Budget plans call for layoffs

By Bill Kugelberg
General Assignment Writer

A request by SIUC's Long-Range Planning Committee for a 10-percent budget reallocation could translate into the loss of 25 staff positions and 68 student work positions, an SIUC official said.

The changes would be within non-academic areas in the next three years, while the job losses could come in fiscal years '95 and '96.

James A. Tweedy, vice president for administration, outlined his concerns about the budget reallocations to SIUC President John C. Guyon in a letter last December.

"The continued neglect of an already deteriorating infrastructure cannot be tolerated," Tweedy wrote. "The erosion of resources, when statutory mandates increase and buildings age, places the University in a tremendously vulnerable position with outside regulatory agencies."

The reallocation of funds comes when the University has a $60 million deferred maintenance need. Also, roofs on six major buildings need to be replaced at an estimated cost of $575,000.

Staff reductions are nothing new to Tweedy. Since January 1, 1991, a hiring freeze has been in effect at the SIUC Physical Plant. Between July 1, 1991 and June 30, 1993, 46 civil service positions and more than 100 student work positions will have been lost.

Despite cutting back since 1991, Tweedy said he does not see room for many more changes.

SIUC officials request dismissal of lawsuit

By Bill Kugelberg
General Assignment Writer

SIUC officials have motioned for dismissal of a lawsuit brought by a local landlord requesting access to lists of prospective SIUC freshmen.

Stan Lieber, owner of Stevenson Arms dormitory, 600 West Mill St., filed a complaint in late May in circuit court in Jackson County.

Lieber said he filed a lawsuit because his Freedom of Information Act requests for lists of thousands of incoming freshmen were denied.

Stevenson Arms is one of only three dormitories off campus that are University-approved living quarters for freshmen. Freshmen not living on campus must live in dormitories that meet specific SIUC requirements, such as meal plans and living arrangements.

The University filed a motion Monday to dismiss the case because Lieber is suing individuals instead of SIUC.

"If the case is dismissed, we are going to refile with a not-for-profit corporation, then I want to see their claim that it's a commercial enterprise," Lieber said. "Because the purpose of the not-for-profit corporation is to guarantee that the information is disseminated to all appropriate off-campus housing."

Area likely to house new prison

By Kevin Bergquist
Politics Writer

Local officials say they are confident Southern Illinois will be the location for a new maximum security prison.

Gov. Jim Edgar gave his support for the $65 million prison at a June 7 press conference.

The 500-bed prison was proposed as part of a comprehensive plan by the Governor's Task Force on Prison Overcrowding.

Jim Rea, D—Christopher, said he has visited many of the facilities in the state, and they have some serious problems.

"I think we have a good chance of getting it," Rea said. "I hope it is located here, because I know the benefits it will create."

The new prison would create 300 new jobs and house inmates involved in incidents with prison staff members and other inmates.

Sen. Ralph Dunn, R—Du Quoin, said he thinks the prison has a good chance of coming to Southern Illinois.

Dunn, Rea and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees proposed a plan in March for paying for the new facility with construction bonds.

The money will be raised through bond funding, and awaits final budget approval by the state. Dunn said after the funding has been approved, he expects a three to six month search before a final site is named.

He also said he expects ground could be broken on the facility site as early as this year and completed by December 1995.

Nick Howell, spokesman for the Illinois Department of Corrections, said formal bids have been made by Franklin and Jackson counties.

Howell said the state is currently housing 33,000 inmates in prison with space for only 21,000, and that number could climb to 48,000 by the year 2000.

Parking renovations aim at easing problem

By Candace Samolinski
Administrator Writer

SIUC parking lot renovations will cause an inconvenience to some, but may make things easier in the long run, said a supervising SIUC engineer.

"Lot 55 located at the corner of Washington Street and Grand Avenue will be completely renovated," Merilyn Hogan, coordinator of SIUC Parking

Division, said. "There will be a new entrance and exit and 70 new spaces will be created."

Hogan said Lot 89 behind the SIUC Arena will be expanded by creating 92 new parking spaces.

Allen Haake, supervising architect and engineer for SIUC, said the creation of new parking spaces will help students who face parking problems.

"We will still be faced with parking problems but we hope within the next couple of years to have them resolved," he said. "With the building of the new biological sciences center even more spaces will be needed."

Mike Spiwak, Undergraduate Student Government president, said the new parking spaces should be devoted primarily to red sticker areas.

SIUC student leaders claim Cole's appointment rushed

By Fernando Follu-Moggi
Special Assignment Writer

Student government leaders say an investigation that led to the appointment of former Undergraduate Student Government President Brad Cole to the Illinois Student Assistance Commission was rushed.

