Students' election bid at a loss

Mayoral Election

Incumbent will spend 3rd term in mayor's seat

By Shawna Donovan
DE Governmental Affairs Editor

Carbondale voters gave incumbent mayor Neil Dillard another term with 1,544 votes as his main opponent, Mark Robinson, was defeated with 833.

Write-in candidates Matt Parsons and Andrew Ensor lost early on. Parsons received 103 votes, and Ensor gathered 31.

The late vote totals, due to totalling write-in ballots, kept the suspense going, as Robinson staked out the Longbranch Coffeehouse until 11 p.m. Tuesday night. Robinson said he was surprised about the outcome because he thought the race would be closer.

"He destroyed me," he said. "I wonder where he got all those numbers from."

Dillard, who has been mayor since 1987, could not be reached for comment Tuesday evening.

Robinson said he will continue to run for office despite the loss.

"I will run again in four years or in two years for city council," he said.

Parsons, gathered with both write-in city council candidates Lorenzo Henderson and Anna Helene Lundsteen, said the results were disappointing.

Parsons attributed their loss to their early campaign complications. However, Parsons said the

City Council Election

Open seats go to Neill, Morris in close contest

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The race for two open seats on the Carbondale City Council was extremely close; Richard Morris and Michael Neill won the positions, but the spread between the three leaders was just 35 votes.

Morris won his third term on the council with 1,238 votes tallied by the 28 Carbondale precincts reporting.

The student candidates did not win either council seat, but Morris said their efforts did not go unnoticed, and representation of student interest will be an important concern during the next four years.

"One of the things that really impressed me about the campaign was the student involvement, their concern about what we were doing," Morris said.

"There was the realization (by the students) of 'wait a minute, we have a voice here, and all we have to do is use it,' and that was important to me," he said. "The students becoming that aware, and that concerned about what is going on is very important to Carbondale, and everyone should take a lesson from it."

Morris said has several goals for his next four years on the council, all of which hold high priority.

"I want to give equal priority to three goals," he said. "Downtown revitalization, economic development, and I am very concerned about the drug and gang influence in Carbondale."

Neill won the second council seat with 1,224 votes, and said he has high hopes for the future of Carbondale.

"I'd like to think the fact that I'm

Election numbers show increase

Student interest higher: Campus precincts have better turnout after low attendance at primaries

By Kellie Huttles
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An increased student interest surfaced during yesterday's elections for mayor and city council with 291 student votes cast, an increase of 200 since the February primary.

In Carbondale precincts 21-26, both predominantly student precincts stretching from University Hall at 1101 S. Wall St. to St. Francis Xavier Church, West Walnut Street, 291 ballots were cast out of 2,703 registered voters.

In precinct 21, University Hall, 31 votes were cast; precinct 22, the Newman Center, 31 votes; precinct 23, Grinnell Hall, 65 votes; precinct 24, Evergreen Terrace, 61 votes; precinct 25, Lentz Hall, 50 votes; and precinct 26, St. Francis Xavier Church, 53 votes.

The 11 members of the election judge in SIUC's Lentz Hall, said she was impressed to see so many student voters.

"This is better than usual — better than a long time," she said. "It's good to see some student interest. It's like we've got to have a pep rally the day before an election or something. Look what's at stake here."

Student issues new council members will be faced with include the bar entry age and Carbondale's Halloween celebration.

Ken Whittaker, an election judge at Grinnell Hall, said the students who voted were serious about the process, but many still were unwilling to mark a ballot.

"A lot of students say they're going to school here and that's where it ends," he said. "They forgot civics class in high school."

Karrie Kimble, a freshman in German, and Lisa Sharp, a freshman in art, both of Springfield, said they were first-time voters and thought it was important for students to vote.

"I feel students are underrepresented. I didn't like how we were treated at a city council meeting we went to," Kimble said.

"We live here nine months out of 12, so we wanted to say something, so why not vote?" Sharp said.

Students may still get chance to vote on $15 fee increase

By Dean Weaver
Special Assignment Reporter

SIUC students may still have a chance to vote on a proposed athletic-fee increase. Carin Musak, vice president of Undergraduate Student Government, now says she anticipates the athletic-fee-increase referendum will appear on the April 10 student trustee ballot, but to get the job done USG must conduct a special meeting Thursday night with a minimum of 22 senators present.

If 51 percent of the senators at the meeting vote to amend the language of the referendum, students will have a say in the fee increase, Musak said Tuesday.

"I think we will get the language changed," she said. "This is not a trivial referendum and the students' voice deserves to be heard."

USG and the Graduate and Professional Student Council had voted last Wednesday to add the athletic-fee-increase referendum to the ballot, but it was announced Monday that the referendum would be withdrawn. Conflicting language in the GPSC and USG versions of the referendum and an error misstating the amount of the increase were cited.

The referendum question stated the fee increase would amount to a $30-per-semester increase for full-time students, but SIUC President John Guyon's proposal to the SIUC Board of Trustees will only ask for a $15 increase.

GPSC had amended the referendum by eliminating the language that explains the justification for the athletic-fee increase, while USG kept the language. Musak said she foresees USG opting to cut out the language and halve the fee increase shown, bringing it in line with Guyon's $15 proposal.

2 MORE JAPANESE CULT COMPOUNDS RAIDED — TOKYO—In the wake of government promises to deal severely with the Aum Supreme Truth religious group, Japanese police raided two more cult compounds Tuesday. Police armed with warrants entered factory sites operated by the group in Yamanashi and Gumma prefectures this morning after two weeks of searches at other cult facilities. Authorities are looking for evidence linking the cult to the March 20 poison gas attack on Tokyo's subways that killed 11 commuters and injured 5,300 others.

