Remembering Ayesha

One hundred fifty students gathered Sunday night to honor the memory of fallen friend Ayesha Judkins

story by JENICA YORAM

According to Bradley Williams, the positive energy Ayesha Judkins possessed was his main motivation for attending one of his most difficult classes. This same positive energy was the driving force for the approximately 100 people who attended Sunday to Cafe Latte to remember her.

The small area of Cafe Latte provided an appropriate setting for a small memorial service, but was not quite large enough for all of those who ventured to the area to remember her.

The group of students and staff members in attendance flooded outside Cafe Latte and occupied even the tables directly outside of the area. The service honored the memory of Judkins, an SIUC junior who was killed by a drunk driver Dec. 28 while on winter break in Chicago. Judkins' closest friend, LaToya Davis, who was with her in the car at the time of the accident, did her best to compose herself while recalling the night of her death.

"I heard her take her last breath," said Davis, who was the last person to see Judkins alive. While hospitalized following the accident, Davis said her concern focused immediately on her friend. "All I kept asking everyone was 'How's Ayesha?' They all kept telling me 'She's fat. She knew she was dead, but they didn't want to tell me because my blood pressure was already so high.'"

Davis did her best not to cry as she spoke, something that was difficult for many attendees of the service. As others were there too, however, there was laughter as friends shared their memories of Judkins.

"She was one energetic, good person," said Ebony Divion, who had known Judkins since high school. "She was indescribable." Roughly 25 students signed up prior to the service to describe their stories of Judkins, whose best friend, Talia Gilmore, described as "caring, generous and so caring."

Those who signed Gilmore's list were

Democratic senatorial hopefuls to debate at Student Center

Six candidates meet to address issues relevant to Southern Illinois

VOLERIO N. DONNALS

Higher education and the economy are likely to be the hot topics of a Democratic senatorial debate Tuesday when members of the SIUC College Democrats will question the hopefuls on topics they consider relevant to Southern Illinois.

They will also be questioning six senatorial hopefuls on Social Security, international relations, the environment, the economy, No Child Left Behind and the Patriot Act at 7 p.m. Tuesday in SUC Student Center ballrooms C and D.

Tyrae Crago, president of the organization, said his goal is to make sure everyone can hear five of those considering voting for instead of hearing their decision on endorsements and endorsements.

"Down here in Southern Illinois, we know the people sometimes feel frustrated that they're not taken as seriously as the people in Chicago," Crago said. "We want to make sure we get the candidates down here because this is an important part of the election and the candidates know that as well."

Democratic candidates Gray Chico, Blair Hall, Day Hynes, Barbara Obama, Nancy Skene and Joyce Washington have agreed to participate in the event. Fellow hopefuls Maria Pappas and Estella Johnson-Hilst will be unable to attend.

Crago said the environment is an important part of peoples' lives in Southern Illinois, but he also anticipates health care and the economy will also play a big part in the discussion.

"With students graduating and looking for jobs and the students who are talking a hard time paying for college, those will be the [issues] students pay attention to," Crago said.

New Brown, vice president of the College Democrats, said he will be listening closely to candidates' views on certain topics.

"The Patriot Act would be something that nobody wants to go first answering," Brown said. "Personally, I'd like to see their response to the economy — who has the best ideas to get Southern Illinois back in shape as the rest of the state."

Candidates will be allowed five minutes to answer a question and will not be allowed to respond to one another's comments. However, a really important time for Southern Illinois with the passing of Paul Simon," Brown said. "They're her leaders, and so this is a great way for them to pick up the torch that Paul Simon left for us in making Southern Illinois a better place."

Research grants exceed Southern at 150 goals

Koropchak says he believes trend in research development will continue to rise

Rachel Lindsay
lindsay@dailysouthern.com

Research and development at the University has fallen in line with plans outlined in Southern at 150, which was officially completed less than two years ago.

Recently compiled data for fiscal year 2003 shows the increase in total research and development award dollars corresponds with the plans set for SIU, according to one of the top 75 research institutions by 1999.

Gains at the state and federal levels vied on a 113 percent and 13 percent increases, said in the documents.

"Those levels of growth are comparable to the levels of growth we've seen in the past few years," said John Koropchak, vice chancellor for Research and Development. "We seem to be moving in the right direction.

Total grant and contract amounts increased from $61.4 million in fiscal year 2002 to $62.7 million in fiscal year 2003, according to statistics compiled by Research Publications Coordinator Marilyn Davis. Although this is only a gain of just over 1 percent, the level of funding increased 10 percent at the state level, to $12.2 million and 20 percent at the federal level, to $50.1 million.

According to information on the Research and Development websites, this is a jump of 55 percent in the just two years for federal funding.

Although the increase in state funding fell just shy of the 11 percent goal, Koropchak said the dollar difference was small enough that it was virtually the same as meeting the goal. "It makes us very optimistic about the future," he said. "We have tough budget times, and despite that, our faculty are able to rise to the occasion and continue to progress and improve. It's exciting." Overall, funding for research alone increased from $12.3 million to $31.2 million. This is a 156 percent increase over last year's funding. But despite the increase, the number of people receiving funding decreased from the last fiscal year. Funding dollars at the graduate and undergraduate levels also decreased, although the number of active projects increased from 995 to 1,019.

A report prepared by the Washington Advisory Group, an outside evaluation group, said meeting the deadline for Southern at 150 will be difficult but not impossible. However, staff have been increasing for research funding at a steady pace for the past three years.

The increase in dollars will have an impact on this year's numbers, which are down compared to this time last year.

According to Koropchak, the reduced amounts could be the result of federal budget problems, which might cause sponsors to wait to release approved money until they were sure of their funding and tax payments, from the state.

He said this should not affect the overall trend for fiscal year 2004, although that is a possibility. "What might be meaningful is that this year's numbers appear down because people pay their bills late," Koropchak said. "But it might be that we'll have a big boom at the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Annual King breakfast addressed at Grinnell SIU students remember life and legacy of slain civil rights leader

Kate Galbreath

Kevin Coley had one on Monday morning for the Martin Luther King Jr. Breakfast commemorating the legacy of slain civil rights leader and of the civil rights leader and Martin Luther King Jr.