The Illinois Senate unanimously approved Gov. Jim Edgar's appointment of Cole to the commission last week, after Cole's nomination had been suspended temporarily by the Illinois Board of Higher Education-SAC.

Cole underwent an IBHE-SAC investigation for allegations he had transferred $450 in student money from the account of the College Republicans to reimburse himself for a trip to the National Republican

Salukis golf coach returns to finals

By Dan Leahy

Unlikely incident makes game memorable

Diane Daugherty, head coach of the SIUC women's golf team and part-time golfing professional, has had her share of memorable moments at the LPGA Mazda Championships.

The first time she played in the Championships in 1990, she missed the cut. In 1991, she made the cut and endured a final round of 83 to finish last in the field.

Last weekend Daugherty managed to stay out of harm's way until the final hole of the last round.

An errant shot by Daugherty struck a spectator and led to a double-bogey and a final-round score of 77.

Daugherty said she lost control with a seven-wood and the shot veered toward the spectators in the grandstand.

Daugherty said her nerves were rattled after she saw the spectator bleeding.

"The ball hit her in the head, and anytime you get hit in the head, there is going to be a fair amount of bleeding," she said.

"They were giving her medical attention and luckily she did not need stitches," Daugherty said.

She said the victim was nice about the incident.

"She was very gracious, but this is the first time I've ever hit anybody, so it was unnerving," she said.

"When I went to the lockerroom, all the other players had stories about how they've all hit a spectator," Daugherty said.

Even though her fellow golfers tried to console her, Daugherty took action to make sure the fan knew she was sorry.

"I sent her a card and a dozen balls," Daugherty said.

Daugherty's adventurous final hole prevented her from meeting all three goals she had set.

She said her goals were to make the cut, shoot 75 or better in the final two rounds and to stay out of last place.

"My first goal was to make that cut," she said. "That was the main goal.

"I was very proud of that since those other players play almost every day year-round, while I only get out on the tour one or two times a year," Daugherty said.

She also achieved another personal goal, as she avoided last place and finished with a 13-ove par 297 to win $1,397.

Daugherty said she might have fared better if it were not for the fast greens.

"The grass was cut extremely short and I was afraid of running putts by the cup," she said. "It caused me to change my game in that I had to be very conservative."

Daugherty said her overall play on the final day was good, but she just could not make the crucial putts.

"I hit the ball better than I had the previous three days," she said. "I hit my drives well and my irons were good, but you're not going to score if you don't make some birdies because you're going to make some bogeys out there."

Daugherty said it was great to sign autographs and be treated like royalty for a week, but she was ready to come back to earth.

Golf team ends season with win in tournament

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

The SIUC women's golf team finished the season in fine style as it shot a 318 on the last day of the MVC Championship to tie Illinois State for first place.

The tie resulted in a playoff won by the Redbirds, but SIUC coach Diane Daugherty said that does not take away from a great team performance.

"We were down by 10 shots going into the last day," she said.

"To come back and shoot a 318, our best round of the year, is really a great achievement," Daugherty said.

The golfing Salukis overcame expectations, as no coaches had picked them to finish higher than third in the conference.

Tracey Pace had another outstanding year for the Salukis. After finishing second in final MVC individual standings for two years, she finally broke through to win her first individual title.

Daugherty said Pace was a rock of confidence to her young team.

"She was our most consistent player all year," she said. "She had some pressure on her after two second-place finishes, and she handled it well."

Losing a player like Pace is tough, said Leischen Eller, a junior last season.

"She and I are both long hitters, so I learned a lot from her," Eller said.

Eller also said Pace was not a vocal leader, but led by example.

"She was very quiet, but she carried a great strength," she said.

"She was a great captain and we're going to miss her," Eller said.

One factor which may have helped the team was the introduction of SIUC sports psychologist, Betty Kelley, to the team.

Daugherty said she hoped Kelley could help the team's attitude.

"I brought Betty in because sometimes you hit so many balls and things still don't work, so it must be something else," Daugherty said.

Kelley, who works with athletes on and off campus, said she tried to help athletes understand what they can and cannot control.

"The emphasis was on performance, not the outcome," Kelley said.

"Performance is something they can control, while the outcome is contingent upon what everyone else does," she said. "So we set performance goals and stopped worrying about the outcome."

Lieschen Eller, a junior this past season, said Kelley did help the team.

"She really made us focus on the present, instead of worrying about the past or the future," Eller said.

Jordan shoulders blame for fame

I wanna be like Mike. The guy clearly is considered a hero, and why not? He's rich. He's considered a leader in his sport. And he's a husband and father. In his city of Chicago, more people know his name than their own Mayor Daley. And that's not so strange, either, because they see him everyday.

