Students look forward to campus life

Parents say goodbyes to freshman class

By Kellie Huttes
Campus Life Reporter

Surrounded by piles of boxes and loads of clothes, parents hugged their sons and daughters goodbye as they took their first steps out into the real world this past week.

Official dorm life began at 7:30 a.m. last Wednesday for new residents and by Thursday parents and students expressed their party-school fears and anticipations for the coming year.

It was a bittersweet farewell for Dick and Cheryl Leonardson of Rockford as they saw their son Paul off at Neely Hall in Brush Towers last week. Both Leonardsons expressed concern about the reputation of SIUC.

"Paul was a late-in-life baby and we've had him all to ourselves for a long time," Mrs. Leonardson said.

"The peer pressure of drinking scares us a lot, although Paul is independent, we feel like we've lost all parental control already."

Peter Pulcini, a father of an SIUC student from Chicago, was not worried about the image of the school or the happenings of his daughter, Liz.

"I think this party-school stuff is a bunch of b.s.," he said.

"I've preached safety (to Liz) and I'm willing to take my chances that my job as a parent has paid off up until now."

Pulcini said SIUC is academically acclaimed and people should recognize that rather than the wild side.

Tunie Brannan, mother of a sophomore from Eldred, said she and her husband were a little apprehensive about SIUC's image, but think their daughter can handle herself.

"She was a party girl at home and I don't think she'll learn anything here (party wise) she didn't already know at home," she said. "We have this motto, 'If it's not life threatening, you'll get over it.'"

"When you're young you need to get out and enjoy spending time on the strip and staying up late," Brannan said.

"It helps you settle down when you're older." Sgt. Steve Ellis, second shift supervisor of the SIUC police, said although the University has a partying image, it is not all concentrated here.

He said even though most drinking occurs off campus, SIUC police assist Carbondale police and enforce any and all laws.

Ellis advises students not to drink if they are underage because they face a $250 ticket and potential write-up to judicial affairs. Students can receive University punishment if deemed necessary.

He also said one mistake students make is to walk around with open alcohol containers.

There are about 40 SIUC police that patrol campus and its surrounding areas.

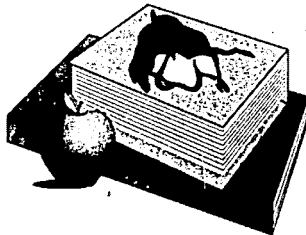

Carrie Day, a freshman from Oswego, said any campus is going to have its share of parties and she has no fear of the SIUC reputation.

"I was down here a lot last year and am really looking forward to Halloween," she said.

Melissa Zipfel, a freshman from Red Bud, said although everybody parties, Carbondale should not be blamed for students' doings.

"It's not the city's or the school's responsibility of the student's social actions," she said.

Funeral services for seven of the eight children killed in the fire at 424 E. Oak St. were held Friday at Greater Gillespie Temple Church.

By Erick J.B. Enriquez and Connie Fritsche
Senior Reporter/Staff Reporter

As the city of Carbondale recovers from the tragic fire that claimed the lives of eight children, Jackson County State's Attorney Mike Wepsiec must today decide whether someone should be held accountable for the deaths.

The decision to press charges will be made by Wepsiec at the Carbondale City Hall at 11:00 a.m. today.

Police and firefighters dispatched to 424 E. Oak St. Aug. 14 found the burned bodies of eight children.

Carlton Simon, 5 mo., Carlita Simon, 16 mo., Clifton Simon Jr., 3, Joseph McDaniel, 3, Sherice McDaniel, 4, Elisha Fonder, 3, Antwene Sanders, 5, and Lafesa Gates, 7, died in the blaze.

Camilla Foulks, 25, mother of three of the children and resident of the home, was believed to be gone for two hours prior to the fire being reported.

Wepsiec said a few items must be considered before any action is taken.

"First, has a crime been committed?" he said. "Second, if a criminal law has been violated, the thoughtful prosecutor must ask, 'Who has violated that law?'"

"Once that question is answered, I must ask myself, 'Can I prove in court beyond a reasonable doubt with

Board approves thought of athletic fee increase

By Marc Chase
Senior Reporter

The SIUC Board of Trustees approved the idea of a future athletic fee increase on the long-range planning agenda for SIUC at their last meeting of the summer session.

The Board passed the 1994-1995 SIUC Productivity Report, which contained the proposed athletic fee increase that was created by SIUC President John C. Gayon, at their meeting July 14.

Unlike the original $40 athletic fee increase that Gayon proposed, which students voted against in a referendum last spring, the new proposal would increase the campus-wide athletic fee by $30 over a two-year period.

According to the productivity report, the proposal would increase the athletic fee from the current fee of $76 in the 1994-1995 fiscal year to $92 in the 1995-1996 fiscal year. By the 1996-1997 fiscal year, the athletic fee would be $106.

The University recommended the fee increase because of cutbacks in state funding of athletic programs.

Don Wilson, vice chancellor for financial affairs, said the enactment of the new increase has not been approved by the trustees, and it has not been determined when it will be subject to approval or disapproval.

"The Board has only approved President Guyon's proposal of the athletic fee increase on a long-term planning basis," Wilson said. "This means the increase is not official and must be voted on later by the Board of Trustees."

Ross Hodel, deputy director of the Illinois Board of Higher Education, said the board's position is that universities not raise student fees to make up for a lack of state funding for programs such as athletics.

"We (the board) asked the University to consider other alternatives to raising student fees," Hodel said. "Some of these BOSNIAN ARMY OUSTS MUSLIM REBELS—SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina—Thousands of refugees fled from northwestern Bosnia into Croatia Sunday as Bosnian army forces routed Muslim rebels from the Bihac pocket. The government conquest of all of the Bihac pocket was a significant victory for the Bosnian army's 5th Corps. The next question is how the 5th Corps will fare against the Serb forces from the Banja Luka region abutting the pocket.

CUBANS IGNORE NEW IMMIGRATION POLICY —MIAMI—A day after a stunning change in U.S. immigration policy intended to shut down the mounting exodus of Cubans heading for Florida on homemade boats, the flood of refugees continued unabated Saturday. Even as President Clinton was announcing a package of measures aimed at ratcheting up the pressure on Cuban President Fidel Castro—including banning all cash remittances to Cuba and placing new restrictions on flights—the U.S. Coast Guard was rescuing more than 860 Cubans in the Florida Straits.

AIRPORT SOURCE OF EMBARRASSMENT —OSAKA, Japan—Two weeks before the opening of a futuristic airport on an island in Osaka Bay, more than 10,000 residents of the surrounding area got a sneak preview of the facility Sunday. However, red-faced airport officials have announced that when the facility begins operations Sept. 4, the number of international flights will fall far below expectations, and "it will be extremely difficult" for the airport to meet its goal of getting into the black by its fifth year.

EXTORTION INCREASING IN POLAND CAPITAL—WARSAW—For more than a month, a gang of thugs, many with lengthy criminal records and alleged ties to organized crime, have terrorized restaurant and store owners in Old Town, the capital's historic center and the cobblestoned home to its most popular restaurants and galleries. The gangsters, contemptuous of police, have demanded money—in some cases thousands of dollars—and reacted violently when turned away.

HEALTH REFORM UNLIKELY THIS YEAR —WASHINGTON—As President Clinton and members of Congress search for some kind of consensus on health care reform, they find themselves stumped by a seemingly insoluble political equation: The potential areas of agreement range from slim to none. The probability of a major health care reform bill becoming law this year appears increasingly minuscule. And while many participants in the debate are willing to let the reform effort expire, it would be a bitter pill for Clinton, who has made health care reform the cornerstone of his domestic policy agenda.

SIGHTINGS OF EXTINCT COUGAR REPORTED—SWIFT RUN GAP, Va.— On the East Coast, cougars supposedly were exterminated a century ago by farmers and bounty hunters, except for a few in Florida. Reported sightings of the secretive cats never died, though—and recently have been surging. Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia wildlife officials don't dispute that some people have seen the sleek, tawny creatures that purr like a tabby, weigh 200 pounds or more full-grown and can kill prey several times their size.

SHIPYARD TO EXPORT SUBMARINES —WASHINGTON—While the Navy is sounding alarms about the threat posed by numerous nations' acquisition of modern submarines, a Mississippi shipyard is negotiating to sell two diesel-powered submarines to Egypt. If the sale goes through, the United States will join the growing ranks of industrialized nations marketing submarines—a form of weapons proliferation that could enable small nations to block key waterways or interfere with surface operations.

JUSTICES DISCUSS COURT FRATERNITY —WASHINGTON— Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor told a California conference last week about some of the justices' more whimsical actions. In an equally candid talk, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg told a judicial conference in Denver that the barbs Justice Antonin Scalia and David H. Souter exchange in opinions belie their friendly fraternity. The two recent speeches by the court's only female justices offered a detailed and intimate picture of the Supreme Court, a place where secrecy is usually the watchword.

Fair play: Students find campus job opportunities it will save time.

"It's easier as far as transportation and studying," he said.

About 300 students were hired on the spot at the fair, said Donna Williams, Financial Aid Office accountant.

Almost all on-campus employers have some Federal Work Study funding, she said.

"The Federal Work Study program pays 70 percent of the wages of eligible students," she said. "It's based on financial need and is a part of their financial aid package."

Bill McMinn, director of Intramural-Recreational Sports, said his program employs nearly 300 students to fill variety of positions.

"Our area also includes the Campus Lake, the boat dock, Pulliam gym and Pulliam pool and 20 tennis courts," he said.

McMinn said he did not hire any students at the fair because many intramural sports positions involve training and testing, such as jobs for lifeguards and rock-climbing instructors, but he will review applications and arrange interviews.

Craig Newman, a junior in administration of justice from Morris, and Bill Olney, a sophomore in administration of justice, talk to student officer Sergeant Vincent, a senior in zoology from Kewanee. Newman and Olney participated in the SIU job fair Friday at the Student Center. Several hundred positions were filled on the spot out of an estimated 2,500 students who showed up. Many services were there to help students, such as financial aid and international programs and services.

Despite a few similarities, student worker positions on SIUC's campus vary in many ways as the University employs more than 6,200 students on campus in jobs ranging from administrative office work to rock-climbing instruction.

Twenty-seven potential campus employers participated Friday in the 4th Annual Job Fair at the Student Center, attended by an estimated 2,500 students.

Michael Dolan, a junior in engineering from Peoria, said he wants to work on campus because it is a way to familiarize himself with the University.

"I have classes here already and I thought it would be fun to work here, too," he said. "It's my first year here and it's a way to meet more people. I'm going to look around (at the job fair) and see what's available."

William Phillips, a junior in journalism from Peoria, applied for jobs at the Student Recreation Center, the Daily Egyptian and Morris Library, all of which had tables at the fair.

