Legislators fail to decide on budget

By Shawna Donovan
Special Assignment Writer

Illinois legislative leaders wrestled Thursday on issues facing the state budget but failed to come to a vote.

Legislative leaders had compromised on a plan with Gov. Jim Edgar Wednesday night but Senate Democrats failed to enough votes in their caucus to bring it to a full vote.

Senator Jim Rea, D-Christopher, said the package hopefully will come to a vote.

"The budget will probably be presented on Friday but we have to tackle the issues first," Rea said.

As of press time, leaders were in an executive board meeting and could not be reached for final comments and there had not been a vote yet.

Issues include the disposing of a "Granny Tax" and House's permanently extended income-tax surcharge.

After they compromised on the package, Senate Democrats started to add more details to the plan, said Penny Zimmerman, spokeswoman for Ralph Dunn, R-Du Quoin.

"The Democrats are backing out," Zimmerman said. "Leaders are now coming to the table to discuss added requests made."

The House still has to vote on the proposed 14 cent cigarette tax increase per pack and the state's income-tax surcharge.

The controversial cigarette tax increase came under fire from both parties but has survived. If the cigarette tax bill is passed, the "Granny Tax" would be eliminated.

The income-tax surcharge would bring in $86 million to local governments or 25 percent if passed. Income tax rates possibly could stay at 3 percent instead of dropping to 2.75 percent.

Legislation, now after deadline, will have to be adopted by a three-fifths majority in both chambers, making it extremely difficult to pass the controversial tax bills.

State official trying to aid CIPS workers

By Bill Kugelberg
Politics Writer

One Illinois lawmaker is trying to get legislation passed to help locked-out CIPS employees collect unemployment benefits.

Rep. Larry D. Woolard, D-Cartrville, said he thinks the Illinois Department of Employment Security should reconsider granting unemployment insurance to the more than 1,400 Central Illinois Public Service employees who have been locked out by company executives.

"Unemployment insurance was meant to be granted to workers who, through no fault of their own, have lost their jobs," he said. "A company that will not allow its employees to work has, in effect, taken away their jobs and left them without income."

Woolard has introduced a bill that would amend provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act provided that a locked out employee is not disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance benefits under specified circumstances.

The bill was referred to the House Rules Committee Wednesday.

Woolard especially is upset because he was told by chief legal counsel for IDES that CIPS employee appeals would be considered as a group rather than individually.

"You can not lump all these people together and make a collective judgement about their cases," Woolard said. "I believe the cases should be dealt with on an individual basis — not as a group."

Fourth of July brings dangerous fireworks

By Karen Ham
Special Assignment Writer

This Fourth of July some Illinois residents will set off bottle rockets and firecrackers illegally, but law enforcement officials find it difficult to stop people, a state official said.

Dan Williams, deputy director of the Office of the Illinois State Fire Marshal, said fireworks laws are outdated and hard to enforce.

Under Illinois laws, it is illegal to possess, distribute or use fireworks. Fireworks have been defined as all items, such as firecrackers, bottle rockets and other explosive devices that contain more than 2,500 grains of explosive, Williams said.

Items that are legal include sparklers, smoke bombs and

Clinton fails in timber compromise

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—When he thrust himself into the Pacific timberland dispute during the 1992 campaign, President Clinton hoped he could craft what has become his classic brand of split-the-difference compromise that would win support from both sides.

In this, it was clear Thursday, he failed.

"We know our solutions may not make everybody happy — indeed, they may not make anybody happy," the president said as he brought out his timber-management plan and acknowledged the remedy had been more elusive than he hoped.

But he and his aides may do better in his secondary goal of convincing the world that a president who is not always praised for his resoluteness ought to get points for standing up on a famously intractable issue.

Although the decision will cost him support in logging areas, aides hope that elsewhere in the country he will be seen as a peacemaker in a wilderness where other presidents feared to tread. "For courage, you've got to give him an A-plus," one official said.

Clinton comes away from a fight that has pitted the important Democratic constituencies of organized labor and environmentalists without serious damage

New Board of Trustees member ready to work

By Bill Kugelberg
Politics Writer

The first woman to have a leadership position in the Illinois General Assembly will become a member of the SIU Board of Trustees this month.

Celeste M. Stiehl of Belleville will replace Barnard M. Birger July 15 when his term expires.

Birger has been on the board

State Assembly leader becomes second female on board since 1985.

Stiehl said she is not ready to make any changes to the SIU community, but she is ready to take on the position of a board member.

"I think it would be premature for me to want to change anything right now," Stiehl said. "I want to get my feet on the ground and be a constructive member of the board.

"I have worked with many people from SIU and many civic leaders," she said. "I want to continue working with the board to ensure the success of SIU."

Stiehl recently was appointed to the position by Gov. Jim Edgar.

She is joined with Molly D'Esposito of Winnetka as the only two female board members.

A.D. VanMeter, chairman of the board, said he and other board members were delighted with Edgar's choice.

"She has a wonderful background of involvement in her community and a real concern about education today," VanMeter said.

Amaya's future not over after drafts

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

Ashraf Amaya may not have been picked in the NBA draft, but that might not be all bad.

Bill Neff, Amaya's representative, said being one of the last 14 picks would have hurt Ashraf's chances to make a team.

"Out of the last 14 guys picked, only four will have a chance to make a team, as the other 10 guys got picked by teams with full rosters," Neff said.

Neff said only two players of the last 15 picks last year found a spot on an NBA roster.

Now a free-agent, Amaya can shop his services to teams that need a player like him.

Neff said Amaya has had phone calls from Atlanta, Cleveland, Denver, Milwaukee, Philadelphia and the Los Angeles Lakers.

"We're not done yet either," Neff said.

"We expect to get a few more calls on Amaya."

Neff said Cleveland, Philadelphia and Los Angeles are Amaya's best prospects right now.

"Philly has three or four roster spots open, Cleveland has shown interest before and Jerry West called me from the Lakers," Neff said.

