Horton should have known
ABA standards in deciding on promotions, Rowe says

By Steve Lambert
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Harris Rowe, chairman of the ABA Board of Trustees, said Tuesday that Frank Horton, vice president for academic affairs and research, should have been aware of American Bar Association-ABA accreditation standards before he turned down a recommendation to promote four Law School faculty members.

However, Rowe said that his comments were made in no way as a vote of no confidence in Horton.

Horton, who had said in mid-March that he was unaware of ABA standards when he overviewed the Law School requests, said Tuesday that knowing about the standards would have made no difference in his original decision.

ABA standards state that all tenure and promotion decisions concerning Law School faculty members must be made primarily by the school's faculty and dean.

Law School Dean Hiram Lesar has expressed concern that Horton's overviewing of the school's recommendations is in violation of the standards, and that therefore, the school may lose its accreditation.

If any university is to have a professional school, such as a law school," Rowe said, "it is incumbent upon the University to be aware of all outside accreditation standards placed on that school.

Rowe declined to comment on whether the Law School controversy has had any adverse effects on the University, adding that the situation is an internal matter which must be resolved by the school and the administration.

Horton said he was met Thursday with an appeal committee from the ABA to examine the promotion denials, but he declined to comment on what was discussed.

T. Richard Mager, Taylor Mattis, and Andrew Tymepine, associate professors, were recommended by the school in early March to receive promotion and tenure, but only the tenure requests were approved by Horton. Assistant Professor Donald Carter was recommended for promotion and early tenure, but both of those requests also were denied by Horton.

On Monday, the four met with the appeal committee for an hour and a half. Although they declined to comment immediately after the meeting, the four denounced Horton's actions in a statement prepared late Monday night. They said Horton is substituting his opinions of what makes a good law teacher for the opinions of law scholars and the school's deans.

Donald Elkins, chairman of the appeal committee, declined to comment Monday on the content of the meeting. However, he did say a final recommendation to Brandt should be available within two or three days.

In mid-March, Horton announced that 47 faculty members recommended for promotion by their deans, he recommended to Brandt that 40 be promoted.

Brandt said last week that he will take under advisement all promotion denials appeals and make his final recommendation on all promotion and tenure decisions to the Board of Trustees.

The board has the last word on all tenure and promotion matters.

Work begins for students attorney

By Jan Sebottman
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

On Tuesday, her first day as SIU's students attorney, Elizabeth Berg Streeter did research for a case in the SIU Law Library, talked to staff members of the Student Tenant Union and went to Murphysboro to defend a student in Jackson County Circuit Court in a landlord-tenant dispute.

Streeter's appointment comes more than two years after the idea for the program was conceived. Two unsuccessful searches were conducted previously Streeter started work Monday and spent the day getting settled at SIU.

Streeter, who previously had a private law practice in Chicago, said she feels it will be a challenge to be SIU's first students attorney, since she will have to set up the administration of the program.

There are going to be some problems until the students attorney board meets and sets priorities. Streeter said: "I could spend a lot of time on something like a name change when there are other more important and more complicated cases I could be taking."

The students attorney board is composed of four administration appointees and four student representatives. One of the administration appointees is a member of the Jackson County Bar Association.

Streeter said that several members of the board are out of town now so the board will not be able to meet until the end of this week or sometime next week. Streeter said she assumes that the board will discuss priorities for the students attorney when it meets, although it will not be able to anticipate every problem.

The board will meet once a month to get the program going, which is good. Streeter said, adding that it may not be necessary for the board to meet that often later in the year.

Streeter also said that unless the students attorney board sets limitations and makes the guidelines more precise, it would be difficult to know what to do in many instances, such as if she received a call in the middle of the night from a student who was in jail.

Without a bail bond system, there would not be much she could do in such a case other than advise the student not to say anything until he had representation and see if he had any friends he could call to put up bond, Streeter said.

A bail bond system would be "great" for the students, Streeter said, but it would be very complicated to set up. "After all, the students attorney program took quite a while to set up. A bail bond system would be up to student government to set up and it would take time."

