Coal center plan comes under fire

By Gary DeSohn
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

A University of Missouri professor participating in "Illinois Coal II" Wednesday, warned that Gov. Dan Walker's proposal to establish SIU as a coal mining research center "might be an overreaction to the crisis."

James J. Scott, government consultant in rock mechanics and mine management, said he wasn't criticizing Walker's proposal but was questioning its feasibility.

Walker proposed that SIU become a focal point for coal mining research, during Tuesday's conference sessions. According to Walker, the SIU program would concentrate on training engineers and scientists needed for future increased coal production.

Scott said SIU should cooperate with schools that already have mining research programs rather than spend a lot of money to develop its own program. The University of Missouri at Rolla has such a program.

"I feel it would be a mistake for many schools to jump into full scale mining programs. It's much better to cooperate with, and support already existing institutions," Scott explained.

Scott said the number of schools with mining programs has dropped from 32 to 16 in the past 20 years. He said the decrease is because coal has lost its place as a major energy source.

He added there is a shortage of qualified mining instructors. "Every school with a mining program is looking for faculty," he said. "What we need is quality mining engineers and technicians with long experience in the field."

Scott said the average experience of faculty in the mining program at the University of Missouri is 25 years. "For SIU to think they can jump right into it seems wrong."

Scott said SIU and the University of Missouri should "get together and cooperate" on the total mining picture. The chemistry department at SIU could conduct some much needed research on sulphuric coal, he added.

The University of Missouri currently has an agreement with state universities in Kansas whereby "qualified students in Missouri may enroll in certain programs and be charged fees at the rate paid by Kansas residents" and vice versa.

The agreement saves non-residents from paying out-of-state tuitions, which are higher, Scott said. He urged that SIU and the University of Missouri enter into a similar agreement. Such an arrangement, he said, will be a big help to students interested in mining programs who cannot afford such high tuition fees.

County voter drive nets 5,000 students

By Dave Iyata
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The SIU voter registration drive has netted an estimated 5,000 students over the past two weeks, according to Dennis Sullivan, student body President.

Gus
Bole

Gus says he wonders if more students registered as independents, or if SIU is still a party school.

About 3,200 new students have signed up, according to Duke Koch, executive coordinator of the SIU Student Vote Project. The remaining 1,800 students re-registered, because of address changes, he said.

The 5,000 estimate, Koch said, "sounds like a very reasonable figure." He added, "We won't have any exact count until probably the 21st."

Koch predicted that 9,000 SIU students in Jackson County will have signed up by the registration deadline of midnight Monday. The Student Voter Project will stamp in dormitory commons areas 4 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. Friday, Koch said.

"I think it's due to the cooperation of student government and university officials," Koch said. "The Republican and Democratic parties have been working very hard on this."

The 5,000 figure surpasses the combined registrations of six other state universities, Sullivan said. Citing tallies produced at a recent Association of Illinois Student Governments (AISG) meeting in Springfield, Sullivan said the most successful vote drive out-side Carbondale has signed up 1,500 students.

"I think that our politics were based more on a grassroots type thing," Sullivan explained. "Most of the other colleges were attempting to run a united effort between colleges. Carbondale elected to go it alone."

SIU offered help to other AISG colleges and universities, but declined to be included in the Springfield-based, inter-varsity drive, Sullivan said.

Students may have errors on registration cards corrected at the City Clerk's office in City Hall or the Murphysboro Court House, Koch said. Precinct captains of either party may be certified registrars, Koch added.

The Student Vote Project will "shift gears Tuesday and begin a get out and vote drive," Koch said.

SIU told to reexamine degrees, redirect efforts in IBHE report

Following three public hearings in developing a master plan for higher education, an Illinois Board of Higher Education (IBHE) staff report has recommended that SIU-C re-examine its degree offerings and re-direct faculty efforts and resources to programs of higher priority.

The report, presented at an IBHE meeting Tuesday in Chicago, also stated, "in light of SIU-C's changing enrollment pattern, the institution is charged to study what effect further enrollment declines at the undergraduate level will have on its graduate programs, especially at the doctoral level."

The report suggests new roles for Illinois universities and urges SIU-C to "make a concerted examination of its present doctoral offerings to determine in what areas it can achieve excellence on the principle that University resources should be allocated to programs of highest promise and priority."

The report stressed SIU's role as a regional university serving Southern Illinois, and suggests that the school extend its "off-campus offerings to meet the needs of adults seeking undergraduate education, and to provide continuing and graduate education to practicing professionals."

The School of Technical Careers (STC), the report stated, has a "special statewide charge" to offer high cost associate degree level programs that are not available elsewhere.

Amnesty group aids political prisoners

By Dave Wiczorek
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Political prisoners, jailed by the thousands each year throughout the world, are receiving help from an international organization.

Dave Dix, graduate student in community development at SIU, said Amnesty International (AI) is a world-wide organization helping people arrested for political reasons.

"AI does not help people who are in any way connected with violent operations or organizations," Dix said. "However, it does help anyone regardless of political views. A person might be a left winger or a right winger, it doesn't matter. AI is completely ideologically free. People tend to paint the organization with a base, because we help people who may be opposed to a government. But we work in humanistic kinds of principles."

He said AI takes action when a person's constitutional rights are involved or when a person is not given his liberties. They deal with people across the whole political spectrum.

Dix said AI is concentrating much of its energy in Chile since the overthrow of the Allende regime.

"About six names of persons who were imprisoned for political reasons were sent to AI. One of those possibly was released by the government."

He said he was not sure if that person was released due to AI activities or not.

He would not give the names of those six persons. When asked if there are students from Chile attending SIU, he said yes, but would not give the names of those students, either.

Dix has a list of more than 400 people who are political prisoners or have been executed in Chile. They range from mechanics and miners to doctors and journalists.

Dix estimated 5,000 to 30,000 people are political prisoners. He said it was impossible to get accurate figures because they are not available to anyone, including the U.S. government. He said the figure includes persons who are in prison or have been executed for political reasons.

Dix was vague concerning the background of AI and the actual work in which they are involved. However, Sarah Foote, manager of the AI office, was contacted at the national headquarters in New York.

"The original organization was started in London, by Peter Benenson," Foote explained. "In 1966, the U.S. chapter was formed by Mark K. Benenson (no relation to Peter) who is now legal counsel for the AI in the U.S."

She said the national office began in Washington, but is now based in New York. San Francisco is the western regional office for AI. Foote added.

She went on to explain the procedures AI uses to free a political prisoner.

"The work is done by individuals or organized informal groups which ask to be recognized by AI. Each group is given a list of three prisoners they will work for. These people then do anything possible to bring each case before the public eye. They visit embassies, work with the media and especially in the United States they are able to visit delegations from countries involved in specific cases."

Foote said these groups also get together with the family of the prisoner to see if anything can be done for them, or if the prisoner himself can use any financial help.

"These groups can be very insistent," Foote said. "They put constant pressure on the government involved. In cases involving well known figures, the pressure sometimes will finally embarrass a government, and they will turn the prisoner loose."

According to Foote, there is one other device used in freeing prisoners. On Dec. 13, 1948, the General Assembly of the U.N. passed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Foote said. She added this is not a legal document because there is no world police to enforce it, but it is signed by members of the U.N.