He said having an on-campus job will be convenient for him because

Legislator calls for formal review; chancellor position under scrutiny

By Marc Chase
Senior Reporter

An Illinois lawmaker has requested SIUC's Board of Trustees study whether the position of chancellor is needed at the University.

Illinois Rep. Gerald Hawkins, D-DuQuoin, asked the board Aug. 16 to review the need for the position now that the current chancellor is retiring.

SIU Chancellor James Brown announced his plans to retire and to begin a search for his successor on July 14.

The duties of chancellor include consulting administrators at both SIUC and SIUE on decisions of the Board of Trustees and making sure the interests of the board are upheld at the two campuses.

Hawkins announced to the Daily Egyptian on July 26 his plans to review the office, and he sent a letter to A.D. VanMeter, chairman for the board of trustees, on August 19 requesting a formal review.

VanMeter was unavailable for comment regarding the letter he received from Hawkins.

Hawkins is a member of the subcommittee of governance in the state legislature which is reviewing university administrative positions statewide.

Hawkins said the position, created in 1979, should now be reviewed by the legislature and the University to determine the benefits of retaining the office.

"At the time the position of chancellor was created, the Board had the foresight to schedule a review five years later," Hawkins said. "Since it has been nearly 10 years since that review and the current chancellor has announced his plans to leave, this is a good opportunity for another review."

Hawkins said his call for a review of the chancellor position is not an indication that Brown has done a poor job.

"My call for this review is not a reflection on him (Brown)," Hawkins said. "However, we must be ever mindful of looking at ways for our tax-payer supported institutions to become more efficient in carrying out their mission."

The cost-effectiveness of the chancellor's office has also been subject to scrutiny by past administrators at SIUC.

Albert Somit, former SIUC president and currently a professor emeritus, said retaining the chancellor position at the University is an example of the wastefulness of higher education in the state of Illinois.

"It is no secret that both the system (of higher education) and the chancellor positions at SIU, as well as other state universities, involve massive and unnecessary expenditures," Somit said.

According to the SIU Systems Offices Personnel listing, the office of the chancellor in fiscal year 1993-1994 had a total budget of $825,052.

According to the Illinois Board of Higher Education operations and grants requests for fiscal year 1995, the board recommended the SIU chancellor's office receive about $1.8 million from the state legislature.

Somit said he is in favor of eliminating the Defendant in stalking case requests full list of charges

By Benjamin Golshahr
Staff Reporter

A Bill of Particulars was requested Aug. 8 from the prosecution in Jackson County's first stalking case which involves two SIUC students.

Douglas A. Lambert, a former SIUC student, has been charged with one count of stalking, a Class IV felony, and one count of disorderly conduct, a Class C misdemeanor.

A female SIUC student filed the charges, which resulted in Lambert's arrest April 25.

If convicted, Lambert could face up to six years in prison. Robert J. McCormick, his attorney, moved to dismiss the charges June 24 "on the basis that the Illinois stalking statute is unconstitutional on its face."

McCormick said the statute violates constitutional rights of due process clauses in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments and freedom of speech provisions of the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

The Illinois statute — after a 1993 amendment — removed criminal intent as criteria for stalking.

said he would not rule on the motion to dismiss the charges until further research was done on the matter and he received more written argument on the case.

McCormick requested a Bill of Particulars from the prosecution Aug. 8.

This bill is like an itemized list of the specific charges filed against the defendant.

Exact times, places and the particular events surrounding the allegations would be made clear to the defense.

State's Attorney Mike Wepsiec has not yet procured the bill and the trial date is still pending. He could not be reached for comment.

The Illinois stalking statute is defined as: "A person commits stalking when he or she, knowingly and without lawful justification, on at least two separate occasions follows another person or places the person under surveillance or any combination thereof and:

1. at any time transmits a threat to that person of immediate or future bodily harm, sexual assault, confinement or restraint; or
2. places that person in reasonable apprehension of immediate or future bodily harm, sexual assault, confinement or restraint."

Newspaper mixes experience with enthusiasm

By Chad Anderson
Staff Reporter

A pair of SIUC seniors will lead the Daily Egyptian staff into the new fall semester.

Sanjay Seth and Sara Huls, named to the student-editor-in-chief and student advertising manager positions, will be responsible for the student workers in their respective departments.

Seth, who is beginning his seventh semester on staff, was selected through a rigorous application process to become student editor.

Seth was selected through the DE Policy and Review Board, which sets broader DE policy and makes recommendations for the student-editor-in-chief position.

"I'm honored, and I think the DE Policy and Review Board had confidence in my abilities to give me the position for the fall," Seth said.

Faculty managing editor Lloyd Goodman described Seth as a very goal-oriented person.

"He had a definite idea of what he wanted to accomplish," Goodman said.

Seth plans to improve the paper by getting back to and strengthening basics. Seth said he has the staff to accomplish that.

"We have an enthusiastic staff, and I'm excited to be working with them," Seth said.

He said one of the staff's strengths is a well-balanced mixture of experienced editors and new writers.

Goodman expressed a similar opinion.

"We have people from broad areas of interest," Goodman said. "One of the strengths is the good level of curiosity we have on staff, and that's the key to being a successful journalist."

Sara Huls, working in her fifth semester on the Daily Egyptian advertising staff, is the new student advertising manager.

Huls' duties include ensuring the advertising department runs smoothly and efficiently. She said she plans to make sure deadlines are met, and try to be available to answer as many questions as possible.

Sherri Bernaix, advertising director, said she believes Huls is the best choice for the position.

"Sara had a good grasp on the department, and we felt she could lead the department in a positive way," Bernaix said.

Bernaix said the advertising department is off to a good start this year with a lot of experienced people returning to the staff.

Huls said she hopes to get more businesses advertising in the Daily Egyptian.

The Daily Egyptian has a circulation of 27,000 and is distributed throughout the Southern Illinois area. It employs about 110 students throughout its departments. The paper is published Monday through Friday during the fall and spring semesters, and Tuesday through Friday during the summer semester.

Culture advantage explored at SIUC

SIUC STUDENTS ARE IN A UNIQUE POSITION when they arrive on campus because they are offered more than just a campus and a strip of local bars. Instead, the diversity of 3,000 international students and scholars from 110 countries and 8,000 non-traditional students plus the natural landscape of the area gives students a chance to embrace one another of different cultures and viewpoints on and off campus.

This college experience of meeting and learning from new people is a peek at the real world that students are preparing for. Being a part of the bigger picture known as a community is an advantage that students need to utilize.

Students belong to bigger community

BOTH RETURNING AND INCOMING STUDENTS feel the pressure of getting acquainted with new surroundings and classes as the fall semester gets rolling. Under these pressures it is all too easy to picture yourself as a single person in the sea of the masses. Individual problems and concerns take precedence as everyone tries to find a niche and establish a routine.

However, students should remember there is a broader scope to Carbondale. Providing this reminder, albeit in a tragic way, was the fatal fire which claimed the lives of eight children in Carbondale on August 14. As the fire raged inside the Carbondale home local emergency personnel and neighbors alike tried to save the children inside.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE SITUATION REMAINS AS the community mourns the loss of the children. But, the local efforts of firefighters and others stand as a testament of a community trying to work together in even the worst of situations. It is from these efforts that an example can be taken of people seeing themselves as part of a bigger picture.

AS STUDENTS GET COMFORTABLE WITH classes it is important to realize that they are not simply a part of SIUC, but rather part of this university and citizens of Carbondale as well. Being a citizen of Carbondale can be defined many ways, but simply being informed and involved with city issues is a solid beginning. Attending a city council meeting and registering to vote locally can do wonders for letting local representatives know that students are concerned with issues that affect them. The bar-entry age and local zoning changes are two prime examples. This kind of involvement will benefit not only the individual in terms of personal knowledge, but more importantly the community as a whole.

Viewpoint

Carbondale dreaming in California

I have found that certain questions are asked of me when people hear that I spent the summer interning for NBC News in Los Angeles.

Did you see O.J. Simpson? Yep, I squeezed the juice.

Is Beverly Hills like it is on TV? Yeah, and if you believe that, everyone lives in an apartment complex like Melrose Place.

Did you learn to surf? Totally, dude.

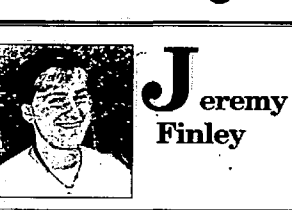

Then they usually wonder how in the world I have gone from Malibu beach back to Campus beach. It's about then that my best friend rolls his eyes and reminds me that if I talk about California one more time, he's going to send me back there without a return address.

But it is when those questions are asked that I think back to that day when I left Carbondale to go to the plane, and that sick feeling that I felt on that day - a feeling hundreds of freshmen are experiencing now. Because that day for me wasn't just the first day of my summer, it was also my first day away from home.

I guess we all go through similar experiences. Almost everyone has a first kiss, just not all at the age of 16, almost everyone learns to walk, but not all at the same age. And although I am sure that there are people who leave the area they were raised in late in life, I still find it strange that the summer before my senior year in college was the first time I was geographically far away from my friends and family.

My parents live in a town near Carbondale, and practically every member of my family are SIUC alumni, so going to college at Southern was always just something I wanted to do.

And since my first day of peppy SLA tells you one more time how great SIUC is, you might just have to kill that person.

It is important to remember that what you are doing, what I did at the beginning of the summer, may be one of the most important things you learn at college.

It is easy to be safe and not venture out of our own circle, and it's not easy living in a new place without a familiar sight around you, but the old phrase, "What doesn't kill you makes you stronger," has never been more right.

Believe me, if a good old southern boy like me can drive down Sunset Strip and strike a conversation with a cross-dressing fruit salesperson, then you can surely live with that certain roommate, even if he or she doesn't seem to understand the importance of personal hygiene.

A section from Michael Crichton's novel "Sphere" also seems to make sense in new situations.

"Do you want to understand how to swim, or do you want to jump in and start swimming? Only people who are afraid of the water want to understand it. Other people jump in and get wet."

Ok, Norman thought, let's get wet."

If you give Southern a chance, and it will probably take a few chances, then I can only hope it will come to mean as much to you as it does to me. And that final question? Did I like Los Angeles better than Carbondale?

I would take a glass of milk at the Corner Diner over an O.J. most anytime.

alternatives are decreasing travel and other measures."

Susan Hall, former Graduate and Professional Student Council president, said the newly proposed athletic fee increase never was submitted to student government for approval.

Hall, who was on the council when students voted down the $40 increase, said in the past, student fee increases were submitted to the council and Undergraduate Student Government for recommendation.

"Every other proposed fee has gone through a process where student government voted on it and sent the results as a recommendation to the administration," Hall said.

"No process of this sort has been undertaken."