I really wanna be like Mike. Michael Jordan towers over us on billboards, and his face floods magazine endorsements and television commercials. In fact, there isn't much he doesn't endorse. And he feels the impact of his famous face getting paid millions for playing a game, wearing shoes and eating hods.

I really, really wanna be like Mike.

But then, about a month ago, I wondered if I wanted to be like Mike anymore. In the middle of the Bulls' battle with the Phoenix Suns in the NBA finals, where Jordan and his fellow famous players on both teams are highly pressured to perform their best, the news of a new book exploded in the media. The book is about golf, the life of a golfer, and how Michael Jordan lost $1.5 million in golf bets to the author.

Mike's in the spotlight, but not such a positive light.

The famous 6-foot-6 Chicago Bulls player Michael Jordan seems always to have been, well, famous.

Besides being possibly the most talented player in the NBA, he also is the most visible player. He has made the pages of People magazine's most beautiful and most intriguing people issues.

His popularity has made him a No. 1 target for endorsements, ranging from Nike shoes to the Gatorade commercials that have the catchy song "I Wanna Be Like Mike."

Events since the gambling reports have been typical media explosion. Questions have been raised concerning the amount of the debt, the intentions of the author and if the hero of millions indeed has a gambling problem. Jordan's response? No response.

From the Pressbox
Jeremy Finley
Sports Editor

Jordan stopped talking to the media May 26, after a published report alleged he was out until 2 a.m. at an Atlantic City, N.J., casino the night prior to game two of the Eastern Conference Finals.

He reportedly lost $5,000, but Jordan disputed the amount of his losses and just how late he was out that night.

He continued the boycott until June 9, when he spoke to NBC journalist Ahmad Rashad.

Jordan denied having a gambling problem, repeatedly saying gambling and betting were legal and he felt like a criminal for doing something legal.

Days later, NBA Commissioner David Stern announced that Jordan did not violate any rules by betting on golf and in legal casinos.

The media quickly tied down, and focused their attention on covering the last games of the finals. Case closed, kind of.

Do I still wanna be like Mike?

Despite the fact that the gambling hoopla has fallen out of the spotlight, the effects of the incident could be taking a toll on Individualized Learning Program courses carry SIUC residential credit applicable toward a degree. ILP courses have no enrollment limits, and students can register throughout the semester. Students use a study guide developed by an SIUC instructor as the course framework and study at a time and place of their choosing. To register in an ILP course, on-campus students need to bring a registration form signed by their advisor to our office at Washington Square "C." Off-campus students should contact the ILP office directly. We must receive payment of $65 per credit hour when you register (Mastercard, Visa, and Discover now accepted). Call the Individualized Learning Program office at 536-7751 for further information.

Program offers house havens for children in scary situations

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
Police Writer

Thanks to the familiar face of safety dog "McGruff," children in the Carbondale area will have a safe haven in the homes of local volunteers.

Police Chief Don Strom announced Tuesday, the "McGruff House" program will provide a temporary haven for children by local homeowner volunteers.

Strom said the program is for children who find themselves in an emergency or frightening situation, such as being bullied, followed, hurt or any similar episode.

"Individuals who volunteer their homes as McGruff Houses agree to make emergency phone calls for children in trouble and to watch out for neighborhood children as they go to and from school.

Strom said adults who volunteer for this program will be screened by a law enforcement check as well as a panel made up of the police department and the Parents Teachers Association council who will share information when discussing the applicants.

Search for new SIUE president continues

By Candace Samolinski
Administration writer

A committee searching to fill the position of SIUE president will continue to take applications until July 15.

"We have been receiving applications for the past month," John B. Meisel, head of the search committee, said. "The committee has met and we are comfortable with the procedures set up. Everything seems to be going well."

SIU Chancellor James Brown assembled the committee, comprised of the SIUE Foundation board of directors, administrators, alumni, civil service staff, faculty and students.

"I asked each group to nominate two names to serve on the committee," Brown said. "I chose who would fill each slot from those nominations."

Brown said he named Meisel as the chair on his own.

"Meisel will act as chair for the committee, but he will not vote," he said.

Meisel said applications and nominations have been received from across the country.

"We have had nominations from presidents and academic leaders of colleges from all over," he said. "Once I receive a nomination I contact that individual to see if they are interested in the position."

The chosen candidate will replace SIUE President Earl E. Lazerson. He will retire Dec. 31 after serving as a member of the staff since 1969.

"Next month we will hold an initial set of meetings to begin narrowing the pool of applicants," Meisel said.

The criteria for the position states the candidate must display a commitment to higher education on the graduate and undergraduate levels in a multicultural setting and be dedicated to academic excellence in teaching, research, public service, diversity, equal employment opportunities, as well as others.

