Minimum wage hike may cut jobs

By Jennifer Camden
Daily Egyptian Reporter

SIUC's budget may not be able to handle the upcoming minimum wage hikes, according to some student workers or work hours, University officials say.

The U.S. Senate passed Tuesday to increase minimum wages from $4.25 to $4.75 and finally up to $5.15 within one year's time. The House passed the same 90-cent increase in May. The bill is now pending committee finalization and President Bill Clinton's signature, possibly by Sept. 2.

Paul Britton, SIUC financial aid director, said the University has not been allocated more money for the increased student worker wages. He said individual campus employers will have to look at their student work budgets and decide how to pay their workers.

Britton said SIUC students have federal work-study jobs and 5,366 students have student work-aid jobs. The students can earn $1.25 per hour, the current minimum wage.

"I have concerns related to whether the budget for the University will be able to handle the increase in wages," he said. "From a financial position, though, being able to earn more per hour is great."

BOT to approve interim chancellor today at meeting

By Sigor K. Shlinon
DE Government/Poltics Editor

An interim chancellor will be recommended and probably approved today at the SIU Board of Trustees' meeting, University officials say.

SIU President Ted Sanders said in a press conference Wednesday, he has spent the last month talking with University constituency leaders, such as the Faculty Senate president, vice chancellors and deans about what is necessary for the interim chancellor.

Sanders said he has a recommendation but would not release the person's name. The SIU Board of Trustees will vote on the nominee this morning at 7:30 to talk with him and ask questions, he said. During the board's 10:30 meeting, he hopes the recommendation is approved, Sanders said.

"The overall attributes I have been looking for is that person has a vision of where the University ought to be going and a personal commitment to move the University forward," Sanders said. "Also, they need to have a high-energy level, credibility, integrity and respect both inside and outside the University."

Chancellor John C. Guynn announced in June he would be stepping down from his position on Aug. 16 because of health reasons.

Since Guynn's announcement, Sanders has said he has been working to find a suitable interim chancellor to serve from Aug. 17 until June 30, 1999, while a nationwide search for a permanent chancellor's continues by the University.

Jack Dyer, University Relations executive director and media services executive assistant, said until the SIU Board of Trustees meet with Sanders' nominee, the name will not be announced.

Unions file wage complaint

By Julie Rendleman
日常 Egyptian Reporter

Union construction workers picking outside the parking garage have filed a complaint against a Franklin Park construction company for allegedly not obeying the wage laws, a union official says.

Larry Burnett, business manager for Labor Local 227, alleges Kovilic Construction Company, Inc., out of Franklin Park near Chicago, is not obeying the wage laws and did not hire Labor Local 227, who has done all the work at SIUC for 27 years.

William Capie, vice chancellor of administration, said Kovilic was hired by SIUC because they had the lowest bid to renovate the parking garage beside the Student Center.

Burnett said local labor unions from the area have joined the picket that has been going on since June 25 to help support Labor Local 227.

Burnett said he filed a complaint last week with the Department of Labor against Kovilic for not obeying the prevailing wage laws and he feels Labor Local 227 has gained a lot by picketing Kovilic.

"Construction cannot go much further on the garage," he said. "Electricians and the concrete people have both refused to cross the picket.

Mike Masterson, manager of conciliation and resolution for the Department of Labor in Chicago, said he has not received Labor Local 227 complaint but he has to go through three

Man recovering from gunshot wound

By John Lynch
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The 26-year-old man was reportedly shot while being shot twice early Wednesday morning, according to a statement received from the Carbondale police.

Edridge Hartley, of Carbondale, was shot in the emergency room at Carbondale Memorial Hospital around 2 a.m. after allegedly being shot by Brian Stafford, of 900 S. Elizabeth St., police said.

Carbondale and SIU police initially responded to a 911 call regarding shots fired in the 800 block of South Oakland Street. Police discovered Stafford on his porch armed with a shotgun and dismissed him without further incident, police said.

Immediately after, Carbondale police said they were notified of a male at Carbondale Memorial Hospital with two gunshot wounds. The victim was later identified as Hartley.

Further investigation by police revealed Stafford and Hartley were involved in an argument which resulted in the shooting, police said.

