EASTER SERVICE:

Rain dampens but does not dampen 63rd annual Bald Knob religious service.

As early morning showers blanketed the peak with a thick fog, cars wound slowly up the twisted road.

Inside a small building, people of all ages gathered around tables trying to stay warm and dry. The smell of pancakes and coffee welcomed the visitors as they awaited the sunrise and the 63rd-annual Bald Knob Cross Easter Sunrise Service.

Some of the visitors were attending the service for the first time, while others had attended the service for decades.

For Lillah Williams and her daughter,

Twillah Smith, the Easter Sunrise Service at Bald Knob Cross in Alto Pass, which began in 1937, is a family tradition.

"We have had four generations up here before Momma passed away," Williams said. "This is a journey for us — a pilgrimage."

Smith said she, too, has brought her own daughter, Christina, to the service, though she was not in attendance Sunday because of the weather.

Williams said she first came here as a child with her mother, Laura Karraker. Karraker, she said, had known Myrta Plutts, a member of the Bald Knob Christian Foundation, who donated piglets in the mid-1950s to sell for the Bald Knob Cross Project.

Through Plutts, Williams said, she and her mother met Wayman Presley, the rural mail carrier that first envisioned a cross atop the peak of Bald Knob.

Presley and the Rev. William Lirely of Makanda first conceived the idea in 1937. The Civilian Conservation Corps fashioned a primitive cross from forest trees prior to the service, which was attended by about 250 people.

Presley's vision grew in 1944 when he purchased 187 acres on and surrounding the summit of Bald Knob.

The next three years were spent traveling five states, seeking donors to repay the loan. By 1951, 116 donors had given $100 each. The group formed the Bald Knob Christian Foundation, a nonprofit group.

The group began efforts to raise money for a more permanent cross just uphill

Student dies in Saturday car accident

Student devoted life to faith, aspired to be a missionary

DAVID FERRARA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

An SIUC student aspiring to become a Christian missionary died Saturday afternoon in a car accident on Giant City Road when the vehicle she was driving collided with an oncoming vehicle.

Carol Synnott, a 23-year-old senior in aviation management from Naperville, was transported to Memorial Hospital of Carbondale after the accident and was pronounced dead.

Jackson County Sheriff Deputies responded to the two-car crash south of Drury Church Road at 1:59 p.m., finding two 19-year-old women also injured in another car.

Tonya Hearn, a Carterville woman who was driving the oncoming vehicle, was listed in stable condition at press time Sunday. Though Jackson County deputies said all three women were transported to the hospital, Sarah Hosman, a passenger in Hearn's vehicle, had no records, a head nurse at Memorial Hospital said.

Police, who are continuing to investigate the accident, issued no citations in the accident.

The cause of the crash was unavailable Sunday. Carbondale and the surrounding area received more than 1 1/2 inches of rain between Friday night and Saturday afternoon.

Scheduled to graduate from SIUC in August, Synnott devoted much of her time to Jesus, according to friends. Though dedicated to her major, she did strive to make her voice heard.

"The biggest desire in her life was to be a missionary," Debbie Leurquin, Synnott's friend, said. "She'd be attending prayer meetings every morning."

Bruce Synnott, Carol's father, grappled with sadness by remembering his daughter's personable qualities Sunday as he removed belongings from Carol's Forest Hall apartment.

"I don't know of anyone who's met her that didn't like her," Synnott said with a soft

Dillard cites record, prudence in mayoral bid

Election '99

Mayoral Race

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of three stories profiling the campaigns run by mayoral candidates John Budsick, Neil Dillard and Rob Taylor and the issues on which each are focusing.

DAN CRAFT
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A cautious approach to change and a solid record are attributes incumbent Carbondale Mayor Neil Dillard is stressing in his campaign for re-election.

Dillard cited a number of ongoing projects and past changes as proof that he has been an effective mayor and should be elected for another term.

"When people look at the overall picture with SIU and Carbondale, my experience and knowledge will show," Dillard said.

Dillard pointed to the "seamless, often invisible cooperation between the city and University" as proof that his administration has worked to expand and improve the relations between students and gives students reason to support him.

As for changes suggested by other candidates and community members, Dillard said issues must be carefully and thoroughly considered with respect to all parties involved.

The Halloween celebration, for example, has been brought up most vocally by opponent Rob Taylor, but Dillard said the current system is working well.

New ideas might be needed in the future, Dillard said, but for now, "the fall break is appropriate and very much needed." The Main Street Pig-Out is a great event for both city and students, while Halloween is still evoking unpleasant memories in many minds."

Also mentioned as examples of Dillard's commitment to city/University relations include security arrangements between University and City police forces for large events and the success of the Saluki Express bus system and the annual Carboard Boat Regatta.

Dillard has taken a different approach to getting voters to the polls than competitor John Budsick. Instead of working to register new voters, he has been targeting voters from previous elections to ensure they turn out once again.

Dillard has also been focusing on several issues he says deserve the support of both students and community members.

"Improvement projects such as the Mill Street underpass and the beautification of South Illinois Avenue will have a positive effect on all community members," Dillard said.

He said he will also be pushing for grant money to pursue a beautification project along East Main Street.

"People coming into town don't see much that would attract them at this point," he said.

And people, specifically those offering additional jobs, are more than welcome.

Dillard pledges to continue attracting job opportunities on all levels. He will look to the state and federal Student trustee gets down and dirty

MUD DAWGS:

Aside from politics, Mike Ruta enjoys the thrill of off-roading.

MATT SMENOS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

People may see his shirt and tie and think "politician," but SIUC Student Trustee Mike Ruta takes muddling to a new level when he rips it up as vice-president of the new Mud Dawgs Off-Road Club.

Already having 40 members, the club was officially established as a Registered Student Organization last week to allow "mudding" fans an outlet for their hobby.

•MUDDIN'

The Mud Dawgs meet every Monday at 8 p.m. at Mugsy McGuire's, 1620 W. Main St. For more information call Steve Fust at 549-0267.

"All we wanted to do was go four-wheeling out somewhere," Ruta said. "We always wound up trespassing, so we tried to find a legal way to go four-wheeling and race 4x4s."

The original idea for the Mud Dawgs was conceived by Steve Rust, the club's president. Ruta, a senior in automotive technology from Downers Grove, went before USG to request the RSO status.

