Board action makes care center likely

By Lisa Miller
Staff Writer

The possibility of the University's School of Medicine gaining an Outpatient Care Center is becoming a reality.

Although the project had previously been approved by the Board of Trustees, raising the $13 million presented quite a roadblock.

Recently, the board approved the use of tax-exempt revenue bonds to build the center.

According to L. Stuart

Robson, assistant treasurer for SIU, the University should sell $16 million in bonds to completely finance the project.

The extra $3 million would cover all capitalized interest, the expense of the sale of the bonds and all construction costs for the 100,000 square foot center, Robson said.

However, Robson predicts that interest rates may be on the decline and $15 million in bonds might cover the bill.

"It's hard to guess at interest rates in six to eight months from now," Robson said. "The bank can't even tell you what they'll be tomorrow."

It will take more than 20 years for the bonds to be repaid, Robson said. Repayment will come from patient fees and fees from the Memorial Medical Center, who will lease the space. The remaining repayment will be interest income.

The legal firm of Chauman and Cutler in Chicago will receive a small percent, about 1.35, of bond's face value for their legal services.

A routine public hearing will take place before the bonds are sold, Robson said.

The Springfield architecture firm, KM2 Design Group Inc., has been commissioned by the board to design the center.

University President John C. Guyon said the "hometown form has a strong and national reputation in hospital and clinical design."

The Outpatient Care Center will be built south of the School

Profs just escape Chinese uprising

By Jackie Lay
Staff Writer

Two SIU-C professors experienced a mere miss with the uproar that occurred in China as a result of peaceful protests for democracy by university students.

The protests sparked an unusual response by their government that ended in bloody massacres that has led to the death of thousands of Chinese students.

Two SIU-C professors on separate visits to China both experienced a mere miss of uproar by the students in Tiananmen Square.

Doayne Horsley, an assistant professor of geography, and his wife Marilyn were just hours short of witnessing the 27th army roll in on Tiananmen Square.

Horsley visited Tiananmen Square three times during his stay and talked with students.

"It was different every time; more serious every time," he said.

"They want to expose the corruption in the Chinese government and businesses and establish free press," Horsley said.

Elizabeth R. Eames, a philosophy professor, coincided with the student-led demonstrations, which broke out after the April 15 death of liberal Chinese leader Hu Yaobang, during her visit to Beijing.

Both professors said that the Chinese students were interested in democracy and modernization.

"A lot of students who talked to me are very anxious to come to the U.S. to study," Eames said. "They would stop me on the street and ask me how to get an entry to the American universities."

"It was the most emotional feeling that anyone could have experienced," Horsley said. "It was a scene of almost beauty, communists wanting democracy."

Eames said the Chinese students bombarded her with questions about everything from politics to popular music.

Service to offer free calls

By Tim Crosby
Staff Writer

Students or anyone else who has put off sending dad that Father's Day card may be saved by a special promotion sponsored by MCI Telecommunications this Thursday through Sunday at University Mall.

MCI will be sponsoring free telephone calls for Father's Day to anywhere in the world. The promotion is the third one of its kind sponsored by MCI and University Mall, the last one being on Mother's Day.

Sean Osborne, a field sales coordinator for MCI, expects a large turnout for the event.

"We've had right around 600 calls the last two times," Osborne said.

Candy Allen, marketing director for University Mall, remembers the last such event.

"It was really amazing all the people who turned out," Allen said.

Bush vetoes wage increase; override unlikely

LINCOLN, Neb. (UPI) — President Bush, with the first veto of his administration, rejected an increase in the minimum wage to $4.55 an hour Tuesday, guaranteeing a fight with congressional Democrats who favor the bill.

Bush has threatened the veto for weeks, contending the bill costs too much and would hurt rather than help the poor by curtailing employment.

The president vetoed the bill aboard Air Force One en route from the Grand Tetons National Park to Lincoln, Neb., where he traveled to push his clean air proposal.

In his veto message, Bush said the bill "would increase the minimum wage by an excessive amount and thus stifle the creation of new job opportunities."

"It would damage the employment prospects of our young people and least advantaged citizens," the president said. "It would accelerate inflation. It would not help those in poverty and thus it would fail to properly reflect the thought behind this measure: to help our lowest-paid workers."

The veto pre-empted a scheduled news conference in Washington by Democratic leaders on Capitol Hill, where they were to urge Bush to sign the bill.

Immediately after the veto message was read in Congress, the House agreed to try to override the veto Wednesday. However, an override is likely to fail because neither the House nor Senate approved the bill by the veto-proof two-thirds margin.

In his message, the president said, "It's regrettable that this debate must end with a veto. Once the majority in Congress determined to reject my offer of a compromise on minimum wage legislation, however, it also became inevitable."

Fitzwater said Bush issued the veto minutes after the bill formally arrived at the White House.

Providing the override attempt fails, House leadership sources said the Democrat-led Congress would seek a new bill that might be more acceptable to Bush.

Roger Porter, a White House domestic policy adviser, said, "The ball is back in Congress's

Effect of acid rain plan questioned

By John Walblay
Staff Writer

Though in favor of improved environmental and health standards, some legislators and members of the coal industry are wary of the effect President Bush's acid rain proposal will have on the Illinois economy.

"I'm pleased the president has raised his national sights to a cleaner, healthier future," U.S. Sen. Paul Simon, D-

Makanda, said. "The goals are commendable, but we need to study the fine print."

Simon said the goals of the proposal are national, but it will be regions, such as the Midwest, that will be hurt by the cost associated with the new standards.

Bush's acid rain proposal is calling for a 10 million ton reduction of sulfur dioxide emissions by the year 2000. If enacted it would mean a 50 percent reduction of sulfur dioxide emissions.

Sulfur dioxide emissions are largely blamed for the creation of acid rain.

The higher the sulfur content of the coal the higher sulfur dioxide emission of the coal when burned by utility companies to produce electricity.

The coal produced in Illinois coal is generally regarded as having a higher sulfur content.

The proposal allows industry and consumers to switch to coal with a lower sulfur content, which is unlike the coal in Illinois, according to Gerald Hawkins, district spokesman of United Mine Workers of America.

"This could cost up to 25 percent of the coal mining jobs in Illinois," Hawkins said. He also said the proposal could cut production and transfer costs

Richman order causes backup at courthouse

By Richard Goldstein
Staff Writer

The anteroom leading to the office of Judge Richard E. Richman, presiding judge of Jackson County, is crowded with four or five jurors more often than not these days.

The jurors are there to hear a civil suit that has been going on since May 1 and could last another two or three weeks.

This trial, which Richman said is of exceptional length for civil trials in Jackson County, has brought a near crisis to the Jackson County Courthouse.

That crisis became manifest last week when Richman declared that all civil cases with juries expected to last more than two days would be delayed for an indefinite period of time.

An administrative order issued by Richman said that inadequate facilities, a shortage of court reporters and continuing construction projects in the courthouse have forced him to delay the court proceedings. Available space and personnel will be assigned to criminal cases because the "judicial system must give priority to the safety of its citizenry," according to the order.

Illustrating the point about inadequate facilities are the jurors spilling out into the hallway. "The jury (is) hanging around outside the courtroom because the jury room isn't big enough to hold them," Richman explains.

There are four courtrooms in the courthouse, but only two are equipped to handle jury trials, one of which has been occupied by the lengthy civil case.

In the meantime jury trials for civil and criminal cases alike have been piling up, Richman said. While alleged criminals are guaranteed a speedy trial, there is no such stipulation for civil cases — thus the delay for these cases.

Richman said that jury selection takes up precious court space because there are no other rooms large enough for the task. And he said there is no place except the hallways for witnesses or alleged juvenile offenders to stand before testifying.

Murphysboro lawyer John Foley, who is involved in one of the 130 cases affected by the order, corroborates Richman's story. He said he has been forced to hold hearings in cloak rooms, which he deemed inappropriate for that purpose.

Richard Higginson, University Legal Services, said the University will escape delays from Richman's order. "We don't have any cases that we're aware of that would be affected by Judge Richman's order," Higginson said.

Another problem for the courthouse, according to Richman, is the scarcity of court reporters. The judge said the courthouse has three instead of four court reporters and they are three to four months behind on typing transcripts of trials needed for appealed convictions.

