Student triumphs over tragedies to live life to fullest

By Laura Milbrath

The Student Center nearly empty in the early evening hours. Small groups of people, clutching wildly at their coats, still came through the doors, eager to escape the wind that was whipping the piles of dried leaves into small cyclones.

Grumbling their discontent at the weather and voicing their complaints loudly, they walked quickly, seemingly blind to the girl sitting quietly nearby in her wheelchair, who perhaps had a right to complain most of all.

BUT SUSAN NEGRIN doesn't want to complain. The 19-year-old sophomore in Recreation Management has lived through more than many people experience in a lifetime. Two tragic accidents brought her close to death and destroyed her dreams of being an Olympic skater. Today, she is in a wheelchair but faces life with a zeal that many would Doctors told Negrin that she would never walk again after she was hit with an aluminum baseball bat at the age of 8 that left the left side of her body paralyzed.

NEGRIN REFUSED to believe their verdict and began working to prove to herself and others that she could overcome the odds.

"I didn't want to spend my life in a wheelchair," Negrin said, "so I worked really hard and I was able to walk again." Because she needed exercise to regain her strength, Negrin began to figure skate and after two and a half years, won the Southwestern Figure Skating Championship in Houston,

"I was the youngest champion in the history of the competition. That was probably the proudest moment in my whole life. I was sup-posed to go to the Olympics in 1984," Negrin said

But fate dealt another blow in December of 1978 after Negrin returned home from training to celebrate Christtraining to celebrate Christ-mas. An arsonist set fire to the Negrin home killing her 8-year-old sister. Negrin and her mother were pronounced clinically dead from smoke inhalation but were revived at the hospital.

The doctors told my father that I would die before the night was over and if by some miracle I lived, I would be in a coma for the rest of my life," Negrin said.

AGAIN IGNORING the odds, Negrin's inner strength brought her out of the coma in just six weeks. She began to recognize people after two more weeks. No one had the courage to tell her about her sister's death until about a month after she came out of he coma because they feared the shock would force her back into a coma. Unable to move into a coma. Unable to move or speak and her dreams of figure skating lost, Negrin saw no hope for her future. She said "Skating was my life and I might as well have been dead at that point. In a way I was Negrin's father did see hope for his daughter's future and in February 1979 sent his daughter to the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago where she received extensive therapy on her arms, legs and voice. After four months she could speak again and relearned the in-formation from kindergarten through the seventh grade in only about six months.

"THEY SAID THE average person would not have completed that for two or three years but because of my years but because of my determination, I was able to complete it in less than one year," Negrin said.

Negrin attended Main East High School in Park Ridge where she says she enjoyed "fair grades and was pretty popular" but college, she says is even better. "I like the people a lot and I love the independence."

Shiite Moslem militiamen invade camp, kill teacher

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Shiite Moslem militiamen stormed a defenseless Palestinian refugee camp in south Lebanon Wednesday, executed a school teacher before hundreds of residents and burned their homes, police said. The attackers, armed with rocket-propelled grenades and machine guns, faced no resistance from the 5,000 inhabitants of Al Bas, a refugee camp outside the southern port city of Tyre, 46 miles south of Beirut, police sources said. MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) - The ruling Sandinista Front MANAGUA, Nicaragua (OPI)—The runing Sandmista Front Wednesday criticized President Reagan's new national security adviser, saying Frank Carlucci has been involved in "dirty work and coup attempts in the Third World." Carlucci, 56, was named Tuesday to the post after Navy Vice Adm. John M. Poindexter resigned in the controversy over the channeling of the proceeds of U.S.-Iranian arms deals to U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels.