The Mud Dawgs' vice president, Mike Ruta, a senior in automotive technology in Libertyville, sits atop his tool of trade during a bout of off-roading in an open pasture Monday afternoon.

Ruta, a senior in automotive technology from Carbondale, said the club presently is in the process of acquiring a truck suitable for racing off-road. He also said the group is looking for places to go off-roading.

"What we want is to eventually have a Jeep we can show and run off-road," he said. "It may take a little time, but we'll get there eventually."

The novelty of an RSO for off-roaders was not lost on Undergraduate Student Government.

"We got a few laughs from USG when we presented the idea," Ruta said. "I think anyone who really knows me won't find the Mud Dawgs idea very

911 call leads to one saved life, five charges

Murphysboro Police arrested a 36-year-old Carbondale man on five charges Saturday after he fought with his girlfriend at her residence, threatening to end her life.

Robert L. Ollie III is being detained at the Jackson County Jail in lieu of $50,000 on charges of attempted first-degree murder, aggravated battery, unlawful use of weapons, domestic battery and unlawful restraint in relation to the incident.

Ollie was in his girlfriend's house in Murphysboro removing some of his belongings at around 3 a.m. Saturday when she returned home before a confrontation ensued, police said.

The woman's roommate made two 911 calls — the first to warn police and a second to summon an ambulance — when she heard a fight in a bedroom at the residence.

Police arrived to find the two still engaged in a struggle.

"The suspect had his legs wrapped around her midsection with his arms wrapped around her neck."

Murphysboro detective and public information officer Curt Ehlers said. "He was making a statement that he was going to kill her."

After police issued a second warning of arrest, Ollie surrendered and was taken to jail.

The victim was taken to Carbondale Memorial Hospital and released.

TIM CHAMBERLAIN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Incumbent City Councilman Michael Neill has always been business-minded, all the way back to when he began following the stock market at age 13.

Neill is a vice president and trust officer at First National Bank and Trust in Carbondale, but his interest in business was evident as far back as middle school, according to one of his eighth-grade teachers.

Mary Ellen Dillard, wife of Carbondale Mayor Neil Dillard, was a language arts and social studies teacher at Neill's middle school. She said he was a good student and became interested in the stock market as an eighth grader.

According to Dillard, Neill even worked with a local stockbroker to further his knowledge on the subject.

"Even at that age, he knew much more than I did on the stock market," Dillard said.

This intelligence also carried on to the playing field, according to Neill's high school football coach Tom O'Boyle. O'Boyle said Neill, who played a defensive back, was an intelligent player, which is sometimes different from academic intelligence.

"He didn't require a whole lot of coaching," O'Boyle said. "You'd tell him what to do once, and that was usually all it took."

Three missing U.S. soldiers being held in Pristina

The three U.S. soldiers apparently captured by Yugoslavia after going missing Wednesday are being held in Pristina, the provincial capital of Kosovo, Yugoslavian Independent radio station B92 reported Thursday.

Three men in U.S. uniforms were shown on Serbian television answering questions, CNN reported Thursday.

CNN broadcast the footage of the three soldiers, who appeared to have bruises on their faces. It was not clear who was questioning the soldiers.

In Brussels, North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) spokesman Jamie Shea said Thursday that NATO has not yet confirmed that the men shown in the footage are the three men who went missing.

"I have to stress that at this very moment, we are still completing a positive identification procedure," he said.

Shea said NATO expected the soldiers to be treated in a humane way in accordance with civilized norms of behavior.

The Serbian footage showed the names of the three soldiers written in Cyrillic.

Yugoslavia's Tanjug news agency quoted Serbian Radio Television as saying that two U.S. non-commissioned officers — James Stone and Andrew Ramirez — and soldier Steven Gonzales were captured in Yugoslav territory Wednesday.

The Pentagon had earlier said that the three had been on a reconnaissance mission in an armored vehicle in Macedonia near the border when they were surrounded and shot at. The Washington Post reported that the shots came from the Yugoslav side of the border.

U.S. officials have stressed that their bombing campaign against Yugoslavia would not be affected if it turns out the soldiers are being held as prisoners.

Referendum wording could cause confusion

OBSTACLE: Proposal fails to mention proposed tax decrease.

SARA BEAN
POLITICS EDITOR

A bond referendum on the April 13 election ballot will give John A. Logan College the funding to staff and equip five new buildings if approved but will face one hurdle because of the manner of its presentation on the ballot.

The referendum calls for a tax increase of 10 cents for every $100 assessed valuation in the education purposes fund for JALC. The increase will be offset by a 10-cent decrease in the Bond and Interest tax. This means that there will be no net tax increase and tax-payers will continue supporting the college at a rate of 48.20 cents for every $100.

If the voters do not approve the referendum, taxes will decrease by 10 cents for each $100 assessed valuation.

The ballot asks voters to vote yes or no to increase the maximum annual-tax rate for educational purposes to .30 percent from the current rate of .20 percent. It also states that the increase would be a "50-percent increase in the education purposes fund."

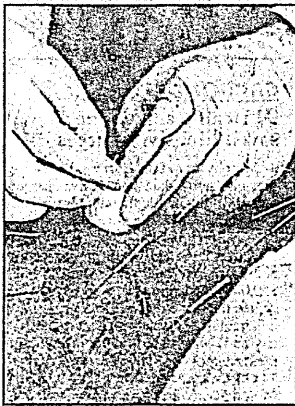

The referendum does not mention the decrease in the bond and interest fund tax.

Ferguson, of Murphysboro, has been coming to Li regularly for treatment of lower back pain. (Above) The acupuncture points (needles) are inserted into spots on the body called channels to open blocked energy flow and restore the body's health balance.

Acupuncture has been used as an alternative remedy for various medical conditions for more than 5,000 years.

STORY BY ERIN FAFOGLIA

John Ferguson stretches out on his stomach while hair-thin needles are carefully placed into his lower back. He is completely relaxed.

Ferguson, of Murphysboro, receives routine acupuncture therapy at Southern Illinois Acupuncture, 800 W. Main. Ying Li, an acupuncturist, is trained in traditional Chinese medicine and treats Ferguson for his pain.

Acupuncture is the gentle insertion of hair-fine needles into specific body points and has been practiced for more than 5,000 years.

