Saluki athletes making the grade

Grad rate 2nd in state: SIUC is 11 percent higher than the NCAA average of 58 percent.

By Eric Helbig
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC scholarship athletes are graduating at a much higher rate than average among NCAA member universities, ranking second among Illinois schools, according to a 1995 NCAA graduation report. The report states that 69 percent of scholarship athletes entering SIUC in the 1988-'89 school year graduated, as compared to a 58 percent average rate for other NCAA member schools.

SIUC's 1995 graduation rate increased from 62 percent in 1994. SIUC ranks second among Illinois state schools behind the University of Illinois' 73 percent.

Nancy Bandy, SIUC assistant athletic director, said the high graduation rate for athletes is important to the athletic program.

"It's fantastic," Bandy said. "One of our objectives is to have a graduation rate 10 percent higher than the general student body."

According to the report, 44 percent of all SIUC students entering the University during the same time period have graduated.

Bandy said several factors contribute to athletes graduating at a higher rate than other undergraduates, including the services the athletic department offers student-athletes.

The department has mandatory study tables for certain athletes, performs grade checks during the year and works closely with academic advisors to monitor student-athletes' progress, Bandy said.

Besides the athletic department in general, the coaches of each sport play a role in SIUC's graduation rates, she said.

"When recruiting, they will choose the student who is better academically, if ability is equal," Bandy said.

Another reason for the rising graduation rates is the tightening of athletic admission standards by the NCAA, Bandy said.

"Whether you like it or not, Proposition 48 has played a role in increased graduation rates," she said. Proposition 48 is a rule set by the

SIUC debates affirmative action's merit

By Donita Polly
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Supreme Court's decision against Affirmative Action policies and a Clinton committee investigation of the necessity of affirmative action have SIUC officials debating the potential effects of the controversy on the University.

Affirmative Action, created in 1964 to stop discrimination against minorities and women in college admissions and the job market, has been under attack in Congress lately for promoting what some see as reverse discrimination in the work force.

In mid-June, the Supreme Court struck down two cases that would have had positive effects on Affirmative Action. The first decision now makes it more difficult for the federal government to hire minority contractors for construction.

The second case ruled out bringing suburban white students into inner city schools to raise the school's test scores to the national level.

WSIU to improve service for the blind

By Christi C. Harber
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Disabled people will have easier access to news and entertainment many people take for granted now that WSIU-FM has teamed up with a local information service to provide listeners with receivers for a special radio signal.

SIUC's public radio station, WSIU-FM, joined Southern Illinois

Radio Information Service (SIRIS) July 1 to improve its program for blind and physically disabled listeners.

Bill Gilmore, director of SIRIS, said the mission of the program is to provide local and national news from various publications over the radio for the benefit of people who are unable to use print media.

Tom Godell, WSIU-FM radio station manager, said the receivers that SIRIS provides to their listeners operate on a sub carrier, which is a part of WSIU-FM's signal that cannot be heard without the receiver.

"Without the special receiver provided to the listeners, they cannot get the services from SIRIS," Godell said.

SIRIS is a nonprofit organization that has always been associated with SIUC, who provided the organization with a building behind Washington Square.

Godell said WSIU-FM and SIRIS will be good for each other.

"We will provide them a business office in our department, engineering assistants and help them function better," Godell said. "It is a pooling of resources — they provide a unique service to communicate that we can't provide on our own."

Students can get on air experience volunteering for the program.

Test scores show large skills gap between boys and girls

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—A new scientific study suggests that girls perform better on mental tests of reading and writing while boys perform better on tests of science and mathematics, which could have a profound impact on their occupations in later life.

The report, by Larry V. Hedges and Amy Nowell of the University of Chicago, analyzed six large national surveys of American male and female teen-agers' performance on tests of mental ability conducted over the past three decades.

The study, published in Friday's issue of the journal Science, found that the average sex differences in most measured abilities were small. Nevertheless, the differences in performance seen in science, mathematics, reading and writing—combined with the fact that boys' scores tended to vary more widely than girls'—frequently produced situations where boys greatly outnumbered girls at the top or bottom of the scale.

For example, seven times as many boys as girls scored in the top 5 percent on science tests, and about twice as many boys as girls scored

ARABS, JEWS AT ODDS OVER ARMY PULLOUT — QALQILYA, Israeli-Occupied West Bank—The impending Israeli withdrawal from this West Bank town means the army post will move from one side of the street to the other. It is too short a move for the Palestinians of Qalqilya. And it is too far for the Israelis of Kfar Saba, the neighboring town. "When the army goes, there will be nothing to stop the Arabs from coming over here in terrorist attacks," says Anat, 27, pushing a baby cart in the market of Kfar Saba. "This will never do us any good because everything the Jews do is for their own benefit," replies Zaher, 34, selling watermelons in the market of Qalqilya. Neither would give a full name.

ARMENIANS TAKE NUCLEAR BENEFITS OVER RISKS — YEREVAN, Armenia—To Garina Khknavorian, the choice is clear: live with an aging Soviet-built nuclear power plant in her back yard, or spend another four years doing her family's laundry by hand and by candlelight. She'll take the nuke any day, thank you. "We understand that there is a risk, but to live endlessly under these conditions is impossible," said Khknavorian, 47, an unemployed engineer. "We want to live like human beings." With a mixture of glee and anxiety, the citizens of electricity-starved Armenia watched last week as their government officially reopened a controversial nuclear power plant just 20 miles west of Yerevan, their earthquake-prone capital. Armenia has spent about $42 million—much of it aid from Russia—retooling the reactor in Medzamor. Built in 1976, the nuclear plant has never had a reported accident, and it was not damaged by the devastating 1988 earthquake that killed about 25,000 people.

TWO COMPANIES PLAN TO OFFER FREE E-MAIL — Tired of paying $9.95 a month to the big online services for the privilege of sending electronic mail? Well, a pair of fledgling companies hopes to eliminate those bills by offering free e-mail access later this year. Both companies—FreeMark Communications Inc. of Cambridge, Mass., and Juno Online Services, based in New York City—plan to attract the growing number of Internet users by providing free software that can either be downloaded from a computer network or delivered by regular mail. "Price is the single biggest factor for leaving the online services," said Robert Young, FreeMark's president. "Most people just end up using the services for e-mail. When it gets to $100 or more a year, many people feel it isn't worth it."

