Backbone of humanity

Community program helps build self-worth

By Melissa Jakubowski
DE Features Editor

Deborah Golden always thought she would put the key in the door of her new home, find everything complete inside and at the most, she would have to do some mere painting and minor redecorating.

She never dreamed she would help build her home.

"It gives you a sense of self worth," Deborah, a Carbondale resident, said. "It really makes you feel proud and excited."

Self worth is the backbone of the Habitat for Humanity program, and Deborah and Clarence Golden are learning that first hand.

"When someone builds their own home, they will always have a mowed lawn," Clarence said. "They will always feel good about the upkeep of the house, and that will carry over in life."

The Habitat for Humanity program helps people build homes who financially cannot afford such ventures.

Just this August, the Golden's learned that they would be the proud owners of a new home. Deborah said they put in an application for a

Three unsolved murder cases worry residents

By Brett Wilcoxson
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Three unsolved murder cases in Carbondale during the past few years have left some residents frustrated and others fearing for their safety.

Walter Polk, of 504 S. Wall St., said he lives about four blocks from a residence where a homicide took place, and that makes him nervous.

Polk lives near 402 Walker St., where police have said Connie Cole-Holmes, a 34-year-old mother of two, was beaten to death in June.

Polk said he hopes the police do not give up on the investigation because he does not feel safe when there could be a murderer in his neighborhood.

"I just wish they'd stay on the case and find somebody," he said. "It's scary when you have a killer

Li. Bob Goro, of the Carbondale Police Department, said that while he cannot comment on whether there are any suspects at this time, he is still hopeful that the killer will be caught. But he said leads are scarce, and he is asking for the community's help.

"We still have a few leads we're working on," he said. "Anyone with Local resident assaulted by unknown assailant

By Brett Wilcoxson
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An aggravated criminal sexual assault was reported to University Police Saturday, and police say this is the first case this year in which the alleged victim did not know her assailant.

Chief Sam Jordan said this case is unusual because the vast majority of criminal sexual assaults on campus are committed by people who know their victims.

He said there were three criminal sexual assaults during the spring semester, one during the summer, and this is the third this fall.

"All but this one were acquaintance related," he said.

Jordan said while it always is a good idea to be careful, he does not believe there is someone targeting people on campus for sexual assaults.

"Everyone always ought to be alert to what's going on in their environment," he said. "We don't want people to think there's someone out there lurking in the bushes."

The alleged victim in the case, who is not a student but is a local resident, said she was walking outside at the Southern Hills apartment complex just before 8 a.m. when she was grabbed from behind by a man. She said when she screamed for help, the assailant struck her in the face until she was quiet. She said the man then sexually assaulted her before fleeing the scene on foot.

While police said they could not elaborate on the woman's specific injuries, they said she was treated and released for her injuries at a local hospital. Police would not release the woman's age.

Crime scene technicians from the Illinois State Police are aiding University Police in the ongoing investigation.

Jordan said there are no suspects at this time, but he is not giving up hope that some clues will surface.

"The victim has not been able to give us a description yet," he said. "We're hoping to talk to some more people."

Police said anyone with information about the assault should contact the SIUC Police.

Campus organizations aiding voter registration

Several campus organizations are rushing to register students to vote in the Nov. 5 election before Tuesday's deadline.

The Black Affairs Council, College Democrats, College Republicans and Undergraduate Student Government are among several student organizations who will be working this week to register voters.

As part of National Student Voter Day, BAC and USG will have a voter registration drive between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. today on the south patio of the Student Center. The event will feature the Mudkitties, a local band.

Deputy registrars from BAC and USG also will be registering voters from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Saturday in Grinnell Hall in Brush Towers.

State outlaws imports made in slave camps

A bill making California the first state to outlaw purchases of goods produced in slave-labor camps in China and other foreign nations was signed into law late Monday by Gov. Pete Wilson.

The anti-slave labor bill — actively supported by human rights activist Harry Wu, who spent 19 years as a political prisoner in Chinese labor camps — is regarded by its backers as a symbolic breakthrough but also a potential economic weapon.

Although it applies solely to state government purchases, the law is intended to build economic pressure against exploitative foreign factories in such countries as India, Pakistan and Brazil, as well as China. It also is expected to galvanize existing efforts to pass similar statutes in other states.

But a spokesman at China's consulate in San Francisco, Wang Yusheng, said accusations that his nation exports products made by prisoners are "groundless."

'Red and brown... in a black and white world'

Columnist says Latinos disrespected by media

By Travis Akin
Daily Egyptian Reporter

One of the biggest challenges Latinos face is being red and brown in a black-and-white media world, Patricia Gonzales told a group of students and faculty Monday evening.

Gonzales spoke to a crowd of about 40 people in the Student Center auditorium. The speech was part of a series of events to celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month.

Gonzales is a well-known syndicated columnist who writes a joint column with her husband Roberto Rodriguez that appears in more than 30 papers across the nation. Some of the papers include The Philadelphia Inquirer and The Texas Observer.

Gonzales is known for focusing her columns on human rights and social movements in Mexico.

She said the media often only deal with black and white issues and censor Latinos through omission, legitimacy and perspective.

When media groups omit the works of Latinos from the public, Gonzales said these groups are guilty of censorship.

"Latino writers are not considered good enough and are often omitted," Gonzales said. "When The Chicago Sun Times pulled our column, the editors said our column was not important enough. That is censorship of omission."

Gonzales said this censorship leads to a questioning of the legitimacy regarding works of Latinos in the media. She said an example is the testimony of a former federal drug agent Celirino Castillo that was ignored because Congress doubted his legitimacy as a source.

Gonzales said she tried to write about Castillo but was ignored.

"In his book 'Powderburns,' Castillo outlines records he kept of planes coming into the Hopango Air Force Base in El Salvador in which the federal government was bringing guns in and leaving with drugs," Gonzales said. "His testimony proves that it is more than just a few rogue agents dealing drugs, but when we as columnists ran his story, very few papers carried it."

Gonzales said the censorship of Latinos in the media has taken away the true identity of Latinos.

PAT MAHON — The Daily Egyptian

Nationally syndicated columnist Patricia Gonzales, speaking during an Hispanic Heritage Month event at the Student Center Monday, said that when The Chicago Sun Times discontinued her column, it was a form of censorship that omitted the Latino voice as "not important enough."

Former SIUC students sentenced in cocaine rap

By Brett Wilcoxson
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Two former SIUC students received similar sentences in U.S. District Court in East St. Louis Friday after previously pleading guilty to marijuana and cocaine charges.

John Pfluger, 24, a former business management major from Carbondale, and Robert Heneghan, 24, a 1995 graduate in business finance from Wood Dale, were each sentenced to 27 months imprisonment by Judge William L. Beatty as part of their plea bargaining agreements with the U.S. Attorney.

A spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney's office said on June 17, Pfluger pled guilty to conspiracy to distribute cocaine and unlawful manufacture of marijuana plants, and on June 26, Heneghan pled guilty to conspiracy to distribute cocaine.

A law enforcement investigation showed that from November 1994 through April 5 of this year, Pfluger and Heneghan were working together to distribute cocaine and marijuana in Carbondale.

Authorities said the cocaine was brought to Carbondale from Chicago for distribution, and the marijuana was grown at Pfluger's residence in Carbondale.

A spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney's office said law enforcement personnel — using search warrants — found 49 marijuana plants at Pfluger's residence and found one ounce of cocaine in Heneghan's car, all of which was used as evidence in the case.

Both men were students at SIUC during the offenses, and authorities said the drugs were distributed mostly to University students.

Pfluger's attorney, Kent Brody, said while he believes federal drug laws are harsh, he believes his client received a favorable sentence.

"Under the circumstances, [Pfluger] did as well as could be expected," he said.

Heneghan's attorney was unavailable for comment.

In addition to imprisonment, Pfluger received four years supervised release and a $600 fine, and Heneghan received three years supervised release and a $550 fine. Both men are in custody.

Shakur's portrayal of music, image was reason for his death

SOMETIMES A CELEBRITY CAN TRY TOO hard to uphold an image. He or she can try to give the fans what they want on a 24-hour basis because that is what people have to come to expect. Sooner or later, however, it may become impossible to distinguish between the person's reality and their self-imposed image. This is what happened to Tupac Shakur, better known in the rap world as 2Pac. After creating his own world through his music and attitude, he was killed because of those very things. In the end, he became his own victim.

One of the questions that comes up is if 2Pac was partly responsible for his own death. Should it be up to the person to take responsibility for the type of message their music portrays. In this scenario, his answer is yes.

While the incidents leading up to his death are still controversial and somewhat hazy, the fact remains that 2Pac did his best to fulfill the "gangsta" image he portrayed himself as in his records. How much of his image was reality and how much was hype remains to be seen. 2Pac did everything he could to remind people that even though he was considered somewhat of a success, the gangster in him was never far behind. And in an incident that can best be described as ironic, he was gunned down in a drive-by shooting in Las Vegas last month.

2Pac himself was no stranger to run-ins with the law. He had been arrested in 1992 for connections to shooting incidents, did a jail sentence for assault and was sentenced to four years in prison for sexual battery. He was released on appeal after eight months.

But this was all part of the elaborate lifestyle he led. This was who 2Pac was, and nothing was going to change him. By singing about it in his albums, it only increased the intensity of his gangster image.

TAKING ALL OF THIS INTO CONTEXT, 2PAC did his best to almost glamorize the type of lifestyle he led. Many parents have protested gangsta rap in the past because of its hard-core nature. To say 2Pac was entirely responsible for his own death would be wrong because he was killed in a senseless manner by another senseless human being. But a person must remember that this was exactly what 2Pac sang about in many of his songs. Some find it difficult to say his death was directly linked to his songs, but it should not be overlooked. 2Pac was almost inviting disaster because of the types of things he sang about.

Gangsta rap is very controversial as it is. After the release of Ice-T's "Copkiller," which Ice-T referred to only as a piece of fiction, the lines between freedom of speech and creativity were getting increasingly wider. There were some things, according to the legal system, that went too far. 2Pac, however, did all that he could to portray the gangster image that he himself was a part of. When listening to his songs, it was hard to tell where the music ended and 2Pac took over. According to interviews with 2Pac, his music was all true. He was singing about what he had experienced within his own lifetime. And while other artists were creating fiction, 2Pac reminded everyone that this was who he was.

And if all of the stories are true, and 2Pac did not outgrow the gangster in him, then this ending is not as surprising as some might think. If this was actually the world that 2Pac lived in, then this could have been anticipated and even expected. It seems 2Pac may have died because he climbed into a world he created for himself and couldn't find his way out.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Open mind instead of mouth

I am responding to a couple of letters to the editor in the Daily Egyptian recently.

One writer stated that homosexuality is wrong. It may be according to the Bible, and sure, this country may have been founded on the Bible. But that does not mean everyone living here must be Christian. What about "the land of the free?" People in this country have the right to live however they choose. After all, this is supposed to be a melting pot. That means diversity.

People must accept that not everyone is going to make the same choices because people are very different and live by many different ways. To some, the Bible is the absolute word-for-word ultimate truth of the universe. For others, it is not. For all these people preaching, "You are wrong. Homosexuality is wrong," I remind you of the Bible verse, "Judge not, lest ye be judged."

Perhaps people should open up their hearts and minds a little rather than their mouths.

Latest McLeod play a disgrace

I am writing this letter to the editor to express my disappointment, shock and disgust over McLeod Theater's upcoming "Angels in America." I have been a patron of the theater for several years and have enjoyed almost all of their shows. I have attended every yearly production of McLeod's "A Christmas Carol" and had planned on attending it again this year.

However, it has come to my attention that the theater's upcoming play, "Angels in America," is a play that not only makes cheap jokes at the expense of one of our greatest presidents, Ronald Reagan, but glorifies the sins of sodomy and AIDS as well. I have heard that this play demonstrates homosexual sex as a religious experience.

Have these people no shame or decency?

This play would never have been produced when Christian Moe headed the department. It is shocking to see that Chris hasn't even been gone a month, and already those people are changing everything around.

For a theater that owes its livelihood to serving the Southern Illinois region, McLeod Theater should know better than to do something like this.

As much as it pains me, I think my family and I will be skipping "A Christmas Carol" this year, along with every other McLeod show that is put on.

Dole's stance on drugs hypocritical

I attended the public breakfast at the Student Center last week for Elizabeth Dole. I thought she gave a wonderful speech. Despite her speech, I was troubled with some comments she made about her husband's stances on drugs.

Bob Dole's anti-drug campaign is called "just don't do it." This is a take off of Nancy Reagan's "just say no" campaign from the 1980s. Elizabeth Dole said if her husband is elected, he would cut drug use in half.

What Elizabeth Dole failed to mention is that during the Reagan's anti-drug campaign in the 1980s, the CIA imported drugs into the United States. As a matter of fact, the San Jose Mercury News recently ran an article about the drug running operations of the CIA. The article documented accounts of how the CIA, along with freedom fighters from Nicaragua, conspired to import crack cocaine to poor and black communities in the United States.

Yet, where was Bob Dole? He was the Republican leader of the U.S. Senate at this time. In fact, while these activities were going on, Bob Dole did nothing to expose these evil deeds.

Instead, Bob Dole defended these drug-dealing low-lives from Nicaragua by hailing them as great fighters against communism. Furthermore, Bob Dole has yet to comment on the article in the Mercury News.

After sitting through Elizabeth

Dole's rhetoric, I left the room doubtful about Bob Dole's stance on drugs. If he is so concerned about drugs, will he call for an investigation of the CIA? Will he denounce Ronald Reagan for allowing America's inner cities become warehouses for drugs to?

Finally, the same Bob Dole who says "just don't do it" is the same Bob Dole who voted to cut drug interdiction programs in 1985. The Republicans shouldn't call their drug slogans "just don't do it" or "just say no."

They should call them "just import them."

Education before athletics

In 1942, financially strapped Louisiana State University had to choose between continuing its world-renowned literary magazine, the Southern Review, or buying fresh meat for the football team's tiger. It chose the tiger.

Louisiana State's dilemma between fielding a winning team and promoting scholarship is evident on our own campus. Because of budget cuts, Morris Library recently reduced both its journal collection and new book purchases. Meanwhile, the Athletic Department raised student athletic fees 40 percent — up to $53 a semester — despite two student referenda rejecting the increase and despite the Illinois Board of Higher Education's recommendation that athletic funding be derived from sources other than student fees.