Paulietta Morse, an adviser in SIU-C's court reporting program, said there is a shortage of court reporters all over the country.

"We have 100 placement of our graduates," Morse said. "They have many jobs offered them, probably five (jobs) to one (reporter)."

Morse said that even though the results from a certification test came in recently, which will add to the number of court reporters available for employers the shortage will continue.

"The demand is always greater than the supply," she adds.

GTE renovation expected to be completed by fall

By Tim Crosby
Staff Writer

GTE's $3.4 million renovation and addition to its operator services building in Marion will be completed by Sept. 18 of this year, according to Pat Stearns, the building's operator services manager.

The facility will serve a four state area, and will go into limited service around Sept. 1. Stearns said the new facility will not directly affect SIU-C. "SIU calls go through their own system," Stearns said. "Only off campus calls using operator assistance will be handled by the Marion facility."

The building, located at 1600 E. Boynton, was originally an engineering office for the company. Stearns said GTE will now use the facility to handle "intra-lata," or exclusively GTE traffic for Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Missouri. The Marion facility will be the largest of four similar facilities located in those states.

Stearns said GTE will relocate 108 operators currently located in another Marion office to the new facility, as well as adding an additional 140.

"We'll need the additional personnel because of the increase in traffic we'll be handling," Stearns said.

John Green, a GTE customer service manager, explained that the net increase in employment is unknown at this time because of the transfer of other operators from other facilities.

"It will be a voluntary action for other operators to transfer to the new facility," Green said.

Green said the company will shut down the operator service facilities in Bloomington and Macomb to help pay for the new facility.

"Those people have the option to transfer also, if we cannot relocate them there," he said.

Loren Carter, manager of the company's southern division, said no rate increases are planned for the coming year, despite the projects large cost.

"Right now we're not growing a lot in Southern Illinois," Carter said. "Instead we put that money into upgrading and maintaining our existing service."

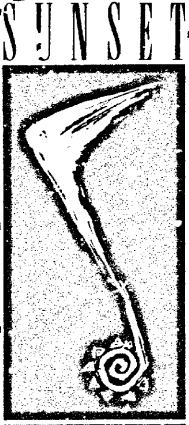

Much of the service improvement centers around replacing existing copper telephone lines with fiber optic telephone lines and compatible equipment. Fiber optic cables are very thin strands of glass, capable of transmitting thousands of conversations simultaneously, without noise or "cross-talk" interference. GTE plans to place 500 miles of fiber optic cable during 1989.

Of the $3.4 million, $500,000 is earmarked for a Spartan Air Pressure Monitoring System. The system works by monitoring air pressure that is maintained in large, underground cables. Changes in pressure can alert repairmen that damage has occurred to a cable before service is interrupted.

Professor dedicated to regional interests

AS AN EDUCATIONAL institution SIU-C should feel grateful for the incalculable contributions and dedication of the late C. William "Doc" Horrell. The emeritus professor of Cinema and Photography, who began his service to the University as a student in 1936 with the creation of the University's Photographic Service, continued to donate his talents for the remaining 53 years of a life as colorful as his photographs.

Horrell, who described himself as a self taught photographer, began teaching at the University in 1949 after earning a master's degree from the University of Illinois. While teaching classes on photojournalism, portraiture and scientific and documentary photography, Horrell came to be regarded as the University's best known and most popular photography teacher

ON A BROADER scale Horrell is best known for his contribution as chief photographer for "Land Between the Rivers," a critically acclaimed word-and-photo essay on Southern Illinois which he produced with fellow professors Henry Dan Piper and John W. Voigt for publication by the SIU Press to celebrate its centennial in 1973.

Continuing his interest in Southern Illinois, Horrell, in 1975, began to compile a series of photographs depicting one of the areas most distinctive features — its coal mines. Those photographs, now in the hands of Pete Rhodes and the SIU Press, may be featured in a book on the geological history of this area. At a time when the mining industry is threatened by economical depression, the book would help to preserve the area's heritage.

IN 1982 Horrell was awarded the Photographic Craftsmen Degree by the Professional Photographers of America, Inc. The degree is awarded for exceptional service to the profession of photography. Although his recognized success brought better job opportunities, Horrell remained dedicated to SIU-C claiming that it had one of the strongest photography programs in the mid-west.

When Horrell, as he put it, "fell in love with teaching," the University benefited from the affair. Universities are often the refuge for individuals with extraordinary skill and dedication. "Doc" Horrell seemed to exemplify these characteristics. We are commending Horrell for his outstanding contributions to education as well as the enjoyment so many derived from his work. His life and works we will remember.

Future of Communism uncertain

By San Francisco Examiner

Commentary

History is at a delicate poise as we wait to see which way the communist world will go. It can either reform, toward freedom and perhaps disintegrate as a bloc, or try to retract the nascent liberties we see emerging in dramatic ways. The latter course could bring the Marxist states to ever more violent repressions, isolate them from the modern world and increase the danger they pose to the democratic nations.

So we must hope that the sudden swing in China to brutal suppression of democratic expressions will not be copied elsewhere in the fermenting communist world. Indeed, we hope that the leaders in Beijing will reverse the sickening retrenchment seen in the murderous put-down of student demonstrators and the subsequent police-state retributions. If they do not, China's isolation will worsen steadily, and its hopes of economic advance will dissolve as advanced nations refuse to deal with a bloody tyranny, much less invest in it.

Who would have dreamed there was so much silent passion for freedom there, built up over the years of having to keep quiet? For that matter, who would have predicted the size and intensity of the buildup that now is unleashed in the Soviet Union? Of course, the two nations are markedly different in both historical and contemporary preparation for democracy: The Soviet Union is closer to the West, and the glasnost introduced by Mikhail Gorbachev goes much further toward loosening up the Marxist system than anything offered in mainland China.

But we suspect that Gorbachev is astounded and perhaps frightened a bit at what he has wrought. We'd guess he never imagined what a small crack in the wall would unleash. At the first meeting of the new Congress of People's Deputies, just concluded, he heard himself and the system assailed by some of the first deputies ever chosen in Soviet competitive elections.

As emotions boiled up, dissident members said the system had lied, bungled, suppressed, corrupted, brought economic failure and misguided foreign commitments. The session heard a distinguished economist report that the nation is going pell-mell into bankruptcy and must invoke stronger emergency measures.

Most notably, in these televised proceedings, the Soviet people even heard bold challenges to the historical tenets on which the union of the 15 socialist republics is based. Hear historian Roy Medvedev: "Up to now, in our history books, we have said Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania voluntarily joined the Soviet Union ... This is a lie."

Other speakers told how those states, and the Georgian republic, were annexed against the people's will. And all of this points to, and adds momentum to, a major manifestation of Gorbachev's policies: The Soviet empire is on the verge of cracking up. Poland has had elections that point toward independence from communism. Other East European satellites likely will follow if not suppressed. And will this spread backwards — to a breakup of the Soviet Union itself, of the Soviet republics whose people feel the stirrings of their old nationalisms?

China in turmoil: Effects of the Beijing massacre

Professor finds solace in poetry

By Micki Delhaute McGowan
Staff Writer

The legacy of the days of emperors, Confucius and capitalism prompted David Christensen to write his first poem about China in April 1987.

Lament for all that has been lost in the recent tragedies in Beijing prompted Christensen to write a second poem.

Christensen, professor emeritus of geography, and his wife Carol, a retired academic advisor in business, lived in China in 1987. Even then, they found many people, expressing dissatisfaction with the authoritarian and restrictive Chinese government.

"Many people were distressed about being told where to work and with little choice," Christensen said.

In his first poem, "The Dragon's New Coat," Christensen speaks of a "striped coat of red and green," which he said suggested reform in a mixed economy for China.

However, Christensen said he hopes that the Chinese had for the future "have been dashed to the ground" and moved him to write his second poem, "Cry For The Ancient Dragon."

With the second poem, Christensen said he has been able to release some of his intense feelings concerning the tragedy in Beijing.

These feelings come from a time when Christensen taught at a graduate university in China called "Huanghe," which means "yellow river." Christensen taught geography and urban planning.

