Candid candidates? Insiders come to SIUC forum in search of political integrity

KIRK MOTTRAM
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Political campaigns and the media outlets covering them have reduced the elucidation of election issues to a superficial exchange between the candidates and the voters, a media expert said Monday.

SIUC students and faculty, community college students and faculty, and area residents were offered their first taste of Election 1998 as the Public Policy Institute sponsored a star-studded symposium at which media and political specialists analyzed the process of campaign issue development.

About 300 people gathered Monday in the Student Center Ballrooms to hear panels of public officials, campaign managers, journalists and academics discuss the development and manipulation of political issues and campaign messages.

The forum, sponsored by the SIUC Public Policy Institute, was titled "How Candid Can Candidates Be?"

Rick Pearson, political reporter for the Chicago Tribune, said a candidate must be cautious with regard to what he or she says and, with the onset of political advertising, a candidate is somewhat handicapped in his or her ability to enlighten voters about the complexity of issues.

"Can a candidate be candid? Yes. But they can't be stupid," Pearson said. "One of the problems is that candidates tend to trivialize the issues."

"There is a constant struggle between candidates wanting to define the issues and how they have to present them in the eas-est way for the 30-second soundbite."

In giving the forum's keynote address, Former Sen. Paul Simon defined candid as "telling the truth" and noted that the forum's extended focus was how candid can candidates be and still get elected.

Simon spoke about the media's responsibility in political campaigns and discussed the importance of candidates delineating issues considered difficult and divisive.

"Candidates shouldn't be so weathered in their elections that they become less candid," Simon said. "They have to address the difficult political problems, and the media has a responsibility to focus on the substantive issues."

With these words, Simon set the tone for the rest of the day, which was divided into three segments: a morning panel, luncheon address and an afternoon panel.

The morning panel primarily dealt with the development of political issues in the context of a campaign and the media's coverage of those issues.

The panel consisted of Andy Foster, Gov. Jim Edgar's 1994 campaign manager; David Wilhelm, President Bill Clinton's 1992 campaign manager; Pearson; and Carol Fowler, assistant news editor at WGN-TV. The panel was moderated by John Jackson, vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and provost.

All of the panelists agreed that issues are central to a political campaign and that a focused campaign will rally around a

Diversity down in medical school

ENROLLMENT:

Changes to affirmative action blamed for drop in minority students.

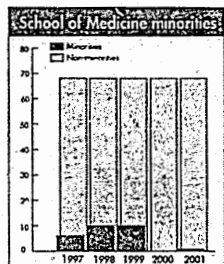

J. MICHAEL RODRIGUEZ
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Affirmative Action rulings are to blame for the SIUC School of Medicine's low enrollment of minority students, a school official says.

But another school official says the numbers are dropping because Illinois high schools are not preparing students to qualify for medical schools.

"Changes in the legal ramifications for Affirmative Action are the cause for declining enrollment," Erin Graham, director of admissions, said. "We're relying less on numbers and more on non-cognitive characteristics in the selection process."

The U.S. Department of Education ruled in 1991 to allow a four-year transition period for universities to cut back on state and federal funding for minority students and to forbid race-exclusive scholarships paid for by state and local governments. All graduate programs at SIUC's School of Medicine were affected because of lost funding.

This is the approximate number of students admitted to the School of Medicine and the year they are expected to graduate. There is an average of 68 graduates per year.

SIUC School of Medicine

By Devin Miller, Daily Egyptian

The School of Medicine has 72 open positions for medical students. In 1995, the final year of state and government race-exclusive scholarships, the School-of-Medicine had 10 minorities admitted, while the following year the minorities admitted dropped to zero. This year, one minority student was admitted to the school.

"We're trying to strengthen our relations with inner-city Chicago high school students," Graham said. "We realized that you almost have to educate students about medical professions

Minority enrollment in law school shows steady decline

SCHOLARSHIPS:

SIUC struggling to stay competitive with private law schools.

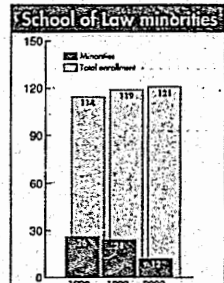

SARA BEAN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The assistant dean of the SIUC School of Law cannot pinpoint a reason for a declining minority enrollment within the school but says SIUC cannot compete with the scholarships offered by private schools in Illinois.

"Our strategy is to recruit the best possible students of all ages, races and sexes," George Norwood, assistant dean for Admissions and Student Affairs, said. "We do not have any separate type of admissions policy for minorities."

A breakdown of the School of Law enrollment indicates a gradual decline in the percentage of minority students joining the law program each year.

This semester, the enrollment at the School of Law is 354 students, 63 of which are minority

- Aaron K. Medina, 26, of Carbondale, was arrested at 4 a.m. Friday for alleged aggravated discharge of a firearm. The incident occurred in the 1100 block of East College Street when an argument resulted in gunshots being fired. Police are seeking information about another gunman in this incident. Medina was taken to Jackson County Jail where he remains in lieu of $2,500 bond.
- Jeffrey Scott Urban, 20, of Carbondale, was arrested at 9:44 a.m. Saturday for home invasion and domestic battery. Police were called to a residence on East Hester Street where Urban reportedly entered the home without permission and battered the couple there. Urban was taken to Jackson County Jail and was later released on $250 bail.

• Police are seeking a man connected with an 11:30 p.m. shooting in the 200 block of North Washington Street Saturday in which one man was injured. Police report that David A. Johnson, 29, was wounded twice in the leg while standing in front of the Cadillac Lounge when an altercation occurred between two men. An unidentified man fired into a crowd in the general direction of the fight. Johnson, who was not one of the two individuals involved in the initial altercation, sustained two gunshot wounds to the leg. He was treated and released from Memorial Hospital of Carbondale. Police are investigating the incident.

False alarms still cause for alarm

CLASS 4 FELONY:

Pulling false fire alarms is punishable by $10,000 fine and three year prison term.

KELLI SMITH
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A reward program may be responsible for the 42-percent reduction in the number of on-campus fire alarms firefighters have responded to since August, a University official says.