With the Athletic Department's $4 million-plus budget, SIUC's 400 athletes are coached, advised, tutored, chaperoned, outfitted, equipped, fed and housed. Four-hundred athletes, $4 million. You do the math. And then ask why the remaining 98 percent of the student body is funding this juggernaut while it enjoys neither athletic opportunity nor an adequate library.

But at SIUC, despite more than 90 percent of its athletes being recruited, there is still an excellent chance for Joe Student to make the team "if he has the skills," reports Assistant Athletic Director Dr. Charlotte West. Fair enough, but the likelihood that he will have those skills is about zippo.

And yet, isn't skill development, whether intellectual or athletic, why higher education exists? Yes, there are intramural programs for the 98 percent of the students who don't have the skills, but intramural programs offer no instruction. And while physical education classes do teach skills, the instruction is necessarily aimed at the beginning level, and the camaraderie of being part of a team is lacking.

ANOTHER LOOK

College athletic departments across the country justify their bloated bureaucracies by spouting platitudes about how sport complements scholarship in developing well-rounded human beings. But then, instead of sharing the wonderful resource of sports with all interested students, they close off participation to most students and populate "their" teams with hired guns, some of whom are barely literate.

Yes, as West explains, SIUC's coaches will give any student, recruited or not, a spot on the roster as long as he or she can help the program. But this criterion for participation — being able to improve the program's win-loss record — belies the rationale used to justify interscholastic sports and suggests that the goal is no longer student improvement but institutional perpetuation.

But there are solutions to this apparently intractable problem. "Dropping down" to NCAA Division III or NAIA classification — a terrifying prospect for most athletic departments — would eliminate many recruiting abuses and would allow schools to broaden their base of participation. But even at this level, there remains the temptation to prioritize winning over the process of developing athletic skills and attitudes.

A still cleaner solution would be for universities to divest themselves of their athletic programs and allow private and municipal clubs to assume these duties as is the convention in most other countries. In Germany, for example, there are several dozen sports represented by 60,000 different clubs. Almost a third of all Germans, many of them adults and senior citizens, participate in this system that serves all ages and abilities.

A similar system in this country would return athletic administration to the competitors, provide more sports to a wider range of abilities, create athletic opportunities for a passive adult population and allow American universities to focus on fulfilling their original mission of educating students.

Capital offense: movie chatter

-by james lyon

Let's just jump right into it, shall we. People who talk during movies deserve to have their throats ripped out and then force fed back to them. You think I am too hostile? I think not.

I am sure there are a few of these brain-dead morons reading this right now, so let me talk to them for a few seconds. The rest of you are way too intelligent for this, so you can skip down a paragraph or so.

Dear people who talk during the movies,

What possesses that pint-sized brain of yours to talk while other people are trying to watch the same movie? Did you not get enough breast milk as a child, and this is your way of asking for attention? Or are you just so clueless, insensitive and stupid that you really don't understand what you are doing? In my opinion it is a combination of all three. If you do talk during the movies, you obviously don't have a high enough I.Q. to understand what you are doing, so why don't you just check yourself into the nearest dog pound. They have a nice little machine in the back that they use to put dogs to sleep. Why don't you try it? There is a nice movie going on inside. Honest! Just go and ask to see it, and talk all you want.

Sincerely,
Pissed Off

Sorry, but this is something that really ticks me off, especially when people don't care about the other people in the theaters. Why in God's name do some people feel the need to yell at the screen during the movies? And for those of you who do yell, let me clue you in. Those big people on the screen can't hear you!

Now I can understand if someone wants to lean over to the person next to them and point out a few things or ask a question about what is going on. We all do that. But if someone does that, then whisper. Whispering is good. Whispering is polite.

And hey, if you want to yell during the coming attractions or while that little demonic film guy rides across the screen on his magic movie reel, then go ahead and yell. That is what they are there for. Yell your little head off, but — and listen closely you idiot — once the movie starts, shut up! It is that simple. And if you don't understand that, then the point of my article is clear. And that is that people who talk during the movies are the Forrest Gumps of our society. I say we lock them up in a room together with a few dozen hungry bears.

But then again, I am more for the direct approach. So if it were up to me, anyone caught talking too loudly during the movies would be approached by a large, 7-foot, 400-pound man. This gentleman would then proceed to hold the little rat face down and use a very dull pair of hedge clippers to slowly cut the tongue out of the loud talker.

Then, just for fun, the movie would stop for a few seconds so the muscule guy could walk to the front of the theater and hold the tongue up for the rest of us to laugh and cheer at. Then, in a very dignified ceremony, the tongue would be nailed to the theater wall so everyone could see. Maybe that would solve the problem? But, then again, it probably would not. People who talk during the movies are so stupid they would probably think getting their tongue nailed to the wall is some kind of trophy. They just don't understand that the rest of the world is laughing at them.

Inmates found vulnerable to food-borne illnesses

The Washington Post

In Georgia, it was tainted rice pudding. In Delaware, it was spoiled chicken salad. In Florida, the problem was traced to turkey. In all three cases, outbreaks of preventable food poisoning sickened hundreds of inmates in correctional facilities, according to a study published last month in the Archives of Internal Medicine.

Investigators from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, who investigate such epidemics at the request of state officials, report that outbreaks of food-borne illness are a growing problem not only for the general public but in the nation's overcrowded jails, prisons and juvenile-detention facilities. Such outbreaks present serious problems because they occur in confined populations that include inmates who have immune systems weakened by HIV infection.

Paul R. Cieslak and his colleagues from the CDC's Foodborne and Diarrheal Disease Branch analyzed reports of 88 outbreaks involving more than 14,000 cases of illness between January 1974 and January 1992 in 31 states and territories. In the Georgia and Delaware cases, the source of contamination was salmonella in eggs used to make rice pudding or in the chicken salad.

Habitat house on Aug. 1.

Clarence said they applied for the house because the family was having trouble getting a regular loan from a bank. He said the family had medical expenses from the birth of their daughter, Mosannah, 6, which hurt their credit.

"We found out on the last day of August that it would be our house," she said. "The same day we found out was the same day we came out to help."

To qualify, a family must be able to assume an interest-free mortgage on the property and must be willing to donate at least 350 hours of "sweat equity" by joining SIUC students and Carbondale community members in the construction of the house.

In April, a large 30-by-40 foot foundation was dug out to begin building. Now, the siding is up, a roof is in place and the house is being wired for electricity and heating.

Deborah said she already has assigned the rooms for their daughters Kumari, 15, and Mosannah. When the house is complete, it will have three bedrooms and a full bath.

On Saturday, Clarence sawed and hammered along side volunteers as the volunteers wired electrical outlets and fixed up the bathroom. Clarence said he works everyday on the house, racing to get it completed by January.

Clarence said he has gained experience in remodeling and carpentry skills from past jobs. He said those skills are getting refined as he works on the new home.

"I give God the credit for the type of work that came in handy to build the house," he said, shouting over the loud drill.

Deborah said she has a lot of thinking to do for the construction of the house, but the people she owes the biggest thanks to are the students who have volunteered their time with the Habitat project.

"You always hear that the students are about party, party, drink, drink, fight, fight," she said. "But this is showing another side of the students to the community. They have the abilities and are not selfish with their time."

About 18 students showed up to work on the home Saturday. Because of the large number of volunteers at the Golden home, many were sent to another site on the outskirts of Carbondale to work.