Amaya

Neff cited questionable selections in the draft led to some good players falling later than they should have. This hurt Amaya's chances as there were some big names still around late in the draft.

"I was really surprised by some of the selections," Neff said. "I think some of them

A group of children play soccer in the summer six-week family program. The children were playing Thursday afternoon.

Nationwide event gathers local kids

By Tre' Roberts
Sports Writer

The National Youth Sports Program celebrated its 25th anniversary Thursday morning, bring nearly 200 children from the Southern Illinois area to Carbondale.

The program took place at the Student Recreation Center in the wake of President Clinton's declaration that July 1st is national NYSP Day.

The NYSP is a national partnership which organizes activities for children, ages 10 to 16, for five weeks during the summer.

The celebration involved the nearly 200 children attending the activities for the day, the organization's staff, and guest speakers John Guyon, SIUC chancellor, and Carbondale Mayor Neil Dillard.

The NYSP takes place at 175 universities around the country and is aimed toward bringing together and educating children from different areas, according to Kathy Hollister, assistant director of intramural recreation at SIUC and project administrator for the NYSP's Carbondale chapter.

"This gives the children the chance to work, play and learn together," Hollister said. "The children learn a lot about themselves here. They learn how they can succeed. Being on a college campus is good for them, it helps them to see that there is a lot more out there than what they're used to."

Although Carbondale is only a medium sized town by national standards, it can be a big change from what some children are used to, said Hollister.

"This brings together kids from the city and the country," Hollister said. "When a child is from a town of 900, coming into a place like Carbondale, where you have a population of 25,000 and then another 25,000 students, that's a big difference to a kid."

"We are able to bring in children from about a 40 mile radius around Carbondale," Hollister said. "It

Smokeless tobacco ban too late

Baseball is changing. June 15 marked the beginning of that change, with a ban on smokeless tobacco in the minor-leagues.

The ban is in effect while players and managers are on the field, in the clubhouse, on the team bus and even in hotels.

This ban affects more than 6,000 players and other personnel of 212 minor-league baseball teams. It is designed to eventually have an impact on the habits of the future stars of the big leagues.

Players at the Class AAA and AA level who violate the ban will be fined $300 and ejected from the game, while offenders at the Class A level will be ejected and fined $100.

In addition, every time a player is ejected, his manager will also get the thumb.

The sport of baseball may have good intentions, but they are roughly 100 years late with this ban.

This ban comes too late to help present players who are tobacco users.

Baseball players have developed such an affection for tobacco that they ain't but eat the stuff.

Before a person can quit a habit, they have to want to quit the habit.

Another factor when considering whether the ban is a good idea is safety.

Addicted players physically need the nicotine.

There are not too many sights a hitter would fear worse than a pitcher who is getting the shakes from nicotine withdrawal.

Most players, if not all, probably would rather the pitcher have total concentration when hurling 95 mile-per-hour fastballs instead of being a bundle of nerves.

The mandate does not yet cover the majors because it would violate part of the union agreement of players rights, but Major League Baseball hopes to include a similar ban in future contract negotiations.

All chaos would break loose once multi million dollar performers are told that they cannot use smokeless tobacco.

There is not much doubt that the ban will be good for the players health.

Dr. Paul Robertson, dean of the School of Dentistry at the University of Washington, was invited by Major League Baseball to study the habits of major and minor leaguers during spring training from 1988 to 1990.

Robertson's findings were that 55 percent of players used smokeless tobacco.

Roughly half of the players studied developed lesions in their mouth, which increase the risk of oral cancer.

Still, many players have the right to be angry about the ban. There is an overwhelming sentiment among players that chewing is a tradition held too closely to the game to tamper with.

The habit has been associated with baseball for more than 100 years.

Baseball cards were used for tobacco advertisements as early as the 1880s.

Some think baseball and tobacco became partners because many early players were from rural areas. Another theory says players chewed to keep the dusty fields from making their mouths dry.

Whatever explanations for why smokeless tobacco is a part of baseball, or whatever arguments for keeping it in the sport, there are two main reasons players chew. Players chew out of habit and for enjoyment.

It is their personal choice. There is no medical proof to show they are harming other people. The risk taken with the use of smokeless tobacco is theirs alone.

And while spitting on the ground is unsanitary, it does not cause

NBA draft night fascinating, magical for Orlando coach

The Washington Post

AUBURN HILLS, Mich.— Before a single pick had been announced in the National Basketball Association draft Wednesday night in The Palace of Auburn Hills, Golden State Warriors Coach Don Nelson said it already had been the most fascinating draft day he'd seen in some while. One trade, a blockbuster involving the first and third picks of the entire proceeding, made Nelson's assessment an understatement.

The Orlando Magic, with the No. 1 pick, indeed selected Michigan power forward Chris Webber, but he won't be playing aside Shaquille O'Neal. After the Philadelphia 76ers selected 7-foot-6 Shawn Bradley from Brigham Young with the No. 2 pick, the 1993 draft became truly memorable. Golden State, picking third, took 6-7 playmaker Arfennee Hardaway from Memphis State, making The Trade possible. After the Dallas Mavericks selected Kentucky forward Jamal Mashburn No. 4, the Warriors sent Hardaway, and first-round picks in 1996, 1998 and 2000 to Orlando for Webber.

The Magic got the playmaker the club coveted to team with O'Neal, and the Warriors got the power player they'd sorely missed to play with their stars, guard Tim Hardaway and forward Chris Mullin.

Magic officials, already in love with the Memphis State point guard, flew him to Orlando Tuesday for another workout, and decided he was the player they wanted. Nelson wanted to wind up with either Webber or Bradley.

The Magic decided to draft Webber, in case Philadelphia picked Hardaway or Golden State pulled out of the deal. "Our goal was to select the player we wanted while using the leverage of having the top pick," Peter Gabriel, the Magic's player personnel man, said. Pat Williams, Orlando's general manager, said, "There's no question we fell in love with (Hardaway)."