Raindrops still falling through repaired roof

By Tracy Moss
General Assignment Writer

the new roof once since it was installed.

A new roof has not kept the spring rains from leaking through to stain ceiling tiles and create slippery spots in the hallways and offices of the communication building.

In the spring of 1991, heavy rains caused the roof over the journalism and broadcast departments to leak heavily, causing damage to offices and equipment. The damages were assessed at about $40,000.

The most recent leaks occurred near the studios for the broadcast department and offices in the radio and television department.

Lee O'Brien, director of broadcasting, said the most recent leaks are occurring in a section of the roof that was just replaced about a year ago.

"We're very concerned about these leaks of course, because we have expensive equipment not too far from either of them," he said.

Robert Henderson, the operations manager of WSIU-TV, said that the leaking roof has been a problem for a couple years.

Vaughn Roofing, of Marion, was contracted for $204,148 to lay a new roof over the building. The money to pay for the roof was appropriated by the General Assembly and administered through the Capital Development Board.

Jerry Vaughn, of Vaughn Roofing, said his company has been called to make repairs to Vaughn said the new sections of the roof are under a 10 year warranty that provides the University with any needed repairs at no cost.

Alan Haake, supervising architect and engineer of the University, said the roofing company will be notified to make repairs if the most recent leaks are occurring in the section of the roof that is under warranty.

Haake said Vaughn Roofing was not contracted to replace the roof over the entire building. "The whole single story roof was replaced, but the roof under the cooling tower and on the second story area of the building were not replaced," Haake said.

Jak Tichenor, a broadcasting producer, said the producer's office, located under the cooling tower, a section that was not replaced, has been a problem for two years.

The producer's office has stained and damaged tiles. Plastic hangs several feet from the ceiling because the producers never know when the roof will begin leaking again.

O'Brien said there are many contributing factors to the problem and the fact that the roof is flat may be one.

"Personally I think they should put a slant on it," he said. "Another problem seems to be the pigeons that roost on the roof causing the drains to become clogged and forcing the water to rest on the roof."

SIUC a role model for minority equality

SIUC HAS SHOULDERED A party-school image for so long that its role as a significant academic university has been clouded. But a recent publication broke further through the distorted image to deem the University a national leader.

Already renowned for its enrollment of international students — ranking second in Illinois and 11th in the nation — SIUC has another credit to emphasize its commitment to minorities in its education.

In 1990, SIUC led the nation in the number of African-American students who graduated from a predominantly white university, according to the magazine Black Concerns in Higher Education.

Now that SIUC has climbed to a model status among other universities nationwide, however, more needs to be done to ensure and improve minority success in higher education — and the stakes are high.

ONLY ONE YEAR PRIOR to this remarkable ranking, SIUC finished sixth in a study by the same publication, graduating 207 African-American students in 1989. But even more remarkable is the jump in the number of students. In 1990, 782 African-American students received a degree from SIUC.

The University for some time has shown a commitment to creating a supportive climate for all students, regardless of race. Unlike other universities, SIUC has a special-admissions program that is not based on race, it offers an expansive curriculum in Black American Studies, and it has expanded its recruitment program aimed at minorities.

The result is self-evident: by 1992, African-American enrollment had grown to 10 percent of total enrollment at SIUC. And more significantly, the new ranking measures the success of those students. The University has ample reason to be proud.

BUT INSTEAD OF BASKING in the praise, University administrators need to take heed of a more crucial matter — while graduation rates of African-Americans continue to improve, they still lag behind other students.

A new report by the National Collegiate Athletic Association points out that the graduation rate of African-American students in Division I colleges has grown to 33 percent, while the graduation rate of whites has reached 56 percent. Although the rates improved in both categories, a wide gap continues to plague universities — and this gap feeds the still-existing racial barrier of inequality among people.

Since the civil rights movement first began, society has taken many steps toward equality. And although universities play only a small role in the overall picture, SIUC is doing its part to replace the once-popular view of African-Americans as lesser human beings with a better one: people are people regardless of the color of skin.

WITH A WIDELY DIVERSE campus, SIUC stands apart from other universities in its role of successfully enrolling and graduating minority students, and it has reinforced its ability to do so. Opportunities at SIUC are countless. But where does it go from here?

The technique currently in place for supporting African-American students in higher education is working, and justly deserves acknowledgement. But the gap needs to be filled, and status quo is not acceptable.

On the heels of the University's high national ranking comes a significant role to fulfill, one of sparking change and providing a model for which other campuses can try to match in the future.

So congratulations to SIUC are in order, as well as a challenge to go even further.

Letters to the Editor

WIDB falls prey to predator

Dear President Guyon,
 Do you read the Daily Egyptian? Are you aware of all the letters students have written concerning your decision to keep WIDB from getting on the air?