Melissa McGuire was one of the students who stayed to work on the Golden home.

McGuire, a graduate student in geology from Sangamon, Mich., said she thought working on the house showed good community support. It was McGuire's first time working on the house.

"I got up at 8 a.m. to do this," she said. "I wouldn't do that if I didn't think it was a good idea."

Clarence said an SIUC student inspired him to get up on the roof of the house.

"There was this angel from God trying to get the roof on before it rained," he said. "He got me to climb up there."

The final construction on the house will cost about $20,000. Construction materials are donated by local businesses, and labor is done by volunteers.

So far, the only delays in construction have been a lack of donations and rain water.

Latinos

"In our statistics, they list us as Latino whites," Gonzales said. "We're told we are white. They erase our heritage and cause our perspective to disappear."

Gonzales said the specials on television that focus on race often ignore the Latino perspective. By ignoring an entire race of people, she said the media have excluded an important voice.

Gonzales said in light of recent controversies concerning immigration, the voice of Latinos should not be discounted. She said there are tough times ahead for Latinos because censorship and racism are strong forces in America.

"We have the 1930s when more than a million Latinos were deported back to Mexico," Gonzales said. "This issue of immigration is not going to die away."

Gonzales said it is the people's responsibility to stop the hatred toward immigrants in the country. She said it is time for Latinos to take a stand on human rights.

"You are why [journalists] exist," Gonzales said. "We represent your voice, and that is why we are watchdogs."

As a watchdog of human rights, Gonzales said she is going to cover the first all-Latino march on Washington Oct. 12.

She said the march will be a way for Latinos to express their frustration with the censorship they receive. She said she wants the audience to remember what the march is about even if they do not go.

"As Cesar Chavez (a civil rights leader of the 1960s) said, 'A march is like a prayer in motion,'" Gonzales said. "It appeals to the consciousness of a nation and keeps its spirit alive."

SIUC fixing east campus power feeders

By Dylan Fenley
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Physical Plant employees began working Monday to repair a damaged power feeder responsible for a recent 12-hour power outage of 10 buildings on the east side of campus.

The Sept. 19 power outage, which affected Brush Towers, University Park, the Student Recreation Center and other areas on the east side of campus, was caused by the failure of main power feeder 11, Scott Pike, superintendent of building maintenance, said.

The work to repair feeder 11

"There will have to be a power outage, probably of at least four hours."

Scott Pike, superintendent of building maintenance

began Monday and is expected to be completed by Friday.

Pike said the east campus may experience a power outage while Physical Plant employees switch buildings back over from the backup line they have been using for over a week.

"There will have to be a power outage, probably of at least four hours," Pike said.

Pike said repairing the feeder was a top priority for plant officials because there is no backup line for the east campus. He said an additional power line failure could result in a power outage of the east side of campus for nearly a week.

The damaged line is one of five main feeders that officials have identified as being in poor condition, meaning they could fail at any time. The other failing lines are feeders 1, 2, 10 and 12, Pike said.

The University has been asking the Illinois General Assembly for funds to replace the five feeders for two years, but the legislature has been unwilling to approve the funds.

"We're hopeful that we'll get the money next year. Of course, we were hoping to get it this year. We can't predict what the General Assembly is going to do," James Tweedy, vice chancellor of administration, said.

The SIU Board of Trustees is now planning to contract a firm to do the architectural and design work necessary to replace feeders 10, 11 and 12, which supply power for the entire east campus, Tweedy said.

"This is a very high priority for us," he said.

Tweedy said that doing the design work now will reduce the time

Local sorority becomes newest chapter of national organization

By Zack Pierceall
Daily Egyptian Reporter

For the first time in approximately 30 years, a member of SIUC's Greek community is joining a national Greek organization.

Wendy Mulvany, a senior in administration of justice from Salem and president of Psi Omega Chi, said on Oct. 10, Psi Omega Chi sorority will officially become a colony of Alpha Chi Omega, the nation's fourth largest sorority.

Mulvany said once a local sorority accepts a bid from a national sorority to become a chapter member of its organization, it becomes a colony. She said the local sorority remains a colony until the national sorority grants them their chapter charter.

Jamie Kelley, a junior in health care management from Marion and alumni director for Psi Omega Chi, said essentially the sorority is part of Alpha Chi Omega, and they are waiting on the formalities.

"We just have to wait for Alpha Chi Omega to perform the official colonization ceremony," she said.

Kelley said after the colonization ceremony, which will take place at SIUC, the Pan-Hellenic Council will officially recognize the sorority as Alpha Chi Omega.

She said the sorority will receive its official charter from Alpha Chi Omega in November or January.

Mulvany said at SIUC, Psi Omega Chi, founded in January 1994, started with 10 members and has grown to 65.

Liz Marin, a senior in mortuary

"We worked hard to prove ourselves, and hard work pays off."

Liz Marin, a founding member of Psi Omega Chi

sciences from Chicago and one of the founding mothers of Psi Omega Chi, said she is excited about going national.

"We worked hard to prove ourselves, and hard work pays off," she said.

Mulvany said the process of becoming a national sorority actually began about 2 1/2 years ago.

She said SIUC's Pan-Hellenic Council had to approve Psi Omega Chi's formal expansion. Before the Pan-Hellenic Council would do that, Psi Omega Chi had to demonstrate it was a stable sorority.

In the spring of 1996, the Pan-Hellenic Council approved Psi Omega Chi's application for expansion. The council invited the national sororities that were not already represented in SIUC's Greek community to take a look at Psi Omega Chi and possibly offer them membership in the sorority.

Mulvany said two national sororities, Alpha Chi Omega and Alpha Phi, submitted bids to accept Psi Omega Chi into their sororities. Psi Omega Chi voted to accept Alpha Chi Omega's bid.

She said Psi Omega Chi will become the Iota Upsilon chapter of Alpha Chi Omega, the 174th chapter of Alpha Chi Omega to be established.

"We have sisters everywhere," Mulvany said. "We have a sister chapter at SEMO (Cape Girardeau, Mo.), and they've invited us to come down all next week to hang out with them and check out what it's like to be part of Alpha Chi Omega."

Mulvany said there was some concern within Psi Omega Chi that the sorority would lose some of its sense of values by joining a national sorority.

As a sorority, Kelley said Psi Omega Chi tries to live by values like sisterhood, honor, and pride. The group's motto is "Strive for that which is honorable, beautiful and highest."

Overall, Mulvany said, the feeling now is that joining a national sorority will change the goals or character of Psi Omega Chi.

"Really, we've changed over the 2 1/2 years since we started the process. We'll still practice the values we always have, and we do share a lot of values with Alpha Chi Omega," she said.

Mulvany said the members of Psi Omega Chi were very excited about joining Alpha Chi Omega.

"This is the best decision we could have ever made," Mulvany said. "We never thought this could happen. Some people even told us that it couldn't happen."

Holly Redlin, a public relations representative for Alpha Chi Omega, said her sorority was equally happy about Psi Omega Chi joining Alpha Chi Omega.

Grad students find ways to relieve stress, pressure

By Tracy Taylor
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Although Brian Clardy spends his entire week studying, reading, teaching classes and working on his dissertation, he does not let the pressures of being a graduate student bring him down.