Hartley underwent surgery Wednesday morning and was listed in satisfactory condition. In the intensive care unit, hospital workers said Stafford was arrested and charged with aggravated battery with a firearm and unlawful use of a weapon by a felon. Stafford was apparently on parole when he fired in the 800 block of South Oakland Street.

"Stafford was arrested and charged with aggravated battery with a firearm and unlawful use of a weapon by a felon. Stafford was apparently on parole at the time of the shooting, said Lt. Bob Gono, of the Carbondale police department.

Jackson County State's Attorney refused to comment further on the charges against Stafford.

Police are still investigating the incident.

MONGOLIA MAKES ATTEMPTS TO MODERNIZE—KARAKORUM, Mongolia—In a quiet valley at the end of a rural road, a few stone and ceramic fragments have been piled on top of each other in memorial to the past. The beheld stone lions and smashed tiles are about all that remain above ground of ancient Karakorum, once the capital of the world’s largest empire. Now, 790 years after Genghis Khan founded the Mongol Empire, his descendants are trying to establish themselves in the modern world, breaking out of centuries of isolation and foreign occupation to build an open, prosperous nation. This past week, Mongolia took a giant step toward that goal, voting to establish the Mongolian People’s Revolutionary Party, which had run the country as a Soviet colony for 70 years, and after several years of hyperinflation and continued economic decline, the economy is on the mend. But like Genghis Khan’s empire, which rose and fell in a matter of decades, modern-day Mongolia is a fragile nation, blessed by two great rivers, one ever having bitten off a chunk of what used to be greater Mongolia.

RELATIONS WITH CHINA IMPROVED BY TALKS—BEIJING—U.S. national security adviser Anthony Lake eulogized a visit that he had taken with senior officials on an eight-day tour to China, with both sides suggesting that after months of tension the Sino-U.S. relationship is back on track. Lake, who met in cordial sessions with President Jiang Zemin and Premier Li Peng on Tuesday, had said the stage for reciprocal state visits by Jiang and President Clinton. “Because of our recent progress, I would expect that there would be an exchange of state visits,” he said Wednesday. A White House spokesman had said Tuesday that any such visits would not take place this year. Lake told U.S. reporters in a small ceremony that improving relations does not involve a softening of Washington’s commitment to human rights. “If it were a softening, then we would have a problem.”

SENATE REJECTS NATIONAL RIGTH-TO-WORK LAW—WASHINGTON—The Senate Wednesday split the difference on two bills opposing by the Clinton administration and organized labor as efforts to undermine the union movement, and the bill that was approved did not win enough votes to override a threatened veto by the administration. Action on the two bills came a day after the Senate approved labor-backed legislation to bar States from prohibiting efforts to organize unions authorized by the National Labor Relations Act that mirror measures that have stung in a squeak-play by some Republicans to force concessions from Democrats on a health care bill. All three bills played into the two-week campaign agenda, with Republicans seeking attacks on organized labor and Democrats characterizing Republicans as lackies of organized labor and Democrats characterizing Republicans as hostile to the interests of working people.

CALIFORNIA MAY START VIRTUAL UNIVERSITY—Two years after 30 Western states and a half dozen nations announced plans to launch regional online college, California officials are investigating the possibility of going it alone, creating their own “virtual university” that could deliver courses to learning disabled students from Florida to Tokyo. While the Western Summit from Florida to Tokyo has not ruled out its participation in the regional college, he and the state’s top educators have agreed to explore a California-only initiative that would take advantage of the state’s vast educational and technological resources. On Tuesday, a “design team” made up of representatives from Stanford University, the University of Southern California and the state’s three public systems—the University of California, the California State University and the Community Colleges—not met for the first time with officials from the telecommunications industry in the governor’s office in Sacramento. Wilson has until mid-August to let the other Western governors know whether California will join them.

Make kids our priority: Let’s imagine a future for Science Center

THERE CAN BE A SIGN OF RELIEF FOR KIDS in Carbondale. The Science Center will be allowed to remain in the city hall complex after the city government moves to its new building. Previously, the center was looking for a new home. However, with funds deleted from its budget by the City Manager, the Park District and the state, the center could not afford to move.