The room responded with a resounding cry. "Yes we can!"

The famous mantra of Martin Luther King Jr. served as a point of inspiration to all involved, as nearly 60 years had passed since the assassination of the great man and the true reason students had heard the name.

Leading by the Carbondale Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Coley, a recently promoted associate professor of counseling psychology at SIU and the keynote speaker for the annual breakfast in Grinnell Hall and was sponsored by the Carbondale branch of the National Associate of the Advancement of Colored People.

The winners were asked to read their pieces before the audience.

"We should not take our community for granted, or they will be taken from us," said Coley.

"Women Behind the Movement" included speeches given by young women characterizing famous female civil rights leaders including Coretta Scott King and Betty Shabazz.

While the Carbondale City Council agenda for Tuesday night's meeting is slim, four local groups are bringing their own issues of the U.S. Congress.

Five civic organizations — the Shawnee Creek Group, the Peace Coalition of Southern Illinois, the Southern Illinois Civil Liberties Union and the Southern Illinois Libertarians — will oppose the city council's agenda, raising issues over the passage of the Patriot Act.

The proposals state that certain sections of the Patriot Act violate the First and Fourth amendments to the Constitution through the expansion of the government's ability to wiretap telephone, monitor e-mail communications, survey medical, financial and student records and secretly enter homes and offices without customary administrative oversight.

Since Carbondale has a diverse population, including non-citizens, the proposed resolution directs the city to re-assess its commitment to protect the First Amendment and due process, of all persons to the city, whether they are U.S. citizens or not.

A copy of the resolution was sent to the mayor and all council members and can be accessed at http://www.geocities.com/shawneecreek/ carblda.html.

On the City Council agenda is a resolution to either oppose or deny a special use permit for a home museum in the R. Buckminster and Anne Heifner Fuller Dome, 902 S. Forest Ave.

On Oct. 7, the council approved the Buckminster-Fuller Dome as a Carbondale Landmark. It is the intention of the RBF Dome Board to present the home in accordance with the Department of Historic Standards for Preservation of Historical Buildings.

Upon completion of the home's restoration, the building would like to open the dome home as a museum.

The Carbondale City Council meeting will be at 7 p.m. tonight in the City Council Chamber, 200 S. Illinois Ave.

Illinois to create master police file

1,200 state agencies to share information

Bethany Krajielis
bkrajielis@dailyeagan.com

They take your license and walk back to the squad car. They check you for outstanding warrants and arrests. Now, Illinois police officers will have the technology to better search for personal information like tattoo, nicknames and crime patterns through a statewide database system.

The new system, Illinois Crimes and Law Enforcement Analysis and Reporting System (I-CLEAR), will make Illinois the first state in the nation to create a single database that will allow police officers to share information to more effectively solve crimes.

Rick Hector, Illinois State Police Master Sergeant, said the I-CLEAR system, which was unveiled Jan. 7, would make a huge difference in the amount of information that can be easily accounted by officers.

"I-CLEAR will allow departments to share information, whereas now that doesn't happen," Hector said. "We will have more information for all Illinois police officers to use."

The new system will build on the Chicago Police's existing CLEAR system and the Illinois State Police's statewide database technology to create the I-CLEAR system.

The statewide database will take three years to link the 1,200 law enforcement agencies in Illinois to a single database with the hope of including other Midwest states in the near future.

The Illinois State Police will provide $25 million for funding through the LEADS maintenance fund. The state police and Chicago police have been working for the past year on the system, which stemmed from the CLEAR system started by Chicago four years ago.

The existing CLEAR system links Chicago police officers to search for suspects based on characteristics, such as count of origin, vehicle make, vehicle model and other characteristics available in the database.

"Basically, the I-CLEAR system will bring in analytical tools, such as mapping crimes and things of that nature to police officers more effectively," Hector said.

Prior databases in Illinois were limited to local agencies and areas. I-CLEAR will include crime patterns, traveling groups, terror threats and the characteristics of suspects.

Combining the existing systems will electronically generate "investigative alerts" throughout the database when suspicious activity occurs in connection with homeland security.

Hector said the system is offered to all state law enforcement agencies that wish to participate and will eventually be offered everywhere.

Steve Olson, Carbondale Police interim chief, said he is unsure if I-CLEAR will come to the Carbondale Police because the new system is still in the planning stages.

Globe-trotting journalists to discuss social issues, globalization

Wednesday

Jane Hu

Richard C. Longworth has been to more than 50 countries on five continents. But Wednesday marks his first visit to Carbondale, where he will lecture on the current phase of globalization as part of a series for the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts.

Longworth, a lifelong journalist, will speak at 3 p.m. Wednesday at the Dean's Conference Room in the Communication Building. The lecture is open to the public.

"There's no other individual that we can have down in Carbondale who knows more about globalization and the economic impact on the city to them, Longworth said.

He said he would delve into what could be done to ensure globalization has a positive effect.

"Globalization today affects nearly every area of daily life for Americans, from immigration to the education system to the job market," he said.

Longworth recently retired from the Chicago Tribune, where he has worked since 1976. His series on the political strains between the United States and Europe was a Pulitzer Prize finalist for international reporting. Prior to the Tribune, he worked as a foreign correspondent for United Press International.

Longworth now serves as the executive director of the Global News Journalism Center at the University of Chicago. He is the series for the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts.

Longworth strongly encourages journalism students, regardless of if specialization, to study international affairs and economics so as to best inform the public about current events. The veteran journalist notes a lack of understanding of international affairs in reporting.

"If we are living in a global world, then we need to start living in a global society, we have to explain our world to them," Longworth said.

Bush to deliver State of Union

G. Robert Hillman

The Dallas Morning News

WASHINGTON (KRT) - President Bush will step into a bully pulpit uniquely his own Tuesday night to deliver his annual State of the Union address, promising to unite the country around a storied agenda and contrast himself with the Democrats fighting to unseat him.

State of the Union addresses draw to a joint session of Congress, and Bush, in his sixth State of the Union, will try to unite a country and an economy still in need of a boost. Yet, he said, he's intent on being positive and optimistic.

