No pay hike for SIU student workers

By Mark Edgar
Staff Writer

SIU-C student workers should not expect to receive a similar 15-cent per hour salary increase already guaranteed to student employees at SIU-Edwardsville, the director of student work and financial assistance warns.

Gordon White said a wage hike for the 4,000 working students at SIU-C has not been allocated in the 1977-78 appropriation bill passed by the legislature and sent to the governor.

SIU-C student workers are scheduled to receive a 15-cent per hour increase in addition to the minimum wage after the bill is approved by Gov. James Thompson.

But White said he would not make a recommendation to raise salaries of students on this campus unless studies show that student wages are not keeping pace with the higher cost of education.

Failing that, student pay may have increased at a higher rate than faculty pay because of minimum wage raises. White said, "I'm not going to argue for a case when things are reasonably fair for students already."

White also said many students may be earning more than some lower-paid non-academic workers and graduate assistants.

"We will take no action until we get some data which indicates that the current salary rate is not helping students meet the increased costs of going to school," White said.

He added that student wages shouldn't automatically go up in order to stay "in competition" with SIU-E.

The studies, which would survey the number of students working on campus and the number of hours they put in, may be completed by the end of the year, White said.

Despite hikes in tuition and housing and non-increase in student wages, White said the Illinois State Scholarship Commission and federal grant programs will increase its awards.

"For students who have a financial need, other programs are providing help," White said.

Student workers are also entitled to merit raises, although White said many departments are either unaware that it is available or decline giving them to avoid showing favoritism.

"Many departments just don't think about it," he said.

Students receive a 15-cent per hour increase after 1,500 hours, but White said he would not lower the number of hours worked before getting a raise until after the studies are reviewed.

But, he admitted that "if it takes three years to get that raise, it's not a very rewarding process."

As to levitation pending in Congress that would raise the minimum wage from $2.30 to $2.50, White said SIU would seek the funds to maintain the raise. He said the 20-cent increase would cost about $300,000.

Defense Secretary: Scarp B-1 to save billions

By Terrence P. Hunt
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Harold Brown said Friday that the B1 bomber would have been a good buy if it had been 30 per cent cheaper. Scarping the plane and developing the cruise missile instead will save billions, he added.

Brown also told reporters that the United States does not intend to bargain away the cruise missile in upcoming arms talks with the Soviet Union although he said some limitations on the weapon could be acceptable.

The missile, in which the United States is believed to lead Soviet technology by at least five years, has been a sticking point in Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT) with the Soviet Union.

"We have to continue to assure that our position on the cruise missile in SALT does not interfere in any serious way with our plans for incorporation of the cruise missile in the strategic bomber force," the secretary said.

Asked if the United States would accept curbs on the cruise missile, Brown said, "I did not say that we would not accept any sanctions, I said that the constraints we accept must not harm our ability to provide the strategic bomber force." He added that he was seeking to shore up the cruise missile program to "defend the country".

Brown said he hopes to include the cruise in the SALT agreement.

On Thursday, President Carter announced his decision to stop production of the B1, which carried a price tag of $10.7 million per plane.

Brown did not point out the precise savings from scrapping the B1 but said "whether its $5 billion or $10 billion depends on what else we do." The Pentagon already has spent $2.9 billion on the B1 program and now will ask Congress to delete $1.5 billion for production of five B1 combat models from a pending appropriation bill.

The administration will ask that some of the money be put toward development of the cruise missile, but the amount will be substantially less than $5.5 billion, Brown said.

Congressional supporters of the B1 have pledged to fight for the plane, but House and Senate leaders are backing Carter's position. The President predicts Congress will go along with his stand.

Brown said cruise missiles will cost upwards of $750,000 apiece and the cost of adapting B52 to carry the weapons will be about $700,000 per plane. The cost of other air launchers for the weapon, such as jumbo jets, will be between $10 million to $50 million, much less than the B1.

