Clinton calls for policy 'continuity'

Los Angeles Times

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—President-elect Bill Clinton moved Wednesday to reassure both international allies and domestic financial markets by issuing a call for "continuity" until he takes office in January and declaring that the nation's fate remains in President Bush's hands until then.

Speaking to reporters in the back yard of the governor's mansion here, Clinton also said he will seek a bipartisan approach to foreign policy.

"I urge America's friends and foes alike to recognize as I do that America has only one president at a time," Clinton said. "America's foreign policy remains solely in (Bush's) hands. And even as America's administrations change, America's fundamental interests do not."

"The greatest gesture of good will any nation can make toward me is to continue their full cooperation during this period with our one president, George Bush. And ... the greatest mistake any adversary could make would be to doubt America's resolve during this period of transition."

Even as he spoke of continuity, however, Clinton was planning for the formal takeover of power Jan. 20. He met Wednesday with members of his presidential transition team.

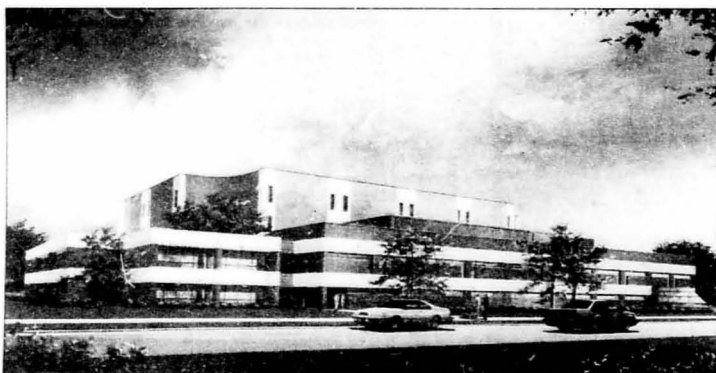

Clinton's senior campaign staff said the message that the Arkansas governor seeks to send this week is that he is moving swiftly to grapple with the nation's concerns.

"The message is we're ready to get to work, ready to work on the man date that people offered yesterday—a mandate for economic change," said George Stephanopoulos, the campaign's communications director.

Proposed Biological Sciences building

$39.2 million to go to construction

By Jeremy Finley
Special Assignment Writer

The University is preparing to utilize the $39.2 million released by Gov. Jim Edgar for two construction sites on campus.

Edgar announced the funding Oct. 30 for adding to the campus heating plant and for building a new biological science laboratory and research building to aid in the state's higher education infrastructure.

"We must continue to invest in our educational infrastructure as a means to improving our economy," Edgar said in a press release. "Good classrooms and other facilities are essential to assuring that Illinois will have a competent and competitive workforce for the 1990s and well into the 21st century."

James Tweedy, vice president for administration, said SIUC was fortunate to be chosen for the funding of the two projects.

"It is my understanding that several projects across the state are being funded, but we are very fortunate that two of ours were chosen," he said.

Tweedy said the selection process had been in work for some time before the announcement was made.

"The governor decided the state financial situation looked better than it did a year ago," he said.

Allen Haake, SIUC architect/engineer, said the funding was expected for the buildings.

"This is a high priority project," he said. "We expected them to release the money sometime soon."

The funds include $25.2 million for a 14,000-square-foot addition to the central heating plant.

Edgar said the new facility will help the University and the Illinois coal industry.

"In addition to increasing the physical plant's ability to produce heat and electricity for the

Prof: Timber harvesting benefits overlooked by environmentalists

By John Rezanka
Environmental Writer

Forestry experts call the U.S. Forest Service's ecosystems management approach to forestry a forward thinking plan for the responsible management of national forests. Local environmentalists call ecosystems management a misleading, meaningless term used to justify cutting timber.

But both agree management decisions have to be made on a case-by-case basis.

Paul Roth, a professor of forestry at SIUC, said well-meaning environmentalists who are determined to stop logging in the Shawnee National Forest sometimes overlook the benefits of conscientious timber management.

Harvesting timber can have a positive influence on the forest ecosystem, Roth said. Conditions such as the intrusion of undesirable species of trees, the maturation of timber stands and infestations of insects and disease can be controlled by carefully managed cutting.

"About 40 percent of our

Student vote up

Student precincts show an increase in voter turnout

By John McCadd
Politics Writer

Voter turnout Tuesday in heavily student-populated areas had an 11 percent increase—a major contributor to the 14 percent rise in Jackson County voting.

Voter turnout in Carbondale precincts 10, 11, 22, 23, 25 and 26, which are dominantly populated by students, increased from 2500 in 1988 to about 2900 in 1992.

County officials attribute the upsurge to an apparent Democratic voting trend in Jackson County, which was catalyzed by economic problems blamed on the Republicans.

"I guess people just weren't satisfied with (President George) Bush," said Donna Lemming, Deputy Jackson County Clerk. "There were a lot more Democratic votes, which is possibly due to student participation."

John Foster, SIUC associate professor of political science, said Jackson County historically has tended to vote Democratic.

Tuesday's outstanding Democrat majority could be because of the University community, which composes most of the county's population, he said.

He said the Democrat voting tradition possibly can account for Jackson County's majority for state Senate candidate Kenneth Buzbee and 1988 presidential candidate Michael Dukakis — both of whom lost overall.

Lemming said voters generally had more interest in this year's election — a theory proven by an increase in absentee ballots from about 700 in 1988 to 1,000 in 1992.

"You have to want to vote to fill out an absentee ballot," Fosier said. "It takes significant effort for people to vote absentee because of the paperwork involved."

Barbara Brown, Southern Illinois Democrat committeewoman, said the increase in Democrat voting perhaps was inflated by the economy and a willingness to elect the first black woman to Congress.

"More people got involved in Carol Moseley Braun's victory —

How Students at SIUC Voted

Student precincts recorded this year more Democrat votes than in the last three elections. More students also registered for the 1992 election, but the voter turnout percentage was lower. Students continue to vote in lower numbers than other voters in Jackson County.

Atlantic Division brings new faces

Zapnews

The departures of Larry Bird in Boston and Charles Barkley in Philadelphia, a huge off-season trade by New York, a major coaching change in New Jersey and the addition of top pick Shaquille O'Neal in Orlando should make for an interesting race in the NBA Atlantic Division this season.

The New York Knicks are the pre-season favorites to win the Atlantic after addressing various needs in the off-season. Boston will be tough as usual despite the loss of Bird and the New Jersey Nets and the Miami Heat once again will battle for the final playoff spots with their young and talented teams.

Knicks, Celtics favored in preseason rankings

The Magic will improve with Shaquille, while Philadelphia and Washington are expected to battle in order to stay out of the cellar.

On August 18th, 1992, the legendary Bird announced his retirement from the NBA after an illustrious 13-year career.

THE 35-YEAR-OLD BIRD, who was the heart and soul of the Celtics, was suffering from chronic back problems which forced him to miss 59 games over the last two years. The three-time NBA Most Valuable Player and 11-time All-Star led Boston to three NBA

Championships in the 1980s.

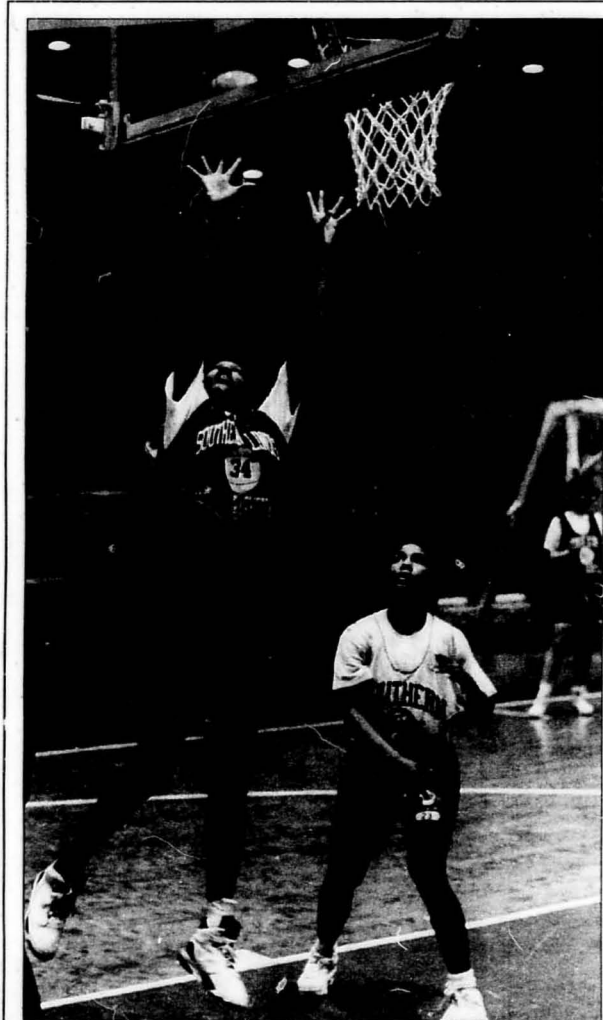

Boston, however, proved that it was capable of life without Bird last season by winning 15 of its final 16 games to nip the Knicks for the Atlantic Division crown. The Celtics went on to sweep Indiana in the first round of the playoffs without Bird before losing to Cleveland in seven games in the Eastern Conference Semifinals.

All-Star guard Reggie Lewis has emerged as the Celtics' key player in the absence of Bird. The 6-foot-7 swingman led the team in both regular season scoring (20.8 ppg) and playoff scoring (28.0 ppg). Lewis also led the Celtics in steals and blocked shots.

Joining Lewis in the backcourt is athletic point guard Dee Brown, who missed most of last season with knee injuries and problems with dizzy spells. John Bagley and

SIUC comes to end of road with SMSU

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

The long road ahead for the SIUC spikers leads to the doors of Missouri Valley Conference opponents Southwest Missouri State and Tulsa this weekend as the end of the 1992 volleyball season draws near.

The Salukis, 12-13, will look for victory on the road to make a final impression on their MVC foes while Tulsa, 0-19, is yearning for its first victory, and SMSU, 17-6, an MVC championship.

Head coach Sonya Locke said her team will not give up and may look to be the spoilers of the MVC.