I thought a university president was supposed to make decisions supporting students, faculty, and employees of the college. Why then, Mr. Guyon, are you more concerned with the business community and their needs? Are you aware of the fact that a representative of WCIL is on the WIDB Board of Directors? Won't the hotel you are supporting create competition in the community? Isn't competition one of your arguments against WIDB? That sounds like a double standard, Mr. Guyon. Do you have any answers?

Do you really think that a college radio station with a radius of eight miles will be able to compete against a commercial station with a 120-mile radius? Did you take economics in college, Mr. Guyon? I don't think WIDB will be too much competition for WCIL. As far as the interference issue with WPSD goes, their station is in Kentucky.

What state do you live in, Mr. Guyon? Isn't it the FCC's job to handle interference problems between stations?

Mr. Guyon, why did you seek a position as University president? To serve the University, of course! I think you've lost that vision. If you are concerned with your image, this WIDB issue has tarnished it. Mr. Guyon, please go back to serving the college and not the community.

By the way, Mr. Guyon, many businesses in the community are in support of WIDB. Why aren't you? — Steven Zimmerman, radio-television

Student body leaders failing in their duties

Student government and its leadership have certainly taken on a new appearance at this campus.

Over the last month, as a new Undergraduate Student Government administration took office, students and student issues have suffered terrible losses.

Where were our elected representatives at this month's Board of Trustees meeting? Neither the USG nor the Graduate and Professional Student Council were represented by their executive officers.

Without a direct voice at these and other meetings, who will fight against tuition and fee increases and who will advocate for our needs?

However, while representation has been over-looked, nepotism has been closely attended to.

The GPSC president has appointed her husband to serve as executive assistant, after he lost in the election to be a GPSC vice president. And the USG president has hired his fiancé to be a paid assistant in his office. I wonder if either has any brothers or sisters waiting in the wings.

I only hope that the remainder of this year will not be as detrimental to the student body as this first month has been. Because, if it is, the entire campus will suffer. —Julie Meredith, undecided, sophomore

University's court case on discrimination signals further evils against SIUC students

Look out, we're about to get screwed again!

In the Illinois Supreme Court case Southern Illinois University v. Illinois Department of Human Rights, the SIU administration is arguing that the Illinois Human Rights Act doesn't prohibit discrimination at colleges and universities.

The SIU administration is arguing, in essence, that it should be able to discriminate against anyone it likes.

It's easy to see where this argument is leading. Though this case originated with complaints of racial and sexual discrimination at SIU, it has implications for all students.

If the administration is allowed to have its way, it would be able to discriminate against all students, black or white, male or female, homosexual or heterosexual.

Students are already treated badly at this University. It'll get even worse if they get the green light from the Illinois Supreme Court.

"We have to determine the essential and non-essential services," he said. "There are services such as water, electricity and steam, that we can not cut out any further."

Jobs are not the only thing Tweedy has seen disappear. A program which offers one-on-one retirement counseling for University employees will be cut back to group counseling. SIUC employees have written letters and circulated petitions in an attempt to keep the one-on-one counseling.

The budget reallocations will have an effect on everyday life at SIUC.

"We are losing an iron worker and eliminating the service vans which respond to minor jobs and emergencies," Harel Lerch, superintendent of building maintenance, said. "Losing the vans means a slower process of getting out to help."

Campus visitors already may have noticed a change from the reallocation since many services, including grass cutting operations, have been cut back.

"We have to prioritize our functions," Tweedy said. "Some people have suggested we are not cutting the grass to make a point, but it's not to prove a point, we are doing the best with what we have."

Bruce W. Francis, SIUC grounds superintendent, said the effects of the budget reallocation are easy to see. "Just look out your window," he said. "About 50 percent of our responsibilities are ground maintenance. The primary reason the grass isn't getting cut is because we just can't do it."

Francis, who has been grounds superintendent for about four years, said he has about 15 fewer people during the spring and summer than he did when he first started the job.

"I think they should definitely add more red spaces especially behind the arena," he said. "When I drive around looking for a place to park I always notice spaces available in blue sticker parking but never in the red sticker area."

Haake says the Parking and Traffic Committee will make the decision of whether the spaces will be red or blue. The committee is headed by James Tweedy, vice president of administration for SIUC.

Hogan, who serves on the committee, said the breakdown for the allocation of parking spaces will be determined after looking at the blueprints of the lots.

Other renovations will be at Lot 27 in Southern Hills. Hogan said Lot 27 will be resurfaced, but no new spaces will be added.

An additional lot will be built for the new Rainbow's End child care facility to be located near the SIUC Recreation Center. The lot will be located behind the SIUC Recreation Center.

