Reagan tells Iranians no use waiting for him

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President-elect Ronald Reagan told Iran on Thursday that it will not profit by waiting for the United States' presidential transition before releasing the 52 American hostages.

Reagan said he is willing to do all he can to help win freedom for the 52 Americans, but "we are not going to intrude" on negotiations during the final months of President Carter's administration.

He said he wouldn't offer his own ideas "if I thought for one minute that it could delay their release," and emphasized, "I hope the Iranians will not have any idea there will be any profit to them in waiting," for his inauguration Jan. 20.

At his first press conference since the election, Reagan also called economics "the issue of the campaign" and said he will move to implement a freeze in the federal work force and a 10 percent tax cut. He said it would be fine with him if Congress started to work on the tax cut during the lame duck session.

Reagan acknowledged a telegram of congratulations from Soviet leaders and warned the Soviets that in negotiating arms control, he would not ignore Soviet actions in other areas of world relations.

"I don't think you simply sit down at a table with the Soviet Union to discuss arms limitation, for example, but you discuss the whole attitude, world attitude, as to whether we're going to have a world of peace or whether we're simply going to talk about weaponry and not bring up these other subjects. In other words, I am for linkage."

The Carter administration had separated the SALT II treaty from Soviet conduct elsewhere in the world, saying that U.S. support of the pact was not a carrot to keep the Kremlin in line.

Reagan began the press conference by unveiling his transition team, reaching into the top command of his campaign organization in choosing the personnel who will plan his takeover of the government.

William Meese III, campaign chairman, was named chairman of the transition committee and head of its foreign policy advisory board.

Campaign staff chief William Meese III was named staff chief in the transition.

He named three prominent Democrats to his foreign policy advisory committee — Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, Sen. Richard Stone of Florida and Washington attorney Edward Bennett Williams — and said he would like to establish a bi-partisan approach to foreign policy questions.

Reagan, with Vice President-elect George Bush at his side, also said he would not rule out at this early stage running for re-election in 1984.

He said he does not believe his election politically disenfranchised any segment of the population and pledged to "aggressively pursue" equal rights for women even though he opposes the ERA.

Regan said he hopes to name his Cabinet by late November or early December.

Asked whether he will make an effort to recruit blacks and other minorities for Cabinet posts, he said he would "take into consideration, of course, the fact that we will be looking at that." He said he might even consider a Democrat or two.

War is hell...so is post-war

A nine-year chapter of American history closed when the last troops were withdrawn from South Vietnam on March 29, 1973. For many soldiers, the end of gunfire did not mean the end of war. Many battle with alcohol, drug and psychological problems. Others still fight the social stigma attached to their participation in an unpopular war.

Two wars, two welcomes home

The post-war feelings which Americans held towards veterans of World War II and the Vietnam War are as different as the reasons the wars were fought. Walter Amernan, a paratrooper in England in 1944, came home to find cheering crowds welcoming him. Duane Cole, a medic in Vietnam in 1967, came home and hid the fact that he fought in Vietnam.

Disabled vet 'made it' back

Charlie Crews enlisted in the Army and left for Vietnam in the spring of 1964 because it "was the thing to do." He was unprepared for the bullet which struck his spinal cord and temporarily paralyzed him from the neck down, unprepared to learn how to walk again. The struggle to recover, he said, was long and hard, but in his words he is a disabled vet who has "made it."

Southern Illinoisans will regret House cutback, Birchler says

By Karen Gallo
Staff Writer

Two Southern Illinois legislators expressed pessimism and bitterness about Illinois voters' decision to cut the size of the state House of Representatives by 59 seats.

"It was the will of the people," said Rep. Vincent Birchler, who lost his seat in the 59th District to Wayne Alstalt.

"But when they try to implement it two years from now, Southern Illinois is going to be the loser," the Chester Democrat said. "As time goes on—like any other place where they've passed a similar amendment—the people will regret it."

Why did the voters do it? "They're mad at the people who are in office," Representative-elect Alstalt, R-

Vergennes, said. "And if you're mad you take your anger out on the people who are in office now. You can ask voters, 'Why did you kick it?' and the voters will tell you, 'Because it was there.'"

The cutback amendment, which affects the 1983 legislature, won by a comfortable 2-1 margin. With all but 49 of the state's 11,687 precincts tallied, the proposition had 68.1 percent of the vote.

In Jackson County, it had 59.3 percent, with 9,229 yes votes and 6,349 no votes. In downstate Illinois' 101 counties, the margin was consistently 7-to-3 to snip the House's size and eliminate cumulative voting.

Pat Quinn, author of the constitutional amendment, attributed the results to voters desire for a greater say in government and not to a desire for revenge against a legislature that gave itself a hefty pay raise two years ago.

"The voters of Illinois have spoken," said Quinn, founder of the Coalition for Political Honesty that spearheaded the cutback drive. "I think they're saying they want a greater role in their government."

Quinn said his groups' goal in 1981 is to see that the mandate is carried out economically and efficiently. He said he wants to obtain the support of legislators to ensure a fair and legal division of legislative districts.

Besides dividing each district, the state constitution requires lawmakers to draw new boundary lines for congressional and legislative districts in spring 1981.

Thurmond vows to seek death penalty law next year

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., prospective new chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, pledged Thursday to seek a death penalty law next year and elimination of what he called unnecessary environment and other federal regulations.

Thurmond also told a news conference that blacks and other minority groups have nothing to fear from a conservative regime in 1981 when Republicans take command of the Senate. Blacks, he said, "have one of the best friends they could have in me. I believe in equality for all. I've always tried to treat them fairly and squarely."

Thurmond, 77, once staunchly opposed civil rights legislation and was prominent among the Southern Democrats who, known as Dixiecrats, opposed the civil rights platform of the regular Democratic Party in 1948.

Thurmond switched his party affiliation to Republican in September 1964 and campaigned for GOP presidential nominee Barry M. Goldwater against President Lyndon B. Johnson, who had pushed the Civil Rights Act through Congress a couple of months earlier.

Today, Thurmond says civil rights advocates misconstrued his old Dixiecrat affiliation. The issue was "federal power vs. state power" and not racial tolerance, he said Thursday.

Thurmond's views assumed a new importance when Republicans seized control of the Senate in Tuesday's elections for the first time since 1954, with the GOP taking over chairmanships of Senate committees. Thurmond is in line to succeed liberal Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., as the Judiciary chairman.

Supporting a campaign promise of President-elect Ronald Reagan, Thurmond said he would like to "see a lady on the Supreme Court of the United States."

He added that "I wouldn't hesitate to confirm" a black to the court, but said it was "not absolutely necessary" to have one replace Justice Thurgood Marshall when he leaves the bench.

The South Carolina senator noted that he and Kennedy reached a compromise on a proposed revision of the U.S. criminal code. Thurmond said he hoped he and Kennedy would cooperate with each other when Kennedy becomes the committee's ranking Democrat in the new Congress.

Labor leaders still in shock after Senate election outcome

WASHINGTON (AP) — Labor leaders remained in post-election shock Thursday, trying to accept a nightmare come true: Not Ronald Reagan's White House victory, but the Republicans' capture of the Senate.

Organized labor generally had worked for Reagan's defeat, but it had feared his election far less than the loss of long-time Democratic allies who had ruled the Senate for a generation — often with a friendly eye on labor's legislative concerns.

Faced now with a far more conservative Congress as well as a Republican president, dazed labor officials are trying to figure out if the next few years will be just bad or out-and-out terrible.

"It's like an earthquake hit us. It's devastating," said Fred Kroil, president of the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks. "It's going to be a tough four years ahead."

One of the most immediate changes that frightens labor leaders is the expected installation of their No. 1 Senate enemy, Republican Orrin G. Hatch of Utah, as chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, through which most important labor-related legislation must pass. Hatch would replace Democratic Sen. Harrison A. Williams of New Jersey, one of labor's most valued friends.

Since early this year, labor leaders had spoken with dread about the possibility of Republicans winning control of the Senate and Hatch taking over the labor committee.

Labor's worst-case scenario is that an expanded cadre of anti-union Senate conservatives, with Reagan's blessings, will try to roll back or eliminate the minimum wage, dismantle the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, bar food stamps for strikers and increase federal regulation of unions while relaxing regulations on business.

But there are more likely to be a lot of compromises and stalemates, according to a number of labor officials seeking to cast some positive light on the election results.

"We may slip some, but we won't fall off the ladder," said Kroil.

News Roundup Former FBI officials convicted

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A circuit judge refused Thursday to order a new trial for a former National Organization for Women volunteer, who was convicted Aug. 22 of trying to buy an Illinois lawmaker's vote for the Equal Rights Amendment.

Judge Jeanne E. Scott refused to throw out the conviction, and she set sentencing for Friday. Wanda Brandstetter, 56, a Chicago businesswoman, faces a maximum sentence of seven years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Mrs. Brandstetter and her attorneys vowed to take their fight to the appeals court. "I'll fight to the end of my time," she said.

Mrs. Brandstetter was convicted of bribery for offering a $1,000 campaign contribution last May 14 to freshman state Rep. Nord Swanstrom, R-Pecatonica, to vote for the proposed amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Court denies new ERA bribery trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal court jury Thursday convicted two former FBI officials of violating individual civil rights by authorizing warrantless searches at homes of friends and relatives of members of the radical Weather Underground during the early 1970s.