"This can be enough in some cases to expose the government and remind them of the agreements they have signed," she added.

She said the main objective is to keep each case in the public eye. Publicity is the most essential part of the process to free a prisoner, she added.

In order to get help from AI, Dix said a letter must be sent to AI requesting assistance. He said this will usually be done by friends or relatives. When AI receives a letter, he said, they investigate the case completely to ensure it involves political situations.

According to Dix, the services of AI cases, a person loses all his possessions when imprisoned.

Dix said there are many prominent people from around the world who are patrons to AI and help support it.

"There are highly credible people working for AI," Dix said. "Because of their fame, they are powerful people. It would be foolish for any government to ignore them."

Dix is not a member of AI. He said he is "testing the waters at SIU. Possibly we can set up a chapter of AI here at SIU."

He added, "SIU is a perfect place for a chapter. There is a very good International Center here. That's one of SIU's strengths."

The one problem working against AI is the lack of public knowledge about organization. "I'm hoping some publicity will increase public interest," said Dix.

Persons with information concerning political prisoners being treated unjustly, should contact Dix after 6 p.m. at 687-3107. Or contact Amnesty International, 200 West 72nd St., New York, N.Y., 10023, 212-724-9907.

Student Senate impeaches six members

By Jim Murphy
Student Writer

The Student Senate is minus six of its members following impeachment action taken by the senate at Wednesday night's meeting.

Sens. Sharon Grishom, Kim Kearnes, Van Larsen, Mike Smith, Darlene Tyree, and Larry West were removed from office for failure to attend any senate meetings this year.

The bill to impeach, introduced by Sen. Jim Wire of Thompson Point, successfully stayed clear of constitutional limitation by adding an amendment bringing the impeached senator's absences under senate by-law violations. The senate constitution states the grounds for impeachment are malfeasance in office, not excessive absences. Under senate by-laws, however, senators can be impeached after missing two meetings.

Wire said the impeached senators "have had the benefit of the doubt," in the amount of time the senate has given them to attend the meetings. The bill contends that the non-attendance of the senators is interfering with the senate's ability to meet quorum requirements.

In other action, the Senate approved a bill allocating $410.72 to bring John Finlator, the retired deputy director of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs to the SIU campus.

The bill, introduced in part by the SIU chapter of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML), would cover Finlator's transportation costs.

The senate also passed a bill allocating $203.80 for singer Barry McGuire and his eight-piece musical group to appear at SIU. McGuire is best known for writing the song "Eve of Destruction." The appearance is sponsored through the campus organization Students for Jesus.

A resolution that would have called for the screening of Student Senate press coverage in the Daily Egyptian was defeated by the senate. Senator Josh Bragg introduced the resolution in response to critical viewpoints expressed in the Daily Egyptian by staff writer Diane Solbert. Bragg contended that the writers quotations were, "not accidental and were irresponsible."

The bill was defeated after Senator Duncan Koch said that the bill was unfortunate because it was not backed by documentation. Cook also said the bill was grossly unfair and he advised against it.

Nixon appearance still uncertain

Impartial Watergate jurors sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — District Judge John J. Sirica chipped away Wednesday at hundreds of prospective jurors in an effort to find 12 persons who can be impartial about Watergate.

Jury selection on the second day of the cover-up trial of former Nixon administration and campaign aides closely followed the pattern set on Tuesday.

Sirica told prospective jurors the cover-up trial might last three or four months and that the 12 jurors and six alternates would be separated from their families for the entire period.

When the judge asked for a count of those who felt service would be a hardship, 81 persons stood up. One by one they were called to a room behind the large ceremonial courtroom to tell Sirica why they wished to be excused.

The judge hoped by the end of the day to have a large enough panel — about 150 persons — to move on to individual, private questioning to weed out those prejudiced by the massive publicity generated by the Watergate scandal.

After the first day, 65 persons were on the panel.

Meanwhile, word was awaited from former President Nixon on whether he would obey subpoenas demanding his appearance as a defense witness for former White House aide John D. Ehrlichman and as a prosecution witness.

Long Branch Foundation proposes using federal grant for 4 projects

By Dave Iбата
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The Long Branch Foundation proposed Wednesday afternoon four recommendations for community projects funded by the $8.1 million in federal funds recently earmarked for Carbondale.

In a petition presented to the city manager, the Long Branch Foundation for the Arts and Sciences called for the following programs:

— a public relations and information office.

— weekly exchange meetings open to the public.

— development and use of special human resources.

— investigation into the feasibility of vocational, food, communications, cultural, educational, and environmental co-operatives.

"We feel there is sufficient funding that these lower economic based co-op systems can be realistically approached," Marty Martin, Long Branch worker, said Wednesday. "People could manage co-ops themselves."

"In a blighted area, one of the problems, because it is blighted, is that money doesn't stay," Martin said. Co-ops would help stem the outward flow of dollars, Martin explained.

The petition also approved the proposed 20-member community participation group. The group, or a steering committee, will advise the city on spending the $8.1 million promised Carbondale through the Community Development Act of 1974.

The petition came out of Tuesday evening meeting at the Long Branch Foundation headquarters, 100 E. Jackson St., according to Martin. 60 persons came to discuss the act, he said.

Citizens questioned city officials concerning how names for the committee were chosen and why the public was left out of the initial selection of the nominees, Earl Ward, model cities representative, said Wednesday morning.

Citizens asked for public announcements and reasons for selection of nominees, Ward said at a City Hall press conference.

When asked whether citizens themselves proposed procedures for selecting nominees, City Manager Carroll Fry cut short Ward's answer. Fry said, "Mr. Ward has no answer."

Fry added, "That's a sneaky question." Selecting nominees was the city council's business, he said, and they could not speak for the council.

Citizens mentioned no definite alternative, Martin said.

Some citizens suggested holding elections early in 1975 for the 20-member committee. "They thought (members) should have been elected by the various areas, so they'd be responsible to the people," Ward said.

Fry said, "The act says nothing about elections. Citizens participation is whatever the council says it is."

100 apply for parking appeals post

By Laura Coleman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

SIU students and staff who get a parking ticket and want to appeal it can be relieved. Within three weeks a permanent appeals officer will be available.

Frank Hartmen, director of personnel, said more than 100 applicants have taken a written test for the Civil Service position. After the applicants go through a process of oral screening, the top three applicants will be referred to the office of T. Richard Mager, vice-president for development and service, to be interviewed, he said.

The position is being created because in the past volunteers served as appeals officers and were not always available to hear appeals, according to Jerry Lacey, special assistant in Mager's office.

The present temporary appeals officer, Richard Musgraves, also is a member of the Traffic and Parking Committee. Musgraves serves as the appeals officer for two hours one day a week. He said an average of 40 appeals are processed each week, with a success rate of 30 per cent.

"One person working two hours a week is really insufficient," Musgraves said. "I can't see everybody in a two-hour period." He said he often has people leave their appeals in his office when he's not there so he takes the appeals home to work on.

Musgraves began as a volunteer appeals officer last year. He said the most common violation is parking in an unauthorized area and added it is sometimes not clearly defined as to what is an authorized parking area. He said, "A lot of the parkers don't understand the rules." He suggested that people read carefully the parking regulations which are handed out when the parking decal is issued.