The Oriental medical process of keeping the body's channels in balance, referred to as qi (pronounced 'chee'), has become a popular alternative remedy for various conditions.

According to Eastern philosophy, health depends on the vital energy qi that flows through the body along 14 pathways called meridians. Inserting needles along these pathways and into the body channels opens blocked energy flow and restores the body's healthy balance.

"There are 361 points on the body called channels, and if these are out of balance, the body has problems," Li said.

Li treats around 80 patients a month for mostly chronic pain and cancer — 90 percent of them have seen results.

"Most of my patients see results, but nothing can work 100 percent," Li said.

Ferguson suffered from chronic lower back pain for one year before undergoing surgery. After spending $7,000, his condition had not changed.

It was not until he began regular acupuncture therapy that his back pain subsided.

"Acupuncture has helped out better than my operation, and I have never felt better," he said. "I can do more than I've ever done."

Ferguson's wife, Alusha, said that after her husband's first session, he could perform tasks he could not do before.

"He couldn't even get into his truck before because of the pain, but when we left the first session he could get right in," she said.

Ferguson said he also has been relieved of a severe migraine as a result of acupuncture.

"I had them so bad, I couldn't look at light. I'd get sick and have to lie down," Ferguson said.

After one acupuncture treatment for migraines, which consists of inserting needles into the head, hands and feet, Ferguson was relieved.

"I haven't had a migraine since, and that was only one treatment," he said.

Ferguson said during his treatments, he feels very relaxed. He said the procedure is not painful, although he sometimes experiences a small tingle or sting.

The patient's size and conditional diagnosis, which consists of a general check-up, determines the number of needles and depth of insertion. Part of the Chinese philosophy is to get a correct diagnosis because treatment cannot be the same for all people.

"It's very individual for each person depending on their condition," Li said.

Many of Li's clients are referred to her by their physician when no other form of therapy has worked.

"I use my skill to help people who can't relieve their pain," Li said. "It is part of my study and part of my professional life."

Building a bridge from Carbondale to Asia

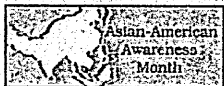

AWARENESS:

Activities planned to better Asian/American relationships.

DANA DUBROWNY
STUDENT AFFAIRS EDITOR

Asian-American Awareness Month is intended to bridge the gap between Asian-Americans, International Asians and mainstream Americans, according to one graduate student.

"Many people consider Asian-Americans to be part of their own group," said Lin, a graduate in clinical psychology from California. "Asians are a subgroup of America and to separate them isn't technically correct."

"We need to increase the communication with other Asian-Americans and non-Asian-Americans so we can discuss the issues we deal with and be more sensitive to them."

Today marks the start of the fifth anniversary of Asian-American Awareness Month. In 1993, the celebration lasted only one week, and in 1994 it became a month-long observance.

Lin said the celebration was expanded into a month because of the growing number of Asian-Americans settling in the Carbondale area.

"Coming from the west coast, I was at a campus where at least 50 percent of the population was made up of Asians," she said. "In Carbondale, there has been a steady growth of first generation Asians and Asians that have lived in America for generations."

Undergraduate researchers work toward scholarships

KAREN BLATTER
ACADEMIC AFFAIRS EDITOR

Twenty awards, each up to $1,500, will be given by the chancellor's office for undergraduate research and creativity award completion between July 1999 and June 2000.

Applications for the scholarship will be accepted from every major in the colleges of Agriculture, Applied Sciences and Arts, Business and Administration, Education, Engineering, Liberal Arts, Mass Communication and Media Arts and Science.

Students who are interested in competing for the award should complete an application form that will describe the intent of the research or creative project. Students will be working closely with a faculty member.

The project must be done between July 1999 and June 2000. On completion of the project, award winners are expected to prepare a report to the chancellor.

Proposals for the project are due to the chancellor's office by May 3, and the awards will be announced June 1.

Chancellor Jo Ann Argersinger said the special award was developed to encourage students to further pursue their academic interest.

"This will give students the opportunity to be creative and work closely with a faculty member," she said.

Union vote faces Senate

DAN CRAFT
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Teaching assistants and graduate assistants throughout the state may be forming their own unions for the purposes of collective bargaining if a bill awaiting review by the state Senate musters enough votes to pass.

While Graduate and Professional Student Council members were supportive of the measure, SIU legislative liaison Garrett Deakin said SIU has joined the University of Illinois in opposing the bill.

State Rep. Todd Stroger, D-Chicago, who sponsored the bill in the Illinois House of Representatives, also said he expects to see much opposition in the Senate.

"It could have a rough ride in the Senate," Stroger said. "The Senate has a larger Republican majority and doesn't look very favorably on unionization."

If passed, the bill would allow all teaching and graduate assistants some of the same rights afforded to staff and faculty employees. These graduates would have their own union separate from other faculty and staff and would be allowed to engage in collective bargaining with the University.

Both Stroger and GPSC President Michael Speck said that although the union might be state-wide, the more likely scenario would have the graduate and teaching assistants on each campus forming their own separate union.

The motivation, Speck said, is that needs sometimes differ between campuses.

Stroger said almost 20 other states have allowed teaching and graduate assistants to form unions either through legislation or through de facto formation of unions.

Both Deakin and Stroger said the first hurdle to overcome in the Senate is to get the bill out of the Senate Rules Committee.

Stroger said the committee could be the final resting place for the bill if Senate leadership does not think the bill will pass.

— TODD STROGER
STATE REPRESENTATIVE

"As far as I know the bill has no sponsor either, and that could be a problem unless a sponsor is found by the time session resumes next Wednesday," Stroger said.

GPSC Vice President for Graduate School Affairs Ed Ford was not aware of the legislation, but after being informed, he said the assumption that SIU and other state universities would lobby hard against the bill is probably accurate.

Both Stroger and Deakin also said opposition had to be expected.

"Actually, I was surprised by the lack of opposition in the House," Stroger said. "But bringing the bill to the Senate is basically like starting over from scratch."

Ford argued that the bill will help set a precedent for teaching and graduate assistants to obtain other employee benefits. Teaching assistants have been arguing throughout the year for increased faculty recognitions such as blue parking stickers to enable teaching assistants to park closer to campus.

"Graduate assistants, especially those teaching classes, are really employees," Ford said. "This could be a big plus for them."