Current guidelines also state that the attorney should not handle any criminal case beyond the reasonable period of time needed for the student to obtain a private attorney or public defender. The guidelines also state that the students attorney should give preference to those students who are financially unable to obtain their own lawyers.

Streeter said the public defender usually takes indigent students anyway, but there may be some minor cases that the public defender will not refuse to take. Public defenders have their own

Supervisor race led 2-1 by Kelley

Unofficial results of Tuesday's Carbondale Township election project Democrat Robert D. Kelley as winner of the race for supervisor.

With 25 of 27 voting precincts reporting Tuesday night, Kelley led incumbent W. I. "Ike" Brandon by a 2 to 1 margin. Kelley, 33, is currently supervisor of SIU General Stores and Surplus.

Democratic candidate for highway commissioner, Vernell Bloodworth, is also a projected winner over Republicans Harold Chew.

Races for township clerk, assessor and four trustee positions were too close to call Tuesday night.
X-rated crime category proposed by Thompson

By T. Lee Hughes

SPRINGFIELD, I.L. (API) - Aiming to "get tough on crime," Gov. James R. Thompson proposed Tuesday a legislative package that would create a new category of X-rated crimes carrying life imprisonment without parole.

"Violent felons would face the ultimate penalty for their actions," Thompson said, adding that the proposal would "freeze" the Illinois prison system currently facing severe overcrowding.

The package would require the imprisonment of any defendant sentenced to life in prison for a crime committed after July 1, 1979, who has been convicted of at least two violent felonies.

A violent felony is defined as any felony that results in the death of a person or is defined as a Class X felony by the Illinois Statute.

The proposal would also increase the prison term for any defendant convicted of committing a Class X felony, from 30 years to 40 years.

Thompson said the proposal would cost the state an estimated $28 million a year.

"This is not a death penalty," he said. "This is a new type of life sentence, appropriately expensive, that only applies to the most heinous crimes and the most heinous criminals."
City Council candidates present views

By Sue Greene
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

City Council candidates presented their views at a forum sponsored by the Greater Carbondale Area Savings and Loan Association Tuesday. All candidates are running at-large for election. The City Council positions will be filled in the April 19 election. Incumbents Hafez Fachi and Ann Adamczyk are running. Challengers are Dennis Adamczyk, an SIU graduate student in public affairs, and James Hewette, a retired military officer.

The candidates were given six minutes each in what space was available by and where they felt the City Council could enhance growth and development in Carbondale and how the city and the business community could work together for overall improvement.

Fachi, who spoke first, said growth and development in the city could be improved by expanding commercial offices and industry. Support of SIU’s growth and stability and development of such community facilities as roads, sewers, parks and water systems were other ways he saw of achieving the goal.

Jones said the capacity of the Northwest Wastewater Treatment Plant must be expanded before the city can annex land in that area. He said continued improvement of the Carbondale Industrial Park is important to business growth in the city.

Jones also proposed regular meetings between people in the business community and the city staff. Adamczyk said Carbondale could be the first community in southern Illinois if business interests received attention. Complete changes in downtown condition could be reversed to reverse the serious decline there.

Gaston said he saw the Carbondale comprehensive business center, he said, but only if action is.

New group feels unionization downgrades schools

Gaston: bargaining brings mediocrity

By Steve Lambert
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Faculty collective bargaining would bring mediocrity to an otherwise first-rate college or university, says Jerry Gaston, temporary coordinator of Concerned Faculty, which opposes the proposed bargaining.

"The institutions which currently have unionization are third- or forth-rate colleges and universities. As long as schools are perceived as being like high schools than colleges or universities, the faculty will be paid like that," said Gaston.

Concerned Faculty organized in mid-March in an attempt to educate faculty members about the negative aspects of collective bargaining. It will meet at 12:30 p.m. today in the Carbondale Area Savings Bank.

"Pro-bargaining organizations have been overemphasizing the positive aspects of bargaining," Gaston said.