So far this year, 62 false-alarm responses have occurred. Thirty-one of those responses took place in the spring, while 12 occurred during the summer.

As of Monday, 18 false alarms have been reported this fall, five of which occurred on the same night, Brad Dillard, assistant director of the Physical Plant, said.

"Even though there doesn't even need to be one pulled alarm, there has been a significant improvement after the last couple of years," Dillard said. "It's real low compared to what we have seen last spring."

In 1995, the Carbondale Fire Department responded to 71 on-campus alarms, and in 1996, there were 55 on-campus false alarms.

The ratio of on-campus responses to that of Carbondale community responses dropped dramatically since 1995, according to statistics provided by the Carbondale Fire Department and SIUC Physical Plant. In 1995, 62 percent of the department's responses were to on-campus locations. So far in 1997, 20 percent of the responses have been to campus.

While the percentage of on-campus vs. community responses has diminished since 1995, University Housing enacted a program in August that awards students $500 for information regarding false alarms because the actual number of on-campus false alarms was growing.

"We have signs to let individuals know this program is in place," Cindy Perkins, coordinator of residence life for Brush Towers, said. "If there is a $500 award, students are more likely to be watchful of people pulling fire alarms."

Perkins would not comment if the University is investigating tips from students this fall.

A conviction for pulling a fire alarm is a Class 4 felony, which carries a punishment of a $10,000 fine and up to three years in prison. Between 30 and 120 hours of community are also required.

False alarms also cost the students living in the residence halls, Perkins said. Fees of up to $1,000 could be divided and billed onto the bursar bills of the students.

Fire officials also are concerned that the Several variations on Halloween break

NO CANDYLAND:

Some students spent free time communing with nature, parents or friends.

KAREN BLATTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Curt Adams and his friend planned to spend their Halloween break bow hunting in Hillsboro until their adventure ended in a medical mishap.

Adams secured a hunting stand and his friend began to climb up in the stand when the accident occurred.

"When he finally got up in the stand, it started to slip down the tree," said Adams, a sophomore in aviation management from Hillsboro. "He began to lose his balance, and he fell out of the tree to the ground."

"I made sure that he was OK and then I took him to the hospital because he said that he was in a lot of pain. Our hunting was concluded in the hospital, and my friend had to get a cast put on his broken arm."

Because of the University and bars on the Strip being closed down over the weekend, many students like Adams chose to make trips home instead of staying in the area.

Kevin Wall, a freshman in forestry from Bartlett, was able to make a trip home and take time to enjoy nature.

"I went to a forest preserve by my house," he said. "I followed some deer trails to get pictures of some animals. I got to see an owl in the wild for the first time."

Working her way through the extended Halloween weekend, Amy Scott, a sophomore in art from St. Joseph, spent some time catching up with her friends.

"I went to my job at Six Flags Great America, working in a haunted house during Fright Fest," she said. "On the way there I stopped to visit my friends and at every house I was given candy — that was like the cherry on top of the cake."

Unlike Wall, Scott and Adams, some SIUC students decided to stay in the Carbondale area over the break.

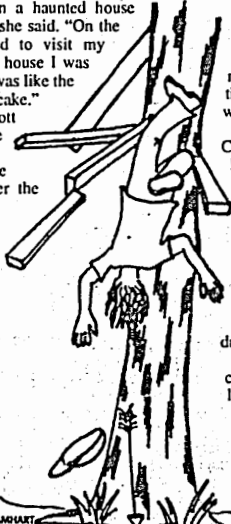

ILLUSTRATION BY BOBBI SHAMHART

Michelle Rozak, a senior in interior design from Lockport, stayed in the area and searched out activities to spend time her newfound free time.

"I took my boyfriend's sons trick-or-treating, and I went to see Koko Taylor [famous blues singer]," Rozak said.

"I was glad that I stayed here instead of going home because all I do when I go home is work."

Some students who stayed in or near Carbondale used that quiet time to catch up on work that they were behind on.

Alone in his dorm room, Adam Cassuto, a senior in art from Des Plaines, spent time on homework.

"It was peaceful and relaxing in the dorms," he said. "I finished most of the things I was behind in."

I hung out with other people that were in the dorm and watched movies."

The extra time gave one student a moment of clarity on the drive to his hometown.

For Wall, the break gave him a chance to realize where he wants to live for the rest of his life.

"While I was driving back to my house I decided that I really don't want to live in the city," he said. "Being down here around all the trees and openness made me see how much I didn't like the city."

FBI finds no terrorist acts in TWA flight 800 crash

Barring an unexpected discovery of new evidence, the FBI has decided to end its investigation of the crash of TWA Flight 800, concluding that there is no evidence that a bomb, missile or other form of sabotage brought down the plane off Long Island 16 months ago, sources say.

The decision to drop the criminal phase of the investigation is tentatively scheduled to be announced at FBI New York headquarters Nov. 13, sources said.

It comes after a final round of tests on the plane by independent metallurgical experts failed to reveal any evidence of bomb or missile damage on the jet's skin or inside the plane, the sources said.

"There are just no stones left to be turned over," said one official, who asked not to be named. "They feel they have turned over every stone that could prove it was a criminal act without finding anything. It would be pointless and a waste of money to go on."

Oldest reference to King Solomon's Temple found

A 13-word scrap of Old Hebrew script about a payment of three shekels of silver to King Solomon's Temple in Jerusalem has been dated to sometime between the 9th and 7th centuries B.C., making the inscription the oldest non-Biblical reference to the Jewish holy place ever discovered.

The conclusions, which were based on laboratory tests of the pottery shard and analysis of the ancient Hebrew scribe's handwriting, are reported Monday in Biblical Archaeology Review.

The pottery fragment, brought to scholars' attention by its owner, the private London collector Shlomo Moussaieff, refers to the transfer of three shekels of silver to "Beit Yahweh," which is commonly translated as "the house (or temple) of Yahweh."

