IBHE hears out student voices

February 1994.

Haller said the hearings will focus on educational issues from the students' and parents' perspective.

The Illinois Board of Higher Education will be having public hearings on major student issues in order to allow students to voice their opinions starting Dec. 8 at Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville.

The board's 17-member Affordability Study Committee was appointed in September to discuss graduation rates, student diversity, tuition and fees and student financial aid, and eventually make a recommendation to the board of these issues by September 1994.

Vice chancellor of Academic Affairs John Haller said the public hearings will be important to determine recommendations to the board.

"I anticipated major new state policies on higher education and important student issues," Haller said. "The hearings will start discussing social and educational issues that effect the state."

Ross Hodel, deputy director of public affairs for the board, said the committee hopes to get student input.

"The committee wants students to talk about the flaws and needs of the universities and how the board could help," Hodel said. "The committee's made up of strong personalities from all walks of life."

Susan Hall, president of the Graduate and Professional Student Council, said the hearings are a good opportunity for students.

"They are wanting to hear from students and about their experiences concerning financial aid and other important educational issues," Hall said. "Very rarely has there been a committee like this one which looks at students point of view."

Terrie Pickenill, the board's public university member-at-large, said students should get involved.

Consulting firm to help relieve parking problems

By Lanie Stockman
General Assignment Writer

The SIUC parking division has enlisted the help of a private consulting firm to relieve the University's traffic and parking problems.

Jean Keneipp, a senior consultant with Barton-Aschman

Associates said his company is conducting a study to alleviate immediate problems, such as lack of parking spaces, and problems that may occur five years from now.

"We'll be looking at all the alternatives to the problems. You can limit parking so that people within a one-mile radius of the campus don't drive, you can build more surface lots, you can build more structures and you can integrate both of those with mass transit," he said.

James Tweedy, Vice President for Administration, said he approached the Traffic and Parking Committee last fall, and asked them to vote on whether a consulting firm should be considered.

"A lot of people were unhappy with the parking situation on campus and wanted to do something. There didn't seem to be a long range plan and these people are specialists in these problems," Tweedy said.

Keneipp said together with his associates, he has been compiling recommendations from the SIUC community at a series of meetings, and will ask students to fill out a questionnaire about their feelings on parking and traffic issues after Christmas break.

Volunteer commitment makes parade special

By Bill Kugelberg
Entertainment Editor

Following the tradition of a season rich with giving, the annual "Lights Fantastic 93" events are fueled by Carbondale's strong volunteer community commitment, an event's official said.

Diane Dorsey, coordinator of the third annual "Lights Fantastic 93," said the volunteers who organize and assist with making the events possible are just an extension of something that has always brought the city together.

"This is something that everyone can participate in," Dorsey said. "This event helps a lot with a sense of belonging in the community. It gives a sense of community spirit and pride."

In addition to the long list of volunteers that assist in the parade every year, the Saluki Volunteer Corps has offered to add its services this year.

Dorsey said there will be two major changes to this year's parade.

"This year, the floats will be judged before the parade," she said. "And in years past, entertainment was provided on the pavilion before the concert. But we found people who were lining the parade route couldn't hear the entertainment."

"This year we have changed this and the entertainment will be strolling the parade route before the parade begins so everyone can hear it," Dorsey said.

Carbondale has traditionally gotten into the parade spirit, Dorsey said.

"The first year was very popular — 8,000 people showed up at the parade route for something they weren't sure what to expect," she said. "The next year, 14,000 people were there and it was very cold. We expect a pretty large turnout this year if it doesn't rain."

SIUC activism declining

By Emily Priddy
Politics Writer

SIUC alumni and current campus leaders say student activism at the University has declined over the past 20 years for several reasons.

Eric Scott, president of the SIUC College Democrats, said he thinks students have lost some of the idealistic attitudes they had during the Vietnam era.

"Back in the '60s, the Baby Boomers were told that they were special — better than everybody else — and they actually bought it," Scott said.

"The youth nowadays are grounded more in realism than idealism."

Many of the activists of the 1960s were disenchanting when they were unable to make all the social changes they sought, SIUC College Democrats President Jim Bunton said.

"I think the '60s, obviously were a very special generation," he said.

"There was a special kind of feeling — almost a naivete — that we could change (society) directly short-term. I think there was a burnout and a disappointment."

The loss of key leaders such as John and Robert Kennedy and Martin Luther King, Jr. may have contributed to that burnout, Bunton said.

"After the King and Kennedy assassinations in the '60s, the generation became very chaotic and very frustrated," he said.

SIUC graduate George Camille, the undergraduate student body president in '71-'72, now a railroad company lobbyist, said society as a whole has become disillusioned.

"I think the general public is more cynical about their own ability to make changes, and I think the student population mirrors the general public," he said.

"I'm saddened by that."

Susan Hall, president of the Graduate and Professional Student Council, suggested that expanded opportunities for leadership in society have given BOSNIAN NEGOTIATIONS END IN IMPASSE — Talks aimed at ending the three-sided war in Bosnia ended in another impasse Thursday after the Bosnian Serbs refused to turn over to the Muslim-led government any more of the land they have seized in nearly 20 months of fighting. Although European Community foreign ministers convened the talks in hopes of motivating neighboring Serbia to pressure the Bosnian Serbs for territorial concessions, three days of tough bargaining here produced only a conditional offer by the Muslims to discuss partitioning their besieged capital, Sarajevo. Bosnia's U.N. ambassador, Mr. Ibrahim Sacirbey, said the Bosnian Serbs had taken an "uncompromising" attitude toward handing back any of their conquered lands in eastern or western Bosnia to make viable a proposed separate Muslim-dominated republic.

JAPANESE DEFENSE CHIEF RESIGNS — Japanese Defense Agency chief Keisuke Nakanishi abruptly resigned Thursday after his remark that Japan should change its constitution to allow its Self-Defense Forces to join more global peacekeeping missions set off a storm of protest. The remark Wednesday night brought a critical parliamentary budget debate to a dead halt as the Liberal Democratic Party and the Communists refused to participate until Nakanishi resigned. With time running out for the government to pass a convincing economic stimulus package and soothe Japan's increasingly jittery financial markets, Nakanishi offered his resignation to Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa on Thursday evening. The brouhaha underscored the fragility of Hosokawa's coalition government and raised questions about whether it will be able to stay unified.