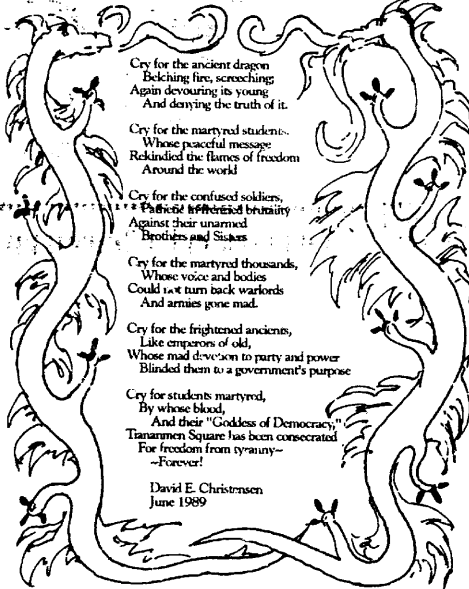

"When students finish their master's degree, almost all would like to go to Beijing," Christensen said, "but very few get to go where they want."

Students are told where they will work and do not have much choice, he said.

Christensen also said, "The best students go on to college. The best of the best go to graduate school."

Deciding who goes to a university is a "highly selective" process, he added.

CRY FOR THE ANCIENT DRAGON

Cry for the ancient dragon
Belching fire, scorching
Again devouring its young
And dawning the truth of it.

Cry for the martyred students—
Whose peaceful message
Rekindled the flames of freedom
Around the world

Cry for the confused soldiers,
Faced indifferent brutality
Against their unarmed
Brothers and Sisters

Cry for the martyred thousands,
Whose voice and bodies
Could not turn back warlords
And armies gone mad.

Cry for the frightened ancients,
Like emperors of old,
Whose mad devotion to party and power
Blinded them to a government's purpose

Cry for students martyred,
By whose blood,
And their "Goddess of Democracy," Tiananmen Square has been consecrated
For freedom from tyranny—
Forever!

David E. Christensen
June 1989

Despite obvious discontent among the Chinese, Christensen said he "saw nothing like the present situation coming." There were no organizations fighting for more rights or freedom back then, he said.

Although the government is communist, the market system was profit-oriented in some ways, he said. The farmers had even given a lease on the land, and were allowed to keep a portion of the profits.

Christensen said he and his wife have corresponded with some of their Chinese students. They last wrote to some of them in May, but have received no replies since then.

Premier defends army suppression

BEIJING (UPI) — Premier Li Peng defended the army's bloody suppression of the pro-democracy movement Tuesday, saying Chinese leaders believed the student-led protest threatened to spread out of control.

A senior Japanese official quoted a Chinese Red Cross source as saying 2,600 people died in the June 3-5 army blitz against tens of thousands of citizens who resisted the assault on protesters occupying Beijing's Tiananmen Square.

The figure was more than eight times the Chinese government's estimate.

Officials announced nearly 100 new arrests in a nationwide sweep against democracy movement activists, raising the confirmed number of detentions to at least 820, although unofficial sources placed the figure much higher.

State television, in a campaign to discredit the democracy movement and consolidate support for the crackdown, issued a most-wanted arrest list of 21 student leaders despite an earlier government pledge of no reprisals.

The government also pressed its propaganda blitz against Fang Lizhi, China's leading dissident, who took refuge with his wife in the American Embassy June 5, fueling a diplomatic dispute between Beijing and Washington.

The government ordered the nation's borders sealed to prevent the Fangs — wanted on charges of masterminding weeks of anti-government protests in a conspiracy to overthrow the government — from fleeing the country.

Beijing has demanded the dissidents be handed over. But a State Department spokeswoman in Washington said the United States had no plans to agree to the demand.

The army's tank-led attack on demonstrators at Tiananmen Square ended a 22-day student occupation of the traditional center of the nation's political life and effectively brought to

U.S. weighing further actions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States is weighing a series of further economic measures against the Chinese government, congressional and administration sources said Tuesday.

The consultations with members of Congress included Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs, who came to the State Department Tuesday morning for discussions about the next steps.

A spokesman for Solarz said, "It is still in the discussion stage, but the focus is on economic measures, such as withdrawing China's most favored nation tariff treatment."

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said that Secretary of State James Baker received a list of options Tuesday morning. She emphasized that the options were not recommendations for action now, but were merely contingencies.

Officials said that the list includes further economic sanctions and diplomatic measures, such as recalling U.S. Ambassador James Lilley from Beijing.

One official said, "Whatever is to be done will be done in concert with our allies and trading partners. It has not yet been decided whether new legislation would be required

Turmoil expected to hurt China tourist trade

BEIJING (UPI) — China's political turmoil is expected to have a severe impact on tourist trade through 1990 but foreign firms in other sectors will resume business as usual while keeping a wary eye on the future, foreign executives say.

The government Tuesday presented a gloomy preview of the trouble facing the tourist trade, revealing in the state-run China Daily newspaper that about 360 groups totaling more than 11,530 visitors canceled trips last month during the height of the peaceful pro-democracy protests that swept the country.

Quoting a Beijing Tourist Bureau spokesman, the newspaper said the organization lost more than $3 million, or 10 percent of its projected earnings for May, usually one of the busiest months for tourism.

The bureau's foreign exchange income fell to only 18 percent of its monthly target, the report said.

"I think tourism will be hurt for some time. It will probably take 18 to 24 months for a recovery," said an official of a major joint-venture hotel.

Beijing opens palace doors

BEIJING (UPI) — Parts of the fabled Forbidden City were reopened to the public Tuesday for the first time since martial law was declared May 20 but a wall of tanks and armored cars still guarded the front of the ancient abode of China's imperial rulers.

The move, intended to help restore an atmosphere of normality in the Chinese capital, was offset by an unusual lack of visitors to the sprawling 250-acre Imperial Palace complex, one of the nation's premier tourist attractions.

The few tourists who entered were Chinese.

The compound, known as the Forbidden City and brought to the world in the film "The Last Emperor," bore signs of neglect and evidence lending credence to reports that it was used to billet troops involved in the June 3 military assault on student protesters in adjacent Tiananmen Square.

Weeds poked through the normally well-kept stone courtyards and paint peeled from the stately palace columns.

Most of the usually manicured circular lawns of the former imperial gardens were brown and flattened like well-worn campsites, apparently by tents pitched by soldiers.

an end the strongest challenge to the leadership of Communist China.

Life for most of Beijing's 10 million residents appeared on the surface to have returned to normal, although Tiananmen Square was guarded by 45 tanks and armored vehicles and hundreds of troops, spaced 20 feet apart all around the vast plaza.

Li, in an address to a joint session of the Standing Committee of the Central Committee of the Communist Party and the State Council, or Cabinet, said firm action was necessary to prevent the spread of lawlessness before it got completely out of control.

"The crackdown on the rebellion is related to the national security," Li said in the speech shown on China's national evening television news. "Since April 15, in almost two months, it escalated from a student movement to a counter-revolutionary rebellion."

He defended his controversial May 20 declaration of martial law for areas of the capital and praised the army's offensive against the demonstrators.

"Beijing was in the midst of a chaotic situation that could have spread to some other areas of China if we had not enforced the martial law and introduced the troops into Beijing," he told the government and party officials.

"There was a possibility the rebellion would have spread nationwide and it would have been impossible to crack down by that time," he said.

Li's remarks apparently were aimed at members of the bureaucracy and party who openly expressed their support for the student-led movement by joining the numerous demonstrations held to press demands for greater democracy, press freedom and an end to nepotism and official corruption.

China claimed only 300 people died in the brutal military assault, but Kazutoshi Hasegawa, director general of the Japanese Foreign Ministry's Asian Affairs Bureau, quoted a Chinese Red Cross source as saying that 2,600 people had been killed.

National television said public security officials issued a wanted circular for the arrest of 21 student leaders, which was distributed around the nation.

Showing photographs and giving biographical details for each of the students, the broadcast said the dissidents should be hunted down and arrested by law enforcement organizations before they could flee the country.

The People's Daily carried another in a string of attacks against Fang, his wife, Li Shuxian, a professor at Beijing University, and their American protectors.

In a front-page article, the official organ of the Communist Party said Fang "would like to be a foreign yellow-skinned person."

or whether the executive branch will act on the basis of existing legislation."