As a member of the Parking and Traffic Committee, Musgraves has the advantage of "knowing where the trouble spots are." He said he's tried to get more parking at the SIU Health Service. He said people with a yellow parking decal cannot legally park there.

Musgraves also suggests "some form of expediting suggestions" to have parking areas improved. He said it takes a long time to have the jobs completed and added, "The big problem is the lack of hands on type of labor."

Musgraves criticized people who complain about the lack of parking spaces available. He said he made a check of 45 overnight violations on the east side of the campus when those who received the tickets said there were no spaces available. He said he found 179 open spaces. He added that overnight parking is still a problem on the west side of the campus.

The parking regulations state that two red decals are issued for every parking space in a red decal parking lot.

Musgraves said he has received cooperation from the SIU Security Police in having appeals sent to him and has asked that security police officers notify him when they feel they've issued a wrong ticket.

Federal coal chief outlines energy plan

By Gary Delsohn
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The main goals of "Project Independence" are to "increase domestic energy supplies and decrease our demands."

"Project Independence" was outlined Wednesday at the "Illinois Coal II" conference luncheon by John Kuhlman, chief of coal affairs, Federal Energy Administration.

Kuhlman said he had "just come from Billings, Mont. and the attitude on coal in Montana is one of fear." He said the "people of Illinois have a better understanding of the coal industry and if the situation was made clear to Montana the attitude would be better."

Kuhlman said energy demand in the United States is growing at four to five per cent each year while "our domestic supply is increasing at a rate of only three or four per cent."

The gap in supply and demand is filled by foreign imports, which leaves us vulnerable to foreign embargoes and rising prices," he said. However, he added, "The Arab oil boycott may have been a blessing in disguise."

He said the boycott forced the nation to realize that energy independence is vital to its economic future. He added that the Federal Energy Administration is developing a "long range plan, the initial portion of which, will be given to President Ford Nov. 1."

The plan has four major proposals. They are: increased domestic fuel supplies, decreased energy demand, emergency storage facilities and a more stable international energy structure.

He said it is up to the "coal industry to tell its story loud and clear." Too many people, he said, view coal as something that "can be turned on and off like a light switch. It simply isn't so."

Kuhlman said reclamation legislation is also a priority of the Federal Energy Administration. "We want a reclamation bill that is regulatory, not prohibitive, the type all of you can live with."

In summing up the coal situation, Kuhlman said, "Coal has the reserves and ability to expand. Now I ask, does it have the incentive?"

Walker closed out the conference saying, "We've discussed the problems. There has been a lot of talk. Now is the time for action in getting more coal out of the ground and to the market."

In Southern Illinois

New coal mine opening, unofficial report says

CARBONDALE, Ill. (AP) — There was a report Wednesday at the governor's coal conference that the announcement of a new coal mine opening in Southern Illinois would be made soon.

An authoritative source, who declined to be identified, said the Inland Steel Co., would announce next week opening of a mine that would employ about 500 people. In the last few months, plans for two new mines in Southern Illinois have been announced and two others have opened.

An Inland official contacted about the report refused to deny or confirm it, saying only, "We are investigating the possibility of opening a coal mine in Southern Illinois."

One Inland mine, near Sesser, began operations in 1967.

Meanwhile, there were some details released about a new coal extraction center proposed Tuesday by Gov. Daniel Walker in an address opening the conference. Walker proposed a center to operate on the Southern Illinois University campus funded with state and federal money.

University spokesmen said Wednesday the center could start work this year on a very limited basis with the approval of the Illinois Board of Higher Education.

Staff would be drawn from the geology, engineering and agriculture departments. Full operation could come by 1977 with the beginning of an academic program. About 75 researchers, up to 40 of them new faculty members, might be employed. Cost estimates ran to about $1 million annually.

The conference's formal discussions turned to mine safety, health and the environment.

Panelist Dr. Donald Rasmussen, medical director of the Appalachian Pulmonary Laboratory, Inc., of Beckley, W. Va., discussed results of a survey of 11,000 coal miners conducted by his lab. Many working miners, he said, have contracted lung diseases whose symptoms may not appear for up to 10 years after their retirement. Discovery of an enzyme deficiency in some diseased miners, he said, holds out the hope that persons susceptible to lung disease can be identified before entering potentially hazardous occupations such as mining.

Robert Barrett, representing the Mining, Engineering and Safety Administration, a federal agency, reported mine fatalities have decreased because of safety regulations but accident rates have not.

The two-day conference, the second called by Walker to explore exploitation of Illinois' vast coal reserves, ended Wednesday afternoon.

County sheriff's deputies net 3 youths in drug raid

Jackson County Sheriff's deputies arrested three men in a drug raid early Wednesday at Gene's Trailer Court on Rt. 149.

Charged with manufacture or delivery of a controlled substance are Matthew J. Cronin, 18, and Ronald G. Crawshaw, 19, of Gene's Trailer Court and Richard W. Carlock, 19, R.R. 2, Fairway Vista, Murphysboro.

Sheriff John Hoffman said one of his deputies received a tip that drugs were being sold at trailer No. 7. According to Hoffman a deputy then made a buy of illegal drugs and the individuals were arrested.

Deputies obtained a warrant and searched the trailer, Hoffman said, and more than 30 grams of a controlled substance were found in the trailer.

The suspects are being held at Jackson County Jail and will appear in court Thursday morning, Hoffman said.

Cleaner coal needed

Deborah Singer
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Illinois—the state with the largest reserves of bituminous coal in the country. Topped in total coal reserves only by North Dakota and Montana.

But what does this mean to the state, and especially to Southern Illinois, where the greatest portion of these deposits are located?

The biggest problem lies with the fact that Illinois coal is high in sulphur oxide emissions. The amount of sulphur oxides that may be emitted from power-plant stacks is presently regulated by the US Environmental Protection Agency and the Illinois Pollution Control Board. Without treatment, Illinois coal cannot meet the standards established by these agencies.

This has meant that industry has been forced to buy coal from the western states. Coal from these states is sub-bituminous and lignite which means that it is low in sulphur content. But the process of transporting this coal has been an expensive one for Illinois industry.

There are several methods that can be used to either produce a clean fuel from coal before combustion, or to clean stack gases of both sulphur oxides and particles after combustion. If any of these methods are perfected, the effect on Illinois could be monumental.

With the future growth of our economy so dependent on having increasing amounts of energy, more effective use of coal is a necessity. Illinois has the potential to become a hub in the energy industry.

One of the major areas that would be affected would be employment. More jobs would be produced within the coal industry and additional jobs in related industries would also be created.

Gov. Dan Walker has announced plans to establish SIU as a center for coal research and experimentation. Illinois government has allocated $70 million in bonds to be used for energy projects within the state.

As Walker said, "Coal is not a dirty word. "We can, and must, as a nation minimize our dependence on foreign sources for energy."

Congress bows to big business

By Susan DeMar
Student Writer

Once again Joe Consumer and his fellow men have been rendered powerless in their fight against rip-off businesses.

The filibustering Senate bowed to their businessmen's interests two weeks ago when they fell just two votes short to pass the proposal for a Consumer Protection Agency (CPA).