Clardy, a second year doctoral student in history from South Fulton, Tenn., said that he keeps his stress and emotions in check by taking time out for himself.

"I reward myself everyday," he said. "I always set out a couple of hours each day either to watch TV or go to the rec, to a coffeehouse or even get on the Internet and vent a little through a character I created."

Some students are able to handle the fast pace and heavy workload of graduate school. But a concern about the pressures of graduate students came about after three professors at San Diego University in California were murdered earlier this semester by a disgruntled graduate student.

Frederick Martin Davidson shot and killed the professors at a meeting in which he was to defend his master's thesis for a second time.

Clardy said although he can sympathize with the pressures the student was going through, his actions were inexcusable.

"I can understand his frustrations of him trying to get his work done, but violence is inexcusable," he said.

"If you let your emotions and fear of failure get the best of you, that

"When you get to [the graduate] level... it becomes a labor of love."

Brian Clardy, doctoral student

kind of thing can happen. Somewhere in a jail cell, that student has to ask himself one question: "Was it all worth it?"

Clardy said being a graduate student is not more difficult than being an undergraduate.

"When you get to this level, working on a master's or doctorate, depending on your interest in the subject, it becomes a labor of love," he said.

Cynthia Gayman, a second-year doctoral student in philosophy from Seattle, said although she enjoys learning new things as a doctoral student, she finds doctoral studies extremely difficult.

"It's way more difficult than being an undergraduate, and the farther I go in my grad studies, the more demanding and challenging it becomes," she said. "It's like the old cliché, 'The more you learn, you realize how much you don't know.'"

Gayman said the situation in San Diego could have been prevented if the student had admitted that he needed help.

"The pressures of graduate school are really intense, and you have to keep in mind that there is life outside of graduate school."

Gayman said students and professors need to work with one another and not against one another.

"I think what happened in San Diego is a terrible tragedy, and there is no justification for what he did," she said. "But at the same time, some of these professors don't realize that students get stressed out. I mean, [professors] hold these students' egos in their hands. They need to be more sensitive."

Joe Pineau, coordinator for the Masters of Business Arts program, said students need to take responsibility for their actions and not blame others.

"We have become a kind of society where individual responsibility tends to be blamed on somebody else," he said. "That seems to be the case when people do not succeed in what they are doing."

Pineau said the San Diego student was similar to many students who do not put enough time and effort into their work.

"It's like getting a bad grade in class," he said. "You don't question your own work ethic but blame the teacher. That's apparently what happened here."

Wallace Davidson, the Doctoral of Business Arts program director, said graduate students should know there is a lot of work involved before they enter the program.

"Getting a doctoral degree is more than attending classes," he said. "Getting a doctorate is a full-time job."

Breakfast is Back!

Campus Restaurant Responds to its Customers

Most experts agree, breakfast is the most important meal of the day. So when customers requested breakfast be served again at the Marketplace, Student Center Dining Services took quick action.

Beginning this semester, the Marketplace began serving breakfast again (weekdays from 7:00 a.m. to 9:30 a.m.) and also introduced a brand new breakfast buffet for only $2.99.

Keven Hawke, director of dining services, said customers requested the Marketplace reopen for breakfast.

"In the past we served breakfast for a while, but decided to discontinue offering it last year," Hawke said. "We talked to our customers to see what they wanted, took their suggestions, made some changes and reopened breakfast adding the breakfast buffet."

John Lanzer, operations manager, said adding the breakfast buffet has been the best change to the breakfast menu.

"It is a hot buffet with a variety of breakfast foods," Lanzer said. "We offer two types of scrambled eggs, potatoes, pancakes, waffles, French toast, breakfast meats, toast, biscuits and gravy and oatmeal."

Bob Buffington, a frequent customer, said he ate breakfast at the Marketplace often before they discontinued serving it, and after the reopening it is even better than before.

"I love eating there (Marketplace)," Buffington said. "The breakfast buffet gives you ample servings of great food at a good price."

Hawke said the buffet also offers fast, convenient service for customers.

"It is our job to give our customers a hardy meal in a short period of time," Hawke said. "We want to please our customers any way possible."

The breakfast bar is not the only new feature to the Marketplace. A fajita bar has been added during lunch time hours, Hawke said.

"The fajita bar is the relocation of Peco's Petes, a Mexican restaurant, formerly located in the Big Muddy Lounge," Lanzer said. "Moving it to the Marketplace allows us to provide greater convenience and offer more choices to our customers."

Lunch hours begin at 11 a.m. The lunch menu includes the following: pasta bar, salad bar, Oriental stir-fry, fajita bar and a variety of vegetables and meats that change each day. Also, there are blue plate specials which feature new meals daily.

The Marketplace is located on the first floor of the Student Center. It is opened Monday through Friday for breakfast and lunch from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m.

GPSC named top grad organization in nation

By Christopher Miller
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The diversity of its accomplishments has earned SIUC's Graduate and Professional Student Council a national award, officials say.

GPSC beat about 150 other graduate student organizations across the country to win the 1996 Graduate/Professional Student Organization of the Year Award.

The award, which is presented by the National Association of Graduate-Professional Students, is given to a university graduate student organization that has provided outstanding service to graduate students and the community.

Mark Terry, GPSC president, said the council's involvement in working to expand Saluki Express bus service, helping to save Amtrak and helping organize President Bill Clinton's visit to SIUC last September contributed to achieving the award.

"It was the variety of activities and the variety of people involved," Terry said. "Many people have the right to take credit for this. This award is an indication that we are making progress."

Kevin Boyer, executive director of NAGPS, said the association was looking for a graduate student organization that works for graduate students nationally as well as locally, citing Clinton's campus visit.

"We were looking for the organization that represented the ideal type of graduate student group," he said.

Boyer said GPSC's involvement in NAGPS has been an asset to the association.

"SIUC has been an important member of our organization for many years," Boyer said.

Terry said he will travel to a national conference in Santa Monica, Calif. Oct. 25 to officially accept the award on behalf of GPSC. The council was a finalist for this award last year, which was the first year the award was given.

GPSC is comprised of graduate students from various departments on campus. The group meets twice a month and serves as a liaison between the graduate student body and the SIUC administration.

Home HIV test kits give results anonymously, but raise questions

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The ads are beginning to pop up on network TV, during "Melrose Place" and between the yuks on Letterman and Leno: a somber young man in one spot, a solemn young woman in another, waiting to learn the results of their Confide taken-at-home HIV tests. "I feel a lot better now that I know," she says.

Radio ads for another HIV test product, called Home Access, feature a couple debating: "What's it going to look like if we go in for an HIV test?" the man argues. His girlfriend assures him that "no one's going to see anything," because they'll use the test kit "by ourselves—you know, consenting adults in the privacy of one's home!"

Meanwhile, the products are beginning to appear on pharmacy shelves across the country. Home Access is being shipped to chains like Rite Aid and Eckerd Drug. Confide will be in 90 percent of the nation's drugstores — and at Wal-Mart and Kmarts and supermarket pharmacies—within a month, nestled among the diagnostic devices or stacked near the contraceptives. Two more home test kits are expected to join them once the Food and Drug Administration gives its approval.

Though marketers talk about this breakthrough in terms common to any new-product launch, discussing "rollouts" and "media buys," there are also reminders that these are no ordinary products.

What about the possibility, for instance, that a customer will be too nervous to pick up the slim, blue-and-white Confide box and carry it to a cashier?