"We will have to make our own changes so that we are better every time we step on the court," she said. "There still may be a possibility of getting to the tournament, and if not, we can maybe pull some upsets in our efforts."

No. 1 ranked SMSU will be the first stop of the MVC road trip Friday. The Salukis will face a strong Bears team that swept them convincingly 15-5, 15-5, 15-2 in Davies Gym earlier in the season.

Illinois State and Northern Iowa have already gotten revenge for losses suffered to SMSU earlier in the season, and if the Salukis are on top of their game, they could get theirs as well, Locke said.

"If we can have a solid passing and blocking game, I find our offense and defense to be just as strong as theirs is," she said. "If we

Jordan to try for seventh consecutive scoring title

Los Angeles Times

Central Division (Teams selected in predicted order of finish)

1. Chicago Bulls 1991-92 record: 67-15.

Outlook: Michael Jordan goes after his seventh consecutive scoring title, trying to tie Wilt Chamberlain. Jordan is being chased by the Knicks, the Cavaliers and some teammates. But what if he isn't best friends with Horace Grant? It didn't seem to make much difference the last two seasons. The addition of Rodney McCray to back up Scottie Pippen was a nice move and should provide a much more secure feeling than having Byron Houston, the first-round draft pick who has since been traded.

The numbers game: Although he spends lots of his time slashing through traffic and battling double- and triple-teaming and physical defenses, Jordan has stayed strong and sound enough to have missed only three games the last six seasons.

2. Cleveland Cavaliers 1991-92 record: 57-25.

Outlook: The Lakers made popular the saying, "No rebounds, no rings." The Cavaliers finished 19th in the league in rebounding last season. That is the challenge if they hope to overtake the Bulls. The addition of Gerald Wilkins should help a team that already has talent—Mark Price, Brad Daugherty and Larry Nance. Coach Lenny Wilkens needs 50 victories to move into second place on the all-time list, behind only Red Auerbach.

The numbers game: The Cavaliers are 102-59 with Mark Price in the lineup the last three seasons, 30-55 without.

3. Detroit Pistons 1991-92 record: 48-34.

Outlook: How the mighty have fallen. Some are picking the Pistons fifth or sixth, but some talent remains—namely Joe Dumars, Isiah Thomas and Dennis Rodman. Come this season, though, there are more questions than answers.

The numbers game: The 18.7 rebounds a game by Rodman were the most in the NBA since 1971-72.

Lakers spirits down after Magic's retirement

Los Angeles Times

INGLEWOOD, Calif.—What remained of the Los Angeles Lakers went back to work Tuesday.

Their spirits weren't sky high after Magic Johnson's re-retirement, but they weren't mimeshaft low, either. By now, this team knows the drill.

"I know there's a potential down time," Coach Randy Pfund said. "We've just got to work on making sure we stay upbeat.

"We talked a little about it (Monday). I think it is, hopefully, an advantage for this team that we went through a somewhat similar situation (after Johnson's first retirement a year ago). I don't think there's quite the emotional strain, because it's not Earvin's health that is in question."

The question now, though, is the same as it was last season:

Who will take over Johnson's role as leader?

As last season, it will now be a committee job.

"I think I have to provide some of that leadership," Pfund said. "And some of our veterans have to provide some of that leadership. It always comes better if it comes from a point guard. That guy's a natural leader and a natural quarterback. He's a natural guy to be telling people where to be. It's always a little more difficult for a guy like James (Worthy) or Byron (Scott), who's not your leader out on the floor per se, to be thrust into that role.

"But these guys played a huge factor in keeping us together last year when we had every reason to fall apart, and I have every confidence they'll do that again."

Johnson will go back to trying to buy an NBA team, his agent said.

"He stopped when he came back but now he's back to that," Lon Rosen said.

Johnson also plans a barnstorming trip abroad with other retired players.

FIGHTING CONTINUES IN RUSSIA — A ceasefire between Ossetians and Ingushes was concluded late Wednesday in North Ossetia, but appeared to have no effect, according to news agency reports from the embattled republic on the southern rim of the Russian Federation. In the suburbs of Vladikavkaz, the Ossetian capital, fierce street-by-street fighting was continuing, the Interfax news agency reported. The ceasefire was negotiated with envoys from the Ingushes, who are trying to reclaim lost land.

CITY PARLIAMENT APOLOGIZES TO JEWS — The Rostock city parliament offered an official apology Wednesday for remarks by a city official suggesting that Israel was the proper home of German Jewish community leader Ignatz Bubis. The remarks by Karl-Heinz Schmidt, a local Christian Democratic Union official, revealed "an attitude of mind" that disqualified Schmidt from political office, city parliament president Christoph Kleemann said.

TURKISH FORCES KILL KURDS — Turkish forces Wednesday killed at least 17 Kurdish fighters in northern Iraq, the semi-official Turkish news agency Anadolu reported. Turkish tanks and troops with air support "destroyed the last nest of opposition of separatist terrorists" in the Kishan valley, Anadolu said. The final death toll of guerrillas of the Kurdish Workers Party was expected to be considerably higher after the body count had been completed, the agency added.

BRITAIN TO SEEK ACTIVE ROLE — Britain needs to play a central role in the European Community so that it can actively fight against any centralization, British Prime Minister John Major told the House of Commons at the start of a debate Wednesday. The house was debating the Maastricht Treaties, which lay the groundwork for European monetary union and increase the authority of various joint E.C. structures.

RUSSIAN PARLIAMENT RATIFIES TREATY — The Russian parliament Wednesday became the first former Soviet republic to ratify the Strategic Arms Reductions Treaty negotiated between the former Soviet Union and the United States, agency Interf. Some 157 of the deputies present voted for the treaty, while 26 abstained. Only one deputy voted against ratification. The treaty was signed on July 31, 1991 by U.S. President George Bush and then Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

SOUTH AFRICA APPROVES OF CLINTON — South African black political leaders Wednesday expressed that U.S. President-elect Bill Clinton would advance the cause of democracy in South Africa. "I look forward to our continued co-operation, especially with regard to the accomplishment of the common objectives of ending the system of apartheid and transforming South Africa into a non-racial and non-sexist democracy," African National Congress President Nelson Mandela said.

Dracula to fight good fight

Health department appoints vampire as AIDS spokesman

By Casey Hampton
Special Assignment Writer

The infamous creature of the night is trading his blood-red fangs for a purple heart by shedding some light on the AIDS epidemic.

The Illinois Department of Public Health recently enlisted Dracula as its new AIDS spokesman to urge Illinois teenagers to protect themselves against HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

"Stop living in the dark—get the facts about AIDS," Dracula says in his message. "When I learned about AIDS, I changed my ways. If I can control myself, so can you."

Health department publicist Judy Plazyk said many mythical creatures haunt health officials' attempts at AIDS education, such as the belief a person can become HIV infected from a mosquito bite or using the same drinking fountain or toilet seat an HIV-infected person has used.

She said Dracula is being brought aboard the campaign wagon to creatively lay to rest many of the misconceptions and enigmas surrounding AIDS.

"We're using one myth to combat another," she said. "Using Dracula is our attempt to reach more people and intrigue them enough to see what we've got to say. If they don't think it can happen to them, they don't pay attention—and this is one way to get them to pay attention."

According to health department statistics, about one-fifth of Illinois high school freshmen surveyed in 1991 did not know methods to reduce the chances of HIV infection—such as condom use and abstinence—and 40 percent did not know HIV-infected persons can spread the virus even though they do not have AIDS-related illnesses.

But more than half of the freshman males and more than one-third of the freshman females surveyed reported they have had sex.

Sporting phrases such as "Beware of fly-by-night relationships," spokesman Tom Schafer said the campaign targets teenagers and young adults, who account for one-fifth of all AIDS cases reported in Illinois.

"For the most part, people have a good understanding of HIV and AIDS, but we're trying to increase awareness that this can happen to them—they need to transport this into their own mind," Schafer said. "Dracula is a more light-hearted attempt at this than we've had in the past."

The campaign, one in a series of cooperative education campaigns with the state's 84 local health departments, first was begun and became successful in Georgia, which offered the program to other states.

Schafer said the success of the program in Georgia led the health department to purchase the package for Illinois. The package cost $25,000.

"After reviewing and discussing the campaign, we realized that it sold very well with kids," he said. "Dracula makes them pick up the information."

Although the November release of "Bram Stoker's Dracula" will carry the campaign along, Schafer said the department prefers to remain dissociated with the film because of its graphic, violent and sexual content, which impairs the message of the Dracula campaign.

Group offers spring trip to New York

By Vincent S. Boyd
Business Writer

A trip to New York City during spring break designed to allow students to market themselves to different companies is a chance to grasp the future, said an administrator in the College of Business and Administration.

Michael Haywood, faculty adviser for Blacks Interested in Business, said the trip will provide students a chance that not many people get.

"This trip presents a golden opportunity for students interested in making it in New York City," Haywood said. "They can chase their dreams without sacrificing everything."

The trip to New York, which will be March 12-21, 1993, is sponsored by the On-Song Communications Group, an organization based in Carbondale that does public relations for gospel and secular artists.

Debra Reese, a senior in advanced technical studies from Atlanta and president of On-Song, said the purpose of the trip is to expose students to different career opportunities.

"There is a wide variety of career possibilities in New York, and our goal is to make the students aware of them," Reese said. "From their experience, they should be able to better assess their marketability."

Reese said students will be exposed to selected career enhancement meetings with corporate executives from a variety of professions.

She said of the companies participating, the more well-known include Sony Entertainment, Def Jam Recordings and the New York Stock Exchange.

Haywood said exposure to such big-name entities is something all students should consider.

"It is not often when students can meet with corporate executives in the financial mecca of the world," Haywood said. "Everyone serious about being successful should give this trip some thought."

Reese, who started On-Song after working in public relations with the Benson Music Group, the second largest gospel label in the country, said her connections will make the trip worthwhile.

"With the people I know and the use of my referent power, students are going to come in contact with the people who call the shots in New York," Reese said.

She said that although the trip is for career purposes, there is an entertainment agenda.

The students will visit places such as the Schomburg Museum, an professional basketball game the Def Comedy Jam, the Apollo Theatre, the Empire State Building and Spike's Joint, the commercial retail store of movie director Spike Lee.