Scholars believe the note, written in ink, is an invoice or a receipt for a donation to the temple, later destroyed in 586 B.C. by the Babylonians as they forced its people into captivity. "I think it's an extremely exciting find. The rarest of the rare," said Hershel Shanks, editor of the review. "You could count on the fingers of your hand ancient inscriptions of such importance."

A look at a Japanese juvenile training center

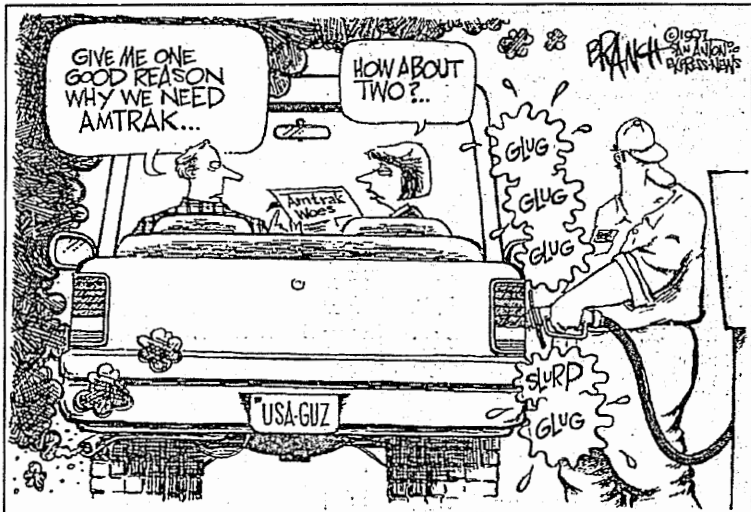

In all of Japan, there are only 24 teen-agers held in juvenile jails because they have been treated essentially as adults. The other 4,000 youth in custody are in "juvenile training centers" like the Yachimata Juvenile Training Center here, where the government acts as parent rather than punisher.

Deputy Superintendent Jiro Hatta said many youths here have led "very painful lives." "Some come from rough backgrounds; some had parents who were alcoholics or constantly fought or abused them mentally or physically," he said. The center's 34 teachers strive to "give them trust and respect in order to teach trust and respect."

Asked why youths convicted of violent acts are encouraged to practice kendo, a martial art similar to fencing, Hatta said it "teaches respect."

It is hard to imagine American youths convicted of deadly assaults being given four-foot-long bamboo swords. But in the gymnasium 22 youths practiced, lunging forward with swords extended as three teachers coached technique.

Speaking up

Referendum would let students voice opinion on governance

AT AN INSTITUTION OF HIGHER education, it would seem logical that students and faculty, who are responsible for keeping such a place in operation, would be consulted when changes are being made. According to a Graduate and Professional Student Council resolution passed Wednesday, the SIUC administration does not listen to the University's students enough. GPSC wants more shared governance in the future, which makes perfect sense.

If the University is not willing to listen to those chosen to represent the students as a whole, what is the point of having such bodies exist?

Students have openly opposed such issues as the implementation of Select 2000 and the athletic-fee increase. They have attended meetings, passed resolutions and even boycotted meetings, attempting to make their concerns heard.

Their concerns and complaints have not led to any considerations or change, leaving students with the feeling that the administration rarely, if ever, listens to student concerns.

SOME STUDENTS SAY SELECT 2000 WAS implemented without giving the greek system an opportunity to ask questions or voice concerns. Perhaps if the administration had allowed members of the greek system to vote and express their concerns on the alcohol restrictions, the resistance to the implementation would not be so great.

The University of Northern Colorado allowed its greek system to vote on Select 2000, and it was approved, which demonstrates that students are capable of mature, rational decisions. Students will not automatically reject changes or increases, if they are informed and considered by the administration.

Steve Etcheson, GPSC vice president for Graduate School Affairs, said shared governance would not necessarily bring change but would give students and faculty the opportunity to be heard.

Etcheson makes a valid point. At least those concerns would be in the open, and the administration would be able to see what those concerns or questions are.

THE PROBLEM MAY BE THAT THE administration does not think student government accurately represents the entire student body. A referendum or survey of the student body would give student government the information it needs to show the administration it does represent the students accurately or, at the very least, provide information that could help student government change to do so. The referendum could show the desirability of issues such as Select 2000 and athletic-fee increases.

"They're not going to let the inmates run the asylum" is the analogy Etcheson used to describe the possibility of the SIUC administration heeding student and faculty concerns.

This may be true, but listening to the "ranting" of the inmates may provide more positive relations and increased peace between the different groups.

"Our Word" represents the consensus of the Daily Egyptian Editorial Board.

Fewer restrictions not a good idea

Dear Editor,

In Monday's Daily Egyptian, Councilman Larry Briggs says that the University should relax its restrictions on the Halloween weekend party because the students have now shown themselves to be respectful and self-controlled.

I submit to you that the students have acted in this way because of the restrictions. By the use of riot control and Mace and, more cleverly, video cameras, the authorities have made the Strip a less desirable place to be on Halloween.

There were reportedly only 100 to 200 people (respectfully) obstructing traffic instead of the thousands who have been there in the past. Now Mr. Briggs wants to return to the past tradition of inviting them all back.

If this is done, it will lend safety to them by increasing their numbers. Students no longer will be the controlled 150 under a spotlight, but an uncontrolled 15,000 who can act in any manner they choose with potential anonymity.

One hundred and fifty students remaining virtually under control (only 32 citations, was it?) proves nothing. If your 13-year-old son stole and wrecked your car and then was "good" for a year, would you reward him by giving him back the keys?

There is also a greater issue at stake. There is no reason whatsoever for SIUC to further risk its reputation by condoning this party. It has nothing to gain and everything to lose.

If SIUC and the city continue to enforce present restrictions, then the party eventually will die out.

It can't be that much fun to leave a bar, stop drinking and then stand in the street for 90 minutes. When people stop doing this, the reputation of the school and the worth of your degrees both will start to rise.

With a better reputation will come more students, which is good for both the city and the University. With fewer restrictions will come greater numbers and less control.

I respect Mr. Briggs for trying to make both factions happy, but the choice seems obvious to me.