Speck said employee benefits and input with the administration are two of the biggest issues that would be affected by the fallout from the bill. He remained skeptical that the bill would pass, however.

"Overall, we are actually in a better position than many of our counterparts across the state," Speck said. "This campus enjoys excellent access to our administrators."

He said that although a union may not have a large effect across campus, he sees no harm that could be caused by the unionization.

Speck also said that while the bill fell under Ford's jurisdiction, Ford would be carefully tracking it now that he was aware it existed.

"Everything boils down to the graduate and teaching assistants wanting to protect their rights and the universities not wanting to deal with the costs of unionization," Stroger said. "TAs are doing the universities a service and should have the chance to be fairly compensated."

Supreme Court to hear controversial UW case concerning allocation of student fees

JAYETTE BOLINSKI
MANAGING EDITOR

The Supreme Court agreed last week to hear a case that ultimately will determine if mandatory student fees should be used to support campus organizations that are diametrically opposed to students' political, religious or ideological views.

The review stems from an Aug. 10 ruling in which a three-judge panel in the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals stated officials at the University of Wisconsin-Madison cannot force students to finance campus groups that engage in political or ideological activities. The decision would have affected all universities in the 7th circuit, which includes Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana.

But some administrators, educators and student constituency group leaders say the decision is poorly formulated and infringes upon the First Amendment rights of students and the educational mission of universities across the country.

Because the circuit court would not rehear the case, the UW Board of Regents filed an appeal with the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court's decision will have a direct bearing on the student fee allocation structure at SIUC and universities across the country.

In a case that began in April 1996, three self-described conservative Christian UW students sued the university, claiming the use of their mandatory student fee money to finance 18 campus organizations was at odds with their political, ideological and religious beliefs.

Questions that will face the Supreme Court include: First Amendment rights of students and definitions of political, ideological and religious groups and beliefs.

Among the UW organizations affected by the ruling are Amnesty International; the Campus Women's Center; the International Socialist Organization; and the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Campus Center.

If the Supreme Court upholds the appellate court's decision, universities across the country will be forced to revamp their student fee allocation systems.

SIU officials have been keeping abreast of developments in the case. Peter Ruger, general counsel at SIU, said there is general uncertainty in higher education about how the Supreme Court will rule and about how to define political or ideological groups.

"I'm very glad the Supreme Court has decided to hear the case," Ruger said. "There are a number of questions that administrators and I have raised about how to implement the decision."

"I look forward to a clarification of the responsibilities of universities and student organizations in funding student groups."

The Supreme Court is expected to hear the case by June 2000 at the latest.

Springfield and Chicago is an issue that will be addressed but is not a priority.

A proposed high-speed rail route is possible, Dillard said, but the impact on towns and rural areas along the route also needs to be considered. The work necessary to place over- or underpasses along the route in place of crossings might be prohibitive, Dillard said.

"The issue needs careful consideration in order to bring as little harm as possible" to the entire route, he said.

The other issue Dillard has been campaigning on is the expansion of University Mall.

He has been advocating using vacant space in the mall as office space for Southern Illinois Healthcare.

"We need to look at the short-term retail picture," Dillard said. "I can see major changes in the retail industry within five years, so a long-term prediction is impossible to make. In the meantime, SIH will help pay the bills for lighting and other mall costs."

Finally, Dillard said he cannot do the job alone.

"The mayor is just one member of the City Council team," Dillard said. "Teamwork and input from the entire council is vital."

Band director still has right tunes

Mike Hanes keeps going strong after 30 years with SIUC marching band

CHRIS KENNEDY
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Mike Hanes was reading a newspaper while stationed in Germany in 1970 when he came across a story about massive unrest on the SIUC campus.

"I remember reading about Old Main burning and I wondered if I'd have a job when I got back," said Hanes, the SIUC director of bands.

He had no idea he would still be here nearly 30 years later.

Since Hanes came to SIUC as a graduate student in 1964, he has accrued a lifetime of SIUC memories — some good, some disappointing, but all worthwhile.

Hanes started working with SIUC bands when he became the graduate assistant to Don Canedy, the director of bands at that time.

"I planned to get my degree and go back and teach high school," Hanes said. "But Don left and I was retained on the faculty. I was just in the right place at the right time."

Hanes taught percussion and led the marching band for two years before Uncle Sam's greedy hands snatched him in the draft. Hanes remembered that the conflict had grown so intense that most deferments had been denied, and even though he was a professor and married, he was sent to boot camp.

"[My background] meant I'd be carrying drumsticks instead of rifles," Hanes said.

As a result of his specialty in music, Hanes was spared from fighting in Vietnam and was first assigned to the 5th Division band in Colorado Springs and then to the 3rd Division band in Germany. There he read about the unrest in Carbondale and wondered if there was going to be a campus at SIUC to come back to.

Most of SIUC was still standing when Hanes was released and he found his job waiting for him when he returned.

Hanes became the assistant director of bands and also became more involved in the musical theater at SIUC. But his true passion remained the marching band.

According to Hanes, the students were what made the band exciting.

"We had the philosophy of letting the students have leadership in the band," Hanes said. "We were rowdy in a spirited fashion. We tried to keep things fun without offending anyone."

The band grew popular not only with the students at games but also nationally.

"One year we had too many drummers, and we asked a freshman if he wouldn't mind holding a violin and pretend to play," Hanes said. "The AP picked it up. The reporter asked us, 'Do you really have a violin player in your band?'"

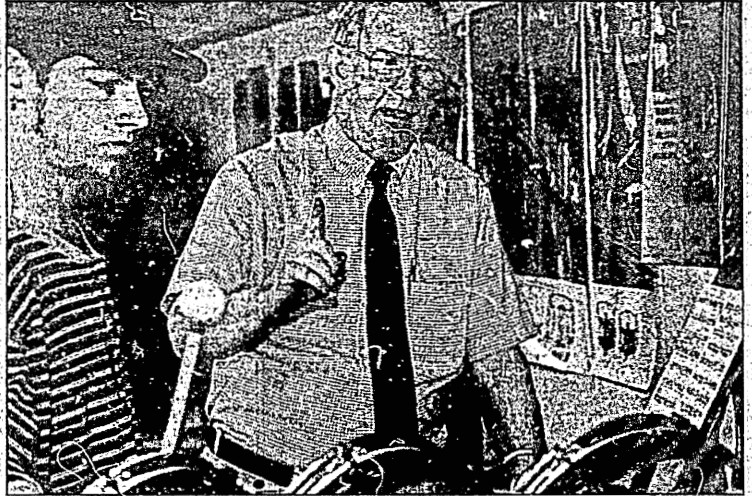

"He wrote a story saying that here's a band that will let anyone do anything to participate."