CLINTON STOPS SECRET FUNDS TO GUATEMALA — WASHINGTON—President Clinton Monday suspended a secret flow of CIA funds that helped train and equip a Guatemalan army intelligence unit suspected of committing human rights abuses against Guatemalan citizens, senior administration officials said. Clinton acted after aides called to his attention that the CIA had maintained a formal, authorized "liaison relationship" with the notorious intelligence unit even after the United States last year phased out its covert CIA program for aiding the Guatemalan government's war against a prolonged leftist peasant insurgency, the officials said.

NO CONFIDENCE THREATENS REFORM PROGRAM — KIEV, Ukraine—Parliament dismissed the acting prime minister and his Cabinet Tuesday just minutes before President Leonid D. Kuchma went on television to commend their work on free-market reforms. The no-confidence vote will force Kuchma to scramble to keep the reform program on track against Communist and socialist opposition. But his advisers welcomed it as an opportunity for the president, who took office nine months ago with a holdover government not of his choosing. Ukraine has suffered four years of economic free-fall. But in his first state-of-the-nation speech, Kuchma said his Western-backed reforms are starting to show results that should encourage President Clinton when he visits here next month.

PATHWAYS OF SECONDHAND SMOKE DESCRIBED — In the most comprehensive report of its kind to date, researchers have detailed the exact mechanisms by which secondhand smoke can damage the heart and circulatory system. The report in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association presents new research by the University of California, San Francisco, and an analysis of the most recent scientific studies on secondhand smoke. It describes numerous pathways by which the components of tobacco smoke can lead to heart disease. The researchers argue convincingly that even a small quantity of secondhand smoke causes adverse cardiovascular effects in non-smokers.

DRUG SLOWS PROGRESSION OF LOU GEHRIG'S — The experimental drug riluzole has shown some success in slowing progression of the devastating muscle-wasting Lou Gehrig's disease, researchers said Monday. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, a pharmaceutical company with U.S. headquarters in Collegeville, Pa., came to the conclusion as the result of a large drug trial at several hospitals. In the next few months, the company said it will seek permission from the Food and Drug Administration to give the drug to a larger pool of patients during its final phase of testing.

Six compete for student trustee position

By Dave Mack
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Students will have three times the candidates to choose from in this year's student trustee election. Six candidates were approved by the student trustee election commission compared to the two candidates that were on the ballot last year.

"Six people is an incredible turnout," said William Karrow, chairman of the student trustee election commission. "Hopefully, we'll have three times the voter turnout."

The student trustee represents the student body at SIU Board of Trustees meetings. Craig Adams, a senior in psychology and English from Chicago, said he plans to focus on safety issues on campus and extended library hours for students. Adams also said he is against further tuition increases and wants the fees students are charged at the beginning of the year to be itemized so students will know what they are paying for.

Jason Eryn, a junior in accounting from Chicago, said he plans to fight tuition increases for the law students because he fears that such tuition increases may eventually extend to the general student population in a sort of ripple effect.

Eryn would also stress bringing the University into better compliance with Americans with Disabilities Act regulations.

Stephen Friedel, a second-year law student from Granite City, said the poor performance of current Mark Kochan was his reason for running for the office.

"I criticized my last student trustee, and I think that if I'm going to do that I should get involved," he said. Friedel said he supports setting up impeachment guidelines for student trustees to prevent a future Trustee from taking an internship and becoming inaccessible to students as Kochan did.

Courtney Macke, a junior in construction technology from Decatur, said he has been representing students for three years as the housing tuition and fees director and wants to do it on a grander scale.

Macke, a Unity Party candidate, said he wants to have better communication with the student body through a grassroots constituency forum, and supports an on-line student feedback system through the Internet. He also is against unsupported fee increases.

"I would oppose any and all tuition hikes that would not be supported by the students," he said.

Student from Burundi fears for family's safety

By Michael D. DeFord
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Recent fighting and instability in Burundi has one SIUC student fearful he will never see his family again.

Mercel Havyarimana, a graduate student in agriculture business economics from Burundi, said fighting among rival African tribes has put his family in immediate danger.

"I am very afraid of what is going on in Burundi," he said. "Many people were killed last year, and there are people who are still being killed, and those people are innocent people."

Havyarimana said he received a letter from his family during Christmas break telling him not to be surprised if he never saw them again because of the violence.

Brutal fighting among African clans surfaced again last week when 150 members of the Hutu clan were massacred in Gasorwe, a village in northeastern Burundi. The death toll could go as high as 450 in killings over the last two weeks.

Most of the victims were women and children. Last year, Rwanda's military killed more than 500,000 people, most of them Tutsis.

According to Havyarimana, Burundi faces the same problems as Rwanda in '93. Havyarimana said the Hutus want sole power of Burundi, power which the Tutsis are not willing to lose.

"In Burundi, the Hutus have taken power and do not want to share it with the Tutsis," he said. "Their objective is to kill the Tutsis and take the power from the army.

"If they (Hutus) take the power from the army they will kill everybody," he said.

According to Havyarimana, the international community is the resource needed to help solve the annihilation.

He said Zaire should be the main focus of their efforts because it is the source of the problem, and many attacks on Burundi originated there.

"There are many refugees in Zaire, and the Zairian government is not doing anything to stop what is being organized on the ground."

"Last week, many international nations left Burundi," he said. "International forces could be sent to Zaire to stop the forces coming into Burundi to attack."