Warning sign only short-term fix

Dear Editor,

I am usually not one to rattle any cages, but I feel I must respond to your Oct. 20 editorial.

I disagree with your premise about placing a warning at the intersection of U.S. 51 and Makanda Road. As a writer I implied Oct. 23 (letter to the editor, "Makanda intersection is not a 'death trap'"), a warning light — such as those at U.S. 51 and Cobden Road, or Old Route 13 and Country Club Road — may only be a short-term fix at best. Under normal conditions, there is good visibility in all directions. Therefore, any action taken by the Illinois Department of Transportation would be totally at its discretion.

In order to save lives, perhaps drivers should simply remember the practices it took to get their license in the first place.

Perhaps in the future, you and your staff will resist going with the easy emotional appeal and do a little fact-finding before publishing your "consensus" of opinion.

Carbondale family active in civil rights

Dear Editor,

There are several things not mentioned in the Oct. 28 Daily Egyptian article about my civil rights activism ("Local civil rights activist honored"). The integration of the restaurants in Carbondale was brought about by teams of black and white high school students — including my daughter Jane — visiting each restaurant and asking them not to discriminate.

Eight SIUC students went to Mississippi in the summer of 1964 to take part in the effort to register voters and set up Freedom Schools. My son and daughter were among them, and a large group of adults raised money to defray their expenses and buy school supplies.

Several SIUC students, including my son Jim, went down to Cairo to help local black students integrate the swimming pool, which had just been opened for whites only. All the young people were arrested. My husband and I pledged our farm as bond to have them released. The case was later thrown out of court.

single, crystallized message, consisting of about three or four coherent issues. It was duly noted, however, that in an era of soundbites, complex issues tend to get squeezed out of the election process.

After the morning panel concluded, audience members were invited to eat lunch, during which time they heard from guest speaker, Edgar.

Edgar repeated many of the same points made during the panel presentation, but talked more about the role of the voter. He said voters should be informed on the issues before they come to the polls and should know why they are voting for the candidate they want to elect.

"I'm worried about who's coming to vote — if they're informed," he said. "I want the people who do go to the polls to know what they're voting on."

Following Edgar's presentation, the afternoon panel commenced. The panel was comprised of Odie Washington, director of the Illinois Department of Corrections; Tom Homer, a Nashville appellate court justice; Mayor Karen Hasara of Springfield; Fowler; and Emily Wilkerson, State House correspon-der for the Copley News Service. Tom Castellano of the SIUC Crime Study Center moderated the forum.

Mike Lawrence, associate director of the Public Policy Institute, was enthusiastic about the event and said the Institute will sponsor more political campaign forums in the future dealing with issues and messages.

"I think it went very well," Lawrence said. "It was a great educational experience for students and the community. It's beneficial when you can get people in the area of public policy to come to campus and talk about their area."

"We're very encouraged by the turnout. We'll be doing this again."

number and frequency of false alarms is making students reluctant to evacuate the residence halls.

Courtney Rezek, a Brush Towers resident, said it can take up to 30 minutes to empty the 17-floor towers.

"I've heard it so many times I don't take it seriously at all anymore," Rezek, an undecided freshman from Lake Forest, said.

This is also a concern of Carbondale Fire Department Chief Clifford Manis, who has noticed the apathy of students to exit the towers.

"I have noticed that once the number of alarms increases, students tend to become complacent," Manis said. "People are putting themselves at risk by not exiting the building in a quick and orderly fashion, in case of a real fire, which does happen on occasion."

LAW SCHOOL

loss of even one minority student can affect the enrollment by an entire percentage point," Norwood said.

"Law school enrollment, in general, has been declining across the country since 1990 or 1991. There has been a decrease in the number of applicants. Fewer students are applying to law school."

The decline in students applying for law school places increased pressure on a number of schools across the country to maintain enrollment, Norwood said. With a smaller pool of applicants, the schools that have the most to offer will most likely recruit the most students.

"Public schools, especially small ones such as the School of Law here, cannot offer the scholarships that a private school can," Norwood said.

There are nine law schools in the state, six of which are private.

Loyola University School of Law in Chicago, one of the six, sends representatives throughout the country to recruit students. For the 1997-98 school year, 59 percent of Loyola's student body is made up of out-of-state students, according to the school's web page (www.luc.edu/schools/law).

About 70 percent of the entering students at the SIU School of Law are residents of Illinois, according to reports from the School of Law Office of Admissions.

Norwood said SIU School of Law sends recruiters across the country to talk to prospective students. In recent months, SIU recruited from schools in Tennessee, Kentucky and Indiana. The school will recruit in Cincinnati this weekend.

Norwood said he could not establish the direct cause of the decline in applicants, but said the School of Law is committed to retaining its students. He also said the School of Law is utilizing all its resources to recruit the best students possible.

And Norwood said the number of scholarships SIU School of Law can offer may increase with a new experimental budget system implemented this year. Under the new budget system, which eliminated tuition waivers, graduate assistants are paid an hourly wage of $8.50 instead of receiving tuition waivers.

The controversial budget change allows the School of Law to keep its tuition dollars to better itself. Some of the money from tuition waivers is being used for financial aid and scholarships with the remainder going to improve the school's resources and facilities.

"I don't know the exact effect of the new budget on enrollment," Norwood said. "I don't think it would be fair to say that it is the direct cause of the decrease in the number of minority applicants though."

The school also has been taking steps to increase minority enrollment.

Minority law student associations at the School of Law sponsored seminars throughout the semester to help increase the number of minorities in the school.

On Oct. 11, the organizations sponsored a Minority Law Day, a four-hour seminar designed to introduce minorities, as well as anyone else interested, to the basics of applying to law school, and then try to sell them on SIU's School of Law, Norwood said.

Minority law student organization leaders could not be reached for comment.

Undergraduates interested in the School of Law met in the Lesar Law Building to listen to speakers who offered information about what career choices exist with a law degree, as well as how to finance law school and how to prepare for the Law School Application Test and the application process.

Norwood said he sent the information regarding the Minority Law Day to more than 300 pre-law advisers across a six-state area, encouraging them to inform their students about the event.