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said economic sanctions may be pointless because, "as a practical matter, business in China is pretty much dead. American businesses aren't putting any new money in China. Those who are already there don't even know if they want to return to their offices."

At a breakfast meeting with a group of reporters, Lugar said "hopes are diminishing for salvaging U.S.-China relations" and said if the current crackdown goes on, "it simply may not be possible to restore good relations with this particular Chinese government."

Bill Taylor of the Washington-based Center for Strategic and International Studies said:

"When we look at our economic options and think about retrenching in our economic relationships with China, we have to look at the competition around. If we try to hurt China with economic sanctions, they have alternatives."

to the consumer and to businesses.

U.S. Rep. Glenn Poshard, D-Cartersville, said because industry can use coal with lower sulfur content, western states, where the coal is produced, would take business from Illinois coal producers.

"I think everyone wants clean air, but this proposal has real potential to harm jobs in Southern Illinois," Poshard said.

Simon said a letter sent to the president asked for certain considerations that did not appear in the proposal.

"We asked for a plan that avoids coal market disruptions. This plan does not," Simon said.

Simon said Bush's proposal also neglected to include a provision that would minimize rate impacts on the consumer and businesses, while at the same time, he said, it doesn't assure regional equity by using clean coal technology.

"I hope and expect the president to work with Congress on these and other improvements to prevent enactment of any acid rain plan that ends up pitting region against region," Simon said.

Poshard said that Bush's proposal is in the early stages and there will be a great deal of input from several areas before it is enacted.

court. (Bush) has made a reasonable compromise proposal and it is sitting there waiting for Congress to act on it."

The bill called for a top rate of $4.55 an hour and a 60-day training wage period in which employees working in their first job would receive a lower rate.

The vetoed measure would have raised the current hourly wage of $3.35 to $4.55 over three years, rising to $3.85 Oct. 1, $4.25 Oct. 1, 1990, and to $4.55 Oct. 1, 1991.

Bush wanted a minimum wage no greater than $4.25 an hour and a six-month training wage, which could be paid to all new employees, even if they previously held other jobs.

The minimum wage was instituted in 1938, and the first standard was 25 cents an hour. The rate was last raised in 1981 from $3.10.

Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell of Maine termed the veto "particularly offensive to millions of Americans" in view of Bush's proposal to cut taxes on capital gains — an item that mostly favors the wealthy.

"I deeply regret that the president has chosen to veto this bill," added House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash.

Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., who was traveling with the president, said, "He doesn't see this as a win or a loss or something nasty. He told (Democrats) what he would do. Today he did it."

Simpson said Bush believed the minimum wage plan he backed "was fair," but the one Democrats passed would do more harm than good.

The building must be designed stable enough to hold two additional levels if need arises in the future.

In addition to the Outpatient facilities, the first floor of the north wing in the School of Medicine's Medical Instructional Facility will be remodeled.

The Facilities Planning Office for the school is currently putting together specifications for the $250,000 project, Richard King, director of facilities and services, said.

Contracts have yet to be given, King said, but it should be a four-month project.

Changes made will include the elimination of water pipes and steam overhead, an office for radiation control, built-in equipment for the anatomy teaching laboratory and a climate control system for computer rooms.

No sign of survivors in Hawaiian plane accident

WAIMEA, Hawaii (UPI) — The wreckage of a tour plane carrying a pilot and 10 tourists was found Tuesday in a foggy valley on the eastern tip of Hawaii island. Authorities said there was no sign of survivors. The Scenic Air Tours twinning Beechcraft C-18 was piloted by a Hawaii county fire department helicopter near an 800-foot-high waterfall in Waipio, picturesque Waipio valley shortly before 6 a.m., Hilo Fire Department said. Marine Corps spokesman Jerry Gershaneck, in communication with a ground search team above the crash site, said debris from the shattered, orange plane was spread over 200 to 300 yards. "There are no pieces large enough to identify as an aircraft," Gershaneck said. There was no sign of survivors, he said. The military team was on a plateau about 2,000 feet above sea level, and was preparing to rappel down a sheer cliff to the crash site 700 feet below. "The area was fogged in, cold, and covered by about 3 feet of nud, Gershaneck said. The 18-member Marine and Navy team that was flown to Hawaii island from Oahu island before dawn included a surgeon, two corpsmen, a communications team and reconnaissance personnel. After members reached the crash site, they were to decide either to try to lift remains and any possible survivors back up to the plateau, or to carry them down the valley to the coast. The island-hopping tour plane disappeared Sunday on a flight from Hawaii to Maui.

Aboard were the pilot and 10 tourists — eight from the Mainland and a couple from Australia. The tour company has not released the names of the passengers pending notification of their relatives. The craft went down about eight miles from the town of Waimaea in an area frequently overflown by sightseeing planes and helicopters. "It's in a very beautiful area but inaccessible with a lot of trees and vegetation surrounded by an 800-foot cliff and an 1,800-foot waterfall."

Hilo Fire Department Battalion Chief James Higashita said. "It's in a valley that narrows where the wind shoots over the waterfall. It's always very windy and foggy there. The tour plane somehow popped down or went below and crashed trying to go up," he commented. The plane took off from Hilo airport on Hawaii island at 1 p.m. Sunday. It failed to arrive at Kahului on Maui as scheduled at 2:15 p.m.

Federal court order ignored; workers join in wildcat strike

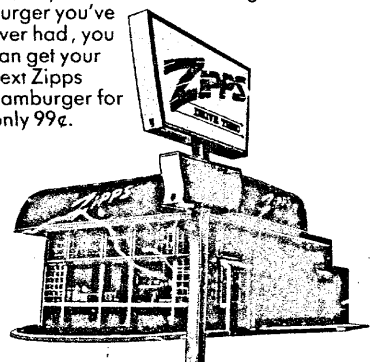

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — About 250 striking Consolidation Coal workers ignored a federal court order to return to work Tuesday, joining at least 3,000 coal miners staging the largest wildcat strike in West Virginia since the early 1970s. U.S. District Judge Dennis Sapp in Charleston granted a strike injunction to Consolidation Coal late Monday, saying that the walkout was illegal. The 250 miners at Consolidation's Rowland operations in Raleigh County defied to show for work Tuesday morning, but none of the company's other operations in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Virginia or Tennessee were affected, said company spokesman. United Mine Workers officials in Logan County, the site at which strike activity was first reported, said the miners are protesting what they call shabby treatment in Virginia. Tom Clark, a spokesman for Seaboard Coal — which has mines in Logan, Raleigh, Boone and Wyoming counties — said more than 2,360 miners failed to report for work Monday. Clark said the company's policy is to avoid going through the courts in dealings with the union, but said no options have been ruled out. The wildcat strikes were confined to UMW District 17 in West Virginia, which lists 8,000 active miners and about 20,000 total members. The strike also affected a Pittston Coal Group operation in Fayette County on Tuesday as more than 75 miners failed to report to work at Meadow River Coal Co. near Lookout. Coal operators feared the wildcat strikes could destroy West Virginia's reputation as a stable supplier of coal, said Gary White, president of the West Virginia Coal Association. "The most significant impact is a return to the 1970s in terms of the way the purchasers of our coal, the consumers of our coal, look at our state," he said. Wildcat strikes during the 1970s gave West Virginia an image as an unreliable source of coal, but that impression waned as peace prevailed in the coalfields during most of the 1980s, White said. "Now this action starts to bring serious questions questions about our ability to maintain a stable supply of coal for our customers," he said. Wildcat strikes flared Monday on the heels of a massive rally by the United Mine Workers union at the West Virginia Capitol. The rally culminated in a week-long "March for Justice," inspired by a two-month strike against Pittston. Speaking Sunday to 5,000 union miners, UMW President Richard Trumka vowed the union would "never surrender," but did not elaborate on how the protest would be broadened against Pittston. Other West Virginia operations said to be closed by the wildcat strike were Hobet Mining Inc., a subsidiary of Ashland Coal; Laurel Creek Corp. near Madison; Kess Coals Inc. at Whitesville; Rock Run Mining Co., an A.T. Massey operation near Pittston's Elkay operations in Logan County, and Island Creek Corp.'s Kohisaat mine. Perry Harvey, a UMW District 17 field representative, said miners walked out to protest huge fines imposed on the union by a judge in Russell County, Virginia, and the imprisonment of three Virginia union officials on contempt of court charges. The three are C.A. Phillips, an international representative; Jackie Stump, District 28 president; and Marty Hudson, a top picket line captain who commanded the miners through a bullhorn.