"This is an army which is very well trained and organized and ready to attack and no one is stopping them," he said. "The Zairian government should not allow people to be trained there."

Dele Omosegbon, president of the African Student Association said solutions to Burundi's problems need to come from within Africa.

"This is not a question of having no solution; it is a question of the selfishness of a few politicians."

"Africa can end the problem with the help of Burundi's leaders," he said.

Havyarimana said in one suburb in northern Burundi, Hutus who have entered it have been beheaded and have had their hearts removed simply because of who they are.

New SPC chair wants to raise student interest in concerts

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The new Student Programming Council Consorts chair for the 1995-96 school year faces the challenge of bringing quality concerts to a campus stricken by low attendance figures at recent shows.

Josh Wiese, a sophomore in photography from Alton, will be in charge of booking bands for SIUC in the fall, but the job is not as exciting as it may sound.

"SPC has not been able to get bands to play at SIUC because recent concerts have had low attendance figures, and most bands are reluctant to play a show where they are not going to be seen by many people."

Only about 150 people saw the Velocity Girl concert in December in the Student Center Ballrooms, and most of them were not SIUC students. Dan Benoit, the current SPC Consorts chair, said some other bands which were then considering performing here decided not to come because of the low attendance.

"The Flaming Lips decided to go to Champaign after the fact," he said. "The Jesus Lizard were going to play in February before their West Coast tour, and they decided not to."

Group plans downtown revitalization

Working together: Volunteers organize efforts to strengthen downtown Carbondale.

By David R. Kazak
Daily Egyptian Reporter

During the City Council's discussion of where budget dollars will be going in fiscal year 1996, Councilwoman Maggie Flanagan made reference to a volunteer group of citizens called Carbondale Uptown Inc.

Flanagan was mentioning the group at the special city council meeting Monday night because she said she would like to see some of the city's budget go toward the group.

"I believe it's too late to get money from this year's budget, but I wanted to let the other council members know that next year, we are going to be ready to request more," she said.

"When thinking of someone to revitalize the downtown, the city should realize that (Uptown Inc.) is on line right now," Flanagan said Monday night. But the president of Uptown Inc. said the group is virtually unknown to anyone outside the business community or city hall.

Linda White, newly-elected president of Uptown Inc., said: "We have been around for quite a while, but we are really not well known. What we do is work with the city and private individuals towards goals of revitalization of Carbondale's downtown area."

Uptown Inc. is a group of citizens who work in conjunction with the city and businesses located downtown, which White said was Illinois Avenue, bordered by Oak Street on the north and Grand Avenue on the South. Their goal is the revitalization of this area.

City Manager Jeff Doherty said the group has been extremely helpful to the city and is an example of what a grassroots citizens' group can accomplish if they work hard enough. They've put together many things which the city follows, such as the downtown development plan, the revitalization of the town square, and the new city hall and civic center," Doherty said. "We have seen all those ideas come out of the retreats that Uptown Inc. has every year," he said.

"They've put together many things which the city follows, such as the downtown development plan, the revitalization of the town square, and the new city hall and civic center."

Flanagan, who is chair of an Uptown Inc.'s downtown development committee, said the retreats Uptown Inc. holds are for local business and property owners as well as some city officials.

The last retreat, held two weeks ago, yielded two outcomes that will help move the group forward, Flanagan said. A task force was chosen to develop more ideas about revitalizing South Illinois Avenue.

White said those plans include planting more trees along the Strip, and Flanagan said they also want to

Law chance to curb potential sex crimes

NEW LEGISLATION SIGNED BY ILLINOIS GOV. Jim Edgar is commendable for the positive step it takes in attempting to curb the number of sex offenses in the state. The bill, signed March 21, is scheduled to go into affect in 1996. It will require convicted sex offenders to register in person with law enforcement officials annually for 10 years following their release from prison. It also requires out-of-state offenders to provide DNA samples to police when they move to Illinois.

While the bill will not provide a complete solution to the tragedy of sex offense in Illinois, it is a move in the right direction.

By allowing police to know the whereabouts of a known offender, the law potentially can prevent past offenders from committing another sex crime because of the possible felons' knowledge that the authorities are watching them with both eyes open.

SOME OPPONENTS TO THE NEW LAW CLAIM it is a violation of the privacy of people who already have paid for their crime through a jail sentence or through rehabilitation programs. While this argument may have some merit, other points must be considered.

Many experts on sexual offense as well as women's representative groups claim that lessons learned by an offender through prison or rehabilitation often are not enough to prevent the offender from repeating the act over and over again. It seems that in and of itself, the law actually may provide for a type of rehabilitation.

By requiring former offenders to file with police on an annual basis for a decade after their prison sentence is over, the one-time felons will be continually reminded of the privacy of a victim that they shattered and the horrible pain that they brought to innocent individuals' lives.

THE NEW LAW IS CERTAINLY NOT A CURE-ALL for sexual offenses, however. According to figures provided by the Carbondale Women's Center Rape Action Committee coordinator, a repeat rapist on average commits up to 25 assaults before being caught by the law. According to the same organization, up to 300 assaults are committed by pedophiles before they are apprehended. This means that by the time an offender is known by the police, the damaging violation on many innocent lives may already be done.

Such figures show a definite need for lawmakers, women's organizations and law enforcement agencies to increase efforts in attempts to prevent sex crimes. Also, individuals must do all that they can to learn from these groups about measures they can take to prevent, discourage or avoid situations in which they could be subject to sexual assault.

