New student convocation highlights life at SIUC

Smooth Move
CHRIS KENNEDY
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Christine Schlote and her mother Karen pulled Christine's belongings out of their car and onto the sidewalk in front of Schneider Hall Friday afternoon during move-in days at SIUC.

Schlote, a junior in marketing from Palatine, said the week leading up to moving back into the dorms had been crazy but the actual move-in was going smoothly.

Karen Schlote said moving her daughter into in for the third time was less hectic than previous attempts.

"From a mother's perspective, this is the easiest year," Karen Schlote said. "The first year we were in long lines, and it was hot."

"There were fewer belongings in the dorm rooms this year," Christine Schlote said. "It was less hectic than previous attempts."

Sentiments that the move-in was going smoothly were echoed by many people involved, including student life advisors, residence hall employees, faculty members, guests and other incoming students.

Michael Ray, a senior in accounting from Belleville, worked at the front desk at Schneider Hall during the move-in and credited the staff and the new hall director's ability to organize the event for the tranquil atmosphere.

"Our building hasn't been hectic because we have a new hall director, and she's on her staff," Ray said. "(Move-in) has been much better than years before because we've had more help and more organization."

"Everyone is handling things all right," according to Ray, more than 600 students moved into Schneider Hall Thursday alone.

Neely Hall, which houses students more than 21 years of age, did not see nearly as many students move in, according to residence hall employee Regina Charles.

"It's really smooth with returning students," said Charles, a senior in speech communication from Dolton. "The majority of the students who live in Neely Hall are returning students and they won't come until Sunday or Monday."

Residence hall employees were not the only people helping students move in.

According to Housing Program Coordinator Kathie Lowenthe, 65 faculty and University associates volunteered their time to help students move in.

Business owner denied liquor license for establishment on Strip
Gus Bode

A Carbondale business owner whose liquor license application was denied last week, will make a decision in the next two weeks about what to do with the vacant building on Illinois Avenue now that it cannot be used for a bar.

After voting three times Aug. 17, the Carbondale City Council, acting as the Liquor Control Commission, denied a class B-2 liquor license application for Matt Maier and the building he owns at 315 S. Illinois Ave.

Maier, also the owner of Mugy McGuire's, 1620 W. Main St., wanted to open a sports bar and dance club in the Illinois Avenue building.

The building has been for sale since he bought it two years ago.

The property at 315 S. Illinois Ave. formerly was home to T.J. McFly's and McGuire's and most recently a paintball facility.

Maier said he still is unsure of what to do with the building at this point.

"I don't have any plans right now," he said "I'll make plans once we see it."

In 1995, Carbondale officials established a cap in the entire city and in the Illinois Avenue area on the amount of B-2 liquor licenses, a license that allows a business to make all its profits from the sale of alcohol.

Only 15 B-2 licenses can be distributed in Carbondale.

The license Maier was requesting recently was given up by owners of The Globe at 2125 W. Walnut St.

City ordinance allows only five licenses for the area from University Avenue to the railroad tracks and from Grand Avenue to Walnut Avenue.

Maier's proposed establishment would have been in that area and would exceed the limit.

The commission voted 3-2 to deny the approval of the liquor license within the third attempt to make a definite decision.

The first two votes resulted in a tie on the motion of the motion and a tie vote, respectively.

Friends, students remember linguistics graduate assistant

University Christian Ministries board member's death shocks those who are close to him

JACQUELINE BROWN

Jackie Badger's friends and family gathered Saturday for a memorial service to remember the diligent student, dedicated volunteer, and spiritual leader. Badger died in his home Aug. 15. The cause of death was unknown as of press time.

Badger, a graduate student in linguistics from Millstadt, earned a bachelor's degree in mathematics from SIU-Ericville and a bachelor's degree in economics from SIUC. He planned to finish work on his master's in December.

After Galen, a graduate student in linguistics, said Badger would have wanted to be remembered for the quality of classes he taught and his work at the Center for English as a Second Language.