"Right now work is being done on building the new facility but because of the bad weather the work has been slowed," Eva Murray, director of Rainbow's End, said. "They haven't started on the new parking lot yet but it will be for employees and parents who are bringing in their children."

Hogan said the new Rainbow's End lot will consist of 22 parking spaces. Murray said employees and parents will continue to use parking stickers from Rainbow's End and the lot will be reserved exclusively for those with stickers.

Haake said the actual cost of the projects exceeded initial estimations by 3 or 4 percent.

"It appears we miscalculated on how much would have to be removed and returned to complete the renovations," he said. "I believe we were off by only three to four percent."

The SIU Board of Trustees approved the renovations on Thursday and awarded contracts to E.T. Siraonds Construction Co. of Cordalonde to do general work for $262,182. Wilson Electric has the electrical contract for $42,800.

Haake said his staff plans to have the renovations completed by July 30.

Lieber wants the findings available to all University employees and students. He said he will be sending the report to the University's Board of Trustees.

Lieber said the officials should be accountable for SIUC decisions. "I am suing (the officials) and the University. But you can't sue a building. The University is its people," Lieber said. "The back story isn't making the decisions. The people make the decisions, they should be held accountable."

Lieber received a list of increasing enrollment last year, but a recent letter from Gayton informed him the lists would be discontinued.

"While the University has previously provided lists, the need to develop a consistent approach on providing information for all owners and assure compliance with the Law and University policy on release of student information caused a re-evaluation of the University's practices," Gayton wrote.

In the letter, Gayton also wrote that the University is notified from the Attorney General's office.

Lieber said the officials should be accountable for SIUC decisions. "I am suing (the officials) and the University. But you can't sue a building. The University is its people," Lieber said. "The back story isn't making the decisions. The people make the decisions, they should be held accountable."

Republican Convention in 1992. College Republican's officers claim the transfer had not been authorized.

The investigation, which took place May 13 and 14, cleared Cole of the allegations and reinstated his nomination, but student representatives claim the investigation was not conducted properly.

Susan Hall, president of the Graduate and Professional Student Council and IBHE-SAC SIUC representative, said the investigation missed important information.

Hall said she planned to present information at the June 26 general meeting of IBHE-SAC, when the commission was scheduled to cast a vote on whether to reinstate Cole's nomination, but the decision was made by executive vote before she could present the data. IBHE-SAC Chairman Rot Pipher called an executive vote on the issue before the information could be presented to all 47 members of IBHE-SAC.

Hall also said Pipher overstepped his authority in calling for the executive vote because the opinion of the committee was disregarded and there was not sufficient information to cast a vote on the issue.

In a letter dated June 3, Pipher said time constraints made it urgent for the decision to be made before the scheduled June 26 general meeting of IBHE-SAC.

"The committee had directed them (the members of the investigative team) to wait until the 26th to make the decision," Hall said. "I do not think the executive members received all the information they needed to make a decision."

Demand rising, supplies lacking for organ donors

The Washington Post

Why, if the public is so high on lifesaving transplants, is there a dire shortage of organs? One reason is that opinion polls are hypothetical. "It's one thing when you're responding to a survey over the phone," said Ken E. Richardson, director of the Kentucky organ procurement agency. "It's very different when your wife or child or parent is in an accident and you're suddenly faced with their death."

That gap is dramatized by a recent Gallup poll. While 85 percent of Americans support organ donation, only 42 percent say they have decided to donate their own organs. Only one in four has actually signed a donor card or agreed to a donor checkoff on a driver's license.

Despite all the public appeals, the number of donors has hardly grown in the past six years. About 4,500 Americans a year become organ donors, roughly one third of the medically appropriate brain-dead donors available.

A donor card—if it is found in time—makes the decision easier for a family. But so does any previous discussion of organ donation by family members.

"The discussion is more important than the card itself," said Laura A. Siminoff, assistant professor of psychiatry at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center who is completing a three-year study of organ donation in 23 hospitals in Pennsylvania and Minnesota.

Cultural differences are a factor. African Americans and Hispanic Americans are less likely than whites to favor organ donation, the Gallup poll found.

But the most telling factor is how the subject is raised—if at all. Although doctors may be reluctant to broach organ donation with a family still in shock from the sudden loss of a loved one, Siminoff said, the bigger problem is that many families just say no.

Most doctors and nurses have little training in how to approach families in such circumstances, she said.

A key point is whether the grieving relatives understand the fact of brain death before the question of organ donation arises, according to a Kentucky study of 143 cases. If they do, they are nearly four times as likely to give consent for organ donation, the study found.

Misconceptions about brain death are "a big hurdle," Siminoff said. Even some doctors don't understand it or are careless in their language when they talk to families about it, she said.