The air-launched cruise missile has a range of up to 1,500 miles, insureing that it can strike important Soviet targets, Brown said.

"I'm convinced we could, with the B1, penetrate Soviet defenses but I'm even more convinced we can do so with the cruise missile," he said.

Deployment of a bomber-launched cruise missile is scheduled in three years, but could occur sooner with the new emphasis, Brown said.

He added that the cruise missile offers "more certainty of high effectiveness" other than available options.

"Each such aircraft can launch many missiles with great accuracy at different targets in the Soviet Union from a distance of many hundreds of miles," Brown said.

"To the extent B1s would have provided additional warhead-carrying capacity to the force, that can come in," Brown said.

Responding to criticism that bombers are obsolete in a missile age, Brown said that "bombers have a unique combination of desirable qualities. They can be recalled, they can deliver a large payload ... they present a different kind of planning problem to the Soviets than do the intercontinental ballistic missiles or sea-launched ballistic missiles."

Buildings razed to accommodate additional parking

Two University-owned houses located north of the Communications Building, one of which was destroyed by fire in January, were demolished Friday to make room for more parking spaces.

The demolition of the homes is part of a plan to increase the 72-space parking lot located near South Elizabeth and West Grand streets.

Wallace Richison, project engineer at facilities planning, said the project had been held up for over a year due to lack of funds.

In all, four houses are to be leveled, according to Richison. Two of the houses are still occupied.

The house destroyed by fire, located at 100 S. Elizabeth St., was owned by the Rehabilitation Institute, but had been vacant for about a year at the time of the fire.

The house demolished next to it, at 1008 S. Elizabeth St., used to contain the Geography Department which moved to Faner Hall in spring of 1975.

Walgreen's will offer a 5-cent discount on the sale of liquor using a state liquor license once the bill is passed. This 5-cent discount, says the Walgreen's, will be passed on to the customers. Walgreens' spokesperson said that the discount will be offered to the customers starting next week. The discount will be available in all of Walgreen's locations in the United States.

The discount is aimed at making alcoholic beverages more affordable for the consumers. The spokesperson said that Walgreens' is committed to providing its customers with the best possible prices and the discount is one way of achieving this goal.

The discount will be available on all alcoholic beverages that are sold in the store. It will be applied to the price of the product at the time of purchase. Customers are required to present their state liquor license to receive the discount.

The Walgreens spokesperson also said that the discount is not available on any alcoholic beverages that are sold in the store without a state liquor license. The discount is only available to customers who have a state liquor license and are otherwise eligible to purchase alcoholic beverages.

The discount is expected to be popular among customers who purchase alcoholic beverages regularly. The spokesperson said that the discount will help to make alcoholic beverages more affordable for the customers and encourage them to continue to purchase from Walgreens.

The discount is part of Walgreens' commitment to providing its customers with the best possible prices and the best possible service. The spokesperson said that Walgreens' is always looking for ways to improve its services and the discount is one way of achieving this goal.

The discount is expected to be available for a limited time only. The spokesperson said that Walgreens' will review the success of the discount and make any necessary adjustments before extending it to other stores.

The Walgreens spokesperson also said that the discount is only available in the store and cannot be applied to online purchases.

Counselor can tell first-hand about adjustment to tragedy

By Newman Carlson

Richard Nanni

Society trains its members "from the cradle to the grave," to take a role in our industrial complex, Richard Nanni

As a rehabilitation counselor working with those who've missed the deaf and senior citizens, Nanni understood the problem of readjustment for people who are struck down by sickness or the effects of war. "We can't serve in the roles if they were served," he says.

Nanni knows. He is blind.

Nanni, 63, is the center director at the Carbonado Senior Citizens Center, where he has been working as a counselor.

He worked with electrical systems on diesel locomotives. When a welder panel blew out, damage was done to his eyes which led to cataracts. Failure to get adequate treatment contributed to a condition in which his vision is now so small, he says.