Guyon could not be reached for comment concerning his proposed increase.

The productivity report, which contains the proposed athletic fee increase, is an annual document which is submitted to the Illinois Board of Higher Education to make the University accountable for its financial transactions.

the evidence before me that a certain individual committed the specifically identifiable crime?"

"Last, and sometimes most important, the prosecutor has to ask, 'Should I prosecute this person under these circumstances?'"

On Wednesday, Wepsiec would not say specifically which charges would apply, except that he was looking at parts of the Illinois State Criminal Code that deal with child endangerment, reckless conduct, and possibly involuntary manslaughter.

The case would not fall under the new child abandonment law passed last September. This new law specifies that a child must be under 13 and be left alone for at least 24 hours without supervision by someone older than 15 years.

Wepsiec did not rule out the possibility of charges being brought against the parents of the other children, although he said it was not a probability. These charges could include child endangerment.

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said though he does not want to presume Wepsiec's final decision whether or not to prosecute, he believes someone has to be held accountable for the incident.

At the funeral Friday, Carol Winters, a relative from Kentucky, said the family is doing okay.

"We feel that the Lord does things for a reason," Winters said. "Maybe His reason for all this is for everybody in the world to take care of their kids, watch out for them and try to be the best mother or father you can be."

Delmar Algee, director of Algee's Funeral home said Foulks was still trying to deal with the situation.

"The emotion of the events have created a situation where the punishment for her was what happened," Algee said. "She lost three children too and as a result of that, the punishment is tremendous for her."

In order to cope with the situation, the family must come together and put their faith in the Lord, Winters said.

"The question will always be in the back of your mind, 'Why did this happen?'" Winters said. "But only God can answer that maybe further on down the line."

According to Algee, the funeral home allowed Foulks a private viewing of the children as a result of some threats called in their legitimacy is still being questioned.

"None of the family members that we've talked to on either side have any animosity so we're just being protective," Algee said. "We had a private viewing with her and a couple of her family members and all of the children and she was very emotional."

Algee said the children are a part of the community and it mourns their loss.

"The kids played together and that's why we're having the funeral for all of them together," he said.

The tragedy was the worst situation in his 25 years of funeral service he has ever been involved in, Algee said.

L.P. Phillips, an ABC television reporter for KTVI 2 in St. Louis, said the magnitude of the incident has garnered much attention in Missouri.

"We shot the live shot for Good Morning America," Phillips said. "They interviewed the police chief and the fire chief, so it's getting enough national attention."

While the nation waits to see what happens, Wepsiec said the decision to prosecute is not to be taken lightly.

"It is one which should not be made overnight especially in a case of this magnitude," Wepsiec said.

"My job, in part, is to seek and further justice. To decide whether or not to prosecute this case at this time does not further justice."

Wepsiec said he has received more than 100 pages of reports and has been orally briefed of future reports.

"Both departments and the office of the State Fire Marshall are to be highly commended for the Herculean effort undertaken by them in ascertaining the facts involved in this incident," Wepsiec said. "I applauded them for their work."

He said an instant decision to press charges would be a disservice to the hundreds of hours of investigation by the police and fire departments.

Instantaneous charges would be an injustice to potential defendants and would be an injustice to the eight victims of the fatal fire, Wepsiec said.

"While I understand and appreciate the media's and the public's desire to see something happen in this matter now, I hope that the media and the public understand and appreciate that true justice does not occur in sixty minutes, less commercial time, or in a twenty-second soundbite," Wepsiec said. "The pursuit and furtherance of justice is a process that demands reflection and many facts and the application of wisdom and common sense."

As a result, Wepsiec said, he needs additional time to consider the facts of the matter and reflect upon the questions that a professional prosecutor must address.

"Even if the decision whether or not to prosecute was crystal clear, to make that decision at this time would be inappropriate," Wepsiec said. "This community has lost their children. Their loss is our loss; their grief is our grief...I express my most sincere condolences to the families and friends of the eight children who died and offer my prayers that they may find peace at this time of distress."

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said the police and fire department has devoted about 500 hours of investigative time to the case.

"We had some pretty clear leads to work on and were able to locate the witnesses pretty rapidly so we feel we accomplished quite a bit in a short period of time," Strom said.

Strom said the incident would never have occurred if the children were not left unsupervised.

"You always talk about the lessons you learn from something like this and one of the messages we're trying to send as a police agency is there is a responsibility that people have to their community to work with the police to try and address crime problems," Strom said. "We talked about a shared responsibility. I think the same thing applies here."

"You can look to the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services and other agencies and say 'Why don't they do more?' But I think we have to ask ourselves 'What as a community can we do and how can we share in that responsibility?' Too frequently when we call groups like DCFS in, it's too late. We have to watch for the warning signs as a community, as a resident of our community when we see those, report those, shoulder those responsibilities."

Carbondale Fire Chief Cliff Mans said officials believe that although smoke detectors were present and in working order, the children may not have realized what was happening. Official said the smoldering fire had time to build up carbon monoxide and other gases that desensitize the nervous system.

Supporters protest director's removal

The Washington Post

BALTIMORE—Benjamin F. Chavis Jr., besieged by allegations of personal misconduct and financial mismanagement, apparently was ousted Saturday night from his post as executive director of the NAACP.

Rodney A. Orange, president of the Baltimore NAACP chapter, told reporters outside the organization's national headquarters here, that the decision to fire Chavis was made by the NAACP's board which met all afternoon and into the evening.

There was no immediate official confirmation of this by officials of the national organization. But several young Chavis supporters also said they had been told of his ouster and that they were "outraged."

Orange said that sentiment against Chavis on the board was so "overwhelming" that there was no need to count the formal vote.

Chavis had vowed to fight to keep his job at the helm of the nation's oldest and largest civil rights organization.

While the board met in private inside the headquarters building, a small crowd of sign-carrying, pro-Chavis demonstrators gathered outside in sweltering heat. They listened to tape recordings of a recent Chavis speech and to other speakers who appealed for the executive director's retention.

One of them told the crowd that Chavis's removal would demonstrate that "From day one, the NAACP has never been controlled by black people, and we're still under oppression."

Earl B. King, the head of a Chicago anti-drug organization that sent several Chavis supporters here by bus, said Chavis is "a man of respect, he's a reverend, he's a family man, and we love him. We're going to protect him."

The combination of personal, financial and political factors swirling around Chavis, 46, brought the NAACP to one the most severe crises it has faced during a proud 85-year history. It also threatens to undermine the iron grip on the 64-member board of William F. Gibson, board chairman since 1985, who has been one of Chavis's most loyal defenders. Chavis was named executive director in April 1993.

The immediate cause of the meeting and the crisis atmosphere within the organization was the disclosure last month that Chavis had committed as much as $332,400 in NAACP funds to settle a sex discrimination complaint by a former employee, Mary E. Stansel. She sued Chavis and the NAACP in June, contending that they had failed to live up to the terms of the settlement and raising an allegation of sexual harassment against Chavis.

That disclosure quickly led to renewed criticism of Chavis's financial stewardship and his courtship of Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan and other black nationalists who traditionally have not been close to the NAACP.

With the organization in debt about $3 million, Chavis's critics contend that the course he has charted threatens to destroy the NAACP's base of financial support and its historical role as a mainstream champion of integration.

Chavis's troubles appeared to deepen earlier this week with reports that a second former employee, Susan Tisdale, had accused him of sexual harassment and was preparing to file a lawsuit. But at a news conference here Friday, Tisdale recanted the sexual harassment allegation and said that her "employment concerns" had been resolved without any monetary compensation.

At the same news conference, Chavis lashed out at his detractors, contending that he is the victim of an orchestrated campaign by internal NAACP critics and "substantial forces outside the NAACP and outside the African American community."

Among those critics is black syndicated newspaper columnist Carl T. Rowan, who earlier this week accused Chavis of attempting "to pull off what may be the greatest con job in the history of the organization."

position of SIU chancellor as well as changing the chancellor system for the entire state of Illinois.

He said if only one or two chancellors fulfilled duties for the office in all state universities including SIUC and SIUE, Western Illinois University, Eastern Illinois University, University of Illinois and Illinois State University, it would be more cost effective for the entire state.

New York currently has one chancellor for all of its state universities and California has two chancellors, he said.

VanMeter said he disagrees with Somit's ideas on university chancellors and said the current chancellor system has served the University well.

"We currently have an excellent chancellor system at SIU, and it is the position of the Board that it should be kept," he said.

Ross Hodel, deputy director for the Illinois Board of Higher Education, said it is the position of IBHE that the current chancellor system of SIU should remain unchanged.

He said a report IBHE conducted in 1989 showed no inefficiency in the state's current chancellor system.

Jack Dyer, executive director for University Relations, said there are no dates set for when a new chancellor will be selected to replace Brown.

Brown has been the permanent chancellor at SIU since 1992 and served as acting chancellor from 1986 to 1989.

Woodstock mixes good, bad

By Bill Kugelberg
Associate Editor

Hundreds of thousands of concertgoers recently jammed together for a music festival that may not have been a picture-perfect example of peace, love and happiness, but it was not the mud-packed hellhole some reports made it out to be.

With the media and promoters casting visions that this Woodstock would mirror the legendary first concert, those who attended did not seem as if they were living up to anyone's expectations — except maybe their own ideas of having a good time and enjoying the music.

Many aspects of Woodstock '94 made the event more than memorable — both good and bad.

The concert, originally scheduled to begin Saturday, opened Friday morning to temperatures in the mid 80s and a sun-soaked day. The concert took on a festive tone as people put blankets in front of the stage and enjoyed the scenery.

But as the crowd began to file in Friday night, all of the blankets either had been packed away or trampled over and left for dead.

From there, conditions at the site deteriorated to the point that many people were overheard saying a lot of their friends would not have been able to handle the adverse living environment, such as:

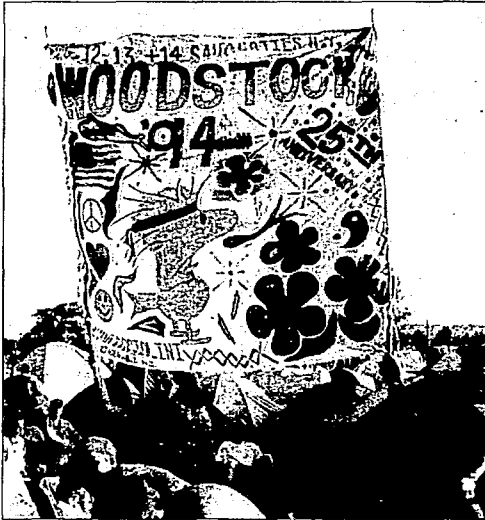

- Closing the portable toilets for hours at a time. This problem forced many people to run for the woods or the privacy of tents. Paper Pepsi cups replaced urinals and toilets.