The cost of the trip is $350 and includes round-trip motor coach transportation and lodging. A deposit of $50 is required, but the fee can be paid in installments. The deposit, due Nov. 20, reserves a space and is applied to total cost.

Voting just one way to participate, reform

VOTER TURNOUT INCREASED dramatically this election year — of the 60,100 residents of Jackson county, 35,604 registered to vote, and 24,935 actually voted.

Although the failure of 13,781 registered voters to cast ballots is disappointing, this is a marked increase from the last presidential election in 1988, when 30,823 registered and 21,823 voted.

The increase shows that more people in Jackson County have decided to take an active part in the choosing of elected officials. But voters must take care not to confine their political activity to a mere vote. They must also make sure that the politicians keeps their election-year promises.

IN THE PAST, NON-VOTERS have always been the majority over those who do vote. But because they don't vote, they are the losers, not the winners. They give up their right to elect the person who they feel will best represent them in the government.

Many waive their right to vote because they have become disenfranchised with the entire system, even apathetic. But more is at stake than electing a president — the Education and Crime Victims amendments appeared on the ballot, as well as the Jackson County home rule. Local and state elections were also decided Tuesday.

Even small numbers of votes make a difference, as the tight race for the 58th state Senate race between Ralph Dunn, R-Du Quoin and Ken Buzbee, D-Carbondale, illustrates. Dunn took the seat, but his victory was not assured until votes in 90 percent of the district's precincts had been counted, revealing he had won by a narrow margin of 4,000 votes.

VOTING IS ONE OF MANY WAYS to become an active participant in our democratic system of government. Now that we have chosen those politicians we want to represent us, we must ensure that they will adequately represent us in the future.

Casting a ballot is not the end of the people's voice in the political process — it is just the beginning. We must now use our own voices to let those we have elected know what they are doing right or wrong, by letting congressmen, senators, the president and local politicians know our views — through letters, telephone calls, faxes and personal interviews.

Public tells Clinton: Make that change

FROM THE LONG, KNOCK-DOWN, drag-out fight for the presidency emerges a victor: Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton.

If campaigners and the media were able to release and distribute all relevant information regarding the candidates, then the public voted informed—not just anti-Bush.

Congratulations must go to Clinton for his win, but also a warning: Domestic issues are a major concern of this nation and the public is expecting the president to follow through on his promises.

As with Bush, failing to live up to the expectations he set for the public lost him a majority vote. It is not meant to threaten Clinton with one term, but hope that the change, so vehemently promised, will come.

Letters to the Editor

Denying rights to gays an injustice

In response to Brad Striegel's 10/21/92 letter. We believe it is an "injustice" for an Administration of Justice major to blatantly attack a group of human beings because they do not fit his expectations of normality. Furthermore, to deny humans their inalienable rights to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" is to go against any claims to "justice."

We are not speaking today for gay men and lesbians. We are speaking for ourselves. Mr. Striegel, we are "gay lovers." We do not love them because they are gay. We do not love them in spite of the fact that they are gay. We love them as we love any other sibling, colleague, friend, mentor, or student. We love their sense of humor, their brilliance, their smile, their compassion, their humanity. We love them because they are human beings; we are lovers of human rights and freedom.

Mr. Striegel when we read letters like yours we want to protect the gay men and lesbians in our lives. We want to protect them from the people who do not know them but want to hurt them and kill them.

Those of us who pray, pray for their freedom to lead fulfilling, productive lives in safety, as we would want for ourselves.

One last thing, we are afraid of the hate that you express in your letter, but we are not afraid of you. You cannot make us or our loved ones victims. We are afraid for you. Anyone as filled with hate as you appear to be must be terribly wounded and afraid. We all must remember that justice begins with love for all, including you, Brad Striegel. Those of us who pray will also pray for your wounds to heal and for your mind to open.—Mike Dickman, Heidi Hinds, Mariangela Maguire, Jennifer Rigdon, Lori Montalbano, Karen Smith, Terry West, graduate students, speech communication. Nancy Ward, graduate secretary, speech communication.

'Pagan': God figment of evil imagination

For Brad Striegel's information, I am not a "spineless liberal." I am a born again pagan fanatic and a dedicated social anarchist, and I am willing to fight and if necessary, die for human freedom, part of which are gay rights. As for this one he calls "God," this deity is nothing more than the figment of evil men's minds in an ancient society, a creation for the purpose of controlling society through enslavement of the human spirit.

I have lived upon this earth for over seventy years, and I have known innumerable numbers of gays, lesbians and bi-sexuals. I have found the vast majority of these people to be sensitive, decent and caring people. I have come to treasure the friendships of many of these people, and they are not "perverts."

It is you, Mr. Striegel, who is perverted by the same bigotry, prejudice and hatred as your spiritual counterparts, the neo-Nazi skinheads.

When I read Mr. Striegel's prating about how gays should receive "help," I assume he would use traditional Christian tools such as imprisonment and torture. Let America not listen to the proponents of theocratic tyranny, the American Ayotola Komenis. Let this nation stand proud, and make gay rights a part of our heritage. Let America move forward with peace and love in our collective heart, and not succumb to the stench of bigotry and hate.—Bob Phillips, Carbondale

AJ major needs to learn something from class

As an Administration of Justice major I feel the need to respond to Brad Striegel's commentary.

I don't know Brad personally (nor do I care to), but I would like to make some suggestions to him.

My first suggestion is: Brad, if you don't go to your AJ classes now, you really should start going.

Secondly, if you do go to class, you should listen to what the teachers are saying- you might learn something!

In the AJ courses I have taken I have learned that some of my future duties in law enforcement will include: enforcing the law, answering calls for service, and most importantly protecting the rights guaranteed to all U.S. citizens by the Constitution. (Notice I said all U.S. citizens Brad, I didn't exclude homosexuals, bisexuals, or transvestites.)

As a law enforcement officer our personal biases should not influence the way we do our job.

Since you have readily admitted not giving a damn about homosexuals' rights I suggest you prepare yourself for not getting a career in law enforcement because no one in their right mind is going to hire someone shallow like yourself.

You are an embarrassment to the Administration of Justice department and your fellow classmates- way to go Brad!!! —Barbara Baitinger, senior, administration of justice oak/hickory forest in Southern Illinois is converting into a maple/beech ecosystem," he said. "The maple/beech ecosystem does not provide the same biological diversity as oak/hickory ecosystems."

Roth said timber harvests create conditions favorable for growing oaks and hickories.

The oak/hickory ecosystem is a disturbance type forest, Roth said. Timber harvests are a man-made disturbance that can promote oak/hickory growth by opening up the forest canopy and letting more light reach the forest floor.

Without these disturbances the beech and maple trees ecosystem will take over because they are more tolerant of shade and reproduce faster, he said. Without some type of disturbance many oak/hickory ecosystems will evolve into maple/beech forests.

Timber harvests also can be used to control insect and disease problems, Roth said. Most insects and diseases breed and build populations in dead and dying trees. Foresters can reduce the incidences of infestation and infection by removing trees when they are mature but still healthy.

Fire damages five apartments in Carbondale

By Joe Littrell
Police Writer

Electrical problems are suspected as the cause of a midmorning blaze that gutted several apartments Wednesday, fire officials said.

Members of the Carbondale Fire Department responded to a call at the Golden Circle Apartments, 1181 E. Walnut St. at 10:15 a.m. and found Apartment 2 engulfed in flames, the officials said.

Seventeen firefighters battled the blaze for two hours with two pumper trucks, officials said.

The fire, which started in the ceiling of the apartment, gutted five of the complex's units.

Five other apartments in the complex suffered water and smoke damage, the officials reported.

Fire officials estimated the damage at around $140,000. No injuries were reported during the blaze.

campus, the new facility will allow the University to burn more Illinois coal and continued jobs for Southern Illinois," he said in the release.

Haake said a new generation system in the plant will control heating and cooling across campus.

The generation system will allow the University to burn high-sulfur coal and still meet the Clean Air Act requirements. Nearly $2.3 million has already been spent planning for clean coal technology for the facility.

Construction on the addition is scheduled to begin in January and competition is estimated for June 1996.

Haake said $14 million of the funding will provide for the construction of a 83,000-square-foot biological science building south of the Life Science II building.

The new building will be two stories high and offer research laboratories, offices, meeting and conference rooms and a vivarium, he said.

Haake said the facility will serve departments of the School of Medicine, the botany, zoology, microbiology departments, and the vivarium.

"We're getting our fair share," he said. "We've already received money for complete renovation of Rern Hall and for repairs of the second floor of the Communications building."

Twoeedy said the building will provide excellent research for faculty and staff in the departments.

"These areas are quite limited," he said. "It will provide the Colleges of Science and Medicine with what they need."

The design for the building also was funded by the state and completed, he said. Bids for the construction will be sent out next week and given to the Illinois Capital Development Board on Dec. 22.

Construction is estimated to begin in February and completed in 1994.

Edgar said the construction of the science building could create 440 jobs, and 265 jobs could come with the construction of the heating plant.

"Harvesting, as a disturbance, to professional forester is only acceptable when it is a properly conducted," Roth said. "There is a time and a place and a method for every single tract of land. A professional forester tries to find out in each case when, what, how much and how to harvest each area."

But Bill Cronin, a member of the Regional Association of Concerned Environmentalists, said the group supports a complete ban on logging activities in the Shawnee National Forest because members do not trust the forest service to manage the forest responsibly.

RACE members were divided over whether to support selective harvesting or a total ban on logging when it formed in 1988, Cronin said. Today, it advocates a complete ban on all logging activities.

"The only known cause for the decline of oak and hickory is timber harvesting," Cronin said. "We need to study what is out there and get more information on the true biodiversity of the forest. We need to find out what is really causing the oak and hickory decline."

"I feel we do not have enough information," he said. "To invest the whole public forest into some speculative scientific method is folly."

He said he believes the ecosystems management approach is just an excuse to cut timber.

RACE is calling for an immediate moratorium on all logging in the SNF and a congressional investigation of the forest service's activities on public lands."

Lee Drickamer, a professor of zoology at SIUC, agreed that management decisions should be made case-by-case, but he said environmentalists and foresters tend to generalize when they argue about environmental issues.

Biological diversity is not the only goal in forest management plans, he said. Resource management and recreational use are also considered.