"It will be a forward-looking speech, but one that takes stock of our accomplishments, said White House communications director Dan Bartlett. "We're reaching a lot of important historical tests."

Already, though, Democratic congressional leaders have rushed to criticize, delivering their own State of the Union report four days ahead of Bush's.

"Sadly, if it is flawed," declared House Majority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., "then Bush's speech will be another missed opportunity to offer the leadership worthy of a great nation and the support of the urgent priorities of the American people."

The political battle lines have been long drawn. And in the never-ending debate over the timing of the presiding of the president's speech — a day after the presidential caucuses in Iowa and Arkansas before the primary in New Hampshire — will affect him a prime-time opportunity to distinguish himself from the Democrats in the days of red-hot race to challenge him in his quest for a second term.

The Constitution requires that the president, "from time to time," report to Congress on the state of the union. But no dates and other details are mandated, enough in recent times presidents have addressed Congress early in the year and with all lawmakers controlling both the House and the Senate, Bush had plenty of help in securing an all-star cast of speakers.

"This turned out for both our side and their sake to be the right day," said an administration official, who discussed preparations for the president's speech on the condition of anonymity.

Bush will ignore his rival Democrats by name and avoid the brazenly parti­ sian domestic tone of an election year, the official said, declaring Americans will be tuning in Tuesday night — not to listen to a speech about politics or politics, but rather one about the state of the union.

Nonetheless, one contrast will be quite obvious: Bush will have a nation­ widely respected audience of millions, while his rivals will not.

The president plans to speak for about an hour, starting first with the ongoing war against terrorism, particularly the US-led occupation of Iraq, before reaching out to the economy and other domestic issues.

Many of the main themes will be familiar, dealing with America's role in Iraq, tightens homeland security, and before the recovering economy by cutting taxes and expanding its payments.

The president is also expected to review his 2000 campaign pledge to charge Social Security to allow workers to stash some of their payroll taxes into the stock market.

Bush has often mentioned such a move, but the public appetite for it dimished greatly after the stock market, already heading down with the collapse of many high-technology companies, plummeted since the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

BOMBING AIMED AT MUSLIM PREFECT WORSENS MIDDLE EAST TENSIONS

Sebastian Rotella

Los Angeles Times

PARIS (LATWP) — Political tensions over Iran, immigration and extremism in France worsened Tuesday in the aftermath of a bomb attack targeting the vast East Paris Muslim immigrant to become a radical administrative official.

French Interior Minister Laurent Fabius condemned the bombing in Nantes that destroyed the parking of a car Alia Demoucha, an Algerian-born, 37-year-old educator who last week was appointed to the coveted post of regional prefect. No one was hurt in the attack early Sunday, his telegram said the most likely culprits were far-right extremists or Islamic fundamentalists.

The attack fed an edgy political mood on a weekend when Muslims across France marched to protest a proposed law that would bar girls from wearing the Islamic veil in school. The bombings apparently singled out Demoucha because he is a trust symbol. The government fears his breakthrough appointment as a model of the French approach to assimilating minorities based on merit rather than affiliation or style criteria.

The attack of which he was a victim was particularly odious," said Interior Minister Nicola Sarkozy, who held his private meeting with Demoucha after a gathering of prefects that had been scheduled before the bombing. Sarkozy said Demoucha "gives our public administrative leadership a sentiment of diversity that is indispensable.

With regional elections approaching in March, the debate over the veil has reignited a simmering brew of issues related to the struggle to integrate Europe's largest Muslim population, which is largely of North African origin.

The Islamic community divided over the campaign to eliminate religious symbols from schools, an official response to fear that fundamentallist Muslims are denying basic rights to women and endangering France's secular tradition. Muslims agree aligned with President Jacques Chirac's center-right administration backed his initiative, but they are opposed by Islamic conservatives, some of whom chant anti-Jewish slogans during the weekend marches.

Our Word

Money spent is betrayal of community

It takes a village

It takes a village to raise a child. Money does not raise children; people do, and parents pay homage to the center's conscientious effort.

Rejecting 47 children on the basis of monetary losses is not an image of a conscientious town.

The city of Carbondale needs to uphold the image of being a town dedicated to its children. Rejecting children on the basis of monetary losses is not an image of a conscientious town.

Protecting our children and raising a new educated and community-oriented public requires a city to nurture and sustain future generations. And remember, it's not just the children who grace the inside of the Eurma Hayes Center, it's not just the children who will not have to pay that ridiculous amount.

Cecil Appraisal appraised the property at $18 S. Illinois Ave, formerly known as The Tap, on Nov. 12 for $39,000. Convicted child molester Henry Fisher, the owner of the property — which has been vacant since he acquired it in 1995 — only paid $45,000 for it. These numbers are just too ridiculous.

Apparently Fisher did not want to sell but to avoid legal proceedings agreed to. Any sane person would see they could take advantage of the opportunity and make money — which is exactly what he did. He knew the city wanted the property, so he was able to run the price as high as possible.

In Mayor Bob Cole's State of the City address, he said the building is an eyesore and blight to the downtown scene that deters new business. This is true, but was there any other way to get the property from Fisher without having to pay the outlandish amount?

If he acquired the property in 1995 and it has been vacant since, maybe the city should have stepped in earlier and tried to do something about it.

To know the city is doing business with Fisher is unsettling. He is currently serving a 12 year sentence for sexual assault on a 12-year-old girl, yet he continues to be one of the main property owners in Carbondale.

While the city's intentions are honorable, the amount it took to get the property is sickening. Is this the type of message we want to send to prospective property owners? Do we want them to know they can do a crime, go to jail and still make money from the city?

It takes a village to raise a child. Money does not raise children; people do, and parents pay homage to the center's conscientious effort. Enrollment numbers have not slid; wonder enrollment would go down a little. Rejecting 47 children on the basis of monetary losses is not an image of a conscientious town. The city of Carbondale needs to uphold the image of being a town dedicated to its children. Rejecting children on the basis of monetary losses is not an image of a conscientious town.