City leaders have noticed the value of the center and are stepping in to help. So now the center can continue its work of educating children.

City Manager Jeff Doherty said the city will continue to allow the non-profit children’s museum to remain in the building and that the city can cover rent and other expenses for one more year. The city will also assist the center in its move next year.

THE SCIENCE CENTER IS STILL WITHOUT FUNDS lost from the state and the Carbondale Park District. It needs money to complete its move. The Park District should reconsider museum fund appropriations and give more money to the center. The city made the right choice by helping the center when it was left hanging.

Postal privatization: Not broken, don’t fix it

A U.S. REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE CHICAGO area is calling for the privatization of the postal service. He maintains that by turning the postal service over to private companies to deliver mail, more opportunities would be created for consumers and businesses while the present quality of postal service would be maintained.

However, postal service union officials say the privatization would hurt small communities in Southern Illinois and other rural areas where it may no longer be profitable to deliver mail. This would mean people would have to drive to larger communities to receive their mail.

The reality is that somewhere between more opportunities and disappearance of service lies the answer: leave it alone.

THE CHANGE COULD CREATE HIGHER COSTS and inconvenience for the consumer. In the end, privatization may require taxpayer intervention.

Right now, the postal service is a self-supporting entity. It does not operate on tax dollars. Its goal is to provide a service, not make money. The money made from stamps and services goes to the cost of running the post office. Stamp prices are raised simply in order to cover the rising costs of handling mail. For instance if fuel costs go up the post office, with its fleet of trucks and planes, shoulders the burden. It’s not unlikely that private business would raise stamp or shipping prices to consumers in order to turn a profit.

In 1971, the postal service left the control of Congress with the Postal Reorganization Act, leaving behind taxpayer subsidies and placing fiscal control in the hands of post office managers. Now, if privatization were a bust, the federal or the state government may need to intervene with subsidies and bail the service out. What would be the alternative? No mail delivery.

Last year the postal system handled 181 billion pieces of mail, 106 percent more than 1971. Without anyone’s tax dollars, without privatization,

Beloved African leader’s death: Zik’s epoch-making era closes

Charles Ubah

Perspectives

There is no doubt that Africans and friends of Africa around the world have lost a dear friend, a father, a statesman, a charismatic leader, and a champion of African independence, democracy and unity. Dr. Nnamdi Azikwe, traditionally titled “The Owl of Osolua,” represents all of the above and even more.

With the passing of “Zik,” Africa lost one of its greatest leaders. Indeed, mankind has lost one of the unswerving champions of unity and cooperation between Africa and the African Diaspora.

Dr. Nnamdi Azikwe, popularly known as “Zik of Africa,” will go down in history as one of the 20th century’s most passionate and persuasive advocates of African independence and Nigerian unity, one of the most brilliant and eloquent orators; one of the most respected statesmen; one of the most charismatic leaders in Africa; a most beloved and dedicated man of the people.

Seriously, the death of Nnamdi Azikwe practically marks the close of an epoch-making era for Africans and Nigerian in particular, and nowhere anyone with a comparable vision to fill his place. As a political leader, Zik rose like a blazing sun igniting fires, just as did from pyrometallurgy, Zik of Africa, a most beloved and dedicated man of the people.

Zik’s death marks the end of one of the real titans of African politics, and his magnificent literary nationalist stature. It also to a degree is an end to an era in international journalism and politics. Without doubt, Zik’s ideology and philosophy were clearly not for the consumption of Nigerians only, but for all Africans, as well as scholars of Africa, both in the continent and around the globe. No doubt, future generations, especially in Africa will certainly miss this man.

Zik of Africa, African students and friends in SUIC mourn your death with respect and tribute. May your soul rest in perfect peace, Amen. I end this farewell note on Zik’s death with the following biographical notes.

