BOT to approve interim chancellor today at meeting

An interim chancellor will be recommended and

An interin character will be recommended and probably approved today at the SIU Board of Trustees' meeting, University officials say.

SIU President Ted Sanders said in a press conference Wednesday, he has spent the last month talking with University constituency heads, such as the Faculty Senate president, vice chancellors and deans about what are necessary attributes for the interim chancellor.

Sanders said he has a recommendation but would not release the person's name. The SIU Board of Trustees will be meeting the nominee this morning at 7:30 to talk with him and ask questions, he said. During the board's 10:30 meeting, he hopes the rec-ommendation is approved, Sanders said. "The overall attributes I have been looking for is

Since Guyon's announcement, Sanders said he has been working to find a suitable interim chancellor to serve from Aug. 17 until June 30, 1998, while a nationwide search for a permanent chancellor is conducted by the University.

A 26-year-old man is recovering after being shot twice early Wednesday morning following an argument with another Carbondale man, according to a statement received from the Carbondale

Eldridge Hardley, of Carbondale, was taken to the emergency room at Carbondale Memorial Hospital around 2 a.m. after allegedly being shot by Brian Stafford, of 900 S. Elizabeth St., police said.

Carbondale and SIU police initially responded to a 911 call regarding shots fired in the 800 block of South Oakland Street. Police discovered Stafford on his porch armed with a handgun and disarmed him without further incident, police said.

Immediately after, Carbondale police said they were notified of a male at Carbondale Memorial Hospital with two gunshot wounds. The victim was later identified as Hardley.

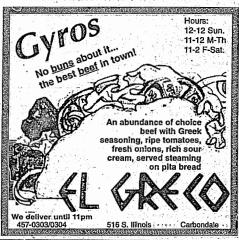

Further investigation by police revealed Stafford and Hardley were involved in an argument which resulted in the shooting, police said.

with aggravated battery with a fire and unlawful use of a weapon by a felon. Stafford was apparently on parole at the time of the shooting, said Lt. Bob Goro, of the Carbondale police depart-

Jackson County State's Attorney office refused to comment further on the charges against Stafford.

Police are still investigating the incident.

MONGOLIA MAKES ATTEMPTS TO MODERNIZE KARAKORUM, Mongolia — In a quiet valley at the end of a rutted road, a few stone and ceramic fragments have been piled on top of each other in memory of the past. The beheaded stone lions and smashed tiles are about all that remain above ground of ancient Karakorum, once the capital of the world's largest empire. Now, 790 years after Genghis Khan founded the Mongol Empire, his descendants are trying to establish themselves in the modern world, breaking out of centuries of isolation and foreign occupation to build an open, prosperous nation. This past week, Mongolia took a giant step toward that goal, voting out of power the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party, which had run the country as a Soviet colony for 70 years. And after several years of hyperinflation and catastrophic economic decline, the economy is on the mend. But like Genghis Khan's empire, which rose and fell in a matter of decades, modern-day Mongolia is a fragile country, flanked by two great powers: China and Russia, each one having bitten off a chunk of what used to be greater Mongolia.

Lake, who met in cordial sessions with President Jiang Zemin and Premier Li Peng on Tuesday, helped set the stage for reciprocal state visits by Jiang and President Clinton: "Because of our recent progress, I would expect that there would be an exchange of state visits; he said Wednesday. A White House spokesman had said Tuesday that any such visits would not take place this year. Leke told U.S. reporters in a meeting here that improving relations does not involve a softening of Washington's commitment to human rights. "If it were a softening, then we would not be talking about human rights." would not be talking about human rights in every meeting." Lake said. "We have to understand that this is a long-term issue. In my judgment, it's very unlikely that one meeting, or an effort to devise a trade-off between one issue and human rights, is going to produce a giant step forward," he said.

SENATE REJECTS NATIONAL RIGHT-TO-WORK LAW -

WASHINGTON — The Senate Wednesday split the difference on two contentious labor issues, approving a business-backed bill to sanction worker-management committees outside the traditional collective bargaining er-management committees outside the traditional collective bargaining process while rejecting a national right-to-work law. Both bills were opposed by the Clinton administration and organized labor as efforts to undermine the union movement, and the bill that was approved did not win enough votes to override a threatened veto by President Clinton. Action on the two bills came a day after the Senate approved labor-backed legislation to increase the federal minimum wage, although further action on that measure has stalled in a squeeze-play by some Republicans to force concessions from Democrats on a health care bill. All three bills played into the two parties' campaign agendas, with Republicans attempting to portray Democrats as lackies of organized labor and Democrats characterizing Republicans as hostile to the interests of working people.