One overemphasized aspect of bargaining, Gaston said, is the belief that unionization will bring higher salaries to faculty members. "However, as the Chronicle of Higher Education points out, salary increases happen throughout the country, with or without bargaining," Gaston said.

Gaston also said faculty unionization is a detriment to academic freedom. "You can imagine faculty members represented by an affiliate of the AFL-CIO (such as the Carbondale Federation of University Teachers)," he said. "Sure they’ll have clout, but they’ll also be weighed down by a heavy-handed union.

"That could bring more negativity to our tenure and promotion procedures, he said.

"The Law School is currently protecting the promotion deans of four into the faculty members. The school had recommended that the four be promoted, but Francisco Horton, vice president for academic affairs and research, turned down the requests."

Stabbing caused death in murder

By Pete Reisbach
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

An autopsy performed Tuesday on a Carbondale woman’s body was found to be in the trunk of an automobile April 12 on the weekend, according to the coroner, who said the body was found by the coroner.

Robinson’s body was found Saturday by Carbondale Police Sgt. Tom Busch in the trunk of a car outside the apartment building. Busch was called to the scene on a report of a missing woman’s report the police received Monday evening.

Police said the woman is expected to be returned to her home at about 8 p.m. Friday from a relative of Robinson.

The auto was found abandoned but in bad condition by police March 16 on U.S. 51 in Makanda. The next day, police noticed the front window of the car was broken and that a CB radio and briefcase had been taken.

White said the car belonged to Odell

Robinson, Robinson’s mother, but Mrs. Robinson said Tuesday that the 1989 Ford was owned by Carl.

Mrs. Robinson said that on March 15 she called Carbondale police to report a license plate missing. She said she had visited the state department and located the car to his car, because she did not have 1977 license plates.

She also said she mentioned that her son had been gone for a week and that it was unusual for him to be gone for that length of time without informing anyone of his whereabouts.

Mrs. Robinson said the woman on the phone told her to wait awhile. Mrs. Robinson said she could not remember if the woman gave her a reason why she should wait.

Mrs. Robinson said the authorities investigating her son’s death never asked her why it took her three weeks to file a missing person’s report.

Acting Police Chief Edward Hogan declined comment Tuesday night, saying he was not familiar with the situation.

The exact date of Mr. Robinson’s death could not be determined, White said. White said Mr. Robinson was last seen alive March 7 and the car could have been parked on the highway as early as March 8.

White said he saw no connection between the murder and the theft of the car. He said that whoever stole the radio and briefcase from the auto were probably unaware of the body in the trunk.

White said authorities currently have no suspects or motives for the murder but that an investigation is continuing.

Mr. Robinson was a student at John A. Logan College in Carterville at the time of his death.

6 considered for Continuing Education post

Six persons have been recommended by a search committee for the post of dean of Continuing Education. Frank Horton, vice president for academic affairs and research, has announced.

The search committee recommended that three of these individuals be brought to campus for initial interviews.

The three are Frank A. Downes, assistant dean of the Division of Extension and Continuing Education at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign; Russell A. May, director of the Rochester Center of the University of Minnesota; and Robert A. Ratcliffe, executive director of the Law in American Society Foundation in Chicago.

May met with Horton Monday and Tuesday. Downes and Ratcliffe will meet with Horton later this week and next week.

The person interviewed will also meet with the Continuing Education staff, the College of Education’s representative committee from the Undergraduate Education Policy Committee of the Senate, the Education Policies Committee of the Council, and presidents from area community colleges.

If Downes, May and Ratcliffe are unsatisfactory, Horton said, the other three individuals will be invited to visit.

The new dean of continuing education will replace acting dean Lowell Hall. The search started in fall semester after a review committee decided to separate the division from General Academic Programs.

America is becoming tongue-tied

By Paul Simon
Member, U.S. House of Representatives

A little-noted provision in the document which the United States signed two years ago at Helsinki commits the United States to encouraging the studies of foreign languages and cultures. But compared to five years ago, 10 years ago, or 20 years ago, fewer—no more—Americans are studying foreign languages.

We properly point out when the Soviets or others violate human and political rights of the Helsinki agreement, but we also have an obligation to live up to our own treaties.