HONG KONG TO PROCEED WITH REFORMS — Hong Kong's British governor, Chris Patten, announced Thursday that he will proceed unilaterally with democratic reforms, and China declared the decision would "mean the breakdown" of its negotiations with Britain on the colony's future. The development marks a potentially serious escalation in tension between the two sides over the issue of how extensively Hong Kong is to be democratized before it reverts to Chinese rule in 1997. Patten's decision to introduce a portion of his political reform legislation in Hong Kong's parliament, the Legislative Council, presented China with a clear challenge, although he softened the blow by withholding other, more contentious proposals. The move followed 17 rounds of talks in which the governor vainly sought to win Beijing's assent for a plan to expand democratic rights in the colony's 1994-95 elections.

INTELLIGENCE AGENCY CHANGES IMAGE — Yes, espionage fans, that was director of central intelligence R. James Woolsey you saw on "Larry King Live" Tuesday night. Welcome to the new, user-friendly Central Intelligence Agency, presenting itself as visible, demystified, liberated from Cold War demagoguery. Facing questions from Congress and public about its mission and budget now that the threat of communism has vaporized, the spy agency has embarked on a charm offensive. Woolsey's appearance on King's CNN talk show — in which he said publicly many of the things he told Washington Post reporters and editors on "deep background" a few hours earlier — was part of a public relations campaign that included a recent Woolsey appearance on the "MacNeil/Lehrer NewsHour" and permission for NBC cameras to film "Today" show segments inside the agency's Langley headquarters.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION REORGANIZES — Under pressure from the White House and nervous Democrats in Congress, the Democratic National Committee (DNC) has launched a substantial reorganization of its operations designed to strengthen a weak staff, sharpen its mission and prepare the party for next year's midterm elections. The changes were triggered by the Democrats' zero-for-six record in major elections over the past year and from concern that the DNC has been too focused on advancing President Clinton's legislative agenda and not enough on winning campaigns.

Housing task to be tackled by new group

By Melissa Edwards
Minorities Writer

The Graduate and Professional Student Council voted Wednesday night to form an advisory board for University Housing amid talk of a proposed housing-rate increase.

Council President Susan Hall, said the advisory board would operate in the same manner as other advisory boards on campus.

The board would advise and discuss housing problems, she said.

The proposed housing fee increase ranges from 1.5 to 2.84 percent more than present housing costs, Hall said.

Ed Jones, director of University housing, said the increase is necessary because of an inflation rate between two and three percent and deferred maintenance needed on the buildings.

He said roofs need to be replaced and brick work needs to be fixed, along with other problems due to the age of the housing.

The SIU Board of Trustees will make a final decision regarding an increase, he said.

The council also approved a resolution to endorse the use of non-chlorinated paper campus wide, except in cases where the quality of the document is important, such as facsimiles and professional documents.

The plan promotes the use of the paper for basic office and classroom use, she said.

The council also passed a resolution to seek an amendment to the National Service Act. The proposed amendment would allow all students, not just first-time borrowers, to participate in the program.

Southern Illinois farmers eligible for flood help

By John Rezanka
Environmental Writer

Farmers in Southern Illinois and other flood-affected areas may be eligible to return cropland to wetlands under a program announced this week by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The Emergency Wetlands Reserve Program is a voluntary program that encourages farmers to restore and protect wetlands.

Under EWRS, the Soil Conservation Service will purchase permanent easements on farmlands damaged by floods.

The program is designed to help protect the functions and values of wetlands for wildlife habitat, water quality improvement, flood water retention, floodway enhancement, groundwater recharge and environmental education.

Scott Martin, District Conservationist with the Jackson County Soil Conservation Service, said only farmers in counties with major levee breaks will be eligible for the program.

Only two small, private levees broke in Jackson County, so farmers in here will not be eligible, Martin said.

But large levees broke in Alexander, Randolph and Monroe counties, so farmers there can benefit from the program.

The Soil Conservation Service will help restore areas where flood waters created deep holes and sand ridges on farmlands.

It is not economically feasible to restore these areas into farmland, so they will be put into the program.

If the expense of repairing the area exceeds the land's value it will be eligible, he said.

The Illinois Department of Conservation and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service also will help restore the wetlands, he said.

Some of the large scours will function as wetlands with little intervention, but the sand ridges must be redistributed so the landscape can be converted into wetlands, Martin said.

Some areas near bottomland forests may be left alone to regenerate naturally, but other areas may require tree plantings, he said.

Land owners will be reimbursed for a good portion of the lands value, and they will retain ownership.

Farmers will not be able to grow crops on lands enrolled in the program, but activities such as limited timber harvests and hunting will be allowed.

The opportunity to enroll land in the program will be offered in eight Midwestern states: Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Minnesota, Kansas, Wisconsin and South Dakota.

Landowners can submit applications to the local SCS office until Dec. 30.

Film attendance increases

SPC offers classics 'Snow White,' 'Blue Angel' for weekend

By Stephanie Moletti
Entertainment Writer

The Student Programming Council and International Film Series will wrap up the semester's films with the Disney classic "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" and the German film "The Blue Angel."

Jim Lawrence, Student Programming Council films chairperson said he thinks the semester's offerings were a success.

Lawrence said attendance increased this semester from previous semesters.

"We had about 5,000 people attend the films, that is up from the last few years," Lawrence said.

"The increase has allowed us to get some bigger budget films for next semester."

summer, Lawrence said "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" is considered a classic film.

Because it comes out about every five years, "Snow White" is a worthwhile film to show, he added.

"It's our second animated film — 'Aladdin' was the first and it did phenomenal. We had over 500 people," Lawrence said.

"It (Snow White) isn't on video yet either."

The film's viewing time will be earlier than previous films, for the convenience of parents bringing children, Lawrence said.

The last film in the International Film Series is "The Blue Angel," a German film from 1930.

Janice Keller, assistant director of University Honors Program, said the film is considered a classic.

The film tells the life of a conservative, middle-class professor in Germany, who notices his students interest in a Berlin nightclub called "The Blue Angel." The main attraction at the club is cabaret dancer Lola Lola, whom with the professor falls in love.

"This does not sit well with the community," Keller said.

"Consider a small town in Germany in 1930 — it's a whole different society, it's unheard of, scandalous."

Marlene Dietrich plays Lola Lola, and critics say this role gave Dietrich her alluring image, Keller said.

The film's dialogue is intermediate-level German with English subtitles, Keller said.