Regarded as the most important piece of consumer legislation in recent times, the bill had been delayed in the Senate for two months after it was overwhelmingly passed in the House.

In these days when inflation, tight money and inferior products are choking the consumer, protection is needed now more than ever.

Recent figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics reveal that in August the cost of living is up 1.3 percent which equals an annual rate of 15.6 percent. Living costs are 10.3 percent higher than last year.

The bill had been compromised to eliminate controversial provisions, until it was down to the minimum protection necessary to advance consumer interests.

Existing regulatory agencies have been irresponsible. Top officials in the Food and Drug Administration have been charged with altering records to permit a company to place questionable drugs on the market.

A former head of the Federal Energy Administration (FEA) Office on Consumer Affairs charged that the FEA office opposed consumer interests and did not conduct adequate investigations into skyrocketing oil prices and profits.

The CPA could have protected the consumer against such abuses. As it was proposed, the agency would have had the authority to represent consumers in the formal and informal proceedings of other federal agencies. It could have requested any agency to investigate a consumer complaint and test products. In the event that other agencies refused to handle a problem, the CPA would have been able to get judicial review of the agency's proceedings, carry out the investigations itself, use subpoena power to gather information and appeal an agency's rulings to the courts.

With a lack of publicity, support and concern, the consumers have lost an important battle. Unfortunately, the days of Ralph Nader and the strong consumer movement have left the scene when they were needed most.

Action is still desperately needed. Without a governmental agency to speak out for them, vociferous consumers will have to do the work themselves. They will have to be their own watchdog and demand that the existing "protective" agencies work for them. Or else they stand as a silent majority, to fall prey to the money-hungry capitalists and big businesses of the American free enterprise system.

A clarification on the Egyptian policy board

Some clarification is needed about the membership of the Daily Egyptian Publications Policy and Review Board.

In Wednesday's issue, in an editorial titled "The Egyptian has a new editorial policy," on Page 4, the members of the Publications Policy and Review Board were referred to as "appointed by SIU Interim President Hiram Lesar."

Well, that isn't quite so. The board is a result of recommendations proposed by a committee of professional journalists appointed by former SIU President David R. Derge. The committee's report recommended a board of faculty and students establish and review Daily Egyptian policies. An ad hoc committee was established by Vice President for Academic Affairs and Provost Keith Leasure to implement the report. After a number of meetings, the ad hoc committee recommended, and Leasure approved, the current composition of the board.

As director of the School of Journalism, George Brown serves as chairman; William Harmon, journalism instructor, was elected by the faculty of the School of Journalism; Harrison Crouse, undergraduate journalism student, was elected by his fellow journalism students; Larry Marshak, interim faculty managing editor, and Jeff Jouett, student editor-in-chief, are ex-officio members.

Two professional journalists, publishers Karl Monroe of Collinsville and William Morgan of Sparta, also are members of the board. A third publisher, John Sheley of Pinckneyville, is an alternate member. The professionals were the only appointments made by Lesar, and the three were nominated by journalism faculty and students.

Adrian Combs, business manager for the Daily Egyptian, meets with the board in an ex-officio, but non-voting capacity.

And that's the way it is. Sorry if you were misled.

Sports stars overpaid

By Mark Reid
Student Writer

It seems ironic that at a time when everyone is so concerned with who's getting what kind of raise, the salaries commanded by certain superstars are accepted as a matter of course.

Sure there are a few people who find it hard to imagine being paid millions to play football or basketball, but they seldom begrudge athletes the right to get as much as they can, while they can.

We seem to be under what can be termed the "superstar syndrome." We are more than willing to see a top athlete get a substantial pay increase, but woe unto the farmer or fireman for even thinking in terms of money.

Try to explain to a school teacher, a police officer or a garbage collector why he should be satisfied with his weekly earnings while Evel Knievel collects $6 million for an abortive jump.

When George Foreman and Muhammad Ali climb into the ring sometime in October, they'll both step out $5 million richer, regardless of who wins the fight.

If salaries are an indication of the worth we place on an occupation, how does a person rationalize his own job worth when confronted with such exorbitant examples of pay?

Unions are often criticized for their seeming greed at contract renewal time, yet we applaud the young athlete who makes money while both competing and endorsing products.

This is not to say that superstars don't provide a service. But obviously there must be something wrong with our priorities when we pay a man more to beat another man than to save his life.

Somehow you would think we would be more willing to see teachers or public workers receive pay hikes than rookie pitchers.

Maybe it's time to ask ourselves where our priorities really lie. There will probably always be superstars and they'll probably always receive phenomenal salaries. But maybe with them in mind we can be more tolerant of the average Joe when he asks for a raise.

At press time last night, the Student Senate was deliberating on a monumental piece of legislation that could affect the future of SIU as a learning institution.

The resolution, LR-10, submitted by Student Senator David Stevens from the U-Park district, proposes some drastic measures be taken by the Senate in order to preserve its already important position in the SIU bureaucracy.

Did the Senate take on its responsibilities to its constituents by approving the resolution? For that answer, turn to Page 3 of today's Daily Egyptian and find out if Daily Egyptian Staff Writer Diane Solberg was, indeed, designated as the official mascot of Student Government.

Rabbi urges criticizers to see him first

To the Daily Egyptian:

There have been several letters in the Egyptian to which I feel compelled to respond.

First, I'm glad to see that many of the several hundred people who did come to our evening services for the High Holy Days were moved by the sermons. One guest, however, seemed to misunderstand what was said and has implied in an Egyptian letter that I am a racist because I stressed Judaism's opposition to intermarriage.

May I suggest that in the future if people have questions about what clergymen say in sermons or professors say in the classroom, they make an appointment to speak to them personally on a one to one basis.

Perhaps one of the reasons that there are so many misunderstandings about Judaism is that it doesn't fit into the Western definition of religion as a community bound together by a faith or creed or series of dogmas. People then think that it must be race which defines us.

The fact is that Judaism is an ethical culture which embodies language (i.e. Hebrew, Yiddish, Ladino), foods, art, dance, historical consciousness, as well as religious customs and beliefs. As an ethnic minority we are very concerned in America about maintaining our identity, and thus, concerned about assimilation and intermarriage.

Unlike Christianity, we make no claims to be the one true faith, and thus have no missionaries. Again this does not imply that we are a closed "racial group"; but that we feel that no one has a monopoly on God. We have always welcomed sincere converts of every religion and race and thousands do convert to Judaism each year.

What ever the case may be, if people have questions about Judaism, the Jewish view of Jesus, the High Holy Days, etc., they should feel free to come to my office and discuss them and not abuse the columns of the Egyptian with such matters.

Rabbi Earl Vinecour

Carbondale included in liquor sales study

To the Daily Egyptian:

Don Leverenz made some interesting but misinformation concerning students and the Liquor Advisory Board decision to ban liquor sales in drug and grocery stores. He states that my presence on the L.A.B. is a conflict of interest. The liquor representative has no vote; he can only discuss issues. For sure, the right to speak freely does not constitute a conflict of interest.

Two of the six voting members of the L.A.B. are students. Their intelligent, active participation belies any charge that students were left out of the decision making.