Dr. Nnamdi Azikwe:

- 1904: Born on November 16 in Zungeru, Nigeria
- 1921 – 25: Worked as a Clerk at the Department of Treasury in Lagos, Nigeria
- 1930: Graduated from Lincoln University Pennsylvania U.S.A.
- 1937: Returned to Nigeria and lunched “West African Pilot” Newspaper; published “Reminiscences of Africa”
- 1938: Published “The Africans in Ancient and Medieval History”
- 1942: Published “Political Blueprint for Nigeria”
- 1944: Co-founder National Council of Nigeria and Cameroon and the Nigerian National Democratic Party to form NNDC party
- 1956: Appointed Nigerian Governor-General
- 1959: Became President of the Federal Government of Nigeria
- 1960: Appointed Governor-General in the newly independent Nigeria
- 1961: Published “Zik: A Selection of Speeches”
- 1963: Appointed President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria
- 1966: First Nigeria Military Coup, Zik ousted from power
- 1979: Re-entered politics, lost election to Shehu Shagari, a Haudu-Fulani from the North
- 1983: Went into seclusion following death of wife, Flora
- 1994: Received Honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters from Lincoln University
- 1996: Died May 11 at the University Teaching Hospital, Enugu, in eastern Nigeria

"Independence Day" improves on classic

By Chad Anderson
DE Entertainment Editor

With all the pre-release promotions and the anticipation, "Independence Day" is simply a universe beyond any of this summer's action films. Better yet, it lives up to all expectations of its billing.

Prior to viewing the show, the obvious bias against the movie was that the film was an updated version of "War of the Worlds" to combat the aliens, and a "threat of global importance." While there are a few imperfections in the script, such as David (Jeff Goldblum) defeating the alien forces with a computer virus (similar to the cliche which killed the invaders in the H.G. Wells classic), the movie is still larger than life. Sitting in the theater, the movie does bring the audience with the mother ship measuring a quarter of the size of the moon, and the stereo surround sound captures the audience.

The problem with the whole computer virus solution is that it takes away from the action man, he does a fine job with a strong supporting cast and, of course, the acting of Bill Pullman.

The Dellevantes bring bluegrass-country-rock sound to Turley Park

By Chad Anderson
DE Entertainment Editor

Little brothers tend to follow in big brother’s footsteps, and such is the case with The Dellevantes.

Growing up in New Jersey, Mike Dellevante, the younger of the two, was the little brother to older brother Bob. During their youth, music was a common bond between the two.

As Bob learned guitar, so did Mike. As soon as Bob formed what would be the duo’s first band, Mike wanted to be a part of it.

“He used to hang around when my friends would come over and play guitar,” Bob said in the band’s press advance. “Then he started playing with us. Turned out he was a better player than all of us!”

That initial bluegrass band was the beginning of the group’s trademark stripped-down sound. From there, the group transformed into Who’s Your Daddy, another roots band, which became a favorite in the brothers’ hometown of Hoboken, N.J.

Growing more talented and defining their sound, the group was noticed by BMI’s Jodi Williams, who convinced the group to come to Nashville. From there, the group transformed itself into The Dellevantes, which is known for its country-based sound, but are distant from the New Nashville sound, or the pop-sound influences such as the Eagles that most of today’s country-rock groups are derived from.

"They remind me of the Every Brothers vocal harmony," Josh Wise, former Student Programming Council director of concerts, said. "They have a little bit of country sound to them and some country rock, but they really remind me of Uncle Tupelo. They can sing like there’s no tomorrow.”

It was also accident, though, that Carbodile would be a stop for the band, which is paramilitary for its style of music. The band has been on the music video bandwagon as of late, and the group’s video for its hit single “Pocket Full of Diamonds” can be seen regularly on Country Music Television.

"We were looking at another band called The Bottle Rockets, but they refused because they were going on tour with Kenny "The Good Times." Wise, and I was talking to their (The Dellevantes) agent about another show, and he told me I was looking for a roots group. I asked him if he had one, and I told him we knew exactly the right group.

The Dellevantes will play this week’s Sunset Concert at Turley Park Thursday at 7 p.m.

Christian Moe, a retiring theater professor, will go out in style thanks to the last production he is directing for SIUC’s Summer Playhouse, "Bedroom Farce." Moe makes a mockery of the real classiness that happens every day.

The play, set in the present day, is a comical look at the sexual escapades of a couple written by Alan Ayckbourn, who is sometimes referred to by critics as the Noel Coward of the stage.