Taiwan's ruling party wary of independence

TAIPEI, Taiwan (UPI) — Taiwan's ruling party Wednesday warned that a new opposition party's call for independence from mainland China could lead to a conflict with the communist nation. Three days before legislative elections that will for the first time include an organized opposition party, members of the ruling Nationalist Party noted communist China has threatened to attack Taiwan if it tries to declare independence.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION AT SIU-C

SIU-C PROFESSIONAL STAFF ORGANIZING COMMITTEE-IEA/NEA

The Southern Illinois University Administration has stated its commitment to an Affirmative Action Policy that is a safeguard against discrimination based on sex, race, and/or religion. The establishment of the Affirmative Action Policy at SIUC sets the initial stage for compliance to all state and federal anti-discrimination laws.

Although this policy is in place at the university, it appears that the appropriate procedures to insure the "spirit" of Affirmative Action in the search for the Athletic Director and Chancellor were not followed. As we remember, serious questions were raised regarding the university's commitment to its Affirmative Action policy with respect to these two

It is imparative that SIUC adhere to its own Affirmative Action Policy when searching for candidates to fill any university position. The upcoming presidential search is by no means an exception. Therefore, the SIUE Professional Staff Organizing Committee of the Illinois Education Association/ National Education Association calls upon SIUC to adhere to its Affirmative Action Policy in the search for the new University President.

THE SAGE WHO CONCOCTED the "what you don't know won't hurt you" maxim obviously never had to tangle with the agony of post-season college football.

agony of post-season college football.

Agony is an abundant resource when your team plays to the best of its ability only to have its National Collegiate Athletic Association playoff hopes fall one vote short of fruition.

There is a lifetime of knowledge about personal pride, pain and character that the Saluki gridders received while waiting, in vain, for their squad to get that Division I-AA playoff berth.

It's valuable knowledge that many of us will never obtain. Too few of us don't take ourselves to the limits of our abilities in order to reach a goal.

an exciting season that brought the football program another step closer to repeating its near-perfect 1983 finish.

The gridders dismissed the generally lackluster previews many local football "experts" handed out prior to the season's kickoff, bandaged up their many potentially debilitating injuries and fought their way to a second place conference finish.

Sadly, the University and Carbondale communities aren't as proud. Most of the people in these communities — "complainers" or "gripers" we'll call them — sit in front of a television somewhere near McAndrew Stadium and gripe about the team's flaw "there". the team's flaw "here" or the team's flaw "there umpteenth time.

THEN THEY TOSS BACK ANOTHER BEER, belch and continue to watch the St. Louis Cardnals get stomped for the umpteenth time.

Once the Salukis' season ends, and the complainers don't like what they see, they complain even more.

This year, the gridders finished in the Division I-AA Top 20 and won five consecutive "must-win" games to remain in playoff contention, a true feat even for defending champions.

In return, we didn't fill McAndrew once. Even when Coach Ray Dorr went out on a limb and guaranteed a win against Northern Iowa in exchange for a sold-out stadium the only takers were the same people who attend nearly all the home games.

THE SALUKIS WON, WE LOST.

We don't mean to downplay any of the University's other sports, but if this school is going to maintain such a premium on football in its sports program we should afford the football program a little more respect.

Let's dispense with the disrespect where the gridders are

Let's dispense with the disrespect where the gridders are concerned next season, as well as our other athletes.

And by the way, if you meet up with a Saluki athlete somewhere on or near campus, take the time to thank him or her. They're working to excel not only for their own education but for the University as representatives of school spirit and accomplishment. accomplishment.

It's a shame that more people don't possess that same initiative and pride.

As for the Saluki gridders, way to go dogs.

Instead of saluting soldiers, refuse to support war tactics

The message of Jesus is often as misunderstood today as it was at the time of Jesus' crucifixion. Campus minister Phil Nelson has demonstrated this misunderstanding in his Nov. 19 letter that asked us to "salute or applaud" those students on campus who stand in uniform ready to defend our Nelson compares these soldiers' commitment to freedom to Jesus' death on the freedom to Jesus' death on the cross. Unfortunately, Nelson forgot to mention that Jesus did not kill any other humans in his "fight" for freedom. He also neglected the fact that soldiers are trained to kill the "enemies" of the U.S. Government. Nelson failed to remind us that Jesus separated God's affairs from governmental affairs with his declaration, "Pay to God (only) what belongs to God." These facts render Nelson's comparison grossly fallacious. comparison grossly fallacious.