Next semester, Lawrence said students can look forward to films such as "M. Butterfly," "Like Water For Chocolate," a film from Mexico which sold out for 42 weeks in Chicago and "Wedding Banquet," which played for one week in Carbondale.

Other favorites playing next semester include Pink Floyd's "The Wall" and "The Blues Brothers."

"There's something for everybody," Lawrence said. "We're

Africa Night brings cultural understanding to students

By Sean L. N. Hao
International Writer

The second annual African Student Association's Africa night features topics of social significance to SIUC.

Dele Omosogbon, president of SIUC's African Student Association said he hopes the night will foster better understanding between African students and community members.

"The approach we've taken picks issues that are of significance to all of the student population," he said.

Omosogbon said the program will feature a lecture by John McClendon, coordinator of the Black Culture Center at the University of Missouri in Columbia, a display of African arts and crafts and traditional dance.

McClendon's speech, "The Transplantation of African Culture Amongst African Americans," will help to resolve the role of transplanted Africans and African-American students in American society.

McClendon said he will update his audience on current debate surrounding retention of African culture among Africans living in the United States.

"There are the questions of returning to Africa, started in the '60s, and also the nominal identity with Africa started in the 18th century, and displayed in the names of schools and associations," he said.

McClendon, co-founder and president of the McClendon Institute for Learning, said he will further discuss redemption, retention and revitalization of African culture and historical

Buyout bill passage embodies right idea

CONGRESS APPROVED A BUYOUT BILL FOR Midwest victims of the great Flood of '93 Saturday. The legislation, sponsored by Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa and John C. Danforth, R.-Mo., is the first major policy change since the flood that aims to break the cycle of rebuilding and repeated flooding. President Bill Clinton is expected to sign the bill that would increase the federal share of the buyout effort to 75 percent, instead of 50 percent, and will quadruple the amount of emergency money available for buyouts in the Midwest.

Federal disaster aid officials intend to use the bill's new cap of $110 million for "hazard mitigation" money as the foundation of the broader federal program to promote relocation. In Missouri and Illinois alone, estimates show about 3,800 homes and businesses in as many as 72 flooded communities have stated interest in the buyouts. While the buyouts may help, they are not nearly comprehensive enough to cover all of the devastated areas.

THE BUYOUT WILL MOST LIKELY NOT COVER the sizeable demand for aid in the Midwest according to early buyout estimates. A recent federal report on major relocation communities included 39 towns that may request buyouts of an estimated 1,136 structures, including the homes in the St. Louis region's Illinois side. It is reported that entire town of Valmeyer wants to relocate to higher ground to rebuild.

In the St. Louis area alone, more than 2,000 businesses and homes may be eligible for buyouts. Across Missouri, almost 35 communities may try for buyouts involving at least 2,700 homes and 100 businesses. The cost of these may be as much as $85 million to $110 million.

In addition, the flood plain suburbs of Des Moines, Iowa, and as many as 11 other Iowa communities may pursue buyout options. Sen. Harkin has reported that there is a plan in Chelsea, Iowa to move most of the town.

CALLED "A VICTORY FOR COMPASSION AND common sense" by Harkin, the vote is on the mark by its noble intent of stopping the senseless, vicious circle of using tax dollars to rebuild the same buildings in the same flood prone plains. Congress finally has seen that flood relief must include preventative measures to ensure that the same suffering and loss will not happen again down the road.

While the bill has shed the here-and-now, myopic focus of typical federal relief efforts, it does not actually appropriate any more money, but rather allows the Federal Management Agency to divert more of its flood aid funds to buyouts and other hazard mitigation. It is not so much an increase in aid as a redistribution.

The final version of the bill may have been unwise to drop a provision by Rep. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., that would have directed the Army Corps of Engineers to lead a flood study of the upper Mississippi River Basin.

This buyout bill may represent a step toward relief for many hopelessly devastated by the Flood of '93, but let's hope that the Legislature will not consider the problem solved and move on. A continuing, comprehensive buyout and rebuilding effort must be furthered that will do more than just redistribute already available funds. It may cost more tax dollars, but nobody said the process of recovering and rebuilding after a natural catastrophe would be painless. Hopefully the measures in this relief effort will continue to encompass the possibility of circumventing future disasters as much as it does solving the current problem. All in all, the recent buyout measure does seem to represent a good start, but it should not be the end of the Midwest healing process.

Letters to the Editor

Ensnor letter shows faulty logic

I am writing in response to Andrew Ensnor, who likened the condition of an alcoholic to the lifestyle of gay men or lesbians.

As an instructor of GE-D 101, I am fairly well versed in the logical fallacies that often times appear in essays written with the intent to persuade, especially among those written by people who have not mastered critical thinking and basic writing skills.

There is a name for the fallacy upon which Ensnor's entire argument depends, the faulty comparison, for in fact, as I'm sure most of the readers of the DE already know, homosexuality and alcoholism are quite different.

I am close to a couple of people who are alcoholics, and never once have I heard them speak proudly of their condition. Never once have I heard them voice a desire to commit vehicular homicide, as Ensnor insinuated. Alcoholism is a disease that has the potential to destroy lives, and those who suffer with it, if not in a state denial, generally suffer without pride.

On the other hand, many gay men and lesbians do live with pride. However, unlike Ensnor's unsubstantiated assertion that they are proud of a supposed ability to corrupt the youth of America, the lesbians and gay men I know are proud of their ability to love, and their courage to live, against the grain in order to be true to themselves.

Having been raised in a society that teaches us that we can only love those who are of the toher gender, lesbians and gay men have long been denied the opportunity to love, but being denied an opportunity is not the same as lacking the ability.

This understanding is what "coming out" is all about. Lesbians and gay men have a right to their pride. Choosing a lifestyle that is based on love and truthfulness, and not on genital criteria, and certainly not on drug addiction, is a lifestyle that should induce pride.

Ensnor, despite his senior status, still has quite a lot to learn, not just about logical fallacies, nor about writing, but about thinking, feeling, and living in general as a member of a diverse, global community.

— Elizabeth Rogers, graduate student, creative writing

Viewpoint provides a holiday treat

After three and a half years of painfully subjecting myself to countless disappointments the Daily Egyptian has given me a graduation present. I had always heard about the prestigious awards the DE had earned through hard-fought competition. Many people have explained to me the many trials and tribulations of working for a college newspaper. The grueling, dirt-pushing toil of draining oneself of ones creative mental capacities only to be defamed by unappreciative slugs whose only goal in life is clearly to ridicule and renounce the writers "hard-work."