W. Mark Felt, who once was the No. 2 official in the FBI, and Edward S. Miller, who headed the bureau's intelligence division, were found guilty of a single count of violating individual civil rights after a trial that lasted nearly two months.

Washington emotional after Reagan's election

WASHINGTON (AP)—Labor Secretary Ray Marshall cried at a staff meeting.

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader said Ronald Reagan's election is "a sad day for civil liberties and civil rights."

But humorist Art Buchwald was positively elated.

Official Washington and its court jesters reacted to news of a Reagan presidency with undisguised pain or pleasure, depending on political persuasions and states of employment.

Many were shell-shocked by "The Republican Revolution," which gave Republicans not only the presidency but, for the first time in a quarter of a century, control of the Senate as well.

Conservatives were in Republican heaven.

"I found myself feeling enormous relief," said a 13-year veteran official of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. "The future with Reagan is not sunny, but at least the sky is clear."

Aides to Marshall, who campaigned for President Carter's re-election, said the Marshall called a staff meeting Thursday.

"He told them what they can be proud of and that he hoped they would remain friends," said one aide who was there. "There were tears in his eyes, and he could only finish a few sentences."

Ralph Nader called Reagan "a cruel man with an amiable smile."

"He has an authoritarian bent that will make Richard Nixon look like a spring chicken," Nader said. "It's a sad day for civil liberties and civil rights. The man has no understanding of these. He's been living in Hollywood-land."

Nader also said Reagan's presidency will be bad for consumers.

"Recalls of cars will be minimal. Energy prices will go up. Profits of the oil companies will increase," he said.

Rep. Bob Carr, a Michigan liberal who was defeated, said he doesn't think Reagan will change the government radically. "The country's too damn resilient for one person to destroy it," Carr said.

Many government employees, particularly those who will soon be unemployed, expressed shock at the election. "I feel like none of us understood the depth of desperation of the American worker," said a program analyst at the Labor Department.

At the Pentagon, senior military officers sounded restrained in their optimism about Reagan's promise of higher defense spending.

At the Department of Education, which Reagan said during the campaign he wants to eliminate, the mood was bleak.

Art Buchwald, however, called himself a "closet Republican" and said he looks forward to Reagan's administration.

"It's a very good period for me and for humor," Buchwald said. "A new act in town is good for humorists. Republicans are more respectable than Democrats. I don't know one who drinks Amaretto. We're back to vodka and tonic and good white wine."

"I'm elated. This could be my best period since Nixon."

Deadly dog virus nears epidemic stage

By David Murphy
Staff Writer

A virus deadly to dogs has reached a stage in Jackson County that is "probably just short of an epidemic," according to a Carbondale veterinarian.

The contagious disease, called Parvo Virus, causes lethargy, vomiting and diarrhea in dogs, but it poses no threat to humans, Dr. David Lane, of Carbondale, said. A vaccine against the virus, originally believed to be effective for a year, now appears to last only three months, he said. Parvo Virus is often fatal, and is especially dangerous to puppies and very old dogs, Lane said.

"This is a killer disease of dogs less than two years old," he said. "Real old dogs are at severe risk, too."

The disease is spread through the feces of dogs who have it, Lane said. Other dogs come into contact with the feces, which can harbor the active germ for up to eight months, and contract the virus. Dogs who recover from the disease are also carriers for up to four weeks.

Lane recommends that dog owners get vaccinations for their pets, especially if they are under one year old. He also suggests dogs receive a booster every three months.

Dogs should also be kept indoors as much as possible, Lane said, and dog owners should be careful to examine their shoes before entering their houses.

"You can transmit it, apparently, walking in with your shoes if they have come in contact with active feces," he said. "You can carry it to your dog without even letting it outside." Parvo Virus is a relatively new disease, according to Dr. Charles Koehn, a Murphysboro veterinarian. It first appeared in the southern part of the United States in 1978, and has spread north since then. "I've never seen anything like this," Koehn said. "Researchers don't know for sure yet what it is. It may be a mutant version of some earlier virus, but they can't tell."

Koehn agreed with Lane about the high fatality rate of the disease.

"In older dogs, they have some chance of surviving the virus," Koehn said. "I figure that 80 percent of all puppies who get it die."

Young dogs that survive the disease can suffer heart damage, Koehn said.

"In puppies, it not only attacks the intestine, but the heart as well," he said. "Get the dogs vaccinated, because once they get it they'll be in the hospital, and the treatment is expensive."

"People think veterinarians are trying to scare people, but that's just not the case," Koehn said.

ID will activate turnstiles

Rec Center to install new entry system

By Randy Roguski
Staff Writer

The Recreation Center will install this spring an electronic entrance system which will be activated by a student ID card. Checking fee statements, the current policy, will no longer be done.

William Bleyer, director of the Recreation Center, said the new system will make it easier for students to enter the building's lower level.

"Currently students have to bring two separate documents to the building with them," Bleyer said. "This new system will eliminate that altogether."

The single-bar turnstiles at the north and south entrances will be replaced by tall, cage-like turnstiles which will be keyed to a computer at the Wham Building. Students will enter only from the north side of the building.

Students will slip their IDs into a small box at the entrance. The machine will read the holes punched in the card to determine if a student has paid his fees. If the student's fees are paid, the turnstile will revolve one turn.

"The new certificate of registration doesn't indicate whether or not a student has paid his fees. It only shows that he is registered," Bleyer said. "With the system we're putting in, the ID won't activate the turnstile unless a student's fees have been paid."

Bleyer said the computer will also read ID cards of faculty and staff who have paid semester dues for use of the building. The main lobby will still be open to the public.

Although the system will cost

$50,000, Bleyer said it will save money in the long run because student workers will no longer be employed to admit students to the building. Bleyer said the system will pay for itself within two years.

"The new system is an economic measure. We're looking at every economic step we can take," Bleyer said.

Bleyer said student workers will not be fired, but will be transferred to different areas within the building. He said the system will cut costs because there will be no need to replace workers who quit their jobs.

Bruce Swinburne, vice president for student affairs, said he had "mixed feelings" about the new system. Swinburne said he was disappointed that some students will lose their current positions at the Recreation Center. However, he said the system will save about $30,000 each year and will save each student about 75 cents in their Recreation Center fee.

"When we weighed the costs against the student work positions, I had to be satisfied," Swinburne said.

Will Reagan surprise us again?

Well, the election is over. Ronald Reagan surprised almost everybody by running away with it.

Now that we know who our next president is going to be, the question is, "Will Reagan turn out to be all that the voters expect him to be?"

Just days before the election, pollsters were saying the race was "too close to call," but Reagan surprised them with a smashing victory.

How did that happen? Apparently, a lot of the undecided voters decided at the last minute to cast their ballots for Reagan. And apparently it was the Iranians' injection of the hostage situation into the campaign in its closing days that helped the undecideds make up their minds.

If that is in fact what happened, then Reagan may be in for a rough time. If the voters are as fickle as such a last-minute swing might indicate, our president-elect will have to live up to their expectations—and soon—or else they're liable to turn on him as they turned on Carter.

A disturbing, and not yet fully understood, element in this election was the role played by the so-called Moral Majority and like groups which contributed to the conservative tide that ousted some of the most able members of the U.S. Senate, who had been targeted as "too liberal."

Some spokesmen for such groups have already been heard to say that "if Ronald Reagan turns out not to be a true conservative, he'd better look out, too."

The Moral Majority and others backed Reagan on the basis that he was the "moral" choice for the presidency. If they think he will always live up to their ideal expectations of leadership, they may be in for a disappointment.

A landslide victory is a tough act to follow, even for a professional actor. Reagan will have to produce whatever it is the electorate is looking for if he is to maintain his popularity.

The last landslide election was in 1972. Need we remind you what happened to Richard Nixon?

Reagan has two months to prepare himself for the next four years. No one knows what these four years hold in store, but Tuesday 51 percent of the people who voted indicated their confidence in Ronald Reagan's ability to lead them through it.

We hope they are not surprised.

Letter

Writer's statement misunderstood

Eugene K. Kamarasy's letter of Nov. 5 misses the point of my statement entirely. It is his own inference, not my reference, that indicates "... that Russian communism is the only form (of communism)." Mr. Kamarasy assumes that my intention is to show "... how the article 'The Kremlin's Complaints' is relevant to our fight against the spread of communism..." when actually I am trying to show how our fear of a fictional messaging bear is preventing our attention from being focused on the inadequacies of our own "form of goods distribution."

Nowhere did I maintain that any of the USSR's internal problems "... are ... stemming solely (or at all) from the United States." Nor did I condone the way the Kremlin subdues its own population (and it seems, from the information provided by Mr. Kamarasy, that the Soviet Union may have taken lessons from our society's Amerindian genocidal inclinations).

I entirely fail to see how this man can attempt to postulate that I would be "... willing to give up the choice of how to spend my money ..." from the statement (which Mr. Kamarasy takes as his own) that "the best-stocked stores are ... reserved for a privileged class..." What I'm trying to show is that the Soviet system is foul, that its people are sorely oppressed and that it is, therefore, hardly the threat that our government makes it out to be.