Four hundred fifty thousand dollars to a convicted felon was not a good move. There is to have been others in the city of Carbondale who were willing to purchase the property and would not have to pay that ridiculous amount.

Duct tape; you're my only friend

The need for security in a post-9/11 world has never been disputed. A pit to our system of checks and balances as the one witnessed that Tuesday morning could only have been met with more and precise retaliation. Instead, we have adopted the Duct Tape theory: Speak no evil, hear no evil, and we will see no evil. Of course, simple steps up and shut us guide you. Don't ask where we are heading or when we will be there; just remember when we do arrive, the Duct Tape will come off.

As if a flash forward to our earlier days and the threat of nuclear warfare with communism, the only hope you have, as they had with their desktops, lies in that roll of tape. Isn't it time you have ever seen you ungratefully used to hang beer bottles on your wall. Oh sure, it may have been the multi-tasking government of America — that combined 22 units into one to form the largest government in the entire country you have ever seen — but you must still be a scientist back at the lab where they work at this ratio. For every nuclear proportion, is now the Ahhhnold hope you have, to be our only friend.

Man, Duct Tape: is evil. Some: women like flashy men. Maybe not mentioning looks is a trend, or maybe it is just the proper thing to say to make one look found. A female friend of mine told me appearance only accounts for 25 percent of required attributes in determining a good catch. At the same time, another friend told me women can tell what type of person a man is by his shoe; If a man who will romance her. I know looks aren't everything, but I don't sell myself short by not acknowledging that people who are immediately attracted to. Don't please this the wrong way, but everything is not always going to come to you. Sometimes you have to take the initiative.

A male friend of mine found out they non-ask for anymore; science:

... enavored the lack of scientists back at the lab where they work at this ratio. For every nuclear proportion, is now the Ahhhnold hope you have, to be our only friend. Man, Duct Tape: is evil. Agriculture Alumnus receives first President Emeritus title
SIU Foundation Board surprises John Moody
Andrea Zimmermann

John Moody never suspected SIUC and the university would annually send him a phone call that no doubt led to a 34-year career with a Fortune 500 pharmaceutical company.

Moody, 53, of Stilwell, Mo., and Stilwell, Mo., is used to hearing from representatives of the company he is employed by.

It was long after the career Moody landed a job that the university finally did its duty, his alma mater announced the appointment of Moody as the first President Emeritus title for his dedication to the board, on which he served for 12 years.

Since graduating from SIUC, Moody has returned to give numerous lectures to Colleges of Commerce and Agriculture. As a head of the Distinguished Alumni Award and served on the SIU Foundation Board.

The highest honor the foundation has, and John to be the first person to be recognized, "We really sum up what John has meant to the organization," said Robert McCurie, vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement.

The Foundation Board establishes relationships with alumni and manages gifts and donations given to the university.

Moody was born in southern Missouri, and he retired from a career as a farmer. He and his wife, Vivian, have been married since 1979, and they have two children.

Moody now lives in California. He has been a farmer for the past 20 years, and he is currently working on his farm.

The university also announced the formation of a new friend of SIUC fund, which will be used to support students who are pursuing careers in agriculture or related fields.

The fund was started with a gift from Moody, who is a former SIUC alumnus.

"We are excited to have John Moody join our alumni board," said Chancellor Joe R. Valcarcel. "His dedication to SIUC and his commitment to students will truly benefit our university."
way to get the point of the small room to stand before the crowd present to honor Judkins. Freda Foster who opted to speak shared her thoughts and memories in front of a poster honoring Judkins, one of many visual tributes to the young woman that would now reside in "the use of the first people" they met at the University.

Gloria Mosley, the first person to pay tribute to Judkins, opened with a verse read from II Corinthians followed by a closing prayer: "I don't know how many of you believe in God, but Judkins did, and I am doing this for her."

Foster ended her tribute with a prayer. "You are a person that let the student recognize for her passion for writing. Judkins' dedication was apparent not only through her membership in the National Association for Black Journalism but also through her work on the student creative writing journal, Grassroots. The dedication of Judkins, who was a member of several campus organizations, was mentioned several times during the service. This initiative would have expanded far beyond campus organizations, according to Gibson, who said she and Judkins planned to create a magazine, "Three Shades," geared toward minority women.

Some of the 35 speakers talked about their experiences as fellow members and co-workers of Judkins. But even those who knew her from work and class settings had an inspiring, often amusing, story to tell about Judkins.

Gilmore began the remembrances with the story of first meeting with her in the bathroom of her dormitory.

"We met in the bathroom when she bust her lip saying her prayers," said Gilmore, whose fliers and work-at-home were the main sources used to inform others of the service. "The first time I met her I thought she was a little weird, and she said she thought I was mean and stuck up. We really started talking after Homecoming. We have a lot of the same interests, and we just really connected."

From Gilmore's story of Judkins' busting her lip after falling out of bed in her former roommates' recreation of her childhood at Judkins' house, everyone had a story to tell. Even those not as close to her with whom she was close was able to recall an incident where she had a positive effect on them.

"It's not just happenstance that you're here," said Alfred Jackson, director of Student Support Services, who worked directly with Judkins. "You're here because the [lymph] had a positive effect on you."

Mario Neather, who worked with Judkins at Trueblood Hall admitted to not knowing Judkins well but being affected by her always-jovial demeanor.

"To be honest, I didn't really know her name, but I knew mine and that was dandy kind of special," Neather said. "This is not a day of sadness; this is a day of celebration for Ayesha Judkins."

Gilmore said she was satisfaction with her decision to play things by ear when it came to the service.

"I just wanted to keep it together for everybody else," she said. "I miss my friend, but I know she's all right, so I can't cry anymore."

Some of the 25 "speakers" throughout the service were the 25 "speakers" who said she and Judkins planned to work directly with Judkins. "You're here because she [lymph] had a positive effect on you."

In memory of Judkins, members of NADU have established a donation fund in her name, in the student media office and the Student Support Services, so anyone lbs to keep together for everyone else," she said. "I miss my friend, but I know she's all right, so I can't cry anymore."

value of the 5,555-square-foot property was $39,000. "I think that it is important for people to understand that we are going to offer that lot back to the public," Cole said. "We will take proposals on what we can do with 518 S. Illinois." The mayor said Carbondale Main Street would have a role in re-developing and re-introducing the property to prospective businesses.