POLITICIAN GETS REBUTTED FOR MILITIA STANCE — WASHINGTON—Conservative Republican Rep. Peter King expected criticism from lawmakers early last month after he accused his party's leaders of coddling "dangerous wackos" in paramilitary militias. But nothing prepared King for the tongue-lashing he received from a long-time friend and fellow Republican back in his middle-class district in suburban Nassau County, N.Y. King, said he barely walked into the dry cleaners in his hometown of Seaford, when "an old timer, a guy who just sent me a campaign contribution" let loose. "Militias are part of this country. You have no right to interfere with them! You are the last person I would think would do something like this!" King quoted the man as saying.

ADVOCATES SEEK DEADBEAT PARENT DATABASE — WASHINGTON—The story is familiar: a couple divorces, one parent—most often the mother—gains custody of the children and the other parent is ordered to pay child support. But in many cases, the checks stop coming and the noncustodial parent—most often the father—can't be found. Often, he has moved out of state and once that happens, it becomes very difficult to track him down. Now, child support advocates say they see a solution to this longstanding problem: legislation that would create national computer databases to help find "deadbeat" parents, even when they cross state lines. The provisions for this new federal role are contained in welfare reform legislation approved by the House and the Senate Finance Committee and awaiting action on the Senate floor.

Researcher pays volunteers to quit smoking

By Alan Schnepf
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC professor has spent the last six years depriving smokers of nicotine to discover why people smoke and why some people have an easier time kicking the habit than others.

David Gilbert, an associate professor in psychology, is the man behind a $1 million study focusing on the effects of smoking in women. The study is being funded by the National Institute on Drug Abuse. It has brought a total of $1.3 million to the University.

Gilbert said he and his staff of about 10 or 12 graduate students and about 20 undergraduates want to discover how different types of people, such as depressed people, react to giving up cigarettes. He said he hopes smoking cessation programs could be tailored more specifically to fit different people's needs.

"That's one major application of the study — individualized treatment based on a person's life situation," Gilbert said.

The women's study started its third year of research this month and should be completed in 1997, Gilbert said. A smaller study focusing on men, also funded by the NIDA, is set for completion later this year.

In the smoking lab in Life Science II, Gilbert and his staff systematically deprive about two-thirds of the women participants of cigarettes for 31 days. These people comprise what Gilbert calls the "immediate group."

The remaining participants make up the "delayed group," a control group that only quits smoking for 48 hours at the end of the study, but goes through all the same testing as the immediate group. Gilbert said the control group is used to see if simply participating in the study has an effect on people.

All participants are required to attend five experimental sessions during their first month in the study, Gilbert said. These sessions last about 3 1/2 hours. Participants sit in a recliner chair in a small room while electrodes attached to their heads record brain wave activity. Concentration tests are given via a computer screen in front of the recliner. Sometimes the tests are accompanied by distracting noises from an overhead speaker.

Gilbert said performance on these tests usually drops when a person quits smoking, but it improves after a couple of weeks.

In an adjacent room, Gilbert's staff closely watches the sessions on a video monitor. Any time a participant blinks his or her eyes, the corresponding brain wave data must be thrown out because eye movement affects brain waves, Gilbert said.

A nurse takes blood and saliva samples at these sessions to check hormone levels and to make sure the participants are not sneaking cigarettes while they are away from the lab.

"You can't cheat," Gilbert said. "If someone has a cigarette, we can tell."

All participants also must fill out a questionnaire evaluating their moods every 48 hours, Gilbert said.

Students file in line for a manicure from the hands of an entrepreneur Sitting at her desk, Yolanda talks to her client like a long-lost friend, busily working on the woman's nails and answering the ringing phone next to her without missing a beat.

A young entrepreneur, Yolanda Ables has become a household, dorm room and office name around Carbondale as one of the best manicurists in town.

Since January, Yolanda and co-owner Lisa Norman have run the new booming business, Simply Nailz, at 300 E. Main St.

Yolanda has built a strong, thriving business through her client's word of mouth.

"I did an ad in the D.E. and the S.I. and didn't get any business," she said. "I've been lucky, all my advertising has been by word-of-mouth."

April Shaver, a junior in hotel restaurant management from Centralia, said she visits the local entrepreneur because of all the good things she heard about Yolanda.

Shaver said she noticed the one name that continually floats through the air and eventually enters conversations is "Yolanda."

"Everyone around campus was saying, 'Yolanda, Yolanda, Yolanda' because she was really good," Shaver said. "So I went."

Grad student returns from archaeological internship

By Rebecca Hutchings
Daily Egyptian Reporter

After five months trekking the wilderness of Belize to study ancient Mayan civilization, an SIUC graduate student in archaeology is back to tell about his adventures.

Kevin Schwarz applied for a position on an archaeological study project in Xunantunich, Belize at the encouragement of his professor, Don Rice.

Schwarz stayed in a camp with two professors and 15 students, most of whom were from UCLA and the University of Pennsylvania.

"We lived in huts that were built up off the ground," he said. "There weren't screens. Insects could get in, but it was the dry season so there wasn't that many problems with mosquitoes."

Participants were studying a site the Mayan civilization inhabited about 1,000 years ago, Schwarz said.

Schwarz was on the settlement survey that looked for smaller sites tied to the ancient city.

"We spent long days hiking through mostly jungle," he said.

Kevin Schwarz

"We would be out in the bush all day looking for any signs of ancient civilizations."

Schwarz said they found mounds, platforms, and whole plazas where the Mayans lived.

"Most of the stuff found was roughly from 600 A.D. to 950," he said. "We did, however, find some stuff from much earlier — before the time of Christ."

Schwarz said being in another country for so long had a personal effect on him.

"You learn a lot about yourself. It is very stressful living in another country for so long," he said. "The work was so interesting it more than made up for it."

The National Science Foundation paid for Schwarz's expenses.

"They paid for my airfare and basically kept me alive while I was down there, but I wasn't paid for the work I did," he said. "If they hadn't supported me, it would have been difficult for me to go."

Being able to go on these types of trips is a benefit of graduate school, Schwarz said.

"If you're willing to pay money, there are lots of opportunities. Unfortunately, Congress is threatening to cut the funding (of the National Science Foundation)," he said. "We're already on very limited budgets, but we make the best out of the resources we have on these projects."