Makanda event to promote local, national arts and crafts

By Theresa Livingston
Entertainment Editor

Makandaaffair, an Evening on the Boardwalk, will be held June 17 and 18 to promote arts and crafts in the Southern Illinois Area.

Sponsored by the Makanda Boardwalk Association, the invitational art and crafts show will be a free, all-day event, opening at 10 a.m. and closing at 5 p.m. both days.

The show will feature several local and national craftspeople and "is definitely a family event," Mike Meyer, a member of the association, said.

There will be demonstrations of willow furniture building, rug weaving, woodcarving and airbrush art and 10 pieces of artwork will be raffled off to individual winners.

Live acoustic entertainment and refreshments will be provided throughout the day and the Boskydell Hustlers 4-H Club will host a bake sale.

Meyer said that although an art and crafts festival was held last year, this is the first concerted effort to promote the artwork.

"We want to give them (the spectators) a chance to actually see the artists and their work," Meyer said.

The association also will host a three-hour reception Saturday evening. For a $5 cover charge at the door, interested individuals will be provided with refreshments, entertainment and a chance to meet and talk with the craftspeople.

Makanda is south of Carbondale, on the edge of Giant City State Park.

"We have four stores and quite a few craftspeople represented out here. We want to make people aware of us," Meyer said.

Kraft contest error brings lawsuits; local officials begin investigations

GLENVIEW, Ill. (UPI) — Kraft Inc. canceled its "Ready to Roll" promotional game because a printing error made nearly all contest pieces apparent winners but at least three "winners" filed class action lawsuits Tuesday to press their claims.

To compound the legal wrangle, the attorneys general of Illinois and Indiana said they will investigate.

The grand prize in the contest was supposed to have been a single 1990 Dodge Caravan worth more than $17,000. Odds of winning were supposed to be 1 in 15,160,000, Kraft spokeswoman Kathy Knuth said.

THE PROMOTION was for Kraft Singles cheese and was run as a flyer inserted in Sunday's Chicago Tribune, Chicago Sun-Times and Houston Post.

"We certainly regret any confusion and inconvenience this has caused," Knuth said. "We have asked consumers to follow the instructions and mail in their entries. Kraft will be contacting those consumers."

"Essentially all of the pieces turned out to be winning pieces because of the printing error."

Knuth said Kraft had neither decided how it will handle the "winners" nor determined where the mistake was made.

She said she did not know how many flyers had been printed or how many winning entries had been reported.

ONE ATTORNEY estimated the number of contest winners could be in the thousands, but said he did not have specific numbers.

Two suits were filed Tuesday afternoon within one hour of each other in Cook County Chancery Court to force Kraft to award the specified prizes — including bicycles, skateboards and packages of Kraft Singles — to all winners.

One suit was filed by Rochelle Fagel of Glenview, who had a winning game piece for the van.

The second suit was filed by Michael Moore and Paul Kaszynski.

"SHE THOUGHT she was a winner. She knows she's a winner," Fagel attorney Burton Weinstein said. "We believe she and all the other people are entitled to their prizes."

"She relied on the excellent reputation of Kraft and on their word. But when she called, she was told the contest was null and void. She was very upset."

Weinstein said the suit seeks only to have the prizes awarded, no damages.

"If they made a mistake, they will have to pay for their mistake," Weinstein said, adding that Kraft officials should "live up to their own rules."

KRAFT SPOKESMAN Michael Caruso, manager of editorial services, said the company has received calls from people who threatened to file suit.

"But we believe we have no legal liability because the game was defective," Caruso said.

Caruso said the company was attempting to remove all specially marked packages of Kraft Singles from store shelves in the Chicago and Houston areas.

A spokesman for Attorney General Neil Hartigan said Hartigan's office has been swamped by calls from angry winners.

"We're looking into it," the spokesman said. "It's a very complicated thing."

SINCE THE contest ads also circulated in northwest Indiana, Indiana Attorney General Linley Pearson said he was trying to determine when Kraft learned of the printing error.

"Kraft's sweepstakes raises a number of questions if Kraft refuses to award prizes," Pearson said.

Students march in support of Iran's new spiritual leader

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Thousands of students marched through the streets Tuesday to show their support for President Ali Khamenei as the successor of the late spiritual leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

The students marched from Tehran University and assembled in front of the presidential palace in the center of the capital. The marchers, estimated in the thousands, pledged their allegiance to Khamenei as the new leader of the Islamic Republic.

Khamenei was elected spiritual leader of the republic June 4, less than 24 hours after Khomeini died of a heart attack in the wake of surgery to stop internal bleeding.

Tehran radio said students in other cities held similar marches to pledge allegiance to him. The marches were organized as a pragmatist group of clerics led by Khamenei and Parliament Speaker Akbar Hashemi-Rafsanjani consolidated their positions.

Monday, Rafsanjani, whom diplomats said has emerged as the most powerful cleric in Iran after Khomeini's death, was overwhelmingly re-elected speaker of the Majlis, or parliament, indicating he had the support of both the moderate and hard-line groups.

Monday, the official Islamic Republic News Agency also said Khamenei had re-confirmed Rafsanjani in the post of deputy commander-in-chief of the armed forces. Khomeini, who was commander in chief since 1981, appointed Rafsanjani deputy commander a year before his death.

A Western diplomat in Tehran said Rafsanjani's reelection as parliament speaker was "a personal victory for Rafsanjani, because it reinforces his position as Iran's most powerful politician."

He was referring to Rafsanjani's candidacy in the presidential election Aug. 18, the same day as a referendum to ratify amendments to the constitution.

Reforms predicted by USSR

COLOGNE, West Germany (UPI) — Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev said Tuesday his government planned to return its foreign trade system to compensate for "discriminatory" trade practices against Moscow as well as "a lack of clarity" in Soviet business rules.

Earlier, Gorbachev and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl met in Bonn to sign a major statement calling for observance of human rights and the rights of cultural minorities, as well as for continuation of the disarmament process.

Gorbachev, the first Soviet leader to visit Bonn since Leonid Brezhnev made a trip in November 1981, was greeted by thousands chanting "Gorby, Gorby" outside the mayor's office.

In Cologne, 25 miles north of Bonn, Gorbachev criticized the Coordinating Committee for Multilateral Export Controls, through which the West bans export of sensitive technology to East Bloc countries.

Addressing leading West German industrialists and financiers, Gorbachev said "all manner of discriminatory practices and constraints" had prevented the Soviet Union from earning "foreign currency in fair competition with others."

But Gorbachev, who began a four-day visit to West Germany Monday, admitted the Soviet Union carried some blame because of a "lack of clarity in Soviet legislation covering business activities in the Soviet Union."

Russian missile launch site visited by U.S. military chief

BALABANOVO, U.S.S.R. (UPI) — Adm. William Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, got a closeup view of the Kremlin's latest aviation hardware Tuesday and became the first U.S. military official to visit a Soviet long-range strategic missile launch site.

Later, in a speech before the Military Academy of the Soviet General Staff in the Moscow suburbs, Crowe challenged Moscow to make deep, meaningful cuts in its armed forces to prove it is serious about easing East-West tensions.

Crowe accused Congress of being "too intrusive" in U.S. military affairs but warned Moscow the traditional Soviet system of military secrecy "breeds suspicion" and fuels the arms race.

"In the American system, civilian control means democratic control of the military," said Crowe, 64, the highest-ranking U.S. military representative to officially visit the Soviet Union.

In the farming village of Balabanovo, Crowe, peered down a full-scale model of the 86-foot launch silo of the Soviet SS-19 Intercontinental Ballistic Missile, becoming the first U.S. military man to inspect a Soviet ICBM launch and launch training site.

Birds chirped in the thick rain-soaked pine forest about 60 miles southwest of Moscow as Crowe watched a launch alert exercise that U.S. officials said later bore a startling resemblance to U.S. methods and practice.