Carbondale Main Street Program Manager Roxanne Conley said the decision to buy the property happened rather quickly and Main Street had no formal discussion with the mayor or the city. She said the building was long overdue for action because it is so noticeable and received a number of complaints. "This was a very difficult decision on behalf of the city council," Conley said. "They spent a lot of money on the building, but would they have spent the same amount on legal fees?"

Cole said acquiring the property through the court system could have proved to be difficult. "There is nothing structurally wrong with the building," Cole said. "We don't have any jurisdiction to enforce the codes unless there was a business operating in it or there was some structural problem." So for the council to condemn the property, it would take a year in the court system for us to get that done."

Kings defeat Hawks 2-1

Mike Breinnigan
Los Angeles Times

(LATV) — Put a slash through the history books.

The Los Angeles Kings, winless since Dec. 16, finally found themselves with some good news, their only opponent, defeating the Chicago Blackhawks, 2-1, and ending the third-longest winless streak in franchise history at 14 games.

Luc Robitaille was back in the lineup, scoring on the power play and setting up the winning goal. He now has 21 points in 13 games, including five goals.

Wizards win second consecutive game, 93-83, over Bulls

Milken Kent
The Baltimore Sun

(LATV) — Whether Monday's come-from-behind 93-83 victory means anything is possible — the Wizards won't be answering at their next game, Friday in Boston.

But, for now, for this moment, the Wizards are thinking win. They planted their rare, two-game winning streak and see if doesn't grow into something more at something more.

"That's good for us, especially with what we've been doing, winning one game and then going down six or seven," said guard Larry Hughes.

"Being able to put two games together and then get some rest, to get the legs back, will be good. Maybe we can make a push before the (All-Star) break," added center Ridley Smyth.

If that happens, the Wizards will look back fondly on Monday's second half, in which they erased a 15-point halftime deficit and held the Bulls (32-29) to 32 points, tied a Chicago season low.

"We got the momentum blowing in the direction of the Blackhawks, Frolov continued to assert himself as the Kings' top offensive hope in the absence of guys named Palffy, Straka, Akimov, and the other healthy forwards," said Smith.

"We couldn't get the stops on offense," said Smith. "We couldn't get the stops on defense, and our defense was just disgusting, bad as it's been all year."

NCAA president Brand calls for reforms

Impact on MVC, SIU still unclear as Brand announces planned changes

Andy Horony
ahorony@dailyEgyptian.com

In a college sports landscape still stained by the immoral actions of coaches such as Larry Eustachy and Mikeatron Remy, NCAA president Mark D. Brand is hatching plans for a makeover.

The once-rigid association is loosening its grip, with conference leaders and NCAA president Miles Brand believing the best way to start is by looking in the mirror. Brand announced last week a new set of plans for academic reform and an overhaul of the so-called "professionalization" of college sports.

During the opening session of the annual NCAA convention, Brand told delegates he thinks college athletics is in danger of becoming a professional form of sport, which he thinks could endanger the association's "true mission." He called for the NCAA to consider "completely rethinking" the way it operates and that the "basis of our revenue currently generated by the Bowl Championship Series, leaving the MVC on the outside looking in." He added that the byproducts of that type of reform is widening the gap between the BCS conferences and everything else, "It means looking at the means we have to keep up the money or revenue to keep up," he said.

"It's necessary," he said, "but it takes a backseat to a great deal of other things."

"If the NCAA is hatching plans for academic reform and an overhaul of the so-called "professionalization" of college sports, "I think the individual campus has those concerns and has to look at the impact that they're doing, but the NCAA doesn't see that as a priority of anyone," said Brand's proposal has raised eyebrows and led to criticism from several corners has come as a surprise to many, including Brand, but he, like several others, is worried about how it all plays out before he passes judgment on it.

"I think it takes a good five or six years once you cycle through it, and it sounds like a great plan, but it may have some results," said Brand.

"The NCAA needs to get a handle on this before it's not going to happen overnight."

In the grand scheme of things, it is a completely meaningless play.

But it was of the sort that justifies sacrifice.

SIU was leading Bradley 62-62 with just under 20 seconds remaining in SIU Athletic Director Paul Brand's plan as the NCAA's saving grace. He was concerned that with curtailing the trend of commercialization, the NCAA's focus from the student-athlete-friendly movement in his address were continuing to raise nearly as many questions as answers from the rest of the university and the means or revenue to keep up with the rest of the conference. "I'm trying to put in the mirror. Brand announced last week a new set of plans for academic reform and an overhaul of the so-called "professionalization" of college sports. But while Brand's pledge for reform was generally well received, it raised nearly as many questions as it promised to answer.

SIU Athletic Director Paul Kowalczyk said he was unsure of what exactly Brand will carry out in a plan to support it could have on SIU, but he believes any measures that will stress academics over the success of a program are needed stand. "I think in some institutions there are those who think the need for academic reform," Kowalczyk said. "I certainly don't think that's an issue here, but I'm all for the academic legislation. Anything we can do to hold people accountable is good." The goal Brand emphasized in his address was continuing to improve the NCAA's flexibility in its dealings with athletes, along with making the system less of a "marriage" that has plagued the association in recent years.

He added that he plans to transform the association into a "more student-athlete-friendly NCAA" and criticized those who have allowed college athletics to slowly transform into a professional sport, "It's a focus that really is at the heart of the university community."

While Brand's pledge for reform was generally well received, it raised nearly as many questions as it promised to answer.

SIU Athletic Director Paul Kowalczyk said he was unsure of what exactly Brand will carry out in a plan to support it could have on SIU, but he believes any measures that will stress academics over the success of a program are needed stand. "I think in some institutions there are those who think the need for academic reform," Kowalczyk said. "I certainly don't think that's an issue here, but I'm all for the academic legislation. Anything we can do to hold people accountable is good." The goal Brand emphasized in his address was continuing to improve the NCAA's flexibility in its dealings with athletes, along with making the system less of a "marriage" that has plagued the association in recent years.