And truly, in my time at this fine institution I have some less-than-honorable attacks against the undeserving. I won't mention any names, but how will I ever forget the paranoid tirades of SIU's favorite conservative I shall refer to only as M.C. Rush II? Or the countless attacks against the very country I love and its values by any number of crackpot campus organizations. And I have experienced, first-hand, questionable judgement by those who wished to edit my writings.

Finally, after excruciatingly faithful and hopeful years, I was rewarded. I am referring, of course, to Emily Priddy's viewpoint of Friday, 11/19/93. Emily's viewpoint was humorous, exciting, and touching. Where and why have you been hiding her?

I understand that in a popular culture guided by such blinding lights of encouragement as Nirvana, Rolling Stone, and MTV that prophecies of positivity are unpopular. But it is within such visionary minds that true wisdom builds its home.

So, thank you to the DE and especially to Emily Priddy for such a wonderfully endearing article about things that really matter in life.

— Jay Andrew Fossier, senior, speech communication

"The whole issue of the priorities, quality and productivity initiative is really important right now and students need to have a say in it," Pickenill said. "I hope the student input will help change state policies and make an impact."

Pickenill, a senior in political science from Edwardsville and who is planning to testify to the committee with two other persons, became a student representative to the board in September. Her position covers all public universities in the state.

The board's action charge is consistent with its priorities, quality and productivity initiative which recommended eliminations and reductions of programs at state universities.

The charge examines:
 ■ undergraduate student retention, graduation rates, attendance, and affordability of higher education;
 ■ tuition fees and recommend changes in controlling the growth in student costs, provide greater stability in student costs, and provide better tuition and income fund policies in the statewide budget development process.

■ the available resources to students and their families to support a college education and recommend enhancing the availability, predictability and distribution of these sources of support in such areas as student employment, cooperative-work programs, college savings and investment programs, and loan programs;

■ trends in resources available to students from institutional aid, loans, and grants and recommend student aid policy to enhance the availability, predictability and distribution of these resources; and

■ the changing needs and characteristics of undergraduate students and improving access and choice for non-traditional students.

Hodel said students who cannot attend the hearings are asked to write the board.

The Dec. 8 meeting will run from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

concerning parking problems around the Communications Building, staff and faculty members directed concerns to Kenepp and SIUC coordinator of Parking and Traffic, Marilyn Hogan.

Robert Henderson, operations manager of WSIU-TV, said the radio and television stations have difficulties providing parking for guests and volunteers.

"The communications building has more contact with the general public outside the University than probably any other building other than the Student Center, yet we have to share parking with everybody else," he said.

Other complaints voiced at the meeting included poor lighting at parking lots and crosswalks, and increased stress on parking and traffic that may result from the new biological sciences building.

Kenepp said he expects the study to take four months to complete.

students less reason to protest and rally as they once did.

"One thing that they didn't have in the 1970s that we have now is the participation in the governing process," she said.

"I think that from the activism of the '70s came that inclusion and that inclusion allows the students to work within the system. Before they had that opportunity, the only option they had was to work outside the system."

SIUC graduates Penny Severns and Patrick Welch cited the Vietnam War as the primary factor motivating students to action in the 1970s.

"Back then, if you were drafted and sent to Vietnam there was a good possibility you'd be killed, and that was a good incentive to protest," Welch said.

Students were outraged by the loss of young lives in what some considered a lost cause, Severns said.

"There were too many young people being asked to fight an old man's war and there was tremendous resistance to the war, including my own," she said.

"It seemed to be a war we could not win that would only cost needless American lives — especially young — that we could not afford to lose."

"We had more opportunity to make a difference."

Mark Motter, president of the SIUC chapter of United We Stand America, said the combination of anti-war protests and civil-rights issues provided an ideal environment for activism.

"The '60s and '70s were a much freer period," he said.

"It seems like there were more things changing society along that time, with the Vietnam War and civil rights — it seems like more people were involved."

Severns said although interest dwindled in the '80s, student involvement is increasing again.

"I think young people are very bright, and they have come to accept the view that many of us who were active in the '60s and '70s believed, and that is that one person can make a difference and we must try," she said.

"Bill Clinton and Al Gore reminded the country of that very precious idea."

identity.

Omosegbon said these topics have not been clearly discussed in public debate.

"The large population of African ancestry have not been clearly understood in the past either because of ignorance or because it has not been taken seriously," Omosegbon said.

The parade has become so elaborate an event, the first meeting for next year's parade will be Monday, Dorsey said.

But the advance planning has turned out to be very beneficial for the parade, Dorsey said.

"The parade has turned out to be something that regardless of your beliefs or background - you can participate in it. If you want to volunteer or just watch the parade, this is definitely an event everyone can be a part of," Dorsey said.

The "Lights Fantastic 93" parade will begin at 6:30 p.m. Saturday and run on Illinois Avenue from Grand Avenue to Town Square. Admission is free.

Former communist states may be able to join NATO

The Washington Post

BRUSSELS, Belgium — Foreign ministers of NATO set the stage Thursday for Russia and other former communist states to become members of the alliance eventually, but some ministers warned that they could not agree to membership for Ukraine until it gives up the nuclear weapons it has possessed since the dissolution of the Soviet Union.

At a preparatory session for a January NATO summit meeting, the ministers gave an official blessing to President Clinton's proposed "Partnership for Peace," which would include former members of the Warsaw Pact and former Soviet republics to participate in joint military exercises, training and planning next year with forces of the 16 NATO members.

The plan, expected to win the governmental leaders' approval next month, represents an attempt to balance competing concerns over long-term peace and security in post-Cold War Europe.

Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic are urgently pursuing full membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

With only partnership status, these countries would not be entitled to the automatic security provisions of the charter, and the question of their gaining full membership would be postponed indefinitely.

Economic report focuses concern on China's future

The Washington Post

BEIJING—People's Daily, the organ of the Chinese Communist Party, is not the place one would expect to find a World Bank report sounding alarms about China's economic stability.

But this week the newspaper published just such a report — and it has been intensifying speculation about the path China will follow next in its drive to economic modernization: growth at all costs, or a less frenetic expansion with lower inflation. At the heart of the debate is the question of whether rapid growth or slower expansion provides the best environment for converting China from state-planned socialism to a fully market-based economy.

If the economy tips too far in either direction, social and political unrest could erupt anew in the world's most populous nation as it enters the 1990s. The former Soviet state masks are.