The Admissions Committee reviews each applicant's completed file. The committee places emphasis on the applicant's Law School Admissions Test (LSAT) score and undergraduate grade point average.

The committee considers other factors when evaluating an applicant's file, Norwood said. Factors such as difficulty of curriculum, demonstrated leadership ability, strong and informative letters of recommendation, overall character, maturity and motivation and the ability to contribute to the overall diversity of the law school community are also taken into consideration when evaluating an application.

"Our mission is to be the best public law school in the country," Norwood said, "by recruiting the best possible students we can."

before college."

But Erik J. Constance, associate dean for Student Affairs, said Affirmative Action is not the reason that minority enrollment is down, but the fact that there are fewer qualified applicants across Illinois.

"It has nothing to do with Affirmative Action. That's too easy of an excuse. It's a cop-out," Constance said. "That's (Affirmative Action) a worry all over the country, and we do practice Affirmative Action."

"If you're not getting qualified applicants, then there is nothing we can do about that."

Constance said Illinois schools need to better prepare students interested in a field of medicine.

"We need stronger school systems to produce more qualified applicants," he said. "There are much fewer qualified students all over the state of Illinois."

The Illinois Board of Higher Education encouraged the SIU School of Medicine to meet with a Chicago-based group called Champs in an attempt to increase the enrollment of minorities in the School of Medicine. The two groups met at the end of September, and officials from the Champs program say that they are prepared to work together with SIU.

"We're going to do everything to encourage minority students to apply to SIU," Dr. Reggie Jones, director of the Champs program, said. "We're going to expose SIU's medical school to the students that we deal with."

Champs is a summer program implemented 18 years ago that has worked with students from the sixth grade through high school.

Students spend the summer taking classes and observing professionals in various fields, including medicine, to help them explore and discover their interests, Jones said.

The Champs program is involved with seven of Illinois' eight medical schools and three dental schools. The one medical school omitted in the past was SIU.

Constance said the new relationship with the Champs program will benefit the School of Medicine by having more qualified students apply to the school.

"What we're trying to do is strengthen the pipeline of students that enter our program," Constance said. "Getting involved with the Champs program will help us do just that."

On the road to recovery

STORY AND PHOTOS BY

BALANCING: (Top) Harold Crowe, of Bloomington, works one-on-one with his physical therapist practicing his walking. Crowe suffered from a spinal cord injury after being hit by a car in 1996. (Right) A flight of stairs presents a major obstacle for Crowe to overcome.

WORKING: (Above) Crowe works at the Science Center in University Mall as part of the program of getting back into society.

Harold Crowe struggles every day to regain full use of his body after a serious accident robbed him of many simple tasks in life, including walking, talking and writing.

Crowe was working a night job as a security guard for a company in Bloomington, when on Aug. 13, 1996, he opened the gate for a truck to drive through. As the truck passed, an oncoming car did not see Crowe and hit him. Crowe was rushed to the hospital with spinal cord injuries, a broken leg and broken elbow.

"I didn't know if I was going to live, and I never thought that I'd be able to walk again," the 45-year-old Crowe said. "Being in the hospital recovering, I needed someone to help me eat, move and do other common tasks that I usually do on my own."

After five months in the hospital, the doctors determined Crowe was in good enough physical condition to move to a rehabilitation center where he could receive more personal assistance. On Jan. 6, he was admitted to rehabilitation at the Center for Comprehensive Services, 610 S. University Ave.

CCS has programs that give personal care and therapy to people with head and spinal cord injuries so they will be able to re-enter society and live a normal life style.

In Crowe's program, he received vocational, physical and occupational therapy. A schedule was made each week for Crowe, which allowed him to receive therapy in areas that he needed it the most.

After getting his cast off, Crowe re-injured his leg attempting to walk. The new injury led to a decision for an operation to put pins in his leg. The pain Crowe felt when applying pressure on his legs was the biggest struggle to overcome in recovering the use of his legs.

"After I re-injured my leg, I was intimidated to walk again because I didn't know if my legs were going to be strong enough," Crowe said.

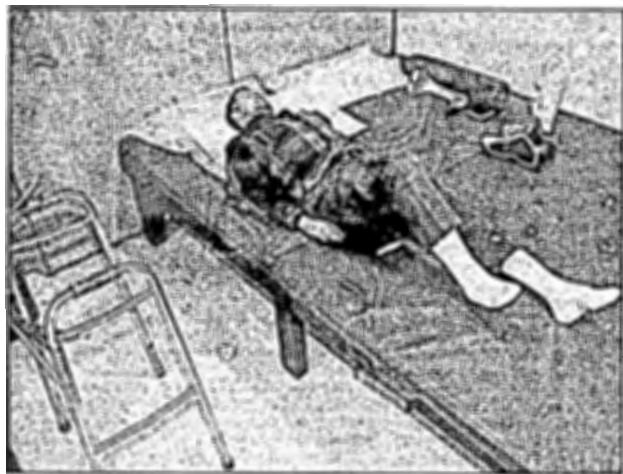

Crowe had been in rehabilitation for about a year when on Sept. 25, he was released to go home.

"When I got here I was in a wheelchair, and now I'm walking with just a cane and some assistance," Crowe said.

Crowe got tired of being at CCS and being dependent on others, but the stay made him even more determined to recover and get back into society.

"I want to be at home with my family and friends. I got lonely down here sometimes," Crowe said.

"My brother and mother were at my side when I was rushed to the hospital in August. All I remember hearing them say was, 'Everything would be all right, we'll get you through this.' My family has been my inspiration for my determination to recover and walk again."

Crowe does a series of exercise daily to help keep his legs in shape. It is the responsibility of the patient to perform rehabilitative exercises on their own.

Hill set to become NBA's next marquee player

NEWSDAY

NEW YORK — Let's get one thing straight off the top. There is no "next Michael Jordan." Athletes worthy of being labeled "the greatest" don't just roll off an assembly line.

Not even when they come from Detroit.