- Ankle-deep mud in the high-traffic areas. Because of this, pedestrian traffic slowed to a crawl, leaving people to stand as close together as physically possible, causing gridlock of epic proportions.

- Folks erecting their tents on the aisles, causing the shrinkage of walkways, leading to the gridlock. By Saturday night, tents on the aisles were sometimes filled with a foot of mud.

- Forty-degree weather, which greeted those who braved the conditions after the show on Sunday night. Combined with the morning dew, packing the tent up was quite an adventure.

Despite the inconveniences, however, positive aspects of the Concert-goers from all parts of the nation came together for the Woodstock '94 celebration. This sign, being carried by a few natives of Lindenwood, N.F., conveyed the message of peace, love and happiness during the second day of the festival. The concert took place in Saugerties, N.Y., Aug. 12, 13 and 14.

concert included:

- A huge variety of music to listen to, including Bob Dylan, Nine Inch Nails, Peter Gabriel, Aerosmith, Metallica and the Red Hot Chili Peppers.

- A general feeling of togetherness — a sense of "we are all in this together." People helped their neighbors by loaning tools to set up tents, sharing water and watching each other's belongings.

- The rain. People not at the concert thought the rain ruined the experience, but it helped keep people cool. The rain also prevented a huge traffic jam at the end of the concert, because people started to leave when it began to fall hard on Saturday night.

- The surprising lack of law enforcement officials and security. Many concert-goers walked onto the site without even a security glance at tickets, tents or bags, creating a virtual free-for-all the entire weekend. This could have been a disaster, but because of the good feeling throughout the entire weekend, most people got along and were able to enjoy the concert without any major problems.

That is not to say a hint of greed did not descend upon Saugerties, N.Y. during the weekend. In fact, a store outside the site's entrance may have been the biggest winner of the weekend, charging $3 for a bottle of water, $9 for a breakfast consisting of eggs and sausage and $45 for a case of beer. Food stands at the concert charged modest fees — $2 for a Pepsi, $4 for a cheeseburger — but getting to the crowds through the crowds made eating a once-a-day event.

Despite tough living conditions and some minor problems, Woodstock '94 lived up to its namesake. Rarely do so many quality bands come together for such a major event, and whether people took away positive or negative feelings, found their soul mate or just enjoyed the music, the biggest party of the decade may have been the break everyone needed.

Those who attended the Woodstock '94 festival were up to their ankles in more than music. Rain during the second day of the long weekend made paths around the sight more than an obstacle.

Local activists celebrate nature at forest festival

By Aleksandra Macysz
Senior Reporter

A forest fest may sound like something Bambi, Thumper and friends would attend, but it actually represents a gathering of local environmentalists.

Although rain dampened the event, many people attended a festival sponsored by the Regional Association of Concerned Environmentalists Saturday at the Black Diamond Ranch, south of Alto Pass on Rt. 127.

The festival was designed to raise funds for utilities such as phone and electric bills for the Regional Association of Concerned Environmentalists.

Mark Donham, a member of the association, explained the group's primary goal.

"RACE is a grass-roots organization which has as its number-one issue getting logging stopped in the Shawnee National Forest," Donham said.

The association consists of about 400 members and began in 1988 after successfully stopping a lumber sale in Cave Valley.

Association member Mindy Harmon said another purpose of the festival was to educate people and allow them to enjoy environmental recreational activities such as a snake show.

"We've scheduled a lot of fun activities for kids and adults," Harmon said.

Other activities included a bird outing, an owl walk, music by bands such as Carter and Connelley, an auction of local artists' work, and a play based on "The Lorax," a children's book by Dr. Seuss that illustrates the effects and dangers of forest clear-cutting.

According to association members, the U.S. Forest Service has lost more than $600,000 to logging sales.

A Timber Sale Program Information Reporting System (TSPIRS) 1993 report released by the Forest Service states that "although recent sales show an increase in pine value, pine sales continue to lose money. The Forest Service loses money on the sale of pine logs and biologists have determined that there's little benefit to wildlife from pine thinnings."

Association members said for many years, the Forest Service has attempted to show that pine thinnings benefit wildlife.

Harmon said future activities will depend on the actions of the Forest Service.

"If they (the Forest Service) put on another sale, then we will be holding another event," Harmon said.

Other environmental groups attending the festival included the Student Environmental Center, an SIUC registered student organization consisting of about 50 members.

"SEC educates students on campus, local and national environmental issues and works toward making the campus community more active," center member Donna Braun said.

The organization has weekly meetings at 7 p.m. at the Interfaith Center, located at the corner of Illinois and Grand Ave.

Students interested in more information about the group should call 549-7387.

Anyone seeking information about RACE activities can contact Donham at 564-3367 or Harmon at 684-6897.

Officers in King case facing more jail time

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—In a stunning decision that re-opens the Rodney G. King beating saga, a federal appellate court ruled Friday that U.S. District Judge John G. Davies improperly sentenced the two convicted Los Angeles police officers and ordered him to give them longer prison terms.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected claims by the two officers that they were improperly convicted, crediting Davies with "impeccable fairness" in managing the explosive civil rights case that unfolded in his courtroom last year.

But Judge Betty B. Fletcher, writing for the unanimous three-judge panel, excoriated Davies for making a series of serious errors in sentencing Laurence M. Powell and Stacey C. Koon. The judges ordered Davies to resentence the officers, who have served nearly a year of their 30-month sentences. Defense attorneys said the hearing is likely to take place in the next few months.

In sometimes blistering language, the appellate court ruled that Davies had improperly departed from federal sentencing guidelines when he lowered the sentences based on his findings that the officers would be vulnerable to abuse in prison, that they would pose no danger to the public, that the successive state and federal prosecutions had cast a "spectre of unfairness" across the federal case and that their illegal conduct was provoked by King's actions.

Davies cited those factors in departing dramatically from sentences that would otherwise have been prescribed by the federal guidelines. Combined, those issues led Davies to cut the officers' sentences more than in half, from at least 30 months to 30 months.

Friday's ruling could force Davies to increase the sentences back to 30 months or more.

The federal civil rights trial was argued in the shadow of the 1992 riots and ended in a city nervous about the prospect of another eruption of violence.

The guilty verdicts against Koon and Powell—along with not-guilty verdicts for Timothy E. Wind and Theodore J. Briseno—were derided by some police officers and their supporters, but were greeted by celebrations in many areas of Los Angeles. For many, that joy later was undercut by Davies' decision to impose the shorter-than-expected sentences.

Lizard's antics please fans

Jesus Lizard's CD "Show"

Chicago's Jesus Lizard slammed through an explosive, alcohol-fueled set in St. Louis Thursday night to showcase material from their upcoming release, "Down."

The Jesus Lizard played a one-hour set to the crowd of 500, performing songs from all five of their albums. The band's unique form of "drunk-punk" got the younger crowd into the music — they showed their enthusiasm by jumping and slam dancing.

David Yow, vocalist of the Jesus Lizard, hardly missed a word as he body surfed across the room, even when the crowd parted and he fell on his back.

He dedicated their set to his mother's hometown of Granite City, a suburb of St. Louis.

Yow, who once claimed to always be drunk, made no exception Thursday evening. He swigged from a longneck beer bottle between songs as he staggered across the stage.

Yow forgot the words to quite a few verses and the lines remembered were out of time with the rest of the band, but nobody seemed to care.

Yow's wild antics are what the Jesus Lizard are known for.

St. Louis' Dazzling Killmen played the middle slot. The jazz-trained musicians ripped through an energetic set of material from their two albums.

The jazz influence shined as each song was marked with constant tempo changes and tight musicianship.

The floor in front of the stage erupted into a giant slam-dancing pit, forcing several bouncers to keep hurling bodies from flying into the rest of the crowd.

Many fans eluded the clutches of security as they stage-dived into the crowd.

Dazzling Killmen vocalist/guitarist Nick Sakes said the band has not played Carbondale because he heard bad things about the clubs in town from another band. He said the band's booking agent would look into the possibility some more.

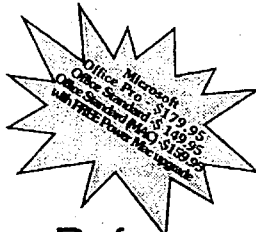

The opening band, Turnout, elicited mixed reactions from the audience. Their heavier songs seemed to be influenced by the Jesus Lizard, but the songs lost their edge when the vocalist actually tried to sing melodiously. The reverberation and chorus on his vocals could not mask his lack of talent.

The concert took place at The Other World, a converted warehouse northwest of downtown St. Louis. The Other World is where many smaller yet popular bands play when they are in the area.

The Jesus Lizard's live and only major label release, "Show," currently is available. Their new release, "Down," will be in stores Aug. 29. The Dazzling Killmen's "Face of Collapse" is out now on Chicago's Skin Graft Records.

Foo, Dyslexic Apache, energetic

by Dave Katzman
Staff reporter

A little bit of Northern Illinois came south Saturday night as two bands from Kankakee performed in the Student Center Ballroom.

The Dyslexic Apaches plowed through a 35-minute set, mixing metal, funk and alternative styles to create a heavy, upbeat sound. When they played their new single, "Hey Sparky," the singer joined a group of slam-dancers in front of the stage.

Their cover of "You're The One That I Want" from the Grease soundtrack brought a cheer of recognition from the crowd.

"There's many different genres flowing through the music — pop, punk, funk, heavy metal, and jazz thrown in."

—Ed Shafer

Foo's sound was somewhat lighter than the Apaches, but just as energetic. Many people left before Foo went on; those who remained were treated to a great display of musicianship. Singer/guitarist Ed Shafer showed his versatility, moving from wah-wah funk to Middle Eastern scales within the same solo.

"There's many different genres flowing through music — pop, punk, funk, heavy metal and jazz thrown in," said Shafer. "All those things encompass a rock and roll sound."

The two bands, staples of the Kankakee scene, play together often.

New students appeared to enjoy the performances. Several fans blew bubbles in the air; Foo invited them on stage for a "bubble solo." Sweaty dancers did not let the heat knock them out of step. Generous applause was delivered after each song.

A group of Kankakee-area natives gathered in front of the stage to see their hometown heroes perform. They addressed the band members by name and screamed out requests.

"It's cool because it's nice to see your friends on stage at a school they don't even go to," said Gene

The band played along with Dyslexic Apaches and the event hosted tables from the Inter-Greek council, the Wellness Center and WIDB who all put together games and prizes for the audience. The event was sponsored by SPC.

Ryan, a sophomore in pre-dentistry from Kankakee.

The show was originally planned to be held in front of the Student Center, but Saturday afternoon's rain forced the concert into the ballroom.

Other planned events tied in with the concert. The Inter-Greek Council and the Wellness Center set up a table with free orange juice and soda to remind students not to drink and drive.