But Nanni has rejoined. Since his blindness he has completed a B.S. degree in social science and a master's degree in vocational rehabilitation counseling. He has completed the courses at the Haledon School for the Blind and the Kalamazoo, Mich., Rehabilitation Center for the Blind. Now he has only finish one course to earn a masters degree in vocational rehabilitation counseling from SIU.

But does the educational system prepare people to make the same adjustment Nanni did? Nanni says no.

Nanni believes we need a strong emphasis on our education in taking proper care of our health.

"Retirement is meaningless," he says, "unless a person has something worth waiting up to — to make life challenging. But if we fail to plan, to construct a model for life, what will it all be ahead?"

Nanni puts responsibility for this failure on the system, the family and the church.

"I didn't tell you the truth," Nanni emphasizes. "All of a sudden there is no one you can do about it! I had a sight at one time and I've lost it, but life is still meaningful as long as there are those who love and care for you."

"As long as we continue the ego trip of power, which we can't take with us anyway, we're going to lose."

Nanni's pragmatic message centers around individual value. "You are the most valuable thing on the face of the earth, if you will realize you are the person who love and care for you," he says. "If you don't have love, what have you got?" Nothing. "If someone cares for you, it would be more meaningful to them than you."

So if you're worth much, then it follows logically that you need to take care of yourself. But is there another way you are treating yourself?"

"It starts at home. If your parents can't take care of you, there is another society in a community of humanity. If we could care for each other like we can care for ourselves, would we have jails full of people? Would we have wars? No way!"

"It's because we have war, conflicts, competitive world situations, local situations. Even in the classroom you have that situation that you go there and they slam a whole bunch of stuff at you: study, desk... an exam, you've got a grade."

Nanni's view is one of life planning needed instead of competition. He suggests cooperation. Instead of concentrating on teaching the young to fit into the industrial economy, he says, "We must self-value, teach them to be responsible for their actions and to accept others."

"It is so important that our children be taught that they are and why they are and how to take care of themselves. Our children are our future," Nanni argues. "My God, man, if you're not healthy in body and mind, what the-hell kind of future have you got? What kind of future does our country have? It's not how long we live, but how we live, that means life." Meaningful.

"People are beginning to realize that they are what they eat, that they are healthy. You don't have a healthy mind without a healthy body."

"In working with the senior group, you see a need for this kind of development in our educational system for children," says Nanni, so that "this problem doesn't exist when they retire — that they might know that retirement can only be valuable to them if they are healthy in mind and body."

He believes children should be taught the art of self-preservation, in the home, in school and in church. "From the time they're big enough to start understanding," he says, "this process of total life planning."

"What happens if something should happen to cause you to not be able to continue what you're doing? What contingency plans do you have?"

As far as jobs are concerned, disabled persons and senior citizens cannot compete with "normal" people, Nanni says, "Not only are you competing with 'normal' people, you are competing with the handicapped. You really haven't got a chance!"

We need cooperation. We need a different understanding of cooperation. It can be straightened out," Nanni says. Acceptance is the key. "Know others as they are," he quotes from the Bible. "Are you yourself for what you are and you will be able to accept others."

Safety Council pushing for mandatory seat belts

CHICAGO — The president of the National Safety Council is urging the federal government to require the use of auto safety belts in the wake of its decision to allow slow introduction of air bags beginning in 1993.

Secretary of Transportation Brock Adams announced an administrative decision this week to require the placement of air bags on U.S. auto since within 5 years. He said introduction of the passive restraint systems would save some 9,000 lives a year.

Vincent L. Tofany, president of the council, said the mandatory use of seat belts, which he said would save 15,000 additional lives each year.

Tofany said in a statement that it will take at least 10 years more — until 1999 — for most auto on the road to have passive restraints.

"In the next 15 years, therefore, it is absolutely essential that all Americans buckle up in order to save 10,000 lives each year. And after that 15 years, it will still be necessary to use safety belts along with passive restraints in order to get the full benefit of such restraints," Tofany said.