Direct Access Diagnostics, the Johnson & Johnson subsidiary that developed the product, has thoughtfully provided a "silent request form" that will hang on the shelf. A purchaser can wordlessly hand the form (it looks like a prescription) to a pharmacist and receive the Confide kit discreetly bagged.

Those even more apprehensive (or less energetic) can order either Confide or Home Access via 800-number phone lines.

"More than anything, we wanted to be sensitive to what an individual would be thinking or feeling relative to HIV infection," says Arisa Cunningham, marketing director for Direct Access Diagnostics.

That's why the characters in their ads are "reflective...pensive. This is an important subject."

Clinton easing software encryption restrictions

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The Clinton administration is cutting off an emotional four-year-old debate with the computer industry over the export of information-scrambling technology with a plan that it says will help U.S. companies' boost sales overseas and still allow law enforcement agencies to unscramble messages, officials said Monday.

President Clinton has decided to sign an executive order that changes the rules restricting the overseas sale of the technology, the officials said.

Although the full details of the plan had yet to be revealed, privacy advocates and some industry executives contended that it would be difficult to put into practice.

Under current rules, companies can sell only relatively easy-to-crack scrambling technology. Under the plan, they would get permission to export somewhat more sophisticated versions of the software and hardware, which prevents eavesdroppers from looking at information.

The issue has caused immense friction between the government and computer industry and privacy groups, which contend that keeping any restrictions will harm the protection of personal information everywhere and slow the development of on-line commerce, which relies on protection of credit card numbers and other sensitive information.

Campus e-mail upgrade will help end problems

By Zack Pierceall
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Information Technology upgraded the campus e-mail system and has plans for another upgrade for the spring semester to address problems within the system, a systems programmer says.

Jerry Looft, an administrative assistant for Information Technology, said upgrades installed Saturday and Sunday should ease or eliminate current problems with the e-mail system.

Agnes Goh, a systems programmer for Information Technology said the upgrades were completed, and troubles with logging in to the e-mail system should be rectified.

"All the upgrades went fine, and there shouldn't be any problems," Goh said. "These upgrades should reduce the amount of overload on the servers and provide more reliable e-mail service."

Goh said the upgrade added another e-mail server and new software on the system. One problem the system had experienced was an overload of users. The new server is now performing some of the functions of the first server, alleviating user overload.

Looft said too many users on the system at the same time cause the system's response time to slow down.

"The system could handle 100,000 users if they were accessing the system one at a time," Looft said.

"These upgrades should reduce the amount of overload on the servers and provide more reliable e-mail service."

Agnes Goh, systems programmer,

Goh said the e-mail system on campus has experienced overload problems because of the increase in the number of e-mail accounts.

She said the system had 300 accounts when it was opened in January 1995. By the following January, there were 7,800 accounts.

Pam Reed, an administrative assistant for Information Technology, said there currently are 14,000 users on the campus system.

"During the first week of the year, we were starting nearly 400 accounts per day," Reed said. "Those numbers have dropped off since then, but we're still starting new accounts each day."

Looft said the reduction in the load on each server should also help to alleviate another problem with the system's password function. The slow response time on the system sometimes causes the Kerberos security software to return a message stating the user entered a bad password.

Looft said in most cases, the user had entered the correct password. However, the system is slow sometimes, and the message that a correct password was entered takes too long to get back to the Kerberos software.

Looft said Information Technology is working with the Kerberos vendor, Cybersafe, to correct the problem.

Looft said e-mail clients also can help to relieve some of the burden on the servers by setting their auto check feature to a longer interval. He said many users set the auto check to every few minutes, burdening the system.

"We encourage users to set their auto check features to 15 minutes," Looft said.

However, Looft said, Information Technology is not sure the upgrade will completely end the campus' e-mail problems.

"We made the plans for these upgrades before we knew we had this many users," Looft said.

Another upgrade for the campus system, which Information Technology hopes to complete for the Spring 1997 semester, has a projected cost of $38,000. The upgrade will double the size of the server to meet e-mail demand and should further alleviate or even solve the user overload problems.

Power

necessary to replace the feeders by early a year.

If the project is approved, University Housing will provide the $150,000 to contract a firm to do the architecture and design work for the eventual $2.1 million construction project, Glenn Stine, assistant director of facilities for University Housing, said.

"The reason that we're doing this is so when the money is released by the state, we won't have to wait a year for the planning and preparation to be conducted," Stine said.

Twecdy said University Housing will pay for the design and planning project because most of the buildings affected by feeders 10, 11 and 12 are housing buildings. He said when the University receives the money to replace the feeders, University Housing should be reimbursed the $150,000 from the state.

Twecdy said several firms are being considered to do the design work, and a contract should be awarded as soon as the trustees approves the measure.

Twecdy said work for feeders 1 and 2, which supply power for about 75 percent of the buildings on the main campus, would have to wait for state funding to be approved.

"Right now, we don't have any money in our budget to do the design work for feeders 1 and 2," Twecdy said.

Unsolved

information should call the police department."

Goro said there is no reward being offered at this time, but the department is considering offering one.

Another recent tragedy that remains unsolved is a double homicide that occurred Aug. 11. In the incident, two local teen-agers, both student at Carbondale Community High School, were found shot to death.

While police have named Labron C. Neal, of Carbondale, as the suspect, Neal has not been found.

Joe Russell, a classmate of the two victims, said while the idea of Neal not being in custody bothers him, he is not afraid because he does not believe that Neal is in the area.

"I hope they catch him," Russell said. "Carbondale is too small for him to run around at large without being caught."

One spokeswoman for the Jackson County Sheriff's Department, who did not want to be identified, said there is no reward being offered at this time, but leads in the case are abundant because of tips from the community.

"We have tons of people call with information on him (Neal) every day," she said. "Some of it's legit,

"Carbondale is too small for him [Neal] to run at large without being caught."

Joe Russell, victims' classmate some of it isn't."

Another Sheriff's Department spokeswoman said the case is being intensely investigated, but she said she could not say how many man hours have gone into the investigation. She would not comment on whether the department thinks Neal is in the area or if police believed they are close to catching him.

While the double homicide occurred just a few weeks ago, one case from four years ago still has not been solved.

On Dec. 6, 1992, there was an arson in the D-wing of the Pyramids Apartment Complex, 504 S. Rawlins St., that killed five students, most of whom were international students.

While many students who are now in the area were not here when the fire occurred, there are those who were, and they have not forgotten the tragedy.

Carla Coppi, SIUC assistant director of International Students and Scholars and an acquaintance of one of the students killed in the blaze, said she hopes that whoever is responsible is caught.

"We all wish that it could be resolved," she said. "I remain hopeful that someday, this will be resolved."

Carbondale Police said no arrests have been made in the case.

Lt. Robert Ledbetter said the department still is involved in a joint investigation with The Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. He said he could not say if there are any suspects.

Ledbetter said police have not thrown in the towel by any means, and leads in the case are still being developed.

"The case is still very active, and we're hoping we can solve it," he said.

Goro said the department always has at least one investigator working on each case and will continue to exhaust all leads in these cases until those responsible are caught.

"We will continue to investigate them thoroughly with the hope that at some point, we'll solve them," he said.

Carbondale Police ask that anyone who has any information on any of the cases call the Crimestoppers Tip Line at 549-COPS.