Mace and other means of self-defense, such as martial arts classes which can be taken through private instructors or in classes at SIUC, also are options which should be considered and promoted by women, women's organizations and the public at-large.

LIKE MOST OTHER CRIMES, SEXUAL OFFENSES may not be solved or even significantly curbed by the mere stroke of a politician's pen. While the new law presents a promising new tile to the floor of fighting rape and other sexual assaults, there are still many bare spots to be filled.

Concerned citizens, interest groups and state legislators in Illinois and states across the country must continue to devote time and energy into laying the tiles to provide a safe walkway for women and other potential victims of sexual assault.

Graduation prayer individual decision; Guyon should put issue to student vote

It's ironic that society is rapidly disintegrating while, at the same time, great efforts are underway to eradicate any and all religious references. Our schools and country are eliminating any acknowledgment of God and our Christian heritage. Intolerance and hostility toward religion and those with religious convictions is so popular that it's become acceptable. America seeks freedom from religion versus freedom of religion.

We're not going to hide our religious beliefs; they're a way of life and aren't limited to our homes and churches. We don't leave our religious values and convictions at home when school's in session and then pick them back up when school's out. We have the liberty to freely express our religious beliefs; religious and nonreligious expression must be afforded the same degree of protection, and both must be allowed. Just as we are subjected to humanistic, philosophical and secular speeches in classes and at graduation, the same should be true in regard to prayer and religious expression.

The University shouldn't endorse "prohibiting the free exercise thereof." You can accommodate religious practices at a graduation without endorsing religion. Officials should allow graduating classes to choose, by a majority vote, whether they want to include a student-led prayer at their ceremony. After all, the students are the ones graduating and who've paid for their educations

(and the officials' salaries). It's not unconstitutional to allow student-led prayer; it's our constitutional right to pray at our commencement! We need to add some meaning to this momentous occasion. Prayers at graduation should be the result of student, not government, choice. In this way, it won't be government endorsement of religion.

President Guyon has made it clear — he prefers those who believe in no religion over those who are religious. Now we know where he stands, but will he find out where the students of this University stand? Or does he even care?

Chemical treaty needs approval

By Fred Webber
For The Washington Post

The televised sight of vast stockpiles of commercial chemicals being removed from the headquarters of the religious sect suspected of causing the Tokyo poison gas attack was a deeply troubling sight to all of us who work in the chemical industry.

But equally disturbing to me have been the glib words of some TV commentators that poison gas is as easy to make as a pipe bomb.

It's not yet known how the religious group came to acquire the chemicals found in Japan. But here in the United States, it would be practically impossible to gather such an inventory without detection. That's because the industry has a long history of working with law enforcement officials to detect and prevent illegal diversions of sensitive chemicals.

The chemical agent apparently used in the Tokyo attack has no commercial value and is not produced by any chemical company. But as the television pictures made clear, the poison is made from commercial chemicals that have important applications in areas like medicine and fire prevention.

Our job, as chemical manufacturers, is to preserve legitimate markets for our sensitive products while working with the government to prevent illegal diversions. We do that in a number of ways. The most important step is that we know our customers: In the case of the most sensitive dual-use chemicals, a small number of producers work closely with an equally small number of purchasers. They have long-established commercial ties, and the movement of these chemicals is tightly controlled.

When a new order for a sensitive chemical is placed, the manufacturer conducts a thorough investigation of the potential customer. Technical experts are dispatched to the customer's site to certify that there is a legitimate need for the product and that the customer is properly trained and equipped to handle it. Suspicious orders are reported to the government.

The same holds true for chemical distributors, who usually sell smaller amounts of a product to smaller customers. When an order is placed, the buyer must justify the reason for the purchase. Records are kept, a paper trail is established.

That said, we are the first to urge that more be done to stop the threat of chemical weapons. The chemical industry has been an outspoken supporter of a United Nations treaty to ban the manufacture, use and possession of chemical weapons. The treaty has been signed by 159 countries but ratified so far by only 27.

Unfortunately, the United States has so far failed to act. Senate ratification was scheduled for last year but was stalled in the swirl of last-minute business and election year politics. Now there is no excuse for further delay.

Many deaths among Tutsis go unreported, while the deaths of Hutus are always reported, Havyarimana said.

"The minister of mining and energy was attacked and killed in downtown Burundi a few weeks ago," he said. "The government of Belgium was very upset with the massacre and ordered the arrest of the ones that committed the crime. "Two days after the minister was killed a Tutsis colonel was killed and crucified and they did not say anything or even condemn it," he said.

popular artists is because of its low budget, Wiese said. He said people are unable to understand the paradox of not being able to get big bands because nobody goes to the smaller shows.

"We can't book bigger-name acts because we don't have money to," he said.

Wiese said if students want to see popular acts the student activity fee would have to be doubled.

"If (students) want to make that sacrifice, and they actually come out to the shows, then I'm all for it," he said.

The current student activity fee is $18.75 for full-time students.

Wiese said the region of the country in which SIUC is located, along with the limited budget, are the two largest reasons for low attendance.

"We're not a metropolis," Wiese said. "We're a small college town."

Wiese said he is thinking approaching bands who might be considering a St. Louis concert date and trying to steer them to SIUC instead, thereby bringing in fans from that area. This technique worked for the Smashing Pumpkins concert at the SIU Arena in April, which sold out.

"I'm hoping we can offer them something that they can't see in St. Louis, or offer prices that are different, so they'll come down," he said.

Part of the problem is SPC's image on campus, Wiese said. He does not believe that many students are aware of the organization, and he feels SPC may have to play a bigger role in entertaining students under 21 if the bar entry age is raised.

