Parking tickets issued early

JAMES DURBIN | DAILY EGYPTIAN An SIUC parking division official tickets violators in a lot by McAndrew Stadium Tuesday. Some students have complained about recleving parking tickets during the first two weeks of class, which has been a grace period in the past. SIUC Chief of Police Todd Sigler said the grace period was reduced to the first two days of the semester.

Rule change affects parking tickets

When Lee Deans parked his truck in front of the Student Center Thursday, he was surprised to see a parking ticket slipped under his windshield wiper when Deans, a senior from Flossmoor Deans, a senior from Flossmoor studying psychology who has a red parking decal, said when he initially saw the ticket, he thought it would be a warning.

"Of course I didn't think I would get a ticket," Deans said. "I park places where I know I'm not supposed to park. It's almost like you're left with no choice because you're trying to get to class on time and there's nowhere to park."

6 This year we gave everybody Monday and Tuesday for parking in the wrong color lots.

Deans said he has amassed $2,601 in parking tickets since coming to SIUC in 2006.

According to the parking division Web site, funds received from parking tickets are used for the construction, renovation and maintenance of parking lots, garage and street lighting. The painting and striping of cross-walks, roadway centerlines and turn lanes and the street sweeper used to clean the parking lots and roadways on campus also receive

Sigler said the rule change was put into place because students attending SIUC who are not in their first year are blatantly taking advantage of the grace period, and those who have blue decals have been complaining about not hav-ing a place to park.

"What we're looking at is somebody (who attended SIUC) last year should know what the rules are and would simply ignore the rule until you started Issu-ing tickets," Sigler said. "People blue lots are complain e're not enforcing rules."

FutureGen, DOE look for cost cuts, new partners

David Microer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAMPAIGN, III.

The coal and power companies planning to build the experimental FutzreGen power plant in eastern Illinois have reached an agreement with the Department of Energy to continue developing the project, one that calls for a push to cut costs and double the number of partner firms to help thare those expenses.

Members of the FutureGen Alliance announced the deal Tuesday as they gathered in Matteon for two days of meetings. The plant, intended to prove that a commercial-scale power plant can use coal while safely removing and storing the pollutant carbon dicade, is planned for a site just outside the town.

FutureGen Chief Executive to use conOfficer Mike Mudd said his goal is pollution to increase the number of companies Under involved from nine to 20.

Til say that right now there are well over half a dozen companies that we have made contact with that are interested, Mudd sald at a new conference in Mattoon. "We're very optimistic that we're going to be able to get to that point or close."

The nine companies involved now are mainly coal miners, including St. Louis-based Peabody Energy Corp., Anglo American of the United Kingdom and Wyoming-based Rio Tinto Energy America.

www.humanesocietysil.org

In June, Columbus, Ohio-based American Electric Priver Co. and Atlanta-based Southern Co., two of the country's largest electric utilities, left the Futuregen Alliance. Both said they were leaving to save money. American Electric also circle concerns about the uncertainty of FutureGens scope.

The new agreement allow work on plant design and finance to continue through Match. The Energy Department and the companies behind Fupur-Cen plant decide any next year whether to start building the plant, Mudd added.

"My job is to make sure it's a go decision," he said.

Energy Undersecretary Kristina Johnson told reporters that Secretary Steven Chu, believas Future-Gen holds "great promise" to look for ways to use coal without creating heavy pollution.

Under the terms of the agreement announced Tuesday, the DOE and the alliance companies will:

— Work on a new cost estimate, Some officials say the price ug could be higher than the current $2.4 billion based on increases in construction materials. However, Mudd said the global economic downtum has reduced demand for construction materials and could lead to "several hundred million dollars" in savings.

Continue refining the design, with at least part of the focus on cutting costs.

Develop, a posser-purchase agreement with the state of Illinois.

Sen. Dick Durbin, a longtime backer of the FutureGen project, sald in a Wednesday letter to the DOE and FutureGen Alliance that he looks forward to working with them to recruit new members and push the project forward.

T continue to believe that we can address our nations energy needs in a cleaner more efficient way and that FurureGen is a critical component of how we can continue to use coal without causing more harm to the environment," the Illinois Democrat wrote.