One statute intrigues me, one which does not make sense for us as a nation economically, culturally, or militarily. There are five teachers of English in the Soviet Union than there are students of Russian in the United States.

There are other interesting straws in the wind which show that we are not paying attention to other nations and cultures. For example:

—For almost two years I taught at Sangamon State University in Springfield, in many ways an excellent university. But that university does not teach one single foreign language course. I don’t believe that 10 years ago or 50 years ago there would have existed an institution of higher learning in the nation which did not teach foreign languages.

—Fewer and fewer colleges and universities demand a foreign language as an entrance requirement. Only about 10 per cent of the schools require it.

—The Foreign Service of the United States no longer requires that foreign language background before you can enter. When you talk to State Department officials, they say they would like to get people

Exploring the long and the short of it

By Mary Beth Moedzinski

I have resigned myself to the fact that the unemployment situation is getting worse and the job openings are few. It won’t be easy for me to find a job, but after all, I chose to go out and look for a job instead of looking for one.

I have resigned myself to the fact that there are few jobs left in the world of communications and thousands of students are seeking those jobs at the same time. After all, I chose to try journalism and broadcasting instead of the more secure careers.

But all 5 feet 3 of me risen in anger when I find out that I will have an even harder time getting that job because I am short. A recent article in U.S. News and World Report stated that employers tend to hire tall people over shorter ones and give them higher salaries.

The average height of adult men is 5 feet 9. I am just a little shorter than the average height of adult women in America, which is a little over 5 feet 3.

But I have been prey to the names, the jokes and the stereotypes that so many short people suffer. There is nothing so insulting as having your head patted, your cheek pinched or even your body lifted into the air by some 6-foot-4 person with a strange sense of humor.

with language skills, but because so few Americans have studied foreign languages they were forced to drop out of school.

—Few and fewer American students spend any of their college years abroad, about half as many today as did a generation ago.

—Up-to-date statistics are hard to get, but the figures for the percentage of high school students studying foreign languages for a few years tell a story: 1960, 31 per cent; 1970, 29 per cent; 1974, 24 per cent.

What difference does all of this make?

It would not be likely, for example, that in Helsinki, document, sentences which no one is likely to pay much attention to, but that this may show a lack of commitment, a lack of willingness on our part, that cannot be good.

In the wake of the tragedy of Vietnam, we had a few hundred more Americans who spoke Vietnamese and were in contact with the people there, it’s possible we could have avoided the war in that war, that can’t be good.

Why do our friends from Germany and Japan and Sweden sometimes still call sentences in other nations than we do? Sometimes the answer is fairly simple: they speak the language of the buying country and we do not.

We are living in a world that grows smaller and smaller. With ourselves or their own, their Northern Illinois or Wisconsin. D.C. are closer today to any point on the globe than our northern colonies were to our southern colonies when our nation was founded.

If we are to build a world of peace and stability, people will have to talk to one another. This means that some of our borders will have to learn English, and some of us will have to learn their languages.

We will be enriched—both culturally and economically—if we do.

Elitists looking for mass support

Only 11 of the 435 members of the U.S. House of Representatives in the 95th Congress have owned up to have had some blue collar work experience.

Local U.S. Rep. Paul Simon is one of the 11. Tuesday, Simon and the House “Blue Collar Caucus” held a news conference to announce the formation of the group designed “to give the working men and women of America a new voice in the Capitol.”

Terry Michael of Simon’s office, said the 11 caucus members are “charter members”, so there may be more Congressmen who join the fold.

Hokde Island Rep. Ed Beard, caucus chairman and other members who want to encourage blue collar workers all over the country to belong to the group.

First, the “Blue Collar Caucus” should concentrate on increasing its membership. If only 11 of 435 members are members of their blue collar roots, America’s proletariat will probably be rather cautious in their active support of an obvious elitist government.

Drug bill injects illusory hopes

A bill which would make laetrile legal in Illinois was introduced in the House last Wednesday, several days prior to the release of a report which shows the “drug” to be biologically inert.