"Without examining the specifics on a case-by-case basis, it is impossible to make decisions on which management practices are most appropriate for a particular site," Drickamer said. "A case-by-case basis could mean plots of forest five miles square or a complete forest."

"It isn't clear to me that either side has the right information about biological diversity or whatever other goals they have," he said.

partially in effort to make Illinois history," she said. "That may have helped Democrats in other areas, like Buzbee.

"The Democratic party also made more of an effort to register voters than last (election) year," she said.

Chris Grissom, chairman of the Jackson County Republican Committee, said area Republicans did not recruit voters as vigorously as Democrats did.

He said the county has been slightly Democratic, which he attributes to the student population.

"Twenty years ago it was a Republican county," he said. "We've been working on it over the past couple of years, but it doesn't go away overnight."

Clinton's other chief aides, however, could offer concrete details of the president-elect's transition priorities.

Asked at a morning briefing if he would discuss the broad outlines of what was being considered by Clinton and his transition team, Stephanopoulos said flatly, "No." He also said Clinton had made no decision on when he might resign as governor and move to Washington in preparation for assuming the White House.

Technically, Clinton could remain governor until January, but he is expected to resign well before then. There are complicating factors, however: The governor and his wife, Hillary, are said to be trying not to disrupt their 12-year-old daughter, Chelsea, who hopes to finish the school semester in Little Rock.

Clinton's statement on foreign affairs and domestic policy was a traditional move by an incoming president, and it served to set out the litany of the world problems that President Bush will hand off to him.

"I look forward to working closely with President Bush during this period to ensure continuity on global affairs of interest to all Americans, from continued progress in the Mideast peace talks, to completing negotiations on the details of the START II arms control agreement, to making progress on a good agreement on our world trade talks, to bolstering Russia's fledgling democracy, to working toward peaceful resolution of the conflict in the republics of the former Yugoslavia," Clinton said.

The financial markets have fluctuated mildly in recent weeks as Clinton's election became more and more expected, and he aimed a mollifying message Wednesday in that direction.

Eye for adventure

Peace Corps offers challenge, experience for volunteers

By Angela L. Hyland
International Writer

Mali is a rural, semi-desert region and Morocco is a large, urban metropolis.

By viewing the film, students can gain a better understanding of the wide range of experiences available through the Peace Corps, he said.

Randy Tindall, a return Peace Corps volunteer, said many people still have misconceptions about the living conditions of volunteers.

"Everyone assumes their standard of living will take a nose dive," Tindall said. "They envision a dense jungle with people living out of bamboo huts. But that just isn't the case. I lived in a three bedroom house with a carport. My standard of living over there was actually better than when I was an undergraduate student." The challenges facing individuals in the diverse locations will be completely different, but they will provide students with valuable experiences that often help in obtaining a job later in life, Renner said.

"Peace Corps volunteers assume far more responsibility than they would on a typical first time job in the United States," he said. "With the world moving more toward a global community, having this experience is a definite plus on a resume."

Tindall said he found employers to look favorably upon Peace Corp volunteers.

"I don't know what goes through their minds, but it's very positive."

The Peace Corps offers free travel and adventure but it is far from being a two-year holiday, said the corps' coordinator at SIUC.

A film seminar at 7 tonight in Lawson Hall Room 151 will offer students a more realistic view of life in the corps, said Louis Renner, Peace Corps coordinator.

"The film portrays the extremes in living conditions a volunteer may find themselves in," he said. "It depicts three volunteers — a forester working in Mali, an English teacher in Morocco and a small business entrepreneur living in Guatemala."

Court says 'Yes' to McDonald's

The Washington Post

LONDON -- In hilly Hampstead, a tweedy neighborhood in north London known for its rich literary heritage and its equally rich literary pretensions, the landmark buildings announce their importance with tasteful plaques.

Over here, the home of John Keats. Over there, a house that D.H. Lawrence once lived in.

Tucked around the corner, a house once occupied by Robert Louis Stevenson.

And right smack dab in the middle, coming soon, the house where Ronald McDonald serves Big Macs and fries.

After months of bureaucratic and legal skirmishing, the present-day glitterati of Hampstead apparently have lost the decisive battle in their war to keep McDonald's from opening a restaurant in the heart of a neighborhood that Daniel Defoe once called "near to Heaven." Present-day residents find Hampstead so charming that they insist on calling it a village, even though it lies amid one of the great bustling cities of the world.

A recent decision by the Court of Appeals allowing the hamburger chain to go ahead with its plans marked a defeat for residents like actor Tom Conti and author Margaret Drabble, who have fought tooth and nail to keep McDonald's at bay.

Also on the losing side was actor Glenda Jackson, who represents Hampstead and nearby Highgate in Parliament.

"I have nothing against McDonald's, their hamburgers, their fries or their milkshakes, which I like much," she said.

Student council hosts bash to honor college's 30th year

By Michael T. Kuciak
General Assignment Writer

The Engineering and Technical Joint Student Council is engulfing Technical Building A in a cake and punch bash from 10 a.m. to noon today to celebrate the 30th anniversary of SIUC's College of Engineering and Technology.

President John C. Guyon will make an appearance at the beginning of the "Big 30 Party," along with a host of other deans and administrators.

Linda Helstern, the Joint Student Council's adviser, said they are throwing the shin-dig because the students are extremely proud of their school.

"We wanted an opportunity to take a look at the way the college has matured since the College of Engineering started 30 years ago," she said. The college has grown since its beginning in 1962 when it offered bachelor's and master's degrees in only three specialized areas of a single engineering field.

Helstern said the college today has five departments with accredited programs, four undergraduate programs in civil, electrical, mechanics and mining engineering and a doctoral program in engineering sciences.

Helstern said the Engineering and Technical Joint Student Council was organized in 1981.

Lorna Birdrick, the council's treasurer, said the council has been somewhat inactive in the past but is picking up the pace this year.

"This is just a little reception to let people know that we are still alive," she said.

Halloween heist at 710 Bookstore tops crimes list

By Joe Littrell
Police Writer

A Halloween burglary has been chosen as the Carbondale Crime Stoppers Inc. Crime of the Week.

The burglary occurred at the 710 Book Store on South Illinois Avenue sometime between 6 p.m. Oct. 31 and 12:30 a.m. Nov. 1, police said.

Unknown individuals entered the store by breaking a window on the west side of the building, then stole 10 gray sweatshirts with maroon SIU logos on them, police said.

The total estimated loss and damage to the store was more than $800, police said.

People with information regarding this case are asked to call Carbondale Crime Stoppers at 549-2677. Callers will remain anonymous.

Freudian-oriented products hit shelves for holiday rush

The Washington Post

"It's in the air here. Just look at Woody Allen," said Bob Myrstad. In this case "it" is not sex but psychoanalysis.

"It's unlikely you could live in Manhattan and not undergo analysis." Himself a veteran of five or six years of New Yorkers' second-favorite activity, Myrstad, 48, is the father of FreudToy Inc.

Four years ago this educational consultant realized a dream that had lain in his subconscious for more than a decade.

With the help of artist Michael Stolbach he created a cotton doll with learned bearded features that is "soft, cuddly, easy to talk to with no counter-transference problems."

In New York, where a knowledge of Freudian terms is as familiar as the sarcasm of cab drivers, the toy struck an emotional funny bone and orders began pouring in.

Now Myrstad ticks off the countries from which orders also emanate.

After the doll came the 50-

Minute Watch, a quartz reminder that the psychoanalyst's hour is up when the hand reaches 10 minutes to.

This year he made it possible to walk in Sigmund's steps. Freudian Slippers, priced at $22, are available in the following sizes: id, ego, superego and egomania.

The instructions for another new item with the Viennese doctor's image, the Freudian Sleeper — a cotton T-shirt, $20, or longer night shirt, $30 suggest it is proper attire for anyone under stress who is visiting his therapist.

A package of eight Freud-oriented products, comes in a Basket Case for the truly neurotic.

Perennial best sellers are Freudian Slips or note pads bearing the notation "Now you can say what's really on your mind."

Myrstad said his most aggressive customers are friends and family members of analysts and patients who give them as gifts.

Saving the planet

Exhibit sends environmental message

By Melissa Willis
Entertainment Writer

Growing awareness of destruction to the earth has provoked three local artists into trying to make a difference through an exhibition.

"Ideas to Save the World," on display at the Associated Artists Gallery, features calligraphy, collages and pottery with themes lending themselves to recycling and other earth-saving ideas.

Artist Kevin Cox of Carbondale said the exhibit features art and words combined to provoke environmental consciousness in the public.

"I'm not trying to be preachy, but I think people should become aware of what is happening to our environment," he said. "I've been aware of this problem for 20 years."

Cox said the art covers topics such as the destruction of the rain forest, pollution, conserving gas and eating low on the food chain.

"A lot of people are still of the mind that these problems are made up by wild-eyed radicals trying to make normal people worry," he said. "I consider myself normal but I also keep abreast of the problems we are facing as a society."

His wife Linda, a school teacher in Vergennes, said her class is participating in the exhibit.

"My fourth grade class worked together to make the earth out of clay," she said. "Then they used a computer to type out the ideas illustrated. I have always been interested in ecology and this exhibit is a great way to get the community involved," she said.

Nancy Cunningham, an artist from Murphysboro, said the exhibit was a community project.

"This project has allowed school children from around the area to become involved in doing something constructive," she said

"I think people should become aware of what is happening to our environment."

—Kevin Cox

Cunningham said the project has been in the works for two years. She said she came up with the environmental theme, and Cox came up with the title.

Cox said the title of the show "Ideas to Save the World" makes people sit up and take notice.

The exhibit is on display through Nov. 28 at the gallery located at 213 S. Illinois Ave., with an opening reception planned from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday.

"We would love to have as many people as possible attend the exhibit," Cox said. "It will give us an opportunity to meet people interested in saving the earth."

Alan Jackson brings new sound of country music to SIUC Arena

By Melissa Willis
Entertainment Writer

Audiences are getting ready for some toe-tapping, knee-slapping traditional country tunes as music sensation Alan Jackson takes the stage tonight in the SIUC Arena.

Jackson will be performing hits from his platinum debut album "Here in the Real World," which launched him into the country music business.