Program aims at diversification of graduate schools

By William C. Phillips III
Daily Egyptian Reporter

A few lucky undergraduate minority students from all over the country were selected this to participate in a six-week SIUC internship program to increase minority pursuit of advance degrees.

John H. Yopp, executive director of the Summer Research Opportunities Program (SROP), said there are underrepresented groups in graduate schools.

"We want graduate school to reflect the diversity of the world population," Yopp said. "The aim of the program is to enhance and increase the diversity of the population in graduate school."

Yopp said he hopes the participants' experience with the program compels them to go to graduate school.

"It will enlarge their horizons and open their eyes to various profes-

Pat McNeil, director of the SROP, said the program provides participants with research experience in environmental issues.

"It will introduce them to the complex environmental issues faced by society and refine their ideas about these issues," McNeil said.

"They will have some bona-fide skills once they are in graduate school because of the experience they are gaining through the program."

McNeil said she considers the internship to be a cradle-to-the-grave program.

"In higher education, the beginning is with a bachelor's degree and the end is with a terminal degree," she said.

There are 10 students who are taught by a team of 22 faculty members representing 13 disciplines, and there is a primary mentor for each student.

Yopp, dean of the Graduate School, said the program gives the students the opportunity to work one-on-one with some of our outstanding faculty.

USSA membership right plan for SIUC

ACCORDING TO UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT Government President Duane Sherman, the United States Student Association, a national student lobbying group, is an impressive organization. After his visit to the nation's capital to investigate USSA and its role, Sherman said SIUC has a very strong chance to become a member in the nation's "student voice" by the end of this summer. The intention is to pay the USSA membership through funds which currently go into the Registered Student Organizations. This decision is right on the money.

Last spring students voted in favor of a 50-cent per student activity fee increase to cover USSA membership dues, although it was never implemented. Students have been paying dues for the now defunct lobbying group, Illinois Student Association, every year since the fall semester of 1990. Those dues, which amount to approximately $20,000 per year, have been going to the RSOs for the past three years.

Sherman has indicated he will use the ISA money to pay for the USSA fees should SIUC decide to join. Consequently, those funds which have been going to the RSOs will be used to support the membership in USSA. This will leave the RSOs without the $20,000 per year they have come so accustomed to receiving. Yet Sherman has indicated the RSOs are not dependent upon those funds.

Although students voted for a fee increase to support USSA, those funds going to the RSOs should be allowed to fund USSA, which is Sherman's sole intention. To receive funds for three years and then get the rug pulled out from under them may not seem fair. However those funds going to the RSOs were never meant to be. Those funds were originally scheduled to go toward funding ISA. Yes those funds are vital to the organizations because they provide student activities. But remember, they were not theirs to begin with.

The already approved fee increase students voted for last spring would not have to be implemented under Sherman's plan to fund USSA. Funds will simply come from the RSOs five year "gift." Yes, there are those who will be disappointed when the funds are diverted but those funds were originally designed to fund a lobbying group, not a RSO.

Membership in USSA could not come at a better time. Recent federal financial aid cuts have left many students wondering where they will get the funds to pay for their education. USSA can provide powerful leverage to lobby against such future cuts which seem inevitable.

During his visit, Sherman met with all staff members belonging to USSA and now speaks very highly of them. One of the reasons he was impressed with USSA is because of their involvement with Sen. Paul Simon's, D-Ill., involvement with leaving student aid out of the Senate budget cuts.

SHERMAN'S WILLINGNESS TO JOIN USSA IS noted and congratulations are in order for his efforts. His plan to divert the funds is a gutsy move yet one that should not come as a surprise to the RSOs.

Abortion rhetoric wearing thin

I read with interest the strong, emotional reactions of some pro-life and pro-choice advocates to the controversial anti-abortion supplement that was distributed by the D.E. last April. With all due respect, I am bored to tears by the rhetoric of both groups. The one showers us with ideological messages clothed in moral attire while the other mouths, nay, screams shop-worn political slogans about freedom of choice. Both abortion and childbirth are more complex than the activists would like us to suppose.

Last year, I was assigned to produce a television documentary on abortion — legal and otherwise. I was able, to observe and videotape a day in the life of a doctor who was in charge of treating young girls who had had incomplete, back-street abortions or who had resorted to self-help in a bid to rid themselves of unwanted pregnancies. Though I had never thought of myself as one who had delicate sensibilities, I was stunned by the sights I saw.

In order to get the "other side" of the story, a colleague and I were allowed to videotape a couple of "safe" abortions in a private clinic. It was, to say the least, not a scene for the faint of heart. Those experiences turned me into a believer in pregnancy prevention.

As a result, I have a blunt piece of advice: Keep those belts buckled and those zippers up! Unfortunately, life is not that simple. Expecting every young person to follow such advice would be the height of naivety. The fact is that a lot of young men and women are sexually active people who throw caution to the wind after a few drinks.

Alcohol and perhaps other mood-altering substances usually serve as the spark that ignites the flames of indiscretion. Telling such an individual to "just say no" is to risk trouble.

Childbirth is not a cake and ice cream affair. Having a baby outside a secure family unit can be disastrous.

One thing the University can do is to intensify its counseling and pregnancy prevention programs and provide services where necessary. I have observed that some students pay a visit to the condom vending machines at the Student Center before setting out to paint the town red. In the face of this hard, cold reality, it seems reasonable that the latex should be distributed free to revelers who want them. Medical experts say condoms help prevent pregnancy and reduce the chances of exposure to AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases.

There is ample precedent for making condoms available to sexually active young adults. It is a known fact that condoms paid for by American, European and Japanese taxpayers are distributed free of charge at rock concerts and other cultural manifestations around the world.

Feminism has much more to offer than just 'dogma'

I was interested to read Emily Priddy's column about feminism in today's D.E. Her conclusions, however, seem based more on stereotypes and hearsay than on any real understanding of feminism. I particularly disagree with her implication that it is feminism, not patriarchy, that oppresses women.

I encourage her to keep reading, to talk to feminists and to perhaps get involved in some feminist organization (Feminists for Life, for example?) She may be surprised at the variety of women and of viewpoints that are there.