CALIFORNIA MAY START VIRTUAL UNIVERSITY—
Two weeks after 10 Western governors announced plans to launch a regional online college, California officials are investigating the possibility of going it alone, creating their own "virtual university" that could deliver instruction to students from Fresno to Tokyo, While Gov. Pete Wilson has not ruled out participation in the regional college, he and the state's top educators have agreed to explore a California-only institution that would take advantage of the state's vast educational and technological resources. On Tuesday, a "design team" made up of representatives from Stanford University, the University of Southern California and the state's three public systems—the University of California, the California State University and the Community Colleges—met for the first time with officials from the telecommunications industry in the governor's office in Sacramento. the telecommunications industry in the governor's office in Sacramento.

Make kids our priority: Let's imagine a future for Science Center

THERE CAN BE A SIGH OF RELIEF FOR KIDS in Carbondale. The Science Center will be allowed to remain in the city hall complex after the city government moves to its new building. Previously, the center was looking for a new home. However, with funds deleted from its budget by the Carbondale Park District and the state, the center could not

City leaders have noticed the value of the center and are stepping in to help. So now the center can continue its work of educating children.

City Manager Jeff Doherty said the city will continue to allow the non-profit children's museum to remain in the building and the city will cover rent, maintenance and other expenses for one more year. The city will also assist the center in its move next year.

THE SCIENCE CENTER IS STILL WITHOUT FUNDS lost from the state and the Carbondale Park District. It needs money to complete its move. The Park District should reconsider museum funds appropriations and give more money to the center. The city made the right choice by helping the center when it was left hanging.

Postal privatization: Not broken, don't fix it

A U.S. REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE CHICAGO area is calling for the privatization of the postal service. He maintains that by turning the postal service over to private companies to handle the mail, more opportunities would be created for consumers and businesses while the present quality of postal service would be maintained.

However, postal service union officials say the privatization would hurt small communities in Southern Illinois and other rural areas where it may no longer be profitable to deliver mail. This would mean people would have to drive to larger communities to receive their mail.

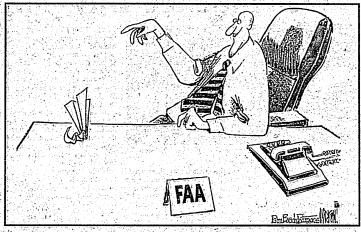

The reality is that somewhere between more opportunities and disappearance of service lies the answer: leave it alone.

THE CHANGE COULD CREATE HIGHER COSTS and inconvenience for the consumer. In the end, privatization may require taxpayer intervention.

Right now, the postal service is a self-supporting entity. It does not operate on tax dollars. Its goal is to provide a service, not to generate a profit. The money made from stamps and services goes to the cost of running the post office. Stamp prices are raised simply in order to cover the rising costs of handling mail. For instance if fuel costs go up the post office, with its fleet of trucks and planes, shoulders the burden. It's not unlikely that private business would raise stamp or shipping prices to consumers in order to turn a profit.

In 1971, the postal service left the control of Congress with the Postal Reorganization Act, leaving behind taxpayer subsidies and placing fiscal control in the hands of post office managers. Now, if privatization were a bust, the federal or the state government may need to intervene with subsidies and bail the service out. What would be the alternative? No mail delivery.

Last year the postal system handled 181 billion pieces of mail, 106 percent more than 1971. Without anyone's tax dollars, without privatization.

Beloved African leader's death: Zik's epoch-making era closes

Charles Ubah

Perspectives

There is no doubt that Africans and friends of Africa around the world have lost a dear friend, a father, a statesman, a charismatic leader, and a champion of African independence, democracy and unity. Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe, traditionally titled "the Owelle of Onitsha," represents all of the above and even more. With the passing of "Zik," Africa lost one of its greatest leaders. Indeed, mankind has lost one of the unwavering champions of unity and cooperation between Africa and the African Diaspor

Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe, popularly known as "Zik of Africa," will go down in history as one of the 20th century's most passionate and persuasive advocates of African independence and Nigerian unity; one of the most brilliant and eloquent orators; one of the most respected statesmen; one of the most charismatic leader in Africa; a most beloved and dedicated man of the Seriously, the death of Nnamdi Azikiwe practically marks the close of an epoch-making era for Africans and Nigerians in particular, and nowhere anyone with a comparable vision to fill his place. As a political leader, Zik rose like a blazing sun igniting fires, just as did the late Dr. Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana and Patrice Lumumba of the Congos (that later split into Zaire and the Congo).