Nowhere did I give anyone room to wonder if I "consider the Kremlin as being run to benefit the people of the USSR." The fact that both the Soviet and the American systems are not "being run to benefit the people" is the point of my letter.

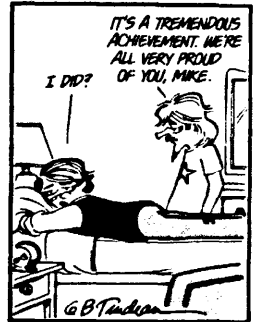

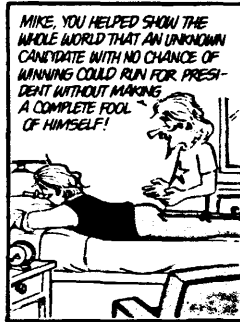

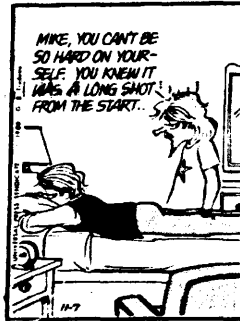

Our government deliberately misleads us into believing many falsehoods about the Soviet Union and ourselves. This latter point is evident in Mr. Kamarasy's statement of "our live and let live philosophy toward governments unlike our own." Where has this man been all his life? Where has our live and let live philosophy been in Chile, Vietnam, Guatemala, Iran, the Philippines, ad nauseam? Where is our live and let live philosophy in our relationship with the whites running South Africa?

What I see is the bastion of democracy upholding right-wing military dictatorships to finance an overdeveloped economy and people spoiled so rottenly that they're blind to the way that they are forcing the rest of the world to hate them.

I was surprised by the headline that the DE editors saw fit to introduce my letter with as it was hardly near the topic with which it dealt. Mr. Kamarasy seems to have read only the headline and then seen fit to question my intellectual capabilities and to say that I am uninformed about my subject. I hope that now that the actual topic of discussion has been explicitly defined, the DE editorial page will move on to expose the problems of social injustice that so many of us are intricately and intimately involved with.

To paraphrase Eugene K. Kamarasy III, the people of the USSR, the USA and the planet Earth aren't bad—it's their governments that keep them uninformed, impoverished and at each other's throats.—William P. Fisher Jr., senior, Anthropology

Space program is declining; time to form pro-space groups

I'm disappointed with the reluctance of the United States government to expand space exploration. The U.S. space program is in a steady decline because of politics. It is time for pro-space advocates to organize, develop and sustain political action groups—pro-space lobbies formed in a united effort to effect change in the political process.

Why? Because if the government continues to squash needed funds for space exploration, they will be short-cutting the future. Today's college students will be the victims.

The cosmos has provided us with extraordinary occurrences. By examining them, we will gain a better insight of our own planet. We will be able to make it work better. We can learn more about weather, geology, biology, energy and much more.

For example, what happens to matter under the unusual conditions that exist inside completely collapsed gravitational objects like the black hole? If we found the answer, this could lead to the fulfillment of Albert Einstein's dream, a unified field theory of all forces that govern the universe. The deeper understanding of the nature of life will be the most intellectual revolution of all.

I don't believe the political barriers are insurmountable. If anyone would like to help organize a local pro-space lobby group, give me a call during the evening: 457-2498.—Timothy Danner, senior, Radio-TV and Cinema

Social Security system needs adjustments

During the course of the presidential campaign, Messrs. Carter and Reagan kicked around the future of the Social Security system, but this was mostly in terms of "you did" and "I didn't." The only candidate with something sensible to say was Lonesome John Anderson. He wants to stretch out the minimum retirement age.

The proposal is not Mr. Anderson's exclusive property. In times past, Congressmen Bill Green and Barber Conable have sponsored bills to the same effect. Their bills have died in committee. To be charged with "tampering with Social Security" is a prospect that strikes terror into the hearts of all but the most intrepid legislators. Better they should be accused of wanting to repeal the Bill of Rights.

But the present minimum retirement age of 65 ought not to be regarded like the law of the Medes and the Persians, which altereth not. A child born in 1935, when Social Security began, had a life expectancy of 61.3 years. The child born in 1980 has a life expectancy of about 74.2 years. As a people we Americans are living longer and retiring later. It makes sense in every way to adjust the Social Security Act accordingly.

James J. Kilpatrick

Bill Green, who has courageously identified himself with this heretical proposal, emphasized that a phased-in extension of a minimum retirement age would have no effect—repeat, no effect!—upon workers born before 1935. For workers born after 1935, benefits little by little would be put off. A worker born in 1937 would qualify for benefits at age 66, a worker born in 1940 at age 67, and a worker born in 1943 at age 68.

Such a gradual extension would work no perceptible hardship on anyone. The man or woman who is now 37 is not likely to get all wrought up at the prospect of getting Social Security in 2011 instead of in 2008. But this modest extension would make an enormous difference in the solvency of the Social Security system.

Peter Drucker, the distinguished economist, spelled out the disturbing social and actuarial prospects in an essay last year. When Social Security was enacted, he noted, there were nine Americans at work for every American over 65. By 1977, the ratio had shifted to 4-to-1. Today the dependency ratio—the ratio between people in the labor force and people who have to be supported in retirement—is 3-to-1, and by 1985 it will be down to 2.4-to-1.

"This means that every employed American has to transfer about one-third of his income through Social Security taxes, through pension-fund contributions and increasingly through general taxes to support older people who are retired and on pension."

"This is politically and economically unbearable. It means that the pension burden, whether carried by government or by the employer, is becoming increasingly the first charge of the economy, ahead of maintaining and building plants and equipment, and ahead of creating new jobs. It also means that inflation becomes both absolutely inevitable and absolutely unbearable."

Other prudent modifications ought also to be made in the Social Security Act as it now stands, but extension of the minimum retirement age is the most painless change that might be made. The actuarial impact would be so beneficial that the mounting burden of Social Security taxes might also be eased.

It is politically understandable, but it is regrettable nonetheless, that members of Congress are so terrified of making sensible changes in Social Security to take demographic changes into account. Older Americans have been around long enough to understand the necessity for preserving the solvency of our national retirement system. Properly explained, the amendments urged by Messrs. Green, Conable and Anderson would have wide support. The 97th Congress ought to face this necessity squarely, and get on with what needs to be done.—Copyright, 1980, Universal Press Syndicate

The last American troops were withdrawn from South Vietnam in the early morning hours of March 29, 1973. A light rain fell on Tan Son Nhut Airbase in Saigon as the remaining 2,000 or so members of the United States' Armed Forces boarded the planes for Seattle and San Francisco.

Half a world away, an entire nation breathed a sigh of relief, tinged with despair.

A nine-year chapter of American history had come to an end, and the end very nearly came too late. The fury of the war in Vietnam tore this country apart; pitting generation against generation, believer against doubter and the government against the governed. Demonstrations begat strikes which begat riots; tear gas begat nightsticks which begat bullets. No one agreed. The arguments continued and the killing and dying seemed as if it would never stop.

And jammed smack in the middle of all this madness were the most unfortunate of all who suffered—the four million Americans who served in Vietnam, some who are still waiting for the war to end.

There is no peace and certainly no honor for the men of Vietnam who carry the "tombstones" of alcohol and drug addiction, chronic unemployment and psychological problems. Those shattered by the "noble cause" that meant so much sweat, pain and suffering have been buried by the apathy, bitterness and alienation caused by the war.

Seven years after the end, most of the veterans from Vietnam have left it behind. Most have been cured of the pain of readjustment and have blended into the mainstream of life in this country. There is a certain acceptance of the consequences of America's longest war, the only one in which we did not prevail, among the people who only did their jobs. Did their jobs not joyfully, but with all the grim determination that has marked America's past efforts in combat.

But for others, the unholy legacy of the war in Vietnam has washed over them and they are somehow left as unclean as their "dirty little war."

Consider the statistics compiled by the Vietnam Veteran Foundation and other research organizations:

—700,000 combat veterans are still in need of psychological readjustment assistance.

—One million veterans are still unable to find full-time, year-round jobs.

—Two million veterans who want to complete their educations cannot because college costs in the part of the country they live in are not adequately covered by government benefits. Overall, the participation rate for Vietnam vets in GI Bill education programs is less than earlier comparable periods.

—The suicide rate among Vietnam veterans is 29 percent higher than the rate among men in their age group who did not serve.

—Of the men who were married before their tour in Vietnam, 38 percent were divorced within six months of their return.

—Vietnam veterans make up 58 percent of all the drug problem cases treated in Veterans Administration hospitals over the last six years.

—About 350,000 veterans left the service during and just after the war with less-than-honorable discharges, which deny their access to many government benefits.

And those are just the disgraces that can be categorized and counted. An unknown number of vets cannot get out from underneath the war. Because the Department of Defense does not keep statistics on the severity of wounds received in Vietnam, the number of those who were blinded, burned or who had limbs destroyed by combat is just a guess. We can not count those whose minds were pushed too far by the horror of battle, those men who we will never be able to reach because of the damage they were done.

A survey of the socio-economic statistics of the men who fought the war in Vietnam makes a statement about a nation that advertises itself as a classless democracy. A question that arose is, if the benefits of life in America are spread equally among those who live here, should not all come to the defense of that way of life?