The title track from his second album, "Don't Rock the Jukebox" nabbed song of the year in 1991 and the album went double platinum. Jackson's latest album "A Lot About Livin' (And a Little 'Bout Love)" currently is climbing the charts with a rhythm and blues sound.

Michelle Suarez, assistant director of Arena promotions, said ticket sales are above expectations for a country-western concert.

"We haven't done a country show here since the fall of 1989," Suarez said. "In the past it was hard to compete with the Du Quoin State Fair, but due to the budget cuts there we feel we have a chance."

Suarez said she hopes audiences will be pleased with the change in pace from the usual heavy metal bands.

Brady Campbell, a salesman from Disc Jockey music store at University Mall, said Jackson's albums were selling well even before the Arena concert was announced.

"Jackson is very popular with all age groups," Campbell said. "He is the new country sex symbol."

Campbell said more Jackson tickets were sold at Disc Jockey in the first day than the Metallica concert last year sold in its first day.

The more contemporary Diamond Rio will open for Jackson with songs from its debut album "Diamond Rio." They will play songs such as "Meet in the Middle," "Mirror Mirror" and "Norma Jean Riley."

The band also will perform songs from its October release of "Close to the Edge."

Suarez said ticket sales have been abundant but good seats still are available.

The concert is scheduled to start at 7:30 p.m.

Tickets are $17 and are on sale at all SIUC Arena outlets. For more information one may call 453-5341.

Ending Vietnam embargo fires up MIA-POW families

The Washington Post

Beth Stewart, a Washington lawyer, says she was "appalled" and "disgusted" to hear President Bush announce last month that "we can begin writing the last chapter of the Vietnam War" because of Hanoi's new commitment to give U.S. analysts access to archives about Americans lost in the war.

In her view, the United States appears to be moving with unseemly haste toward ending the trade embargo on Vietnam and establishing diplomatic relations. Such steps, she said, would foreclose the last slim possibility of finding the Americans she thinks are still alive as captives in Indochina.

Stewart's father, Air Force Lt. Col. Pete Stewart, has been missing since his plane was shot down in 1966. She was a co-founder of the POW Publicity Fund, an organization that has offered large cash rewards to anyone finding live American prisoners.

Some families of missing servicemen, veterans' organizations and a few members of Congress say the administration, under pressure from business interests, is determined to end the embargo and lay the ghosts of Vietnam to rest, regardless of information that to the activists indicates some Americans might still be alive.

The Defense Department has said there is no evidence that any of the missing Americans might still be alive and are being held against their will. The number of people who believe there are such prisoners is probably no more than a few thousand, according to their representatives.

But their opposition to diplomatic and economic relations with Hanoi is shared by politicians and veterans' lobbyists on the basis that even if all the missing Americans are dead, Hanoi has still not met its obligation to reveal what happened to them.

Bush's comments two weeks ago were prompted by the Pentagon's acquisition of about 4,800 photographs taken by North Vietnamese combat photographers and recently made available through an American researcher. Most of them show American airmen killed when their planes crashed or were shot down.

The president said Vietnam's release of the photos and its pledge to make all its data available to U.S. researchers trying to account for the 2,265 Americans still unaccounted for were "only a beginning" and indicated he was in no hurry to lift the embargo. But he said it was "a significant beginning" and added the United States and Hanoi would "cooperate in bringing that painful era to a close."

To Stewart, the president has signaled he is prepared to declare the missing Americans expendable in the interests of political and economic expediency.

Some of them think Bush may grant recognition to Vietnam before he leaves office Jan. 20.

Bush and senior officials of his administration have insisted they are in no hurry to lift the trade embargo and have not retreated from their demand that Vietnam give the "fullest possible accounting" of the missing. But the family and veterans' groups say they can hear the door swinging shut.

Hanoi's pledge to open its archives is "a complete sham," said Dolores Alfond of Seattle, sister of a missing flyer and chairwoman of the National Alliance of Families for the Return of America's Missing Servicemen.

U.N. sanctions spurring black market in Belgrade

The Washington Post

An advertisement Wednesday in a Belgrade newspaper poignantly explains the effect U.N. economic sanctions are having on Serbia.

"People of Belgrade, pamper yourselves," the ad says. "A registered trading company dealing in oil products will bring gasoline to your door. Wherever you want it, as much as you want."

For those who prefer the more traditional method of driving a car to a service station, more than 190 private stations have opened across the republic in the past month. The Serbian government is leasing the state owned stations to private operators, and it asks no questions about the price or source of the gasoline.

Gas lines are far shorter than they were before May 30, when the United Nations decided to impose sanctions to punish the Serb-dominated Yugoslav federation for armed aggression in neighboring Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Prices are high, about $7 a gallon, but supply is abundant.

Indeed, so much gasoline is available that market forces have pushed prices down during the past two weeks.

More than five months after the imposition of what was supposed to have been a tough and comprehensive package of sanctions it is becoming embarrassingly clear to Western governments that they are not working.

The sanctions, which include a ban on most trade, have contributed to a growing economic crisis in Serbia, including soaring inflation and a 60 percent drop in production and have caused severe shortages of some products, such as heating oil. But Western diplomats here acknowledge that the sanctions are having the perverse effect of punishing working Serbs with soaring prices while lining the pockets of smugglers who operate with the approval of the Serbian regime led by Slobodan Milosevic.

"These sanctions are enriching those who are responsible for the policies that caused the sanctions in the first place," said one Western diplomat in Belgrade.

Stalled energy policy has operators in bind

The Washington Post

European and Japanese operators of small nuclear reactors used for research are facing increasing costs and possible shutdowns because a policy paralysis at the U.S. Department of Energy will soon leave them with no reliable way to dispose of their spent fuel.

Despite their strong protests to Energy Secretary James D. Watkins and the support of the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the State Department, the foreign reactor operators have been unable to persuade the Energy Department to take back spent bomb-grade uranium that originated in this country. Highly enriched, weapons-grade uranium is one of the easiest materials to divert from fuel into nuclear weapons.

Reactor operators who converted from bomb-grade uranium fuel to conventional low-enriched commercial fuel at the behest of the United States are facing a Dec. 31 deadline when the Energy Department plans to stop taking back that fuel as well. Many of those reactors are in countries such as Austria that have no nuclear-fuel-disposal system because they have no nuclear-power plants or nuclear weapons.

Acting Secretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger has urged the Energy Department to resume receiving the fuel to avoid nuclear-proliferation concerns, but to no avail.

"The Department of Energy understands the importance of this concern," the department said in a statement Friday. "It involves many conflicting issues and diverse external interests, as well as the evolving mission of the department."

Xerox's computer research looks into 'ubiquitous' field

The Washington Post

When you think of Xerox Corp., you think of copiers. So that makes some of the things being worked on at the company's Palo Alto Research Center even more remarkable. In the labs at Xerox Parc are computer applications that most people could scarcely imagine. Several offices contain "live boards," electronic blackboards whose contents can be instantly transmitted to another live board, anywhere in the world, as they are written on.

An electronic "bird dog" display board in the center of one research area tracks staff members wearing computerized identification badges and marks their locations on a map of the floor, using small pictures of their faces. A workshop contains the prototypes for what amount to electronic "Post-It" notes, their contents visible on computer screens several offices away.

Most of these technologies are examples of something called "ubiquitous computing," a concept promulgated by Xerox Parc researchers in which the computer, as it is known today, disappears. In its place would be countless smaller computers that would operate subtly in the background of an office, home or other environment, sensing and serving their users' needs rather than demanding that users pay attention to making them work.

"We're focusing on a mission that's not defined by the technology," said John Seely Brown, the Xerox vice president for advanced research who runs Xerox Parc, the best-known of the corporation's three major research labs. "We're going beyond the technology to what it is in the service of. ... That enables an incredible number of diverse technologies ... to come together."

Xerox Parc's charter is vaguely focused on the parent company's central business, which Xerox defines as document handling in all possible forms. But that amorphous definition leaves Xerox Parc free to think creatively about technology.

In the 1970s, Parc was responsible for much of the seminal research that underlies the modern personal computer.

Supreme Court hears case of animal sacrifice banning

The Washington Post

Supreme Court justices tangled with lawyers Wednesday in a case involving weighty matters of religious freedom, as well as questions concerning drowned cats, boiled lobsters and other dead animals.

The strange questioning occurred during oral arguments in Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye v. Hialeah, a case that could affect the ease at which cities can outlaw the practices of minority religions.

At issue is a series of Hialeah, Fla., ordinances that ban animal sacrifice.

They were enacted in 1987 after members of the Santeria religion — which kills goats, chickens and other animals as part of its rites of passage — formally tried to open a church in the Miami suburb.

Most of the sacrificed animals are then eaten, although the heads and entrails are discarded. The blood often is reserved in pots for other rituals.

The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year affirmed a 1989 district court ruling that the ordinances were necessary for public health and animal welfare.

But Supreme Court justices clearly were concerned because: the city permits killing for virtually all reasons but ritualistic ones.

The First Amendment forbids government from prohibiting the free exercise of religion.

"This is a case about open discrimination against a minority religion," said Douglas Laycock, the lawyer for the Santerian church. But Richard G. Garrett, representing Hialeah, said the city was trying to ban all animal sacrifice, by both religious and secular groups.

He said malevolent groups, Satanists and practitioners of witchcraft possibly were sacrificing animals. Justice Antonin Scalia suggested some college fraternities might do it.

Santeria is an African-based religion that came to the United States a generation ago by way of Cuba.

The church and the lead practitioner, Ernesto Pichardo, have garnered support from numerous traditional churches that believe the court has is protective of religious rights, whether they be rare or mainstream.

Expert says record turnout not a sign of electoral trend

Newsday

With long lines jammed in front of voting booths from coast to coast, some poll-watchers estimated Tuesday night that more voters had turned out this year than ever before. But one leading expert on voting trends cautioned that even a record number of voters was unlikely to alter the steady downward spiral in the percentage of voter participation that began three decades ago.

"There is nothing in this election that points to a permanent reversal in the turnout," Curtis Gans, director of the non-partisan Washington-based Committee for the Study of the American Electorate, said before all the polls had closed. "You have an electorate energized by the recession, as we did in the 1982 mid-term elections, but nothing happened after that that brought the turnout up again."