To alleviate this problem, Wiese said he is thinking about booking free shows in the Free Forum Area near the Student Center, along with advertising other, low-priced shows in both local and regional media.

"The whole idea is to bring down good shows, not to make a profit," he said.

Wiese was selected out of about 20 applicants by a committee of advisers and chairs of other SPC departments in March.

He has worked as a volunteer for SPC for two semesters and has experience in various facets of the music industry. He has booked shows in St. Louis and Carbondale, and was a disc jockey on WIDB radio.

He also plays guitar in his own band, Bris.

Benoit said Wiese's same background will help him in his new position.

inform businesses about city programs designed to help the appearance of the downtown area.

"A lot of the buildings along North Illinois Avenue in the town square have taken advantage of a city loan program which allows business or property owners to borrow up to $20,000 to improve the facade of the building," Fanagan said.

"But those programs are available to the businesses along South Illinois Avenue as well, but they don't take advantage of it," she said.

"We try and let them know that these things are available."

The second outcome was to prioritize what the group wants to accomplish for the future.

The tentative priority list includes organizing the downtown area into a unified business entity, similar to the mall, with a downtown manager.

It also includes parking improvements; creation of pocket parks by adding more trees, green space and benches, gaining private investment with public incentives, promoting events, including a possible Halloween celebration, and starting a positive promotion campaign about South Illinois Avenue.

doctoral student in sociology from Bloomington, said he plans to focus on the lack of SIUC representation on the Illinois Board of Higher Education and keeping the amount of administrators proportional to the number of students.

Andrew Ensor, a senior in political science and television production from Lebanon, said he wants to expand student representation.

He also said he is against the proposed athletic-fee increase and the mass-transit-system-fee increase, although he supports the idea of a public transit system.

Students need not be registered in Jackson County to vote, said Katrina Hebert, the USG election commissioner.

Students only need to bring a valid SIUC student ID to a polling place, she said.

Students will be able to ask questions of the candidates during a debate Wednesday night at 6 p.m. in the Student Center Auditorium.

Use of info technology linked to productivity, study shows

Agribusiness respondents also cite complications

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Increased use of information technology leads to increased productivity, according to a study conducted by an SIUC agribusiness economist.

The report, based on the input of 104 agricultural input supply salespeople in Southern Illinois, concluded that respondents who used information technology averaged more than twice the annual sales volume than those who did not adapt the technologies to their work.

Information technologies include computers, modems, cellular telephones and telefax.

Kim Harris, an associate professor of agribusiness economics, conducted the study with the help of John Pike, a former graduate student.

Harris said the study, which spanned one year from conception to composition, was based on the types and extents of technologies and the kinds of issues raised by the incorporation of these technologies in the workplace.

"We now have a baseline of data that we can go back to two to three years from now and track where the use of information technology is," he said.

Half of the respondents who affirmed that information technology has made them more productive and efficient also said the same technology has made their jobs more complex.

The common factors cited as complications included keeping abreast of changes in hardware and software and justifying costs of the technologies versus the increase in production.

Harris said the research mirrors trends he sees in the agricultural input/supply field.

"We are now seeing agricultural input/supply companies merging, downsizing and reconstructing," he said. "It is my belief that technology is making a lot of this possible."

"Companies are now able to do the same amount of work or more work with the same people by employing information technology in their service.

Gordon Bruner, acting chairman of the SIUC Marketing Department, agrees that high-tech equipment helps in sales, but he said as long as a salesperson presents the client with something, whether a CD-ROM presentation or a product sample, it increases the likelihood of a sale.

"A salesperson needs more to go on (than words), to touch a variety of senses," he said. "That creates more credibility in the eyes of a client."

Harris' study, "Information Technology and the Sales Effort," was submitted for consideration as a selected paper to be presented at the 1995 American Agricultural Economics Association meeting at Indianapolis in August. It will be published in the May issue of "Agri Marketing Magazine," a national magazine serving agriculture business professionals.

Harris said another graduate student is continuing to study the phenomenon by applying different modeling techniques to the samples.

Another appeal filed to delay motor voting

But district judge orders Illinois implementation

By Stephanie Moletti
DE Assignments Editor

Illinois filed yet another appeal Tuesday to postpone compliance with the federal Motor Voter Act.

On March 28, U.S. District Judge Milton Shadur ordered Illinois to comply with the law which requires states to provide voter registration at drivers' licensing, social service facilities and through the mail.

Shadur denied the state's request Monday to delay his order forcing the state to comply with the 1993 National Voter Registration Act, which is designed to encourage voter registration.

Eric Robinson, spokesman for Gov. Jim Edgar, said state officials hoped to delay compliance while they appeal the decision through the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

However, the state still plans to pursue the appeal filed Friday with the appellate court, Robinson said.

Ronald Michaelson, executive director of the state Board of Elections, was appointed to coordinate Illinois' implementation of the legislation.

A bill proposing a unitary registration system, combining registration for federal and state elections through the Motor Voter Act, is being heard in the state legislature, Michaelson said.

"The legislature still has that bill," he said. "No one knows if they will speed things up because of the court rulings." The unitary system is being considered to help voters more efficiently register for the correct elections.

Shadur gave the state 30 days to prepare an outline of implementation plans.

"We started working to implement (the motor voter legislation) since summer '93 when President Clinton signed the legislation," Michaelson said.

"A great deal of work has already been done — we will not be starting from scratch."

He said state officials also asked for an expedited hearing of the appeal, which requires the court to hear the appeal within 60 days.