During the Vietnam war, the answer was no. Estimates on the rate of people in the military during Vietnam that were either drafted or enlisted under the threat of the draft go as high as 80 percent. According to a Ralph Nader committee report on Vietnam veterans, once in the military, draftees were 53 percent more likely to be sent to Vietnam than those who enlisted. By 1969, draftees made up 70 percent of the combat troops in Vietnam and sustained 62 percent of the combat deaths.

Of those who were drafted and who served in a Vietnam combat unit in 1969, 234 out of 1,200 were casualties and 31 died. During the same year, out of 1,000 volunteers in Vietnam, 137 were casualties and 17 died.

The draft was not an equal opportunity employer. Government policy during the war was to exclude two groups from the pool of men available for military service. The first group, primarily the sons of upper- and upper-middle class families pursuing higher education, were deemed to be in "the national interest" and covered by college deferments. The second group of men ineligible were those who could not meet physical or psychological standards set by the services. More often than not, these men were from lower-class and minority backgrounds.

So, for the most part, the burden of battle during Vietnam fell on the sons of the blue-collar working class and the lower white-collar occupations. And given the historical reluctance

WWII, Vietnam vets recall horror of war

She was the nurse, the one walking through Times Square, 1945. The one grabbed by a sailor, fresh from abroad, and kissed. The one whose kiss appeared in Life Magazine. The kiss that symbolized something to Americans; the war was over, it was time to celebrate.

She was the child, the one running from the village of Trang Bang, 1972. The one crying because napalm was burning her skin. Her picture appeared on the cover of Newsweek. Her picture symbolized something to Americans; that they should bow their heads, it was an American bomb.

The post-war feelings which Americans held toward veterans of World War II and the Vietnam War are as different as the reasons the wars were fought; as different as the places they were fought; as different as the endings.

Yet, somehow it was forgotten that the soldiers of the 1960s went into the war with the same feelings that their fathers had 25 years earlier. They, too, were going to fight for freedom.

"When I was drafted in 1966, there wasn't an anti-war movement," said Duane Cole, a medic in Vietnam for two years. "I felt I was going over there to help people out who wanted to be free. About 3/4 of my high school graduating class was at the train station with me ready to go to basic training."

For Walter Amerman of Murphysboro, the feeling was mutual.

"Everyone knew it was coming, so I enlisted," said

Counseling helps warriors return to peace

By David Murphy
Staff Writer

Thousands of men came home from the war in Vietnam unprepared for the adjustment to peacetime living. Sometimes, dealing with the special stresses of the war requires help, according to Noel Grimm, chief of psychology at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Marion.

"I think it was a different kind of war," Grimm said. "It was on again, off again, and maybe they had to take the same hill five different times."

Grimm said that the army, which prepared these men so well for the job they would have to do in Vietnam, did little to prepare them for the trip back home.

"They built these guys up for the guts the war required, but they didn't undo it," he said. "These guys came back and caught hell."

The Marion VA center has a psychological staff of two, consisting of Grimm and his assistant, Bess Greer, a psychological technician. The center is open to all vets who need help, according to Grimm, but sometimes Vietnam vets get the best counseling from other men who were there.

"These guys need special kinds of counseling, more to the heart and less formal," Grimm said. "It's best handled informally by guys who have been there themselves."

The most effective counseling programs, Grimm added, have been outreach programs in the large cities. These programs are usually conducted out of small offices by a few vets who have had some psychological training.

"If a guy wants help, he can wander in there, sit down and start talking," he said. "It's easier for a lot of these vets to talk when the atmosphere isn't so formal."

When the war ended, the VA was prepared to handle vets with drug addictions, Grimm said. This created some problems for vets with alcohol problems.

"When the vets got out, people started seeing drug addicts coming back and they geared up for that," Grimm said. "Most of these guys got off themselves, though, and some started on alcohol."

If a chapter of Alcoholics Anonymous were on campus, many vets would be able to benefit from the service, he added.

"I'd like to see AA get on campus," he said. "We have a lot of young guys with serious alcohol problems, and the old timers just don't speak their language."

According to Grimm, many vets also found that the VA's bureaucracy was unresponsive to their needs. This situation, he added, has changed in recent times.

"I think Vietnam vets are getting effective help from the VA now," he said. "The VA has finally toned down its bureaucracy to help vets on a more personal level. In fact, the guy who heads the VA is a Vietnam vet."

Although Grimm had no specific count on the number of Vietnam vets who seek treatment at the Marion hospital, he said the number has probably been greater in the last few years than in the years immediately following the end of the war.

Veterans from different wars remember the terror of battle

 Amerman, one of the paratrooper "pathfinders" who jumped into Normandy the night before D-Day, on June 5, 1944. "Germany had taken Poland, France had just about fallen in, England was in it deep. There was no one left but the Americans."

So Amerman enlisted. After officers and parachute training in the states, he was sent to England and assigned to the 101st Airborne Division. His first six months overseas were spent practicing jumps across the English countryside.

"England was a staging area," said Amerman, whose mission later would be to drop behind German lines in France and set up markers for the allied paratroopers. "We got our assignment two days before—they said a lot of us might not come back."

"I was scared as hell, but you have to overcome the fear and do what you have to do," Amerman said.

Cole completed basic, leadership and medical training before he received his assignment: RVN (Republic of Vietnam). During medical training, Cole was told the mortality rate of medics in Vietnam was two weeks.

"Fear didn't hit me until we were over there," said Cole, a third-year law student at SIU-C. "I remember coming in, I saw a ring of fire on the ground. I thought 'Gee, that must be how they protect themselves.' Actually, it was artillery rounds that were burning out."

"Our first night over, one of the guys that flew with us was assigned to guard duty. He was killed. When they flew me up north to my assigned battery, I was told the entire battery had been wiped out. I knew what I was into," Cole said.

For both men, being confronted with killing or watching another man die was traumatic. Amerman said he had nightmares after he was released from the war.

"It's not natural for people to kill each other," said Amerman, who almost lost his leg after a bullet hit a grenade he had in his pocket. "I remember running around a house and a German and I banged right into each other. I knocked him down and bayoneted him."

"It's—it's just the way war is," Amerman added.

"I killed a guy on Christmas Day, 1967," Cole said, fumbling with a matchbook and looking remorse. "It's really, I don't know, mind blowing. You come prepared to deal with death, but to take another life..."

"You know, people don't die like they do in the movies," Cole continued. "I was holding a kid named Brownie. He was hit bad and there wasn't much I could do. Everyone was around me saying 'C'mon Brownie, C'mon Brownie.' But he was bad. I slapped him cause he was going into shock. It revived him and he started to tremble." Cole said, his own body trembling as he described the situation.

"I felt that something was going on inside him. That's the way people die," he said.

In war, death is not considered an atrocity. Men saw what it really is.

"We were in Holland," Amerman said, "and we never knew that a holocaust was going on, but we smelled something really awful. We found this concentration camp. It was the first one ever discovered. These people were burnt; they were skin and bones and they were scared when we told them they could come out. They didn't know what to do.

Duane Cole, then 21, stands in the middle of Landing Zone Dog, a staging point for field missions, in South Vietnam.

"Hell," he added, "there was a ditch filled with bodies—gas chambers. This made us mad as hell."

"We walked into a hamlet (village) to liberate it," Cole said, "and the people would become our friends. When we would leave, the North Vietnamese would get three men from the hamlet, chop off their heads, then their penises, and put them in the mouths. They'd then take some boys, around 13 years old usually, and they'd never be seen again."

Vet doesn't allow injury to interfere with his life

By Dave Kane
Staff Writer

On Feb. 22, 1967, Sgt. Charlie Crews left on a "search and destroy" mission with the U.S. Army's 101st Airborne Division near Phan Thiet, South Vietnam. At about mid-morning, while taking a break, a Viet Cong sniper fire caught the group unprepared. Crews was shot through the front of the neck.

The bullet struck Crews' spinal cord and temporarily paralyzed him from the neck down. Doctors feared he would never walk again—but he did. Today Crews wears a leg brace and uses a cane to support his still-paralyzed right leg. His right arm, and right hand in particular, also have very limited use.

It would be easy for Crews, a financial counselor at SIU-C, to have second thoughts as to why he enlisted in the Army after he graduated from high school in the spring of 1964—but he doesn't.

"I usually don't hold a grudge," said the Elkhart native. "I'm not the type that does that.

"It wouldn't be good to be bitter, or to just sit around and hold a grudge. It would hurt me more than anyone else. I just think you have to put what happened aside, take what you've got and do the best you can with it," he said.

Crews, his wife Pam, their 10-year-old son Chris and 3-year-old daughter Kerri now live in Murphysboro. According to Mrs. Crews, her husband has made the best of his situation, and even more.

"He's a very stable person to begin with," she said. "That in itself helped him to get better and let him do the things he's done.

"After you've known him, you don't look and say, 'Oh, he walks with a cane.' You look at him as a person who doesn't want pity, for one thing. That really turns him off."

After returning to the States, Crews spent two years in rehabilitative therapy. He then returned home to Elkhart, earned an associate's degree in accounting from John A. Logan College and went to work for the Illinois Veterans Commission at SIU-C. Before taking the financial aid counseling job in August. Crews worked as a campus representative for the Veterans Administration.