Nelson is indebted, as all of us should be, to those men and women of the past who risked and gave their lives for our country. In his admiration of their selflessness, however, he overlooked the forced nature of their service. Never in of their service. Never in history have all or even many soldiers wanted to fight. Let's end this silly, romantic otion of martyrdom that honors power-hungry nationalists like Ronald Reagan and calls for blind acceptance of the statements of his administration. Third World Connection

Southern Illinois, Third World join in 'global village'

By Toby Eckert Staff Writer

Many, if not most, people have a view of the world as being composed of a number of mutually exclusive nations that have little to do with one another beyond the formal relations established by international diplomacy.

This rather benign view of the world goes rand in hand with a strong belief in national self-sufficiency and regional isolation. But a close look at the current international situation reveals a world-wide interdependence that reaches down into every city and town in the United States.

United States.

No matter how distant Southern Illinois may seem from the economic and political power centers of the world, it too is caught up in the complex set of relations that have transformed the world into what some call a "global village."

Since the end of World

Since the end of World War II, a group of nations has emerged that is challenging the traditional economic and political dominance of Europe and North America. These nations — collectively known as the Third World — have contributed greatly to the evolution of the global village.

Look around. How many products within your reach bear labels inscribed with the names of such far-off places as Taiwann, South Korea or Pakistan?

Area supermarkets and grocers are stocked with tomatoes from Mexico; bananas from Honduras; coffee, tea and spices from Brazil. The grapes and peaches that many have grown accustomed to having in the winter months are from Chile

SIU-C provides a plethora examples of area ties with the Third

The International Food and Agriculture Development Department in the School of Agriculture has sent faculty members to Brazil, China, Sri Lanka, Zambia and Pakistan to help train agriculture instructors in those countries. It also trains international students who will return to their homelands to apply the skills they have learned here.

Faculty exchanges — such as those currently taking place in the School of Technical Careers — help breathe intellectual life into the University, as well as diminish stereotypes and misconceptions that arise between different nationalities.

And, like other colleges and universities across the U.S., SIU-C is a prime recruiting ground for the Peace Corps, an organization that sends volunteers abroad to aid lesser developed nations in such diverse areas as sanitation and literacy.

Not everyone sees relations with the Third World in a positive light, however. Some see Third World imports as a major cause of unemployment in such ailing domestic trades as the textile and apparel industry. An estimated 60 percent of all textile imports come from four nations in Southeast Asia. Union leaders and congressmen have pushed for protectionist legislation that would curb such imports.

Yet others claim the legislation will only make matters worse by sparking retaliatory protectionism leading to greater unemployment in businesses relying on cheap imported material and finished goods.

These are only a few examples of the many ties Southern Illinois has to the Third World. There are more — many more. And no matter what the pros and cons of the matter, the fact is that the U.S. is no longer isolated.

What follows is a series of articles detailing just some of the many ties Southern Illinois has to the Third World. It is the culmination of a project undertaken by students in Prof. Robert Spellman's Journalism 311 class.

Much of the inspiration for the project was provided by John Maxwell Hamilton's book "Main Street America and the Third World," which contains articles to the Third World from newspapers throughout the nation.

Editor's Note: These stories are the first in a series on the connections between Southern Illinois and the Third World. Other articles will appear in Friday and Monday editions.

School of Agriculture lends helping hands, knowledge

SIU-C is one of a handful of universities pegged for strengthening U.S. roles in international agriculture development. The International Food and Agricultural Development Department in the School of Agriculture coordinates all of the international development work being done by the University, said Howard Olson, head of the department.

Ninety-nine percent of the IMC's funds come from the federal government, Fantozzi said, and cutbacks in social service spending by the Reagan administration "really cut into our program considerably."