She should keep on challenging other people's assumptions, but also her own. Some individual feminists are very dogmatic, but so are many non-feminists — that's just human nature. Keep seeking.

NCAA in the late 1980's in an attempt to raise academic standards in intercollegiate athletics.

It requires athletes to pass standard admission requirements or be ineligible for their freshman year.

Bandy said NCAA admission standards will get more strict beginning in fall 1996.

At that time, high school student-athletes who have a GPA of 2.0 in selected core courses must get an ACT score of 21.

The current standard is an ACT score of 17 with a core GPA of 2.0. Bandy said the 69 percent rate for athletes is good, but she would like to see them go up even higher. "We would like to see them at 100 percent, but we're happy," she said.

According to the report, SIUC's women's athletic programs graduate their athletes at a higher rate than men's sports.

The women student-athletes graduated at an 84 percent rate, while the men graduated at a 55 percent rate.

The women's cross-country and track team led graduation rates with 88 percent.

Women's basketball had an 80 percent graduation rate, while the men's team graduated at 50 percent. Football graduated at a 53 percent rate and baseball at a 60 percent rate.

opportunity, said data of hired university faculty does not suggest that SIUC has been affected by reverse discrimination.

Minority student admissions would not be affected at SIUC if changes in Affirmative Action are made because the University has no quotas to fill, Bryson said.

Bryson said attacks on Affirmative Action are more attuned to businesses than to universities.

Beverly Stitt, coordinator for SIUC Women's Services, said the number of SIUC female faculty has increased during the last 20 years but still is lower than the national average.

"Some genuine attempts to hire female faculty in some departments are being made," Stitt said. "I'm not sure if it will continue if Affirmative Action is done away with."

Martha Ellert, SIUC coordinator for University Women's Professional Advancement, said according to a women's status report, 24 percent of SIUC faculty are female, up from 22 percent in previous years.

If Affirmative Action is changed or eliminated, Stitt said she hopes there will be continued commitment to diversity on the SIUC campus.

"When Affirmative Action was fairly new, it was seriously enforced," Stitt said. "It helped women and minorities get considered for positions they hadn't been previously."

Dele Omosegbon, acting director for Black American Studies, said he is worried about people — mainly conservatives — who are against Affirmative Action.

Omosegbon said Affirmative Action is about giving opportunity to people who have been denied opportunities in the past.

"Affirmative Action is about equal justice," Omosegbon said. "Changes and revisions of Affirmative Action are OK, but not in the way the conservatives want."

Changes in Affirmative Action are necessary as in any other organization, Omosegbon said. The changes that need to be made are causing most of the controversy around Affirmative Action.

Omosegbon said the wrong changes could ruin all the gains made in past decades.

"We don't want to go back to yesteryears. We want to go forward," Omosegbon said. "One or two mistakes should not affect the overall system of Affirmative Action."

Terry Greene, spokesman for Rep. Thomas Ewing, R-Ill., said he would be surprised if any Affirmative Action changes take place on campuses.

Godell said.

"It is a great way for students who want to go into radio to get experience," Godell said. "Eventually we would like to provide paid student positions for on air work."

Gilmore said former residents Richard and Valerie Parrish started the program in Carbondale in 1984 with equipment donated from local radio stations.

"Richard was classified legally blind and Val was physically handicapped," Gilmore said. "They visited a rehabilitation center, and Val came up with the idea of putting the station together."

Gilmore said the programs the station airs usually are about disabilities, cooking, Social Security and pet care. The station also runs public service announcements for Human Resource, and volunteers read novels and Time magazine on the air.

"Eleven newspapers in the surrounding areas are donating a paper to SIRIS, and we also read the Daily Egyptian to our listeners," Gilmore said.

Rita Gaffney, a radio clerk who dubs the various programs, said she enjoys her job at the station.

"It is like any service job; you feel like being helpful to someone who needs your assistance," Gaffney said. Christine Green, a radio clerk who keeps records of the receivers, said the station's primary purpose is to tell the news and read magazines and other interesting publications.

"I like reading and making it as clear as possible so they can hear and understand it," Green said. "I enjoy knowing that the people listening enjoy it and want to know what is going on."

Gilmore said the program is funded by an Illinois public library grant, local United Way agencies, the local Lions Club, local Kiwanis and individual donations.

"We want to continue to recruit more volunteers, get more local publications, distribute receivers more widely available — hear from people who know of someone who needs a receiver — raise funds to buy more receivers and improve the facilities for the radio readers," Godell said.

Gilmore said many listeners have been given the receivers.

"We have given out close to 400 receivers and we still have 100 available," Gilmore said.

Receivers are provided to eligible listeners free of charge. For more information, interested persons can contact WSIU-FM at 453-4343 or SIRIS at 549-5604.

Smoking

After participants complete the first month, they return for follow-up evaluations every three months. Gilbert said this makes the study more thorough because it examines relapse rates. The researchers also study the circumstances under which people resume smoking.

Participants who successfully complete the first month of the current study receive about $400, Gilbert said. Those who complete the follow-up evaluations are paid another $100.

"Participants need significant motivation," Gilbert said. "The money is a big motivator."

Gilbert said about 90 percent of the participants make it through the first month. He added that many of the participants smoke less after going through the program and some give up the habit completely.

Heather Hamn, a senior in psychology from Peoria who made it through the study, said it was not easy to give up cigarettes.

"It was pretty hard, but the money made it worthwhile," Hamn said.

She said she resumed smoking after the smoke-free month was over, but quit again and currently does not smoke.

A smoking machine, built by Hans Bank of the SIUC Fine Instruments Research Shop, allows researchers to give participants measured doses of nicotine and compare the effects on different people, Gilbert said.

The result of this data collection is an overview of what happens to a specific person when he or she quits smoking, Gilbert said the study is set up to examine all aspects of smoking cessation.

"It was pretty hard, but the money made it worthwhile."

Heather Hamn study participant

Emotional, physical and mental factors all are taken into account.

Gilbert said depressed and anxiety-ridden people have a tougher time than other people giving up cigarettes. He added that heavy smokers also find quitting more difficult.

"When depressed people are on cigarettes, their brain wave activity actually resembles a normal person's," Gilbert explained. "When they quit, it goes back to the way it was. It's actually a form of self-medication."