"I consider myself lucky as far as getting jobs goes," Crews said. "I guess I've been in the right place at the right time quite often—that's a lot of it."

Crews probably wonders, sometimes, if the United States' armed forces were in the right place on that February day. But, he said, if he had to do it all over again he would do the same thing.

"I don't know why I enlisted, exactly. It just seemed like the thing to do at the time," Crews said. "I knew pretty much that I'd probably end up over there. I was 19 at the time, and didn't think about it too much."

"We all felt that the government knew what it was doing."

According to Crews and his wife, the "whys" of America's involvement in Vietnam are immaterial at this point. Although Mrs. Crews admitted that the initial reaction to her husband's injury was anger and bewilderment, she said that would be anyone's reaction to the same situation.

"You think, 'He's only 21 and in the prime of life.' He loved to play basketball, especially," Mrs. Crews said.

"It seemed like such a waste. Why him? But I guess that's a normal reaction."

"My son's quite athletic, you know," Crews said, "and sometimes I can't get out there. I try, but I can't do a lot of the things I'd like to do."

"You do what you can, and learn to live with it."

Crews said he discussed his injury with his son, who is a member of the Murphysboro Zips basketball team, once he was old enough to understand. His disability, Crews said, hasn't changed the father-son relationship a single bit.

Mrs. Crews agreed. "He does so many other things with Chris," she said. "I think it may have opened up new ideas for things to do. Charlie's usually a very 'ip' person anyway. I'd have to say I'm more moody than he is."

In his words, Charlie Crews is a disabled veteran who has "made it." Past incidents, including the mission near Phan Thiet, South Vietnam, cannot be dwelled upon.

"You have your down periods, so to speak, but everyone has those," Crews said. "You just have to go on from there."

Home battles tough for Viet vets

of people from those social groups to seek help for psychological, alcohol or drug problems, Vietnam's "Catch-22" reads dispiringly clear. Those damaged most by the war are the least likely to turn for assistance in overcoming their problems.

Perhaps most devastating to the Vietnam veteran was the reception given them on their return. The rotation out of the combat zones was completed on an individual basis, rather than by unit, and stole a large portion of the group identity from the Vietnam vet.

Each soldier did his one-year tour (one year and 20 days for Marines) and came home anonymously.

There were no parades given for them, and none of them could be sure of the fate of their buddies once they had left.

And once home, many veterans could not find their buddies they left behind, or found them profoundly different when they returned.

A Harris poll compiled for the VA on attitudes towards Vietnam vets found that three-fourths of the veterans of earlier wars felt they were given a warm reception by people their own age after the war. Less than half of the Vietnam vets felt the same.

In the words of the Nader report conclusion: "The challenge is to meet the need for respect without falsifying the past, and to meet the need for special assistance without creating a special social status and special privileges."

Women vets comment on problems

By Alan Scutley
Staff Writer

Sexual harassment and stereotyping are main aspects of military life that present women with problems men in the service do not have, four women veterans agreed in an interview Thursday.

The women said ratios of men to women were often 100 to one, and that it was hard to cope with that problem.

Nan Klee, who works in the SIU-C Veteran's Cost of Instruction Program office, said, "All the catcalls, whistles, and snide remarks made me callous. I got to the point where I started to do it back (to men)," Klee said.

Kate DeToy, a counselor in the SIU-C Office of Veteran's Affairs, said, "A lot of guys couldn't understand why I wasn't totally enjoying this ratio. They would say 'Boy, to be in your place for a day.' But try it for a month and see if it's that fun."

The women agreed that another problem was bucking the stereotype that says women in the service are either easy or lesbians.

DeToy, a Navy veteran, said the stereotype problem causes women to "put up walls" around themselves. "You just want people to leave you alone."

Sue Bentley, who works in the SIU-C Office of Financial Aid, said that the stereotypes aren't always true and people she met in the service would be a "good cross section," of people in civilian life.

Another problem related to stereotyping was that being able to do something as well as a man bruised his ego, the women said.

Smith said that women in leadership roles had trouble getting men to follow their orders because they were not taken as seriously as men in leadership positions.

Smith and Bentley also said that women can use their femininity to get out of doing things men have to do. DeToy said that although she knew that women could use their sex to get out of tasks, when she was in the Navy women had a harder time than men in getting time off for things like sickness.

Women may have it easier than men when returning to civilian life, the women said.

"Men in the service look different than civilians, mainly because of their haircuts. With women, you can't tell. It takes a while for the man to shake that off," DeToy said.

A problem common to both sexes, the women said, is that drugs and alcohol are a big part of life in the service.

Smith, who was stationed in Germany for a year and a half, said that 95 percent of the people in her company used drugs. "Being stationed in a foreign country added to that problem."

Even with the bad experiences the women had, all but Klee said they would again enlist in the service if they had it to do over.

DeToy said, "There's nothing wrong with everyone doing two or three years in the service."

"I had a lot of good and bad experiences, but I met my best friends in the service. If your attitude is good, you can have a great time."

Lack of jobs cited as reason for high vet enrollment at SIU

By Alan Sculley
Staff Writer

The number of military veterans enrolled at SIU-C increased this year for the first time since 1975, mainly because of poor economic conditions, according to Joel Berrey, SIU-C Veterans Cost of Instruction Program field representative.

Berrey said he believes many veterans are having difficulty finding jobs and are returning to school and drawing on benefits available to them under the GI Bill.

The GI Bill, which provides an allowance to veterans who return to school, was discontinued Jan. 1, 1977 and replaced by the Veterans Assistance Program. Under the GI Bill, veterans have up to 10 years after leaving the service to receive benefits, and many are taking advantage of the program now, Berrey said.

Berrey added that the slight upswing in veteran enrollment is contrary to Veterans Administration projections, which predicted enrollment would continue to decline.

This prediction, Berrey said, reduced the amount of funds given to his office because the VA bases its appropriations on the number of veterans it believes will enroll at a school.

As a result, Berrey added, many veterans have not received any support from the program yet this year. About 80 of the 700 veterans at SIU-C have left school because they haven't received GI Bill benefits, he said.

According to Berrey, Congress passed a supplemental appropriation for the VA so it can pay for the unexpected higher enrollment. That money, however, has yet to be distributed to veterans.

Berrey added that most of the veterans who left school this semester because they did not receive benefits will return second semester, unless they find a good paying job.

"If there are no employment opportunities, it is better to return to school and get some economic relief (through the GI Bill) than to be out in the business world without anything," Berrey said.

Berrey added that 380 new veterans enrolled at SIU-C this semester and if economic conditions stay bad, he expects enrollment to continue increasing for the next few years.

Berrey predicted a drastic decline in the number of veterans attending SIU-C after 1982. The VEAP, he said, does not give benefits equal to the GI Bill. In the three-and-half year history of the VEAP, only 2 percent of those enlisted have used the program, he said.

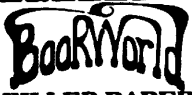

Under the VEAP, veterans can contribute up to $75 per month to a "kitty." When the veteran returns to school, the VA pays double the monthly amount contributed and returns the money put in the kitty, Berrey said.

"VEAP is a boner. It's a wasted program. Someone in boot camp earning $400 a month can't afford to contribute to the program. It's only when you move up in rank and earn more money that you can contribute," Berrey said.

Berrey added that because the VA predicts a decline in veteran enrollment, his office will be phased out in 1982. Most people still qualifying for the GI Bill will be discharged in the next two years and will have to enroll in school soon after they leave the service to receive full benefits, he added.

Study labels SIU vets 'apathetic'

By Alan Sculley
Staff Writer

Meet the average veteran at SIU-C—male, 36 years old, caucasian, married but with no children, and from a city with a population between 3,000 and 49,000.

According to a study which profiled veterans at SIU-C, conducted by Joel Berrey, SIU-C Veterans Cost of Instruction Program field representative, the typical veteran is also apathetic. He does not participate in college or non-college-related activities, and he does not attend church or other religious programs.

In addition, the study showed that the average veteran at SIU-C does not smoke, does not drink much and does not use illegal drugs. He is in his fifth year of college, has not changed majors, spends between six and 20 hours a week studying and although he sometimes feels his course load is too heavy, is "frequently satisfied" with his studies.

According to the study, the average veteran spent between one and five years in the service. He did not serve in Vietnam and is not part of an active unit. Furthermore, he finances his education equally from employment, the G.I. Bill, personal savings, loans and scholarships.

Of the 642 surveys which were sent last summer to veterans who attend SIU-C, only 172 were answered. The survey contained 73 questions pertaining to courses at SIU-C, personal and social life, family and military service. Despite the low number of responses, Berrey said the survey gives a representative sample of veterans enrolled at SIU-C. Most veterans, he said, are enrolled to get a degree. Others are in school to gain personal knowledge or to obtain a pay increase. Only a small number are in school to gain a higher social status, he added.

Vets recall war experiences

"The Vietnamese had them terrified," he added. "These people lived in fear of them. We felt we were there for a good reason."

The homecoming reception which both men received was entirely different. For Amerman, it was wine and roses. For Cole, it wasn't.