Zik's death marks the end of one of the real titans of African politics, and his magnificent literary nationalist stature. It also to a degree is an end to an era in international journalism and politics. Without doubt,

Zikism ideology and philosophy were clearly not for the consumption of Nigerians only, but for all Africans, as well as scholars of Africa, both in the continent and around the globe. No doubt, future generations, especially in Africa will certainly miss this great man.

Zik of Africa, African students and friends in SIUC mourn your death with respect and tribute. May your soul rest in perfect peace, Amen. I end this farewell note on Zik's death with the following biographical notes.

'Independence Day' improves on classic

Aliens destroy the White House in Independence Day.

By Chad Anderson DE Entertainment Editor

Even with all the media hype, all the pre-release promotions and the anticipation, "Independence the anticipation, "Independence Day" is simply a universe beyond any of this summer's action films. Better yet, it lives up to all expec-tations of its billing. Prior to viewing the show, the obvious bias against the movie was that the film was an updated version of "War of the Worlds" with expensive special effects.

but the guidance of director/co writer Roland Emmerich ("Stargate," "Universal Soldier") kept the script and film original. One of the most impressive parts of the script was the incorporation of the government's rumored Area 51, separating "ID4" from being the exact repli-ca of the H. G. Wells' classic. In the movie, the president of the United States (Bill Pullman) and his entourage are forced into hid-ing until a solution can be found to combat the aliens, and Area 51 is unveiled to the president for the

Aside from the direction of Emmerich, Will Smith offers a fresh perspective on his acting ability and truly sheds his former Fresh Prince title. His evolution seems to have been completed with this role as a cocky fighter pilot from his gradual Darwinian growth since "Bad Boys".

This biggest disappointment, though, is the role of rising actor Harry Connick, Jr., who is at an all-time high since his leading part in "Copy Cat." The two-time Grammy-winning musician plays Smith's sidekick as his wing man and fellow maverick fighter pilot. During the first dogfight engage-ment with the alien force, Jimmy (Connick's character) is shot down. The bad part about this is that I found myself flashing back to "Ton Gun" that I found myself Hashing back to "Top Gun."

Unfortunately, with Jimmy's death in the first 10 minutes of the film, a huge void was left in the potential of the cast, and the opportunity to add the witty, charismatic personality of Connick was lost.

While there are a few imperfections in the script, such as David (Jeff Goldblum) defeating the with a com-puter virus (similar to the cold which killed the invaders in the H.G. Wells H.G. Wells classic), the movie is still larger than

The Delevantes bring bluegrass country-rock sound to Turley Park

By Chad Anderson
DE Entertainment Editor

Little brothers tend to follow in big brother's footsteps, and such is the case with The Delevantes.

Growing up in New Jersey, Mike Delevante, the younger of the two, did everything like his older brother Bob. During their youth, music was a common bond they shared. As Bob learned guitar, so did Mike. As soon as Bob formed what would be the duo's first band, Mike wanted to be part of

"He used to hang around when my friends would come over and play guitar," Bob said in the band's press advance. "Then he started playing with us. Turns out he was a better player than all of

That initial bluegrass band was the beginning of the group's trademark stripped-down roots sound. From there, the group transformed into Who's Your Daddy, another roots band, which became a favorite in the brothers' hometown of Hoboken, Growing more talented and defining their sound, the group was noticed by BMI's Jodi Williams, who convinced the group to record in Nashville, even though its sound is far from the country twang the Music City is known for.

The Delevantes are known for their country-based sound, but

are distant from the New Nashville sound, or the popsound influences such as the Eagles that most of today's country-pop groups are derived from.

They remind me of the Everly Brothers vocal harmony," Josh Wiese, former Student Programming Council director of concerts, said. "They have a little bit of country sound to them and some country rock, but they real-ly remind me of Uncle Tupelo.