I've been in basketball for a long time and he showed me things I haven't seen. We've got a guy who will run our ballclub for the next 12 or 15 years." In California, Nelson told reporters, "This is the year we've got to make a statement with our big people and we did NAFTA INTERESTS BUSINESSES IN RELOCATING — Despite potential legal snags, corporate America appears to be very interested in relocating operations or launching new ventures in Mexico, as evidenced by the eager and widespread attendance at a series of workshops and presentations here on doing business in Mexico. American executives hooked to presentations early this week in anticipation that the North American Free Trade Agreement, which would drop trade barriers, will eventually be approved. A U.S. District Court judge's ruling may delay that approval, but many U.S. corporate plans for Mexican operations are already well advanced.

CONSPIRATOR FINALLY FACING PUNISHMENT — The man accused of ordering the assassination of exiled Chilean diplomat Orlando Letelier in Washington nearly 17 years ago is finally facing the prospect of punishment. After years of rattling around in military courts during the rule of Gen. Augusto Pinochet, the case of retired Gen. Manuel Contreras, former head of the Chilean secret police, is before a civilian judge, Adolfo Banados, who could issue a verdict in the coming months, according to those watching the case.

REPORT CONTROVERSY KILLS CONFERENCE — Last December the Administrative Conference of the United States (ACUS) issued a controversial report challenging the unsupervised status of the government's administrative law judges. The report may have been one of the conference's last. Angered by the report's call for greater federal oversight, administrative law judges took the offensive, urging the House Appropriations Committee to abolish ACUS. In effect, the committee did so in mid-June, killing the conference's funding for 1994.

CLINTONS PERPLEXED ABOUT VACATION PLANS — When they're not assembling trillion-dollar budgets or writing sweeping health plans, Bill and Hillary Clinton are pondering a truly daunting question these days: Where will they unfurl their beach umbrella this summer? Members of the First Family have yet to figure out exactly when to take their summer vacation or where or for precisely how long. For the Clintons, such mundane domestic issues engender unusual complications and have global implications. With the weeks ticking down, the dilemma appears to demonstrate anew how seemingly straightforward questions can become matters of Gordian complexity in the Clinton White House.

MORE VICTIMS ADDED TO ALLEGED KILLER'S LIST — Investigators found so much women's jewelry, underwear and other clothing from the home of an alleged New York area serial killer that they fear he could have killed more than the 17 women to which he allegedly confessed, sources said Wednesday. New York City police released a list of seven names of female victims linked to Rifkin. Sources told Newstoday that detectives are focusing on three other women they believe may have been killed by Rifkin.

Local authority warns consumers of Social Security card fee scams

By Erika Bellafiore
Business Writer

Social Security card changes are important after getting married, but people need to be aware of advertisements claiming to change their cards for a fee.

What some people do not know is that changing their Social Security card is a simple process, an official said.

Ron Jensen, assistant manager of the Social Security Administration in Carbondale, said there are scams in magazines and newspapers that advertise they will change one's Social Security card for a fee.

"This is awful. They don't need to pay, and these third parties are advertising a service that has fees from $10 to $25," Jensen said. "The bottom line is they charge and we do it for free."

Mary Mahler, director of Public Affairs of the Social Security Administration in Chicago, said what these companies are doing is not illegal.

"It is not technically illegal, but if the companies use the words Social Security in their name they have to have a prominent disclaimer," Mahler said. "The disclaimer has to say they are not connected to any federal agency. If it doesn't then we can take legal action."

Mahler said this is a way for companies to make money. The people send the companies money and the personal information the Social Security Administration needs.

Then the company sends the form with an envelope back to the person to mail to the Social Security Administration.

"All this does is add time to the process and waste money," Mahler said. "Also personal information is given out to people who may use it illegally."

After someone gets married they need to fill out an SS-5 form, an application for a Social Security card, at the Social Security Administration office in town, Jensen said.

"They need to come in after getting married, because we need to see a document that identifies the individual by their maiden and married name," Jensen said. "A marriage license would be sufficient."

If someone does not make the necessary changes there may be a problem when obtaining a job or when filing tax returns, Jensen said.

"If the name on the tax return does not match the name on the

Bar seeks to upgrade liquor license

By Shawna Donovan
City Writer

Beach Bumz is seeking to upgrade its liquor license after the Carbondale City Council approved their current license on Tuesday night.

Beach Bumz's class A3 license was renewed after a review of their accounts by the Carbondale Liquor Advisory Board found the bar in violation of its liquor license.

The bar only had 41.8 percent food sales at the time the board reviewed the records. Beach Bumz license requires them to have 51 percent food sales.

The bar, at 611 S. Illinois Ave., will also petition to obtain Gatsby's surrendered class B2 license. Gatsby's, which is closing, has surrendered their license and the city has given Beach Bumz first priority in obtaining the license.

Roland Davis, Beach Bumz owner, said the B2 license would enable the club to become more competitive with other bars on the strip.

"It would make things more flexible for me as far as promoting the establishment," Davis said. "It would give me a better chance of being successful and have more people inside the bar."

The class B2 license enables a bar to have 100 percent alcohol sales and would allow 18 year-olds into the establishment. The class

A3 license is an entertainment license.

"Right now, I am going to try to get out of debt by September and get back on my feet," Davis said.

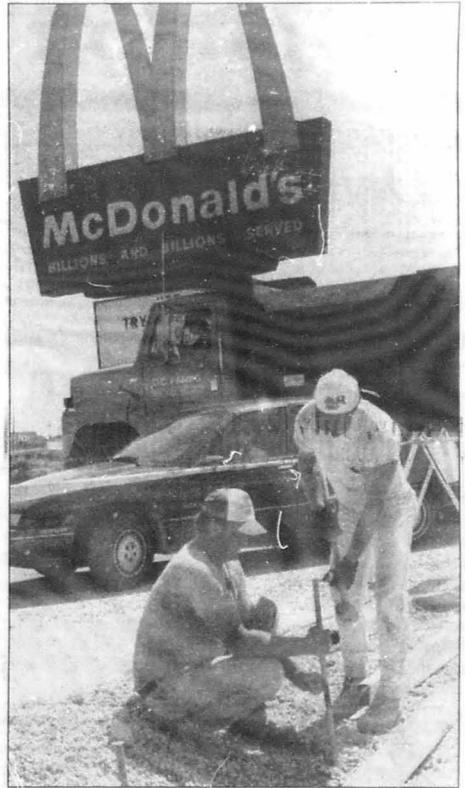

"There will be more entertainment this coming fall, and if I get the B2 license, people under 21 can enjoy that entertainment too."