"You felt proud of yourself and you were treated great," Amerman said he had night-town, you couldn't buy a drink. They'd say "set one up for the soldier," Amerman explained. "There were parades and homecomings. They treated us right." "I remember I was at a party at my brother-in-laws after I got back," Cole said. "This kid at the party, Stetson, pointed a finger at me and said you'll pay for your war crimes."

"I didn't tell people I was in Vietnam," Cole added. "It was not something to be proud of. Inwardly, I was proud I served my country."

It wasn't politics that sent them to fight—they fought for what they believed was a moral cause. But when Vietnam veterans, such as Cole, came home, they fought another war: a war against their countrymen.

Textbook stealing is lucrative business

By Andrew Strang
Staff Writer

The stealing of textbooks from students who are in the Student Center or Morris Library is a fairly lucrative business, and both the University Bookstore and 710 Bookstore managers say they want students to be careful when they buy books.

Since both bookstores buy used textbooks throughout the semester, the opportunity exists for people to steal textbooks and sell them to the stores, said Jim Roland, 710 Bookstore textbook manager. He said he has no idea how many book thefts occur each semester because most people do not report book thefts, and this makes it hard to catch the thieves.

If a person's book does get stolen, the person should call both of the bookstores as soon as the theft is discovered, Roland said. Both bookstores keep a list of all books reported stolen, and they try to check all the used books they buy against the list. If a book is reported stolen immediately, "there's a fairly good chance" of catching the thief if he or she attempts to sell the book to the bookstores, Roland said.

Most people feel that nothing can be done if their books get stolen so they don't bother to report it, Roland said. The University Bookstore and 710 Bookstore have lists of about 50 books that have been reported stolen, but Roland said he feels most thefts are not reported.

He said that once a bookstore buys a book that is later reported stolen, the chances of catching the thief are almost nothing. "We don't have a record of who sold what."

Roland said Morris Library and the Student Center are the most common places for book thefts. "I think there are people who make a practice of it. The people who work the Student Center and the library are repeat offenders."

The people who make a habit of stealing books usually steal them and sell them as soon as possible, sometimes within minutes of the theft, Roland said. He said that because of the large amount of business that the bookstores do, it is hard to recognize people who sell many books.

Because of the speed with which many stolen textbooks are sold, he said that people should report a book theft immediately. Books can be identified by almost anything, such as a ripped page or writing inside the book, Roland said, and these marks are what the bookstore looks for when buying books.

Norma Woolard, assistant manager of the University Bookstore, said people should rely on more than a name on the front page of the book for identification because a book thief will just tear the page out. She recommended that people mark their book with "something that means something to you and no one else." For example, she said if a person's birthday was June 23, 1969, the person should write their name on the inside binding of page six, page 23 and page 59. These marks would be enough to identify the book if it was reported stolen, she said.

Roland said book thefts should be reported to the police, but the bookstores should be notified first. If a person is caught trying to sell a book reported stolen and the police need the book as evidence, the bookstore will lend the victim a book for free. Woolard said the University Bookstore has the same policy.

Since textbook thefts are a crime of opportunity, there is no specific type of book stolen most often, Roland said. Thieves prefer thin, hardback books because they are the easiest to steal and they draw a good price from the bookstore, Roland said.

A large amount of thefts occur at the end of the semester and right before breaks, Woolard said. People generally need money to get home right before breaks, and the end of the semester is the hardest time to catch book thieves because of the large volume of book buy-backs, according to Woolard.

Both Roland and Woolard agreed that competition between the two bookstores makes it hard to check for stolen books, especially at the end of the semester. Roland said asking for identification and keeping records of people who sell back books would result in driving all of the customers to the competition. "You want to discourage thefts but yet you don't want to discourage business," he said.

And at the end of the semester, there are too many people trying to sell books for the bookstores to effectively check the stolen book list. "It's almost impossible to catch thieves at this time," Roland said. "There would be ten times longer a line. Most people, when they sell their books, don't want to wait in line," Roland said.

Conservation workshops, kits offered by county organization

By David Murphy
Staff Writer

A series of workshops on home energy conservation techniques is now being offered throughout Jackson County by Jackson County Action to Save Energy (CASE).

The free workshops will provide training on how to stop drafts and heat leaks, reduce water and sewer bills and maximize furnace efficiency. CASE is also offering free kits of home conservation materials to Jackson County residents who fall within specified income guidelines.

The kits, each worth about $50, contain materials for weather stripping, caulking and other kinds of insulation techniques. To be eligible for a free kit, a single person living alone must have a yearly income of $4,737 or less. A household of two requires an annual income of between $4,738 and $6,326 to be eligible.

All applicants for the kits must attend one of the conservation workshops to be eligible. The workshops will be held throughout November.

In Carbondale, workshops will be held Tuesdays at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m. at the Carbondale Community Center. Workshops will also be held Thursdays at 7 p.m. at the Eurma C. Hayes Center.

In Murphysboro, workshops will be held Saturdays at 10 a.m. at the Plumbers and Pipefitters Office.

Workshops will also be held at the SIU-C Student Center at the following times: Friday, Nov. 7 in the Ohio Room at 1 p.m. and 2:30 p.m.; Monday, Nov. 10 in the Illinois Room at 1 p.m. and 2:30 p.m. and in the Mackinaw Room at 7 p.m.; Tuesday, Nov. 11 in the Ohio Room at 1:30 p.m. and 2:45 p.m., and in the Mackinaw Room at 7 p.m.; Wednesday, Nov. 12 in the Illinois Room at 1:30 p.m. and 2:45 p.m.; Thursday, Nov. 13 in the Mississippi Room at 1 p.m. and 2:30 p.m.; Friday, Nov. 14 in the Mackinaw Room at 1 p.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Workshops will also be held during the following week at the Student Center.

Summer reduction is target

Food service cut draws fire

By Scott Canon
Staff Writer

The manner in which the summer reduction of University Food Service was announced has drawn opposition from the University Civil Service Council.

The council decided at its monthly meeting Wednesday to send a letter to SIU-C President Albert Somit and the University Personnel Office stating its opposition to announcing the closing of residence hall food service during the summer through the media.

Phyllis McCowen, council chairperson, said, "We don't think it was good management to tell people they were going to be laid-off through newspaper."

McCowen said the first time food service employees knew of the summer closing was when they read an article in the Oct. 21 edition of the Daily Egyptian. The article, which dealt with the University's efforts to balance its budget, also announced the reduction of food service for the summer.

With all votes in, 'REAGAN' plate winds up a loser

CHICAGO (AP)—It was the only REAGAN loss election night.

It was state Rep. Donald R. Totten's special auto license plate—"REAGAN."

Totten, R-Hoffman Estates, the president-elect's Illinois campaign chairman, reported Wednesday that his license plate was stolen earlier in the day while his car was in a parking lot at the hotel where Illinois supporters of Reagan had celebrated his election.

"Apparently, someone wanted a souvenir," said Totten.

He said he has reordered the license plate from the secretary of state's office.

The license was the only thing Totten lost. He won election to the Illinois Senate on Tuesday.

In other action, the council, which represents the 1,900 civil service employees on campus, decided to send another letter to Somit requesting the council be given a position on the Intercollegiate Athletics Committee.

The committee, set up to review SIU-C's athletics program, has representatives from all University constituencies except the council, McCowen said.

"I just think if all the other constituencies have representatives, we should too," McCowen said.

BOLT to hold dinner, dance, fashion show

By Colleen Moore
Staff Writer

The Blacks Open Laboratory Theater is presenting "Sine Qua Non," a program including a dinner, three fashion shows, a dance and a pageant.

Artistic director Cecil Abbott of BOLT said sine qua non, which is Latin for "without which there is nothing," was created to get campus organizations and students together. It will be held at the Student Center ballrooms from noon Sunday to 1:30 p.m. Monday.

The program will begin with an ethnic dish buffet dinner, which includes African egg rolls, curried chicken, African greens, lemon pie and two kinds of rice and drinks. Music, poetry and dramatic presentations will provide entertainment during dinner.

After dinner, male and female students will model in three fashion shows. One show will be a regular fashion show, another will involve dancing and one will be dramatic modeling in a hotel setting. Each show will have a different panel of judges.

One of the models will be chosen as Miss or Mr. Sine Qua Non. "Usually a girl wins because the men are not judged by makeup," Abbott said.

At 7 p.m. contestants will perform in the talent competition. Individuals and groups will demonstrate their talent in dramatic poetry, singing and dancing. Instrumentalists will perform on the piano, trumpet and saxophone.

After the talent portion, a play called "Love Defined" will be presented by BOLT members to explain the meanings of love.

During the day, guests may play carnival-type games, coordinated by the Delta Zeta sorority.

A dance will start at 10:30 p.m., and sometime after it starts, a stepping competition involving singing and dancing will be performed by fraternity and sorority members.

Tickets for the entire day's activities are on sale for $5; $3 is the charge for the talent competition, play and dance; $1 is the charge for the dance only.

Half-million church followers campaign against sex on TV

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP)—In a battle against sex on television, the Joelton Church of Christ sees itself as David against a mighty Goliath. And its stones are finding their mark.

The church says its 8-month-old "clean up television" campaign has attracted more than a half million followers in the United States and Canada. It has been commended by the Southern Baptist Convention's Christian Life Commission and endorsed by conservative TV evangelist Jerry Falwell.