WIDB radio gave out compact discs for correct Woodstock '94 trivia questions. A duffel bag was awarded to the winner of the limbo contest, and other prizes were distributed to people who reached into a vat of red gelatin to retrieve poker chips.

"I love it," Julie Esposito, a sophomore transfer student in education from Chicago said to sum up her feelings. "People are really friendly (here)."

Legislator disputes sex charges

Los Angeles Times

CHICAGO—U.S. Rep. Mel Reynolds, D-Ill., was indicted Friday on charges that he had sex with an underage campaign volunteer, induced her to recant her accusations and to leave the state, lied to investigators and tried to influence witnesses to lie to the county grand jury.

Reynolds also reportedly faces separate investigations into his handling of campaign finances in 1992.

Reynolds had no comment on Friday, but has heatedly denied any wrongdoing, replying in detail to specific charges—both sexual and financial—in interviews with local newspapers.

Edward M. Genson and Terence P. Gillespie, Reynolds' attorneys, said Friday in a statement that "the charges are utterly lacking in any substance," adding that "we are extremely confident that the congressman will be fully vindicated."

The 42-year-old Reynolds, a former Rhodes scholar who ousted a 12-year incumbent to gain his house seat in 1992, had been enjoying a highly visible first term.

He appeared on "Nightline" to discuss gun control and briefed President Clinton on his travels to Rwandan refugee camps in Zaire.

A protégé of fellow Chicago Rep. Dan Rostenkowski — himself under indictment on unrelated charges — Reynolds was the only freshman appointed to the prestigious House Ways and Means Committee.

He is seeking re-election from a district that includes parts of the city's South Side and southern suburbs.

Friday's indictment centers on an alleged consensual affair that the accuser said began during Reynolds' campaign in June 1992 and continued into 1993, when she turned 17, according to Cook County State's Attorney Jack O'Malley, who spoke at a news conference at a South Side courthouse.

The accuser, now in a witness protection program, approached police early in June.

Later that month and in July, O'Malley contended, Reynolds persuaded the accuser to sign a letter recanting her charges.

O'Malley said he then asked the accuser to get him a lewd photograph of a 15-year-old girl, and had her hide out of state from investigators.

The accuser later changed her mind again and said her original account was true.

CNN takes swing at interactive TV

By Ben Kubasik
Newsday

Monday at 1 p.m. EDT, CNN launches what it has been promoting as "the next generation of television talk." Let's hope it's all CNN wants it to be, or it will be squandering one of its best anchor talents, Susan Rook. The daily show, "Talk Back Live," has a bunch of electronic gadgetry set to "provide the first opportunity for Americans from across the nation to speak out about issues that affect their lives," and it will originate from what CNN calls "a state-of-the-art amphitheater and newly renovated control room to meet the needs of interactive technologies in CNN's Atlanta headquarters." Video conferencing, on-line conferences, faxes, call-ins and on-line services from CompuServe will be used, none of which would be any substitute for informed content—but the idea, CNN says, is "to recreate an 'old town meeting' in today's high-tech society." Uh-huh.

"Late Night With Conan O'Brien" didn't exactly get a vote of confidence from NBC late last week with a "renewal" that lacked a time commitment. That could mean cancellation at any time. Senior Vice President Rick Ludwin issued a typically mealy-mouthed statement that once again said NBC was "committed to the success of the show" and would support O'Brien's broadcast as long as it continued showing "ratings improvement and creative growth." In any case, the competition is not going to get any easier for O'Brien when Tom Snyder's new CBS show starts airing opposite his in December.

Rob Morrow has waved off a published report that his Dr. Joel Fleischman character was being written out of the coming season of "Northern Exposure" as retribution for his demanding a raise two seasons' ago. "Don't believe everything you hear," Morrow said in a statement issued by a spokeswoman. "If I believed everything I heard, I couldn't get out of bed in the morning." And Universal, which produces the series, said that Morrow continues

"under contract."

It may not be what the free-trade-pact framers had in mind, but "Beavis & Butt-head" will be shown on MTV Latino—in Mexico, other Latin American countries and in parts of the United States—starting Sept. 19. The cartoon series with the sub-moronic duo, deemed "Los Chicos Malos" in Mexico, will be subtitled instead of lip-synced. The cartoons will run Mondays through Fridays at "an appropriate hour." That means late enough to avoid exposing impressionable youngsters to the two heroes' insipid proclamations, such as "fire is good," which have come under fire in the United States.

Speaking of "Beavis & Butt-head," David Letterman tells the new TV Guide, "I'm not necessarily proud of it, but I do watch 'Beavis & Butt-head.' It's the only thing that consistently makes me laugh. I know it's crass and crude and vulgar, but it never deviates from its premise. They never get smarter. They always do the dumbest, worst possible thing.

Mexico's elections under scrutiny

Newsday

MEXICO CITY—Mexicans cast votes Sunday in what could be record numbers, to chart the course of the country's political future in the most crucial and contested presidential election since the revolution.

Under the unprecedented scrutiny of thousands of national and international observers and scores of recently formed civic associations, Mexicans voted for a president — from among nine candidates — as well as federal legislators.

The election came amid a tumultuous year that began on Jan. 1 with an armed indigenous uprising in the southernmost state of Chiapas and was followed by the March assassination of the candidate of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, Luis Donaldo Colosio. Recent polls have indicated that PRI presidential candidate Ernesto Zedillo was significantly ahead of his two major opponents, but analysts cautioned not to underestimate both Diego Fernandez de Cevallos, the center-right candidate of the National Action Party, known as PAN, and Cuauhtemoc Cardenas, the center-left Democratic Revolutionary Party candidate.

Math anxiety: Professor says student skills low

By Diane Dove
Staff Reporter

Findings from a report released by the Education Department last week show an increase in math and science skills among adolescents, but SIUC instructors differ as to what changes they think they see at the University.

The National Assessment of Educational Progress, which reported trends in education over the last 20 years, showed increased achievement in math and science among students aged 9, 13 and 17 during the 1980s.

Associate Professor Mary Wright, director of undergraduate programs for SIUC's math department, said greater emphasis in math and science education has resulted in a recent wave of improvement.

But that improvement does not appear to have reached SIUC, Wright said.

"Over the last 10 years, if anything, it's gone down," Wright said.

However, Wright said reports of overall results among students fail to tell the whole story.

"We still have some very good students," Wright said.

"But the achievement of middle and lower level students has gotten lower," she said.

Charles O. Frank, assistant professor of geology, said his students as a group are more serious than they were 15 years ago.

"They're much more disciplined and attentive and they make every attempt to be successful students," he said.

Frank said attendance appears to have increased and students ask more questions.

"Students are more serious and much more eager to understand," he said.

Frank said a perception among students of competitiveness in the job market may be the reason for the change.

DuWayne C. Englert, professor of zoology, said he felt skills and class participation have decreased.

"There's a fair increase over the last three or four years in the number of students who drop the class before the end of the semester," Englert said.

"I haven't seen what can be identified in a marketable improvement in performance," he said.

Englert said many students have difficulty dealing with fractions and percentages, do not like to read, and lack basic writing skills — problems he attributes to computers and television.

"Students just don't read much anymore," Englert said.

"Why read when you can have it synthesized for you?" he said.

Englert said attendance has declined because many students come to the University expecting to be entertained.

"Five or six years ago 80 percent of the students would come to class," Englert said.

"Now, no matter how dynamic the teacher is or how interesting the subject is, attendance is terrible starting at about mid semester," he said.

Wright said the blame for students' poor performance should be shared between teachers and the student.

However, the University also should implement placement tests to detect students who may have problems in math, Wright said.

"An improvement in the system as a whole is needed so students won't be taking the same course three, four and five times over," she said.

"If someone arrives at SIU not knowing how to read, should we teach them to read, or should we send them back to high school?"

"There's a fair increase over the last three or four years in the number of students who drop the class before the end of the semester."

— Mary Wright

Wright said there may be a way for the department to use ACT scores to identify students who are not ready for algebra so they can receive more pre-algebra training.

"Theoretically we're not supposed to accept (students lacking in math skills) but in practice we do," she said.

Leadership changes at Hillel

By Stephanie Moletti
Senior Reporter

After a summer of searching, the Hillel Foundation, 913 S. Illinois Avenue, has found two new directors to help lead the members of the Carbondale Jewish community.

Heather Wallach, a graduate student in psychology from Yorktown, N.Y. and Miriam Kritzer Van Zant, a graduate student in plant biology from Oak Park, have accepted the responsibilities of co-directors.

Sid Miller, president of the Hillel Board at SIUC, said the position became available when the previous director, Robin Gross, decided to resign.

Wallach said Gross approached her about the position during the spring semester, but she did not want to the position without a co-director because of academic obligations.

"The Hillel Foundation offers special things such as cultural and social events to student and community members of the Jewish faith," Miller said.

The Hillel Foundation was founded in the 1920s by two Jewish students at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana. The foundation has grown into a national organization affiliated with other Jewish groups both nationally and internationally, Wallach said.

"Hillel provides religious, social, cultural, educational and political activities to the Jewish community," Wallach said.

Wallach said the Hillel is a University-based program named after a sage of the early centuries renowned for his quest for higher education.

"Hillel (the sage) represents knowledge and wisdom," Wallach said.

The Hillel Foundation has acquired two new co-directors, Heather Wallach of Yorktown, N.Y. and Miriam Kritzer Van Zant, a graduate student in plant biology from Oak Park. The Hillel Foundation offers both cultural and social events to members of the Jewish community.

Wallach said her responsibilities will focus on social programming and liaison with students, whereas Kritzer Van Zant will focus on administrative and budgetary aspects of the organization.

"Events this year will run the gamut," Wallach said. "We hope to help people in the community and University to make inter-generational contacts. We'd like students to come in and give suggestions of their particular needs."

Kritzer Van Zant said she will work on funding channels and a few special programs in which she is interested.

"We hope to serve the needs of the various types of students in the Jewish community," Kritzer Van Zant said. "We are an extremely diverse group, with a great deal of individualism. We hope to find out what people want (out of the program)."

However, she said the foundation are somewhat limited.

"There is only so much money available," Kritzer Van Zant said. Kritzer Van Zant said the Hillel Foundation in Carbondale serves a broader community, rather than just the University.

"Hillel provides a chance to express your Jewishness," she said.

Careers jeopardized by joke

Academy expells two men in "dining-and-dashing" incident

The Washington Post

ANNAPOLIS, Md.—When three midshipmen from the U.S. Naval Academy walked out of a Denny's restaurant early one Sunday morning last spring without paying their bill, it seemed like a joke to them—a stupid $18.22 joke.

But at a time when the academy was reeling from a massive cheating scandal that did violence to the school's honor code, the three young men were promptly recommended for expulsion.