Over the past several years, proponents have argued that it reduces the spread of cancer, while opponents have said it has no medical effect, to a negative one.

Dr. Lewis Thomas, president and chief executive of the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York, head of the researchers who conducted the test, states: “Our conclusion is that laetrile is biologically inert—that it has no effect one way or another on cancer.”

The study took three years to complete and is reported by Thomas to be the most extensive animal test conducted on laetrile. It began after a previous study, in which it was claimed that the compound, derived from apricot pits, seemed to inhibit the growth of breast cancers in mice.

Thomas states, however, were the result of a statistical error, and added that six additional tests, including the last one, reached the same conclusion—laetrile has no effect on cancer.

Those facts should not be ignored by our legislators or by any one in the Food and Drug Administration has banned it.

Totten’s bill would make legal for doctors to administer the compound, but illegal to buy or sell it.

“We do not purport to suggest in this legislation how to market laetrile, he said. “The drug is apparently available in large quantities in Illinois today.”

Totten is claim that the bill allows Illinois residents the freedom to choose the “cancer therapy” they find best for them. What it really does is allow unscrupulous laetrile producers to prey on uneducated, pathetic cancer patients. Use of another remedy, now proven to be a placebo, merely keeps the patient away from needed medical help.

Lettie installs a false hope in people who desperately need medical care. Totten’s bill should even receive the courtesy of a committee hearing.

Lawyer advertising may not diminish professionalism

I find myself in disagreement with Ms. Elliot's reasoning in her article against advertising for lawyers (3-30-77). First, she ignored what may be the most important question in the debate: what benefits may accrue to low-income members of our society in need of legal services but unaware of their availability or cost? Usually unwilling to handle the "minor problems" of low-income people, the large firms, as Ms. Elliot admits, have all the business they can take care of and would not need to advertise. As a result, advertising mainly among solo practitioners would lead to increased competition and lower fees, not higher ones. Further, I would hesitate to claim that only incompetent lawyers would advertise their services; such an accusation smacks of unfounded generalizations. The new lawyer in need of publicity to establish his practice is not necessarily a shyster. As it stands now, ABA approved lists of lawyers may be circulated to businesses, in accordance with the American Bar Association, providing a forum of publicity to the entity in our society that need it the least.

Human rights goal refreshing

Foreign officials have criticized President Carter's recent pronouncements on human rights for being lax and effusive. What the American public should realize, though, is that such "out-front" diplomacy in which Carter has promised all along and will continue, for too long the American public has been kept in the dark about foreign policy matters. Carter was taken not to offend the Russian bear. We were told of the progress made in détente while nuclear weapons multiplication was afoot.

Carter's call for disarmament and an open challenge to discuss human rights in the world arena is a complete reversal of past foreign strategy. Carter seems to understand that it is not the president during this past decade that has revealed: that in a world rapidly becoming democratic, it cannot be championed through bombs and threats. Only by recognizing the strong points of our own system (i.e. an open society, freedom of speech, freedom to travel, etc.) can we elevate global awareness in the possibility of freedom under a democratic government. This explains Carter's recent public statements, which human right campaign, his letters to dissidents, and his decision to cut aid toward dictatorships. Carter's dream is to upgrade the American image to an old-fashioned ideal, to become "beacon of freedom." For him, human rights are not an anachronistic mythos once labeled us. After a decade of Vietnam, Watergate, and CIA, blunders, it is refreshing to see this move toward more a more pristine, American ideology.

Candidate proposes used book swap

Have you stopped to think how much a used textbook costs these days? A student sells a used book to a store and receives about $50 per cent of the cost. The book is later resold for anywhere from $75 to $90 per book. A lot of profit is made for not very much work and even less risk (you see what you're offered when the book is dropped from a course)*

SUU used to operate a textbook rental for all books required for classes. Needless to say, it saved students a lot of money. In the Environmental Action Party we are proposing an alternative, a used textbooks exchange in Carbondale. Should we win the April election, we will sponsor an open book bazaar through student government next fall. This will allow students to bring their books to a designated place at a designated time to swap used books and/or sell their books for much higher rates.