They can sing like there's no

It was by accident, though, that Carbondale would be a stop for the band, which is gaining pub-licity for its style of music. The band has busted on to the music video bandwagon as of late, and the group's video for its hit single "Pocket Full of Diamonds," can be seen regularly on Country Music Television.

"We were looking at another band called The Bottlerockets, but they refused because they were going on tour with Kenny Wayne Shepherd," Wiese said. "I was talking to their (The Delevantes) agent about another Delevantes) agent about anounce show, and told him I was looking for a roots group. I asked him if he had any ideas, and he said he knew exactly the right group."

The Delevantes will play this week's Sunset Concert at Turley Park Thursday at 7 p.m.

Good cast, set make 'Bedroom Farce' a hit

By Lisa M. Pangburn Daily Egyptian Reporter

Christian Moe, a retiring theater professor, will go out in style thanks to the last produc-tion he is directing for SIUC's Summer Playhouse. "Bedroom makes a mockery of the real-life absurdity that happens

The play, set in the present day, is a British comedy written by Alan Ayckbourn, who is sometimes referred to by critics as the Neil Simon of Britain.

Matt Foy, who plays the trou-ble-making, spoiled rich boy Trevor, does a tremendous job of annoying the audience with his character. It is obvious from his performance that he had rehearsed and studied what makes people anxious and annoyed.

With every movement and facial expression and even the way he delivered his lines, Foy manages to irritate the audience.

Trevor and his self-help freak wife, Susanna (Kristi Smith), proceed to wreck a dinner party and the nights of everyone that they encounter. The couple is hilarious and their selfishness will make audiences laugh at otherwise mundane sarcasm. The couple's self-centered behavior constantly makes a mess of things,

Kate (Jennifer Hein), the naive and innocent wife in a happy marriage, may remind audiences of June Cleaver with her need to make people happy and her will-ingness to help. However, with an English accent and a much who worked on and designed the witter tongue, Hein does an excellent job of portraying a see FARCE, page 1 playful woman.

The interesting sideshow, Kate and her lovey-dovey husband, Malcolm (Paul Kroshus), begin the play as a loving couple, but as Susanna and Trevor's bickering escalates, the loving couple find themselves snapping at each other without even realizing it.
The emotional connection between Kate and Malcolm is blatantly portrayed. The two give each other playful glances and really draw the audience into the loving fun a couple can have if people communicate rather than assuming. It is a pleasure to watch the two perform because of the realness of the emotion that is shown.

One minor drawback in the production was the performance of Lawrence Dennis, who played Trevor's wealthy father. Dennis seemed very confident with some of his lines but at other times he seemed unsure about himself.

Dennis had the ability to really make the audience giggle at a pompous old man, but his reservations with the delivery of his lines slowed the show's pace.

The production makes a person laugh at life's misfortunes and inconsiderate people by blatantly displaying how rude friends can be to each other because of the comfort they feel.

The play might not have gone as well as it did if it were not for the great set design and easy-to-follow lighting.

James Deanes, a senior in theater from Chicago, puts together a costume Wednesday evening for the play "Crazy for You."

SIUC Costume Shop dresses actors, students up in style

By Melissa Jakubowski Daily Egyptian Reporter

In about ten minutes, Jan Johnston transformed a '70s gold dress with a mock turtleneck into a '40s gold showgirl dress with a plummeting neckline.

Johnston, a theater professor, is working on the dress which will be used as a costume piece for the SIUC Summer Playhouse theater production of "Crazy for You." The dress is one of 130 outfits that the SIUC Costume Shop needs to create by next week.

The Costume Shop, in the basement of the Communication Building, has outfitted theater productions for the past 30 years. The shop also doubles as a classroom laboratory for students.

James Deanes, a senior in theater from Chicago, began working at the Costume Shop two years ago when he was a clothing and textile major.

He said working at the shop has been the perfect outlet for his

The two biggest reasons for it being a great experience is that I get to apply what I've learned and people will see my work immediately," he said.

Hands-on experience is one of the biggest reasons that the shop is unique, said Julie Shoopman, a senior in theater from Springfield.

'A lot of undergraduates at other schools do not get the experience of working on costumes," she said. "It's rewarding to get that chance.

Johnston said. "We're remaking things as we go."
Every Halloween, the Costume

Shop holds a sale. Johnston said the sale helps sift through the numerous outfits kept in stock. "We still have original pieces from the '30s," she said.