Gans, among others, believes this year's final turnout will top 100 million, surpassing the record 92.6 million votes cast in the 1984 presidential election. More telling, however, is the percentage of voter participation, and even with this year's 1 percent increase in registration nationwide, Gans suggested it would take a herculean effort to push turnout figures beyond the levels of 1960, 1964 and 1968, when more than 60 percent of registered voters cast ballots.

"I believe we will have a minimum of an 8 million increase in the number who turn out and a minimum of 3 percent — and a maximum of 5 percent — in the percentages" from the 50.2 percent of registered voters who turned out in 1988, Gans said. "That would be a substantial increase, but not a record."

Still, in precincts around the nation, poli-watchers seemed stunned by the number of people coming out to vote.

Study: Female bones grow late

Newsday

Osteoporosis is most common in post-menopausal women, but it also affects men.

"Modest changes in lifestyle, achievable by just about anybody," can help increase bone mass in young women age 20 to 30, said Dr. Robert B. Recker, professor of medicine at Creighton University Medical School in Omaha and the chief author of the study, published today in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The study is the first to show definitively that women gain bone mass after adolescence, Recker said.

Dr. Stavros Manolagas, an osteoporosis researcher at the Indiana University School of Medicine, called the new findings "important."

Bones are like a bank, Manolagas said. "Deposits" that increase bone mass in younger women create a bigger "balance" from which to make "withdrawals" once estrogen production drops after menopause.

For the first time, researchers have established that women add bone mass until they reach age 30 — years after they stop growing — and can increase their gains with moderate exercise and adequate calcium intake.

These findings offer new hope for preventing osteoporosis, a widespread and crippling disease in which bones grow thin with age and break easily.

Card purveyors offer much credit in sign-up frenzy

Newsday

If Santa Claus used credit cards, the issuers would be falling all over each other to sign him up. Instead, they're busy promoting special low rates, sweepstakes, travel savings, retail discounts—all designed to get reluctant consumers in the mood for the holiday shopping season.

Credit card companies always gear up for the Christmas, which accounts for much of their profit, but this year is like no other because competition has increased when the number of cardholders is flat.

"So the only thing for them to do is to steal business from the other guy," says Robert B. McKinley, president of RAM Research Corp., a company that monitors credit card pricing.

As a result of the credit card wars, interest rates have finally fallen to more reasonable levels. The average rate in October was 17.98 percent, compared to 18.92 percent in October 1991, according to RAM Research.

Some banks are offering rates that are far lower, but Gerri Detweiler, director of Bankcard Holders of America, a non-profit consumer group, advises carefully considering all the terms, such as the annual fee.

For example, Bank of New York is offering a Consumers Edge card which has a low interest rate of 11.6 percent and no fee. But there is no "grace period" between the date of purchase and billing, so even cardholders who pay their bills in full at the end of each month must make an interest payment.

Detweiler says that consumers also should find out if the interest rate is a "teaser" that will jump in a few months.

Many credit card companies are also launching special promotions for the holidays. In November and December, Chase Manhattan Bank is doubling the awards under its Bonus Dollar program, which gives cardholders discounts based on the amounts they charge.

Democratic Senate boosted

Strong coattails of Clinton carried number of party members

Newsday

The strong coattails of President-elect Bill Clinton boosted the prospects of Democratic Senate candidates Tuesday night and helped to stave off what had been the expected loss of a large number of Democratic seats in the House of Representatives.

In the Senate, the Democrats were expected to pick up a net gain of at least one seat, which gives them 58. A filibuster-proof, 60-vote majority was within reach.

Although challengers in many House races this year ran on the theme of "Anyone But the Incumbent," it appeared that Democrats would lose considerably fewer than the 40 seats even they had predicted to drop.

"You've got a failed president at the top being rejected in a landslide," said University of Virginia political scientist Larry Sabato. "His opponent wins despite doubts about him, and helps to carry in a substantial number of his party members."

"A greater portion of incumbents are doing better than expected," said Larry Purpuro, communications director for the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee. "Where it's close, they're getting the edge as a result of the top of the ticket," Purpuro said.

One stunning exception in the House was nine-term Democratic incumbent Rep. Tom Downey of New York, who lost to Rick Lazio, a county legislator from Long Island.

In Senate contests, Wisconsin state Sen. Russ Feingold unseated Republican Sen. Bob Kasten. The Democrats gained a seat in Cal.

where former San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein defeated Republican incumbent John Seymour and Rep. Barbara Boxer was declared a winner over her Republican opponent, television commentator Bruce Herschensohn, for the seat vacated by Democrat Alan Cranston.

Only one Democratic incumbent, Sen. Terry Sanford of North Carolina, lost his seat.

In New York, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, a Republican, narrowly defeated Attorney General Robert Abrams.

In staunchly Republican New Hampshire, Democratic businessman John Rauh was giving Gov. Judd Gregg a run for his money for the seat vacated by Sen. Warren Rudman—evidence of the toll the state's economy has taken on Republican fortunes there.

Exit poll— Bush swept from office by national economic discontent

Los Angeles Times

In the end, the key to the 1992 presidential election was as simple as the sign on the wall at Bill Clinton's campaign command center in Little Rock, Ark.: "It's the economy, stupid."

Like Democratic President Carter 12 years ago, President Bush was swept from office by an irresistible tide of economic discontent that shattered his presidential coalition, according to a Los Angeles Times exit poll of voters nationwide.

For all the campaign charges and countercharges, the questions about character, veracity and experience, and the unpredictability introduced by Ross Perot's maverick campaign, the poll suggests that Tuesday's vote came down to a straightforward assessment of the nation's direction and the health of the economy.

On both counts, the poll found, voters expressed overwhelming dissatisfaction with the status quo and took out their anger on the incumbent. Clinton carried the Democratic Party back to the White House by rolling up insurmountable majorities with voters who consider the nation on the wrong track and those who believe that their financial situation has deteriorated since Bush took office.

Even though Perot proved a formidable competitor for voters unhappy over the nation's course, the poll shows that economic discontent allowed Clinton to stitch together the coalition of traditional Democrats and swing voters that his strategists had targeted since he declared his candidacy in October 1991.

With a message that blended economic populism and calls for "personal responsibility" in social policy, Clinton posted strong majorities among traditional Democratic voters such as blacks and union members, reclaimed almost 55 percent of disaffected blue-collar "Reagan Democrats," and managed a three-way split of independents.

Tallying the vote

Ralph Dunn, 58th district state senate, shows his wife Ellen the latest vote count before she left for the night. Dunn explained to his wife Tuesday night that he was maintaining a 4,158 vote lead over Buzbee after 77 percent of the precincts were counted.

Clinton plans to assemble diverse administration

Los Angeles Times

Buoyed by his decisive victory, President-elect Bill Clinton plans to move swiftly to assemble a diversified administration that would include at least some Republicans and to push hard for congressional action on a jobs package and two other major campaign promises: health care and education reform.

The 46-year-old Arkansas governor is only now turning his attention from the campaign to the crucial early decisions that he must make on policy and personnel, but aides say that his administration's upper echelons will include relatively large numbers of women and minorities and that he will name at least one or perhaps two Republicans to his Cabinet.

Clinton himself, in his Little Rock, Ark., victory speech, said that he was determined to reach beyond his own party for help "among the ranks of independents and Republicans who are willing to roll up their sleeves, be a part of a new partnership, and get on with the business of dealing with this nation's problems."

And in setting legislative priorities, the Arkansas governor, accurately described by advisers as a policy and politics "junkie," has told friends he realizes that he must hit the ground running after his inauguration on Jan. 20, if he is to win congressional backing for the far-reaching changes that he promised during the campaign.

"He'll never have more political capital than when he first walks in to the Oval Office and he knows it," says Mickey Kantor, the Los Angeles lawyer who was chairman of his campaign and now heads: his transition team. "He will move quickly with the Democratic Congress and will work with Republicans, too," Kantor predicted.

The Democrats retained control of both houses of Congress in Tuesday's election, but Clinton's advisers are well aware that the inherent rivalry and tension between the executive and legislative branches will reassert itself over time, even though the new president and congressional leaders belong to the same party. Moreover, although Clinton won an overwhelming electoral college victory, his mandate will only be as strong as he can make it.

While Clinton is committed to major efforts on education as well as curbing medical costs and making health care available to all, he is expected to give first priority to the problem that dominated the presidential campaign from beginning to end: the nation's beleaguered economy.

Trail Blazers, Suns picked to finish high in Pacific Division

Los Angeles Times

Pacific Division (Teams selected in predicted order of finish)

Analysis

1. Portland Trail Blazers 1991-92 record: 57-25.

Outlook: They are familiar, but they aren't standing pat, either. They have added rookies Tracy Murray and Dave Johnson and signed Rod Strickland to offset the loss of Danny Ainge as the third guard. Still, they are the team to beat in the division, even if the Utah Jazz might finally run them down in the West.

The numbers game: The Trail Blazers tied for No. 1 in rebounding last season without any player finishing with an average higher than 8.8.

2. Phoenix Suns 1991-92 record: 53-29.

Outlook: The Suns' front office has proven to be more aggressive than the team. Sensing it was a group that needed a spark as playoff disappointments piled up, management instead got some dynamite, Charles Barkley. The next move was to give Danny Ainge a three-year contract at $5.2 million. That shows a commitment, and in something of a surprise, Ainge might end up in the starting lineup so that Dan Majerle can remain as the conference's best sixth man.

The numbers game: The Suns traded six statistical leaders from last season to get Barkley—Jeff Hornacek in five categories and Andrew Lang in blocked shots.

3. Golden State Warriors 1991-92 record: 55-27.

Outlook: The test this season for Don Nelson, in addition to the annual battle of squeezing 82 games at center out of three or four players, is to not run Chris Mullin and Tim Hardaway into the ground so much that they are worn out for the playoffs. It won't help that Sarunas Marciulionis, the backup off guard who might play more this season at point guard, will probably miss the first month because of a broken right leg and a dislocated right ankle. Billy Owens didn't make the improvements Nelson had hoped he would during the off-season, but Tyrone Hill did.

The numbers game: The Warriors have ranked No. 1, No. 2 and No. 1 in scoring the last three seasons.