This will be a temporary solution, however, to a long range problem. I've become aware of alternatives that are used at other schools to solve this problem. It may be possible to establish a Student Government sponsored book co-op. We'll take a look at these other systems, see how they work and try to implement the best system here at SUU.

Faculty should have seen warning

In an advertisement "Tenure and Promotion, Our Annual Mess Flannalck" by Herbert S. Doane, President of the CUPAA, Mr. Doone correctly states that "If, in the past, more deans and department chairs had responded with vigor where issues of academic integrity were concerned, the quality might have avoided the trauma of the last few years."

I would like to point out that while administrators are partly to blame for the "tenure and promotion mess," teachers who accepted employment at SUU while the university was being checked by the AAUP and the University was being checked by the AAUP were also partly to blame. The university was colored and continues to be a victim of the violation of professional and contractual rights as well as the civil liberties of past-fall-forgotten professors. Those who took jobs at SUU believed that what happened in the past would not happen to them. Now these people are shown that they are caught in this "mess." I hope that those who are now seeking redress of their individual grievances will stand together with the rest of the faculty and the SUU can someday become a university where the rights of all its members are protected.

Wilderness site legislation must be relentlessly

The Boundary Waters Canoe Area needs our help. This million-acre lakeless wilderness in the U.S.-Canada border of Minnesota, has long been the home of the loon, moose and timber wolf. It is the largest and most heavily used Wilderness Area in the Eastern United States.

Two bills have been submitted in Congress that would do much to divide the area into three separate Wilderness Areas with a National Recreation Area acting as a buffer zone around them. This plan is not acceptable to conservationists because it will fragment the present wilderness, making it more susceptible to man-made encroachments. Also, the total acreage of virgin timber will be reduced by subsequent timber sales. Many lakes and streams would be opened to motorized recreationists whose uses are incompatible with Wilderness Area criteria.

There is an alternative. A bill submitted by Rep. Donald Fraser of Minneapolis has proposed to give the BWCA the full Wilderness protection it deserves. Under this bill all motorized recreation would be phased out over a five-year period. All logging operations would cease. This bill is one example of the relentless stand that conservation legislation must take in order to preserve such areas.

Write your representatives today and tell them you want them to co-sponsor the Fraser Boundary Waters Wilderness Area bill. Co-sponsorship of the bill is crucial. The more sponsors the bill has before it goes into committee, the less the possibility of serious, detrimental modification. Write your Congressman now. The Boundary Waters must be saved.

Simon is not on 'self-serving kick'

I agree to a great extent with the letter by Peter Prunus and accompanying cartoon concerning Rep. Paul Simon's recent votes. However I feel that Rep. Paul Simon is an exception, a man who is not on a self-serving kick, but most of his recent votes have been self-interested.

I would personally like to extend my regards to the Daytona Beach Police Department, for the special attention which I received March 31, 1977. I was visiting this fine city in search of surf and sun. Noticing that I was just a college tourist, low on funds, one of your officers not only provided me with swift, free transportation, but also my own personal room. Thus to guarantee complete satisfaction, a co-worker took my picture and/or file for future reference which is good because I am looking for a job. Such elaborate, thoughtful treatment is above and beyond belief.

But I must add that upon request to remove myself from the INN OFF THE BEACH? they accommodated me with a bill for $15. I realize that it is my sole wish for the future that the many-starved city of Daytona Beach find other creative ways in which to raise revenue money, and also to relieve the pressures off the shoulders of the men in blue.

Blind John will play

By Melissa Mathewick
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Blind John Davis began his professional career in Chicago speakeasies in the '30s. Now, at 80, he plays to college audiences all over the country. His style is that of a one-man musical variety show, featuring the harmonica, the banjo, the drums, and the voice. He is also a self-taught entertainer and singer of the time.

With the beginning of WW II, Davis stopped regularly going on the road with a band for eight years. However, his recording activity, however, he helped people together the first recording session of a young young man street singer called Bob Diddley, although Davis didn't play that role.