Student activism: an SIUC tradition

Anti-war rallies, housing protests characterize 1970 campus climate

By Emily Priddy
Politics Writer

While John Lennon was saying "give peace a chance," SIUC activists' concerns went beyond the obvious anti-war sentiment as they campaigned for everything from curfew reform to environmental awareness during the tumultuous Vietnam War era.

SIUC graduate George Camille, who served as undergraduate student body president in 1971-72, remembers the students' battle against strict dorm policies.

"Students addressed primarily the in loco parents issues," Camille said. "Women had hearings there were demonstrations over that issue. Men weren't allowed in women's dorms and vice versa."

Neely Hall was the site of what SIUC graduate Larry Rafferty calls "crash landings" by male students on girls' floors in protest of gender segregation.

State Sen. Penny Severns, D-Decatur, who graduated from SIUC in 1974, was visiting the campus as a high school student when she witnessed the burning of the Old Main building following the political tension of summer 1969.

"I remember vividly seeing the smoldering smoke from Old Main being burned," Severns, now a candidate for Illinois Lieutenant Governor, said.

The suspected arson fire that ravaged Old Main that summer prefaced a school year of mounting pressure that ended in the early closing of the campus, SIUC graduate Patrick Welch said.

"There was a lot of pent-up emotion, and the final straw was a big march down Main Street that ended up on the (University) president's lawn with people camping there and chanting," Welch said.

Rafferty, now a lawyer in Woodstock, Illinois, remembers being arrested during one of the anti-war protests that led to University officials' decision to close campus six weeks early in the spring of 1970.

"I was standing in front of McDonald's (then located on South Illinois Avenue) at the wrong time," Rafferty said. "There was some trashing going on down by 710 (bookstore), and I was kind of watching what was going on. I was arrested on an alleged violation of a crowd control ordinance."

SIUC graduate Patrick Welch said rumors about the University's Vietnamese Studies Department caused discussion on campus.

Welch said members of Students for a Democratic Society accused department members of working for the Central Intelligence Agency.

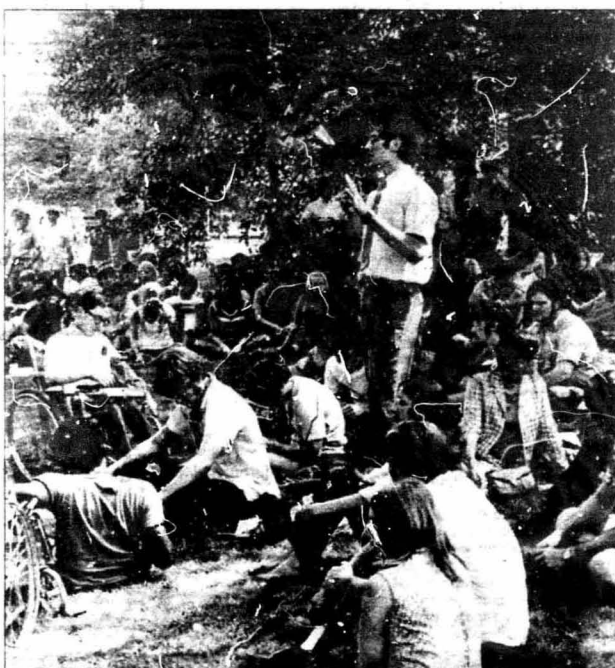

"There was talk about a replica of a Vietnam village (at Giant City) where people were being trained by the CIA," he said.

Anti-war sentiments were not the only national issue that affected SIUC students, Severns said.

Following the first Earth Day celebration in April 1970 a wave of ecological concern swept the campus, she said.

"Our concern for the environment and our surroundings played a role in the activism of the campus as well," Severns said.

Despite popular anti-establishment views, organized politics attracted many SIUC students in 1972, including Severns, who at age 20 became the youngest delegate of either party ever to attend a national nominating convention when she was elected to attend the Democratic National Convention.

"The better avenue toward change was to work through the system rather than outside the system, even though those on the outside of the system played an important role in moving the country — toward a policy of peace, for example," she said.

"Willingness to participate actively in the political system was partly the result of 18-year-olds' new enfranchisement," Severns

University issues garner high enthusiasm locally

By Emily Priddy
Politics Writer

Campus leaders say although interest in state and national issues often is low among SIUC students, enthusiasm is high when local issues that directly affect students' lives arise.

Eric Scott, president of the SIUC College Republicans, said students often are busy with school so they have little time to participate in issues that do not impact them directly.

"Anything that doesn't pertain to self-interest, students mostly don't participate," Scott said. "That's not a criticism — that's just a fact, because we are students first and foremost. That's why we're here."

SIUC College Democrats President Jim Bunton said students tend to give up on issues if they do not see immediate results.

"One problem I see is the tendency for students to give up or to not look at the long-term picture," Bunton said. "If (an issue) is something they feel like they can have an impact on, I think those issues tend to be more relevant (to students)."

Student participation in varies from issue to issue, according to Undergraduate Student Government President Mike Spiwak.

"It's weird. Sometimes they (students) really zero in on the local issues and sometimes, they zone in on the national issues," Spiwak said. "You never can tell. When they know that their actions will have a real impact, that's when they focus on an issue."

Students have rallied around several issues this semester, including residential zoning ordinances, bar entry age restrictions and an anti-jaywalking fine imposed by campus police, Spiwak said.

Although protests and rallies about local issues are more common at SIUC, students support national issues as well, Graduate and Professional Student Council

Incumbant congressman opens campaign for 4th term in House

American News Service

U.S. Rep. Glenn Poshard opened his campaign for a fourth term as congressman in the 19th District with a little "show and tell" Wednesday on the steps of the Williamson County Courthouse. He promised to reduce deficit spending and to enhance community infrastructure.

Running in a district consisting of 27 counties that are often split on issues, the largest district out of the state's 20, Poshard pledged to work for legislation supporting ethanol fuel, lower health care coverage costs while providing universal insurance and to create a level playing field concerning campaign contributions.

"Last year more than any other year, the people sent a message that when you get there (Congress), cut spending first," he said on the yearly $200 billion Washington expenditures. Poshard said he started with his own Democratic office, claiming to have sent back from his budget $150,000 to the House. "We've done that every year," he said.

Poshard, of Marion, was first elected to the district seat, which ranks 413th out of 434 in spending, in 1989 and is now in his third term. Poshard said that legislation he has sponsored or co-sponsored in the last year has reduced federal spending by $12 billion.