He added that he plans to transform the association into a "more student-athlete-friendly NCAA" and criticized those who have allowed college athletics to slowly transform into a professional sport, "It's a focus that really is at the heart of the university community."

"But while Brand's pledge for reform was generally well received, it raised nearly as many questions as it promised to answer. NCAA Commissioner Doug Elgin said his chief anxiety is that the NCAA would devote the bulk of its attention to schools affiliated with the Bowl Championship Series, leaving the MVC on the outside looking in.

In a college sports landscape still stained by the immoral actions of coaches such as Larry Eustachy and Mikeatron Remy, NCAA president NCAA president Miles Brand believes the best way to start is by looking in the mirror. Brand announced last week a new set of plans for academic reform and an overhaul of the so-called "professionalization" of college sports.

During the opening session of the annual NCAA convention, Brand told delegates he thinks college athletics is in danger of becoming a professional form of sport, which he thinks could endanger the association's "true mission." He called for the NCAA to consider "completely rethinking" the way it operates and that the "basis of our revenue currently generated by the Bowl Championship Series, leaving the MVC on the outside looking in." He added that the byproducts of that type of reform is widening the gap between the BCS conferences and everything else, "It means looking at the means we have to keep up the money or revenue to keep up," he said.

"It's necessary," he said, "but it takes a backseat to a great deal of other things."

"If the NCAA is hatching plans for academic reform and an overhaul of the so-called "professionalization" of college sports, "I think the individual campus has those concerns and has to look at the impact that they're doing, but the NCAA doesn't see that as a priority of anyone," said Brand's proposal has raised eyebrows and led to criticism from several corners has come as a surprise to many, including Brand, but he, like several others, is worried about how it all plays out before he passes judgment on it.

"I think it takes a good five or six years once you cycle through it, and it sounds like a great plan, but it may have some results," said Brand.

"The NCAA needs to get a handle on this before it's not going to happen overnight."

Pats dump Colts, Manning, rolls to Super Bowl XXXVIII

Jim Salubi
Knight Rider Newspapers

(KRT) - In the days leading up to the AFC championship game, many of the media members had New England Patriots' defense won to the movies.

They sat in the team's video room and recounted how the Patriots, powered by quarterback Peyton Manning, outscored the Denver Broncos and Kansas City Chiefs in two playoff games. They saw him throw for eight touchdowns. They saw him break an ankle and play on. They saw him stoppped and the lights went out, on the Patriots defense made a pact.

"In our meetings, that's not happening to us," linebacker Tedy Bruschi said. "The guy was on fire. They might have been great, but he did those in two games. But we weren't going to let him do that."

"Against a backdrop of falling snow, the Patriots' defense followed through on Sunday night at Gillette Stadium and best Manning and the Colts, 24-14, to earn their second trip to the Super Bowl.

The Patriots threw an aggressive pass rush at Manning and their defense forced the Colts into four turnovers. All of this led to the NFL's all-sweep throwing four interceptions, making Manning the first player in history to throw at least two.

New England capped an undefeated season at home in extending its winning streak to 18 games.

"Fourteen in a row is great," quarterback Tom Brady said. "It's all for naught if we don't get it."

Brady is one of many Patriots heroes.

He completed 22 of 37 passes for 237 yards and a touchdown.

In the past the included cornerbacks Ty Law (three interceptions), safety Rodney Harrison (one interception), tight end Richard Gonzalez, and linebacker Jarvis Green (three sacks), kicker Adam Vinatieri (five field goals), running back Warrick Dunn (100 yards on 22 carries).

Head coach Bill Belichick and defending Super Bowl MVP Tom Brady also deserve to be on the list for instilling the game plan that can Manning off the field.

"Our defense put a lot of heat on him," Brady said. "All we saw is what was happening, but he was right there and blocked the pass, he didn't get the ball." I said, "Oh, God, I'm glad I'm not going against them."

"Manning had nothing going to walk detail about his defensive game plan, but it was clear what he was thinking and how he was going to do it."

"I was right there and blocked the pass," Brady said. "They forlorn to them. They forlorn to them."

Patriots defensive coordinator was concerned that with all their weapons, you don't want to run stride for stride with them. The only thing that could have scared them off was doing a little bit on Manning's favorite target, Marvin Harrison. He caught just two passes.

"Marvin Harrison is his man," Law said. "I was looking forward to the chance to run with him."

Without directly saying what some Colts players wondered whether the Patriots' defense was allowing them some leeway in using his hands.

"Those guys did what they had to do and what we had to do," Belichick said. "They didn't get called for it. Keep doing it. Keep playing it. They forced us to do a lot of things.

"I'm just trying to not let any buckets go until I'm in the locker room," Owen said.

"We have a very good team, a lot of good players, a lot of good coaches. We have a lot of talent. We're not going to go out there and lose," Owen said.

"I have never seen a football player who was as prepared as him," Turner said. "I have never seen a football player who worked as hard as him."
Abdulqaadir shines in Vegas

- SIU running back Muhammad Abdulqaadir took part in the Vegas College Classic on the Strip and shined in his chance to impress NFL scouts.

Abdulqaadir on the ball nine times for 23 yards in the game. His yardage allot not only led the East squad, which lost the game 14-7, but also won a game-high mark.

The game featured senior football players from across the country hoping to impress NFL scouts and show off their being drafted or earning a free-agent contract in the NFL.

The Essence of Obedience Training

Obedience training is another means for keeping your puppy happy. Obedience training brings order out of chaos and appeals to the dog's need for pack security. The canine mentality thrives on family life, leaders, and followers and a safe place to live.