"He generally had a very deep understanding of what he was teaching," Galen said. "I think that came through to his students very clearly."

Karen Knud, who worked closely with Badger when she was gone for the University Christian Ministries, said he was well suited to teach and operate on a very tight budget, "He generally had a very deep understanding of what he was teaching," Galen said. Badger Police Officers and outside instructors will teach the classes.

"We've got room for about seven more students," Elliott said. Applicants for the Academy do not need to be Carbondale residents, but they should supply three character references and agree to a criminal record screening.

The 11-week class meets on consecutive Tuesday evenings from 6 to 9 p.m. and two Saturday classes. Each class will be devoted to a different area of police work, Elliott said.

The class allows citizens an in-depth understanding of the work police perform, said George Jackson, Carbondale Police Officer of the Carbondale Police. "I'm convinced there are comprehensive at the same time," she said.

they looked at 10 years ago and that they didn’t want back and checked again this time.

One of the ways University officials hope to improve technology is through a proposed $25-per-semester student technology fee, which was supported by students in a non-binding Undergraduate Student Government referendum last spring. Jackson said this would be a source of funds that would improve cash flows and allow for better planned technology improvements across campus.

Jackson’s first experience with the accreditation review on the SIUC campus came nearly 20 years ago when he coordinated the campus review. The current self study was coordinated by John Dotson, a professor of history, who said he believes the honesty of the self study contributed to the positive response from the NCA. "I think we had to be honest if we were going to do it right, and I think that went over very well with the NCA," Dotson said. "They are not shy about going after major universities."

As alluded to by Dotson, the results of an accreditation review are not always as positive as the results received by SIUC. The University of Hawaii’s flagship campus at Manoa is in danger of losing its accreditation according to The Chronicle of Higher Education.

The Western Association of Schools and Colleges, the accreditation organization for the University of Hawaii, informed the Manoa campus its accreditation would be in danger if certain improvements in budgeting, communication and administration are not made. A review will be made again in 2002 to check the progress of the University of Hawaii in these areas.

Dotson pointed out that having such an extensive self study, the NCA did not tell SIUC about any weaknesses that were not already reported in the self study. The fact that the NCA agreed with the University’s assessment about needing improvements in technology and deferred maintenance gives SIUC more credibility with state legislators when asking for funds, Dotson said.

"They are not as bad off as some, but we are a major research university and we should be on the cutting edge, Dotson said. "Having an unbiased eye to help out is very useful to us."

The three-year self study directly involved nearly 150 people divided into eight task forces. The task forces were composed of faculty, students, administration and civil service employees. Dotson said, said the self study and extension of accreditation were not the end of the process, but rather a beginning.

"The whole University needs to get involved to decide what we’re going to do about the report," he said. "Let’s get to work on this."

college and I'm looking forward to fall semester."

Another experienced dean starting work at SIUC is George Swisher, who assumed the position of dean of the College of Engineering on July 1. Swisher served as dean of engineering at Tennessee Technological University from 1989 to 1997 and has led that institution through three accreditations.

He said he hopes to bring that knowledge and expertise to SIUC to build on the already successful programs that exist here.

"This university is a lot bigger than I'm used to, but I look forward to working with the faculty," Swisher said. "I don't expect major changes, but I will try to improve retention and recruitment by combining what I know works with what is already in place here."

The College of Agriculture also will be receiving a new dean. W. David Shoup, a former professor at the University of Tennessee-Martin, will be the new dean Sept. 1 after the current dean, James McGuire, retires Aug. 31.

Although Shoup was unavailable for comment, McGuire said he believes the new dean will be a welcome addition to the faculty.

"He's very outreach-oriented, and he gains confidence very quickly," McGuire said. "He has excellent credentials and experience, and I'm sure he'll provide exceptional leadership for the college."

Shoup's experience includes working as an assistant dean at the University of Florida at Gainesville and as an associate dean at the University of Arizona-Tucson in addition to his most recent post at Tennessee-Martin. McGuire also said he thinks Shoup will face two major challenges as the new dean of the College of Agriculture.