Which brings us to Grant Hill. With Jordan embarking on what may be his last season, the marketing arm of the NBA certainly will do everything possible to encourage the perception of Hill as the "next Jordan." Fila, which recently signed Hill to a contract worth $80 million, will do its part to make a dent in this Nike world.

Once you get past the sales pitch, what's left is a player who is as worthy as anyone to play the role of Jordan's successor as the league's marquee attraction. The only handicap is that Hill doesn't have a sidekick in his supporting cast as talented as Scottie Pippen. But Hill surely can take over a game, as he proved in the Pistons' 94-86 victory in the Knicks' home opener Monday night at Madison Square Garden.

The Knicks were sitting on their biggest lead of the game at 67-58 with 10:46 to play when Hill flicked the superstar switch. It was as if the klieg lights came on to the accompaniment of a trumpet fanfare.

Hill scored six points in 1:14, but that was just the warmup. Chris Childs was bringing the ball across the half-court line when Hill suddenly jumped at him, stripped the ball, stumbled a moment as he gained control of both the ball and his body and flew downcourt for a slam dunk that cut the Knicks' lead to one. Then, Hill assisted on two layups by Aaron McKie for a 70-69 Pistons lead.

Following a Malik Sealy miss, Hill dunked for a 74-71 lead. A couple of minutes later, he made it impossible for John Starks to get the ball inside to Larry Johnson by dancing back and forth behind Johnson until Starks got frustrated and wound up hanging in mid-air and committing a turnover.

With 2:35 left, Hill drove down the left side past a lunging Charlic Ward to make a high-speed, leaning layup for a 83-77 lead and control of the game.

Cowboys' antics don't cut it anymore

LOS ANGELES TIMES

SAN FRANCISCO — This is what happens when you are a Dallas Cowboy.

In the final quarter of a game against your bitter rival, you are covering the other team's best receiver when he blocks you out of bounds.

You get mad, so you spit on him. Four plays later, he retaliates by hammering your head with his forearm.

During a game-winning touchdown celebration.

A touchdown you helped cause.

This is what happens when you are a Dallas Cowboy.

The swagger doesn't work. The attitude doesn't play. Cheap shots cost.

When you are a Dallas

Cowboy, a November loss to the 49ers doesn't just end your week. It ends your season.

Make no mistake about that blank look on the faces of America's most expressive team when they wandered off the field at 3Com Park Sunday after blowing another late lead in a 17-10 loss to the 49ers.

It was one of resignation. If many of them could quit and start again next year, they would. Barry Switzer won't, so he will be fired, and soon.

What happened to the dead-stalled Cowboys Sunday was precisely what has happened to them during their five losses in nine games this year.

It was typified in the above encounter between Cowboy defensive back Kevin Smith and 49er receiver Terrell Owens.

They used to be so good and so smart, they could win without ever opening their mouth.

Now they are neither. Now they are just desperate.

And, as with all things once proud, desperation does not become them.

There they were Sunday, making noise with the first drive of the game, 13 plays, the 49ers already reeling, when Aikman calls a "seat left" formation.

Dana Stubblefield runs untouched through the line, Aikman is sacked on third down, the Cowboys are knocked out of field goal range. There they were again, threatening to take a seven-point lead in the third quarter, two chances to score from the one-yard line, and Sherman Williams is twice stuffed at the line of scrimmage.

No-name players prove value to NFL teams

LOS ANGELES TIMES

Fred Lane and Moe Williams — just who are those guys anyway?

Well, they're a couple of third-string running backs who were pressed into prime-time duty Sunday because of injuries to teammates and responded with performances that keyed victories.

Lane, a free agent from — of all places — Lane College in Jackson, Tenn. — was brought in just five plays into Carolina's game with Oakland when starting tailback Tshimanga Biakabutuka left with bruised ribs.

He proceeded to plow through the NFL's worst defense, carrying 28 times for 147 yards and a team-record three touchdowns in the Panthers' 38-14 victory.

"He's fun to block for," guard Greg Skrepenak said. "He's like the Energizer bunny. He just keeps going and going and going."

The Oakland Raiders didn't find Lane's bullish running too amusing. His struggle for extra yards on a carry with 2:36 left in the game spawned a melee that involved a number of players from both teams. Oakland's Chester McGlockton and Russell Maryland were ejected, but before McGlockton left the field, he was involved in a flare-up, leading to another personal-foul penalty against the Raiders.

Surprise, Surprise. Raider Coach Joe Bugel indicated afterward he wasn't surprised — about Lane. Bugel said the Raiders were interested in Lane coming out of college, where he rushed for 4,433 yards in three seasons. But like the rest of the NFL, Oakland never got around to drafting him.

"I was kind of hoping they wouldn't play him, to be honest with you," Bugel said. "He's a legitimate tough guy. You saw what he did."

What Williams did in Minnesota's 23-18 victory over New England wasn't as spectacular but just as important to his team.

Williams, a second-year player and third-round draft pick out of Kentucky, opened the game with a 74-yard kickoff return that set up a field goal.

Then, as a running back replacement for the injured Robert Smith and Leroy Hoard, he carried 19 times for 43 yards and his first NFL touchdown — a one-yard run that gave the Vikings a 10-0 lead.

An NFL Sunday wouldn't be complete without at least a couple of quarterbacks getting injured and being knocked out of games.

Roll call please: Miami's Dan Marino sprained his left ankle late after getting hit by Buffalo's Bruce Smith in the first half. He pulled himself out in the first series of the second half, signaling for Craig Erickson to come in after throwing an incomplete pass. Erickson was no more effective than Marino in a touchdown-less game at Rich Stadium.

Marino, who was sidelined last season with a broken ankle, will be examined Monday.

San Diego's quarterback Stan Humphries was knocked out of a game for the third time this season following an illegal hit by Cincinnati's Reinard Wilson.

Humphries sustained a concussion after Wilson hit him chest-to-chest after he threw a pass and drove the quarterback backward onto the artificial turf. Wilson even raked over Humphries after he landed on top of him.