Bonilla, Wells, play key roles in game

Los Angeles Times

BALTIMORE—They were goners. Bobby Bonilla knew it. So did David Wells. Bonilla was so sure he was going to be traded by the Baltimore Orioles that he sent his cars home to Greenwich, Conn. It would simplify moving, he figured.

But Oriole Owner Peter Angelos nixed any deals involving Bonilla and Wells. And now the Orioles lead the Cleveland Indians after a 10-4 victory in Game 1 of their best-of-five division series Tuesday at Camden Yards.

There's no way the Orioles could have won without Bonilla and Wells on Tuesday, and both acknowledged the irony of almost having become ex-Orioles.

"We're happy the big man (Angelos) kept us," Bonilla said after his first postseason home run in 14 games, a grand slam that highlighted a five-run sixth inning that broke open a close game.

"Me and Boomer (Wells) didn't want to go anywhere."

"It would be nice if we had a quiet rule like tennis or golf, but we don't."

*Bobby Bonilla,
Baltimore Orioles outfielder*

Said Wells, the pitcher who quieted the major leagues' top hitting club over 6 2/3 solid innings, "They were speculating a whole lot about a trade at that time. I've been in that situation before. If it happened, it happened. I'm just glad to be an Oriole."

Baltimore hit four home runs, which shouldn't have come as a surprise.

But Wells, superb after the fourth inning, was definitely a surprise.

At one point, he retired nine consecutive batters before Cleveland shortstop Omar Vizquel ended the streak with a ground-rule double with one out in the seventh. After Kenny Lofton's run-scoring infield single, Kevin Seitzer lined a pitch off Wells' left ankle and Baltimore Manager Davey Johnson turned the game over to the bullpen.

Baltimore's relief corps, shaky at times this season, responded by shutting down the Indians the rest of the way.

"In our ballpark, you don't rest until the last one's out," Johnson said. "You don't take anything for granted."

It didn't take a genius to figure out the Orioles would be dangerous if they continued their torrid regular-season home-run hitting in the playoffs. Game 1 left no doubt that the Orioles are still sizzling.

After hitting a major league record 257 this year, Brady Anderson, B.J. Surhoff— he had two — and Bonilla homered Tuesday.

Bonilla's slam, the third in Oriole playoff history but the first by a non-pitcher, sent the sellout crowd of 47,644 into a frenzy. Later, Bonilla admitted it was difficult to concentrate with the crowd roaring as he prepared to face a 3-2 pitch from reliever Paul Shuey.

"It would be nice if we had a quiet rule like tennis or golf, but we don't," Bonilla joked after joining pitchers Mike Cuellar and Dave McNally as the only Orioles to hit playoff grand slams.

"The at-bat before, I had a man on second and (Cleveland starter Charles) Nagy threw me some tough pitches," he said of the fifth-inning strikeout. "When I came up with the bases loaded; I was looking to hit a ball below my hands and to make sure I didn't chase anything up in the strike zone."

Shuey's pitch was apparently to Bonilla's liking because it wound up in the right-field bleachers.

Cleveland, which led the majors with a .293 batting average, couldn't keep pace. Right fielder Manny Ramirez hit the Indians' only homer, a solo shot off Wells in the second.

That Wells would last into the seventh inning seemed unlikely, particularly since he had called his final three regular-season starts, "hideous."

After giving up 21 earned runs, 21 hits and eight home runs in going 0-1 in those starts, Wells rebounded with a standout performance.

"Basically, my game plan was to keep the ball down," said Wells, 11-14 during the regular season. "I was just trying to avoid hanging any pitches. If you do, well, you saw what Bobby did."

The victory gives the wild-card Orioles an advantage over the heavily favored Indians, according to shortstop Cal Ripken Jr.

"A Game 1 win gives us a lot of confidence that we can play with the Indians," said Ripken, who had three hits. "The reason we got the wild-card spot was that our pitching picked up down the stretch. Today, we got the lead and held it, then got the big explosion in that one inning."

Cowboys shoot down Eagles

Los Angeles Times

PHILADELPHIA—The lights were on, the Dallas Cowboys were on the run and the Philadelphia Eagles had the opportunity to stomp on Dallas, wipe that smug smirk off owner Jerry Jones' face and rid the NFL of its perennial Super Bowl champion.

But quick as a bug granted a reprieve, the Cowboys escaped annihilation and a 1-4 start with a 23-19 victory before 67,201 in Veterans Stadium and now they begin their quest in earnest for a fourth Super Bowl trophy in five years with the return of suspended wide receiver Michael Irvin.

"No doubt this win puts us in good shape now and it will be nice to see No. 88 (Irvin) running around out there," said Jones, his smile widening with each interview request. "Anybody can add and to get four losses, well, the numbers alone would have told the story."

The Eagles, revved up by Coach Ray Rhodes revenge rhetoric and a howling mob in Veterans Stadium, roared out to a 10-0 lead and were in position to bury the Cowboys in the NFC East cellar while tying with Washington for first place.

Instead, the Eagles collapsed, not only falling for the ninth time in 10 meetings with the Cowboys, but losing quarterback Rodney Peete for the season with a torn tendon his right knee late in the second quarter. Philadelphia never recovered from the injury, while the undermanned Cowboys continued to improvise and find a way to win.

"They showed why they are a championship team," said Philadelphia tackle Barrett Brooks. "They did what they had to do to win."

Ty Detmer, Peete's replacement, flopped with the game on the line, and now with a week remaining until the NFL trading deadline, the Eagles must decide if they want to pursue beleaguered Atlanta quarterback Jeff George.

"That's a good question," said Eagle Coach Ray Rhodes. Running back Charlie Garner for George? If the Eagles want to stay ahead of the Cowboys and in pursuit of the Redskins, they cannot remain status quo. Detmer, seven for 14 for 118 yards with an interception, was also sacked three times, and while the Eagles have a bye, what they really need is for Detmer to grow taller by another three or four inches.

"Bringing in another quarterback is a must for us," Rhodes said. "We have a long season ahead and we have to make a decision at the quarterback position; that's critical for us." Rhodes, who had bristled at Dallas Coach Barry Switzer's post-game remarks following the Cowboys' 30-11 playoff victory a year ago, stood bewildered after Peete's knee collapsed while Peete had retreated to pass. Peete, clutching his knee in pain, fumbled as a result, and the Cowboys recovered and went on to use one of Chris Boniol's three field goals to complete a 20-0 run and establish a 20-10 halftime advantage.

"I told the team before the game this was not about winning and losing, but who we were and what we have done," said Switzer. "This game was for respect. We were down 1-3 and our offensive line was supposed to be too old and too fat, and it was just a matter of challenging the team."

After the Eagles moved in front 10-0, running back Herschel Walker took the kickoff and jump-started the Cowboys with a 49-yard return, which led to a Boniol field goal.

"Big, big play," Switzer said. Deion Sanders' 39-yard pass reception set up a five-yard touchdown run by Emmitt Smith. When the Eagles got the ball back, Sanders intercepted a Peete pass, and the Cowboys turned it into another Boniol field goal.

it not been for Murray State, the Salukis may have had a tougher time regrouping.

"Probably, if we hadn't had Murray, it probably would have been a big deal," he said.

Against Murray State, Saluki running back Coe Bonner had a rough time with only 74 yards rushing, including a lost fumble, which led to a Racer field goal and a 17-0 lead.