Tofany said that the required use of safety belts would save 50,000 American lives between now and "an undetermined number of lives each year thereafter."

"This nation cannot afford to lose thousands of lives in the short run while we wait for the passive restraints to show their merit. Safety belts are something we must do today," he said, and he called upon Secretary Adams in use his strong influence at the federal level to get the legislation passed.

Tofany said he did not explain how the government could enforce a requirement that safety belts be worn and refused to take questions from reporters on the merits of the air bag system. But last fall, he went on record for former Transportation Secretary William Coleman as favoring the use of seat belts of the system were required.

Bottled beverage better than tap, gourmets say

Chicago (AP) — Gourmets sipped small glasses of the clear liquids, noting the bouquet, taste and smell, and cleansing their palates after each sip with dry bread.

They were at a watered-down version of a wine-tasting party at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in Chicago.

Promoters of bottled water would like to hit the soft drink market in the U.S. like yogurt is hitting the ice cream market.

The panel liked what it tasted, but it's virtually impossible to describe how good it tastes.

The party, with uniformed waiters and silver ice tongs, was a whimsical publicity affair, representative of Mountain Valley of Hot Springs, Ark., and Perrier of France.

"Nearly all American tap water just doesn't taste like water," said Bruce Nevins of Perrier. "These waters are pure, from natural springs. When you mix them with whiskey, the taste of the whiskey is not marred."

"In much of the world, bottled mineral water is the soft drink, the nonalcoholic alternative beverage."

In answer to outcries for a good water, the panel said bottled water solves the problem.

"Indistinguishable from a soft drink," said Benjamin Franklin,elm.

Ben Franklin would be proud of Mike Lindahl, a senior in electrical sciences and systems engineering.

As the enterprising young man will use the fallen oak tree as fuel for his wood-burning Franklin stove. The tree was blown down in Thursday afternoon's storm.

Women file charges against man

Starr Johnson of Harrisburg and Precious S. Pagan of Chicago failed to heed the warning against a man who allegedly tricked them and stole their purses.

Johnson, 220 N. Washington St., Carbondale police said Friday.

Pagan and Johnson told police they had been arguing with the man inside the lounge. At about 3 a.m. Friday, the man following the women and allegedly struck Johnson, two pairs of pants and left with the two purses, police said.

The value of Pagan's purse and contents was estimated at $25. The value of Johnson's purse was about $75.

Police have a suspect. A full investigation is being conducted.

Women arrested

Carbondale police arrested two Gourmets, Mary Dixon and Carol Brackean, on a charge of shoplifting from the Carbondale K-Mart.

Police said $25 worth of merchandise was allegedly taken.

Manny Trillo of the Cubs has been the premier second baseman in the National League for two years. The Cardinals' Ted Simmons has had a very nice season on the field for about three seasons.

At fans' request on July 19, Morgan, Templeton and Simmons will be in the starting lineup for the National League against the All-Star Game. Something is rotten in the state of Morgan. Templeton and Simmons deserve starting positions. Larry Hays and Lynn Bostock of the Minnesota Twins also deserve starting All-Star Game ends. But these players will have to be content with watching the start of the game from the dugout.

Voting for the All-Star Game was returned to the fans in 1970. Fans provided great support for All-Star players from 1947-1987, but that was stopped with the end of the 1987 All-Star ticket and the Olympic bat-stuffing campaign and sent almost the entire Red's team to the N.L. starting lineup. And that Cincinnati team was not a strong one.

Commissioner Ford Frick turned over the voting to the players in 1988, but this system had flaws too. Players were not permitted to vote for teammates, but they discovered that if they did not vote for a teammate's chief, the player's record was certainly lessened the their teammates' vote in All-Star voting occurs in other sports as well. The Golden Slate State won the NBA title two years ago, and Rick Barry, the dominant voice of the NBA, was the person who was most responsible for the surprising championship. Yet, in the most valuable player voting done by the players, Barry finished fourth. That was an offensive foul of major proportions.