The group's pressure also prompted one of TV's largest sponsors, Warner-Lambert Co., to revise its advertising policy and withdraw commercials from four shows the church considers morally offensive.

"I think there are a lot of people in this country who are frustrated by what is going on in television today," said John Hurt, church pastor and spokesman for the group. "People have said to themselves a thousand times, 'Somebody ought to do something, so we did.'"

Working from the small church in Joelton, a Nashville suburb, participants surveyed several hundred Church of Christ members across the nation to compile a list of TV shows considered offensive.

Heading the list were NBC's "Saturday Night Live," CBS' "Dallas" and ABC's "Soap," "Three's Company" and

"Charlie's Angels"

Syndicated shows listed as offensive were "The Newlywed Game," "The Dating Game" and "Three's a Crowd."

Television's best shows, according to the survey, included NBC's "Little House on the Prairie" and CBS' "60 Minutes."

Ignoring networks and producers, the campaign went after the economic soul of television—the advertisers. Three corporations were warned to withdraw their commercials from "offensive" shows or face boycotts of their products.

The three are Warner-Lambert, which makes such products as Listerine, Roloids, Shick razors and Trident gum; General Foods Corp.—Maxwell House Coffee, Jell-O and Kool-Aid; and American Home Products—Chef Boy-Ar-Dee meals, Gulden's Mustard and Sani-Flush, among others.

Hurt said more companies would be targeted later.

Through mass mailings the campaign enlisted 6,000 Church of Christ branches and received signed, preprinted cards from more than 500,000 people pledging to carry out a boycott if called, said Hurt.

The cards' message indicated distress over TV shows "that depict scenes of adultery, sexual perversion or incest, or which treat immorality in a joking or otherwise favorable light."

Jack Sholl, public relations director for Warner-Lambert in Morris Plains, N.J., said the company "shares many of their concerns about quality and content of television."

Sholl said the company agreed to revise its advertising policy, which he said had been concerned primarily with television violence, to include stronger prohibitions against sexual material.

Warner-Lambert recently quit advertising on "Saturday Night Live," "The Newlywed Game," "The Dating Game" and "Three's a Crowd," Sholl said the campaign's role in those decisions was that of a "consciousness-raiser."

Hurt said Warner-Lambert's response pleased the group, but on Oct. 5 it began boycotting the other companies because they took no similar action.

American Home Products refused comment concerning the campaign, but Kathleen MacDonough of General Foods said the company resents the boycott because it already has a 20-year-old policy against advertising on shows it considers offensive.

She said General Foods, television's second-largest advertiser, screens every episode of prime-time shows it sponsors and each season withdraws ads from about 100 episodes it considers objectionable.

There she'll be . . . Miss Eboness

By Mary Williams Student Writer

After ten long weeks of practice, eight young women will wait to see who will be crowned Miss Eboness 1990 Saturday night at Shryock Auditorium.

The pageant, sponsored by Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity Inc., was developed in the early 1970s and has become a yearly event. This year's pageant features the theme "Episode of Euphoria." Tony Curtis, fraternity member with the Beta Eta Chapter, said the pageant will be held in memory of James Roberts, a Beta Eta member who died of leukemia in 1976, and will portray the accomplishments of black women.

The contestants will be judged on their personalities, etiquette, attitudes, talents and other criteria that will be announced at the pageant, Curtis said.

"It's not just a talent pageant. The judges will be looking for someone to portray the ideal black woman," Curtis said.

The contestants are Valesta Cobbs, Leslie Cole, Robin Jones, Ruthie Lewis, Laverne Norman, Annette Russey, Donna Ward and Loretta Young.

The 1979 Miss Eboness, Yvonne Fouts, will be present to crown her successor.

Judges will be Patricia McNeil, director of off-campus housing; Dorothy Smith, fiscal advisor to the Black Affairs Council and advisor to the Inter Greek Council; Robert Spivey, assistant basketball coach; and Benjamin Shepherd, associate vice-president for Academic Affairs and Research.

Doris DeShazo, senior in radio-television, and Chet Sisk, sophomore in radio-television, will co-host the pageant.

Noncompetitive entertainment will be provided by a musical ensemble and the Black Fire Dancers.

Tickets are available at Shryock Auditorium.

The cougar is out of the bag! Makes visit to Daily Egyptian

By Bill Turley
News Editor

Kato roared through Carbondale Thursday.

Kato is a 5½-month-old male cougar. He was a tough interview but fortunately he brought along his trainer, Dee Widner, to help make the conversation flow.

Widner and Kato were in town to promote Vogler Ford, a local car dealership. Widner said she travels around the country visiting two or three Ford dealerships a week with cats like Kato. She has two cougars with her in Carbondale, Kato and another older, larger cat, Fafhard, which Widner owns. Fafhard didn't come along for the trip into the Daily Egyptian newsroom, which is just as well, as Kato fidgeted like a cat on a hot tin roof the whole time.

From her end of Kato's leash, Widner said this was the cat's first trip, but they had been on the road for about a month and Kato was almost "like a pro." Kato roared in agreement.

Widner has a degree in animal sciences from New Mexico State. She worked for a veterinarian who handled exotic animals. She has also worked for Cougars Unlimited, located outside Arlington, Texas, for about a year and a half. It's like a dream come true for her to work with cougars because, she said, "I'm partial to big cats."

"I'm doing what I want to do," She hugged Kato tighter as he struggled to run free.

The cats used on the Lincoln-Mercury television commercials are sometimes from her company, Widner said.

Widner said there are three or four tours like hers going on at any one time. She travels in a pickup truck with an insulated top on the back of it. The cats are put in traveling cages and placed in the rear of the truck. A larger show cage is pulled behind the truck, Widner said.

Dee Widner cuddles Kato the cougar. Widner will be in town until Saturday with Kato and another cougar, Fafhard.

She said the cougar, whose Eastern subspecies is on the endangered list, is a remarkable animal. It can sprint 25 mph. It can jump 15 feet straight up. Cougars have been known to make broad jumps of up to 40 feet and can jump from a 60 foot ledge to the ground. The males, which are larger than the females, grow to 200 pounds and can be 9 feet long. They have an average life expectancy of 18 years.

But don't rush out and try to buy a cougar. Widner said in order to own one, persons have to be licensed by the United States Department of Agriculture. She didn't recommend cougars as pets.

Widner, 35, said though she has never been seriously mauled by her cats, they have drawn blood from her, but "never enough to go to the hospital." Kato is a declawed animal.

"Kato's opinion of the whole deal? An emphatic "rowrr."

Since Jean Paratore, coordinator of intramurals, has been combined and the department streamlined, men's and women's sports have come to SIU-C. Lights for the IM fields are her next goal.

Paratore sees 'bright' future for intramural sports program

By Glenn Jewett
Student Writer

Her budget is a small fraction of that of either the men's or women's athletic departments, yet the number of athletes she takes care of are many times greater than those that Gale Sayers and Charlotte West have combined.

Jean Paratore, coordinator of intramurals, offers no scholarships and her best athletes get rewarded with only a t-shirt or visor. None of her athletes will ever be drafted by Tampa Bay.

Paratore came to SIU-C in 1974 as coordinator of women's intramurals. At that time the only intramurals for women were basketball, volleyball, 6-inch softball and tennis. Volleyball, 16-inch softball and tennis mixed doubles were the only corec sports.

Then came the merger of men's and women's intramurals when the Recreation Building opened in 1977. Paratore was named coordinator of men's and women's intramurals.

"If I had to pick the two biggest changes since I have been here," the 32-year-old Paratore said, "it would have to be the merger of the two departments and the wide variety of activities that are now offered."

When asked about any plans for the future, Paratore looks out of her office window in the Recreation Building and examines the beat up intramural fields across Grand Avenue. "My next big concern is lights for the intramural fields, but that may be a long way off."

Paratore estimated that it would cost $35-40,000 to light land the size of two IM football fields, but she added that first the land would have to be renovated at a cost of $2,000 per acre.

"Those fields are in terrible shape. We are going to try and do two acres at a time and put a fence around it to keep students out until the grass grows," Paratore said. "The only problem is all this costs a lot of money."

"Most universities this size do have lights for their intramural department. We will not get a full season of football in until we do get lights."

This year, the flag football season was cut short by one to two games per team. If bad weather hits Carbondale, the playoffs might not be finished until after Thanksgiving break. During an easy work week, Paratore said she works between 50-60 hours. She starts at 8:30 a.m. and leaves at 5:30 p.m. at the earliest. At night she spends a minimum of two hours working at home and on Wednesday nights she attends a class that will go towards her doctorate.

Paratore said that when she first took her position, fights were common in men's intramurals. But that has changed.

"We have not had a fight in two years," Paratore said. "The men's program has really stabilized. There is more of a call for the sportsman than ever before. The officials have helped in that respect very much. Brad Bennett has done a tremendous job training the officials."

Paratore is hoping that the computer that was delivered at the beginning of the semester will soon be ready to be put in use. The computer should help tremendously in scheduling, checking eligibility, and compiling statistics.

"The computer will even check a student's ID before entering the Recreation Building. Paratore estimated that this will save the Recreation Building $30,000 per year.