Carbondale Police Department, said the main way they will get the McGruff House program off the ground is through the neighborhood watch.

"We're going to have a neighborhood watch captain meeting this week and we're going to distribute some applications at that time and let them pass them out to people they know," Priddy said. "After it gets into the media hopefully there will be more requests for applications."

One new volunteer to the program, Gene Dybvig, block captain of the neighborhood watch in his neighborhood, said children need a place to go where they feel comfortable even though they do not know the people in the house.

"When they come here we'll try to contact their parents or the police," Dybvig said. "We are not an escort service, but this is a place for them to escape from the outside environments if the outside environments are threatening."

Priddy said volunteers keep a log in their house that they must write in and return to him on a regular basis, if any incident does occur.

"We'll go into the schools when school starts again and let the kids know where the McGruff Houses are in the area," Priddy said.

Strum said all the signs in the program are numbered and registered and each of the applicants will be required to re-apply for the program on an annual basis so they can maintain control of the signs and who lives in the various locations.

Dinosaurs romp through thriller

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
Special Assignment Writer

While Steven Spielberg's 'Jurassic Park' dazzles viewers with its state-of-the-art re-creations of creatures that once ruled the earth, the story-line itself leaves much to be desired.

In "Jurassic Park" three scientists, a lawyer and two children are guests of a multi-zillionaire, played by Sir Richard Attenborough, who creates a dinosaur theme park on the tropical island of Isla Nublar near Costa Rica.

With Spielberg's genius direction, the controlled theme-park atmosphere of high-voltage security fences and supercomputer tracking systems disintegrates into pure chaos when the dinosaurs break loose from their containment and wreak havoc on the park and its patrons.

Though the film lacks the strong story-line characteristic of the Michael Crichton novel of the same name, it makes up for this flaw with its non-stop, cinematic attack of dino-animatronics.

The plot is thin and jumps from one action scene to another. But Spielberg is more concerned with the suspense-filled details of how a character will evade a predatory dinosaur rather than actually developing the character.

Thriller scenes are what Spielberg does best, and in this film he succeeds.

The dinosaurs are the real stars of this movie. Seeing a Tyrannosaurus Rex chase a jeep through a jungle is believable and at times terrifying.

Spielberg manages to recreate the intimidating size of these creatures that once actually lived and breathed. Everything down to their eyes blinking and chests pumping looks authentic.

"Jurassic Park's" true villains are the vicious Velociraptors. These dinosaurs the size of human adults with razor-sharp claws, flesh-tearing teeth and complex, problem-solving minds.

Movie Review

Velociraptors, or "Raptors," as they are nicknamed in the film, are so smart they have the capability to open a door. One well-directed scene has a Raptor couple hunting two children in a kitchen. Every second feels like an eternity as these predators stalk the children with no mercy.

Though the film is worth the price of admission to see the latest in dinosaur recreation technology, Spielberg could have given them more screen time. For a movie of "Jurassic Park's" magnitude, the dinosaurs could have been more of a presence.

Aside from the dinosaurs, the main characters give performances that would be expected in a thriller of this sort. Sam Neil as paleontologist Alan Grant and Laura Dern as Ellie Sattler were equally convincing in their adventure-bound roles.

An amusing performance by Jeff Goldblum as mathematician Ian Malcolm provides the comic relief. In one scene Malcolm makes the observation that at least when the Pirates of the Caribbean ride in Disneyland breaks down, the pirates do not eat the people. Goldblum is a strong screen presence but, like the dinosaurs, he is underused in the movie.

"Jurassic Park" is a blockbuster film with amazing animatronics that deserves to be seen and believed.

as often this summer because it is a budgetary concern," Guyon said. "We are trying to do the best we can."

Tom Redmond, development services director, said Carbondale cannot post signs on University property because it is a higher government agency.

But there is a weed/lawn ordinance the city will enforce, Redmond said.

"Someone probably took the sign out of a yard," Redmond said. "I have not seen the sign, but it is hoax."

Francis has been authorized to hire six temporary workers to help with the mowing and ground work. Along with the three other workers, the temporary employees will start to take care of the lawn problem starting today.

"We will be out there mowing starting Wednesday," Francis said. "Do not worry, it will be taken care of."

A sign posted in front of Faner Hall Tuesday claiming the University is in violation of a city weed/lawn ordinance raised a few eyebrows, but turned out to be a hoax.

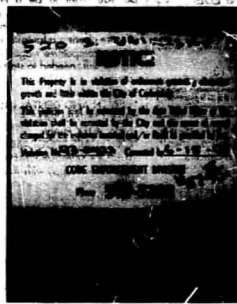

The sign read "Notice: This Property is in violation of ordinances governing obnoxious growth and litter within the City of Carbondale."