To some officials, the "dining-and-dashing" incident, which came after the midshipmen had been drinking, was a cut-and-dried case of larceny that called for the harsh sanction: the loss of their taxpayer-funded education, valued by the Navy at more than $175,000 each.

But rather than serving as an example of the simple power of the prestigious academy's honor code and strict discipline, the case has been muddied by the academy superintendent's decision to overturn the expulsion recommendation of one midshipman and permit him to return for his third year.

The two who admitted in hearings that they made a mistake were expelled, but the third midshipman, who said the decision not to pay wasn't his, was retained. His two companions now say he lied.

As midshipmen prepare to return for another year at the academy, that case raises a host of questions: Was the conduct of the two expelled midshipmen that much worse than the third student's?

What implications does the case have for the honor and conduct system that was flagrantly violated during the cheating scandal?

James M. Yarborough, one of the expelled students, said the cast sends this message to his classmates: "If you get caught, lie your way through the system and you will get kept. It's what works. If you tell the truth, you get kicked out."

John E. Sarno, the midshipman who remains at the academy, is serving an undisclosed punishment. He did not return telephone calls to his parents' home in Williamsburg, Va., or to his dormitory. His mother declined to comment.

While Sarno prepares for his third year, Yarborough, 20, finds himself installing gymnasium floors for a construction company in Tucson instead of training to fulfill his dream of piloting F-14 and F-18 fighter jets.

Yarborough's father has been waging a one-man campaign, firing off appeal after appeal to the academy, congressional offices, the White House and Navy brass at the Pentagon.

He has unleashed a torrent of Federal Express packages containing letters demanding that someone justify how his son could be expelled while Sarno is retained.

The other expelled student, Jonathan C. Olivas, 21, of Elko, Nev., is trying to decide whether to attend a community college and apply for an ROTC scholarship or reapply to the academy. He said he cannot afford full college tuition.

The academy's former superintendent, Rear Adm. Thomas C. Lynch, who made the recommendation to retain Sarno, said he saw a dramatic distinction between his conduct and that of the other two.

"The two were separated because it was a dine-and-dash deal," said Lynch, who said he disagreed with a recommendation made by John B. Padgett III, the former commandant of midshipmen, that all three be expelled. "The third one, in my mind, the intent was not there. That was the significant difference between the three. For that reason, I decided to retain the third."

The new case came amid the worst cheating scandal in the academy's 149-year history, in which more than 100 midshipmen were implicated and two dozen were expelled for their role in the cheating scandal involving a stolen electrical engineering exam.

The incident sparked intense criticism of the academy.

Lynch, who was replaced as academy superintendent this month, interviewed the midshipmen before making his decision, which was then approved by top Navy officials.

Marine Capt. Randy N. Pope, the commanding officer for the three midshipmen, said he thought all three were not completely honest during the hearings and should all have been expelled.

Pope said he grew upset when Sarno said his father, an administrative law judge, did not think he was guilty. "Sarno suggested that legalistically speaking, he could not be (expelled). I think the administration believed that," Pope said.

NRA endorses North for Senate; candidate criticizes gun control

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—U.S. Senate candidate Oliver L. North of Virginia joined forces with the National Rifle Association and issued a fiery denunciation of gun control Friday, saying plans to curb firearm ownership will not reduce crime.

Addressing an enthusiastic rally of about 250 people at the NRA's national headquarters in Fairfax County, Va., North formally accepted the organization's endorsement and harshly criticized anti-crime legislation being debated in Congress.

Boasting that "I am not a waffler," North derided the proposed legislation as "their phony, pork-barrel gun-control bill they want to pretend is some kind of crime-control bill." Both North and the NRA oppose a provision to outlaw types of assault weapons.

North's embrace of the NRA comes at a time when the group has suffered significant setbacks in Virginia and across the country, prompting foes to declare that its legendary political influence is waning. But North's actions demonstrate how ardently he is courting conservatives and rural voters, who he hopes will form the core of his support in the November election.

Polls show that North's anti-gun-control positions are opposed by a majority of voters in Northern Virginia and in the state's urban area but are popular where hunting is common.

Because the four candidates in this year's Senate race are splitting the vote in the populous suburbs, North hopes a strong showing in rural Virginia will propel him to victory.

NRA officials said North was the only one of the four contenders to seek their endorsement and that they gave it gladly.

"He's a very good candidate," said Jim Land, the NRA's national secretary. "We're confident he shares our views."

Thomas R. Morris, a political scientist who is president of Emory & Henry College in Southwest Virginia, said that while the NRA's support will offend many voters, North's pursuit of it is sound strategy.

"In a four-way race, a well-organized group like the NRA has increased significance," Morris said. "The anti-NRA vote may be diffused among three candidates;

North's opponents reacted coolly to Friday's announcement. Though all three voiced support for hunters' rights to keep their weapons, two have significant differences with the NRA.

Democratic Sen. Charles S. Robb, who backed a law requiring a national waiting period to buy guns, said his position is widely favored by law enforcement groups.

And while he was governor, independent L. Douglas Wilder championed a state law limiting handgun purchases by individuals to one a month.

In his speech at the NRA rally, North appeared to endorse the idea that all Americans should own guns for self-protection, a position he has not previously taken. But shortly after his speech, North said he does not advocate universal gun ownership.

Two weeks ago, a state judge revoked North's permit to carry a concealed weapon, ruling that North's admission he lied to Congress during the Iran-Contra affair proves he is "not of good character." North contends the judge's decision was political.

Soviet hardliners return to favor

The Washington Post

MOSCOW—They call each other "comrade." They think that the Soviet Union lived in its glory days before Mikhail Gorbachev came to power. And they swear that the failed 1991 coup attempt against Gorbachev, which led a few months later to the Soviet Union's disappearance, was not a bungling grab for power but a heroic last-ditch effort to keep the proud nation whole.

The hardliners who rue the collapse of the old order were a spent force after 1991, and for a long time they kept their heads down and their mouths shut, stunned and silenced by events in the New Russia.

Now, three years after the Aug. 19-21 coup attempt that heralded the end of an epoch, the hardliners are out of jail, out on the streets and, increasingly, out of disfavor. They are a living illustration of an adage: In Russia, the only thing harder to predict than the future is the past.

Not one member or accomplice of the State Emergency Committee, as the coup plotters called themselves, has been punished. A dozen of them were pardoned by the parliament in February, and the only one who insisted on a trial — Gen. Valentin Varennikov, 70, former commander of Soviet land forces — was cleared by the nation's highest military court Aug. 11.

"Future coup and putsch leaders can be sure ahead of time that they will be acquitted," Gorbachev told the Moscow Times, an English language daily. On television, he said the coup should be investigated by a parliamentary commission.

The images of the 1991 coup, carried live on television around the world are fixed in history: President Boris Yeltsin atop a tank; brave volunteers defending the White House and the disarray and public drunkenness of the plotters.

SEAC activists encourage students to help out cause

By Aaron Butler
Staff Reporter

There is a friend on campus for students concerned about the amount of litter scattered outside Faner Hall, the giant smokestack looming over McAndrew Stadium or the debris washing onto the shores of Campus Lake.

The Student Environmental Center began when a group of environmentally conscious SIUC students and area residents gathered to celebrate Earth Day in 1970 and has been a registered student organization since 1972.

In the late 1970s and early 1980s the Center primarily focused on anti-nuclear activities, but current program coordinator Eileen Jiskra said that has changed in the past few years.

"We currently focus on a variety of campus and local issues such as recycling, campus air pollution, and the proposed Crab Orchard hazardous waste incinerator," Jiskra said.

Donna Braun, the center's group coordinator, said that she and Ramine Karimpour, a graduate intern, were busy planning center strategy last week.

"The majority of our community, and society at large, would like to do something to improve our environmental situation," Braun said. "However, they feel a lack of empowerment to do anything effective. We try to provide concerned individuals with the knowledge and tools to help them feel they have the power to be as effectively active as they choose."

Karimpour explained that because the center is the only registered student organization on campus to focus entirely on environmental protection, it has been growing rapidly, especially as it enters the 1990s.

As a result of recent growth, several smaller, more specialized organizations have formed within the center, then moved on to pursue their own goals while remaining in contact with the rest of the environmental movement through the center.

Branch groups are encouraged because the center pursues a diversity of issues, and these smaller organizations can spend more time on individual problems.

"We are the hub of campus environmental activity. If someone comes to us with a concern, or just an area of specific interest, we can get them in touch with people who have the same concerns," Karimpour said.

The center currently is in an important stage of its evolution, Karimpour said.

The regional headquarters of the Student Environmental Action Coalition recently was incorporated into the center.

Coordination of SEAC activities for Illinois, Indiana and Michigan will take place in the center, making Southern Illinois a crossroads of activity in the region.

The majority of our community, and society at large, would like to do something to improve our environmental situation... We try to provide concerned individuals with the knowledge and tools to help them feel they have the power to be as effectively active as they choose."

— Donna Braun

Anyone interested in getting involved can visit the center's booth at the Saluki Fair Aug. 21 on the third floor of the Student Center.

The group will meet every Thursday in the Interfaith Center beginning Sept. 1.

Crime bill proposal a plus for Clinton in negotiation

By Michael Ross
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21—Meeting almost around the clock, congressional negotiators said early Sunday that they had reached tentative agreement on a sharply scaled-back version of President Clinton's crime bill that would be put to a vote in the House later Sunday.

But in a sign that the epic legislative struggle over the troubled crime bill was far from over, exhausted Democratic leaders emerged from a marathon round of nearly continuous night-and-day negotiations to say they were not sure whether they had the votes to pass the legislation even with the support of the moderate Republicans with whom they had been negotiating.

"It will be close, very close," said Democratic Whip Bill Richardson of New Mexico. "We don't yet have the votes," Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., added grimly as he emerged from a leadership meeting shortly after midnight EDT.

Having spent all of the day and the previous night wrapped up in intensive negotiations with the GOP moderates on spending cuts, the Democratic leadership suddenly found itself late Saturday night struggling to counter a last-minute, but apparently effective, lobbying campaign by the National Rifle Association, which is seeking to kill the bill because it contains a ban on the manufacture and sale assault weapons.

"The NRA had the field today," Fazio said, admitting that its fierce, 11th hour lobbying blitz had cost Clinton's allies the votes of "a few members" who have indicated they may support a rival crime bill proposal drafted by Republicans and some 40 anti-gun control Democrats. Once again, he added, "the issue has come down to guns."

The House, its members increasingly short-tempered and full of partisan bite as Democrats and Republicans accused one another of acting in bad faith, was standing by all day for a rare Saturday session, eager by now to vote on almost any crime bill that comes to the floor so that lawmakers can finally begin a long-delayed summer recess.