Durbin and others fought to keep FutureGen alive after the Bush administration shelved the project, citing cost concerns. A congressional auditor. later said the Bush administrations cost estimates were based on false projections.

If built in its originally planned form, FutureGen would create about 1,300 construction jobs and 159 high-skilled permanent positions.

Mattoon was selected for the project in late 2007. The first word that it might be in jeopardy came in the form of letters from Bush administration DOE officials. Current Energy Secretary Steven Chu is a longtime critic of coal, although he recently indicated support for carbon-capture technology research.

Although she is a double amputee, she lives independently with her 15-year-old dog Rocky on N Marion St. Johnson earned her nickname in her youth for speaking fearlessly to adults.

She volunteers at the Shallow Baptist Church in Murphysboro and a retirement center playing the piano, and she does it with a smile on her fice. on her face.

Johnson said about seven years ago, when she was taking care of her twin sister in Milwaukee, she developed a sore on her ankle. She went to the doctor and he decided it was an infection requiring the immediate removal of her leg just low the knee. Later, while she was getting adjusted to moving around in a wheelchair, she injured her other leg. It was damaged to the point where it, too, needed to be removed, this time at the mid-thigh. Five minutes with Johnson and one will notice there is not much that slows her down. She cooks and cleans for herself, cares for Rocky and walks with the help of a walker and two prosthetic legs.

Tm not the kind of person to let it get me down; I sin't down till God tells me I am, Johnson said. Johnson has more than enough stories to tell. She has had her fair share of strife and hardship, but she manages to remain excited about life and what it still has in store. Everyone can learn something from le such as Enola Johnso e thankful for what we have.

Scythian brings global sound

Chris McGregor

From Ireland to the Middle East, the members of Scythian have ened to music from around the globe to create its own unique sound.

Scythian will bring its internationally influenced music at 5 p.m. Friday to Walker's Bluff Winery in Carterville. Admission is free for all ages.

Alexander Fedoryks, who plays violin, mandolin, harmonica, bass and sings in the band, said Scythian's music is hard to classify in a single genre.

"We combine a lot of different genres together," he said. "The music is a blend of world music with a punk-rock energy."

Fedoryka described the sound

as a blend of Celtic, gypsy and he music is a blend of world music with a punk-rock energy.

He said the band brings in as many different influences as possible to help paint a more complex and complete picture for

The unifying thing in our music is the ethnic influences, Fedoryka said.

er Mike Ounallah said while the band tries to incorporate foreign sounds, it still delivers a modern, edgy sound.

Our music is a fusion of a lot of different styles, but we do it all with a punk-rock sensibility," he said.

Both Fedoryka and Ounallah said the band strives to incorporate the audience in its shows as much

For us, it is all about bringing the whole audience into our playing, Ounallah said. Fedoryka said he thrives off of the crowd's energy. Scythian band members will often talk to the owd and get people dancing.

We have done over 900 sho and in a stain sense, we have honed what is means to interact with an audience," he said.

He said their style of music lends itself well to getting a crowd up and moving because the band focuses on delivering high-energy

Part of the reason we love to play our music is because it is acces and easy to dance to," he said.

The biggest thing the band prides itself on is engaging the audience and drawing people into the music, said rosef Crosby, the band's fiddler.

The band's expending show at Walker's Bluff should be a uniq experience for the band and the audience, he said.

"Wineries are a nice relaxed setting, and cople really just want to be enter fired, he said.

ASHBURN, Va. - Avoiding local television blackouts will be a challenge as the NFL approaches its first full season in the economic downturn, commissioner Roger Goodell said Tuesday.

During a visit to the Washington Redskins, 6 think the fans have Goodell was asked specifically about the Jacksonville Jaguars, whose season-ticket base dropped from 42,000 to about 25,000 this season.

The decline is such that the club might not even bother asking for extensions in hopes of avoiding blackouts this year.

Goodell said Jacksonville, one of the smallest markets in the league, is one of the markets where we're seeing some challenges from ticket sales coming into the 2009 season.