Some students said that the skills picked up in the shop will help them in their beginning theater fields.

Hillary Chandler, a graduate student in theater design from Cambridge, said students will not always get the job they want right after graduation, but can utilize the trade skills they learn to find related jobs.

"It's good training for anyone in the area, even for actors," she said. "You'll deed to get work besides acting work: If you can work as a seamstress or a carpen-ter, you can still be close to the theater."

Achieve Program helps students get jump start on school, studying

By Annette Barr Daily Egyptian Reporter

As Russell Holder struggled through high school, the thought of college seemed out of his reach.

"I didn't think that I was going to college," said Holder, a junior in administration of justice from Naperville.

Holder was unsure about going to college because he has a learning disability. Holder has been able to succeed academically at SIUC with the help of the Clinical Center's Achieve Program.

The Achieve Program provides academic support services for stu-dents with diagnosed learning dis-abilities, such as dyslexia, said Barbara Cordoni, coordinator of the Achieve Program.

The program, founded by Cordoni in 1978, was the first program designed specifically for learning disabled students only in the country and the first to be institutionalized on a college campus,
"We're kind of the granddaddy of them all," said Amy Shaw, the developmental skills training specialist for the Achieve Program.

Cordoni said she has seen students from every state in the country and from 15 foreign countries involved in the program.
"If they have made it this far (in school) the students have to be highly motivated," Cordoni said. "The majority of my students know darn good and well what it takes to get an

Dave Farris, a 1995 SIUC graduate in forestry from Evansville, Ind., uses some of the tips he learned from the Achieve Program in his job as a refuge officer for the fish and wildlife service.

Farris said since he has dyslexia, it is difficult for him to fill out an acci-dent report while listening to the person involved in the accident. Instead of concentrating only on his notes, Farris uses a tape recorder so he can pay closer attention to the person

"The tricks that you learn here (the Achieve Program), they follow you," Farris said. "There's probably no way I could have graduated without this program."

This fall semester, 185 students will be in the Achieve Program. The program costs $1,850 per semester for students with full-time support. Each student must complete an application and two days of diagnostic testing, which costs $1,050 total. From the tests, it is determined how much support a student needs.

The services provided by the Achieve Program are: tutors, note

FDA requires folic acid in enriched grain

By Tim Carroll Daily Egyptian Reporter

Drug Food and Administration (FDA) recently required that enriched grain prod-ucts be fortified with folic acid. This is being done to help prevent spina bifida and similar birth spina bittida and similar bittidefects, a University researcher explained.

Mounting evidence from studies has pointed to other potential benefits of increasing folic acid intake, Carol Benefits of increasing folic acid intake, Carol Boushey, assistant professor under the College of Agriculture said. Boushey, worked with a team of scientists, searched for additional benefits from folic acid.

What we have established is a correlation between elevated levels of homocysteine and heart disease," Boushey said.

"Homocysteine is an amino acid produced by the body as a byprod-uct of protein digestion that can clog a cries when at an elevated level," Boushey said. People with high homocysteine levels frequently have lower-than-normal blood levels of this nutrient, Boushey What we concluded was that 10 percent of people in the United States who died as a result of heart disease had high levels of homocysteine.

> Curol Boushey assistant professor, College of Agriculture

Boushey conducted a study with three colleagues at the University of Washington, where she worked in the Nutritional Science Program and Epidemiology before coming to SIUC last September. Boushey's group looked at 27 pre-viousr studies worldwide that related vascular disease to homocysteine levels. They found 11 studies that related homocysne levels to folic acid intake.

What we concluded was that 10 percent of people in the United States, who died as a result of heart disease had high levels of homo-cysteine," Boushy said. Although high cholesterol seems to correlate with heart disease, the research concluded that homocysteine appears to be independent risk factor Boushy said,

"We don't know just yet is what is considered a normal level of homocysteine, however that will be found real soon. What folic acid does is break down the pathway of homocysteine in the body," Boushey said.

Although no research has directly linked folic acid and heart dis-case, the National Institute of Health (NIH) is now open to fur-ther discussion of research in folic acid as a result of the team's findings, Boushey said. Initially the research team was having problems convincing the FDA to increase required levels of folic acid use because it was thought to only help prevent spina bifida and similar birth defects. there is a strong possibility that folic acid could benefit the population as a whole

However there are additional delays in research because of time and cost elements required to conduct a study," Boushey said.
"Furthermore folic acid levels have to be measured before the onset of Boushey said that an estimated 25 percent of heart attack patients and 40 percent of stroke patients have elevated levels of homocysteine.