But the first of several critical votes—a procedural motion that was used last week to stall the bill and force the White House back into protracted negotiations with both Republicans and fellow Democrats opposed to the gun ban—was later put off until Sunday while the leadership anxiously searched for more votes.

Between 30 and 40 moderate Republicans led by former Delaware governor Michael N. Castle were expected to vote with Democrats after an agreement to slice more than $3 billion from the crime bill's original $33.2 billion price tag. Most of the cuts were to come from crime prevention programs ridiculed by the GOP members as "pork."

But there was still no formal commitment from members of the moderate group, which was coming under heavy pressure from GOP leaders to vote against the new package. The Republican leadership contended that not enough money had been cut from "social spending" programs such as job training, midnight basketball leagues and other after-school activities for violence-prone youths.

Some conservative Democrats who supported the administration last week indicated that they might switch sides to protest the fact that the leadership was demanding an immediate vote on a compromise crafted behind closed doors.

"This is no way to legislate. ... We can't hold an intelligent debate if we don't know what's in the bill and it's going to take most members weeks to figure out what's really in this agreement," said Rep. Austin J. Murphy, D-Pa., adding that he was "thinking seriously" of switching his vote.

PUBLIC NOTICE DIRECTORY INFORMATION SOUTHERN ILLINOIS UNIVERSITY AT CARBONDALE

Under the University policy on the Release of Student Information and Public Law 93380 as amended, the University may make accessible to any person external to the University "directory information" concerning a student, unless that student notifies the Office of Admissions and Records that he or she objects to the release of such information. Directory information is considered to be public in nature and will be released at any time upon request without prior approval from the student. Notice is therefore given that directory information listed below in respect to each student enrolled at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale will be available to any person unless the student filed in writing with the Office of Admissions and Records a request to restrict release of student directory information to external sources.

The University has designated as directory information the following student information:

- Student name
- Student local address and telephone number
- Student home address and telephone number
- Date-of-birth
- Current term hours carried
- Classification (freshman, sophomore, etc.)
- Collegiate unit
- Major
- Dates of Attendance
- Degrees and honors earned and dates
- The most previous educational agency or institution attended prior to enrollment at Southern Illinois University
- Participation in officially recognized activity or sport and weight, height and pictures of members of athletic teams
- Picture

Any student enrolled for the Fall Semester who does not wish to have released any directory information should contact, in person, the Office of Admissions and Records, Woody Hall Room A-103 by Friday, September 2, 1994. Students who elect to restrict release of student information must sign a statement to that effect. The restriction on the release of student information will be valid until September 1, 1995 and must be renewed annually each Fall Semester.

Students who wish to verify or correct the existing student directory information must also contact in person, the Office of Admissions and Records, Woody Hall, Wing A, Room 103.

Advanced technology could give Simpson jurors an instant replay

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—Much of America will be glued to the tube during the O.J. Simpson murder trial, so why should the people in the courtroom be any different?

Yes, the big screen is coming to the courtroom of Superior Court Judge Lance A. Ito. Make that two, really big screens—67-inches, to be exact—onto which visual evidence will be beamed for the benefit of jurors and courtroom spectators.

The ultratech, interactive Evidence Presentation System was donated by a Los Angeles company called Trial Presentation Technologies, which is hoping to more than recoup its investment in free publicity garnered during the trial, which is to begin next month.

Neither the prosecution nor the defense has yet promised to use the new-fangled equipment, which has only been used before in civil cases and will have its criminal case premiere during a less-celebrated murder case Monday.

If Simpson case attorneys opt to use the system, they can take advantage of features including: —Instant translation of a court reporter's coded shorthand into plain English, which would appear on courtroom computer screens even as the reporter typed. —Two 67-inch screens—one for the jury, one for the spectators—capable of displaying evidence including documents, photographs, charts, videos or even animation.

—Computer monitors on the witness stand, on the judge's bench, and on the defense and prosecution tables, that would be used to view the evidence and the instant testimony. —Technological wizardry that can interpose documents onto moving pictures. Portions of the documents also can be instantly enlarged or shrunk before the jury's eyes or circled with a colored light pen by a witness sitting 10 feet away.

Two consulting companies, also working free of charge, will be available to advise the lawyers on the pros and cons of the technology.

12 passengers injured in fire on cruise ship

Newsday

NEW YORK—With more than 1,000 passengers on board, a liner returning from a five-day cruise to New England caught fire in New York Harbor Friday and was evacuated at a pier.

Twelve passengers and six firefighters received minor injuries as a result of the early-morning fire, but what could have been a major maritime catastrophe had the 22,797-ton Regal Empress been at sea was averted as passengers and crew members were safely evacuated.

"A few people were panicking—when you see flames on a ship, it's a little worrying," said Paul Landers, a passenger from Westchester, N.Y. "But if it had been two hours earlier, things would have been worse."

The white-hulled vessel—an aging liner that once sailed regularly from New York to Europe as the Greek Line's Olympia—was passing beneath the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge in a fine rain around 7 a.m. when crew members and passengers first smelled smoke, officials said.

By the time the ship reached the pier, a three-alarm fire was blazing in a duct leading to the engine room, a storage room and the restaurant, which was emptied of passengers who had been eating breakfast, said Jerry Sanford, a Fire Department spokesman.

The liner's whistle sounded a booming distress signal—six short bursts followed by one long blast—and lifejacket-clad passengers crowded the upper decks as firefighters, notified by the Coast Guard as the ship steamed up the Hudson River, piled up the gangway and went about the dangerous, complex task of fighting a fire hidden within an ocean liner.

"A ship fire is very difficult—you have passageways that go to decks below the waterline," Sanford said. "Everything is very confined." The first firefighters on board even had to use thermal detectors that find the blaze in the smoky corridors.

The main body of fire in the duct was put out at 9:30 a.m. Still, 300 firefighters spent several more hours dousing small, stubborn blazes, Sanford said.

Some of the 1,006 passengers praised the crew and officers.

"The crew was very calm and professional the whole time," Landers said.

The Regal Empress' next two cruises were canceled. The Fire Department is investigating the blaze. The ship, built in England in 1953, has been sailing out of New York for two years, making short cruises to New England, Bermuda and the Bahamas.

It's true—if you live off campus, AT&T True USASM Savings really could save you more. Just look up your average monthly long distance bill on the chart, and see for yourself.

Now here's why. AT&T's and MCI's basic rates start off about the same. Then, with Friends and Family, MCI advertises 20% off your long distance calls, but—here's the catch—only if they're to MCI users who are also on your calling circle list. Truth is, two-thirds of most Friends and Family members' calls aren't to those selected people. So the average discount you end up seeing on your bill is only 6%.* Not the 20% you expected.

AT&T True USASM Savings is a whole lot simpler. Spend $25 a month, and we'll subtract 20% off your bill. The full 20%—not some conditional percentage. Spend $75 a month, and we'll take 30% off. You can save on calls to anyone, anytime, anywhere in the good old US of A.SM No restrictions. No calling circles. No disappointments.

Incoming Saluki freshmen ready to accept challenge

By Sean Walker
Staff Reporter

The 1994 Saluki volleyball team is tuning up for another winning season this fall with a mix of veteran players and a talented recruiting class. SIUC posted a 14-13 overall record last year and a 7-9 mark in the Missouri Valley Conference action.

The freshman class consists of middle hitter Monique Galvin, outside hitters Elizabeth Donath and Tracy Eggers, setter Monica Harden and walk-on red shirt freshman and defensive specialist Maritsha Wilson.

SIUC head coach Sonya Locke said the freshman class will have to work hard to learn the SIUC system, but with a staff of 10 returning lettermen they should have no trouble.

The team has been practicing for three hours twice a day since August 12th and the newcomers have had a rude awakening to college volleyball training.

"These practices are much harder than I've ever seen," Harden said. "I played in high school, but I never really worked out. I just showed up and started and now I really have to play the best I can everyday."

In addition to the physical training aspect of playing college volleyball, the freshmen are also trying to deal with playing against women who are as good, if not better than them.

Eggers, who was a high school MVP, said the transition from high school to college has been a challenge.

"I now have someone to compete against. I have to work and push to play on a different level than I am used to," she said. "It's like starting over. I have up and down days, but I have the older player's support and that has made it easier to compete with them."

Donath, who is getting over a knee injury, said the practices are tough, but rewarding. In addition to the normal team workouts, she adds one extra hour of knee conditioning for rehabilitation.

"It is nice to play Division I volleyball, and finally be challenged," she said. "It's a lot tougher than what I am used to."

"These practices are much harder than I've ever seen... Now I really have to play the best I can every day."

but mentally I feel good about my accomplishments so far."

Locke said she expects 100 percent out of every player on the court, but the freshmen are going to have to pay attention and learn.

"They are going to have to realize from the start that they will have to make changes," she said. "They will have days of frustration. They may feel like I am picking on them from time to time, but every one of them needs constant feedback so they will change quicker."

Many of the freshmen have found the other players to be more than just a team, they are like a second family.

"I have been kind of homesick lately, but the team is like a family and they pick me up," Galvin said. "Coach Locke and the rest of the team have made me feel welcomed since the first day, and that has really helped me get the confidence to play hard every day."

Freshman outside hitter Tracy Eggers returns the ball. The volleyball team was practicing Friday afternoon at Davies gymnasium. Eggers is one of four freshmen recruited for

Eggers said she hopes to bring the team another strong right side hitter and deepen the squad's threats.

"It has been my dream to play Division I collegiate volleyball since I was in fifth grade," she said. "Now that my dream has come true, the team has been very supportive in helping me get the courage to work hard. The team has been behind everyone of us freshmen since the first day, and that has helped me feel like I am just like everyone else."

Returning junior letterman Beth Diehl said the new recruits are hanging in there and are very willing to learn.

"I was a freshman once too, so I share my experiences with the new freshmen and we talk through their problems," she said.

Donath, Eggers, Harden and Galvin were all recruited, but Wilson walked on last week and made the team.

"I'm going to be red-shirted this year, but I'm going to spend that time conditioning and working out to reach the level of the other players," Wilson said. "I played volleyball for Tennessee State for two years before coming to Southern Illinois, and I have learned more in the first two days of practice here than I learned in my entire time at TSU."

Being the only red shirt freshman has not put a damper on Wilson's spirits, though, she said she is going to practice with the team and learn. Her goal is to be physically and mentally prepared and to be an asset to the team next season when she gets her shot to play.

Inspirational leader Diehl said the secret to the freshmen's success is to "just hang in there and keep smiling."

Return to football unlikely, yet offer to Gibbs still open

By Vito Stellino
The Baltimore Sun

The list of coaches who walked away from pro football and never came back is a rather short one.

It pretty much starts with John Madden and ends with Dick Vermeil.

It may be time to add a third name to the list: Joe Gibbs.