Obedience training is based on the dog's acceptance of the human's position of dominance and the animal's desire to please. After the dog is taught an obedience command, he is praised for executing the command properly and corrected when he does not. Praise or reward is usually in the form of an enthusiastic verbal compliment such as "Good girl. What a good dog!" Sometimes it is a pat on the head, a hug, or a nutritious snack. Subsequently, after the dog is taught an obedience command, proper and corrected when he does not. Praise may be given lavishly or sparingly, depending on the dog's personality and the situation. Praise is the language of dogs and reward. Every time you praise your dog, you are teaching him to do whatever he did just before the reward was given. A correction is a signal to the dog that he did not obey a command or execute it properly. The traditional correction is a tug of the leash, which is attached to a training collar. This communicates a negative message because it is usually accompanied by an authoritative "NO" from the trainer. There should never be any pain or abuse connected with this gesture. It is simply a means of communicating that the dog was wrong. Some trainers advocate the use of a noise-maker (e.g., empty soda can with pennies inside) for this purpose. Corrections must never be mistaken for punishments. Punishment is not humane, nor is it an effective teaching method. It is simply a word or noise that means "NO." If you do not praise your dog, you will have at your fingertips the primary means of communicating with him. Praise is the language of dogs and people.

Cold Weather Tips

1. Keep your dog inside.
2. Bring on the hood of your car, to make sure no cars are inside.
3. Keep your dog on the leash especially during a snowstorm. Dogs can lose their scent and become lost.
4. Wipe off your dog's legs and stomach when she comes in out of the wet weather.
5. Sweaters for short haired dogs are a plus.
6. Never leave your dog or cat alone in a car during cold weather.
7. If your dog is old or ill, take him outdoors only long enough to relieve himself.
8. If your dog is outside a lot of the time, increase his food supply, particularly protein.
9. Leave your dog's coat in a longer style to provide more warmth. Brush him often.
10. Make sure your companion animal has a warm place to sleep far away from all drafts and off the floor, such as in a dog or cat bed or basket with a warm blanket or pillow in it.

Looking Back on 2003

A person cannot look back on 2003 in Carbondale without feeling a strong sense of excitement about the future of the community. So much occurred in the past year that laid the foundation for community growth and progress in the coming years.

Within Carbondale City government, the Carbondale City Council expanded from five to seven members. This reflected the desire of citizens to increase the opportunity for representation from all segments of Carbondale's diverse population. The interest to serve in City government has never been higher as witnessed by the large number of candidates in the City election.

Former Mayor Neil Dillard did not run for re-election after sixteen years as Carbondale Mayor. The longest serving mayor in Carbondale history, retired with a long list of accomplishments that provide a strong foundation for future build upon. Also, two-term Councilman Mike Neill did not return to the City Council.

Brad Cole was elected as the youngest Mayor (31) to serve Carbondale. He assumed office on May 6. Joining Mayor Cole on the expanded City Council were Ward 1 holdovers Maggie Flanagan and Correne McDaniel, and new Ward 2 members Brian Wissmann, Sheila Simms, Steven Haynes, and Lance Jack.

The new City Council set the stage for new community growth when it adopted a comprehensive, aggressive new housing program. Designed to meet Mayor Cole's goal of 2,000 new homes in the next three years, the housing program provides financial incentives for the developers and for new home construction on existing lots in the city.

"With more than $1 million in public investment, this is by far the most aggressive home construction program in the region," proclaimed Mayor Cole.

"We want people in Southern Illinois to know that Carbondale is family-friendly; we want people to consider Carbondale as a place to live."

The new City Council also initiated the establishment of Carbondale's first Tax Increment Financing (TIF) District that will provide the incentives to redevelop some of the most visible and deteriorated areas. Land between Main Street and Walnut Street from the railroad tracks east to Logan Street as well as some land along the south side of Walnut Street is targeted for redevelopment by the TIF Project. Construction on new buildings is expected to begin in 2004. If the foundation for community growth was laid in 2003, the cornerstone was the opening of the new Carbondale High School Campus. The new high school facility now matches the excellent academic standards for which CCHS is known. Also, the new CHS serves as one of the anchors in the Superblock Complex joining the Carbondale Middle School and the recreational fields.

The community's investment in education has not been confined to a new school, but also the replacement, expansion, and renovation of the elementary school facilities. During the past year, Carbondale Elementary School District No. 95 received the expansion and renovations of Lewis, Parish and Thomas School buildings that completed the two-year-old Carbondale Middle School in the elementary school's portfolio of modern educational facilities.

Very few things in Carbondale can create as much excitement as a winning Saluki team. We were treated well this past year by Paul Kowalzyk's athletic department. Saluki basketball made its second NCAA appearance and its first MTV appearance. Saluki softball gained new fans as it advanced to the NCAA tournament. Carbondale Community High School is known. Also, two-term Councilman Mike Neill did not return to the City Council.

From the Mayor's Desk

This time of year - the start of a new year - brings many people the opportunity to reassess their personal and professional lives and identify points of strength and weakness. Usually this means that people will make resolutions about losing weight or getting in better physical shape, maybe being nicer to coworkers and in-laws, and other good resolutions. Perhaps some of those resolutions for 2004 will be similar to last year's goal, which just didn't quite reach fulfillment but still deserve attention.

While resolutions for the future are often positive steps toward correcting a problem or altering a flawed pattern or personality trait, it's not always to look back and reflect on the past year. In fact, when we look ahead to anything or make resolutions about future change, we should always also look back over what has already inspired.

2003 was a good year. Specific to the City government, 2003 was a long and distinguished career for retired Mayor Neil Dillard. His administration saw many positive changes come to Carbondale and for that the community poured out its support a second time and again at the ballot box. The 2003 calendar also included the opening of the new Carbondale Community High School Campus and its related facilities. Great improvements and nationally known, new store openings at University Mall also happened, and continue to happen. And who could forget about the Saluki football team that re-inspired the region with spirit and excitement over a squad of first-class student athletes on the campus of Southern Illinois University. These are just a few of the things we should look back over as we begin to look ahead.

For this community, it is easy to look back and say that 2003 was a good year and that we are collectively resolved to making 2004 somehow better. I hope you can join me in that effort.