"It's made it a lot harder for "It's made it a lot harder for farm workers who come here and don't find work to get employment services," Fantozzi said. "We're regulated as to who we can help and how much we can help them. The problem is that we can no longer serve the entire family."

Nearly half the migrants who come to Southern Illinois each year are children. Like most other children in the area, they go to school while their parents work. But their's is a special case: Their parents move with the crops, sometimes staying in one area for only two or three weeks before moving on. This presents a serious problem for children and their teachers

"WE'VE HAD some who have been in seven different schools in one school year," says Dolores Koster, the director of the Migrant Children's Evening Program at Unity Point School in Carbondale.

The evening program is designed to help the children with their studies after school since their parents, most of whom never finished high school, are ill-suited for the task.

THE SCHOOL also operates a night program during the summer for high school students who work during the day. Both programs as directed by the Illine's Board of Higher Education and funded through the Title 1 compensatory education compensatory education program, Koster said. Taking into account the rootlessness of the migrant workers' lifestyle and the effect it has on their children's education, it is little wonder that the children often become migrant laborers themselves

Fantozzi said one of the group's main goals is to get migrant workers "out of the migrant stream and into more permanent jobs." She estimated that 300 to 400 migrant workers per year are placed in permanent jobs and settle in Illinois.

OPEC slowdown relieves local oil industries worries

By William Brady

Marginal relief has come for oil industry workers in Southern Illinois since the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed to cut oil production by about 20 percent for September and October, and further relief may come if OPEC extends the cut to Dec. 31.

However, the relief thus far has been insufficient to stem the economic hardship of local companies companies.

"The production cut by OPEC has increased the price of oil in Southern Illinois to about $13 a barrel," says Charles "Dick" Collins, an independent producer and part-owner of Collins Brothers Oil Co. in Mount Vernon. And, if OPEC members extend the cut to the end of the year as they are currently debating, prices may rise to $18 a barrel, he said.

YET, WHILE $13 a barrel is up from earlier in the year when the Saudi Arabian in-duced glut placed prices in the $10 a barrel range, it is today still far short of the $17 a barrel break-even point, Colling said Collins said.

As such, the economic woes of oil companies in Southern Illinois have yet to bottom out, he said

Workers are still being laid off, wells are still being abandoned and oil exploration is nearly at a standstill.

"So far this year, about one-third of our employees have third of our employees have been laid off and about one-half of our wells have been shut down," Coilins said. Collins' company employed about 50 people and operated about 280 wells before low-priced oil forced these reductions.

CONDITIONS hazardous for those who are still with the company. "Some have had their hours cut to part-time," Collins said, ad-ding that "if prices do not rise tney 1 too may be facing a layoff.

Oil exploration has practically ceased. Not only is oil exploration an unappealing prospect at this time, but banks would surely reject out of hand all loan applications for such ventures with current conditions as they are, Collins noted.
Collins has been in business comins has been in obsiness since 1942. His company, like most local companies, is a family-owned business whose wells are chiefly strippers— wells that produce 10 barrels or less a day

"About 6,500 Illinois workers owe their income to the 30,000 wells which pump about $1 billion a year into the economy."

- Leland Russell, Illinois Oil and Gas Association

ALTHOUGH MOST wells in Southern Illinois are strippers, the region has made an im-portant contribution in oil supply since it was discovered in the state in 1889.

in the state in 1889.

To date, some 126,000 wells have yielded more than 4 billion barrels of oil — 30,264,711 in 1985 alone.

Moreover, in the early 1900s Illinois' oil production doubled that of Texas and nearly equaled that of all other oil states combined states combined.

And though Southern Illinois only accounts for 2 percent of the U.S. oil supply today, the industry is still important to the region.

"ABOUT 6,500 Illinois workers owe their income to the 30,000 wells which pump about $1 billion a year into the economy," Russell, says I Leland president of the Illinois Oil and Gas Association.