Gilbert said the women's study also is exploring the effects of the menstrual cycle and oral contraceptives on quitting smoking. He said the current study is the largest ever done involving the menstrual cycle and smoking.

"There may be certain phases in the cycle that are a better time to quit," he said.

Gilbert said about 120 women will be tested by the end of the study.

Amy Skerly, a graduate student in sociology from Los Angeles who has worked in the lab for 3 1/2 years, said her work is rewarding.

"It's a great way to acquire research experience," she said.

Anyone interested in participating in the women's study may contact the Smoking Lab at 453-3561 for an initial screening.

Test

in the top 5 percent on math tests, said Hedges, a professor of education and social science.

In mechanical reasoning, electronics information, and auto and shop information, boys also performed much better than girls, the study found. In areas such as mechanical comprehension and other vocational talents, 8 to 10 times as many boys as girls scored in the top 10 percent, according to the report.

On the other hand, boys were much more likely than girls to score near the bottom of the scale on tests of reading comprehension, memory and perceptual speed.

Hedges said the differences in scores between boys and girls showed remarkably little change between 1960, when the first survey was conducted, and 1992, the year of the most recent survey.

"That was disappointing," he said. "Some people might use that as an argument that these differences are really biological. I think it's equally plausible that the efforts to change things have been too little."

People who have careers in science and engineering are overwhelmingly more likely to have scored in the 90th percentile or higher on mathematics tests in high school, the study found.

Hedges suggested that if American society wants to achieve equal numbers of men and women in scientific and technical fields, "we have to do seven times as good a job in recruiting women."

The study suggests boys are at an "alarming" disadvantage in their performance on writing tests, a finding with important implications for educational policy.

"The generally larger numbers of males who perform near the bottom of the distribution in reading comprehension and writing... will have difficulty finding employment in an increasingly information-driven economy," the report said.

"Thus, some intervention may be required to enable them to participate constructively in the work force," it suggested.

Differences in the abilities of the sexes are likely to figure increasingly in policy discussions about salary fairness, the report noted. Economists have recently begun to use individual differences in test scores to explain sex differences in wages and occupational advancement.

But the study sheds little light on the origin of sex difference in aptitude.

"I believe the sex differences in abilities are caused by social constraints rather than biology," Hedges said.

"Traditionally, there is more encouragement for men to learn math and science while women are encouraged to learn literature," he said. "In the long run, we should change the opportunity structure in order to recruit more women to science."

Nails

"The first thing I did when I got here was get flyers," she said. "I went to all the sororities to build a clientele."

Megan Beller, a junior in business from Belleville, said she heard of Yolanda through people from her sorority house and has recommended her to other people.

"She does a really good job," Beller said. "She is really funny. She started her own business and is really successful."

Since opening in January, Yolanda has gone from two employees to four in six months. Almost half of Yolanda's clientele are SIUC students and faculty, but a new addition is the abundance of Carbonate businesswomen.

Yolanda said the importance of self-image plays a big part in men seeking manicures, and after getting them to try one they become repeat clients.

"You get them in here one time and massage their hands and they get into it," she said.

With a minority of her clients being male, Yolanda's main business comes from women seeking to cure their lack of attractive nails. With a waiting time of two weeks, clients keep her appointment book full.

Stacey Lingle, an undecided sophomore from Dongola, said she has been getting her nails done by Yolanda since last fall.

"Actually, I heard about Yolanda from my boss, but I can't grow my own (nails)," Lingle said. "(Acrylic nails) make me look better."

With the abundance of business success in such a short period of time, Yolanda said she wants to cut down her current 11-hour work day and eventually go back to school.

"We are always joking we will branch out," she said. "That would be the dream, not to have to work as many hours."

But through all the long hours Yolanda admits, "It is all worth it, to work for yourself."

Diversity

and this is what makes the program very personal and unique," Yopp said.

The program exposes SIUC faculty to students from historically black universities as well as institutions with large minority populations, McNeil said.

The ten students were selected from a competitive pool of 32 applicants.

According to McNeil, applicants had to provide their grade point averages, transcripts and three letters of reference from their home institutions.

The program will enhance the students' academic potential and give them the confidence needed to attain higher education, McNeil said.

"The Summer Research Opportunity Program will give them hope that attaining a graduate degree is achievable," she said.

Tawanda Greer, a senior in psychology from Bowie State University, said she participated in the program to gain research experience and to enhance her research skills.

She said she believes the program provides an edge for students to get into graduate school and find out more about various departments.

The diversity in the program has been a unique experience for Greer because she attends an all-black university, she said.

"It is a whole different experience — I have enjoyed the diversity, since I come from a historically black college," Greer said.

Christopher Fowler, a senior in sociology from Johnson C. Smith University, said he plans to attend SIUC's Graduate School.

"The diversity in the program is an important factor," he said. "It is a great experience — we have learned a lot about each other."

Cherie Hawkins, a senior in zoology from SIUC, said the program is providing her with research experience that is almost vital to get into any post-bachelor's graduate program.

"It has allowed me to network with a lot of faculty who might have a major impact on my undergraduate and post-bachelor studies," Hawkins said.

SIUC students receive tuition and fee waivers, free room and board, partial reimbursement of travel cost, three hours of transferable academic credit and a $1,000 stipend.

Personal safety classes for women offered free of charge by Police

By Carey Jane Atherton
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Female SIUC students and other local women who are concerned about their safety can learn sexual assault prevention, protection and escape techniques free of charge next week.

Carbondale Community Resource Officer Don Priddy said the personal safety class for women meets July 12, 13 and 19 from 6-9 p.m. each night. The class, which is open to women 13 and over, is free of charge.

Priddy said the first night of class is a lecture covering a variety of tips about sexual assault prevention and protection. He said the following two classes are workshops that focus on escape techniques.

"Everything we teach is designed for escape," Priddy said.

Priddy said the workshops teach women how to inflict enough pain on attackers forcing them to cease what they are doing and allow the victim to escape.

Priddy said class organizers would prefer anyone under 17 to be accompanied by a parent. However, a person can still attend the class without a parent if a release form is signed.

"We have had quite a few mothers and daughters who have come together," Priddy said.

Carbondale City Clerk, Janet Vaught said she attended one of the classes with her daughter Patty, who was 13 at the time. Vaught said she recommends that mothers and daughters take the class together, because the class has given her the security of knowing her daughter has the ability to handle potentially dangerous situations.