4. Seattle SuperSonics 1991-92 record: 47-35.

Outlook: The SuperSonics won 67.6 percent of their games in their three full months under George Karl. But is the team looking ahead or over its shoulder? Karl and General Manager Bob Whitsett are in the last years of their contracts and talk that the team will leave Washington for San Diego, Toronto or almost anywhere is more prominent than ever.

The numbers game: The SuperSonics went 27-14 in the second half of last season, the best in franchise history, despite using 18 starting lineups.

5. Los Angeles Clippers 1991-92 record: 45-37.

Outlook: They look great at forward, as always, even before John Williams gets in shape. But depth at guard and center has to be a concern. In the backcourt, if Ron Harper, Mark Jackson or Gary Grant have even minor injuries that keep them out for a couple of games, Randy Woods and Jaren Jackson suddenly become prominent players. In the pivot, Stanley Roberts and Elmore Spencer need to avoid foul problems—at least on the same night.

The numbers game: The Clippers last season were the best they have been since moving to California, but still finished last in the league in attendance and did not sell out their only playoff game at the Sports Arena.

6. Los Angeles Lakers 1991-92 record: 43-39.

Outlook: Their stock dropped dramatically with Magic Johnson's decision to re-retire, but as long as they don't have another rash of injuries—and with the addition of James Edwards, Anthony Peeler and Duane Cooper—this is still a better team than Houston. The Lakers play with too much heart and have too much experience to get the 10-count prematurely.

The numbers game: With Houston's Otis Thorpe out of the lineup because of a bruised kidney, A.C. Green will take over the iron-man streak among active players with his 475th consecutive regular-season appearance Friday in the opener.

7. Sacramento Kings 1991-92 record: 29-53.

Outlook: Lionel Simmons and Mitch Richmond would play—if not star—for any team. But Walt Williams had better be a better ballhandler than a lot of general managers think or the Kings, needing help everywhere, have used the seventh pick for depth. At least they should be more entertaining, because new coach Gary St. Jean, a Don Nelson disciple, plans an up-tempo attack.

The numbers game: Simmons, a small forward, has led the Kings in rebounding for two consecutive seasons.

4. Atlanta Hawks 1991-92 record: 38-44.

Outlook: Dominique Wilkins is so rusty that he has had trouble holding onto the ball during exhibition games, but he is back nonetheless, after missing half of last season because of a ruptured Achilles' tendon. The Hawks hope to have a point guard after trading Tuesday for Mookie Blaylock from New Jersey. But can Kevin Willis have a repeat of 1991-92?

The numbers game: Center Jon Koncak, who made $2 million last season, scored 241 points and had 261 rebounds.

5. Charlotte Hornets 1991-92 record: 31-51.

Outlook: They could be the team of the late '90s but will remain a team with obvious problems inside until the contract dispute with first-round choice Alonzo Mourning is settled. Two other young players, Larry Johnson and Kendall Gill, are big-timers.

The numbers game: The Hornets have been in the NBA four seasons and have ranked last in blocked shot: each season.

6. Indiana Pacers 1991-92 record: 40-42.

Outlook: They are already calling the backcourt of Reggie Miller and Pooh Richardson, reunited from their UCLA days, Batman and Robin. It's a potentially potent combination, and Detlef Schrempf remains a star in reserve. Things get a little thin after that. This no longer appears to be a team capable of making noise in the playoffs.

The numbers game: In the two seasons since making the All-Star game in 1989-90, Miller's statistics have declined in scoring, shooting, three-point shooting, shots and free throws.

7. Milwaukee Bucks 1991-92 record: 31-51.

Outlook: Mike Dunleavy can only hope the landing will be soft. He goes from the Lakers to a team that will have Eric Murdock, backed up by Lee Mayberry, at point guard; and Anthony Avent or Alaa Abdelnaby at power forward. There is some good news: Alvin Robertson is back and could benefit a lot from Dunleavy's attention to defense; and Moses Malone, troubled by a hemiated disk, has practiced since Monday without pain. He still might open on the injured list, though.

The numbers game: Mike Dunleavy's eight-year contract is the longest of any coach.

Karros named NL Rookie despite Dodgers' season

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—He endured the comparisons to Steve Garvey, waited until a solid first baseman named Eddie Murray was gone and spent a season proving he could be a worthy replacement.

Now, Eric Karros has etched on a plaque. Clearly overshadowed by his team's pallid season, the Los Angeles Dodger first baseman finally got to enjoy the spotlight Tuesday when he was named the National League Rookie of the Year.

"It's like going from one end of the spectrum to the other," Karros said from Osaka, Japan, where he is touring with a major league all-star team.

"Going into spring training it didn't look like I was going to make the team. With Kal (Daniels) and (Todd) Benzingler there, realistically, I knew they were not going to keep three first basemen."

Karros, 25 Wednesday, was chosen on 22 of 24 ballots and received 116 points from the Baseball Writers Association of America. He is the first Dodger to earn the honor since Steve Sax in 1982.

"I think I have proved that I am capable of playing at this level, and I don't think this was a fluke," Karros said. "I think I surpassed other people with how I played, but it didn't surprise me."

Montreal Expos outfielder Moises Alou was the runnerup with two first-place votes and 40 points, followed by Pittsburgh Pirate knuckballer Tim Wakefield with 19 points.

"Eric worked so very hard in spring training last year to overcome his deficiencies. That's what allowed him to have the kind of season he did," Manager Tom Lasorda said.

"It didn't come easy for him, and that's why he so deserves this award. He paid the price and showed that you can have success with hard work."

Stein criticized by Board of Governors

Los Angeles Times

One league president was hardly ever quoted and rarely spotted in public, especially at hockey games. For this, John Ziegler was widely criticized and eventually fell out of favor with his bosses, the NHL's Board of Governors.

Another league president is always quoted and has assumed a very public presence, especially at hockey games. He has appeared at almost every important NHL event since taking over in June.

For this, Gil Stein has been widely criticized and has fallen out of favor with one faction of his bosses, also known as the Board of Governors, who plan, eventually, to choose a commissioner and may or may not still have a president.

Stein's sudden unpopularity—he is no longer considered a strong candidate for commissioner—emerged as one of the topics of discussion at last week's Board of Governors' meeting in New York. Los Angeles King Owner Bruce McNall, the board's chairman, acknowledged an element of unrest in regard to Stein's public persona.

"Look at Gil's situation," he said. "You have some people who are very unhappy about his being very aggressive and out there and pro-active on things. We have some people who are very happy and some who aren't happy."

McNall, who indicated he wasn't part of the anti-Stein lobby, tried to explain why this has occurred.

"There's people who don't like his personality," he said. "He talks to (reporters). Some people don't like that. Sure, his aggressiveness offends some people. It's openly discussed at times."

Stein certainly hasn't been perfect during his short tenure. There is his new disciplinary philosophy, under which someone like Marty McSorley can cross-check another player in the face and not have to sit out a single game. And the NHL's recent record in court rivals San Jose's road record—except that the Sharks win one from time to time.

These setbacks aside, Stein has tried to make the NHL a little less secretive, a little less impenetrable.

Trail Blazers, Suns picked to finish high in Pacific Division

Los Angeles Times

Pacific Division (Teams selected in predicted order of finish)

Analysis

1. Portland Trail Blazers 1991-92 record: 57-25

Outlook: They are familiar, but they aren't standing pat, either. They have added rookies Tracy Murray and Dave Johnson and signed Rod Strickland to offset the loss of Danny Ainge as the third guard. Still, they are the team to beat in the division, even if the Utah Jazz might finally run them down in the West.

The numbers game: The Trail Blazers tied for No. 1 in rebounding last season without any player finishing with an average higher than 8.8.

2. Phoenix Suns 1991-92 record: 53-29

Outlook: The Suns' front office has proven to be more aggressive than the team. Sensing it was a group that needed a spark as playoff disappointments piled up, management instead got some dynamite, Charles Barkley. The next move was to give Danny Ainge a three-year contract at $5.2 million. That shows a commitment, and in something of a surprise, Ainge might end up in the starting lineup so that Dan Majerle can remain as the conference's best sixth man.

The numbers game: The Suns traded six statistical leaders from last season to get Barkley—Jeff Hornacek in five categories and Andrew Lang in blocked shots.

3. Golden State Warriors 1991-92 record: 55-27

Outlook: The test this season for Don Nelson, in addition to the annual battle of squeezing 82 games at center out of three or four players, is to not run Chris Mullin and Tim Hardaway into the ground so much that they are worn out for the playoffs. It won't help that Sarunas Marciulionis, the backup off guard who might play more this season at point guard, will probably miss the first month because of a broken right leg and a dislocated right ankle. Billy Owens didn't make the improvements Nelson had hoped he would during the off-season, but Tyrone Hill did.

The numbers game: The Warriors have ranked No. 1, No. 2 and No. 1 in scoring the last three seasons.

4. Seattle SuperSonics 1991-92 record: 47-35

Outlook: The SuperSonics won 67.6 percent of their games in their three full months under George Karl. But is the team looking ahead or over its shoulder? Karl and General Manager Bob Whitsitt are in the last years of their contracts and talk that the team will leave Washington for San Diego, Toronto or almost anywhere is more prominent than ever.

The numbers game: The SuperSonics went 27-14 in the second half of last season, the best in franchise history, despite using 18 starting lineups.

5. Los Angeles Clippers 1991-92 record: 45-37

Outlook: They look great at forward, as always, even before John Williams gets in shape. But depth at guard and center has to be a concern. In the backcourt, if Ron Harper, Mark Jackson or Gary Grant have even minor injuries that keep them out for a couple of games, Randy Woods and Jaren Jackson suddenly become prominent players. In the pivot, Stanley Roberts and Elmore Spencer need to avoid foul problems—at least on the same night.

The numbers game: The Clippers last season were the best they have been since moving to California, but still finished last in the league in attendance and did not sell out their only playoff game at the Sports Arena.

6. Los Angeles Lakers 1991-92 record: 43-39

Outlook: Their stock dropped dramatically with Magic Johnson's decision to re-retire, but as long as they don't have another rash of injuries—and with the addition of James Edwards, Anthony Peeler and Duane Cooper—this is still a better team than Houston. The Lakers play with too much heart and have too much experience to get the 10-count prematurely.