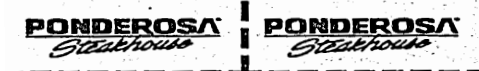

Humphries was carried off in a stretcher and taken to a Cincinnati hospital.

Cross country teams suffer disappointing finishes in conference championships

COMPETITION:
SIUC's top finisher placed 13th out of 78.

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The SIUC men's and women's cross country teams found that a case of pre-race jitters and a field of strong competition were more than they could handle Saturday at the Missouri Valley Conference Championships in Springfield, Mo.

The Saluki men, led by Matt McClelland, finished sixth, while the women fell to an eighth-place finish.

The Saluki men were expected to finish fourth after a second-place effort in 1996. The women's team was picked to finish seventh after a 1996 fourth-place finish.

Men's coach Bill Cornell said his team wants to put the meet behind it and look ahead to the District V meet Nov. 15 in Ames, Iowa.

"Obviously, we're very disappointed," Cornell said. "It's just one of those things we can't explain."

McClelland finished in 18th place with a time of 25 minutes and 5.6 seconds.

Saluki runner Joseph Parks, who was one of the pre-race favorites to win the MVC title, finished sixth for the team and 51st overall out of 78 runners with a time of 26:31.4.

Cornell attributes race-time jit-ters to Joseph Parks' disappointing race.

"He wanted it so bad, but he was too nervous and blew up before the race even started," Cornell said.

Cornell said Parks' finish rubbed off on the rest of the team.

"I think it had a little bit of an effect on the runners when they saw him not running well," Cornell said.

Jeremy Parks said having the team's top runner in the back of the race affected the team's race mentality.

"Seeing him (Joseph Parks) struggle made the guys think, 'If he's hurting that bad, I must be hurting twice as much,'" Jeremy Parks said.

Following McClelland was Jeremy Parks in 26th place (25:19.7), Eric Rushing in 35th place (25:19) and Andy Bosak in 36th place (25:52.2). Paul Fitzpatrick rounded out the Salukis top finishers in 37th place (25:52.5).

The University of Northern Iowa won the men's MVC Championship, followed by Illinois State University, Drake University, Indiana State University, Southwest Missouri State University and SIUC.

The Saluki women, led by Jenny Monaco's 13th-place finish out of 78 runners, could also feel the difficulty of a tough conference outing.

Runner Becky Cox said the meet provided some stiff competition.

"We were ranked seventh going in, so we only let one team beat us that shouldn't have," Cox said. "I thought it was a really tough meet because the MVC is a strong conference."

Saluki coach Don DeNoon would have liked to have some better overall finishes, but said he saw some positive aspects in the race.

"I don't think the meet was a disappointment," DeNoon said. "Gayla Harrington ran her best time of the year (19:10), and there was some good individual races, but we would certainly have liked to have better times."

Monaco's 13th-place finish (18:31) was followed by Raina Larsen in 28th place (19:01), Harrington in 34th place, Cox in 47th place (19:40) and Erin Leahy in 53rd place (20:01).

Wichita State University won the meet with 59 points, followed by Indiana State with 76 points and Bradley with 88 points. SIUC finished with 171 points.

DeNoon said the team is still considering if it will compete in the District V meet in Nov. 15 in Ames, Iowa.

"Since we weren't able to compete in the Missouri Valley, it will be hard to be competitive at the district meet," DeNoon said. "It might be better to start getting ready for the track season (Dec. 6)."

The men's and women's cross country teams are scheduled to compete next in the District V meet Nov. 15 in Ames, Iowa.

Kenyan, Swiss win NYC marathon

NEWSDAY

NEW YORK — Good luck convincing your kids to tie their shoelaces today.

With a steady rain falling and wind blowing, Kenyan John Kagwe, his right shoelace untied and flapping against the Central Park pavement with every stride, won the New York City Marathon Sunday, prevailing in a race notable as much by the late fade of the favorites as by the lousy weather.

If Kagwe, 28, who ran 2:08:12 for the second-fastest finish in the race's 28-year history, was a surprise even among the dominant Kenyans, then the women's winner — Franziska Rochat-Moser, a Swiss restaurateur and lawyer — was an utter shock. Rochat-Moser, 31, in her first appearance in New York, took the lead from favorite and two-time winner Tegla Loroupe of Kenya at the 22nd mile and ran through the park fighting cramps in her left hamstring to finish in 2:28:43.

"I told my husband that if I won New York, I'd give up my career," Rochat-Moser said. "Now I do not know what I will do." The New York City Marathon was always a dream for me."

Kagwe is one of a group of Kenyans who have catapulted to the top of distance running this year. He lives part of the year in Philadelphia and trains in Valley Forge Park, a hilly course much like Central Park. In 1995, he was fifth here and last year he was fourth. In May, he won the Prague Marathon in 2:09:07.

But his breakthrough came as his shoe became undone. He surely would have broken the course record — he missed by just 11 seconds.

Villanova retains top spot in Division I-AA poll

The University of Villanova Wildcats knocked off the University of Rhode Island Rams 37-15 Saturday to keep the top spot in the Sports Network Division I-AA poll for the third straight week. Villanova improved to 8-0 and picked up 83 first-place votes for a total of 2,402 points.

The top seven teams stayed the same in this week's poll, selected by the TSN selection panel and Division I-AA sports information directors. Western Illinois University grabbed six first-place votes and 2,272 points after holding off SIUC 31-26. The University of Delaware blanked William & Mary College 14-0, while Youngstown State University and Western Kentucky University round out the top five.

Southern University, Stephen F. Austin University, Eastern Washington University, Eastern Illinois University and McNeese State University round out the top 10.

Georgia Southern University, Hampton University, the University of Montana, Jackson State University and Florida A&M University make up the rest of the top 15.

Ex-Angel Phillips pleads guilty to cocaine possession

Free agent utility man Tony Phillips entered a guilty plea to misdemeanor cocaine possession Monday. He was ordered into a drug diversion program that could clear his record.

Phillips, who recently was released by the Anaheim Angels, was arrested shortly after midnight Aug. 10 at an Anaheim motel for purchasing $30 worth of rock cocaine.