"The two more important aspects of his job will be to reach out and communicate with other agricultural interests in the state and to accomplish all expectations within the given budget," McGuire said. "Budget constraints are also an issue for Dan Worrell, the new dean of the College of Business and Administration. Worrell, who worked as an interim dean for two years at the University of Texas at Arlington, said the state of the budget is always a concern.

"I'm impressed with the high quality of faculty and staff at this college," Worrell said. "I think I'll fit in real well here."
BADGER

Badger was a board member for University Christian Ministries and also very active at the Church of the Good Shepherd.

Knob had fond memories of a mission trip to Mexico when Badger, a large man with a beard who "cut his hair once every two or three years," captured the attention of the Panamanian children.

"They were following him around saying 'Santa Claus! Santa Claus!" Knob said.

"Thus he had them all around him and he was teaching them English words and they were teaching him Spanish," Badger was also involved in multiple environmental organizations, having participated in protests to prevent logging in Shawnee National Forest and worked to promote recycling at SIUC.

Badger's sister, Barbam Penn-Lohman, said what was most important to him was "his love for the environment and trying to protect it."

Badger is remembered by many as a valuable friend and a positive force in everything he was involved with.

Swati Sachithana, a recent SIUC graduate in business and administration, said her friendship with Badger formed over the Friday dinners they had at a different friend's home every week.

"He was a very good cook," she said. "He never ruined it and we always had a good time."

Galen said Badger's presence naturally made people feel comfortable. He was extremely generous, just in the way he listened to people," Galen said. "He was always interested in helping people."

Though most people describe him as a quiet man, Galen said it was always obvious when Badger was having fun. "He had a really big laugh," he said. "When he laughed, everyone laughed with him."

In his first new student convocation address Friday, Harvey Welsh, vice chancellor for Student Affairs, brought a glowing sentiment to Shelby Auditorium.

"We will take good care of your daughters and sons," Welsh told the new students and their parents after explaining his welcome to them.

"SIUC is a great university," Welsh said, "I am proud to be in December, but I will never retire from this University.

The new student convocation welcomed students and showed the face points that distinguish SIUC from other universities. It began at 10 a.m. and about 200 students attended. SIUC staff, faculty, and student representatives attended the convocation. They urged new students to get involved in programs and extra-curricular activities, through speeches and visual entertainment.

"Shakko ALL," a video presentation created by University Photocommunications, included clips of activities that are available for students to join.

"We have 175,000 alumni from 50 states and throughout the world," interim Chancellor John Jackson said. "They bring a strong legacy to us."

Other addresses came from Heather Ester, Undergraduate Student Government President; chairwoman, and 1999 Chemistry Graduate Robyn Oben.

Ester spoke about how SIUC might be a lot about life and people. She explained that her high expectations of SIUC, the student and herself.

Ester encouraged students to get involved in University programs.

"SIUC staff and faculty mingled with new students at a reception in the Old Main Hall following the convocation. Student Life Advisors were T-shirts labeled "Ask Me."

"The convocation gives students the chance to see what SIUC has to offer and makes the transition a little easier," said Ben Andrews, a senior MLA in administrative justice from Spring Valley. New students expressed fresh enthusiasm after the convocation.

"It's kind of nice to see some alumni and family," said Chris Uteck, an undecided freshman from Geneva. "I'm excited for this year."
LICENSE

Only commissioners Maggie Flanagan and Brad Cole voted in favor of granting Maker the liquor license.

Commissioner Larry Briggs voted against approving the license, stating a bar in that area would not be beneficial.

"It's not going to attract the people you would like it to," he said. "I can't support it as a B-2, but I could if it was an A (license)"

Commissioner Mike Neill agreed with Briggs about giving the establishment a class A license.

A class A license requires a business to make more than half its profits from the sale of food. Maker said a restaurant would not be profitable in that location.

He said he did consider making the building a restaurant but saw much greater benefits as a bar. "One of the problems would be to get people there," he said. "There is not a place to park, and people would not want to pay to park there."