Leverenz states that he did not understand the "research data" which shows the inevitable bankruptcy of two package stores if drug and grocery stores get licenses. Has he seen the survey? It does include Carbondale and most of the other University cities in Illinois. The data covers 12 pages and is compiled from information submitted by the Mayors of 17 Illinois cities which have been identified by the U.S. census as similar to Carbondale. Liquor stores being forced out of business if drug and grocery stores get licenses is not the only argument nor the most persuasive one that caused the L.A.B. to vote 5 to 1 to prohibit grocery and drug store sales of liquor.

Leverenz's plea to students to participate in local government and to register to vote is well-made. As students, my wife and I were poll-watchers and election judges. After entering business, we helped fund the first large-scale effort to register students. Student participation is essential to a healthy community body politic.

Letters to the Daily Egyptian

The Daily Egyptian welcomes expression of opinions from all members of the University community. Writers are requested to be concise and, in the event the subject has a time element, to bring letters to the Daily Egyptian newsroom as early in the day as possible. The editors reserve the right to condense letters to permit a larger variety of opinions, to correct minor typographical and grammatical errors, and to edit out material that is considered libelous or in bad taste. Letters should be typed, double-spaced, and accompanied by the full address and signature of the writer.

Inebriation, not registration

By Gary Delsohn
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

The SIU student political involvement process revealed itself Sunday night.

The SIU College Democrats sponsored a bash at Merlin's, allowing students to socialize with beer and local politicians as the rocking sounds of Coal Kitchen blasted away. Anyone who had registered to vote in Jackson Count was admitted free to the giant bar. Those who had not taken the trouble to register, but wanted to boogie in the bar, had the opportunity to register in the mobile unit parked across the street.

Eager to determine just how involved these Sunday night boogiers were, I asked one girl, "Did you meet the candidates?"

"I didn't know there were any candidates around," she answered. Most local Democrats were in attendance, passing out literature, drinking beer and shaking hands. She didn't know Paul Simon was expected any minute. The same Paul Simon that has enough influence to persuade Edward Kennedy to come all the way down to SIU to campaign in Simon's behalf.

"Why did you come to Merlins tonight," I asked another SIU student.

"On Sunday I go out and drink beer, and this is Sunday," she said, stumbling as proof that she was a lady of her word.

Another Sunday night barhopper, when told Paul Simon had just arrived, said, "Simon is no good without Garfunkel."

Inside the dark, noisy bar, friendly politicians lurked in waiting, eager to pounce on unsuspecting students and swarm them with leaflets and smiles. They said things like, "Howdy, we're conducting a little campaign for the Democrats, boys." The man wearing a "Bruce Richmond for Representative" badge, offered that southern hospitality as he loaded down two uninterested students with literature. I followed the two inside, watching as they tossed the unread pamphlets down onto the beer-stained floor.

For some, registering to vote was an effective input towards the electoral process. For too many others, it was a way to get into Merlins free and a chance to boogie to the sounds of Coal Kitchen and Night Hawk. Thirty cent beers and quarter mixed drinks were added incentive. Very few people seemed concerned with the candidates or issues. I watched it all, wondering what kind of dance or free event would need to be thrown to get the registrants to actually vote.

The old proverb that says "you can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink has been challenged. The horses at Merlins Sunday night have been led to the water. Now, will they drink?"

Pot takes its place on the shelf

By Dave Iбата
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Carrie Nation, where are you?

The prohibition you fought for has been turned on its ear. 70 years after your battle against Demon Rum, Americans still are as wet as the bottom of the Mississippi.

But, the bottle's dominance is challenged by a new pastime—smoking marijuana. Because of the increase in popularity of grass, a new case for prohibition of alcohol can be made.

FDR repealed prohibition in 1933. Curiously, once liquor regained respect, pot smoking took Demon Rum's place. Today, smoking "dope" has become the pastime.

Marijuana makes people feel good, not raunchy, hungry, not nauseous, passive, not violent.

Three reports from the government's bipartisan Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse state that pot (grass, weed, hemp, dope, tea, wacky tabakky) constitutes "no major threat to public health," that the substance feared as a dangerous "narcotic" has demonstrated "no conclusive evidence . . . of any physical damage, disturbances or proven human fatalities attributable solely to even very high doses of marijuana." In a word, cannabis does not lead to physical dependence.

Consider: Half of the traffic fatalities in the U.S. can be traced to alcohol, while the commission found that grass does not "significantly impair driving ability or performance; the five main causes of death for middle-aged Americans can be linked to alcohol; and 50 per cent of police budgets are spent on alcohol-related cases, while "the weight of the evidence is that marijuana does not cause violent or aggressive behavior."

What would have happened if, in 1920, when Prohibition took effect, 26 million Americans had already tried marijuana, and 13 million smoked pot on a regular basis? These figures are quoted from the 1973 findings of the national commission.

If Americans had something else to imbibe, something stronger than cigarettes and less toxic than booze, would prohibition have failed so dismally?

A pamphlet published by the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML), cites a consensus that all criminal penalties for the private possession and use of marijuana be removed.

The proponents of this opinion are the American Bar Association, the Consumers Union, the National Council of Churches, the governing board of the American Medical Association, B'nai B'rith and conservative spokesman William F. Buckley, Jr.

Re-stock liquor store shelves with a fine selection of domestic and imported cannabis—Nebraska Home-Grown replacing Boone's Farm, and Columbian Special replacing Cabernet Sauvignon.

To prohibit alcohol is my own idea. The drift of most arguments against the legalization of marijuana is that two sedative vices in our small nation are too many. Well, why not have the better of the two?

Where are you when the country cries for you, Carrie Nation?

After all, prohibiting liquor and legalizing marijuana makes more sense than prohibiting marijuana and legalizing liquor.

Dropping-out can be expensive

To the Daily Egyptian:

Although most students don't know it, they're trapped at S.I.U. After your signature is placed on a housing contract, without knowing it you have given up one of your most basic freedoms. And that is the freedom to change your mind.

I discovered my imprisonment the Monday before classes started. Because of personal reasons, I decided to withdraw from the university. The first thing I did was to go to my Student Resident Assistant's room to tell him. Immediately I was hit with a deluge of paperwork. After filling out several forms I was sent to an office in Grimmel Hall. The gentleman there informed me there would be penalties to pay. The penalties, three of them, amounted to seventy-five dollars. Each was twenty-five dollars. One was for failing to file an "Intent to Vacate" five weeks prior to checking out. The second was for leaving University Housing without a petition for exception approved by University Housing. And the last fine was for not withdrawing from the University. I was flabbergasted that the penalties were so severe. But I was committed, so I decided to continue with the procedure.

He informed me that there were people waiting to get into University Housing so that the woman in the next office I was sent to would probably cancel my contract. After running a considerable distance through the rain, I arrived at her office. She was very unemotional and businesslike as she told me that it would cost me about five hundred dollars. This was because I had to pay for my room until the end of the semester. I asked her if someone else wouldn't occupy my room. She said yes. I asked her if they wouldn't pay for the room too. She said yes. Then I asked her if the school wouldn't then be getting paid twice for the same room. She nodded. When I asked her if she thought that the school had a racket going, she didn't answer. I had to get up, and run back through the rain, and check in again.