The fake violin player was not the only stunt the band pulled while Hanes was at the helm that garnered attention.

"We tried to parachute a guy onto the football field once," Hanes said. "He was a fairly crazy individual named Gordon."

"He timed it to land while we were in a big circle during the half-time show. He said he'd be able to judge the wind direction from the smoke coming out of the smoke stack. That was the night the lights went out in the stadium."

According to Hanes, the band had seen the airplane circling above the stadium before the lights went out but assumed Gordon wouldn't jump because it took 50 minutes to get the lights working again and only a few of them worked.

Despite the power outage, Gordon decided to jump but was unable to judge the wind direction because the remaining stadium lights were not strong enough to illuminate the nearby smoke stack.

"According to the legend, there were some kids watching the game from Neely Hall," Hanes said. "And here goes this guy in a red tuxedo and a trumpet floating past them."

Hanes said Gordon landed safely in the Neely Hall parking lot, but the administration was not thrilled because they did not know about the prank.

"Our band was a little different than most," Hanes said. "Our best ideas have always come from band members."

Hanes always has been active in the music life at SIUC, which explains why there were rumors that he was planning on retiring when he stepped down as the director of the marching band. But according to Hanes, nothing could be further from the truth.

"I keep saying five to eight more years before I retire," Hanes said. "My style has always been to do more things than you have time to do. I like being involved in what I do."

Hanes said that he resigned as the director of the marching band in 1997 because after 30 years he had run out of new ideas and the band needed a young fresh voice.

"I don't feel old — but that's a young man's job," Hanes said.

Hanes sees the SIUC Music School as an important part of the students' lives as well as the community it serves.

"The music education program is becoming very important," Hanes said. "We're able to stay up with what the teaching market needs. SIUC is serving the community more and more."

Hanes said he still has goals he hasn't yet completed at SIUC.

"SIUC has been great to me and allowed me to do everything, and there are things I still want to do," Hanes said. "I'm so fortunate because I'm still having a ball."

 On Easter Sunday, friends were forced into mourning as they gathered at the Student Center Ballroom D for a special holiday service with Calvary Campus Church, where Carol Synnott would have been for the holiday.

 Leurguin, a member of the church who spent time with Carol Synnott Friday, said she cherished Synnott's consistently happy presence.
 "That's how people remembered her cause she'd smile so

 A memorial service in Carol Synnott's name will take place at 5 p.m. Monday at Calvary Campus Church, 501 W. Main St. She will be buried in Naperville.

from three wooden crosses — which still remain today — erected by Lively and his Sunday school class in 1945.
 In 1952, the foundation took what funds it had and a 730-ton, 20-foot deep concrete base was poured where the cross would be erected.
 As the foundation continued to work to raise money, the effort captured national attention. Presley, along with several members of the board, appeared on the television program "This Is Your Life" in 1955. Viewers of the program donated more than $100,000 to the project.
 That money, along with money from the "Pig Program," put the foundation in a place to begin construction. The sale of the hogs raised $30,000 for the Bald Knob Cross project.

The Bald Knob Cross of Peace was completed in 1963. The 200-ton structure stands 111 feet tall and 63 feet wide.
 The rain forced the service inside the small visitors center. About 40 people crowded inside the building, while others huddled outside the building or in a nearby pavilion to listen to a sermon by the Rev. Larry N. Johnson of Farmington, Mo.
 Other people, like Williams and Smith, stayed atop the peak to watch the sunrise.
 "I was depressed they moved [the service] from the hillside," Smith said. "They are missing it."
 For Barbara Boots of Danville, her first visit to the Bald Knob service this year was a journey of her own — to her childhood.
 More than 50 years ago, as a child in Santa Clara, Calif., her parents would take her to a Easter Sunrise Service in Morgan Hill, Calif. Atop the summit there was a large wooden cross, similar to the one at Bald Knob.

 "I wasn't as big as this cross, but when I was little it was giant to me," she said.
 Boots said she and her daughter, who lives in Indianapolis, attend sunrise service in Danville every year. This year, Boots said, her daughter found out about the Bald Knob service on the Internet.
 "This is the first time I have ever been here," Boots said. "But we will probably come back."
 Williams and Smith remained on the hill until almost 7:30 a.m. watching for the sun to peek through the clouds.
 "Take a look at that," Williams exclaimed as the sun finally found its way through. "It is spectacular."
 "Up here we are so close to God and nature. You can see forever up here."
 "When the sun rises, it's like a ball of fire," Williams said pointing through the trees across the horizon.
 "It's just outrageous."

Students will be able to lead the project with some assistance from the faculty member of their choice.
 The application has six questions asked of students including project goals and objectives, statement of motivations and justification, methods and material, evaluation and dissemination, budget and the role of faculty adviser.

 Argersinger said she has seen the same program at other universities that have been extremely successful and hopes SIUC can reflect that as well.
 "I would hope to have half of the students involved, but it would take a lot of years," she said.
 Argersinger said she hopes the program will lead to a undergraduate journal of research and creativity.

 Besides giving students excellent hands-on experience, the award and project can be used as a recruitment tool.
 "It's an exciting recruitment tool," Argersinger said.
 "Parents will know their students will be able to part of a program with one-on-one, student-faculty relationships."

groups the opportunity to share and educate social and political views of Asian-Americans, Lin said.
 "We want to increase dialogue among Asian-Americans and other ethnic groups about the strengths and accomplishments of Asian-Americans," she said. "We also need to dispel stereotypes and expose discriminating patterns against Asian-Americans."
 According to Lin, many people stereotype Asians as an extremely intelligent group of people, when in fact the truth is verbally suppressed.

 "It is called the model minority myth," Lin said. "There is a wide variety of groups — 25 countries and 60 ethnic groups — considered Asian-American."
 "There are Asian ethics to study hard and work long hours, but there are a lot of Asians who are below the poverty line that's not discussed."
 Suli Wang, a graduate student in computer science from China, said Asian-American Awareness Month was necessary to promote interaction between Asian cultures and other ethnic groups.