"We're doing what we can at the legislative level and district level to help cut debt we accrue as a nation. We all got the message," he said.

Poshard, who holds seats on small business and public works committees, said he would seek to reduce health care spending by five percent of the Gross National Product, saying that current rates are as high as 14 percent of the GNP.

Through a health care task force he said would be established before Christmas, Poshard contended he would protect small business representatives who stand to lose in the president's proposal, which he said he does not expect to survive following the onslaught of counter-proposals.

He said he would pursue legislation for the use of ethanol fuels which would create jobs while protecting clean air, though "it has been a real struggle with the EPA" which did not accept a Great Lakes Government Council study showing results favorable to ethanol. Poshard contends ethanol in Illinois alone would raise $240 million in farm income.

"A lot of money, a lot of jobs," he said.

The study was not accepted by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

"The administration needs to get off the fence one way or another," he said of Carol Browner's office.

Poshard, calling himself a leader in campaign finance reform, seeks to create an even playing field between incumbents and challengers running for federal office, he said.

He said he would continue efforts to maintain and improve infrastructure in communities which otherwise would make it impossible for economic development.

"Economic development is not possible without an appropriate infrastructure, without which you cannot induce businesses to communities," he said.

Mother formulates original dance to daughter's style of movements

By Charlotte Rivers
Entertainment Writer

The angular bursts of energy and dynamic movements of an 11-year-old girl have been captured and choreographed by her mother to create a dance featured in a concert tonight.

The Southern Illinois Repertory Dance Theater presents, "Dance Expresso," its 19th annual fall dance concert at 8 tonight and tomorrow.

The concert features jazz, ballet and modern dances choreographed by its student members.

Artistic director Donna Wilson said the 20 member company has been rehearsing since September.

Wilson will debut her new dance, "Despair," and a newly reworked version of Wilson's "Despair," originally choreographed in 1982.

Jeannie Zeck, a doctoral student in English, said she began to work last summer on "Sassafras," the dance based on her daughter Kate's movements. The perfect song came to her one day as she was cleaning the house, she said.

"I have noticed that she moves in a way that is very different from me," she said. "I thought it would be fun to capture it in a dance."

"I was listening to 'My Girl,' by Smokey Robinson, performed by the Temptations, which is our song, and I decided to combine her movements with the song."

She said watching her creation come to life has been exciting and she is thankful to those who helped her formulate the dance. During the season, choreographers show each other the progress of their dances and offer and receive advice for improvements.

"It is a chance to get feedback," Zeck said. "I incorporated just about every idea suggested."

Zeck, who will perform solo in the dance, said she had a career in theater for a decade before deciding to work toward a doctoral degree in English.

"I was singing and dancing for 10 years and it was time for a change," Zeck said. "But I still keep active in performing arts. It is one of the greatest joys of my life."

Zeck's daughter, Kate Nelson, a fifth-grader at Unity Point school, said she is happy about the debut of the dance modeled after her but is shy about the attention directed toward her.

"It is kind of neat and kind of embarrassing," Nelson said.

Lisa McKinley, president of the dance company, will present the two dances, "Winter Games, and "Double Vision."

McKinley, a junior in physical education from Rockford, has been dancing since she was 3-years-old. This is her second semester with the company.

"Winter Games" is a ballet that symbolizes the symbolic crossings of the countries," she said. "Double Vision" is a jazz duet. I got the idea from a good friend who I spend a lot of time with."

The dance is about the way two close friends begin to mimic each other in everyday movements, she said.

McKinley said she and the five other dancers in the ballet and the two dancers in the jazz duet practice once or twice a week.

"There have not been too many changes," she said. "The dance is what I expected it to be."

Jessica Martin and Leigh Wolf also present dances. Wolf has created a piece called "Primitive Fire," based on African rhythms and movements.

Martin has choreographed "Evolution," which is about the way African-American music and dance has developed and changed since the days of slavery and has influenced the music and dance of other cultures.

"It has a modern theme," Martin, a senior in public relations from Chicago, said. "But the movement is jazz-oriented."

"Dance Expresso" is at 8 tonight and tomorrow in Furr Auditorium at Pulliam Hall. Tickets, available at the door, are $3 and are $1.50 for children 12 and under.

President Susan Hall said. "When you come into a broader political realm, people tend to look at those things on a national level rather than a local level because what we all have in common is a national level," she said.

Hall said students reacted to nationwide concern over last year's riots in Los Angeles following the trial of officers involved in the beating of Rodney King.

Spivak said students tend to overlook educational issues in their zeal to pursue political and social issues.

"That (education) is something they should be focusing on. After all, we're here for an education," he said. "That's one of the priorities."

Mark Motter, president of SIUC's United We Stand America chapter, said he thinks education is a priority with students, while politics is underemphasized.

"Since elections only occur every two or four years it's something they (students) tend to think about only around election time, and they don't like to think about it any other time," he said. "That's really too bad. There's a lot of issues that affect us every day, and the more American citizens that are active, the better off we are."

Students do not have to participate in marches or sit-ins to be activists, Hall said.

"Some groups are very active in accomplishing goals, but they never have rallies or demonstrations," Hall said.

Several leaders said although students may be considered apathetic because they are not visibly active in social, political or educational issues, interest may be higher than participation.

Bunton and Hall said many students would like to be involved in current issues but simply do not have time.

"I think students want to be active, but when you're going to school and (working) to go to school, it's very difficult for students to become active," Bunton said.

"I don't think students are necessarily apathetic — I think the time they have has a lot to do with (participation)."

Demands on students' time are high and political views often must take a back seat to daily activities, Hall said.

"If you're worried about whether you're going to be able to make the rent payment, and pay your utilities, and eat and pass a test next week, you're not going to have time to get involved in (activism)," Hall said.

Spivak said students' perception of the issues often affects their actions.

"When they feel a burning need to get involved, they do. I think there's a latent activism (among students) and it just hasn't been tapped," he said.

"In 1972 it was the first presidential election where students had the opportunity to vote if they were under 21," she said.

Because students addressed a wide range of issues, activism spread rapidly across campus, Camille said.

"SIU was a hotbed of concern and students expressed themselves. Students were very concerned about things outside of the classroom and we spoke out against those things," he said.

"It was a time of great student involvement in the issues of the day."

Gunman kills four during office attack

Los Angeles Times

OXNARD, Calif.—A computer engineer opened fire without warning in an unemployment office Thursday, killing three people and later fatally shooting a police officer before he was gunned down at another unemployment office in the neighboring city of Ventura, authorities said.