Bruce Francis, SIUC campus ground superintendent, said the sign was appropriate because of the lawn problem.

"It was appropriate and funny," Francis said. "We are taking care of the mowing problem."

SIUC President John C. Guyon said the University has been unable to maintain campus grounds because of budgetary problems.

"The lawn has not been mowed vacant for eight years, already shows signs of paint splatters.

The black walls and bar complement the dark, flashing light system by making the field itself an obstacle in winning a game. Add a fog machine to the scenario and the players feel transported into another realm.

The field also boasts a sound system and disc jockey to create an appealing atmosphere.

The field can accommodate up to 30 people at a time, Feltman said. C'est La Guerre is looking to expand with league play and eventually a Southern Illinois tournament, Feltman said.

Although the city had to change its weapons ordinance to allow paintball guns to be fired, Feltman said that safety is strictly enforced. The guns used are semi-automatic PMI-3s with water-soluble paint pellets.

"The old ordinance needed to be altered to allow us to operate because the paint guns we use are considered firearms. The new subsection in the ordinance allows a paintball facility can use the guns legally," Feltman said. "Safety is definitely a consideration and we

Indoor paintball is the newest rage, according to one local businessman, and a new paintball parlor is about to make a colorful splash on the Strip.

Jeff Feltman, owner of C'est La Guerre paintball parlor at 315 S. Illinois Ave., said paintball has become the hottest form of entertainment on both coasts.

"There is no reason why paintball can't succeed in Carbondale," Feltman said. "Paintball is the ultimate fantasy sport, and you can really get hooked."

Paintball combines the precision of target shooting with the athletic coordination of running an obstacle course. Players are armed with semi-automatic paintball guns and marble-sized paintballs.

The object of the game varies with the scenario used. Some games use point systems and others set a mission to be accomplished by the players.

C'est La Guerre has turned a vacant building into a high-tech paintball arena. The carpeted playing field, a former bar that was go beyond what is required to assure that, and the guns are safe."

Safety equipment is mandatory for play. Players are supplied with eye goggles, body armor and neck protectors, and the rooms are carpeted for better traction.

The worst and most common injuries are bruises, Feltman said. But occasionally, a player may slip and twist an ankle.

"Minor things, like slipping, will happen," he said. "But common sense can help you avoid those things."

The playing field is monitored by trained judges, and players must sign a waiver stating they will abide by the rules.

Players must also be 16 or older to participate. In addition, players aged 16-17 must obtain a waiver every time they play, signed by their parents, Feltman said.

Other safety rules must be abided by, including a rule in which a player cannot shoot if he or she is within 10 feet of another player.

If any of the rules are broken the players are asked to leave. "This is an adult playground," Feltman said. "Whether it's hide and seek or terrorist games, they can play it in a nice environment."

vulnerable to attack. Being a famous basketball player, he is forced into a role-model situation. He can't mess up. He's Michael Jordan.

Jordan's media boycott could be because of his weariness of this type of role-model situation.

What he does, wrong or right, is going to be exposed. He's going to be spotlighted by television and newspapers.

Although he is Michael Jordan, he's also just one of us who loves basketball.

Mike has a new commercial for Nike, one that is receiving huge play during the NBA finals.

He talks about imagining a world where he is just a basketball player, without crowds around every corner, where his face isn't seen on television every other second.

Mike can imagine that world. And you can bet he doesn't always wanna be like Mike.

Jordan. The caliber of play has not been his usual front-runner scene during the finals.

He could be worn out like all the other players. He could just be tired. It could be a lot of things.

But what remains is what happens to a celebrity in this type of situation.

Although Jordan is no stranger to controversy, with the numerous other books written about him, it cannot be easy to have his life broadcasted everywhere.

And, although he stands on the pedestal of a hero, Jordan is still

ATTENTION State of Illinois Employees

State of Illinois employees and their families are being offered three health insurance alternatives this year. Two of the alternatives are HMOs (GHP and Principal). The third alternative is the current Quality Care Plan (Equivoc).

Currently, the physicians of the Carbondale Clinic are enrolled in the HMOs as SPECIALTY CARE physicians only. This means in order for either of the HMOs to cover visits to Carbondale Clinic physicians, the patient must be referred by a primary care physician contracted with the HMO.

If you currently utilize a Carbondale Clinic physician for primary care and wish to continue to do so, the Equivoc alternative would be the option of choice.

Primary care agreements between the Carbondale Clinic and the HMOs are still being discussed, but it is uncertain if an agreement can be reached by the end of the open enrollment period.

If you have specific questions about your health insurance options, please contact your benefits counselor in your personnel office.