Bears' defender

gets 'hit' with fine

LAKE FOREST (AP) — Defensive end Mike Hartenstein of the Chicago Bears Thursday refused to comment on the $1,000 fine assessed against him by the National Football League.

Hartenstein received a telegram informing him of the fine for an alleged helmet-first sack of Philadelphia quarterback Ron Jaworski in the second quarter of the game a week ago Sunday.

Gym team vaulting to Hoosier state

Leapfrog is not an event in men's gymnastics competition, but Saluki Coach Bill Meade is hoping his team will jump over a few of the other teams which finished ahead of SIU-C in the Midwest District last year.

The Salukis will compete in the Collegiate Classic in Columbus, Ind., this weekend and will take advantage of an opportunity to polish the routines of the individual competitors, according to Meade.

"This meet is for individual championships only and there will be no team scoring," Meade said. "We will get to see what some of our other people can do individually. Hopefully, some of these individuals will develop to where we will have a strong team and can leapfrog over some of the teams which finished ahead of us in the conference."

Meade said he will hold Brian Babcock and Randy Bettis out of the floor exercises and will enter Red Barut, Joe Tate and John Levy in that event. Each team is allowed to enter three people in each event.

The coach is holding Babcock out because the floor at Columbus has no spring to it and Babcock is still wary of an ankle injury suffered last season. Barut, Tate and Levy won the right to enter the floor exercise following a tryout held in practice.

Babcock, Herb Voss and Darrell Wagstaff will be entered in the pommel horse event. These three make up the regular pommel horse lineup and the coach said he would stick with them because the team needs to improve and gain experience in that event.

Based on the high scores at the Big Eight competition last weekend, Meade will enter Babcock and Tom-Slowski in the rings event. A tryout was to be held in practice to determine the third entrant.

Babcock, Barut and the winner of a practice tryout will be entered in the vaulting competition. In the parallel bars competition will be Babcock, Dave Hoffman and Murph Melton. Babcock is also in the high bar competition with Warren Brantley and either Kevin Mazieka or Jim Muenz.

Meade said the tryouts will improve the team by making the gymnasts work harder at the individual aspect of the sport.

"It's a nice relief to hold tryouts for change, rather than have to look around for healthy bodies to stick in the lineup," the coach said. "Individual meets are a lot of fun for the gymnasts, but the coach doesn't get too excited. They were really pumped up after doing so well against some of the best gymnasts in the country last week. We have had quite a few changes from last year and have to get our routines ready for the important meets."

Meade said the Collegiate Classic will allow his team to see what it has to do to beat teams from Indiana and Illinois and will ready the team for the Windy City meet Nov. 21-22 in Chicago.

"Chicago-Circle was the representative from our district last year and we want to finish ahead of them," Meade said. "Minnesota is another tough team we will have to face at Windy City. They just missed qualifying for the NCAA meet last year."

If it's sick to love a pen, then the world's going crazy.

It happened to secretaries first. Then lawyers, bookkeepers, waitresses, cabbies, housewives, and businessmen succumbed to the beauty of our Pilot Razor Point and Fineline pens.

Some people felt it was sick to get so emotionally involved with our pens. But is it really so crazy to love a Pilot Razor Point pen that writes with a sharp smooth line and costs a mere 79¢? Is it nuts to flip over its unique little metal collar that smartly helps to keep its point from going squish?

If it's crazy, it's going to surprise a whole lot of people. In fact, we understand that Pilot Razor Point even has what it takes to score extra points with football players.

It also comes to our attention that many coaches are fans of the Pilot Fineline. Along with all the other Razor Point features, the 69¢ Pilot Fineline has the strength and drive to go through carbons. It's hard to resist a pen that holds the line like a Pilot.

Senior quarterback Gerald Carr runs the option around end for a big gain in the Salukis' win over Eastern Illinois. Carr has run for 308 yards and six touchdowns through the team's first eight games.

an average of four yards per carry. SIU-C begins a string of three home games Saturday against Fresno State. Kickoff is slated for 1:30 p.m. at McAndrew Stadium.

'Home sweet home' awaits gridgers

After spending six of the first eight weeks of the football season on the road, the Salukis have come home to stay.

Saturday's 1:30 p.m. non-conference game with Fresno State in the familiar surroundings of McAndrew Stadium is the first of three home games SIU-C will play in closing out the 1980 season.

The game with the Bulldogs is the first meeting ever between SIU-C and the California school and is the first home game the Salukis have had since Oct. 4 when they lost to Northern Illinois, 20-17.

"Our kids are happy to be back home. It should have a big effect on us," SIU-C Coach Rey Dempsey said. "The key will be if we can stop their passing game and if our offense can come back strong."

Last week, the Salukis offensive unit, the leading rushing team in the Missouri Valley Conference averaging 263 yards per game, was held to only 156 yards and managed only a field goal in the team's 21-3 loss to Southwestern Louisiana.

"That was the first time we've been stopped all year,"

Dempsey said. "I'm confident in our kids ability to put it back together."

The Bulldogs have an outstanding defensive backfield so they frequently use man-to-man coverage. At times, they may play 10 men on the line of scrimmage. Their linebackers frequently blitz or look for the run, rather than help on pass coverage.

"Most pro-oriented teams don't have linebackers who come up and support like theirs do," Dempsey said. "They are more vulnerable to the run, but you have to run at the right spot. In our game plan, we know we can't just run. We are going to have to pass."

Sophomore tailback Jeff Ware, who took over for injured Walter Poole in the Indiana State game three weeks ago, has missed practice with an ankle injury. As of Thursday, Dempsey said Ware probably would not start. His spot would be taken by senior Don Vinson.

In attacking the Bulldog secondary, the Saluki receivers have been concentrating on man-to-man sharp-breaking pass routes and cuts. Dempsey added that sophomore quarterback Rich Johnson may see action in passing situations.

The big test defensively will be trying to stop Fresno State's pro-style passing attack.

"The fans will see the ball in the air," Dempsey said. "The West Coast teams recruit a lot of skill players and use a 'pro' attack. They'll throw from anywhere on the field, from their own five or going in for the touchdown."

The coach said the Bulldogs' favorite receivers are fullback Ted Torosian running curbs out of the backfield and wide receiver Henry Ellard, who likes to cut across the middle.

Dempsey said his young defensive secondary of freshman Terry Taylor, sophomores Greg Shipp and Gaylord McCoy and senior Neal Furlong have improved in recent weeks. He added that they will utilize different types of coverage.

"Our pass defense is better. They are getting closer to the ball," Dempsey said. "They'll catch some balls, we can't shut them off completely. It will be a test for our defense. Fresno State knows what they're doing."

"We'll have to play a variety of defenses. We can't play straight 'vanilla,'" Dempsey said. "We'll have to put blitzes on, play some man defense, or rush a few and play a prevent defense. You may see a three-, four- or five-man rush."

The coach said linebackers Rick Bielecki, Mike Rager, Tony Bleyer and Luther Foster will have a tough time covering the backs out of the backfield on pass routes, as well as helping on coverage of wide receivers on short patterns.

Dempsey expressed another concern—the Fresno State special teams.

"They are a gambling team in the kicking game," Dempsey said. "They have tried to run from punt formation from deep in their own territory. "It shouldn't be a good game. They don't look like a 3-5 team to me."

The Bulldogs are coached by Jim Sweeney, who returned to Fresno this year after a two-year absence. Sweeney served as offensive backfield coach for the Oakland Raiders and St. Louis Cardinals of the National Football League for the past two seasons.

The Salukis, 3-5, need to win each of their remaining games to avoid having their first losing season since 1977. Saturday's game has been designated Pepsi Day.

Lady net spikers 'rose' to the occasion during rout

The graduating seniors on the Saluki volleyball team received roses to commemorate their final home game as an SIU-C player and although the team won, everything didn't come up roses.

The Salukis defeated Indiana State 15-1, 15-13, 15-12. Fittingly, senior Fay Chea served the final point and senior Peggy Moore made the last kill in the last varsity sporting event to be played in Davies Gym before its scheduled renovation.

The win wasn't a lesson in great volleyball and Coach Debbie Hunter wasn't exactly pleased by the team's performance but she said the first game was representative of the team's upset over Ohio State last weekend.

"We had a different starting lineup than is normal in all three games," Hunter said. "We used a lot of different people to get some experience in preparation for what we will have to face at the state tournament. We used different people for the middle attack and they hit well."

The Salukis let up in the last two games and Hunter said the Sycamores were able to score easily because the Saluki defense lapsed and there was a lack of defensive digging.

"Indiana's hitting was unorthodox because they didn't approach the net and mount a really hard attack," she said.

"Their shoulders would show they were going to hit one way and they would turn around and hit the other way. They were difficult to play because their hitting is not what you are prepared for. We made some serving errors in the last game that were totally uncalled for and that was discouraging."

Hunter said she saw only three pluses in the play of her Salukis.

"Bonnie Norrenberns showed her best attack in a competitive situation all year early in that first game," Hunter said. "She hit through the block in the middle and hit cross court well. The second plus was Indiana dumping the ball over on the second move and they telegraphed it for four days before Peggy Moore finally picked it up and put the ball back over the net. The third plus was that so many different people attacked and attacked well."