The gunman, who also wounded three other people, was identified by the Ventura County coroner's office as Alan Winterbourne, 33, of Ventura.

Witnesses said the shaggy-bearded Winterbourne entered the state Employment Development Department office in Oxnard about 11:45 a.m., walked into an employee area and began firing.

Badger players on vacation diet

Los Angeles Times

Update from Japan

Wisconsin football Coach Barry Alvarez is taking no chances with his players eating the wrong food during their trip to Japan for the game against Michigan State on Sunday (Saturday night in the United States.) He has a nutritionist along to help plan meals.

"I'd like our players to try their food, particularly after the game," Alvarez said.

Players plan to dine at restaurants throughout Tokyo with alumni living in the area.

The Badgers took a crash course in Japanese culture this fall and are hoping it will help them as they tour the city.

"They were given flash cards to help them with some common words."

best re-ord (9-2) in football," he said. "Steve DeBerg enjoys leaving the sleet of Dallas and will celebrate by beating the Giants."

Karyn Viverito said the Dolphins are on a roll, but will find the waves are bumpy when they face the Giants.

"Miami has played some impressive football, but the only reason the Dolphins beat Dallas was because Leon 'Lett' them," she said. "DeBerg will not be able to carry this Miami team over the Giants."

Viverito stood alone in picking the Saints over the Vikings.

It is no surprise that Kevin Bergquist, who is a big Minnesota fan, picked the Vikes to come out on top, thanks to the Lions Barry Sanders.

"The quickly fading Vikings will squeak out a field-goal game against the Lions," he said. "Minnesota only wins because Barry Sanders - who owns the Vikes - is on the shelf, and the Vikings defense will hold the Lions at bay."

Leahy said he has to agree it will be tough for the Lions to win.

"Detroit without Barry Sanders is like the Bulls without you-know-who," he said. "Minnesota's pass rush, which is better than Chicago's will have no fear in pursuing Rodney Peete."

Leahy does not agree with Viverito though in picking the Bears, her hometown team, to win.

"Favre is banged up but is still a better quarterback than Harbaugh," Leahy said. "Chicago will not sustain momentum as Green Bay proves they are the class of the division."

Viverito said if the Packers are the team with class then the division will be in trouble.

"The Bears are showing definite signs of improvement and will prove there is some talent among the 'Team of Unknowns'," she said.

Bergquist agrees however that the Bears will come up short.

"Their offense is still full of question marks, and the defense cannot carry this team all season," he said.

Leahy finished the three-game sweep by picking Cleveland, as all three writers picked their native land teams.

balanced scoring they've shown so far.

The Salukis put all five starters in double figures on Wednesday night and had Scott Burzynski and Tim Pace come off the bench to hit for eight.

Herrin said Burzynski and Pace have earned some minutes in the rotation off the bench.

"They did a good job and gave us what we need out of them," Herrin said. "Jan Stewart may also get some time, Marcus Patterson is going to get some time at the point spot and Marcelo will help out when he comes back."

One real strength for the Dawgs has been their versatility. Virtually all the big men can play outside and inside, which opens things up on the floor.

AIA head coach Sharm Scheuerman said he was particularly impressed with SIUC big man Mirko Pavlovic.

"He is a nice player; underneath, and even tougher when he steps out and hits the outside shot," he said.

Pavlovic has been good, but he has fouled out of his last two games. Does this pose a concern for coach Herrin? Not really.

"Mirko is very aggressive and he's always had a little problem with fouls," Herrin said. "He is just a hard-nosed player and is not going to back down from any banging, but I think he's got it under control."

back after scoring a goal. And you'll remember it was Hunter who drew Bettman's wrath, by making the terrible mistake of cheap-shotting the Islanders' Pierre Turgeon right in front of the new commissioner during the playoffs. For sheer symbolism, Hunter landed in Sheriff Bettman's lap like a winning lottery ticket. Bettman didn't flinch handing down the stiffest on-ice penalty in NHL history: 21 games. So after 21 games Hunter returns—with a bull's-eye on his back. Turgeon was the Islanders' star, and the Islanders were in the playoffs, so maybe his loss necessitated a stiff hit on Hunter. But Hunter is the heart of the Capitals. If Turgeon was out seven, and it was worth 21, then if Hunter is out 12 to 18, that has to be worth more than five for Kovalchuk.

Bettman is the sheriff who wants to clean up the town. Bettman was eager to prove how decisive and enlightened he was by throwing the kitchen sink at Hunter. But he may have hoisted himself on his own decision. He upped the ante so much by going to 21 games, that in comparison anything under 10 looks like chump change. Laimbeer makes Dale Hunter look like Dale Carnegie. Forget the rest of the league, Laimbeer wasn't even liked by his teammates. Here's all you have to know about Laimbeer: His best friend—and his only friend, I might add—was Isaiah Thomas (whom everyone else in the league dislikes). Isaiah recently broke his hand throwing an angry punch at the back of Laimbeer's skull. Laimbeer had fights with everyone.

Well, not exactly fights. Laimbeer would shove somebody from behind, or clothesline him when he was up in the air, and the other guy would run after Laimbeer, who by then was in full retreat. Bob Lanier, Robert Parish and Charles Barkley are among the Hall of Fame players who have gleefully punched Laimbeer in the face. Laimbeer transcended racism: everyone—black and white—hated him. Still, Laimbeer was a very good player. He was extremely tough, mentally and physically, regularly playing through pain. The Pistons would not have won their two NBA championships without him. If Laimbeer played hockey, 21 games would be nothing, a cat nap. If Laimbeer played hockey, he'd have been the one going after Hunter.

The Salukis were not so fortunate in their season curtain raiser, but still came within a basket of upsetting Tennessee Tech. SIUC rallied from a 10-point second-half deficit and held a late lead, but could not hold off the Golden Eggletons, who won 69-67. "We are coming off a loss, but it was an encouraging loss," Scott said. "But we can't allow ourselves to be satisfied with playing well and losing. We have to figure out a way to win and hopefully, we can do that this weekend."

Salukis need full deck to face Aces

By Dan Leahy
Sports Writer

The basketball Salukis will face their toughest test of the season this weekend when they travel Evansville, Ind., to take on the Purple Aces.

Evansville has a tremendously successful program, making it to the NCAA's in 1989, 1992 and 1993. The Aces won their first-round game in 1989 before being dispatched by eventual national runner-up Seton Hall.