Back home in Chicago, Davis worked a succession of suburban clubs and for many years got away from the bluesy boogie style he had been successful with.

Then, in the early '70s, Davis began to attract the attention of a few devoted fans and as almost the last of the Bluebird recording artists. Davis was still playing regularly, and in 1977, he went to Europe where enthusiastic audiences asked him back for encore after encore.

Blind John Davis will be performing in the Dessert Playhouse. There will be desert and coffee served between sets. Admission is $1.

Network' a chilling view inside TV news

By Robert Shreve
Weekly Writer

During the "Golden Age of Live Television," Paddy Chayefsky was one of the industry's most successful and highly respected dramatists. Now, some 35 years later, Chayefsky has lectured his early benefactors in "Network," the movie industry's revenge on television.

"Network" focuses on a fictitious, post-release fourth network called UBS. UBS the Universal Broad-casting System is an industry joke, traditionally in the ratings cellar. The 7-11 o'clock news, anchored by Howard Beale (Peter Finch), is an exception, and the top brass force Max Schumacher (William Holden), his old friend and colleague and head of the news division, to can Howard. That night, Howard announces, "I'm going to blow my brains out right here on the 7-11 o'clock news, on the air tonight."

UBS executives are outraged, but the ratings go through the roof, and the next night Howard is back explaining he has simply "run out of bullshit." Heads roll in a game of corporate musical chairs, in which Howard is the unwitting pawn. Finally, Frank Hacker (Robert Duvall), who is the friend man for the monopolistic corporation that eventually takes over UBS, puts Diana Christensen (Patty Duke), really, a superman undergarment program knows as a substitute news anchor.

A number of scenes particularly Howard's "I'm mad as hell and I'm not going to take it anymore," speech are both funny and thought provoking, a combination that may be absorbing, rewarding, and sac-ring, at the same time.

However, Chayefsky tries to have it both ways, and the film's fatal flaw is its attempt to find a darker, more ominous side to the television industry, and its simultaneous try at equating television with the larger corporate establishment, represented by Ned Beatty as the journalistic conglomerate's spokesman, who spouts apocalyptic dooms. "There is no America, there is no democracy. There is only IBM, TRW, and Exxon.

Chayefsky's apparent contention that television is turning us into unfeeling, bland-faced puppets of the corporate establishment is a fine point in the film, but last it has turned, and what all, one that is belabored in the film to the point of exhaustion.

Director Sidney Lumet works wonders with Chayefsky's screenplay, which is a dizzying combination of the brilliant, the supemonic, the bisting and the smoothest execution. Lumet has succeeded in molding his unwieldy material into a cohesive, integrated whole. His incisive, razor-sharp direction, which gets under every scene of every film, punctuates what is good in the screenplay and neatly smoothens over the rough spots.

Blind Howard is back, the movie up into a frenzy whenever he appears. As Chayefsky likens, Diana is mostly a one-dimensional villainous, but her quiet, measured performance gives the film a quiet, measured performance that serves as a fine vehicle for a fine vehicle.

In plot outline, "Network" sounds annual; in execution, it is totally outrageous Chayefsky's vehicle for venturing his frustrations and rage moves from hitting force to acid ex- pale as often as the film must does from moments of high comedy to moments of low soap opera and easy, cliched-moralizing. The film works best as a singling satire on the television. The behind-the-scenes machinations, the un-principled quest for ratings strength, the often selfish, ruthless people who control what the American public sees— all are ex-ploited and dissected with devastating comic precision under Chayefsky's glistening, hard-edged scalpel.

A Review

people who control what the American public sees—all are ex-ploited and dissected with devastating comic precision under Chayefsky's glistening, hard-edged scalpel.

"Network" is an amalgamation of all the worst intentions of the industry, a chilling view inside television. There is no place in the film for humor, no place for entertainment, no place for the viewer to take a rest.

Chayefsky and Dean are two firing officers of the movement. The film is a bitter, alarming statement, a scathing attack on the network television system. There is no place in the film for humor, no place for entertainment, no place for the viewer to take a rest.