In addition to oil-related workers, thousands of others such as water haulers, butane sellers, electrical contractors and construction workers depend on the oil industry for income accordingly, the difficulties facing Collins' company and most other oil companies in Southern Illinois have an impact on the state's economy.

ACCORDING TO Scout Check Inc., only 973 drilling permits were issued from January to September, This is down from the 2,405 permits issued during the same period last year.

Correspondingly, the Illinois Oil and Gas Association, in an August report, estimated 2,000 oil-related workers have been laid off statewide because of low-price oil — a 20 percent unemployment rate for the industry.

Moreover, when the nearly $1 billion a year industry shrinks to current levels, the state finds itself at a loss for revenue

Russell estimated that the state will re eive 80 percent less in taxes from the oil business this year than it did last year. About $200 million in revenue was paid to the state last year

RUSSELL SAID some companies have had to file bankruptcy, but noted that others are surviving by operating at "bare minimum" levels.

For those in the oil business who can centifine to before as ror those in the oil business who can continue to hang on, OPEC'c decision to produce only 16.8 million barrels a day might help them attain job security. OPEC was producing 20.6 million barrels a day beforehand.

But like previous OPEC agreements, this pact and its possible extension have aroused simultaneous optimism and skepticism in the Southern Illinois oil patch.

'Our Town' reflects values of ordinary American life

According to Cash Baxter, director of "Gur Town" the universe, the cycle of life, and billions of emotions can be found in the fictional hamlet of Grover's Corners.

'It's a kind of microcosm of the universe, said Baxter, who is a lecturer in theater. "There's a little piece of us in all these people. Essentially, it's a story of growing up, marrying and dying."

"Our Town" first opened on Broadway in 1938. The play surprised 1938 audiences and critics with its minimal set, pantomine, and use of a character called the Stage Manager as a link with the Manager as a link with the Baxter said the beauty of "Our Town" lies in its sim-plicity. "It shows how un-complicated life can be. It oks back at a simple way life and points out the enormity of the people's values.

Like the original production of "Our Town," Baxter said the McLeod production will use very few props and almost noscenery

"It's all pantomime— there's hardly a real prop on stage other than some um-brellas and an old man's cane." Baxter said

Baxter said the show's pantomime substitutes for props and scenery become kind of a game for the audience "You're forced to listen very carefully to the words – even if you don't want to," Baxter said "The show is so moving because it is un-decorated" decorated

One aspect of the play few eople recognize is that the people recognize is that the words "hundreds." thousands," and "millions" occur more frequently than any other words in the script Baxter said.

The message behind these huge numbers, he said is the comparison between the lownspeople and the millions of other people who have gone through the cycle of life and death beyond Grover's Cor-

DE article nets third in Hearst competition

A Daily Egyptian article about the University's 12-year attempt to clean up emissions from the power plant has received national acclaim from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation.

Hearst Foundation.
The story, written by Catherine Edman, a senior in journalism, finished third in the nation in the Hearst Foundation's annual general newswriting competition. Edman earned a $750 scholarship from Hearst for her article. The School of Journalism also received a $750 matching grant from Hearst.

Cartoons to spoof war toys

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — The nation's top newspaper cartoonists, including eight Pulitzer Prize winners, will spoof war-related toys for children in their December cartoons.

cartoons.

The crusade is the brainchild of Bob Staake, a St. Louis cartoonist who says he is shocked by the growing number of guns, tanks and grenades on the country stoy shelves.

tanks and grenades on the country stoy shelves.

"The toy manufacturers are in essence telling our children that war is a harmless game." Staake said. "At a time when we are supposed to be celebrating peace, it seems insane to turn war into a Christmas present."

Staake, 29, said his concern began last December when he saw his 18-month-old son holding a toy plastic hand grenade at a neighbor's house.