Boushey said you do not have to the local pharmacy to get folic acid.

"Folic acid does not occur naturally in a pure form, however, its exist in the form of food folates contained in your green vegetables like beans, spinach and broccoli," Boushey said. "Folic acid is already fortified in some breakfast cereals."

"Although folic acid is one of the few supplements that is absorbed more easily in its pill form, one should not take more than 400 micrograms a day and should consult with his or her doctor or pharmacist," Boushey said.

beyond 1000 micrograms, espe-cially because folic acid can hinder the diagnosis of anemia caused by a vitamin B-12 deficiency."

"Most Americans though get more folic acid from orange juice than any other place because of its concentration level," Boushey said, Boushey is interested to see when the next recommended daily allowance is published whether folic acid will be prescribed at a higher level.

The irony of all our work is that it goes along with all past dictary recommendation. It gives researchers confidence knowing that what we are recommending is correct," Boushey said. "Now that the FDA has set a food labeling laws, consumers can become conscious of products that are fortified with folic acid."

According to local pharmacist, Mike Thomas, up to 400 micro-grams of folic acid is available without prescription.

Due to the announcement of this recent finding there has been a slight increase in the sale of folic acid," Thomas said.

Economist says predictions about AIDS false

The Washington Post

VANCOUVER, B.C.--The relationship between the AIDS epidemic and national economies is complicated and contradictory, and economists must look at the disease's effect on villages and households to observe its true impact, an expert asserted here

Wednesday, Predictions of the AIDS epidemic's dire effects on the economies of African nations have largely proved false, Josef Decosas, a physician and health economist, told delegates to the Eleventh International Conference on AIDS. Some recent studies in Africa have failed to detect the expected economic damage.

"National economics can be stimulated by many different events, some of them outright

// National economies can be stimulated by many different events, some of the outright nefarious, such as wars and epidemics. 11

> Josef Decosas, physician, health economist nefarious, such as wars and epi-demics." Decosas said, "Measures of macro-economic performance do not suffice as indicators of a society's well-being."

Many projections made a decade ago predicted higher rates of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection in Africa than have occurred, and overestimated the disease's effects on the richer and more educated class

In addition, some of these projections did not take into account a large surplus labor force in Africa, capable of filling the jobs of AIDS victims who die while still young and productive. A study published last year by the National Bureau of Economic Research, a consulting company in Cambridge, Mass., found that AIDS was having no measurable effect on the growth of gross domestic product (GDP) in 51 countries

Though beneficial economic effects from the AIDS epidemic haven't been noted. Decosas said people shouldn't be surprised if they eventually emerge. He gave two examples from history.

"The plague epidemic of the 14th Century killed one-third of Europe's population, caused wages to rise, and was a decisive factor in ending the feudal system and heralding the rise of Europe's global economic dominance," he told people attending a plenary session of the conference.

session of the conference.
"Similarly, the syphilis epidemic which followed in the 16th Century caused widespread death nong Europe's population. But it allowed the emerging bourgeoisie to finally overcome the stranglehold of the aristocracy and clear the way for the merchant empires of the Victorian era."

Decosas made his provocative complacency about the epidemic in developing countries. Instead, he said he wants to direct the attention of economists and researchers to the disease's profound effects on "microeconomi structures such as families and households.

For example, he cited the shift from protein-rich but labor-intensive crops to starchy but lower-maintenance crops in some areas hard-hit by the epidemic. This change affects the nutrition of family members who are not infected with the virus. Similarly, the loss of male wage-earners in Africa has left many households led by young women—a trend that is leading to the "feminization" of poverty that impedes social and educational advancement for about winning year in and year out is women's basketball coach Cindy Scott, Scott and her squads have not had a losing season since 1981, but can not seem to get the fan support

In the 1994-95 season, the Saluki women's hoops squad compiled a 19-9 record, but drew only 6,389 fans in 12 games. Last season, with a record of 18-10, they drew 6,936 people—an increase of only 8.5 per-

West said that in order to keep winning, the University has to spend money, and the money is slowly decreasing.