Bonner, who rushed for 185 yards and three touchdowns against the Redbirds, said the ghosts of Murray State made a brief appearance Saturday afternoon.

However, when the ghosts appeared in Hancock Stadium, so did the lesson.

"Illinois State did their little thing," Bonner said. "But we didn't let their lead get us down. We knew we had enough time on the clock to do something."

"We just needed the opportunity to come back and perform."

Hackers finish 14th at ISU Fall Invitational

By Kevin DeFries
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC men's golf team got off to a rocky start in the opening round of the Illinois State University Fall Invitational on Saturday, but shot a 310 in the final round Monday to finish 14th overall.

"We got there late because they (the hotel) didn't give us wake-up calls," golf coach Leroy Newton said. "We paid 100 bucks a night for the rooms, but they forgot."

Newton said the team arrived at the course just in time to tee off. And although not getting a warm-up on the driving range or putting greens can really hurt a golf team at an unfamiliar course, Newton said the team played a respectable opening round.

"We don't want to use that as an excuse," he said.

"Everybody thought the course was going to be easy," Boeckmann said. "Obviously, we would like to do better because we are definitely capable."

In the second round, the Salukis swing six more times as a team than in the previous round. But the Salukis came on strong in the third round at the links with a 310.

"I was really tickled with the finish," Newton said about the strong third round. "We felt pretty good about it, but we should be able to shoot 310 at any time."

After three rounds of golf, Pickett led all the Salukis with an 18-over par 231, tying him for 30th in the 99-man tournament. Boeckmann finished only four strokes behind with a 235, which tied him for 48th place. Moss, Raski and Phillips rounded out the Salukis by shooting 242, 246 and 249, respectively.

SIUC shot 948 times in the three days of hacking, only 67 strokes behind Drake University, the tournament winner. Iowa State finished second with a team score of 890, and host team ISU finished third with 893 strokes.

The Salukis have a week off before teeing off in the Bradley Fall Classic Oct. 13-14 in Peoria.

Valley Conference champion) there was good, tough competition on the team alone," he said. "Our team was known as 'the packers' because we would run in a pack and place really high up as a team. "I knew if I had a bad day at anytime, the team would be close by and beat me. There was tremendous competition on the team."

Since winning in the invitational's first three years of existence, the Saluki men's team have won eight times in 12 years. The team is currently three-time reigning champions.

Last year, the team's top finisher was Stelios Marneros, who finished second with a time of 24:20. The time placed Marneros, a junior, fourth on the list of all-time record finishes for the invitational.

On the women's side, SIUC has won the invitational four times in its 21-year existence. The last time the women's team won was in 1992, when it went on to win the MVC as well.

Even though the team has not won the crown as a team, two SIUC women have beaten the competition since 1992.

In 1994, SIUC runner Jennie Horner paced the Salukis with a time of 17:32 as a senior, which ironically was the same time Kim Koerner ran to finish first place in 1995 as a junior.

With Koerner, now a senior in physiology from Murrayville, returning to the squad, she could have a chance at repeating her title Saturday, DeNoon said.

"Kim is coming off of a victory last week at the Vandy Classic," DeNoon said. "Koerner will also be running against some premier athletes in Indiana State University's Angie Minser and Illinois State University's Sue Daggett."

Daggett was third behind Horner in 1994, but did not run in the meet last year.

The meet Saturday begins at 10 a.m. with women's action, followed by the men at 10:45 a.m. The course is west of Abe Martin field.

Umpires call off boycott prior to game

Major league umpires called off a threatening boycott of baseball's playoff season prior to Tuesday's game between the Baltimore Orioles and Cleveland Indians. The umpires said earlier they would walk out and not work the playoffs if Roberto Alomar, Baltimore's second baseman, was allowed to play. Alomar got a five-game suspension for spitting in the face of umpire John Hirschbeck in a regular-season game last week. Alomar, who issued an apology Monday, has appealed his suspension. Players generally are not suspended from playoff games for misconduct during the regular season; so Alomar was allowed to play. Baltimore beat the Indians in game one 10-4. In the National League, the Cardinals downed the Padres 3-1.

CROSS COUNTRY

Invitational enters 21st year, marks tradition for SIUC

By Donna Colter,
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Saturday's Saluki Invitational marks more than just the fourth meet of the year for the SIUC men's and women's cross country team. It marks a tradition.

The invitational, which has been in existence since 1975, began as a women's meet. It wasn't until 1984 that the invitational included men's competition.

Men's coach Bill Cornell and women's coach Don DeNoon can each remember a highlight in the history of the invitational.

"My bright moment would have to be when Vivian Sinou won the meet," DeNoon said. "She was at the top of the world and running against premier athletes."

Sinou, a former Saluki, won the invitational in 1986 and 1987 with times of 18:19 and 17:03 respectively. Her effort in 1987 placed her third on the list of all-time women's record times for the invite.

Cornell's bright spot came last year when a course record previously held by SIUC and two-time All-American athlete Chris Bunyan was annihilated.

"Chris Bunyan set the course record in 1984, finishing his first mile in 4:28," Cornell said. "He held the record until 1995 when Julius Wanjiru, a Kenyan from Meridian Community College, annihilated the record by 30 seconds."

Bunyan, who came to SIUC from England, said he was pleased when Cornell called him to tell him his record had been broken.

"I was happy it stood so long," Bunyan said. "And I was pleased for the person who broke it."

"Cornell called and left a message on my machine and said, 'Chris I have some bad news.' I thought some one had died. I was relieved when he told me it was my record."

Bunyan said there was a lot of tough competition the year he set his record, mostly from his own team.

FOOTBALL

Murray State lesson helped Salukis beat Redbirds

By Michael DeFord
DE Sports Editor

You might say Murray State University played a big part in the football Salukis' win over Gateway Conference rival Illinois State Saturday.

After falling behind 34-7 in the first half against Murray State Sept. 14, Saluki Coach Shawn Watson had a little chat with his team in the locker room.

The focus of that conversation was centered on not rolling over.

The Salukis took that conversation to heart and did not give up.

What they did do was come out in the second half and make a game of it by outscoring the Racers 31-14 before eventually falling short 48-38.

Saturday's game against Illinois State began much like the game against Murray State when the Redbirds opened up with a 17-7 lead in the first quarter.

But the Salukis applied the lesson it learned at Murray State early on to dismiss any chances of another struggle similar to the one they had against the Racers.

"We learned a lesson at Murray State," Watson said. "Our people did a nice job of taking that lesson and applying it to Saturday's game against Illinois State."

If a loss can ever be an educational experience, the Murray State contest no doubt qualifies.

But don't worry, Watson is not going to call up Murray State Coach Houston Nutt and personally thank him and his team for the Sept. 14 loss and lesson.

However, he will tell you it was an important element in Saturday's win.

"It got tight for a while, but our kids answered," Watson said. "You might say it was our best lesson of the year."

It taught the team what it takes to win as well as how to believe in what it can overcome.

The Redbirds scored on its first possession — the second play of its opening drive — then added a field goal to take an early 10-0 lead before the Salukis could even work up a sweat.

Senior defensive tackle Daryl Holland said the Salukis remembered what happened in the Murray State game and quickly made the necessary adjustments to ensure Saturday would not be a repeat performance.