"I find it all very impressive," said Crowe. The SS-19 is a mainstay of the Soviet long-range nuclear forces with a range of 6,200 miles and can be armed with six warheads.

After the stop at Balabanovo, Crowe was driven to the once-top-secret Kubinka air base 40 miles southwest of Moscow where he sat at the controls of the newest Soviet long-range bomber, a white needle-nosed aircraft that NATO has codenamed Blackjack.

Crowe, who pronounced the Blackjack similar to America's new B-1 bomber, also had a close look at the latest in Soviet fighters, including the MIG-29.

"They are very modern, very sophisticated. We are talking about world class aviation here," the hawk-clad admiral said.

Crowe and his official host, Gen. Mikhail Moiseyev, chief of general staff of the Soviet armed forces, exchanged banter and comments through an interpreter as they strolled in a heavy drizzle from aircraft to aircraft.

Crowe, who has privately referred to his visit as a crowning achievement in a 4-decade-old military career, said the Soviet Union could be "justly proud" of its strategic rocket forces, which would be responsible for attacking the continental United States in a war.

At the military academy, he said Americans had trouble believing Kremlin claims of a purely defensive posture because the Soviet army is by far the largest in the world.

5 SIUC students inducted into honor society

By Micki Delfaute McGowan
Staff Writer

Five University students have been inducted into SIUC's chapter of Tau Alpha Pi, a national honor society for engineering technology students.

To join, students must rank in the upper four percent of the engineering technology class or have a grade point average above 3.5. They must also complete the 15 hours in the engineering technology department.

Recently inducted members are: John S. Simpkins, a senior in electrical engineering technology; Angela Nicholson, a senior in civil engineering technology; Patrick W. Stanley Jr., a senior in civil engineering technology; Mark R. Boley, a senior in civil engineering technology; and Paul K. Nelson, a senior in mechanical engineering technology.

Correction

Virgil Marks, 66 of Murphysboro, is the oldest living Jackson County veteran from World War I. The information in a photo caption in Tuesday's Daily Egyptian Perspective Page was incorrect.

Clarification

The College of Communications and Fine Arts Dean Search Committee did select a candidate, but the candidate did not have the support of the CFA school and department chairpersons. This information was unclear in an article in Tuesday's Daily Egyptian.

Accuracy Desk

The Daily Egyptian has established an accuracy desk. If readers spot an error, they can call 536-3311, extension 233 or 234.

freshmen. A partial qualifier can substitute an overall 2.0 GPA in high school for any deficiencies in the other three requirements. Athletes recruited in 1989-90 adhere to these guidelines.

Proposition 42 eliminates all partial qualifiers from receiving aid and is scheduled to go into effect next spring. However, the NCAA Council has appointed a special sub-committee to study Proposition 42 and its effects. An NCAA spokesman said Tuesday that the committee is expected to introduce a modified version of Proposition 42 at the NCAA Convention next January.

Chaney cited several letters written to NCAA director Dick Schultz and former director Walter Byers in the past six year by officials at various testing institutes citing the cultural bias of the SAT and ACT tests.

"These letters said not to use these tests as a judging basis," Chaney said. "And the NCAA never responded to any of them. They just conducted the vote on Proposition 42 without any representative from a predominantly black school. This is where I view the discrimination."

"The poor are being denied an opportunity. That is the problem. We should be educating our youngsters, not merely teaching them how to pass a test. Passing the test is not the problem. Poverty and not caring about real education is the problem."

Dr. Richard Lapchick, executive director of the Center for Study of Sport in Society, agrees with Chaney.

"Proposition 42 is punitive against black athletes," Lapchick said. "Clearly, it is racism. Freshmen ineligibility across the board is a much better solution than either Proposition 48 or 42."

"This proposal is unbelievably stupid. This is clearly discrimination to many minority students."

—Coach John Chaney

Chaney also believes racism is at the core of the rule.

"Racism is our country's holocaust and it will always be with us," said Chaney, a graduate of Bethune-Cookman in Florida. "Black schools gave me the opportunity to better myself. I wouldn't have been able to pass these tests."

Wanda Yates, boys' basketball coach at Ballou High School in Washington, expressed similar concerns over tests scores.

"Testing is supposed to be measuring something," Yates said. "If Howard University had gotten my high school transcript before my board scores, they never would have offered me a scholarship and I never would have had an opportunity for college. Those board scores were much higher than my 1.98 GPA, but weren't indicative of my ability."

"What is it the SAT or ACT are supposed to be measuring? Studies show 70 percent of all black college students are failing to graduate. And those students all have scored higher than 700 on the SAT. What are we expecting of athletes. These questions must be answered."

Chaney, who along with Georgetown coach John Thompson, protested Proposition 42 by walking off the court just before the start of a game last season. He believes the NCAA must use caution on what action to take on this issue.

"We must be careful not to characterize all the schools on this issue," said Chaney, who plans to contact Thompson on what to do next in his battle against Proposition 42.

"Only a few of the top high-profile schools are making money in intercollegiate athletics. Most schools are just hanging on financially."

because USC was dissatisfied with arrangements. On June 9, a St. Louis radio station said the cancellation was because of "TV contractual difficulties."

Haines said. "There were reports Illinois didn't want to play. There were reports ABC didn't want to televise the game. There were reports the facilities over there were so bad both schools threw up their hands and refused to have anything to do with it. None of this is true."

"The honest-to-God truth is we were getting skeptical the Soviets were going to be able to pull it off. That's the bottom line. Everybody else — the schools and ABC — wanted to play, this game in Moscow."

What Raycom encountered in months of face-to-face dealings with Sovintersport officials is what many others have dealt with in international sports when the Soviets are involved. It's called the "Russianness" of the Soviets, who can be as far removed from the normal patterns of procedure or behavior in the world of sports as in the world at large.

Raycom found the Soviet silence to be deafening. As an example, a contract signed April 27 stipulated that Raycom was to be told no later than May 15 what hotels would be penciled in for Americans traveling to Moscow as part of a Raycom tour package for the game.

"Nothing," Haines said. "We heard nothing. We telexed over there. Nothing. Another telex. They responded, saying, 'Give us more time.'"

A Soviet attorney hired by Raycom was, at first, optimistic. But recently he began feeding Raycom reports that said, "These people are really having trouble putting this together."

In retrospect, Haines said the mission was "a yoyo."

"We'd go over there full of enthusiasm and there would be these little signs, this handwriting on the wall," he said. "They didn't have this. They didn't have that. Nothing ever seemed to be happening. We'd all look at each other and say, 'Wait a minute. Is our enthusiasm getting in the way of common sense?'"

Haines phoned Illinois athletic director-coach John Mackovic, USC AD Mike McGee and ABC-TV officials to tell them the game was off in Moscow.

His reaction? "Emphatic but disappointed," Haines said. "They understood. They'd made a trip over there, and they knew it would be difficult. But everyone kept hoping. We couldn't have asked for two better schools or TV network to be involved. They were all supportive."

How will Haines remember the abortive Glasnost Bowl? Interminable red tape that, in the Soviet Union, is really red. And a busy signal. This wasn't what Haines had in mind at the beginning. Bringing East and West together in a historic venture carried the trappings of more than just a football game. Far-reaching political implications were involved.

"My heart was into it," said Haines, influenced no doubt by his father's career as an employee of the U.S. State Department. "It was something people could have done that governments have had trouble doing. I don't know, what they're going through with perestroika (economic restructuring) may have done us in. There's confusion over there."

"This idea — this game — might have been two years ahead of its time."

even tell his lawyer that he had taken banned drugs, said he and his family are trying to answer the several boxes of letters of support from 40 countries.

Two or three youngsters have even sent Johnson their own gold medals, Futerman said.

Johnson also said he doesn't blame anyone but himself for his drug use. He said he last received steroid shots from his coach, Charlie Francis, last Aug. 25 and 28.

The inquiry earlier heard that chemical analysis of the team's remaining supply of the substance injected into Johnson showed it to contain stanazolol, the drug later detected in Johnson's urine sample.

Following the shots, Francis and a doctor insisted he undergo a new treatment with a diapulse machine before leaving Toronto for Seoul. Diapulse treatment increases blood flow and is said to help the body clear drugs more quickly when applied to the liver. Johnson said he was not told why he was getting the treatment.