Council member John Mills said he voted to renew the license.

"I was concerned about their records," Mills said. "They will have to do a better job with it next time they are up for renewal."

Council member Maggie Flanagan said the vote to renew the license would help the TV labeling system sparks awareness

DIRECTOR STEVEN SPIELBERG made children one of the target audiences for his warm-hearted yet fiercely intense dinosaur adventure "Jurassic Park." The movie made it to the big screen this summer, but stamped with a PG-13 rating to strongly warn parents with small children of the violent nature of the film.

Since its opening, children have become some of the film's most fruitful fans, yet the rating does offer parents who monitor what their younger children view in theaters the option of letting them see the film or not.

An announcement Wednesday, however, is bringing a change of jurassic proportions to the small screen this fall. Similar to the PG-13 rating, networks will air before shows in which the violence level could be disturbing to children this warning: "Due to some violent content, parental discretion advised."

Despite the limitations of such a warning label, the agreement is a significant step in showing that the networks finally are acknowledging a problem brought to light nearly eight years ago.

SEN. PAUL SIMON, D-MAKANDA, was the first to introduce the problem of television violence into Congress, after which many members of Congress warned television executives they would press for laws mandating a rating system or even specific limits on the amount or timing of violent shows.

Hoping to deter a federally imposed system, the nation's four broadcast networks—ABC, CBS, NBC and Fox—will introduce this September the new warning system for movies, mini-series and specials, and later phase it in for series. The message will precede the program, intermittently play before or after commercials and be aired during advertisements for the show.

In exchange for the network's action, lawmakers are expected to refrain from proposing more stringent rules for now.

BEING THE FIRST ACTION networks have taken in response to complaints about violence on television, this is a major step that should be highly regarded. But it can be limited in its effectiveness.

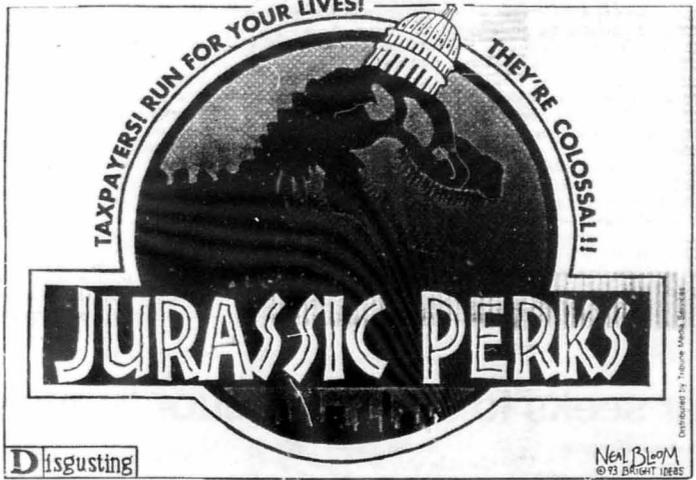

The networks admitted they will not warn parents before every program that contains violence, and the warning will not be played before Saturday morning cartoons, sports shows, mysteries like "Murder She Wrote," educational series, and shows that have a high social and artistic content.

The networks also transfer the warning label's effectiveness onto the shoulders of parents in hopes they will monitor their children's viewing—the new system does not confront the problem of all the children who watch television unsupervised.

THE NEW WARNING LABEL is not meant to solve the problem of television violence, but provide a disclaimer similar to those found on packages of cigarettes—saying that this could be dangerous to one's health. Like the warnings on cigarette packs, the networks' label is meant to increase awareness of the violence to their users.

Critics to this labeling system claim it does nothing to end the amount of violence on television. But before a solution could be made toward that, the networks first had to acknowledge the fact that excessive violence does exist on television. They did just that with the announcement of the new labels.

The next step will require network executives to spend more time creating programs with a remote sense of social value, rather than those that merely attempt to shock and thrill. Hopefully, it will not take another eight years.

Letters to the Editor

DE's attack on U.S. off target

I just read the DE article "U.S. reacts unjustly to Iraqi plot," June 30.

Obviously the author didn't spend one day watching the news during the war, nor has the author taken a close look at the U.S. legal system which he stated the Clinton administration failed to follow.

For the author to believe that the Iraqi threat should be left alone is ludicrous.

One must look at Iraq's actions during the war to realize that an unanswered threat is an invitation to follow through next time.

If the author had followed the world events he would see that Iraq is capable of and willing to kill a figure such as Bush. The author struck at Clinton as though he fired the missiles for fun.

Clinton did wait until "compelling evidence" was shown. That is the same procedure followed in U.S. courts: alleged act of wrong, evidence, verdict, sentence.

Except because we chose to protect our own, now we are wrong? I don't think so.

If a man breaks into your home, threatens your children and you shoot him, isn't that "compelling evidence" to render a verdict and sentence without going to court?

I was in the war and witnessed what Saddam did to Kuwaitis and his own people.

Believe me, he would have killed Bush and slept well that night.

I don't like Clinton, but I do agree with these actions. Mr. or Ms. Author, when you step out from your air conditioned office and experience the world you might become more lenient toward U.S. decisions dealing with people like Saddam.

Saddam would kill you just as quickly as Mr. Bush because you both were lucky enough to be born in America. —Timothy Kane, freshman, pre-business

Student workers shortchanged

Sometimes SIUC student workers are treated so poorly by administrators you just cannot believe it's happening. The only credit students seem to get in their jobs is blame when someone messes up.

The 5,000 student workers and 1,589 graduate assistants in 1993 have seen cuts of 5 percent in a year. How were they cut?