 "People need to know more about Asian people and our culture so we can get to know each other more," Wang said. "It is especially important to have this month for those Americans who are interested in Asian people."
 Lin also expressed the importance of Americans learning about diverse groups within their own country.
 "We are all Americans," she said. "The rest of America needs to be more aware of Asian-Americans as Americans — that we all share a history of immigration."

surprising." Ruta, who was elected SIUC student trustee in May 1998, came to SIUC after his parents refused to let him join the military. "I came down to SIU with my sister first," he said. "I had a great time, everybody was really cool here, so I just decided to give school here a shot." The son of first-generation immigrants from Lithuania, Ruta said his father and grandparents moved to Chicago after fleeing from the Russians more than 30 years ago during World War II. He said his grandparents spent time in a displaced persons camp — a refuge for people separated from their families by the war — in Germany and fled to America when Ruta's father was only 3 years old. Ruta's father later became an engineer, and his mother became a real-estate agent. Ruta said he grew up surrounded by cars and engines. After high school, he wanted to join the U.S. Marine Corps. His parents torched that idea, and Mike came to school to study automotive technology. Ruta said being SIUC's student trustee is a great learning experience.

"I'm kind of sad to see my term ending, I'll miss it," Ruta said. "Everyone has been really great to me on the board. They're always willing to listen and make sure that I understand everything that's going on." Ruta said he likes to see that University administrators and state lawmakers are willing to let the students' voices be heard. One piece of legislation Ruta supported was House Bill 2364, known as the Winkle Bill. Named for Champaign lawmaker Rick Winkle, House Bill 2364 will allow students a binding vote in policy changes. Ruta explained the bill had met with some controversy and is as yet unresolved. Ruta said he hopes people will continue to come out and check out the Mud Dawgs. "Everywhere I go, people want in," Ruta said.

Carbondale Park District. "He has a very strong family orientation," Dillard said. "He also got a lot of his service orientation from his parents." Family concerns nearly kept Neill out of the council race this time around. His sister, Diane Dorsey, died earlier this year, and Neill was not sure about whether he wanted to run. "She was also my campaign manager, and I just wasn't sure how much enthusiasm I was going to have," Neill said. Another factor that nearly kept Neill out of the council race was the fact he was thinking about being on the Carbondale Community High School board. "I was pretty interested in the high school board," he said. "But I had so many citizens ask me to stay on and run [for City Council]." Neill said that since he made the decision to run again, he has been fully committed to his camaign. Because, at times, he does not speak a lot at council meetings, Neill is sometimes perceived as a quiet member of the council. However, Neill thinks of himself as quiet but active, working behind the scenes as much as anyone on the council by talking and listening to Carbondale citizens. "I don't feel that it's my role to get up and make long speeches at council meetings," Neill said. "I see myself more as somebody who should listen to the constituents rather than someone who should tell them what we're going to do." At city council meetings, Neill is admittedly often pro-business, largely because of his business background. However, he thinks a major key to business success for Carbondale is the success of the University. Neill pointed out that although a lot of people talk about bringing new businesses to town, Carbondale already has a successful business in the University. "An expansion of SIU and their customers, which are the students, would have a huge economic impact on Carbondale," Neill said. One of the most important issues facing the University and the city is the retention of students at SIUC, according to Neill. He especially emphasized student satisfaction as a key to economic success in Carbondale. "Your best salespeople are always satisfied customers," Neill said. "If you've got 20,000 satisfied customers that go off and tell other people that they're very pleased with their experience with Carbondale and SIU, that's going to get you more business."

meeting with groups in the JALC district to lobby for the increase. "The wording on the ballot could affect the support [for the referendum]," Poshard said. "It failed last time [in 1995] because some people didn't understand it." He said state law requires that bond referendums be worded in such a way. JALC officials said high increases in enrollment coupled with new programs and the need for new personnel have made the funding necessary. If the referendum does pass, Poshard said, it will generate about $850,000 in new revenue, which would pay for faculty, staff and equipment for the new facilities. If the referendum does not pass, Poshard said, the college will likely have to cut back some programs in continuing and adult education. There could also be some elimination of free programs offered to senior citizens, Poshard

"I don't want people to make their decisions based on inaccurate information or a lack of information."

— GLENN POSHARD
JOHN A. LOGAN COLLEGE TEACHER
Herb Russell, JALC director for College Relations, said the campaign to garner support for the referendum has been especially successful to this point.

"Our feeling is very positive," Russell said. "Many people have had questions, but the opposition has been minimal to zero. "I don't know of any organized opposition." Poshard said he hopes that the voters will support the referendum on Election Day and believes the campaign by JALC ensures that no one will make an uninformed decision. "I don't want people to make their decision based on inaccurate information or a lack of information," Poshard said.

Big Mac's agent comes to Lesar Law Building

ROSS ALLIN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A real-life "Jerry McGuire" will speak tonight at the SIUC School of Law about what it's like to show Mark McGwire the money.

Robert H. Lattinville will give a sports law presentation tonight at 7 in the Lesar Law Building auditorium.

MONEY TALK

• Sports Agent Robert Lattinville will speak tonight at 7 in the Lesar Law Auditorium.

McGuire has become arguably the most marketable name in sports since setting baseball's single-season home run record last September.

The presentation will deal mainly with Lattinville describing, in detail, a day in the life of a sports agent.

"I want to run across the gamut of everything you need to deal with in sports law," Lattinville said. "I'm sure lots of law students will be there asking, 'How do I get your job?'"

"Instead of boring them with legal terms, I want to explain how everything relates directly to being a sports agent."

The presentation is sponsored by the SIUC Sports Law Society. According to Lattinville, potential athletes as well as potential sports attorneys will benefit from his experience speaking.

"I think athletes should know what the rights and responsibilities of an agent are, and what an athlete should expect from his agent," Lattinville said.

Of course, Lattinville expects plenty of discussion about his biggest client with the red goatee.

Lattinville first became acquainted with McGwire in 1997, shortly after Big Mac arrived in St. Louis from Oakland. Lattinville's firm represented Rawlings Sporting Goods, with whom McGwire had a contract.

