating taste for men.

She decided she wanted to be in pictures, so she took dramatic lessons from her home town of Carbondale, she became known as a good actress and when she took the lead in the school play, she was a sensation. All she needed was a chance. Everyone who saw her performance was excited about her.

Cleobelle was the most popular girl in town. She wasn't pretty, but she was attractive and talented and decent and clean-cut and a feisty all-American girl. Then one day a group of talent scouts happened to stop in Carbondale. They heard the murmurs of admiration that constantly buzzed around. They decided to take a look at Cleobelle. She had never been better than she was that night. The next day the talent scouts moved on to Chicago, and Cleobelle went on taking the lead in Southern's plays, until she graduated six years later.

What would Cleobelle have done with two thousand dollars a week anyway?

British Woman Will Appear in Lecture

A widely-known British woman educator will visit Southern and will lecture here July 29, the University entertainment and lectures committee has announced.

Miss Edith C. Balfour, principal of the Royal Holloway College, University of London, will speak at 8 p.m. in the Little Theatre on the University campus. She will be a guest of Miss Frances Barbour and Mrs. Julia Foley of the University English faculty, who became friends of her while in England some 15 years ago.

On Looking About

We ran into a fascinating account of Sir Rodney Kraatz' early summer venture into the west, via the thumb, a jeep and the thund. Place, Clifford's. Lecturer: Sir Rodney Kraatz. (If your Sunday school class, social organization or business group would like to engage Kraatz, we'd advise against it.)

Psychologists tell us that students studying in the library (all three of you) the past month have, in all probability become so accustomed to the musical "Blam Blam" of the carpenter's hammer's next door, that you'll be greatly distressed by the absence of the noise upon completion of the extension.

Attention, fall term students: Bring a pencil. We wonder if the aromatic solution being sprayed on the bushes about the campus would be at all good for these in-fossil charger rates.

In connection with that (the spray solution, that is) we've found an interesting new way to spend the hours and hours of leisure time we find on hand. The game is a simple one, but threatens nervous prostration to the maladjusted. It consists simply of walking about the campus and trying to judge the angle of spray of the oscillating sprinkler just ahead. Rules: No dinking as you pass by. Advice: Wet spots on the walk mean absolutely nothing.

INTER-FRATERNITY GROUP WILL MEET TONIGHT

Plans for fall term rush-week will top the agenda at a summer meeting of the inter-fraternity council this evening at seven o'clock. Tom Middleton will preside in the absence of council president John Rendleman.

Little Wolves That Weren't There

Winchells of the animal kingdom last week declared the two wolves in captivity at University farm were "expensive" so Egyptian photographers lost no time to get their picture. It since has been revealed that the rumor was started by a jealous puppie dog from Dupe. The fact these wolves don't look like wolves has caused much speculation. The fact they aren't expensive practically runs our story, so we conclude. No wolves, no story.

P.T.A. MEETING Window Frames In Main To Be Fixed

An all-day meeting of the P.T.A. was held here Tuesday. All the window frames on the July 22, in Harvard Hall. As a result three of the main building window frames were extended to teacher. Some to be repaired general and Council P.T.A. officers, including Dr. William S. Phelps, District assistant, Safety. Executive acting director of the physical and Mental Hygiene, plant. The frames are in bad condition and Summer. Homecoming. The meeting also discussed all the other who were interested in the Main building is to replace a worn out pipe. It will be replaced by a new pipe. The meeting program began Phelps said. The pipe has been with registration at S.I.U. and there has 25 or 30 years and it was given a discussion of the Health Work-up for the year. The fact of pipe is necessary to make the needed replacement.

Student From Flood Area Tells of Devastation

Man with his wisdom is insignificant... "The Man River" assumes authority and defies the boundaries man sets for him.

The sudden appearance of the broken levee when driving along the river road presents a gruesome, heartrending picture.

School Is Symbol Not far away, somewhat definitely stands a symbol of education, Antioch School.

"George Seisinger, living near the break, lost all his crops. He worked on the levee for days and had moved out his family, livestock, and some property long before the break came.

"Some college boys helped fight the flood and they were mighty scared but I didn't blame them. I was scared too."

A varied class on the campus this summer is the ceramic sculpturing class under the direction of Prof. Ben Watkins at the Art Center.

The Rev. Paul Morrison, an art major, is very much interested in ceramics. He plans to use it in his Bible school classes next summer.