Illinois was one of four states, including California, Pennsylvania and South Carolina, sued by Justice Department in February for refusing to comply with the law.

Bicycle safety essential

By Joe Baker
Student Health Programs

Spring is right around the corner and many SIUC students will rediscover the most efficient form of transportation ever invented, the bicycle. Not only are bicycles energy efficient, inexpensive to operate, but they are easily parked on campus. However, since they are both fast and lightweight, there are precautions that need to be taken to ensure that you return safely on your bike after traveling among 1 to 2-ton cars and heavy trucks on the streets of Carbondale. Because bicycles are less visible to car drivers, defensive driving is a must of bicyclists. They always lose in a confrontation with a car. Fifteen to sixteen hundred bicyclists die annually in bicycle crashes, about one million bicyclists require some kind of medical treatment every year, and over 400,000 are treated in emergency rooms across the country. In addition, bicyclists are at greater risk for head injury than participants in almost any other sport.

Reduce your risk for accidents and injury through these simple guidelines:

- Inspect your bicycle regularly, (at least weekly), to ensure that everything is tight and operable, including lights, brakes, horn and tires. Check tire air pressure.
- Use proper hand signals.
- Obey all traffic signals.
- Whenever it is necessary to ride after dark, wear light colored clothes, make sure your bike has a white headlight and a reflector or a red taillight that can be seen for 500 feet.
- Wear a lightweight bicycle helmet — they are inexpensive, about $20, and shown to reduce the risk of head injury.

Enjoy the convenience of your bicycle, but remember that you are never far from the pavement. For more information, contact the Student Health Environmental Health and Safety Office at 453-4433 or the Safety Center at 453-2080.

Visiting writer pleased with road taken

By Kristi Dehority
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As a high school student, Stuart Dybek originally wanted to be a doctor, but his heart led him to writing. He changed his major and that decision led to teaching at several universities, several awards and three published works.

Dybek said his decision to pursue writing was hard but one he felt he had to make.

"When you are young, it is a very monumental decision," he said.

"I was the first to go to college (in the family), and knew if I went to med school I would have a job when I got out.

"Writing was not the best route to go (in that respect)," Dybek said. Since that decision, Dybek has won awards from the Guggenheim Fellowship, Whiting Writers Award, two National Endowment for the Arts fellowships and a special citation from the Hemingway Prize committee. Dybek said he feels lucky to be acknowledged but at the same time realizes that all good work cannot be recognized.

"There is so much good work out there, sometimes to be singled out feels like you got a lucky role of the dice," he said. "You are aware that there is good work out there and that sometimes your good work not might be recognized. So in that respect, you are pleased," Dybek said.

Dybek's awards have centered around his three books and his features that have appeared in magazines.

Dybek said he feels more comfortable writing books because of the medium's permanence compared to monthly magazines.

"The book form is more interesting. Unlike magazines, until a book is discontinued, you have a stronger feeling of purpose," he said. "A book is the best vehicle.

"Writing is making something, a beautiful sturdy table. I want my writing to be durable, it's a mark of good writing," Dybek said. Dybek is currently a professor of English at Western Michigan University and enjoys the student-oriented environment.

"One of the things I like about teaching is, it is wholly student oriented. All the text is work of the students," he said. "In trying to teach, students aren't being asked to do work they are not interested in." "People raise the silly notion that you can teach writing. I teach it as a craft, as a music teacher might teach music, to emphasize the basics," Dybek said.

He currently touring colleges and has just returned from the University of California, Irvine.

"It's fun. You get to meet new people and visit old friends," Dybek said.

"Besides good stories being told, there is an exchange of ideas."

Write-in procedure gets mixed reactions

By Sean J. Walker
Campus Life Editor

The Carbondale mayoral and city council elections Tuesday gave voters the chance to write in votes for candidates, and many found that it was easier to do than they had expected.

Bette Knowles, an undecided freshman from Decatur, voting at precinct 25, said it was easy to write in a candidate on the ballot, but that there should have been more lines in order to write in more than one candidate.

"On the ballot it explained how to do a write-in vote, and there was plenty of room to do that," she said. "There was enough space, but there could have been more lines and boxes to write in the candidates."

"Overall it wasn't that hard..." Jackson County Clerk Irene Carlton said phones in her office were ringing all day, and a few had complaints about the write-in voting.

"We had questions about people concerned with the use of pencils to write in votes," she said.

Carlton said other callers were not happy with the absence of the write-in names at the polling places.

"People were really upset that we didn't have the names of write-in candidates at the polls, but that would be campaigning if we did, and that is illegal," she said.

Lists of candidates at the polls were there for election judges to use in tallying votes in the close of the polls.

Carlton said the write-in votes were tallied at the individual precincts and then brought straight in and matched with the number of stubs to ensure accuracy in the counting.

Jim Lukas, an election judge at precinct 26, said people asked a few questions about how to fill in a write-in ballot, but said the people had no problems when it came time to vote.

"The only question that was asked today was about how to fill out a ballot for a write-in candidate," he said. "We demonstrated it for them, and no one made any comments about not having enough room on the ballot for their vote."

Karrie Kimble, a freshman in German from Springfield who was voting in precinct 23, said that though she did not use the write-in vote, it sounded hard to do.

"It sounded like a pain," she said after overhearing the write-in explanation.

"If they wanted to be on the ballot in the first place, it would have been easier for people who wanted to vote for them."

Terry Christoff, an election judge at precinct 22, said a lot of people asked for an explanation of the write-in procedure.