Matt Foy, who plays the trouble-making, spoiled rich boy Charles, "Bedroom Farce" is a more mature and intelligently portrayed. The two give each other enjoyable performances and the characters in the show could have people communicate rather than assuming. It is a pleasure to watch the two perform because of the greatness of the emotion that is shown.

One minor drawback in the production is the performance of Lawrence Dennis, who played, Trevor’s wealthy father, Dennis. The actor seemed very wordy, over using his lines but at other times he played the role well.

Dennis had the ability to really make the audience giggle at a commonplace old man, but his devastations with the delivery of his lines slowed the show’s pace.

The show was well done and the laughs at life’s misfortunes and inconsistencies people by blatantly deploying how most people can be to each other because of the common sense factor.

The play might not have gone as well as it did if it were not for the great set design and easy-to-follow lighting.

Hats off to Patrick for the lighting design and to everyone who worked on and designed the set.

workers should not lose hours or jobs because of the raise. "If they’re interested in finding money for student workers, they should cut out administrative pay with $40,000-a-year salaries," he said. "They could hire two student workers at the cost of just that of the money."

Feld said student workers could see a decrease in their work hours, but will be making the same amount of money now.

"The real question is whether departmental increases are going to increase budgets for student work," he said.

Greg Tatham, SIUC Student Employment Center director, said about 250 student workers are working, on how to get those hours back--if it was possible. He said the Student Center will consider all options, including increasing student fees and prices, reducing hours and programming, and slowing student hiring to compensate for the raise, but no decision will be made until late this fall. Ed Jones, University Housing director, and Carolyn Snyder, Library Affairs dean, both said they did not know how their departments would cope with the raise. The two areas together employ about 650 student workers. Tatham said student workers were aware of the collective bargaining agreement and were told that the raise would not apply to the bargaining units.

Achieve Program helps students get jump start on school, studying

By Annette Barr
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As Russell Holder struggled through high school, the thought of college seemed out of his reach. "I didn't think that I would ever go to college," said Holder, a junior in administration of justice from Naperville.

Holder was unsure about going to college because he has a learning disability. Holder has been able to succeed academically at SIUC with the help of the Achieve Program.

The Achieve Program provides academic support services for students with diagnosed learning disabilities, such as dyslexia, said Barbara Cordoni, coordinator of the Achieve Program.

The program, founded by Cordoni in 1978, was the first program designed specifically for learning disabled students only in the country, and the first to be institutionalized on a college campus.

"We're kind of the grandaddy of them all," said Amy Shaw, the developmental skills training specialist for the Achieve Program.

Cordoni said she has seen students from every state in the country and from 15 foreign countries involved in the program. "If they have made it this far (in school) the students have to be very motivated," Cordoni said. "The majority of my students know darn good and well what it takes to get an education." Cordoni said of the students who graduate in the Achieve Program.

"Once they get here and realize it, we don't want to quit," Cordoni said.

The Achieve Program has not only helped students with studying, but it has also provided some students with lesson plans that they can carry on to the work place.

Dave Farris, a 1995 SIUC graduate in forestry from Evansville, Ind., uses some of the tips he learned from the Achieve Program in his job as a refuge officer for the fish and wildlife service.

Farris said since he has dyslexia, it was difficult for him to put out an accident report while listening to the person involved in the accident. Instead of rewriting only on his note, Farris uses a tape recorder so he can pay closer attention to the person.

"The tricks that you learn here (the Achieve Program), they follow you," Farris said. "There's probably no way I could have graduated without this program."

This fall semester, 185 students will be in the Achieve Program. The program costs $1,350 per semester for students with disabilities, and $500 per semester for the services provided by the Achieve Program.

"I get a little extra cash and the guy gets the help he needs," Farris said.

"I don't think that I would be able to get the grades that I do (without the Achieve Program)," Holder said. "They (people with learning disabilities) aren't stupid. People need to realize these students have a lot of potential."
Economist says predictions about AIDS false

"National economies can be stimulated by many different events, some of the outright nefarious, such as wars and epidemics."

Josef Deeona, physician, health economist

"What we concluded was that 10 percent of people in the United States who died as a result of heart disease had high levels of homocysteine."