"I'm concerned about a decrease in quality due to the decrease in funds," she said. "One of the biggest needs is for our other teams in the program to work with full amounts of scholarships.

"The men's and women's basketball program, much to the surprise of many people, is the only one working with full scholarship funding." Some students said that the quality of the team they are watching is more important than free admission.

Although pre-increase money has been spent sprucing up Abe Martin Field and repainting the floor at SIU Arena, West said McAndrew Stadium is next for renovations.

Rose Bowl move to Big 12 unlikely until century's end

Big 12 commissioner Steve Hatchell cast doubt on the possi-bility that the Rose Bowl will join the Alliance before current TV contracts expire in five years.

The difficulty is that ABC and the Rose Bowl have a contract through 2001," Hatchell says, "We've got an Alliance deal through 2001 that provides pretty good financial security for the conferences and the networks. I don't think the Big Ten and the away from the Rose Bowl and ABC."

For the Rose Bowl to join the Fiesta, Sugar and Orange bowls, the Pasadena game and ABC would have to loosen their grip on the Big Ten and Pac-10 champi-ons, "It's safe to say all of us would like to be together," Hatchell says. "We talk about it all the time" the time.

The Big 12 officially started this month, and Hatchell has assembled some talent to run the football operations. He hired his good friend Donnie Duncan away from Oklahoma to be senior associate commissioner in charge of foot-ball. Longtime NFL official Tim Millis, who made the incomplete call in the end zone at the end of the American Football Conference Championship Game, will be the supervisor of officials.

Moreover, the league has the unique standing of being both new and the holder of a rich tradition, a neat trick when you think about it.
The conference's divisional races begin August 31, the first full Saturday of the season, when bowl winners Texas Tech and Kansas State play in Dallas, and Missouri goes to Texas. The Big 12 has $100 million-plus in television contracts with ABC and Liberty Media. The league has a televised playoff game scheduled for December 7 t the TWA Dome in St. Louis. Hatchell didn't like the time slot ABC gave him — first game of a tripleheader with the Western Athletic Conference and Southeastern Conference playoff games — but where the WAC is concerned, it's a time-zone issue and nothing else.

In addition to the regulation 18 holes, there are also a 300 yard, double-ended driving range, a practice putting green and teaching tee. The facility also will offer 60 new Yamaha electric carts, pull-carts and club rentals.

Ramona Twellmann, formerly the assistant golf pro at St. Louis Country Club, has been hired to help Shaneyfelt with operations inside the pro shop. The shop plans to offer clothing, accessories and a custom club-fitting program.

A natural bluff overlooking the 18th fairway is the site for the club house, to be under construction soon. For use when the facility opens will be four temporary areas offering an assortment of food and beverages, including alcohol sales. Also included in the area's development are 150 home sites nd 35 condominium sites. A few of the sites are located adjacent to the driving range, the 17th green and the fairway on 18. Half of the home sites have been sold already.

The greens are manicured, the traps awaiting a trim and filling in with sand. Shaneyfelt said that in a couple of weeks the QuickStand Bermuda grass on the fairways, the turf used in St. Louis' Busch Stadium, will be lush.

"We used a mixer of Kato and Crenshaw seed which develops into a buffalo grass that we used to surround the bunkers. In some grass you can lose your ball if you step on it. With this grass, the ball pops right back up," Shaneyfelt said.

Smyers, designer of courses around the country, recently was named up-and-coming designer for a course he built for pro golfer Nick Faldo in Faldo's home country of England. He received a four-star rating for the Southern Dunes golf course in Florida by Golf Digest

If weather cooperates, the course is due to be ranked soon by the Southern Illinois Golf Association for evaluation of the men's tees, The Southern Illinois Women's Golf Association will rank the women's tees.

The associations judge such things as the course length, the degree and size of the traps and greens and the par rating of each

With the mixture of grasses we've used both in the fairways and greens, we expect this course to play hard and fast," said Scancyfelt.

Everyone loves a winner. Winning puts fans in the seats, and nowhere is that more true than at SIUC.

When University officials passed an $8 athletic fee increase last May, the hope was to provide the athletic teams on campus with fan support as well as the financial means to pay coaches salaries, SIUC Associate Athletic Director Charlotte West said.

The fee increase allows SIUC students free admission to all the Salukis' home contests, but it seems to be only a small part of whether or not fans actually occupy