"Pretty much everybody who came in to vote has asked about write-ins," he said. "I show them how to use the voting machine and how to do write-in candidates."

"I also told them to make sure that they don't overvote their ballot by voting for more than the required number of candidates, so that their votes will not be invalid."

The election judges used demonstrators to show voters how to insert their ballot into the voting machine, do their write-ins and how to bring the ballot back to the election judge.

Elections

Despite the fierce election and campaign, James Reid, an undecided junior from Shelbyville, said he did not know there was an election yesterday.

"I did not even know that the election is on," he said. "I had to go to the polls and vote at home and vote in the presidential election."

John Kieras, a freshman in mechanical engineering from Lansing, took time out to vote because there was a long dinner line in his hall and said although students do not have much say in government, voting makes a difference.

"Students should vote, so they have some say in what's going on," he said. "They never have enough say." Irene Carlton, Jackson County clerk, said students are concerned about issues, but voting is not as exciting to them as fighting for a cause.

"Voting is something you do because it is important for the future," she said.

"It's like taking a test, it's something you have to do and students need to do it for a rational reason."

While dining halls tended to draw more voters, election judges at University Hall and the Newman Center said the day had been quiet.

Jerry Goforth, a judge at U-Hall, said he was surprised by the low turnout.

"This is terrible," he said. "I thought we'd have all the hubbub we'd have."

More students were seen at the polls had a stream of steady voters throughout the day.

Study cites shortage of inner-city instructors

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC associate professor's research shows urban schools, already in desperate need of trained teachers, will face a similar shortage in the future. And the shortage of teachers may be the greatest source of educational inequity for poor and minority students, said Sharon L. Gilbert, an associate pro-

Teachers are very concerned about their own safety.

Sharon Gilbert curriculum professor fessor in SIUC's Department of Curriculum and Instruction.

Gilbert said the enormous need for teachers in urban schools has resulted in alternative hiring methods, some where an individual with any kind of bachelor's degree has a good chance of getting a job teaching as long as they commit to continue in education. But teachers find it difficult to teach in inner-city schools, according to Gilbert's research, and don't stay long.

Urban stays don't last long

"Many of the teachers that are experienced do not want to teach in urban schools or they do not stay long," Gilbert said. "There are a few who stay, but not enough."

Donald L. Beggs, administrative dean of the College of Education, said he believes there are enough prepared teachers, but most prefer to teach in areas closer to home.

"People are concerned with the area they work in," he said. "If you do not live in an urban area you are less likely to teach in that area," he said. Gilbert's survey of 193 prospective teachers showed most teachers come from rural settings and plan to return to similar settings to pursue their careers.

External factors important

A factor that discourages teachers from working in urban areas is having to deal with the problem of keeping students in school and problems the children face in their domestic lives, Gilbert said. Urban schools also have a bad reputation because of the picture the media has painted, she said.

"Some inner-city schools are plagued with gangs, drugs and weapons," Gilbert said. "Teachers are very concerned about their own safety," she said.

The looming shortage of urban educators is being challenged in part by the many universities which are changing the way they train prospective teachers Gilbert said.

"Some universities are trying to get prospective teachers to understand other cultures and do some field work and student teaching in urban schools," Gilbert said. "SIUC is involved in a recruitment program to get minorities to become teachers. The programs encourage student teachers to examine other cultures, and then apply what they have learned by participating in volunteer work in urban communities," Gilbert said.

a young candidate gives me a good basis to look to the future," he said. "I plan to live in this town for a lot of years, and my children will be around; I hope to make the types of decisions that will make Carbondale a better place not just in the short run, but 10, 20, 30, even 40 years from now."

Neill said the campaign involved lot of time and energy, but he enjoyed it.

"It's amazing how intense it is at times," he said. "It was fun, but the public speaking and running my own business was pretty time consuming."

Barbara Parrish, who appeared to lead Neill until the last precincts reported in just after midnight, received 1,203 votes. Parrish said she will continue to actively serve the city.

"I'll be continuing to work hard on the planning commission," she said.

Parrish said the most memorable moments of the campaign for her occurred early on, in January and February as she walked from door to door meeting voters.

"Meeting the different people and finding out what their issues were was a highlight for me," she said. "I did a lot of walking with long underwear, and my ears were freezing."

City council candidate Robert "Bob" Stalls ranked fourth among the candidates received 766 votes.

Robert Stalls said the voting turnout was not really representative of Carbondale as a whole, and he would continue to work for the disadvantaged minorities in the city.

"I have worked 40-50 hours a week since my retirement for Carbondale," he said. "Some day

I hope to awaken the sleeping giant."

Write-in student candidates Lorcuzo Henderson received 155 votes and Anna Helene Lundsteen went away with 128.

Henderson said the campaign had been a learning experience. "It taught us to be better prepared," Henderson said.

"We had no idea about the people we would meet and deal with."

"In some respects it was disappointing — we were trying to do something good for the town, and yet we ran into so many barricades."

Henderson and Lundsteen agreed they would have had a better chance in the elections if their names had been on the ballot, although Lundsteen said a challenge is always a good thing.

"We would have definitely had a larger turnout if people could have just checked a box instead of writing us in," Henderson said.

Lundsteen said she would never forget the campaign.

"The most memorable moment was when we all decided to run together," she said. "We had a lot of hopes and dreams and all that wishy-washy stuff, but we also had initiative, and we went for it."

Mayor

the foundation is set for future student candidates because of the candidates' work.

"There are a lot of things we could have done different," Parsons said. "I think we basically set the groundwork for future candidates."