This theft of my freedom and the freedom of others like me here at S.I.U. is unnecessary and unfair. A person has the right to change his or her mind. A person has the right to change where he or she wants to get an education or even if he or she wants to continue his or her education. Especially those students who would like to withdraw before the academic year has started, such as myself. I also was informed that it would be expensive to leave at the end of the semester too. I'm being forced to stay here because I can't afford to leave. I'm sure most people are unaware of their captivity, but hopefully if they are informed they will take some action to remove the barbed wire from around S.I.U.

Horse club to 'show' its support

The Saluki Saddle Club will sponsor a horse show at 10 a.m. Saturday near the Arena and baseball field to build public support for the reopening of the Saluki Stables.

Richard Lange, a club member, said his group would be lucky to break even on the show but support for reopening the stables is more important than making money.

"The idea is to let the University administration know it is missing out on part of a multi-billion dollar industry," Lange said.

Anyone with a horse can enter as many of the 17 contests as he chooses. Entry fee for each competition is $1 he said.

Lange, who is also a student senator, said the 17 classes are: pony pleasure, western pleasure, catalog race, sack race, back-to-back bare back, musical tires, egg and spoon pleasure and country pleasure.

Other events include Jack Benny pleasure, barrel race, pole bending, reining, goat tie, rescue race, saddle scramble, English pleasure and jumping.

"We try to have a well-rounded schedule for all horse enthusiasts," Lange said.

The pony pleasure is for young riders, the western pleasure is for college-age riders and the Jack Benny pleasure is for "anyone over 39," Lange said.

Lange said events like musical tires are planned to provide comedy. In this contest participants ride around a group of tires, dismount on a signal and attempt to stand in a tire before another rider can get to the tire.

"There is no admission charge for spectators. Events should last all day," Lange said.

Folk festival will feature area artists, craftsmen

By Mary L. Heeren
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Area artists and craftsmen can display skills Friday through Sunday at the third annual Southern Illinois Folk Festival at the DuQuoin State Fairgrounds.

Fair gates will open 9 a.m. Friday, and 10 a.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The festival is aimed at showing the arts and crafts typical of Southern Illinois, and as an educational program, Mrs. M. R. Prusacki, festival chairman said.

From 150 to 200 artists and craftsmen—many from SIU—are expected to participate, she said. Students involved include those in the art, animal industries and recreation departments. Also participating is the SIU Forestry Club.

Art department students will demonstrate crafts including carding and spinning wool into yarn, then dyeing the yarn naturally with vegetables.

Other art students will display glass blowing, pottery working and metal working. Blacksmith shop workers will make hinges, knives and hooks.

Animal industry students will shear sheep and recreation students will conduct traditional children's games with audience participation invited.

The SIU Forestry Club will exhibit early lumberjack skills.

Farm related craft demonstrations will include cow milking, grain threshing, musket firing, chair caning, broom caning and horse shoeing. Home related craft displays will include basket weaving, making corn husk dolls, quilting, staining and carvings, goose plucking and making lye soap.

"Nothing will be done electrically or mechanically, but as it was done in the 1900's or before," Prusacki said.

Professional assertiveness AAUW topic

"Professional Assertiveness" is the topic of an American Association of University Women meeting to be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the SIU Faculty Club at 1000 Elizabeth St.

Art Lange and Janet Loxley of SIU's Counseling Center will conduct the session on professional assertiveness, giving a brief explanation of assertiveness and demonstrating with the audience what it is.

Other scheduled attractions are daily covered wagon rides, a Punch and Judy show, a flea market, a cat and dog show, museums, a country store, an art show and stage shows.

The opening stage show at 7 p.m. Friday is the Collinsville Cahok Indian Dancers. Also scheduled for Friday is a hog calling contest and a square dancing exhibition. Friday is designated as Children's Day.

Saturday's special events include the first heat of the square dancing competition, the Cahok Indian Dancers and gospel singing. Saturday is posted as Senior Citizen's Day.

A vesper service, conducted by Rev. J. Lloyd Tomer, pastor of the First Church of God in Benton, is scheduled for 8:30 a.m. Sunday to open the final day of the festival.

Other events include an antique auto show, a horsehoe pitching contest, a folk festival Queen contest and square dancing. Sunday is Family Day.

Admission for the square dancers is $1.25. Stage show admission is 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children. A $1 parking fee has been set by the Southern Illinois Arts and Crafts Guild, co-sponsoring organization. Except for the stage shows, demonstrations and exhibits are free.

About 40,000 people attended the 1973 festival, but Prusacki said more are expected this year.

More than 3,000 children are Friday. Schools sponsor the trip as an educational experience and feel what children learn at the festival justifies the trip, Prusacki said. Schools attending include those in Southern Illinois, Missouri, and Indiana.

The folk festival is sponsored by the Southern Illinois Arts and Crafts Guild and the Hayes Fair Acres, Inc. Helping with planning and organization is the SIU Area Services Department under the vice-president for development and services.

Faner increases delivery problems

By Lenore Sobota
Student Writer

Adding to the traditional mail service problems of rain, sleet, snow and gloom of night is the Faner Building.

The opening Faner is creating special problems for Campus Mail Service this year and is sending route planners back to the drawing board.

"The campus is laid out in routes similar to the town," said Katherine McCluckie, supervisor of Campus

Mail Service, "and we try to keep them equal."

McCluckie said Campus Mail Service attempts to keep the volume of mail handled on each of the 11 routes as equal as possible so mail carriers, all of whom are students, will not be overworked.

Because of the move into Faner, all the routes will have to be readjusted, McCluckie said. Eventually Faner will be a route in itself, but she said she does not know when that will be.

"Every time you look, there are trucks moving in more desks or filing cabinets. There are 14 offices in Faner now. We'll get everything settled when they quit moving," she said.

'Woman' seminar discusses male and female chauvinism

By Pam Black
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Those attending the "Creating an Awareness of Male and Female Chauvinism" seminar recently had a chance to express ideas on reasons for chauvinism and to receive different levels of feelings on chauvinism, according to Virginia Britton, coordinator of "Being a Woman" seminars.

Britton jovially opened the seminar, third of a series sponsored by Women's Programs, with a comment on male chauvinists. "One of the things I have learned about male chauvinists is not to call them male chauvinist pigs, because if they are, they love it."

Britton said the term "male chauvinist pig" has been used so frequently it has lost meaning.

Panel members were Bruce Swinburne, dean of student affairs; Bruce Appleby, associate dean, College of Liberal Arts; Harvey Ideus, director of Career Planning and Placement Service, and John (Jack) Baier, assistant dean of student life. They began the discussion by presenting past and present attitudes toward women and men.

Ideus briefly described the history of chauvinism. He blames classical literature for holding women in high esteem which he said, sets women in a different place than men.

Ideus said nothing dispels the idea women are sex objects. It is reinforced in child raising and at different school levels, he said.

DePauw University has adopted a new system for all publications, Appleby said. He said the word "hu" replaces he and she. "hus" is for "his" and "her"; and the word "hum" for "him" and "her."

Baier said some women want equal rights, but continue to use sexuality as an excuse for gaining attention and assistance in their work.

One example Baier gave was a female co-worker who missed two days out of a month due to cramping from her menstrual period and needed an assistant to carry equipment for her.

Baier said the point is behaviors have a tendency to express attitudes.