The concerns of several commissioners for the bar not only involved the cap for the area, but the extra crowds it would bring to the Strip at closing time.

But Flanagan said stirring crowds on the Strip were just unpleasant memories that are just memories. "We can't predict what will happen after hours," she said. "I do believe in taking risks, and it needs a good business person to make it fly."

A grievance filed by the SIU faculty association June 8 against the SIU Board of Trustees over the termination of Argersinger as chancellor was denied and will be moving to the next step of the process — arbitration.

The grievance was filed as a special meeting of the faculty association executive board and the Departmental Representative Council in June. It contends the termination of Argersinger was done in violation of the association’s bylaws with the board.

Argersinger fired as SIU chancellor

Rumors swirling around the SIUC campus concerning the status of its chancellor were publicly confirmed June 3 when Jo Ann Argersinger announced she had been terminated as chancellor by the SIU Board of Trustees.

A few days later, the board officially terminated Argersinger, and John Jackson, vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and provost, was named to the interim chancellor for SIUC.

These events came after a May 26 closed special meeting of the board at which trustees asked for Argersinger’s resignation. Argersinger maintains she was actually fired at this meeting, though University officials say she was not officially dismissed until June 5 meeting.

Under the name of her dismissal, Argersinger was placed on administrative leave until Dec. 31 but can remain a tenured professor at the History Department after that. She was also told she would receive her salary and benefits as chancellor until that time.

Argersinger has filed suit against the board contesting she was fired in violation of the Open Meetings Act and is seeking her reinstatement as chancellor.

Currently, all suits in the case are pending.

Changes take place in SIUC administration

New administration changes took place at SIUC during the summer, with the most recent addition to the administration being former U.S. Representative Glen Fordham.

Fordham began as the vice chancellor for the college of education and will be replacing James Teague, who retired June 30.

John Jackson, former vice chancellor of Academic Affairs and Provost, was named to the position on the SIUC campus.

Saluki receiver dies in single-car accident

Two members of the SIU football team, wide receiver Charles Teague and defensive lineman Brian Broussard, were involved in a single-vehicle accident within the city limits.

Jackson, Miss., May 13 while returning to their home in New Orleans following the spring season.

Teague, who would be a junior this year, received massive head injuries and died early the next morning at University Medical Center in Jackson. He was 19.

Broussard, 20, suffered only minor injuries.

The SIU football program is remembering Teague with a memorial in place of his locker. Covered by a cloth, Teague’s helmet hangs on the hook of his helmet rests on the top shelf adjacent to his Bible. The memorial reads: “Charles Teague, Jr. Deserve Victory”
City rezones for apartment complex

The Carbondale City Council in July rezoned a parcel of land south of the University to make way for construction of a 700-plus unit apartment complex.

Atlanta-based Place Collegiate Properties plans to build Saluki Place, a student-oriented housing complex with 17 apartment buildings and 203 apartments.

The new apartments will feature private bathrooms, private keys and, panic alarm buttons. The complex also has a club house and recreation facilities.

The first phase of construction will be ready by August 2000 with 504 bedrooms and 11 buildings. Construction on the complex began earlier this month.

Group brings "HOPE" to SIUC community

SIU Help Overcome the Present Emergency, an umbrella organization dedicated to the removal of SIU President Ted Sanders and the restructuring of the SIU Board of Trustees, emerged after the firing of former chancellor Jo Ann Argersinger in June.

H.O.P.E. is headed by Jane Arthurs, associate professor of history and anthropology, and claims to represent members of constituencies including the Graduate Council, the Faculty Senate and the Graduate and Professional Student Council.

With contributions from members, SIU H.O.P.E. has purchased signs and held events in support of Argersinger throughout the summer and autumn.

Belles to welcome football recruits

A new Registered Student Organization called Southern Belles will form this fall to welcome SIU football recruits and their families to campus.

Assistant football coaches Joe Tumpkin and Craig Najar developed the idea for the organization at SIUC from similar programs at other universities.