Student candidates' complications started with having invalid nominating petitions, which caused them to become write-in candidates. They lost their appeal against the Carbondale Election Board's decision in circuit court.

Ensor said he will continue to campaign for students.

The mayoral race mainly focused on representation and economic development.

said if USG is successful he will have to decide if he has the authority to unilaterally change the amount of fee increase shown in the GPSC language.

He said it is too late to call a GPSC meeting, so the council would not have time to approve any alterations.

"I will talk to the GPSC executive committee Wednesday night and go with its recommendation," he said.

Regardless of Smith's GPSC dilemma, if USG fails to pass the changes there will be no athletic referendum April 10.

On Tuesday, Musak said every effort is being made to contact the senators about the special USG meeting. The effort includes mailings and telephone calls.

Jean Paratore, associate vice president of student affairs, said the referendum is now in the hands of USG and GPSC and she will allow any modifications made.

"I don't think anyone will object to lowering the proposed fee increase," she said.

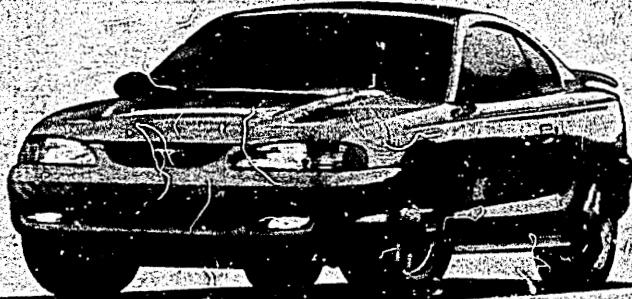

The referendum was drafted so that the SIUC Board of Trustees could hear from students before voting on the proposal, although they will not pass judgment on the increase until May.

The fee increase would compensate for a potential loss of $650,000 annually in state funds which support intercollegiate athletics.

The Illinois Board of Higher Education had asked schools to phase out their use of state funds for intercollegiate athletics by fall semester 1995, but is now reconsidering its position.

Mediterranean expedition: 15 days of fun, travel for credit

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Imagine traversing Italy from the Alps to Sicily, observing ancient archaeological wonders, searching for medicinal plants of yore and examining marine life.

Now, imagine getting class credit for the whole experience.

David Brussell, an adjunct professor in plant biology, will be leading a 15-day expedition of 22 people through the land Caesar once proclaimed his own.

Participants will visit the ancient city of Pompeii, which is buried under lava, and the ancient Greek acropolis at Salunte. They will have the opportunity to explore Etruscan tombs, the Doric temple at Paestum where the movie "Jason and the Argonauts" was filmed and the valley of Greek temples in southern Italy.

The group also will stop in the cities of Florence, Venice, Siena and Rome.

"In Siena, we'll see a town that is very medieval," he said. "Venice and Florence are good examples of Renaissance towns."

Many of the sites are places where tourists do not go, Brussell said.

"One of the nice things about this trip is it transcends several periods of time," he said. "We go from ancient Etruscan and Greek times up through the Middle Ages and the Renaissance."

Brussell has led three other expeditions to the Mediterranean, and has also taken groups to Tahiti, the Hawaiian Islands and Morocco and Gibraltar. He has been to the Mediterranean 16 times, and he studied medicinal plants in the region in 1985 as a Fulbright scholar.

Brussell said modern culture and scientific thinking began in the Mediterranean area.

"It's sort of the birthplace of our civilization and our culture," he said. "It's an area that has a lot to do with the foundations of our culture here in America, especially our science and our medicine."

Brussell, an ethnobotanist, will search for the silphium plant, which is thought to be extinct. The seeds were used for cooking, the stalk was made into a drink that was very tasty and a birth control agent was produced from the root extract.

The plant was so valuable, it appeared on Greek coins dating back to 400 B.C. in the city-state of Kyrene, in North Africa, Brussell said. It was overharvested, and not much effort was put into conservation.

"There's a chance that the silphium may be alive somewhere in some remote area," he said.

Brussell said he has found relatives of the plant in Greece.

Brussell and his group also will search for the mandrake plant, which produces an anesthetic effect, the yew, which produces a chemical used to fight breast cancer, and the belladonna, which was used by women to attract potential mates.

"They would squeeze drops into their eyes, causing their pupils to dilate," he said. "Whenever you're attracted to someone, or whenever you see something beautiful that really makes you feel good, your pupils dilate automatically."

The total cost is approximately $2,750 and is scheduled for May 25 to June 8. The expedition may be taken for credit or non-credit by anybody interested.

For more information, call David Brussell at 536-2331 or Sandra Rhoads at 536-7751.

Police Blotter

University Police

University Police said Eric M. Rosegay, 19, of Carbondale, was arrested April 3 on a Jackson County warrant for assault and aggravated battery after he turned himself over to police at the University Police Station. He posted bond and was released.

Carrie M. Morgan, 25, of Carbondale, was arrested April 4 on an outstanding warrant out of Champaign County for failure to appear on an original charge of driving under the influence of alcohol. She posted bond and was released.

University Police said they recovered a bicycle which was reported stolen on March 23. They said they found the bicycle April 3 at 4:34 a.m. near Life Science II.

Thyra K. Russel, of Carbondale, told University Police someone entered a room at Morris Library and achieved unauthorized access to computer files at 7:30 a.m. April 3.

Natalie G. Compton, 19, of Carbondale, told University Police someone punctured the rear tires of her car between 9:30 a.m. April 1 and 10:49 a.m. April 2, parked on Douglas Drive near Colyer Hall.