"If we continue to have females or males requesting special treatment because of sexuality, we can't help, but continue chauvinism," Baier said.

Business games test theory use

By Mitchell Hadler
Student Writer

Business games help the student make the transition between management theory in the classroom and practical use of theory in the real world, Harold Wilson, instructor of Administrative Sciences 481, "Administrative Policy," said recently.

Business games are simulations of real business situations, he said. The games are played by students on teams representing a company which manufactures a retail commodity.

Students play on different teams and compete against each other. The team which makes the most profit at the end of the game wins, Wilson said.

Scores are kept by a computer programmed to simulate an actual economic index of the U.S. economy, he said. The computer is also programmed to contain financial and production information of each company.

All economic conditions are incorporated into the computer program to cause the game to be as realistic as possible, he said.

Students are challenged to handle the decision making policies involved in management, Wilson said. The game provides a situation where the student can begin to function as a manager and apply his knowledge of business strategy and policy.

Students decisions include setting the price of the manufactured retail item and deciding how many items the company should manufacture, he said.

Students should know how much raw material for manufacturing should be purchased, and they must make sure the company has enough cash on hand to pay for raw materials, research and development programs and plant maintenance, Wilson said.

Decisions are fed into the computer and analyzed, he said. The decisions' results are returned to the instructor and players.

The results show if a company is making money and how much. From this information students can determine how effectively they have managed their company, he said.

Students then prepare for the next round of decisions, attempting to improve their company's previous record.

"The business game is just another teaching tool," Wilson said. The game offers the student actual experience in management, "something that just can't be learned in the classroom" he said.

Administrative Sciences 481 is a required course for all business students.

MEET YOUR CANDIDATE

Gale Williams is your candidate in the 58th District for State Representative. Gale has been a member of the Illinois House of Representatives for the past 10 years. Due to the retirement of so many members from Southern Illinois, Gale will be No. 1 in seniority on the Republican side. With seniority he will be able to serve you more effectively than the Freshmen members of the House of Representatives from this area. Gale also has a 97% voting record on significant legislation concerning Southern Illinois. He has a superior attendance record as he had only missed five days out of his ten years of service before June 21, 1972, when he had an acute muscle spasm. He was then forced to take two weeks rest by his physician.

GALE WILLIAMS CARES ABOUT SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

When he returns to Springfield next year, Gale Williams hopes to accomplish many things. A few of them are:

1. Reduce real estate taxes on all homes by returning a larger share of the state income tax back to the counties.
2. Abolish real estate taxes on the homes of senior citizens who at age 65 earn less than $10,000 per year.
3. Abolish tuition at all state universities for students whose parents earn less than $15,000 per year.
4. Completion of the long overdue four lane highway to St. Louis.

Do you care about Southern Illinois? GALE WILLIAMS CARES.

Vote for Gale Williams on November 5 to show you care.

Calipre Stage will host adapted children's rhyme

By Tim Hastings
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Jack and Jill will climb their hill this weekend in the Calipre Stage.

This famous duo, known for fetching water, will appear in an adult retelling of the nursery rhyme titled, "Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Jack and Jill."

Judy Yordon, a graduate assistant in speech, compiled the script for this mixed-media Reader's Theater production. She is also the director.

The Calipre Stage, located on the second floor of the Communications Building, is specially designed for Readers Theater.

The theater has a small capacity, about 150 people, and has a thrust stage. These facets create an intimate rapport between the actors and the audience.

Yordon has embellished the plot of the Mother Goose nursery rhyme.

Jack and Jill, played by Andrew Smith and Edie Reese respectively, are shown at their birth, in school and at their wedding.

"Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Jack and Jill" treats the nursery rhyme as a commentary on human nature.

Climbing the hill represents being young and falling in love, Yordon said. Tumbling down the hill stands for the decline of Jack and Jill's relationship.

The script contains modern psychological poetry such as R.D. Lang's "Knots"; Emmett Williams' "Concrete Poetry Anthology"; and May Swenson's "Iconographs."

Read by narrator Karen Mitchell and a 12-member chorus, these poems serve as a cue to Jack and Jill's thoughts.

Yordon said concrete and iconographic poems are printed in the shape of the thing they describe. For example, the words of a poem about apples would be printed in the shape of an apple.

Pictures of the printed poems will be shown on slides during the performance.

Yordon has staged the show so the actor's bodies diagram the images described in the poems. For instance, while reciting a poem about birth the actors are lying on the ground in fetal positions.

Members of Jack's chorus are Raymond Anslie, Roberta Deason, Mike Hendrickson, Lynne Patton, Sharon Shudnow and Stephen Witt. Members of Jill's chorus are Sherrie Belloff, Rosalie Dils, Robert Kelleher, Kathy Kennedy, Louis Luder and Fred Oberg.

The show will be presented at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday and at 2 p.m. on Sunday. Admission is $1. Reservations can be made by calling 453-2291 Monday through Friday from 1 to 4 p.m.

"The Way It Was" to begin weekly series this Thursday

Some of the great moments in American sports history will be recaptured on a new weekly series, "The Way It Was," which premieres over the Public Broadcasting Service Thursday at 7:00 p.m. on Channel 8.

"The Way It Was" features films of fights, baseball, basketball, football and hockey games from a 20-year period beginning in 1941. Key figures from each of the sports events play major roles in the series, reliving the moments in their careers that put their names in sports page headlines from coast to coast. Among the show's guest sports stars: Willie Mays, Joe Louis, Joe DiMaggio, Otto Graham, Sugar Ray Robinson, Johnny Unitas, Bob Cousy and Red Kelly.

Permanent host for the series is Curt Gowdy, one of today's most popular sports commentators. Gowdy shares hosting duties with the guest sportscaster who described the memorable event on the day it happened.

Assisting Gowdy in the re-telling will be Red Barber, the long-time voice of the Brooklyn Dodgers; Mel Allen, of the New York Yankees; The New York Giants' Ernie Harwell; Don Dunphy, dean of American fight broadcasters; the Cleveland Browns' Bob Neal; Los Angeles' Chick Hearn and Dick Enberg; the Philadelphia Eagles' Bill Campbell; Bud Lynch, the Montreal Hockey broadcaster and the legendary Dizzy Dean, who for many years narrated baseball games from St. Louis.

"The Way It Was" was produced by KCET, Los Angeles, in cooperation with Gerry Gross Productions. The program is made possible by a grant from the Mobil Oil Corporation and is transmitted nationally by PBS, the Public Broadcasting Service.

Robinson may manage

By Richard Bilotti
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Indians will name Frank Robinson as the first black manager in major league baseball on Thursday, it was learned Tuesday night. The team plans a news conference here sometime Thursday, knowledgeable baseball sources told The Associated Press, to officially announce the choice of the 39-year-old Robinson to succeed Ken Aspromonte, who was fired last Friday, effective at the end of the season.

Prior to the Indians' Tuesday night game with the Red Sox in Boston, Robinson maintained he had not been asked to manage Cleveland next season.

"But I would still like to manage," said the slugging star, the only man to win the Most Valuable Player award in both major leagues.

Indian officials would not confirm that the announcement on Robinson would come Thursday.