Johnson was banned from international sports for two years following his Seoul drug test. Government officials imposed a lifetime ban on Johnson competing for Canada, but Sports Minister Jean Charest said Tuesday he would consider an appeal.

International track authorities, including International Olympic Committee chief Juan Antonio Samaranch, have said Johnson is welcome to compete after his suspension.

"It took some courage on his part to be frank and blunt and that will impress Canadians," Charest said. "The truth was what we wanted to obtain and we are meeting that objective."

Charest said after two years Johnson could appeal the lifetime suspension to the federal government, adding the government would maintain an open mind about the issue.

CAMP, from Page 20

Hollister noticed some extra enthusiasm in some campers who returned after attending last year.

"During the opening ceremony, I could see some of the kids returning from last summer show enthusiasm after sighting some of the returning staff members," said Hollister. "That is exciting because the camp left a lasting impression."

Hollister said she hopes to maintain and improve on a program that was successful last summer.

"We have a great facility to work with and we have a supportive community," said Hollister. "We have to get their contributions."

The camp is just in its third day, but it has already excited most of the campers.

"It is fun and I really enjoy the swimming," said 9-year-old Shawn Woody of Du Quoin. "I have learned a lot in just three days and have made friends. The teachers are also very nice. I would like to come here every summer."

Woody's opinion was shared by many of his co-campers.

"It is fun, you learn a lot, and there is good food," added 10-year-old Dominick Fogtman of Johnston City who catches the bus in Herrin. "I have made a lot of friends and would like to come every summer."

Ellis Reynolds, a 10-year-old from Carbondale, says: "The camp is pretty good. I like the swimming, base ball, and all the fun of it."

Hollister said there will be incentives to make the camp even more interesting for campers.

"On Friday there will be incentive awards," said Hollister. "There will be a group of the week, awards for sportsmanship, attitude, and enthusiasm. At the end of each week there will be awards and prizes."

About 140 of NYSP camps are held throughout the country and SIU-C was one of seven camps in the state.

Strawberry, Mitchell leading fan voting for All-Star Game

NEW YORK (UPI) — Darryl Strawberry of the Mets and Kevin Mitchell of the Giants lead National League outfielders in fan voting for the 60th All-Star Game in Anaheim, Calif., the commissioner's office announced Tuesday.

Strawberry, attempting to secure his sixth consecutive starting assignment, has 228,834 votes and leads Mitchell by more than 82,500. Vince Coleman of the Cardinals is third among NL outfielders.

Cardinals shortstop Ozzie Smith, the top vote getter each of the last two seasons, leads all NL players with 270,193 votes. Mike Schmidt, who last month announced his retirement, leads St. Louis' Terry Pendleton by more than 21,000 at third base.

If Schmidt holds on to capture his ninth starting selection, he'll be invited to participate in All-Star festivities for the July 11 game, but he will be replaced in the starting lineup.

The remaining leaders by position are San Diego catcher Benito Santiago (181,496), San Francisco first baseman Will Clark (175,414) and Chicago second baseman Ryne Sandberg (129,699).

Final balloting results for both leagues will be announced July 3.

Humans hoof it with horses in growing Ride & Tie event

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A new event called Ride & Tie puts horses and humans on the same team but, unlike horse racing, the sport requires humans to run part of the course on their own.

Conceived in 1970 as a promotional tool by a Levis Strauss & Co. public relations man, Ride & Tie has matured into a sport with 350 races each year throughout the world.

The Ride & Tie Association has 1,006 members, many of them top-flight marathoners and ultramarathoners who are drawn to the sport by the challenging dirt courses and mountain trails.

On July 9, the 19th Annual World Ride & Tie Championship will be held on a 35-mile course in the mountain community of Frazier Park, 65 miles north of Los Angeles.

About 150 teams from 12 states and such countries as Canada, Australia, England, France and Italy will be represented, said Emmett Ross, director of the event for 12 of the 19 years and a former participant.

In Ride & Tie, each team has two people, but only one horse. One partner starts off riding and the other running. After two or three miles, the rider dismounts, ties the horse to a tree and continues on foot.

When the first runner reaches the horse, he unties it and rides on, passing his partner on the trail. They leapfrog along like that for 3 1/2 to 7 hours.

Ross said 40 percent of Ride & Tie participants, who range in age from 18 to 65, are women.

"This is one sport in which men and women are on equal footing," he said. "That's because women are good riders and it's not pure strength, but strategy, riding skills and team concept, that is important."

The competition attracts more white-collar types than cowpokes.

"We've got attorneys, doctors, corporate presidents ... a lot of high-powered people who like the strategy and the challenge," Ross said.

Ross said the sport requires "a high quality of human athlete, but the horse is more important."

A "backyard horse" won't do, he said. Most are Arabians because of their endurance skills. There are some Arabian mixes, Appaloosas, Morgans, and quarterhorses.

A good horse costs up to $10,000 and competitors spend another $4,000 in annual overhead, Ross said. The horses are checked at "pit stops" every 10 to 15 miles by veterinarians, who make sure their pulse rates are OK before they're allowed to continue.

Despite the terrain, the pace is quick.

"We might not be in front at the first mile at the Kentucky Derby, but by the time they'd get to the fifth mile they wouldn't be close to us," Ross said.

More than $20,000 in prizes will be at the stake in the Ride & Tie Championship, which will be held at the Plunderosa Ranch and is open to the public. Prizes will be awarded in three categories: overall winner, man-man team and woman-woman team.

"It's a very strong field," Ross said, noting the competitors include Tom Laris, who made the U.S. Olympic team as 10,000-kilometer runner in 1968, and Jim Howard and Chuck Jones, both former winners of Western States 100-mile run through the Sierra Nevada.

Also in the field are Con Wadsworth, 28, and his brother, Todd, 26, whom Ross described as "tough mountain runners" from Park City, Utah.

Chang's win, Beijing events bound by thread of irony

Scrrips Howard News Service

They were unrelated events that occurred worlds apart, in more ways than one.

Yet through the bulletins crackling across newswires within the last 10 days ran a thread of chilling irony. It was as though these footnotes in history were intended to be bound together into some kind of parable or commentary on human affairs.

In Beijing, China, young people cried out for liberty and justice, but their pleas were lost in the rumble of tanks and silenced by hail of gunfire.

Eight days later, on a tennis court in Paris, a 17-year-old kid from California numbed the glitzy world of bigtime tennis by winning the French Open. His name: Michael Chang, American of Chinese extraction.

CONTRASTS AND comparisons between the two events are inescapable. As young Chinese on the bloody streets of Beijing died reaching for hope and opportunity, a teenaged Chinese-American ascended to glory because he had both.

Michael Chang is an American kid. Born here. His dad came to this country from Taiwan in 1966, six years before Michael was born. After he knocked over the French Open last weekend, Michael confessed that he doesn't even speak Chinese; he's trying to learn it from his mom.

Freedom for Michael Chang came with his birth certificate. He was at liberty to grow up riding surfboards, dying his hair purple, picketing restaurants that sell red meat or whatever else California kids do to amuse themselves. Chang chose to play tennis.

Sports Analysis

WHAT MAKES A news watcher's skin start to crawl is that until Chinese soldiers began mowing down students, Chang really hadn't played tennis well enough to attract much attention.

Just last year, the kid was ranked 488th in the world. He came on fast, but going into the French Open he still was barely visible in the Top 20. He war ranked 19th, and seeded only 15th in Paris.

What makes news watcher's skin crawl is that until Chinese soldiers began mowing down students, Chang really hadn't attracted a lot of attention.

Then something — well, something almost supernatural — happened while the horror stories continued to filter out of Beijing.

Almost paralyzed by cramps, Chang defeated Ivan Lendl, the No. 1 player in the world, in a match that will live forever in textbooks on guttiness. Then in another agonizing, come-from-behind marathon, he outclawed Andrei Chesnokov, the best of a fast-blossoming bunch of Soviet players.

FINALLY CHANG looked across the net in the French Open final and saw reigning Wimbledon champion Stefan Edberg of Sweden standing on the other baseline.

Surely this improbable upstart was about to run out of miracles. This was the French Open, for crying out loud. A grand slam biggie. No American had won it in 34 years. Not John McEnroe, not Jimmy Connors, not anybody from the USA since Tony Trabert brought the French trophy home in 1955.