"It makes me feel a little bit better, because I think she could survive," Vaught said.

Third Oklahoma City bombing suspect may have helped finance the attack

The Los Angeles Times

OKLAHOMA CITY—Indicating that authorities are moving toward charging Michael Fortier in the Oklahoma City bombing, a close associate of Fortier and of leading suspect Timothy J. McVeigh has been called to testify Thursday before a grand jury about how the bombing may have been financed.

James Rosencrans, a next-door neighbor of Fortier in Kingman, Ariz., allegedly sold a rare rifle that had been stolen from an Arkansas gun collector last Nov. 5.

The collector, Roger E. Moore of Royal, Ark., suspects McVeigh of masterminding the robbery, and authorities are looking at that crime and other evidence of illegal weapons sales as possible sources of financing for the bombing.

Prosecutors have been trying to reach a plea bargain with Fortier, who was an Army buddy of McVeigh and helped him get a job in Kingman, on a lesser charge in the bombing case.

They are insisting that Fortier plead guilty to a crime that would ensure a 15-year prison sentence, a demand that he and his lawyer apparently are resisting.

One source close to the case said that Rosencrans' scheduled appearance before the grand jury does not necessarily signal that a deal with Fortier had fallen through.

The source noted that prosecutors would continue to collect evidence from Rosencrans, even if Fortier had agreed to cooperate.

Rosencrans, 29, who often totes a pistol on his belt, is a mercurial individual who bitterly denounces government and who has been arrested at least six times, according to records on file in Mohave County Superior Court in Kingman.

The last of those arrests occurred in May when he was charged with brandishing weapons outside his home as authorities searched Fortier's nearby house trailer. That charge was dropped when Rosencrans pleaded guilty to a domestic abuse complaint. He served less than a month in jail.

The grand jury's interest in Rosencrans includes the allegation that he recently sold a rifle to a Kingman gun shop that authorities have matched with one of the more than 68 firearms stolen from Moore.

Ticketmaster antitrust investigation complete

Los Angeles Times

The U.S. Justice Department on Wednesday ended its antitrust probe of Los Angeles ticket giant Ticketmaster.

The yearlong investigation was prompted by complaints from the Seattle rock group Pearl Jam, which alleged that Ticketmaster exercised a monopoly over ticket distribution and used its market power to gouge consumers with excessive service fees.

The Justice Department's abrupt decision to end the investigation came just after Pearl Jam's effort to organize a tour without the ticket giant collapsed. Although Pearl Jam said recent concert cancellations were further evidence of Ticketmaster's monopoly.

Police Blotter

University Police

University police reported that three juveniles attending the Spectrum program at Touch of Nature ran away at 5:20 p.m. July 5.

The first juvenile is described as a 15-year-old white male with a shaved head and a mohawk style hair cut, last seen wearing a blue t-shirt with Kaskaskia College printed on it, khaki colored shorts, a tan baseball hat, brown boots.

The second juvenile police described as 16-year-old white female with short dark curly hair wearing a khaki long sleeved shirt, khaki pants and black boots.

The third juvenile was described as a 15-year-old white female with pony tails wearing a red headband, a khaki long sleeved shirt and khaki pants.

University police said a 27-year-old employee of the University reported that someone stole a set of knives from a locked container in the student center between 8:30 a.m. May 3 and 10 a.m. June 30. The estimated value of the knives is $450.

EPA's Browner optimistic about forthcoming battles

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Why is Carol M. Browner smiling?

Facing unrelenting attacks by Republican lawmakers, reviled by some industry executives as unrealistically "green" and criticized by state regulators for a lack of flexibility, the Environmental Protection Agency Administrator has every reason to feel beleaguered.

At a recent interview in her office overlooking the Potomac River, however, Browner seemed optimistic about the prospects of eventual victory over her detractors.

"We have some big battles ahead, particularly with Congress," she said. "But I think we're going to win the war."

Already, the Clinton administration has helped slow a GOP-led drive to weaken the 1972 Clean Water Act, she said.

A proposed revision of the statute, passed by the House in May, has been widely criticized, and the Senate has postponed action on the measure.

"We helped expose some of the special interests behind the environmental rollbacks in that bill," Browner said.

"And the public was horrified. They don't want reduced protection for their water. And that's the message they are sending to Capitol Hill. We hope people up there are listening."

Administration officials also are making headway against a GOP proposal to relax federal regulations and diminish some of the rule-making powers of the EPA and other federal agencies, Browner said.

The Senate version of the so-called regulatory reform bill, drafted by Majority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., has been attacked by Browner and other administration officials.

Earlier this month, Clinton threatened to veto the bill if it passes in its current form.

Browner and others have rallied Democratic opposition to the bill.

So far, according to congressional aides, Dole lacks the votes needed for Senate approval. A vote is expected next week.

During her next two years as the nation's chief environmental official, Browner's legislative agenda includes pushing through revisions of the 1972 Clean Water Act, the 1974 Safe Drinking Water Act and the 1980 Comprehensive Environmental Response Compensation and Liability Act (also known as the Superfund law), which enforces the cleanup of toxic waste dumps. Reauthorization of all three laws is overdue.

In her administrative role, Browner reports progress in getting industry, environmentalists, state regulators and other parties to work together to resolve some of their differences over enforcement of federal regulations. Under her Common Sense Initiative, launched last year, representatives from the different sectors convene regularly to determine how better environmental protection can be achieved, even if it means ignoring some existing rules and creating some new ones.

The environmental debates in Congress have slowed the effort somewhat, Browner said. "We hear industry people asking why they should work on compromises when they might get something they really want (in terms of exemptions from current law) in legislation on Capitol Hill. It's very frustrating."

Nonetheless, she added, participants are making a good-faith effort to forge solutions both sides can live with.

Betting sidelines Maryland QB

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—University of Maryland starting senior quarterback Scott Milanovich likely will miss one or more games this football season after the school declared him and at least one other player ineligible for betting on college sports events, according to a source familiar with the case.

Milanovich's father, Gary, confirmed that his son's name is in Maryland's report to the NCAA, but did not know if he would miss any games.

The identity of any of the other players could not be ascertained.