However, word of it spread quickly to other ballparks around both leagues and in Atlanta, home run king Henry Aaron said as he heard the report: "My heart is still thumping. I think I'll go out and celebrate."

Teacher gets recreation on Sundays

By Bruce Shapin
Daily Egyptian Sports Editor

Checking his appointment calendar, William O'Brien, associate professor and chairman of the Department of Recreation commented, "I'm not that important to have a calendar, but if I have an appointment with a student that comes first before an interview."

O'Brien may not look at himself as an important person, but when Sundays come around in the fall he is a vital member of a team that officiates National Football League games.

"I never thought about officiating in the NFL until they contacted me nine years ago while I was refereeing a game between Ole Miss and Houston," said the eight-year veteran of the NFL.

"The NFL gets about 100 referee applications a year but I didn't apply," said O'Brien. "Officials of the NFL were at the game I was working to look over someone else. I guess they got interested in me because a few days later they called."

With that call O'Brien had to go through several tests. "First I had to fill out biographical information, and then I was given a complete physical, which is required once a year. After the physical I took a written examination which was one of the most difficult tests I have ever taken."

NFL officials are required to take an open book examination each year. The test covers over 200 plays, said O'Brien.

"Following the examination I had a personal interview with an NFL official, and then an NFL investigator ran an investigation on my background and character."

Being an official, O'Brien must keep himself in shape. "I run wind sprints and exercise every day to keep myself in shape."

Every Saturday O'Brien flies Air Illinois to St. Louis where he catches a connecting flight to the game site. O'Brien and his crew of five fellow officials meet at 6 p.m. to have dinner, which is followed by a three and a half hour meeting.

"We go to a room where we view films of the last game we worked. Each play is evaluated by an NFL official," said O'Brien. "After studying the film for several hours we discuss the game and talk about any unusual plays we have heard about or seen. Then we go to bed."

O'Brien said there is an NFL official at each game to evaluate their performance. O'Brien's officiating team stays together throughout the season. "Four of us have been together five years."

Sunday begins with breakfast and church around 8 a.m. "About 9:30 a.m. we're packed and ready to go to the stadium. For the next hour and a half we go over the rules and the game mechanics," said O'Brien.

"We arrive at the stadium about an hour and a half before game time. From that moment on we discuss nothing but football. We're all business out there."

O'Brien is proud of the fact that the officials view each game as any other one. "We never discuss the importance of the game. The only thing we may discuss besides the rules and game mechanics is if the quarterback is a scrambler or one who likes to stay in the pocket," said O'Brien.

O'Brien is the field judge for the NFL games, positioning himself about 25 yards behind the defense. "I watch the kicking and passing game," said O'Brien.

O'Brien and the other 83 officials are paid a weekly salary and expenses. "For exhibition games we all get $300. The first and second year referees also get $300 for regular season games. After the second year, every two years your salary can be increased with $525 being the maximum. During the post-season play referees receive $1,000 for the play-offs and $1,500 for the Super Bowl."

O'Brien has worked the All-Star game and the play-offs.

O'Brien graduated from SIU with an Education degree. He was the head football coach at SIU from 1952-54. "I felt that I wouldn't be coaching forever so I decided to take up officiating so I could keep my fingers in athletics," said O'Brien.

Being an NFL official, O'Brien feels he is spreading the name of SIU. "It helps the public relations of the University and has helped me make contracts which have helped students get jobs. This year Pro Magazine did an article on our officiating crew. It will be distributed all season during the NFL season. In it they mention my department and SIU. That's good public relations."

Income which O'Brien collects through his officiating is donated to the Easter Seal Society. "I donate the money because the Easter Seal is a worthy organization which both my wife and I have worked for, and if I accepted the money there may be a conflict of interest with my job."

Being an NFL official is a dream of many people, but O'Brien would be quite satisfied if he were just teaching. "I have three folders full of letters from former students. I wouldn't trade those for the world."

Last year O'Brien was named "Teacher of the Year" by the College of Education. "It was the greatest thrill of my life," he smiled.

Pirates clinch NL East title

PITTSBURGH (AP)—Manny Sanguillen's infield single with one out in the 10th inning drove in the winning run, giving the Pittsburgh Pirates a 5-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs Wednesday night and the National League East Division championship.

Sanguillen's bases-loaded hit bounded to third baseman Bill Madlock but Madlock could not make a play.

The victory eliminated the St. Louis Cardinals from the division race. Pittsburgh wound up 1½ games ahead of the Cards, who were rained out in Montreal.

That game would have been played Thursday, only if the Bucs had lost Wednesday night.

McAndrew construction is off schedule

Harry Caray has said so many times—and he hasn't even seen 1974's sacrificial lamb known as McAndrew Stadium.

Of course, he might have trouble finding a bleacher seat, because there will only be 4,430. And he might have second thoughts about his beer-drinking, because it may require the keenest senses to avoid all the obstacles for two hours.

And the press box may be more like a late-model tree-house, made of two-by-fours and a strong plastic cover. But it all promises to be interesting.

"It's just unfortunate that we didn't get the steel in time," said Assistant Athletic Director Bill Brown, concerning the recent arrival which has finally allowed initial construction. "The contractor wants out of there as bad as we want him out, because it's probably costing him money with these delays, too."

The recent leaps in steel prices have played havoc with progress at McAndrew and will not necessarily improve before they worsen. Regardless, it's too late now to have the west side finished for the home games, as originally planned.

"We were informed that once the steel started coming, it would take six weeks to get the west side done," said Richard Mager, vice president of development and services. "This was the sole cause of the delay, so I'm virtually certain that we will be done by spring, now."

"I'm not selling out the idea that we might be able to open the west end by our last game."

However, as final plans crystalize for the Salukis' Oct. 19 home opener against Northern Illinois, the possibility gets dimmer.

"We will have 4,430 seats," said Brown. "The top rows can't be used, because people would fall into the parking lot, so that takes off 288 seats."

"We thought at one time that we might try to get portable seats, but the only things we could get would cost about $1,000. Then we would have run the risk of ruining our all-weather track, because the seats would have gone on it."

Students will get first shot at all remaining seats not claimed by returning ticket holders, whose number is rather small. When SIU officials realized the probability of major steel problems in June, prospective new ticket holders were kept at bay.

"We've had innumerable requests, but we had to turn them away until next year," explained Brown. "Now just the students can get these tickets until the day of the game, then anybody can buy them."

As a result of the limited seating, standing room must be allowed for, and stanchions must be controlled. The prospect worries Brown.

"We don't know how we're going to control the crowd," he admitted.

"We've had security people there recently looking at it, and they don't know what we'll do."

"According to the contractor, though, the stadium, itself, is safe. The only things to worry about will be the steel in the parking lot, which people could fall over. You don't expect these things, but you never know."

The problems do not stop with the seating facilities. The public address system needs repairing after the battering the cables have taken during construction. All are "pretty well shot and cut," according to Brown.

The old scoreboard has just been restored to working order, after it became apparent the new scoreboard—as well as the new pressbox—would not be completed.

"We won't have the scoreboard or press box up this year," said Brown. "They must go on bid, and, with the price of steel, it may be December before they're up. But, then you never know, we might have both for our last two games."

Just as the new press box should blend in beautifully with its new surroundings, the tentative one should likewise blend with its present environment.