"And we'll have other mar-ets that'll have those challenges. It's all part of the challenges that we're seeing in the economy, and what our clubs are going through, Goodell said. Our clubs have been working hard in the offseason to create other ways to try to get people in the stadiums and to have olicies that are a little more flexible, and hopefully they're going to pay dividends for us."

The San Diego Chargers had an exhibition game blacked out for the first time since 2006 and have said they might have regular-had their first blackout since 1995 for a preseason game last month, but Goodell said some of the August ticket sales could be attributed to the nature of exhibition football.

I think the fans have seen that the quality of the games aren't up to NFL ndards, so I think that's a factor, said Goodell, who is looking at the possibility of reducing the presesson and expanding the regular season.

rice Smith. Goodell said it was more of a get-together than a formal negotiating session. The NFL and the union have been talking about a new labor agreement in hopes of avoiding a lockout in 2011.

Anytime you're negotiating ou take a step forward and maybe a step back," Goodell sald, "We're communicating, we're trying to get information to the union leadership, make sure they understand the challenges we're facing as a system and as a business and make sure they understand that so we can design a system that addresses the issues for the players and the coaches and the game.

Ethan Albright, the Redskins' interim player representative to the union, said this week he was telling his teammates to save up their mor ey because the word from Smith is the owners are taking all the steps to set up for a lockout in 2011."

"Listen, I think everybody in the NFL wants to play," Goodell said. The owners want to play, the players want to play. It's our job to get a deal done. That's why I keep saying a lockout is not a strategy, or an objective. What we want to do is get an agreement that works Goodell had a meeting planned in for the players and the coaches and Washington with NFL Players As the game and allows to continue (3) sociation executive director DeMan grow it.

Freshman of the week, a doubledouble and all-tournament honors - and that was just Rachael Brown's first four games as a Saluki.

Brown, a freshman setter on the volleyball team, accomplished all those feats in the first tournament of her SIU career. The tournament was a success for SIU as it went 4-0 for the second year in a row.

"It was pretty overwhelming that all of this happened during the very first time I got to start, Brown said, "We won, and we realized how good our team actually is and how much potential we have for this season."

Brown had 2,825 career assists while at Brownsburg High School and also holds the single-season record for most assists in a season with 989 in 2006.

Brown is already showing potential to chase SIU records after the weekend at NIU saw her garner 143 total assists.

As long as I continue to work hard, I can make things happen. That's just what I'm trying to do," Brown sald.

The Salukis are looking to add more depth to a team that turned around the women's tenras program last year.

The Salukis held tryouts Tuesday at the University Courts, looking to add a player to a team that went 17-8 last season, its best finish since 1991.

Women's tennis coach Audra Nothwehr said this year's tryouts were different.

"In the past, we'd usually have them come and play with the coaches after practice, but this year we are just throwing them right into one of our practices to see how well they can keep up. It's definitely going to be more physical," Nothwehr said.

The team has seven players and another recruit joining in January. There were two freshmen who participated at Tuesday's tryouts. Hinsdale native Tej Singh said she has been playing since she was in eighth grade.

I played doubles in high school, and I think it's an awesome sport, Singh said.

Linebackers prepare for bigger role

On and off the field, the Saluki linebackers say they stick together.

As the group enters its second season in the new 3-4 defense, senior interior linebacker Brandin Jordan said the linebackers realize their play is even more important. But even with the added pressure, Jordan said the group goes about its business the way it always has.

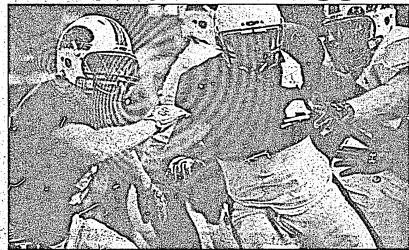

We've always been a close up, all our lockers our together," Jordan said. But yeah, we all get along really well, crack jokes on each other and stay close during the week, then go out together during the weekends."

Jordan said the main reason the linebackers have such good chem listry on the field is because of the time they spend off it.

Jordan and his roommate, fellow linebacker Chauncey Mixon, said they have the linebackers over to their apartment to just hang out and spend time away from a football field.

But when it's game time, Jordan said the hanging out stops and the