If a student is not accepted by the staff, they're fired right away, regardless of their work or social skills. Yet the campus still gets the same work out of less.

The process of firing is a little slower for graduate assistants, which is as soon as their contract is up—down to one semester in some divisions. Recently I was told by an administrator I was fired.

Apparently he was unclear, as was I, of why, but it came from his mouth.

I work hard enough and have eight logged hours of compensation time and still they give more to do. So he told me I must resign in two weeks. Now I get a letter saying let's make this a positive experience until your contract's up.

The philosophy is to be nice to the staff. This is true, but it is not always the full time or salaried personnel who get things done. But believe me they will always take the credit, and often pass the blame.

Getting things done for students, which is who we are all supposed to be working for, is not easy. Students know the budget changes, staff hiring quotas, etc.

But nothing changes faster than an administrator's mind, which makes it even more difficult for students to pinpoint where to work for educational expenses.

Isn't this the place since 1869? Who gets those jobs? What keeps them? Just business as usual for administrators, who always have their own versions. —Gregory Szidik, graduate assistant, DCE

U.S. retaliation deserves credit

I totally disagree with your article "U.S. reacts unjustly to alleged Iraqi plot."

What would your headlines have been if former President Bush had been assassinated?

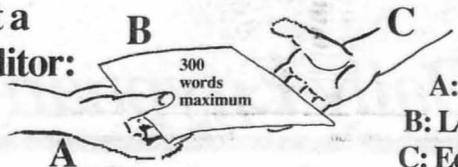

Probably something else absurd — like, he shouldn't have been there to begin with.

Wake up DE! Do you really think Saddam Hussein was not responsible for this plot.

Maybe we should wait until they blow up something else, like maybe the Statue of Liberty or the White House!

Come on and give credit where credit is due. The majority of the American people and the rest of the world has. —Edna Hane, storekeeper III, Life Science II

Secrets behind dazzling fireworks display

Fireworks we'll watch this weekend have been developed by devices the Chinese invented more than 1,000 years ago. Here's a peek at how they were done.

novelty toys, such as party poppers that expel confetti.

"There is really no mechanism set up to specifically enforce the regulations," Williams said. "This is an area that is very hard for officers and local municipalities to enforce."

Mark McDonald, public information officer for the Illinois State Police, said although the state police have extra patrols during Fourth of July weekend, there is no specific division that looks for fireworks violations.

"It's hard to catch people on fireworks violations. You'll be lucky if you can see it from the road or hear something, but then how do you track it down?" McDonald said. "Usually we don't know where it's going on until a citizen complains or an accident happens."

Williams said most illegal fireworks are obtained through out-of-state buyers.

"There isn't much we can do to make sure people aren't bringing fireworks into the state," Williams said. "When you purchase them elsewhere it's not illegal, but once you bring them into the state you've broken the law."

Deborah Stone, manager of Molly Brown's Fireworks in St. Louis, said her store does not keep track of who purchases fireworks.

"It's not our responsibility as to how these people use the fireworks they buy," Stone said. "They should know the laws of their particular state and abide by them; we can't enforce that."

Stone said a majority of her customers are out-of-state residents because it is illegal for Missouri residents to purchase fireworks outside of the designated June 20 to July 10 time span.

"We don't have any special precautions to make sure out-of-state residents will use them legally, and we don't make them show identification either," Stone said. "As long as the purchaser is over 16 years old, we'll sell them the fireworks."

Williams said 12,900 people were injured nationwide in fireworks accidents in 1992, a 15 percent increase from the previous year.

"These people were injured seriously enough to cause them to seek hospital treatment," Williams said. "This is why fireworks regulations exist — to protect people."

In an effort to boost safety, the General Assembly created fireworks task force which compiled a list of recommendations and presented them to Gov. Jim Edgar.

'The Firm' slick, realistic thriller despite changes

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
Police Writer

The big-screen version of John Grisham's "The Firm" may disappoint some readers of the original novel but the movie still works as a realistic thriller.

Sydney Pollack directs this film about Mitch McDeere a young lawyer played by Tom Cruise, and the trials and tribulations he faces when he discovers that his law firm is involved with the mafia. The FBI tells McDeere who is fresh out of law school that he must betray his co-workers and inevitably his own ethics in order to bring down the crooked law firm.

An interesting facet of the movie is that it takes the raw elements of the book and moves in its own direction. Pollack appears more interested in redeeming the soul of young McDeere than mirroring the incidents which occur in the novel. The movie succeeds in this theme because the audience is given a McDeere who wants to come clean and eventually have control of his life.

Mitch McDeere is slightly different from the slick strategist of the novel: He has a conscience. In the novel McDeere is seduced into a one night stand that his wife never learns about while in the film McDeere tells his wife of the affair and the tension this creates gives the film a realistic edge.

Movie Review

Cruise manages to make McDeere a real human being, who despite the fact that his entire life is falling apart around him, wants to survive.

Gene Hackman plays Avery Tolar, Cruise's mentor, with a tragic tone. Hackman manages to present the audience an example of the devastated lawyer McDeere could become if he stays in the firm. Though Hackman's character is only secondary to Cruise's, he is able to take each scene and make it his own. Hackman portrays Avery Tolar like a villain with the heart of a fallen angel.

In one scene Hackman and Cruise discuss the reasons why they became lawyers. It hints at a Tolar that once had ideals, but lost them in his search for wealth; the theme of the dog chasing the bone but never actually catching it.

The film moves at a staple-gun pace with every scene feeding off the one before it. Pollack's direction is economical in that there is nothing on the screen that does not need to be there.

This flowing quality is a sign of the superior direction Pollack takes with the film. From the eerie beginning with its eerie promises of wealth and happiness to the quick paced ending, each scene blends into the next.

An interesting element that makes "The Firm" different is its all-piano soundtrack by Dave Grusin. It is a far leap from the extreme orchestra music that can be found in most of this summer's action flicks.