Carol Boushey, assistant professor, College of Agriculture

Boushey conducted a study with three colleagues at the University of Washington, where she worked in the Nutritional Science Program and Epidemiology before coming to SUUC last September. Boushey's group looked at 27 previous studies worldwide that related various diseases to homocysteine levels. They found 11 studies that related homocysteine levels to folic acid intake.

"What we concluded was that 10 percent of people in the United States, who died as a result of heart disease had high levels of homocysteine," Boushey said. Although high cholesterol seems to correlate with heart disease, the research concluded that homocysteine appears to be an independent risk factor for heart disease.

Boushey said, "We don't know just yet what is considered a normal level of homocysteine, however that will be found soon. What folic acid does is break down the pathway of homocysteine in the body.

Although no research has directly linked folic acid and heart disease, the National Institute of Health (NIH) is now open to further discussion of research in folic acid as a result of the team's findings, Boushey said.

Initially the research team was having problems convincing the FDA to increase required levels of folic acid use because it was thought to only help prevent spina bifida and similar birth defects. (Boushey said."

"What we have established is a correlation between elevated levels of homocysteine and heart disease," Boushey said.

"Homocysteine is an amino acid produced by the body as a by-product of protein digestion that can clog arteries when at an elevated level," Boushey said. People with high homocysteine levels frequently have lower-than-normal blood levels of this nutrient, Boushey said.

"The irony of all our work is that it goes along with all past dietary recommendations. It gives researchers confidence knowing that what we are recommending is correct," Boushey said, "Now that the FDA has set a food labeling law, consumers can become conscious of products that are fortified with folic acid.

"According to local pharmacists, Mike Thomas, up to 490 micrograms of folic acid is available without a prescription."

"Due to the announcement of this recent finding there has been a slight increase in the sale of folic acid," Thomas said.

correlation between winning and attendance.

"Whenever we have a successful team, there is a rise in attendance accordingly," she said.

Ost Sakakey, coach who knows about winning in year and year out is women's basketball coach Cindy Scott. Scott and her squad have not had a losing season since 1981, but can not seem to get the fan support they need.

In the 1994-95 season, the Sabbath women's hoops squad compiled a 19-0 record, but drew only 6,839 fans in 12 games. Last season, with a record of 16-10, they drew 6,936 people—an increase of only 5 percent.

Scott said the free admission policy and winning streak are not enough to win the fans over, but she is unsure of how to turn it around.

"I don't have the answer to the," she said. "It's been the most frustrating thing in my career. Mike Trude (coordinator of public information at the Arena) has been working on it full time, but there's no easy answer.

"Hopefully the exposure the USA women's Olympic basketball team has been getting lucky will help."
Attendance based on wins, fans not buying free tickets

Everyone loves a winner. Winning passes the most ringing bell, and nowhere is that more true than at SIUC Sports.

When University officials passed an $8 athletic fee increase last May, the hope was to provide the athletic teams on campus with fan support as well as the financial means to pay coaches salaries; SIUC Athletics Director Charlie West said.

The fee increase allows SIUC students free admission to all the Salukis’ home contests, but it seems to be only a small part of whether or not fans actually occupy the seats.

During the 1994-95 season — the final season before the increase took effect — the Saluki men’s basketball team tallied a 23-9 record and filled 83,750 seats at SIU Arena. Last season, the Dunks were 11-18 and drew only $1,968 at home, a decrease of 31,062 — a 38 percent drop from the previous year.

Basketball is not the only example of winning giving a shot in the arm to attendance. The SIUC football squad improved in record and its attendance improved along with it.

In 1994, head coach Shawn Watson entered his first season leading the football team to a 1-10 record while 42,100 came to watch at McAndrew Stadium. In 1995, the football team was one of the first SIUC teams to participate in the free admission experiment. The results were inconclusive, as Watson and company increased fan attendance by 16 percent to 49,000 after a 5-6 campaign.

Watson knew about the relationship between fans interest and a consistent winning record. Early last season, when the Salukis were 3-3, the team drew an average of 10,800 fans in three home contests, and seeing a few fans the last three games of the 1995 season, the Salukis drew 5,553 per game.

Ultimate Frisbee combines sports

By Kevin Defries
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Ultimate Frisbee combines a variety of sports and thrives on one playing field, says one member of the SIUC Ultimate Frisbee Club.