Brad Cole, Mayor
On October 21, 2003 the Carbondale City Council approved the adoption of the 2003 City Building Code Council's International Building Code, International Residential Code, and International Property Maintenance Code. The new codes became effective on November 13, 2003. The new codes are a combination of the City’s previously adopted BOCA National Building Code and other codes that are common in other areas of the country such as the ICC Uniform Building Code and the SBCCI Standard Building Code. Very similar in scope and content to previous codes, the new codes will help keep the City’s population safe and professional. All loans made through the City’s Revolving Loan Fund (RLF) must be in conformity with federal, state and local codes, and regulations. Loans may be made to for-profit or not-for-profit businesses for fixed assets including land, buildings, machinery and equipment (including new construction or renovation of existing structures) to provide working capital. Snow Routes

A snow emergency is automatically declared whenever an accumulation of snow and/or ice exceeds two inches. When this happens, parking on any portion of a street designated and permanently marked as a snow route is prohibited. Permanent signs are posted on each street that is designated a snow route, and those streets will be given primary attention during snow removal operations. If possible, move your car to the driveway or garage. That way your car won't be towed or surrounded on three sides by a pile of compacted snow.

As those streets designated as emergency snow routes become substantially clear of snow and ice edge to edge, for the length of an entire block, the "no parking" emergency is terminated and you can park on the street. If you have questions, please contact Maintenance and Environmental Services at 457-3375.

Keep Sidewalks Free of Snow and Ice

Snow and ice on sidewalks are hazardous to pedestrians, particularly the elderly and disabled. Carbondale also has a large number of school-aged residents who get to and from school as pedestrians. In recognition of the hazards caused by snow and ice on public sidewalks, a City ordinance exists which requires the owners and occupants of properties adjoining public sidewalks to keep those sidewalks clear of snow or ice accumulation.

The City Ordinance requires that a sidewalk path of at least 36 inches wide be cleared within 48 hours after the end of snowfall or other freezing precipitation. Sometimes snow, ice, sleet, or freezing rain on the sidewalk becomes packed down so it cannot be reasonably removed without damaging the walk. In these situations, a sufficient amount of sand, cinders, or some other abrasive material should be placed on the walk to make travel reasonably safe. It is possible to remove the frozen material. Removing snow from the walks as soon as possible after the snowfall usually makes the snow removal process easier.

If you have any questions about the City's snow/ice removal requirements, please contact the Building and Neighborhood Services Division at 457-3377.

Room for improvement despite weekend success

Green, Williams, Rule winners at Saluki Booster Invite

Drew Stevens
drewstevens@dailyEgyptian.com

The SIU men’s and women’s track teams won a combined nine events at last weekend’s Saluki Booster Invitational — more than after competing school at the two-day competition — but fell short of winning the meet.

The Salukis put up a total of 29 top-five individual finishes and one top-five relay between the two teams.

SIU women’s head coach Connie Price-Smith was pleased with the effort her team gave in what was the first meet for both squads coming off Christmas break.

“I think the kids came back, for the most part, all of them came back strong and ready; to roll,” Price-Smith said.

“Everybody came back and competed hard, most of them.”

Junior Vashti Williams won the women’s weigh throw Friday night with a toss of 15-11.75, nearly two feet longer than her opponent.

“I could have done a lot better,” Williams said, “but I just went out there and gave my best effort and figured out that I needed to work on the little things, and this time I got some of those things together and did much better.”

Freshman sprinter Sherlenia Green, who placed first in the 55-meter dash and the 200-meter dash, also led the women. Green ran a season-best time of 7.12 in the 55-meter dash, only .01 seconds from tying the fifth-best time in school history.

Women’s assistant coach Lawrence Johnson was extremely pleased with the performance — of his freshman sprinter and the team overall.

“We like to win our events, especially at our place for our fans and our crowd and all the supporters,” Johnson said. “[Green] went out there and executed just as we prepare in practice. I couldn’t have asked for a better race from her at this point in the season.”

Senior captain Korri Dunbar got her first win of the season in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 8.06, and sophomore Ty-Nica Davis finished third in the 300-meter run with a time of 2:19.47.

For the men, junior Fred Rule won his second high jump competition of the season with a leap of 6-08, but he was disappointed in his performance.

“There wasn’t very much competition, so I should be jumping over seven foot right now; that’s what I’m jumping in practice,” Rule said.

“If you jump in practice seven foot, you gotta do it at a meet.”

Sophomore Ray Scotten won the men’s pole vault Friday night with a height of 16-09. Scotten also missed clearing the second-best indoor mark in school history, 17-01.

Junior Rob Duncan and freshman Hunter Sheldon took the top two spots in the mile with times with of 4:03.07 and 4:05.18, respectively.

Men’s head coach Cameron Wright thought his team gave a good effort but was not overly excited about its performance.

“We got a lot of work to do,” Wright said.

“We got good talent on this team. We’ve got enough talent on this team to do some special things this year, but we have a lot of work to do.”

Both the men’s and women’s squads will look to improve this weekend in the McDonald’s Invitational at the Recreation Center.

The Dawgs went in to halftime trailing 30-29 but went on a 17-7 run topped off by a Bryan Turner three-pointer to give the Salukis a 48-41 edge with 12:38 remaining in the game.

With the win, the Salukis (12-2, 6-0) remained atop the Valley standings, a full game ahead of Creighton. They are starting to attract national attention, with ESPN1.com ranking SIU the No. 3 mid-major team in the nation.

The SIU men’s basketball team experienced a serious bout of deja vu Saturday at Carver Arena. It is quickly becoming a common symptom every time the Salukis travel to Peoria.

For the first 30 minutes of the Missouri Valley Conference contest, there were only a few differences from last year’s agonizing 55-55 overtime Bradley victory and the waning minutes.

“They expect us to do more stuff this year,” Senior Brandon Boyer said. “This year Darren had scores of a lot of people and Brad has stepped it up more, than people expected, and so has Sylvester.

“We played—with poise toward the end,” said Hairston, who finished with 11 points. “We kept getting defense stops. With my teammates, I feel like we can get a stop when we need to.”

“Hainston’s late-game heroics are starting to become the type of this season’s squad, along with a different player stepping up in different ways each game.

“It is different from last year,” Hairston said.

“They expect me to do more stuff this year,” said the 6-foot-8 forward. “I was out of places and Brad has gotten a lot more, than people expected, and the way we played, we’ve had a lot of success.”