Perhaps Pollack selected Grusin to give "The Firm" more of a realistic feel, instead of just being another summer movie. The music is not flamboyant, thus giving the viewer a greater opportunity to get into the plot.

Pollack's adaptation of "The Firm" deserves attention. Even though Pollack takes creative license to change various plot elements, those changes work in this film.

Unlikely artists make waves, rocket to top of pop charts

Los Angeles Times

Talk about your long shots. Imagine the odds you could have gotten four years ago if you had bet that someone from N.W.A.—the notorious Los Angeles group that popularized "gangsta rap"—would someday have a record with enough mainstream appeal to be a Top 20 single.

The bets were won, of course, when Ice Cube and Dr. Dre both soared into the Top 20 in April with records—"It Was a Good Day" and "Nuthin' But a 'G' Thang," respectively—that were played on up to half of the nation's pop radio stations.

Those singles, which were far more radio-friendly than the early N.W.A. records, but still credible to hard-core audiences, were part of a massive rap invasion of the national pop charts during the last six months.

"It Was a Good Day" and A Lighter Shade of Brown's "Homies," especially, reflect on life in the 'hood in ways that are revealing and affecting.

In a real way, the records are youthful celebrations of the ethnic diversity of today's urban centers—records that invite an update of the old Motown Records slogan: the New Sound of Young America.

1. Ice Cube, "It Was a Good Day" (Priority) Ice Cube has defined the heartache and anger of alienated inner-city youth better than anyone in rap, but here he steps away from the violence and confrontation.

2. R.E.M., "Man on the Moon" (Warner Bros.). This great Georgia band makes so many exquisite pop-rock singles—including "Losing My Religion," which topped my list of the best singles of 1991—that it's easy to forget that the group was once the leader of the alternative rock scene.

"Man on the Moon" is a magical expression of the innocence and wonder of life, complete with references to an unlikely cast that ranges from comedian Andy Kaufman and Elvis to wrestler Freddie Blassie.

3. Janet Jackson, "That's the Way Love Goes" (Virgin). Summer pop doesn't get any smoother or more seductive. No wonder it's been No. 1 for seven weeks in a row on the Billboard chart.

4. A Lighter Shade of Brown, "Homies" (Pump/Quality). Part of the expanding Latino rap scene, Bobby Ramirez and Robert Gutierrez teamed up for this especially infectious look at friendship in the 'hood.

Cruise's legal drama makes case as blockbuster with big opening

Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD—"Jurassic Park" continues to break all kinds of box-office records, but now comes the legal drama of "The Firm," starring Tom Cruise, and it's making its case with a $7.2 million opening day Wednesday.

If the pace continues, "The Firm" could push the Steven Spielberg dinosaur horror movie into second place among the top grossing movies for the long Fourth of July holiday weekend. Paramount Pictures reported Thursday that the $7.2 million figure set an industry record for the biggest midweek opening of a non-sequel film. However, the movie has a built-in audience given it is based on John Grisham's highly popular novel, which has sold 580,000 hard copies and 9.36 million paperback.

The movie's first day gross surpassed the record held since 1987 by the original action comedy "Beverly Hills Cop," starring Eddie Murphy, which did business of $4.2 million. The biggest Wednesday opening on record, however, is held by the sequel "Terminator 2: Judgment Day," which collected $8.7 million on its first day, July 3, 1991—also the kick off for a long Independence Day weekend.

"We're looking forward to a fabulous holiday weekend," said Barry Logsdon, Paramount's president of worldwide distribution, as he discussed the opening day figure. "That number would have been sensational for a Friday. For a Wednesday, it's spectacular."

While he declined to make a prediction about what the film might gross for the weekend, he did say the film is "certainly displaying the potential" to knock "Jurassic Park" out of first place for the first time since it opened on a Friday, June 11. That in itself would be a feat, since "Jurassic Park" is generally regarded as being in a category all its own when it comes to box-office performance. The first weekend for "Jurassic Park" established an industry record of $50.1 million. Its first Monday alone pulled in $8.6 million, Tuesday $8.3 million and Wednesday, $7.1 million.

Although "The Firm" might push "Jurassic Park" out of first place for the weekend, it has a long way to go to catch up with the total gross for the Spielberg movie. As of Wednesday, "Jurassic Park" had sold $183 million worth of tickets.

establishment. "It seems like a good place and it could be very successful," Flanagan said. "They have to keep the records running right and more advertising. There does not seem to be any code violations and that is a good thing," she said. "It is fine with me."

Mike Spiwak, Undergraduate Student Government president, said Beach Bumz offers an alternative on the strip.

"It is a diversified establishment and that is what the Strip needs,"

Spiwak said. "I am glad to see their license renewed because it is a good place to go other than the congested beer gardens where the whole student body can be found."

That is the normal way the appeals process works and I do not think it should be changed because these people are CIPS employees."

But a Shari Kertez, an IDES spokesperson, said the CIPS employees will have their cases looked at separately.

"The employees have until July 12 to file an appeal," Kertez said. "Every effort will be made to ensure a fair hearing."

Members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 702 and the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 148 have been locked out by CIPS since May 20.

A contract was worked out between CIPS and the IUOE June 21, but the operating engineers have refused to return to work until a settlement is reached with the IBEW.

Woolard said he thinks the locked-out workers are being denied benefits because of a loose interpretation of the IDES guidelines.

"Regardless of whether the department wants to admit it or not, I believe there is some room for subjective interpretation on several of these items," Woolard said. "On behalf of the CIPS employees I represent, I'm not willing to concede a loss of benefits just based on the department's interpretation."

Under Section 604 of Illinois' Unemployment Insurance Act, an employee can not receive unemployment benefits if he or she 1) is unemployed because of a stoppage of work where they were last employed, 2) the work stoppage is because of a "labor dispute", and they are directly interested in the labor dispute.

According to Woolard, the General Assembly, amended Section 604 in 1987 in an effort to address situations arising from a lockout, where an employer purposefully keeps employees from working.