Rising, throwing, leaping and scoring all come into play in an ultimate Frisbee game for each of the seven players on the field, said Jennifer Bedell, president of the Ultimate Frisbee club.

Ultimate Frisbee travels the long, hard Mary types of foot- ball, the continuous play of soccer, and the defense, if you want to call it, along with running and highly-skilled throwing techniques.

The Ultimate Frisbee playing field is somewhat comparable to that of a football field because it has two end zones which the players must get past in order to score, Bedell said.

The size of the field is 120 yards long and 40 yards wide with two end zones which are 25 yards deep, she said.

“Ultimate Frisbee is a passers to receiver game,” Bedell said. “But unlike football, it is a non-contact game.”

The non-contact aspect and the continuous play until there is a score, is more like soccer, she said. Some basketball skills can be seen on the Ultimate Frisbee field, especially from a defensive standpoint, Bedell said.

“We usually play a man to man defense, but we can play a zone defense when the weather is too windy to complete long passes,” she said.

Ultimate also has a traveling call like basketball. Bedell said a player must establish a pivot foot when they receive the disc. If a player walks with the Frisbee, then it is a turnover.

Ultimate Frisbee — features a rule comparable to the shot clock in basketball, Bedell said.

Championship-caliber golf course may boost Marion economy, benifit players

By Bruce S. Lorenzenza
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Golf course designer Steve Smyers has spent the past 15 months transforming 200 acres of farmland into what may become a local premier golf course.

Located just north of the Marion mall, bordered on the east by Interstate 57, “Kokopelli” Golf Club, named for an ancient god of fertility, has taken advantage of Mother Nature’s original landscaping to provide Southern Illinois a championship-caliber course.

Local businessman Gary Mayer, of Marion, heading a group of local investors, has developed Kokopelli around the philosophy that working with the environment requires fewer intrusions.

“We’re into microbiology here as a ‘sane’ of feeding and controlling things, as opposed to a chemical golf course,” said Pete Ferguson, course grounds superintendent.

“In fact, we hope to be pesticide-free shortly, if I can swing it,” Ferguson said.

The average golf course in this country moves 2- average of 500,000 yards of dirt in their development plans. Here, we’ve moved only 5,000 yards,” added Gene Shayeefly, the course’s director of golf.

The rolling, 18-hole par 72 course offers five sets of tees on each hole, providing a range of course lengths from 3,500 yards, on the front tees, to 7,200 yards, on the back.

No artificial water hazards were installed on the course,” Ferguson said. “We used the existing creeks to create natural hazards. We also have 95 bunkers, 94 of which are on the course. The other one is on the practice- chipping area.”

Ferguson acquired his knowledge while supervising golf courses in Missouri, namely 12 years spent at Forest Hills in St. Louis. Shayeefly, the men’s golf coach at SIUC for the past four years, is excited that the course is opening in Southern Illinois.

Previously employed at Crab Orchard golf course, including a year as club pro, Shayeefly said the opportunity for a position at Kokopelli was .

Between the Lines

Chicago White Sox 1st baseman Frank Thomas plans to have a bone scan on his left foot and said the pain may keep him out of action for two weeks.

Thomas injured the foot last Thursday in Cleveland while rounding first base. X-rays showed no break, and the injury was listed as a strain.

If Thomas is placed on the disabled list it will be his first time in his career.

Television ratings for Tuesday’s All-Star Game were the lowest ever for a prime-time broadcast of the game, according to reports by Nielsen Media Research.

This year’s game got 14.5 rating and a 24 share. Last year’s game in Arlington, Texas, got a 14.6 rating and a 24 share.

Minnesota Twins All-Star outfielder Kirby Puckett, who has been sidelined all season with blurred vision, will have surgery on his right eye for a third time Friday in Baltimore.

Puckett underwent surgery on his right eye a second time June 8 to remove blood on the eye. The blood was caused by eddies in Puckett’s vision.

Puckett has been on the disabled list for blurred vision since Mach 26. He had his first laser surgery on the eye April 17.

The Star-Tribune quoted Puckett saying to friends “This is it. We’ll know one way or the other — whether I can play — soon after this.”