When Gibbs turned down the Carolina Panthers last spring, a lot of people weren't convinced that no meant no. The Panthers haven't hired a head coach yet and still seem to hope Gibbs might change his mind since his son, Coy, plays his final year at Stanford this fall and Gibbs' Washington Redskins contract runs out after this season.

But as Gibbs approaches his second season away from the sidelines, he doesn't sound like a man who's coming back next year.

"I'd never say never, but I made my decision last year," he said.

He's now busy running his NASCAR team and making speeches, and he will be a regular on the NBC pre-game show trading quips with Mike Ditka. He'll watch Coy's games this fall before Coy leaves Stanford in February to join the family racing team for the start of the new season. His other son, J.D., already is part of the team.

Gibbs seems set for a life without football, although he still misses the game at times and jokes about the seasons when he slept in the office three nights a week.

"I miss my old couch with the rats scampering across the floor," he said. "I miss that old building; a lot of wins came out of that thing."

In Gibbs' last year, 1992, the Redskins moved to a plush new facility, but they haven't had the success they had in the old building.

Gibbs paid a big price, though, for his success in that old building. He was exhausted after 12 years of round-the-clock attention to detail. His health is fine now and he doesn't seem ready to get back into that meat grinder again.

physical education and vice-president of the SIUC rugby club said the main reason he joined is for the competition.

"I played football throughout high school, but I didn't have the physical size or strength to compete at the college level," Prato said. "Rugby allowed me the chance to stay competitive."

Prato also said that time spent with the rugby club provides an atmosphere similar to that of a fraternity.

"It's almost a fraternal experience, except that the focus is on the sport rather than on social responsibility," he said.

There are many team and individual clubs to choose from. Team sports include: cricket, field hockey, floor hockey, ice hockey, rugby and volleyball. Individual sports include: equestrian, karate, ultimate frisbee and weightlifting.

Students who are interested in a club that is currently not available at SIUC have the opportunity to start their own.

Students interested in joining or starting a sport club should call or visit the Recreation Center Information Desk at 453-1273 or call Tara Hubert at 453-1256.

Horner said the team goal is to win the MVC Championship and she also has a personal goal.

"The most important goal is for the team to win championship and I think we can," Horner said. "Personally I would also like to qualify for nationals."

The team begins its season at home in a dual meet with Southeast Missouri on Sept. 3.

'96 team picks feature talent, clean playing

By Scott Howard-Cooper
Los Angeles Times

USA Basketball says it will start putting together the 1996 Olympic team in the second half of next season, starting with the coach, most likely Atlanta's Lenny Wilkens, after the all-star break and then the players sometime in the spring.

That's when things could get interesting, because the best talent might not make the cut.

Larry Johnson and Derrick Coleman might have played themselves out of Olympic gold medals with their trash-talking and physical antics during the recent World Championships. USA Basketball wants the class to have class.

With that in mind, Sam Smith of the Chicago Tribune, based on interviews with committee officials, presents the early line for the Atlanta Games:

CENTERS—Shaquille O'Neal, David Robinson and Alonzo Mourning.

FORWARDS—Shawn Kemp, Scottie Pippen, Horace Grant, Chris Webber and Glenn Robinson.

GUARDS—Reggie Miller, Tim Hardaway, Anfernee Hardaway and Joe Dumars.

Dumars might have been the most popular member of Dream Team II, but he will be 33 in the summer of 1996, by which time Latrell Sprewell should be reaching his prime as a shooting guard who can penetrate, play defense and be an emergency point guard.

And when did John Stockton suddenly get tossed to the scrap heap?

The best point guard in the game can't slip that quickly behind versatile Anfernee Hardaway.

Trivia time: How many times has Pat Riley finished out of first place in his 12 years as an NBA head coach?

Huskey huff: Apparently the fallout from Don James' resignation as Washington football coach nearly a year ago still hasn't ended. James' successor, Jim Lambright, fired offensive coordinator Jeff Woodruff, who is also James' son-in-law.

would be back at 248 after lunch and probably be back to 249 the next day," he said.

"It's normal for players to lose only a couple of pounds a week in two-a-days, but we're comfortable with anything under three-percent. There's no doubt about it, though, this is the largest group of newcomers I've seen here since we moved to Division I-AA."

Strength testing was the first preseason task for the SIUC veterans and rookies as players underwent a series of physical examinations ranging from bench press to vertical leaps.

The results of the recent tests are compared to numbers the athletes registered before leaving for the summer to determine how good of shape each athlete is in.

Watson said he was pleased with the overall results of the testing and believes the rigid conditioning exercises help keep his team healthy.

"Only one kid did not make the conditioning test and that's a big reason why our injuries are down," he said.

Strength coach Doug Salmon also gave the athletes praise for coming into camp in good shape.

"Their strength levels were good, very good, in fact," Salmon said. "I'd have to be quite positive in commenting on the group overall."

Improving the team attitude and creating a winning attitude, accomplished our overall objective, to work on bringing the team together and teaching them to play hard and with enthusiasm," he said.

The Saluki football curtain raiser is slated for Sept. 3 when SIUC hosts Tennessee-Martin.

greatly from newcomers, which include Stelios Marneros from Cyprus.

"(Marneros) performed tremendously in the European Division II Championships and could be the team's top runner," Cornell said.

One of the only concerns the team has going into the season is the health of Emberton, who has been having leg problems.

Emberton said the result of his injury is not known yet, but he expects to be able to perform this season.

The team's schedule is tough, with nonconference showdowns against Missouri, Kansas, and Air Force.

SIUC will get its toughest conference competition from Illinois State, Southwest Missouri and Drake.

The Salukis will open up in the Kansas Invitational Sept. 10.

Saluki football opens strong

By Grant Deady
Sports Editor

Even though the Saluki football opener is still 12 days away, the most dreaded part of the season for the players is already over.

Two-a-day practices came to a close for the SIUC gridders Saturday after 11 days of the marathon training sessions. The morning practices kicked-off each day at 8 a.m. and ran until 10:45 a.m. before the players were allowed a break for lunch. Afternoon practice got underway at 2:30 p.m. with position meetings and wrapped up around 5:15 p.m. with a full team practice.

Saluki head coach Shawn Watson said the players responded well to the rigorous daily agenda, but team morale did slip a bit towards the end.

"We've got the two-a-day blues right now, but the kids have been awesome," he said. "The attitude is good and we just have to continue to believe."

One of the positive things to arise from the preseason training was the lack of player injuries. With the exception of a few slightly knicked-up offensive linemen, the Saluki players are headed into the season injury-free right now.

Watson credited SIUC head trainer Ed Thompson and strength coach Doug Salmon for keeping the players in good health by closely monitoring the players during two-a-days.

Thompson said the biggest risk during the preseason drills is weight loss, even though practices are designed to avoid the heat of the day.

"A 250-pounder could lose five pounds in a morning practice, but

Sports clubs offer athletes sports choice

Students who are looking for a way to stay competitive in their favorite sport and interested in something more serious than intramurals and pick-up games, can take advantage of SIUC sport clubs.

Along with the more ordinary offerings such as bowling, floor hockey and soccer, there are also the not so ordinary. The SIUC sky dogs and the Japanese league soccer club join roller hockey, lacrosse, triathlon and wrestling as new additions to the club sports roster which now stands at 36.

There are many differences between sport clubs and intra-mural sports, with the biggest being independence. The clubs must schedule their own practices and raise their own funds in order to operate.

"The beauty of sport clubs is that they can function independently," sport club graduate assistant Tara Huber said. "All decisions are made by the officers of each club, and as long as they follow certain bureaucratic guidelines, there is no problem."

There are also no deadlines for membership in sport clubs, but some clubs are harder to join than others. "Each club has open membership policies, and clubs like volleyball are open, but highly competitive," Huber said. "Others, like soccer and aikido are also open, but not quite as competitive."

Men Harriers ready to rebound after last season's title revocation

By Doug Durso
Senior Reporter

The Saluki men's cross country team is looking to reclaim the Missouri Valley Conference Championship this fall after seeing their title taken away last year and also are looking to excel as one of the nation's top teams.

Saluki coach Bill Cornell said the team's immediate goal is to win the MVC championship, but also to strive for the National Championships.

"We want to win the conference, but we also want to challenge the Big eight schools like Iowa State, Oklahoma State and Kansas to get to the National Championships," he said.

Cornell said the squad will be more focused this year, because an administrative error cost them their championship last year.

"As a result of last year I think the team will come out with more determination to prove to everybody that we are the best team in the conference," he said. "I'm really excited about this year with everybody coming back and some newcomers who should really help."

Cornell said on any given day several different runners could be the best on the team.

"It is great when your team is so deep and talented that five or six members of the squad could step up at any time," he said.

Among the top returnees the Salukis will count on are sophomore Neil Emberton and senior team captain Garth Akal.

Emberton won last year's MVC Championship with a time of 25:28, and Akal has been a steady performer throughout the past few years.

Emberton said the team should be even better than last year, but he will not be sure until the team performs in competition.

"On paper we should be a stronger team than last year, but the main thing is to stay healthy and do the best we can," he said.

Cornell said the team also will be helped

Women runners' speed expected to boost team

By Doug Durso
Senior Reporter

After a disappointing fourth place finish in the Missouri Valley Conference Championship last year, the women's cross country team will try to rebound this season with a young, talent-laden squad.

Saluki head coach, Don DeNoon, said this team has the best leg speed of his past teams.

"The difference between this team and those in past years is the leg speed of the runners," DeNoon said. "We have a lot of runners who have raced in the 400 and 800 meters and have a really good push."

The Salukis will be led by seniors, Jennie Horner, Deborah Daehler and sophomore standout Kim Koerner.

Horner, who is the squad's co-captain along with Daehler, said she likes the idea of being a leader.

"Guiding the young runners and stepping into the role of a leader along with Debby (Daehler) is something I look forward to," Horner said.

Along with the performance of the seniors, DeNoon said he expects Koerner to be one of the team's most important runners.

"Kim had a really good season last year and is just an awesome talent," he said.

DeNoon said another key to the season will be the development of the new runners, especially Kelly French, who arrives from Canada.

"This is the best freshman class I've had since I have been here," DeNoon said. "I'm really excited about Kelly French, whose best time would have put her sixth in the championship last year."

One of the hurdles the team will have to overcome is the lack of experience of the young runners at the cross country distance because most of them are used to shorter distances like the 400 and 800 meters.

The team also faces a challenging schedule that includes non conference opponents like Kansas and Notre Dame and a difficult MVC schedule.

DeNoon said he expects to be in contention with Indiana State, Illinois State, and Drake for the conference crown.

"We are in one of the best conferences in the country," he said. "With Indiana State, who finished first last year, Illinois State, who finished third, return basically intact and Drake, who is always strong, this conference is extremely tough."