Under NCAA procedures, if a school discovers that an athlete has violated an NCAA rule, it must declare the athlete ineligible. The school can immediately appeal its own action to the NCAA's eligibility director for restoration of the athlete's eligibility and can recommend its own punishment, such as a suspension from practices or games. However, the final decision will be made by NCAA eligibility director Carrie Doyle.

If Maryland officials disagree with Doyle's decision, they can appeal to the NCAA's eligibility committee, chaired by Milton R. Schroeder, a law professor at Arizona State.

Maryland officials have said the violations do not include betting on any Maryland games.

Athletic Director Debbie Yow confirmed Wednesday that the school has declared some football players ineligible, in accordance with NCAA policy, but she declined to say how many. NCAA rules forbid organizing gambling by athletes and athletic department staff members on all college sports events.

Yow said of Maryland's decision to rule the players ineligible: "That's an NCAA mandate; it's not our choice. It's part of the process for their eligibility being restored. We're very confident of their eligibility being restored."

The NCAA's decision on the players' eligibility could come next week, Doyle said.

Yow acknowledged that players could miss games, saying, "That seems to be the big question."

Doyle said Maryland "did submit a report to us, which was a request for restoration of eligibility as well as all the facts of the case and we're in the process of reviewing all of that ... and in the process of doing some research in our data base for precedent. We're asking a lot of questions of our staff to determine what the right answer is."

Football coach Mark Duffner could not be reached for comment.

Maryland officials began investigating alleged gambling by football players on March 6. Among other players, they interviewed last year's backup quarterback, Kevin Foley, who has since transferred to another school, and at least three players who also have transferred.

Gary Milanovich said that in the spring, he and his son met with a team of Maryland investigators, including Yow and two attorneys: Susan Bailey, from the office of university president William E. Kirwan, and Douglas Lobel, from the law firm Maryland hired to assist in the investigation.

Becker continues to talk confidently.

"I think, in general, if you are able to stay 10 years in the top of the tennis world, you have to play better each year just to stay with the best players, and I think I was able to do that," Becker said. "If you compare my game now to 10 years ago I'm playing much better in all areas."

It's just that the game has gotten better, the players are playing a little better now than they have 10 years ago.

Either you improve every year a little bit or you go down. I was able to hang in with the best guys for the past 10 years and I am very happy about that."

Marriage and family are often said to lead to the downfall of top players. Becker sees it as a normal part of growing up.

"I think I was a bit disappointed by the things I heard a year and a half ago when I did decide to start a family. The saying was,

"He's not hungry anymore. ... (But) my desire for tennis hasn't changed at all. I think it's the other way; it has almost gotten more as I got older."

His body can't withstand the abuse as much anymore, and he strained a calf muscle during the tournament at Queens that put his Wimbledon appearance in jeopardy. But if there's any place to rejuvenate Becker, it's Wimbledon.

"This is his second home," said Nick Bollettieri, Becker's coach. "He had a little bit of a scare with the leg, but he feels secure out there. He's hard to beat here."

Milbury fits into N.Y. Islanders system

NEWSDAY

UNIONDALE, N.Y.—In the thicket of microphones that confronted Mike Milbury, one refused to stay in place.

As Milbury put his hands upon the lectern, where he would give his acceptance speech as the new coach of the Islanders, the renegade microphone thudded to the floor. A technician retrieved it, and dropped it again.

"First day on the job?" said Milbury to the technician. "Me, too."

And so Wednesday, Mike Milbury spent his first official day as the sixth coach in New York Islanders history trying to explain what he brings to the job:

"In my 21 years of professional hockey I've been blessed with many incredible opportunities," said Milbury. "Today I've been blessed with another. ... I'll tell you now what I'll tell the team in September. Our club will be in as good a shape as any club in hockey. Our club will be as prepared as any club in hockey. Our club will be as committed as any club in hockey. (The players) owe it to themselves, to the organization and to the fans."

He said those words forcefully, like a man who not only is in charge, but wants to be in charge. They were words that General Manager Don Maloney had heard in his discussions with Milbury over the past weeks, ever since he created the coaching vacancy by firing Lorne Henning on May 3.

In introducing the 43-year-old former Boston Bruins coach and player Wednesday, Maloney listed those attributes he was seeking in a new coach:

"Number one was personality," said Maloney. "Somebody with fire, some emotion. Of the 15 or so potential candidates I talked to, some of them had it.

"Number two, I was looking for hockey knowledge. ... Some candidates had the knowledge but lacked the passion, the emotion."

"Number three was people skills, somebody to motivate a group and bring them together as a team."

"With the people skills, the motivational skills, the hockey savvy, Mike has the complete package. He is capable of being one of the elite coaches in this league."

In fact, that is a status that Milbury achieved in just two seasons of coaching the Bruins that began in 1989. His overall record was 90-49-21, a 628 winning percentage. He had two consecutive 100-point seasons despite the fact his teams posted NHL highs in man-games lost to injury each year.

"The first month was a problem with English speaking and listening; now it's much better but it's still a problem," Tangpong said. "I studied English grammar and writing in Thailand but it's much different than speaking."

Thailand experienced a craze for table tennis that peaked out in 1985 and has been declining ever since, he said.

Tangpong recently won $125 at the 80 person Gateway Invitational table tennis tournament in St. Louis. He ranked first in the under 2,000 point rank division for which he received $100. A 3rd place finish for the 2,150 and under division won him $25, he said.

ranked above 2,500, Tanpong said. The avid tennis table player is ranked in the 1,700 range, he said.

He said he does not want to be the U.S. champion but enjoys playing and teaching others how to play well.

"My friend told me there is too much competition to be the U.S. champion," Tangpong said.

The Keyshot ST has been his paddle of choice for the last three years, he said.

"I change the rubber on the paddle every two or three months depending on how much I play," Tangpong said.

Tangpong came over from Thailand by himself hoping to get into the Masters of Business Administration program at SIUC. He is a 1994 chemical engineering graduate from Prince of Songkla University in Thailand. He was the president of the Prince of Songkla table tennis club president in 1992-93.

The clubs that have new parks and are also in the race have a big advantage, but that's the way it is."

The average attendance as of Wednesday, based on tickets sold—the clubs refuse to reveal no-show totals or the in-house fall-off might appear worse —was down 23 percent compared to last Aug. 11, when the strike began, and was down 19 percent through a similar number of 1994 dates.