Under the new provisions, an employee would be entitled to unemployment benefits if 1) the employer refuses to meet under reasonable conditions with the collective bargaining representative, 2) there is a final adjudication under the National Labor Relations Act that the employer has refused to bargain in good faith, or 3) the lockout violates the provisions of an existing collective bargaining agreement.

CIPS workers were negotiating in Springfield at press time and could not be reached for comment.

MTV's Shore fish out of water in 'Son-in-Law' flick

Film Review

Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD—One problem of comedy stardom is that it confers sexiness and power on performers whose humor may rely on stupidity or banality.

When that happens, the star comics may lose their edge and craziness and turn into good-will hucksters.

That's what goes wrong with the strenuously silly comedy "Son-in-Law," a Pauly Shore vehicle in which MTV's chilled-out, syllable-stretching denizen of "Dudesville" plays a fish out of water.

An L.A. college pal of South Dakota farmgirl Rebecca (Carla Gugino), hauled home for a Thanksgiving weekend and erroneously palmed off as a prospective husband.

Pauly's character, Crawl, and the family he invades—which features Lane Smith and Cindy Pickett as the parents, Mason Adams as Grandpa and Patrick Renna as younger brother Zack—are conceived in the broadest sitcom-skech terms.

Dad is upright, uptight. Mom is neurotic, repressed. Gramps just wants to whittle on the porch, fish and complain. Tubby little red-head Zack is a wise-cracking cutup and computer whiz.

There's also a burly mean farmhand named Theo (Dennis Berkeley) and a mean ex-boyfriend (Dan Gauthier).

As for Rebecca, she's another fast-pitch mall-movie dream: the South Dakota porn queen-valedictorian Crawl turns into a Melrose drop-dead hotter in miniskirts, hair dye, boob tubes and butterfly tattoos.

The movie tries to pretend that it's about tolerance: a kind of "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner" about anti-L.A. freak bigotry.

But its deck is stacked in the usual obvious ways.

Crawl is a genuine jerk when he shows up at the farm, warbling "Green Acres" and making pig jokes at the Werners' expense, destroying farm equipment and cornfields with blithe abandon, acting as if everything will be straightened out if he just writes a check.

We're supposed to forget all this when his eyes go soft and he turns into the local guru of sexiness and funky fashion, remaking the whole family into kinder, gentler swingers.

"Son-in-Law" suggests that somebody like Crawl would be as weird as a lunar being to the Midwestern Werners.

That isn't so.

Because of TV and the movies, L.A. subcultures are the ones everyone knows about.

Characters like Crawl are familiar types nationwide—ever since 1982 and the movie role that spawned them all: Sean Penn's Jeff Spicoli in "Fast Times at Ridgemont High."

In any town within reach of cable TV, the teen-agers would not only recognize a Pauly, there might be imitation Paulys at the high school.

The writers and director Steve Rash have another half-baked angle: Crawl as ambassador of ambisexuality.

At one point he dresses up like Carmen Miranda, complete with bananas and brassiere.

Since the two villains—Theo, the farmhand bully, and Travis, the evil Tom Cruise look-alike—are macho men to the max, there's a suggestion that Crawl's strength comes from the way he embraces and flaunts his feminine side.

"Son-in-Law" has a bright surface, brisk direction and even a few funny performances (Smith's and Renna's).

The movie glosses that over too, just as it discreetly smudges the similarities between Crawl's brain-fried mannerisms and druggie ties.

Shore's appeal resides in the fact that a lot of kids think he's just like them, and that he's getting away with murder.

Next to the earnest, shampooed-grinning commentators around him on MTV, he doesn't seem to give a damn.

Yet, in "Son-in-Law" (MPAA-rated PG-13) Crawl often seems the phoniest character in the movie.

Maybe that's because the writers keep telling us that their "bunuuudd-dy" isn't really such an oddball, that he does care.

SCAM, from page 7

Social Security Card there will be problems with the IRS," he said.

Some SIUC students planning to get married in the near future are unaware of the process of changing their Social Security cards.

Laurie Fischer, a graduate student in business administration from Rockford, said she did not know she had to change her card, and she did not know about the services offered in magazines and newspapers.

"I just got engaged a few weeks ago. I didn't know about this," Fischer said.

Ruth Schenk, an unclassified graduate student of Schaumburg, said she knew she had to change her card because her friends told her, but she did not know where to go to get the application.

"I don't know where to go. I thought I would have to go to the driver's license place or the court house," Schenk said.

Schenk said she did not know about the services offered for a fee.

She thought the changes would be for free because it is a government agency.

to his relations with those groups.

Amid their laments about the plan's shortcomings, environmentalists said they do not consider this as another black mark in his mixed record on environmental issues.

Some acknowledge that the seven-year envirodrama had become a zero-sum game for the two sides, in which one side's gain would necessarily be the other's loss. "You can criticize it, yes, but this was an honest attempt to take on a damnably difficult problem," said Ben McNitt of the National Wildlife Federation.

Clinton angered environmentalists by backing off on a proposal to raise mining and grazing fees on federal lands, and disappointed many by backing away from plans for a tax on the heat content of fuels.

They have praised him for his commitment to reduce global warming and protecting rare plant and animal species.

Labor comes away from this latest stage in the timber dispute with a sense that it lost more than their environmentalist adversaries.

Yet labor officials doubt that the passions will not open a breach in their relations with Clinton; some even acknowledge that the president's choices, were, after all, not that plentiful.

Jay Power, a lobbyist for the AFL-CIO, considers the plan "disastrous," but says: "One would make a mistake to draw a larger conclusion from this area of disagreement."

Administration aides, in describing efforts to find a solution, asserted they had done all they could to assemble a plan that was legally irreproachable and even-handed.

The first stage was to turn to a scientific panel to establish the maximum amount of timber cutting that would permit survival of the spotted owl.

When the panel offered a choice of eight options, Administration officials concluded none would have allowed enough cutting, and called for development of more choices.

They changed the rules to allow logging closer to streams, and to permit more logging through thinning of trees and salvaging of fallen timber. These changes added about 400 million board feet to the permissible annual cut, bringing it to 1.2 billion board feet a year.