At least 50 and perhaps as many as 150 cartoonists will draw anti-war toy cartoons that will appear in newspapers around the country from Dec. 10 through Dec. 24. Staake said

The eight Pulitzer Prize winners who say they will take part are Tony Auth of the Philadelphia Inquirer, Paul Conrad of the Los Angeles Times, Tom Darcy of Newsday, Eugene Payne of the Charlotte (N.C.) bbserver, Mike Peters of he Dayton (Ohio) Daily News, Ben Sargent of the Austin (Texas) American Statesman, Paul Szep of the Boston Globe and Don Wright of the Miami News.

Staake's cartoons appear each week in the Easy Reader, an alternative newspaper in Los Angeles.

Edman spent more than a month tracking down the story, which began with a tip from a Physical Plant worker. The story focused on attempts by the University to install a "precipitator" system to clean ash emissions from the Power Plant smokestack. Construction delays and equipment malfunctions had the warted efforts to get the precipitator system working.

struction delays and equipment malfunctions had thwarted efforts to get the precipitator system working. The Hearst Foundation solicited articles from 88 accredited journalism schools throughout the country. Each school submits what it considers the best stories written by current students in the past year.

Hearst conducts the competition under the auspices of the Association of Schools of Journalism and Mass Communication—the organization that accredits American journalism schools. Hearst awards are considered to represent the nation's best examples of college journalism.

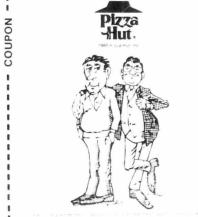

The Hearst Foundation holds six monthly competitions each year, awarding a !otal $137,500 in scholarships and grants.

Green claims no Cub safe from possible winter trade

Chicago Cubs are willing to trade any player on the roster to improve the team, team President Dallas Green said Wednesday

Green said no Cub is con-sidered an "untouchable" but conceded players like former National League Most Valuable Player Ryne Sand-berg and shortstop Shawon Dunston aren't likely to be

"Anyone is up for grabs," Green said. "I'm a good listener. We're willing to listen to anything. The Chicago Cubs want to make trades. Whether the other clubs feel that way remains to be seen.'

There has been a trend toward fewer trades at the meetings, and Green said without a deadline for general managers to face, he isn't optimistic there will be many deals will be made at next week's nieetings at Hellywood.

Green said he has spoken to agents for outfielder Andre Dawson and picher Jack Morris, two of this year's top free agents, but is reluctant to spend great sums of money for eterans with multi-year

"We'd prefer to build from within. We think we're in a position with a stronger farm system to make some deals for younger players, trading some of our players with big con-tracts," Green said.

the Salukis did not make the 16-team NCAA I-AA playoff field, Dorr and staff have been busy recruiting to fill the holes on the squad left the holes on the squad left by graduating seniors. With the loss of 21 seniors, including 10 starters and seven role players who logged considerable playing time, Dorr will have his off-season days filled with fitting new pieces into place for next season. Concerning the NCAA I-AA playoffs, Dorr said a spokesman for the NCAA Football Committee told him the Salukis missed making the playoffs by just one vote. Idaho, the team that nudged the Salukis out of contention for the last playoff bid, lost its first-round game to top-ranked Nevada-Reno.

Officials considering drug testing program

A member of the SIU-C Drug Education and Prevention Committee has speculated that both a drug education and a drug testing program for University athletes will be recommended to the Saluki athletics administration when the committee's study complete.

Rollin Perkins, the committee's physician member, said his "own gut feeling" is that the University is "forced" to have a drug-testing other universities and the rest of the nation are doing something" about drug abuse. Perkins was referring to the NCAA's influence on universities to drug test athletes in the wake of the cocaine-induced death of Maryland basketball star I en Bias. President Reagan's national campaign against drug abuse also is an influencing factor, according to Perkins.

Perkins said that although e personally feels drug testing is an "invasion of privacy," the University has to implement a drug testing program so as not to "give an implicit OK" to abuse of both egal and legal drugs among athletes. However, Edward Thompson, chairman of the 10-member body, said the committee is "not even at the point of strongly considering a drug-testing program." He drug-testing program." He said studies of drug testing programs at other universities