However, since June 15, the average has risen from 23,295 to 24,343, and the falloff has diminished from 21.6% to that 19%.

It is still a long way from the 30,066 average through a corresponding number of dates last year, but it has gone up more than 1,000 in less than three weeks.

It is also back to the levels of the late '80s and early '90s, levels "we thought then were so outstanding," Selig said.

Budget difference has many factors

By Cynthia Sheets
DE Sports Editor

This is the third story in a series examining the Title IX issue on the SIUC campus.

Although there are budgetary discrepancies between the SIUC men's and women's athletic departments, the reasons for these differences may have more to do with scheduling and other factors than gender-related issues, according to Charlotte West, SIUC associate athletic director.

"There are several non-gender specific differences," West said. "But they show up on the budget."

West used basketball, in which there is a $130,000 contrast, as an example to illustrate some of the differences between the men's and women's sports budgets.

The Missouri Valley Conference sets the schedule for both basketball squads. The men are slated to play more mid-week games than the women. This requires more charter flights, upping the budget for the men's

"This hasn't been a one or two-year effort. It is a long-time commitment, and we are just now seeing the fruits of our labor."

Charlotte West,
SIUC Associate
Athletic Director

team. The women's schedule allows them to participate in a travel-partner arrangement on the weekends, in which they play two different teams in the same weekend, cutting spending almost in half.

The men's basketball squad also has to pay one-third more for officials, because there are three referees in men's basketball as opposed to two referees in women's basketball.

"There is a little more leeway for the men," West said. "When the women start to draw more crowds and for example need more security for the games, the budget will go up accordingly. As of now, the women have the more flexible schedule."

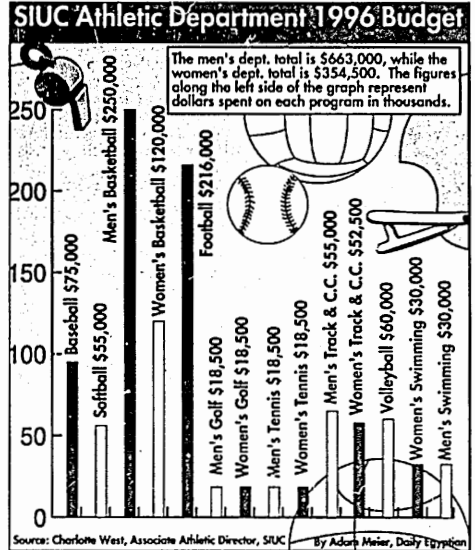

West said she has worked hard on comparability in the budget. Tennis, swimming and golf all receive the same amounts, and the track/cross country amounts between women and men are almost equal.

"This hasn't been a one or two-year effort," she said. "It is a long-term commitment, and we are just now seeing the fruits of our labor."

SIUC men's basketball coach Rich Herrin mentioned two ways teams can acquire funding.

"Everybody has got to go out and raise money—either by donations or selling tickets," Herrin said. "That's what we've been

Tangpong dominates ping pong

For a man who just showed up in the United States less than a year ago, Cnarmchai Tangpong is making all the right moves.

After arriving from Thailand in January, Tangpong captured the SIUC table tennis championship from a field of 14 people just more than a month later.

"I have played table tennis since I was five years old," Tangpong said. "I'm enjoying playing here too. I've met good friends through table tennis."

Tangpong, 23, said he has enjoyed being in the United States but found difficulties in his first

Becker hopes to win again, a decade later at Wimbledon

The Washington Post

WIMBLEDON, England—At times, it really does seem as if it's been 10 years since Boris Becker burst onto the tennis scene, running and diving all over the grass courts to become the first unseeded player to win Wimbledon, at the tender age of 17.

He has lost the looks of a gangly teenager, and he's added a beard and a better hair style. He married Barbara Feltus in December 1993, and their son, Noah, was born about a month later. These days the grass stains on his clothes are more likely to come from slips than hustling dives. Boris Becker in his current form has both made concessions to age and he finds himself, 10 years later in familiar territory: the Wimbledon semifinals.

Becker, 27, is the oldest of the four men left in the tournament. And while Goran Ivanisevic, Pete Sampras and Andre Agassi, Becker's opponent Friday, have all played in the finals before, Becker is the only one to have appeared there during the 1980s. All of a sudden he seems like part of another era. His first championship came at the expense of Kevin Curren, his second, in 1986 came against Ivan Lendl and he beat Stefan Edberg in 1989 for his third.

Becker is only 20 months younger than Stefan Edberg, whom he met in the Wimbledon final for three straight years beginning in 1988. Yet Edberg has gone by the wayside in the second round the last two years and even he sounded doubtful that he can ever put together another Grand Slam run. Becker

Baseball reps see surge in popularity

The Los Angeles Times

Even as baseball prepares to dust off its showcase with the playing of the All-Star Game next Tuesday in Arlington, Texas, a residue from the still unresolved labor dispute seems certain to remain.

Without a bargaining agreement guaranteeing completion of this and future seasons, much of the anger and apathy produced by an eight-month strike linger. Declining attendance continues to affect nearly every franchise, but time seems to have eased some of the hurt.

Approaching the symbolic midpoint of a delayed season, the damage has become tougher to measure.

"I'm cautiously encouraged," acting Commissioner Bud Selig said of attendance. "I think we've stopped the downward spiral."

"I don't want to be Pollyannaish, because we have a lot of problems and a lot of work to be done, but the trend of the last few weeks is more positive than it was a month ago."

"Let's see what happens in July and August. But I think the clubs that are in contention, at least, have reason to be optimistic."

General Manager Sandy Alderson of the Oakland Athletics agreed. He said the strike's impact has faded a bit in the face of other issues.

"Schools are out. The weather has become better. The pennant races are taking shape, and the passage of time has had a therapeutic effect," he said.

"We lost star players like Ken Griffey Jr. and Matt Williams (because of injuries), but the performance of Hideo Nomo has transcended Los Angeles and had a big impact on the popularity of the game, as did Eddie Murray going for 3,000 hits. Maybe our Ariel Prieto (the Cuban pitcher who is already with the A's after having been the fifth player selected in the June draft) can have the same impact as Nomo."

"The situation has improved, and I think we can be reasonably optimistic that it will continue to improve, although it's still uneven."

"The clubs that have new