The key question is what exactly should the All-Star Game be? Should the best players of the most popular teams start the game? If the All-Star Game is a showcase for the fans, should they have the sole power to select the teams?

Since there is no stipulation that fans cannot vote for the home team players, the voting can turn into a popularity contest. The best players are usually the most popular players so injustices don't crop up as often as they might. But if they happen occasionally, as it is the case of Trillo, Templeton and Simmons illustrate.

In the Twins' leftfielder, it is batting 313 in home runs and a major league-leading 71 RBIs. However, in the American League balloting, he ranks ninth among the outfielders. Boston's Twins' centerfielder who has a batting average of 331, ranks eighth in the voting.

The reason for this injustice is that the Twins do not draw big crowds to their games. Halsey and Bosco are not national sports figures so fans outside Minnesota are not likely to vote for them. Players who are on teams that do not draw good crowds need support from fans in other cities to make the All-Star team. Nationally-known players like the Twins' Rod Carew get this support if All-Star voting in the National League continues as it is. Voted for the All-Star team will be comprised almost entirely of players from the Birds and Gators. It is not coincidental that these clubs have the highest attendance figures in the league.

When Commissioner Bowie Kuhn returned the All-Star voting to the fans in 1970, he wanted to increase fan interest in the mid-season classic. That has been achieved. The fans cast 2.2 million votes in 1970, and it is estimated that over 9 million votes will be cast this year.

With vote figures rising every year, the case of baseball has to figure that interest in the All-Star Game is at all-time high. The success of the All-Star balloting procedure in 1970 prompted the National Basketball Association to adopt a similar policy three years ago.

Would interest decline if the voting was taken away from the fans? The commissioner does not want to find out the answer. He is perfectly happy with the status of the All-Star Game. The fact remains, however, that some deserving players are left on the board. For players such as Trillo, Templeton, Simmons, Halsey and Bosco, there should be a more equitable way of selecting the All-Star team.

Maybe Oakland A's owner Charlie Finley could pick the team, and then Kuhn could veto those selections and pick the team himself.

IM sports program reorganized; Paratore to enact several chances

By Stephen Preslow

The men's and women's intramural sport program officially emerged Friday and coordinator Jim Doering said for this season.

Major changes will be the full elimination of the faculty and the addition of members for intramural activities. This is the first year that in intramural sports athletes in their respective sports.

Of the 35 intramural advisors who have been. Women's intramural coordinators will be sponsored by the intramural advisor for intramural sports.

With the integration of the two programs, new sports will be added and some rule changes in some of the sports will be initiated. Changes in two eligibility rules top the list of proposed changes enacted by Paratore.

All faculty and staff and eligible as registered intramural activities if they pay a $10 fee. Professional and staff were eligible for intramural activities only during the summer season.

Varsity athletes will be allowed to participate in their own sports the following recreational year. The departmental sports will be eliminated Changes in two eligibility rules top the list of proposed changes enacted by Paratore.

The rule had been that varsity players were exempt from intramural competition in their sport. The intramural coordinator also said that some new activities will be offered this year. Intramural activities include women's floor hockey, women's recreational 12 pitch softball.

By Bill Hageman

Four other new recreational activities will be offered, according to Doering. There will be boxing and diving and track and field. The baseball program will include 12 men's and 24 women's activities.

"It's a new concept," said the Intramural advisor. "We get one league-championship finished and another starts." The Intramural advisor said all the leaves are running at the same time, with all being played at the same place and for the most part all being played by the same rules.

We're going to try to get as close as possible to the same rules for the men's and women's sport," Paratore said.

Paratore's assistant in the Intramural program, Patricia Remolino, will be responsible for the new program.

Cranen has coached SIU's women's swim team the last two seasons and will be responsible for women's intramural swimming this year.

Cranen will now work full-time in Intramural Sports. Engelberg-Berroat has replaced Cranen as women's swim coach.