"I was on the opposite side of a transaction, and like anything else, one thing led to another," he said.

Representing a "monster" name like McGwire is the apex for a sports agent, but it means the agent, like a record-setting slugger, will be held to a higher standard.

"If you're in this area of practice, it's a dream come true," Lattinville said. "But everything must be protected because everyone's watching. You have to be on the cutting edge of the law."

Lattinville said being on the "cutting edge" not only means making sure McGwire's current deals are being executed but also that no unauthorized parties are sharing the slice of the pie.

"You've not only got to take care of what's in place, you've got to make sure what's in place is protected," he said. "There's an incredible amount of people who aren't licensed to Mark McGwire trying to make money off of Mark McGwire."

Keeping his client's legal interests safe consumes the jobs of several attorneys in different parts of the country. For Lattinville alone, McGwire's licensing matters consume about one-third of his day.

At SIUC, Lattinville hopes to explain the legal aspects of those interested in entering the sports business world.

"If you understand the law, you see where the balance lies everyday in the sports page," Lattinville said. "If I can get (the audience) to better understand the sports page, I'll be happy."

Harrick goes south to Georgia

KNIGHT-RIDER NEWSPAPERS

PROVIDENCE — Rhode Island lost more than a university basketball coach on Wednesday with Jim Harrick's departure for Georgia.

It lost a key player in its game plan to take its basketball program into the big time — and bring URI national prominence along the way.

But the school said it expected its replacement for Harrick — who arrived at URI in 1997 a celebrity (although tarnished) with national championship credentials — would be of equal caliber, and its program would continue to see success.

"We obviously want to hire a coach that is going to enhance the basketball program," said Robert Beagle, URI's vice president for university advancement and fundraising.

"We also want a coach who's going to be good with us in working with the various external constituencies... (who's) effective in helping the university market itself, as well as market the basketball and athletic programs."

Harrick accepted a four-year contract at the University of Georgia worth $650,000 a year — double his total URI compensation.

State and school officials expressed disappointment with his departure, but noted in his three seasons, Harrick had succeeded in his charge: to bring the basketball program national distinction.

School officials on Wednesday said they were not worried that Harrick's departure, and Odum's possible move to the pros, would hurt the university's fund-raising effort to build a $43.6-million convocation center, to be used for various campus events, including Rams' games.

because of some base-running mishaps, but they finally broke through in the bottom of the fifth on junior second baseman Steve Ruggeri's two-run homer, his second on the day.

"That's not my game, but it's nice to hit one out," said the lead-off man Ruggeri. "I won't try for (home runs), but I'll take them."

Unfortunately, the torrid SMSU hitting returned in the sixth. Bears third baseman Mike Collier ripped a three-run double to give the Bears a 3-2 lead.

Two batters later, with two outs, center fielder Micah Host lifted a high fly ball to left. Junior left fielder Scott Boyd and shortstop Nelson gave chase, but neither could come up with it.

The play opened the floodgates, as SMSU proceeded to put four more runs on the board in the inning.

When it was all over, the Bears had two more home runs, running their weekend total to eight, and an 11-2 victory.

Callahan said the most important thing is not to let the players get down on themselves.

"What I don't want to do is turn on these guys," he said. "We normally don't talk much after games, and what I'll say on Tuesday is something I've got to think about. I just know we don't need to start pointing fingers."

Ruggeri wishes his round-trippers would've meant more, but he wants to make sure everyone is ready this Wednesday against Southeast Missouri State University.

"We just need to keep our heads up," he said. "Our whole season doesn't hinge on one weekend. Hopefully, we'll come back Wednesday and get back on the winning track."

Total domination on Drake

Second baseman provides power as softball team sweeps Bulldogs to open Missouri Valley play

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC softball junior second baseman Lori Greiner went hunting on Easter Sunday not for colorful eggs but for home runs.

Greiner crushed two home runs over the center field fence in the first game of a doubleheader against Missouri Valley Conference foe Drake University Sunday at IAW Fields.

The Salukis (23-13, 2-0) opened MVC play with 7-0 and 4-1 victories over the Bulldogs (9-14, 0-4).

Bulldogs	0	1
Salukis	7	4

Greiner started the day with a three-run shot in the first inning followed by a two-run smash in the third to finish the day with five RBIs.

Greiner had to stretch for pitches that were outside on the plate on both of her shots, but she didn't seem to mind.

"I normally don't like outside pitches, but I don't know what it was today," Greiner said. "It was the only thing she would give me."

The Morton native tied a Saluki record for home runs in a game with her two shots.

"Did I set the record for strikeouts, too?" joked Greiner after fanning twice in the second game.

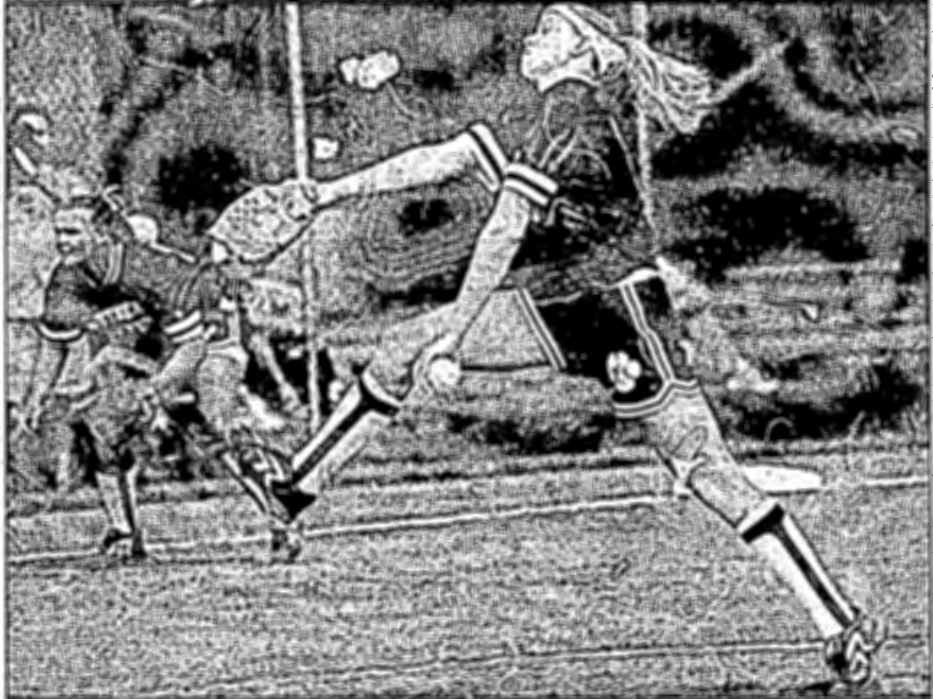

Greiner, who now has four home runs on the season, provided all the offense sophomore pitcher Erin Stremsterfer (11-5) needed.