Football coaches have solicited the help of student groups, including sororities and the Saluki Volunteer Corps. The group, which will become a Registered Student Organization this fall, is open to all students.

Giant City visitors’ center opens

Giant City State Park opened a $1.3 million visitor’s center in July.

The center features several exhibits displaying the kind of wildlife and habitat that can be found within the area. The center also holds a 10-minute video that talks about the history of the park.

The center is located across from the picnic area No. 4 near Giant City Lodge. A ribbon-cutting ceremony led by Gov. George Ryan is scheduled to take place soon, though a formal date has not yet been set.

Computer lab opens in Quigley Hall

A $500,000 state-of-the-art computer lab opened June 23 in Quigley Hall.

The project was co-sponsored by the School of Art and Design and the Department of Applied Arts to provide a fully equipped set of specialized workstations for students in the programs.

The new lab, which houses 23 stations of Macintosh G-3s and 23 stations of PCs, will occupy rooms 106, 107, 108 and 109 of Quigley Hall.

Students and faculty wishing to obtain computer software for Internet and e-mail capability can purchase a Salukiware CD-ROM for $5 at various campus outlets.

Paul Walker, a senior in architecture said he thinks Salukiware is a necessity for Internet use at SIUC.

"I need to have the programs to use the Internet," he said. "I know it's high and that it works.

Salukiware is a CD-ROM that is compatible with Macintosh, Windows 95 and 98 platforms. It includes programs such as America Online, Internet Explorer, McAfee VirusScan, Newspring Communicator, QuickTime, Sniffle Expander and a few others.

In addition to the software included on the CD, users can find helpful documentation about configuring both dial-up and Ethernet connections. The CD also contains the 1998-1999 undergraduate catalog, as well as the 1998-1999 graduate catalog.

Issac Taylor, a senior in information technology and an employee at the Computer Learning Center help desk, said Salukiware is fast and easy.

"Salukiware is very straightforward," he said. "It's a whole lot easier than trying to get and install all the programs separately. It does a really good job of walking you through step by step.

Michael Bruens, microphone specialist at the information technology center service center and creator of the Salukiware CD, said the goal of the CD is not to make money, in all proceedo go toward maintaining the rest Salukiware CD.

"We don't sell the product to make money," Bruens said. "Any extra money over the cost to produce will go towards getting a licensee to have new programs."

Hurricane Bret blasts sparse south Texas

Claudia Koeber and Mike Clary

HOUSTON—A powerful Hurri cane Bret blasted across the south Texas coast Sunday with winds of 140 miles an hour, largely sparing vulnerable Corpus Christi for a landfall south of the city in one of the least-populated coastal areas in the United States.

The eye of the storm moved over deserted Padre Island National Seashore about 5 p.m. CDT and then slammed into Keneddy County, a vast grassland prairie that is home to portions of the famous King Ranch and more cattle than people. Human population of the entire county: about 3,000.

"If there's a good place for a dangerous hurricane to go, that's it," said Bill Reed, a forecaster with the National Weather Service in Houston. Ahead of the storm, tens of thousands of coastal residents fled inland, jamming highways with traffic as winds drove rain in horizontal sheets and ratted street signs in Corpus Christi and Keneddy County. Police said Interstate 37, the main highway out of Keneddy County, was virtually bumper-to-bumper for 150 miles, all the way to San Antonio.

By nightfall more than 3,400 people had checked into emergency shelters in nine coastal counties. In San Antonio, some hotels offered reduced rates for evacuees.

Gov. George W. Bush asked that a wave "rare be declared, thereby n. . . be state eligible for emer­ gency federal aid.

Near the storm's center, the cows huddled down on the range, while people who decided against evacuation gathered in shelters, mostly in the county seat of Keneddy, home to ranch hands and cowboys about 30 miles north of Corpus Christi. Ranchers said the livestock have a way of finding shelter behind fences and other natural barriers.