While labor and industry complained this would force drastically cuts in their labor force—costing as 85,000 jobs directly and indirectly—environmentalists howled that it would nonetheless threaten the long-term survival of some animal species.

This option became the administration's final choice.

No win for funny girl's tennis love

The Baltimore Sun

WIMBLEDON, England—On the ninth day, Barbra Streisand finally showed up and turned Wimbledon from a tennis match into a passion play.

When her man, Andre Agassi, finally won a set in his quarterfinal match, he turned and pointed toward her. She rose and stretched her arms in his direction.

Such a funny girl.

But it was all to no avail. No. 1 seed Pete Sampras rained on Streisand's parade and ousted Agassi, the defending Wimbledon champion, 6-2, 6-2, 3-6, 6-4.

It was quite a blow to the fans at the All England Club, where this tournament suddenly got much duller.

As Streisand, dressed in a dark blue sailor's suit complete with little white hat, yelled, "Go, baby, go," and joined the crowd in doing the wave, Agassi played like a champion to force a deciding fifth set.

He had been down two sets to love, but he fought back and had Sampras stressed and struggling with his sore shoulder and the match even at 2-2 in the fifth set.

"At that point, I thought I was going to win," Agassi said.

But as Agassi lifted his game, Sampras also reached down for something few knew he had and gutter 1 out the victory.

"When I got my serve broken early in the third set, I started thinking about my shoulder," Sampras said.

"My head was hanging a little bit, and my arm felt very uncomfortable. But it was something I could definitely play through.

"I think it was mostly mental. So I told my self to suck it up, or it's the last set I'm going to play, and I just told myself to just hang in there. As it turned out, I was able to pull through."

He will play No. 4 seed Boris Becker—who survived a clash with Michael Stich, 7-5, 6-7 (5-7), 6-7 (5-7), 6-2, 6-4—in one semifinal match Friday.

In the men's other semifinal, No. 2 Stefan Edberg will play No. 3 Jim Courier.

Edberg earned his berth with a quarterfinal victory over Frenchman Cedric Pioline, 7-5, 7-5, 6-3. And Courier dispatched his friend Todd Martin back to Lansing, Mich., 6-2, 7-6 (7-5), 6-3.

it, without losing any of our nucleus. We've been trying to get size for a long, long time and now we've got a fellow who can play power forward and some center for us."

Badley, the 7-6 center who hasn't played organized basketball in three years, will play a lot of center for the Sixers.

After Dallas took Jamal Mashburn, the Minnesota Timberwolves, who have an excess of wing shooters and complex personalities, got plenty more in J.R. Rider from Nevada-Las Vegas. Rider, upon being selected, guaranteed he'll win in the NBA slam dunk contest during all-star weekend if invited to participate.

The Washington Bullets, picking sixth, had no quandary at all and took Indiana forward Calbert Cheaney, the consensus college player of the year: as a senior. Cheaney, upon being selected, guaranteed he'll do whatever asked to help improve the team.

Most of the first round, thereafter, was fairly predictable.

Duke guard Bobby Hurley went to Sacramento, Hartford center Vin Baker to Milwaukee, Wake Forest forward Rodney Rogers to Denver, guards Lindsey Hunter of Jackson State and Allan Houston of Tennessee to Detroit, causing the home fans here to cheer so madly one would think the Pistons selected clones of Isiah Thomas and Joe Dumars.

The Clippers selection of Seton Hall guard Terry Dehere was somewhat a surprise, as was Indiana's choice of Oregon State center Scott Haskin. Utah—after trading with the Timberwolves for 280-pound Felton Spencer before the draft and then taking Seton Hall center Luther Wright, who weighs in excess of 300—now have a curious collection of big men, including incumbent 7-4, 500-pound Mark Eaton.

Somewhat amazingly, the three-time world champion Chicago Bulls wound up smiling as 6-10 center-forward Corie Blount from Cincinnati slid to No. 25, as did the runner-up Phoenix Suns who got 6-10 center-forward Malcolm Mackey from Georgia Tech.

In a draft supposedly weak at the point guard position...

Believe it or not...

Three playmakers went in the top 10. The draft's first round had a remarkably even distribution by position until there was a late run on big players who aren't expected to have much impact.

wasn't that big until recently, we expanded it to include West Frankfurt."

The NYSP combines both educational and sports programs for the children, said counselor Nancy LaCursia.

"We have a prevention oriented drug and alcohol education and enrichment program, and a career development program where we get people from the community involved," LaCursia said. "We also offer organized sports, like basketball and swimming."

Many benefits are offered by the NYSP, said LaCursia.

"Every child gets a free physical before participating in the camp," LaCursia said. "Plus, every child gets a snack and lunch each day, which are subsidized by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and everything is free, including transportation to and from SIU."

The NYSP is a partnership between the federal government and the nation's colleges and universities. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services represents the government and the National Collegiate Athletic Association also organizes the NYSP.

harm to people.

If baseball is so concerned with its players habits, it should go all the way. John Kruk, the Philadelphia Phillies slugger, is overweight, but still can be found eating a grand slam worth of hot dogs right before every game.

Kruk would have to chuckle at the thought of someone telling him he could not indulge in his peculiar pre-game routine.

But the minor-league players are not chuckling. They have no representation to oppose the ban. They are being used as guinea pigs to try to improve the image of baseball.

Neff cited the Bulls Scott Williams as being a similar talent who was not drafted.

"I told Ashraf he is as good as Williams was out of college," Neff said. "Now Williams has three championship rings and is about to make a lot of money."

"Williams was bigger than Ashraf" and from North Carolina," Neff said. "But he didn't get drafted."

Amaya could go to Europe for big cash, but Neff said Amaya is not concerned with money.

"The money is all that matter: to some of these guys I deal with," Neff said. "But Ashraf thinks he can be a starter in the NBA, that's just his mentality."

Neff said his goal is to get Amaya into three rookie camps for try-outs.