Stremsterfer pitched her fourth straight shutout in the first game, yielding only three hits and walking just one.

Sophomore center fielder Marta Viefhaus also homered in game one, her seventh on the year.

In the second game, Stremsterfer provided the offense for fellow Saluki pitcher junior Carisa Winters (9-8) with a three-run homer of her own, her third on the year.

Stremsterfer broke open a scoreless game with her shot in the sixth inning off the Bulldogs' senior pitcher Sarah Haak.

Allowing only one run and striking out nine, Saluki junior Carisa Winters helped lead her team to victory in Missouri Valley Conference play Sunday against Drake University at IAW Fields.

Haak had troubled the Salukis early in the game, allowing only one hit while striking out nine in the first five innings, but Stremsterfer quickly changed Haak's early domination.

"I kept telling them to 'stay mentally up, stay mentally up, we can do it,'" said Saluki head coach Kay Brechtelsbauer. "They just need to know they can do it, regardless of who's pitching."

Winters put out a dominating performance as well, giving up only one run while striking out nine.

"(We had) two outstanding pitching performances," Brechtelsbauer said. "Erin got us started, and Carisa came along and did a beautiful job as well."

Saluki softball note:

The Salukis were scheduled to play Creighton Saturday at IAW Fields but were rained out. As of press time, the game had not been rescheduled.

The Salukis play host to Southeast Missouri State University Wednesday at IAW Fields.

A forgettable three-game series

Southwest Missouri State pours home runs on Salukis on rainy weekend

ROE ALLIN
 DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

After playing the broom twice this season, the Saluki baseball team discovered the bitter feeling of being swept away.

Southwest Missouri State University spoiled SIUC's Easter weekend, taking three straight games at Abe Martin Field. The set was originally scheduled to include four games, but Saturday's doubleheader was rained out. The teams played a doubleheader Sunday but still lost a game in the schedule.

The losses dropped the Salukis (20-7) from their perch atop the Missouri Valley Conference. The SMSU Bears (17-7) now lead the conference with an 8-3 record to SIUC's 7-4 mark.

The weekend also made a memory of the Salukis' six-game winning streak.

"That was a rough weekend," Saluki head coach Dan Callahan said. "When you go from one end of the spectrum to the other, that's tough to take. We went from 7-1 in conference to 7-4 in a hurry."

SIUC second baseman Steve Ruggeri (27) sweeps past Southwest Missouri State University's first basemen to avoid being tagged out. SMSU defeated the Salukis in three straight games this weekend in Missouri Valley Conference play.

Last Saluki no-hitter thrower still lives the unforgettable memory

MIKE BJORKLUND
 DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Waking up in his own bed 20 years ago in Granite City, Paul Evans still has memories of Easter Sunday 1979.

While the rest of his teammates were preparing to make the trip to Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville, Evans was able to wake up in the comforts of his home.

That same day, while children used the afternoon painting hard-boiled eggs and eating multiple types of candy, Evans' holiday was served with another type of egg — goose.

On April 15, Evans and the Saluki baseball team completed a no-hitter against sister-school SIUE, the last one to date.

Throwing only 57 pitches in the 4-0 victory, Evans won the complete seven innings, striking out one and walking one.

"It was ironic that we were playing our sister school, and we happened to be at Edwardsville," Evans said. "I had a lot of my family there, my girlfriend and family, all types of family. Coach (Icky) Jones had allowed me to go home. So I was at home, sleeping in my bed. But it wasn't any overpowering performance."

Graduating from SIUC in 1981, Evans went 18-7 with the Salukis for his career. In Evans' sophomore year (1979), his 0.84 ERA was good enough for third in Division I competition.

A couple years after leaving the cozy comforts of Carbondale, Evans found himself coaching at Shawnee Junior College, thanks largely in part because of his former coach.

The next step for Evans was Rend Lake College, where he led the team to a 201-95 mark in three years as coach. In 1986, Rend Lake missed the Junior College World Series by only one game.

But it wouldn't be long before Evans found himself in familiar territory.

Joining Southwest Missouri State University in 1989 as an assistant coach, it did not take long for the Missouri Valley Conference to notice Evans — again. In 1990, the Bears' pitching staff set a school record ERA of 2.91, which placed SMS sixth overall in the country.

Evans also has earned the position of being in charge of recruiting at SMS for the baseball team in his 10-year tenure.

Although he now resides in Springfield, Mo., there always will be a place in Evans' heart for SIUC.

"I always enjoy coming back to Southern Illinois," Evans said. "Going to school here for four years was the most memorable time of my life. It's always fun to come back, and I'll always be a Saluki."

As for another Saluki no-hitter, not even Evans can predict that one.

"You never know — it was a situation where I was throwing the ball good that year and it happened," Evans said. "Whether it happens again, it's just a matter of circumstances. It wasn't anything remarkable, but I still remember it."

From there, the game belonged to SMSU closer Shayne Ferrier, who fanned Jeff Stanek and pinch-hitter Luke Nelson to end the game.

Following Saturday's washout, senior Adam Biggs took the hill in Sunday's opener, only to be greeted by a different kind of storm. Four Bear hitters rained home runs over the Abe Martin Field fence before Biggs was removed in the third inning.

"I know they swing the bats better than any team we've seen," Callahan said. "Sometimes you've gotta tip your hat and say, 'Wow, what a good-hitting team.'"

The 6-0 deficit brought on by the power surge was too much to overcome, despite solid performances by relievers freshman Luke Nelson and junior Donnie Chester, who made his 1999 debut. The Salukis fell 7-3 in a seven-inning contest shortened for time reasons.

The series finale looked as if the Salukis might stop their losing streak, as senior Dave Piazza sailed through five shutout innings. The Salukis were slow getting on the board