"We're pretty well-prepared," said Keneddy County Sheriff Rafael Cuellar Jr. "We have almost the whole town in shelters, a school, a church, and, if we need it, the courthouse.

As the eye of the storm moved over land, Hurricane Bret's winds slowly diminished, but emergency officials warned of the poth of flash floods. As much as 15 to 20 inches of rain were possible overnight and Monday as Bret headed west, threatening towns to the Rio Grande Valley and across the border in Mexico.

While SIUC does have programs directed at recruiting minorities, Seymour Bryson, associate chancellor for diversity, said African-American students are responding to an environment that makes people feel welcome.

"I think it's overall diversity," he said. "It's a complement that minorities choose this university.

Bryson said the quality of education at SIUC is enriched as a whole by diversity in its high.

"It does a very good job of preparing students for the global economy," he said.

The SIUC Office of Admissions and Records reports that 14.2 percent of the University's undergraduate stu­ dent body is African American, almost matching the Illinois African-American population of 14.9 percent.

For Jackson, ranking fourth for graduating African-American students, diversity is high.

"It does a good job of preparing students for the global economy," he said.

E-mail is convenient and free to students

CHRIS KRAMER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Students can set up free e-mail accounts through SIUC’s Information Technology office, providing a broader range of ways students can communicate with professors, family and friends.

Albert Allen, assistant director of campus systems, said there are two ways incoming students can establish SIUC e-mail accounts. Students can set up their accounts with assistance from personnel at any of the four Computer Learning Centers on campus, or they may set up the link provided on the Computer Learning Center website.

Alon Savidor, a freshman in computer science from Israel, said e-mail provides him with an affordable way to communicate with his friends and family on the other side of the world. “I’ll check my e-mail a few times per week. If I have time, maybe every day,” Savidor said. “I’ll be able to talk to my friends at home.”

For many students and professors like Atushi Inoue, a professor of computer science from Japan, e-mail is an important way to communicate for both professional and personal reasons. “I consider e-mail as a main communication channel,” Inoue said. “With e-mail, I don’t have to have any time constraints. If my office was the only communication channel, students would have less ways to communicate.”

Bart Trescott, professor of economics, said although he does not use e-mail for teaching, it is a good idea. He uses e-mail both personally and professionally. “Anything that promotes communication is a good idea,” Trescott said. “I have used e-mail to exchange manuscripts with a scholar in Taiwan.”

According to Allen, there were between 16,000 and 18,000 active SIUC e-mail accounts last year by faculty, staff and students.

Kevin is an outstanding coach who has outstanding coaching credentials.

Quansah coached football luminaries Bill Parcells, head coach of the New York Jets, and Chicago Bears head coach Dick Jauron. About White's credentials, Quansah is banking that White's success as a player will be contagious among the current Salukis.

"I think Adrian is a great addition to our staff, somebody our players can follow as a role model," Quansah said. White said his decision to contact Quansah about entering the coaching ranks was a "whole lot" of things that we didn't have," McClelland said. "It's making it a lot easier back in the secondary to rely on technique, and not so much skill. Slippy play in the defensive backfield has been a bugaboo for the Salukis in recent years, but White said the time has come for defensive back Carlo McClelland to take a more prominent role in the secondary. "It's going to be a lot of new techniques and new things that we didn't have," McClelland said. "It's making it a lot easier back in the secondary to rely on technique, and not so much skill."

Although SIU is coming off a 3-8 season and has new players leading the Gateway Conference, White likes to think his defensive backs will be a big part of stunning the skeptics and making the season fun to watch for Saluki fans.

"If I lived in Carbondale, I would try to find out where a good beer is," he said. Saluki noses Tightman converted back Rick Hayes, who is being counted on to see significant playing time this season, will miss about four to six weeks after tearing his pincer finger during practice.

White was then drafted by the New York Giants, where he spent five seasons before moving to the Green Bay Packers in 1992 and later joining the New England Patriots. McClelland is eager to play for his new coach, and said White has "bought a whole lot" of enthusiasm to the practice field.