The 38-year-old Phillips entered the plea before Municipal Court Judge Michael Hayes. Phillips has a year to successfully complete the drug diversion program and must then report to the court. His record could be cleared if the judge believes he has satisfied the drug-counseling requirement. However, if Phillips slides and uses drugs again, he could be sentenced for felony possession.

Phillips hit .264 with six homers, 48 RBI and 73 runs scored in 105 games this past season.

NFL

Oakland's George injured

The Oakland Raiders finished out Sunday's 38-14 rout at the hands of Carolina without quarterback Jeff George. He suffered bruised left ribs when he was sacked by the Panthers' Renaldo Turnbull with just over five minutes left in the game. Turnbull was penalized for being off-sides on the play.

George had completed 24 of 38 passes for 304 yards and two touchdowns with one interception. He went into the game as the top-ranked quarterback in the AFC and second in the NFL. His season numbers include 165 of 287 for 2,403 yards and 20 touchdowns, with five interceptions.

Major-leaguers visit Carbondale

PROFESSIONALS: Players in town for card show include two former SIUC standouts.

TRAVIS AKH
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Jack Lintner is no longer upset with Major League Baseball players for striking in 1994, and as a life-long baseball fan, he believes that baseball is coming back as America's favorite pastime.

For Lintner, Cleveland Indians' first baseman Jim Thome showed the true character of baseball by coming to Carbondale just six days after his team lost the World Series.

Thome and three other professional baseball players appeared Saturday at the 1997 Saluki Baseball Sports Memorabilia Show at the Carbondale Civic Center, 200 S. Illinois Ave. About 200 people attended the show.

"I was mad for a while," Lintner, an Ava resident, said about the strike. "But I think it (baseball) is starting to come back. I think events like this help."

The event was designed to raise money for the Saluki baseball program and included a chance to get autographs from Thome and San Francisco Giants hurler Kirk Rueter, as well as two former Saluki standouts, Al Levine and Aaron Jones.

Levine is a reliever for the Chicago White Sox and Jones is playing first base in the New York Yankees minor league system. Levine returned to Carbondale for the first time since leaving SIUC in 1991.

Levine transferred to SIUC in 1990 as a junior. That year, he led the Salukis and the Missouri Valley Conference in saves with 13. He has the all-time record at SIUC for saves with 19. His six saves in 1991 also led the Salukis and was good enough for fourth on the all-time list for saves.

As a Chicago White Sox hurler, Levine had an ERA of 6.91 and struck out 22 last season.

For Jones, just getting to the major leagues is a dream. Jones played at SIUC from 1996 to 1997. He has the SIUC all-time record for most doubles with 19 and has the record for most hits with 79 in his career.

"It is time to move on," Jones said. "Next year, I won't have any excuse. I would like to be able to move up every year."

One of the concerns of the players was bringing more fans like Lintner back to the game.

Thome said he had only been home a few days after the World Series before he was on the road promoting baseball. He said it is that sort of commitment to the game that will make baseball return in popularity.

"I got home Thursday," Thome said. "Now I am here doing a favor for an old friend of mine. Baseball needs to start to get back to where people can enjoy it again."

Thome hit .286 last season and drove in 102 runs to go along with 40 home runs as he helped his team win the American League Championship. The Indians lost the World Series in seven games to the Florida Marlins Oct. 27.

Despite the low television ratings of the 1997 World Series, Thome said baseball is regaining popularity. One reason is the fact that the games in Cleveland have been sold out for the last three seasons. But ball clubs that have not been as successful have had a more difficult time drawing the fans.

Rueter, who had a 3.45 ERA last season in 32 games, said the Giants have tried to find new ways to keep fans coming to the ball park. But what is more attractive to fans is a winning season.

"Every day we have three guys available for autographs," Rueter said. "I have sat there (many times) on the right field line and signed autographs. I think if we win, the fans will come out. That is what the fans in San Francisco are waiting for. But for the most part, I think baseball is on its way back."

Thome said the most important thing players can do is to never lose sight of their dreams.

"You know this is every kid's dream," Thome said. "You get to the World Series and get to the ninth inning and have a chance to be a hero."

Kentucky strokes past SIUC swimmers

FREESTYLE: Men's, women's squads can muster only one individual victory apiece.

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Kentucky proved to be too much for the SIUC men's and women's swimming and diving teams as both of the Saluki squads fell to a well-prepared University of Kentucky Friday night in Lexington.

The men's team provided a good showing but suffered a hard loss to a strong Kentucky team, while the women's team ran into a red-hot Kentucky squad.

Men's swimming coach Rick Walker said Kentucky was ready for the Salukis' competition.

"Kentucky was completely prepared for us," Walker said. "If that isn't the biggest sign of respect, I don't know what is."

The Saluki men were defeated by a score of 142-94, but Walker said the meet was much closer than the score indicated.

The men's team is now 1-1 for the year. The Salukis defeated Drury College 137-104, Oct. 25, in Carbondale.

The Salukis started the meet off with a victory by the 200-meter medley squad with a time of 1 minute and 35.49 seconds.

The Salukis had only one individual winner in Come Proszky, who won the 200-meter breast stroke (2:06.64).

The men's top diver, Alex Wright, finished in second place in the 1-meter competition (203.25) and second place in the 3-meter competition (289.5). The men's diving competition featured four divers.

Women's coach Mark Kluemper said the Salukis competed against a much-improved team that had tasted success recently.

"Kentucky swam much better Friday night," Kluemper said. "It was just a case of us running into a really hot team."

Melanie Williams was the lone individual winner for the Salukis with a first-place finish in the 200-meter breaststroke (2:28.66).

Kluemper said the 136-92 defeat was a good learning experience for his young team.

"For a lot of the girls, it was the first time on the road," Kluemper said. "It was a little bit of a discouraging weekend, but it is something the team will learn from."

The women's team is now 1-2 for the season, with its victory coming at home against Drury College 136-105 Oct. 25.

Top women's diver Karla Gerzema placed second in the 1-meter competition (250.50) and finished in third place in the 3-meter competition (247.20). The women's diving competition featured six divers.