But fate hadn't stopped writing this saga yet. Down two sets to one, Chang fought off an incredible 10 break points in Set 4. He eventually won that set, 6-4, to tie the match, and then put away the bedazzled Swede, 5-2, in the decisive fifth set.

THREE MONTHS past his 17th birthday, Michael Chang was the youngest player in history to haul the French Open title trophy out of Paris. He took it home to California ... where a kid is free to become the best in the world if he has enough talent, determination and encouragement. And nobody points a gun at his head and tells him he can't do it.

Make no mistake, Michael Chang can play tennis. The pace of his serves won't overmatch any radar guns, but the accuracy of his passing shots is uncanny and there may not be a player alive who returns serves as well as he does. Plus he never, never quits.

Still, given 'he state of the world at the moment, there's something eerie, something haunting...

ONE OF THE first acts Chang performed performed after winning the French Open was to thank his maker.

It was an appropriate gesture, because there is bountiful evidence that somebody up there likes him.

Johnson: 'I lied' about using steroids

TORONTO (UPI) — Sprinter Ben Johnson admitted Tuesday he took anabolic steroids less than four weeks before failing his drug test at the Seoul Olympics.

But Johnson said he now opposes performance-enhancing drugs and believes he can still be the world's fastest man without them.

Johnson testified at a government inquiry into drug use in Canadian sports — called after he was stripped of his 100 meters gold medal in the 1988 Seoul Olympics — that he lied when he denied using banned drugs.

"I lied and I was ashamed for my family, friends, the kids who look up to me, the Canadian athletes who want to be in my position," Johnson said. "I was just in a mess."

The 27-year-old sprinter said he'd like to compete for Canada in the 1992 Olympics.

"Do you believe you can be the fastest man in the world without taking steroids?" commission counsel Robert Armstrong asked.

"I know I can be," a choked-up Johnson replied to a smattering of applause from the hearing-room audience.

Before Johnson had fully composed himself, his lawyer, Ed Futerman, asked what advice he would give Canadian children.

"I want to tell them to be honest, don't take drugs," Johnson said. "It happened to me. I've been there. I know what it's like to cheat."

Johnson, who initially didn't

Area youth learn about having fun

By Greg Scott
Staff Writer

SIUC is hoping to impress upon area youth that they can learn and have fun at the same time.

For the second consecutive year, the University is participating in the National Youth Sports Program, which provides economically disadvantaged youth the opportunity to participate in such sports as softball, basketball, swimming and soccer, as well as discussions on such topics as drugs and alcohol, nutrition, fitness, communicable diseases, sportsmanship and career development.

Kathy Hollister, co-administrator of the activities, said the camp "is nice because the kids get a chance to come into a college setting, work with the other children and learn new skills."

"One of our goals in the camp this year is a drug and alcohol video," said Hollister. "We will start working on that about the third week of camp."

The camp, which is being held at the Recreation Center, began Monday and runs through July 16.

"At our opening ceremony Monday, I noticed that there are a number of kids returning from last year," Hollister said. "That makes it a lot easier to have more and more kids coming each year."

Hollister said the projected goal is to have about 300 children participate in the camp. She said there is still an opportunity to participate in the camp, however, enrollment is limited.

Participants for the camp must be between the ages of 10 and 16, and must reside within a 30 mile radius of Carbondale. Bus service is provided within the 30 mile radius for the participants. Applicants can contact their local community action agency or school for details.

James Person, an 11 year old from Carbondale, practices pitching a softball Tuesday afternoon at the Grand Avenue Playing Field. He is a participant in the National Youth Sports Program camp that is being held at the University.

"One of our requirements is to maintain a daily percentage," said Hollister. "We want kids who are still interested to join."

One of the features of the camp is a swimming test which is to see where the children fit for further instruction during the camp. In addition, free medical examinations are offered to accepted applicants. A physical examination is required to attend. A meal each day also is provided for the campers.

Hollister, who has worked with youth programs previously but not with this program, stated that the camp is very gratifying for her.

"This is my first year in this position and it has been quite interesting for me," said Hollister. "The rules and getting the kids going in smooth fashion along with the fact that everyone's learning. Things should be going smoother in the camp next week and the kids are having a good time."

Intramurals geared for active summer

Team, individual sports offered by Rec

By Curtis Winston
Staff Writer

Amateur athletes can keep their balls bouncing this summer with organized team and individual sports offered by the University's office of Intramural-Recreational Sports.

Sarah Hardi-Simonson, assistant director of Intramural-Recreational Sports, said she can help people interested in participating in intramurals by finding them a team to play on.

"We offer an opportunity for people to play in an organized league and have fun but be competitive at the same time," Simonson said.

Team sports offered are softball, volleyball, basketball, soccer and tennis.

Such individual and doubles sports as racquetball, badminton, golf, pingpong (table tennis) and canoeing are offered as well.

Friends usually get together and form teams, picking a captain to represent the team at a mandatory captain's meeting in which rules and playing schedules are explained, Simonson said.

Simonson said captains should pick up a team roster form at the Recreation Center Information Desk. For details, call 536-5531.

If a person wants to be on a team, but doesn't belong to one Simonson said he or she could come to the captain's meetings where captains are usually looking for extra players.

Another way to be picked for a team is to just show up at a game, Simonson said. "Captains are always needing extra players."

The sporting begins with organization of teams for men's, women's and CoRec 12-inch and 16-inch softball. A mandatory captains' meeting for these sports will be held at

Temple coach voices concern over Prop 42

WASHINGTON (SHNS) — With the mere mention of the NCAA's controversial Proposition 42, Temple basketball coach John Chaney starts firing verbal bombshells.

Chaney let sparks fly Tuesday at a Capitol Hill forum hosted by Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., on Proposition 42's effects on Afro-Americans.

"When you legislate opportunity for some then you are guaranteeing failure for many," Chaney said. "This proposal is unbelievably stupid. It is totally unfair and reeks with arrogance. This is clearly discrimination to many minority students."

Proposition 42, introduced by the University of Georgia at the NCAA convention last January, disallows NCAA schools from giving any financial aid to an athlete during the recruit's freshman year if the athlete does not qualify under current academic guidelines. The athlete, labeled as a non-qualifier under NCAA rules, would also lose a year of eligibility.

The academic standards, as outlined in NCAA's by-law 14.3 enacted in 1986, include a high school diploma with a 2.0 grade-point average in 11 core courses as well as a 700 score on the SAT or a 15 score on the ACT standardized tests.

But current rules allow for partial qualifiers to receive financial aid while not retaining eligibility as

Glasnost Bowl was an idea ahead of its time

By Dave Dorr
St. Louis Post Dispatch

Last week, Ken Haines, executive vice president of Raycom Sports and Entertainment, attempted to place a call to the Soviet Union from his office in Charlotte, N.C.

He finally got through on a line connecting him with a Moscow operator and heard a "beep, beep, beep." A busy signal.

"How fitting, Haines said to himself. How exasperating. How absolutely, completely, utterly exasperating. The final glitch in a grand idea that got swallowed up in Soviet bureaucratic entanglement.

Raycom officials decided in turn that they had reached a point of no return in a joint project with the Soviets called the Glasnost Bowl — an introduction of American college football to the Soviet Union.

Soviet delays finally forced Raycom to pull the plug on the Sept. 2 game between Illinois and Southern Cal in Moscow.

By telex, Raycom informed Sovintersport of its action. As of this past Sunday, Haines hadn't heard a word from Moscow. What went wrong? Who is minding the store in Moscow, Yakov Smirnot?

"It was becoming increasingly apparent the Soviets were having trouble delivering what they promised to deliver," Haines said. "We raced a very tough decision. Could we string this out to the last minute and hope when everybody got to Moscow everything would be OK?"

"We decided it would be too much of a gamble. So we went to the backup plan of playing the game in Los Angeles."

Haines said if Raycom had waited any longer, preparations for a September game in LA "would have been chaos."

Tickets have to be printed. Illinois has to go to work on travel plans. ABC wants to televise the game, and the details for this cannot be tied together in a week's time.

Raycom made its decision public June 8. An item published in USA Today said the game was canceled