"[White] is teaching a lot of new techniques and new things that we didn't have," McClelland said. "It's making it a lot easier back in the secondary to rely on technique, and not so much skill. Series of injuries slows Irish

Brock Williams, a starter in eight games last season at cornerback, was injured by the university before the start of camp. Albert Poree and Jason Beckstrom, freshmen expected to compete for playing time this season, have been limited by injuries. Poree has had back problems, while Poree has had a groin injury.

Lance Lenz, a senior defensive tackle who started in eight games last season, injured his right knee and is not expected to return for a minimum of four weeks. Arizon Jones, a senior defensive tackle, has been limited in practice by a shoulder injury. Andy Wingo, a junior defensive tackle, has a groin problem. Josh Cline, a senior defensive end, his missed two days with a bruised knee.

The most glaring problems have been in the secondary, a unit that will face serious challenges in games that will set the tone of the season. Notre Dame allowed an average of 205.4 passing yards per game last season.

Gunter is hoping they're right. "It's a concern," Davie said of the secondary this week. "I'm very confident he'll be ready for the first ballgame," Greg Guenther, the director of the university's sports medicine program, said that Weaver's status for the opening game will not be known until early next week.

Weaver was injured Tuesday, the most recent disruption the Irish have faced in their preseason camp.

Michigan, the opponent in Notre Dame's second game, threw for 322 yards in the Irish last season.

Poosle, the Xin was injured in Notre Dame's second game, threw for 263 yards. Duree Bess completed 24-of-36 passes and led the Boilermakers to a commanding position before he threw a pair of fourth-quarter interceptions.

Illini pride starts to kick in after two years

Whether that translates into more victories than last season's four, well... "It's a difference feeling this year," Turner said. "Along with optimism and enthusiasm I sense a little more confidence than we've had. We have a lot of players who have played that contract. Starting all over again is not something he relishes."

Guenther would prefer to extend the sense of urgency that we have at that position. Whether that means more confidence than we've had last season. "I'm very confident he's got more confidence than we've had," Guenther said. "I'm very confident he'll be ready for the first ballgame." "He's a priority for us.""

Football staff bolstered by two late additions

Joining the SIU coaching staff for the season are Kevin Faulkner, who will mentor the wide receivers, and Adrian White, assigned to oversee the defensive backs.

Kevin Faulkner has already set the all-time Saluki record with 120 career receptions. Along with Craig, Faulkner is counting on talented returning sophomores Brian Hamlett and Mark Shasteen to develop into the deep and talented group of receivers.

Adrian White may have wished to bring both quality and quantity to the staff. "Kevin is an outstanding coach who has outstanding coaching credentials," Quarless said. "After a lot of consideration of what we want to do offensively, he was a great fit for us and he's doing a real fine job.

Prior to his gig with the Lobos, Faulkner spent five years at the University of New Mexico in addition to having coached at the University of Massachusetts and New Mexico Highlands University, his alma mater.

Faulkner has noticed a sense of confidence emerge among the players, and hopes his calming influence will mesh well with his recruiting role.

"The main thing I'm going to bring to these guys is the comfort to know that if they listen to what I say, I'll be able to get them to turn their potential to productivity," Faulkner said. "Hopefully, my arrival here will have a positive effect on the passing game and in some way a positive effect on the kids.

He intends to show opposing defenses three and four wide receiver sets, a tactic that should be made worthwhile by what he calls a deep and talented crop of receivers.

Faulkner has the pleasure of coaching senior Cornell Craig, who has already set the all-time Saluki record with 120 career receptions.

Along with Craig, Faulkner is counting on talented returning sophomores Brian Hamlett and Mark Shasteen to develop into the type of playmakers that can help the Salukis avoid last year's costly receiving core.

Adrian White, new Saluki assistant coach for defensive backs, goes over play strategy after practice Thursday with a young Saluki fan from the Therapy Center in Carterville. The center operates a summer program in which special needs and developmentally-impoverished children have the opportunity to experience different events throughout the community.