The numbers game: With Houston's Otis Thorpe out of the lineup because of a bruised kidney, A.C. Green will take over the iron-man streak among active players with his 475th consecutive regular-season appearance Friday in the opener.

7. Sacramento Kings 1991-92 record: 29-53

Outlook: Lionel Simmons and Mitch Richmond would play—if not star—for any team. But Walt Williams had better be a better ballhandler than a lot of general managers think or the Kings, needing help everywhere, have used the seventh pick for depth. At least they should be more entertaining, because new coach Garry St. Jean, a Don Nelson disciple, plans an up-tempo attack.

4. Atlanta Hawks 1991-92 record: 38-44

Outlook: Dominique Wilkins is so rusty that he has had trouble holding onto the ball during exhibition games but he is back nonetheless, after missing half of last season because of a ruptured Achilles' tendon. The Hawks hope to have a point guard after trading Tuesday for Mookie Blaylock from New Jersey. But can Kevin Willis have a repeat of 1991-92?

The numbers game: Center Jon Koncak, who made $2 million last season, scored 241 points and had 261 rebounds.

5. Charlotte Hornets 1991-92 record: 31-51

Outlook: They could be the team of the late '90s but will remain a team with obvious problems inside until the contract dispute with first-round choice Alonzo Mourning is settled. Two other young players, Larry Johnson and Kendall Gill, are big timers.

The numbers game: The Hornets have been in the NBA four seasons and have ranked last in blocked shots each season.

6. Indiana Pacers 1991-92 record: 40-42

Outlook: They are already

Things get a little thin after that. This no longer appears to be a team capable of making noise in the playoffs.

The numbers game: In the two seasons since making the All-Star game in 1989-90, Miller's statistics have declined in scoring, shooting, three-point shooting, shots and free throws.

7. Milwaukee Bucks 1991-92 record: 31-51

Outlook: Mike Dunleavy can only hope the landing will be soft. He goes from the Lakers to a team that will have Eric Murdock, backed up by Lee Mayberry, at point guard; and Anthony Avent or Alaa Abdelnaby at power forward. There is some good news: Alvin Robertson is back and could benefit a lot from Dunleavy's attention to defense; and Moses Malone, troubled by a herniated disk, has practiced since Monday without pain. He still might open on the injured list, though.

The numbers game: Mike Dunleavy's eight-year contract is the longest of any coach.

Shernam Douglas add depth to the backcourt.

NEW YORK'S second-year coach, Pat Riley, heads into the season with reason for optimism as the Knicks try to reach the next plateau among the NBA elite. The Knicks addressed several weak spots in the off-season hoping to pose a threat to Chicago's run at a third straight NBA Championship.

In one of the biggest trades of the off-season, New York sent guard Mark Jackson and two first round draft choices to the Los Angeles Clippers for forward-center Charles Smith and shooting guard Bo Kimble. Smith will add depth to the backcourt. Doc Rivers will handle the point guard duties with second-year man Greg Anthony.

Far-time All-Star Rolando Blackman was acquired from Dallas or a future draft choice to add perimeter shooting. The 33-year-old Blackman averaged 18.3 points a game last season for the Mavericks.

First-round draft choice Hubert Davis from North Carolina and newly acquired Tony Campbell from Minnesota give New York added scoring punch from the perimeter. Campbell averaged 16.8 points with the Timberwolves and will play small forward. Davis, a smooth sharp-shooting guard, will join three-point threat John Starks and Greg Anthony in the backcourt.

Riley led New York to a 51-31 record last season, a 12-game improvement from the year before, and incorporated a bruising defensive style of basketball that helped the Knicks compile the second ranked defense in the league.

Although the Knicks stumbled down the stretch and lost the division title to the Celtics, they put together an exciting playoff run, defeating Detroit, 3-2, in the first round before losing a brutal seven-game war to the World Champion Bulls in the Eastern Conference Semifinals.

Leading the Knicks' charge was All-Star center Patrick Ewing, who put together another solid campaign, averaging 24.0 points while pulling down 11.2 rebounds.

CHUCK DALY takes over in New Jersey for Bill Fitch after the Nets reached the playoffs for the first time in six years with a 40-42 record.

Daly, who led the Detroit Pistons to back-to-back championships in 1983-89 and coached the U.S. Olympic basketball team to a gold. Shooting guard Drazen Petrovic led the Nets in scoring (20.6) and finished second in the NBA in three-point shooting. Petrovic, who helped Croatia win a silver medal in the olympics, is joined by second-year man Kenny Anderson, Tate George and newly acquired Rumeal Robinson in the backcourt. The Nets dealt Mookie Blaylock and Roy Hinson to Atlanta for Robinson.

Derrick Coleman, who led New Jersey in rebounding (9.5 rpg) and was second in scoring (19.8 ppg), has emerged as one of the premier power forwards in the NBA. Coleman, the NBA's Rookie-of-the-Year in 1990-91, can score at will from inside or out and possesses excellent ballhandling skills for his 6-foot-10 frame.

The center tandem of 7-foot-1 Sam Bowie and 6-foot-11 Chris Dudley averaged a league-high 47.6 rebounds a game. The 31-year old Bowie notched career-highs in points (15.0) and rebounds (8.1) a game. Dudley pulled down nine rebounds a game and led all NBA centers with 343 offensive boards.

IN HIS FIRST YEAR with Miami, head coach Kevin Loughery guided the Heat to a franchise high 38-44 record and first-ever playoff berth. The Heat became the first of the four recent expansion teams to reach the post-season as they gained the eighth and final playoff spot in the Eastern Division before being swept by Chicago in the first round.

The key to Miami's success last season was the emergence of small forward Glen Rice as one of the best outside shooters in the league. Rice led the Heat in scoring (22.3 ppg) and knocked down 155 three-pointers, second-best in the NBA.

Miami acquired 6-foot-11 John Salley from Detroit for Isaiah Morris to help bolster the front court led by center Rony Seikaly (16.4 ppg, 11.8 rpg) and power forward Grant Long. At 28, Salley becomes the oldest player on the team.

Miami looks to second-year guard Steve Smith, who led the Heat in assists (4.6) and was named to the NBA's All-Rookie team, point guard Bimbo Coles, and rookie Harold Miner to solidify the backcourt.

WITH BIRD AND BARKLEY

gone, a changing of the guard may be taking place in the Atlantic Division as super-rookie Shaquille O'Neal, the NBA's first overall pick in the 92 draft, enters the league.

Orlando will look to O'Neal to lift them out of the cellar and into a competing role this season. After a 21-61 finish last season and Stanley Roberts gone to the Clippers, second-year forward Brian Williams and veteran power forward Terry Catledge (14.8 ppg, 7.0 rpg) will be expected to step up and help O'Neal on the boards.

Hustler Scott Skiles and swingmen Nick Anderson and Dennis Scott, who led the team in scoring (19.9 ppg), anchor a strong rotation at guard.

THE NEW-LOOK Philadelphia 76ers underwent a massive facelift this summer with hopes of improving on last season's dismal 35-47 record, their worst in 17 years, and fifth-place finish in the Atlantic Division.

Doug Moe takes the helm after a two-year exile from coaching as Jimmy Lynam went upstairs to fill the general manager position. Moe, who owns a 609-492 career record in the NBA, will incorporate a high-scoring up-tempo game in Philly.

All-Star guard Jeff Hornacek, who led the Suns in scoring last season (20.1 ppg) will join guards Hersey Hawkins and Johnny Dawkins in the backcourt while the 6-foot-11 250-pound Lang will add bulk in the middle for the departed Charles Barkley.

Armon Gilliam, who averaged 16.9 points and 8.1 rebounds a game last season, Perry (12.3 ppg) and 6-foot-7 240 pound first-round draft choice Clarence Weather-spoon will play forward.

THE WASHINGTON Bullets hope the eventual return of leader Bernard King, and the continued improvement of center Pervis Ellison will bring them success in the upcoming season after just a 25-win campaign in 1991-92.

King, who missed all of last season with a knee injury, hopes to return by mid-season and return to his 1991 All-Star form when he led the Bullets with a 28.4 scoring average.

Ellison led the Bullets in scoring (20.0) and rebounding (11.2) and was named the NBA's Most Improved Player last season. Harvey Grant and newcomers Tom Gugliotta and Don MacLean will bolster the front line.

Green's success could open doors

The Baltimore Sun

Frank Gilliam, Minnesota's director of player personnel, says Dennis Green's success with the Vikings this season should open the head-coaching door for other blacks—such as Vikings defensive coordinator Tony Dungy and Kansas City Chief assistant Jimmy Raye.

"People shouldn't look to Denny for how a black coach is going to do," said Gilliam, who once recruited Green to play at Iowa. "That's not right. But his success can't help but make it more encouraging for other blacks. It dispels a lot of myths."

Under Dungy, the Vikings have allowed just one offensive TD touchdown the past two weeks.

can bring confidence on the court along with these elements, we have a good chance."

The spikers will have to stop the offensive force of Amy Russell, Kris Oglesby and Tina Noelke, who each have accumulated more than 200 kills each for a total of 649 among the three.

Saturday brings the Salukis to Tulsa, where a young, winless team will try and make a run at the Salukis who swept the Golden Hurricane 15-8, 15-8, 15-13 in their last meeting this season.

Locke said her team cannot underestimate the Tulsa squad on its home court.

"It will obviously be their goal (Hurricanes) to avoid a defeated season, and we will prepare for them the same as we would any other team," she said. "They did not look like a winless team when we played them earlier, and they even took us down to the wire in the third game before we finally beat them 15-13."

Tulsa head coach Tom Cairns said his team is young and will not look down on this season.

"It is our first season as part of the MVC, and everything is new to us," he said. "We have had some injuries that have hurt us, but with some good recruiting, we will be a competitive team for the future."

Tulsa's leading performers are Kristina Mitchell, who has 110 kills and 125 digs to lead the team in both categories, and Sarah Von Wald, who is second with 79 kills and 105 digs.

The Salukis will look for strong performances from senior middle blocker Dana Olden and freshman outside hitter Heather Herdes, who have been consistent forces for the Salukis.

Olden leads the MVC in hitting percentage with .330, and Herdes follows close behind her in fourth with a .308 percentage. Olden also ranks third in the MVC in kill average and sixth in block average.