Last year the Aces posted a 23-7 record, with one of their seven losses coming at the hands of the Salukis. Playing in the friendly confines of the Arena helped the Dawgs to a 65-42 victory.

The Aces, who were 5-4 at the time, went 14-2 over the rest over the regular season and then won the MCC Tournament.

SIUC head coach Rich Herrin said Evansville really got it together after a slow start.

"They had some personnel problems for a while there," Herrin said. "But they came together and had a great year."

The Aces are led by returnees

Toled Cochenour, Andy Elkins and Reed Jackson.

Herrin said those three players, combined with Evansville's home-court advantage, make this one of the toughest road games of the year.

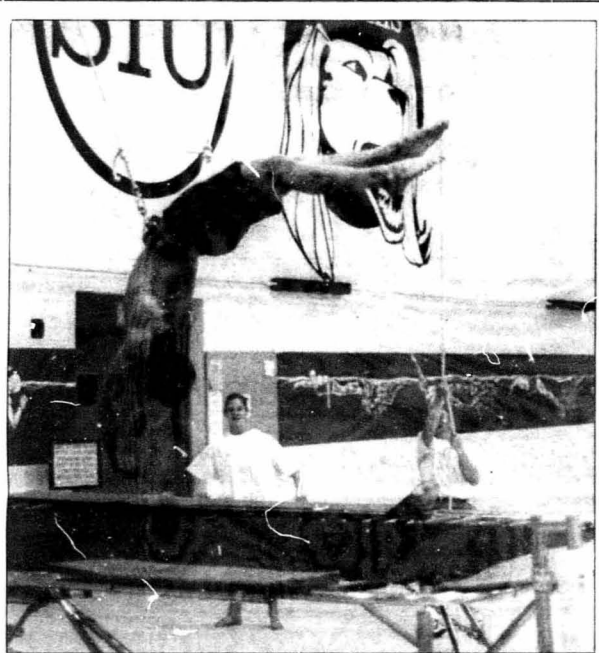

"Those three players are all very good," he said. "And Evansville is one of the toughest places to play on the road."

Statistics back Herrin's statement.

The Aces cracked the nation's top 30 in attendance last year. The Aces also own an all-time 429-137 record at Roberts Stadium for a winning percentage of .758.

If the Dawgs are going to win, they will need more of the Women hope to make noise of their own on hoops scene

By Kevin Bergquist
Sports Writer

It doesn't get any easier for the SIUC women's basketball team.

After falling to national poll candidate Tennessee Tech in their season opener Sunday, the Salukis will face more opponents making noise on the national scene this weekend.

SIUC (0-1) will join a top 25 team and another making a poll run when it competes in the four-team Coca Cola/Holiday Inn Classic Friday and Saturday in Charlottesville, Va.

"We are excited to be going to the Virginia tournament," SIUC head coach Cindy Scott said. "It is certainly going to be a great experience and one of the better tournaments in the country."

The Salukis will be tested early in their first game against the University of Toledo. The Rockets are off to a 2-0 start after posting a 18-10 record and third-place finish in the Mid-American Conference last season.

"Toledo is going to be a very difficult game for us," Scott said. "They are coming off a very successful year last year, and I know they are looking for great things to happen for them this year."

UT, which received 15 votes for the top 25 in the latest poll, will send the last two MAC players of the year to the court against the Salukis in 6-0 senior center Latoja Harris and junior guard Dana Drew.

Harris and Drew are both averaging 16.5 points per game, while Harris is pulling down 14 rebounds per contest to Drew's five.

Scott said Harris and Drew form formidable inside-outside combination that is tough to defend.

"She (Harris) is obviously a great scorer and player and we are going to have to try and keep the ball away from her," Scott said. "The problem is you try and sink down and get some help inside, and Drew is going to hurt you bad from the outside."

Should the Salukis skip the Rockets, they most likely will face the host Cavaliers on Saturday.

Virginia also won its first two games to maintain its No. 10 national ranking. The Cavaliers, 26-6 last year and defending champions of the Atlantic Coast Conference, have won 26 straight games on their home floor.

"If we get the opportunity to play Virginia, we would be thrilled because it would mean we beat a very good Toledo team," Scott said. "It would be an opportunity for us again to be in a position where we are playing the best programs in the country."

Virginia is one of three Saluki opponents this season ranked in the top 25. Vanderbilt (No. 5) and Southwest Missouri State (20) also loom on SIUC's slate.

"I really feel if you want your program to be the best, you have to play the best and expose yourself to the best and let people know who you are."

SIUC's other possible second-day opponent is Marshall. The Thundering Herd (1-0) rumbled to a 72-52 win in its season opener at Youngstown State.

Laimbeer, Hunter find success by being rough

The Washington Post

Goons Make The News!
Good morning Mr. and Mrs. America, and all the ships at sea. Yes, indeed, goons have made the news. Well, maybe not goons strictly speaking; maybe just highly aggressive, occupationally rowdy, behaviorally challenged and somewhat-callow fellows.

Bill Laimbeer, retired.

Dale Hunter, injured, shelved.

Here are two very good professional athletes (yes, very good; anyone who doesn't think Bill Laimbeer was a very good player didn't pay attention), who have gone out of their way to make themselves reviled in every city other than their own, and the typical reaction is...

Laimbeer: Cheap-shot punk, hope he falls down a flight of stairs.

Hunter: Whacked from behind, poetic justice.

Neither Laimbeer, who eagerly posed as a "Bad Boy" for the cover of Rolling Stone in a black sleeveless T-shirt and carrying a tire chain, nor Hunter, who revels in reminding his victims of previous assaults — like when he broke their cheekbones — is going to get any sympathy.

The question is: Will Hunter get justice?

You'll remember that Gary Bettman rode into the NHL from the NBA like Wyatt Earp, with a shiny star and a promise to build a league where a man could turn his Ken-in's advice:

"San Diego got healthy against the Colts, but Elway is no Jeff George and will beat Charger 'D'"
Upset special: Minnesota

As Chicago and Green Bay go head-to-head in one of football's greatest rivalries this weekend, the DE Sports Writers are also going at it for only the second time this season.

Another one of this week's top games, NY Giants against Miami, finds Dan Leahy being singled out in picking the Dolphins, the NFL's best team.

Leahy said Shula has painted a coaching masterpiece this season.

"Marino and Mitchell both go down and the Dolphins have the