Chayefsky's apparent contention that television is turning us into unfeeling, bland-faced puppets of the corporate establishment is a fine point in the film, but last it has turned, and what all, one that is belabored in the film to the point of exhaustion.

Director Sidney Lumet works wonders with Chayefsky's screenplay, which is a dizzying combination of the brilliant, the supemonic, the bisting and the smoothest execution. Lumet has succeeded in molding his unwieldy material into a cohesive, integrated whole. His incisive, razor-sharp direction, which gets under every scene of every film, punctuates what is good in the screenplay and neatly smoothens over the rough spots.

Blind Howard is back, the movie up into a frenzy whenever he appears. As Chayefsky likens, Diana is mostly a one-dimensional villainous, but her quiet, measured performance gives the film a quiet, measured performance that serves as a fine vehicle for a fine vehicle.

Free program to aid spring cleaning, fixing

By Sue Grewe
Daily Egyptian Staff Writer

Spring cleaning and fixing time is here and Carbondale's Housing and Money Management Program can help.

The program won't do the work, but it does demonstrate how to make small repairs, answers questions about home improvement problems, helps estimate the cost of materials for repairs and lends small tools needed to perform the job, Mary Littwin, program coordinator, said Monday.

The program tries to help those with small jobs that can satisfactorily be performed by the resident. Tools and instructions are available to aid in home repairs and improvements.

There is no charge for using the department's services which are available to Carbondale home owners and renters.

Included in repair demonstrations are repairs to roofs, plumbing systems, electrical systems, walls, floors, doors and ceilings.

"It really is all free, and we are Contraceptives available at clinic

The monthly night birth control clinic will be from 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesday at the Health Service. The clinic is only for women wishing to obtain contraceptive devices from Dr. Knoup, medical director. Those who have other contraceptive requests or personal and psychological problems should contact the Health Service during regular hours.

Appointments are not necessary for the clinic which can handle about 80 students at each session.

The clinic will include a breast and pelvic examination, a routine vaginal infection check and a pap smear. There is a $2 charge for the pap smear and a small charge for the contraceptives.

Students attending should have their fee statements with them. just waiting to help out," Littwin said. "We are at a point where we can take on more people."

John Mills, a professional housing maintenance adviser, is on the programs staff and will help with any problems.

Mills will assist in choosing materials for a particular job, and will estimate reasonable labor costs for jobs which are beyond the average person's capabilities. Information is also available on using such tools as hand saws, hammers, wrenches, drill sets, plumbing equipment, Sanders and slap guns which the program loans out.

If it's time for a new coat of paint, ladders, ladder jacks, a painting plane, paintbrushes, roller and pan, and scrapers are also available on a loan basis. Those interested in using the painting equipment should contact Littwin at 565-5382 and have their name put on a waiting list.

The housing maintenance program began last July. Use of the program's facilities fell off during the winter months but more participation is expected with the warming weather Littwin said.
Another problem horsemen face is the seasonal demand for the work. If riding horses are a show's main draw, winter brings a big slowdown in customers. Carr said, "The trouble is that a horsemen can't draw unemployment in the off months."

"Horsemen rely on advertising to get business more than advertising in the newspaper," explained Voigt, who has been shoeing for eight years. P.J. Shoopman, an 18-year-old freshman at SIU, got her contacts for shoeing from racing Standardbred horses with her grandfather, Shoopman, a 5-foot-6 inch woman, graduated from Moberly Horse Shoeing School in Macomb, Ill., at the top of her class. The other girl in the school and I actually had an advantage over the men, because we had more patience and were pickier about getting the shoe on right," Shoopman said. However, horseshoeing is not recommended by any of the blacksmiths as a lifetime career. It is a young person's profession.

David Carver, owner of Macomb's Dressel and Theriault, an 18-year-old, said the oldest he's known a mule tailor to be is 67. "I've been knocked down, stomped on, burned and had nails driven into me," Carr manager and shoer for SIU's Horse Center, said. Carr was concentrating on the business end of one of his customers. "I've been knocked down, stomped on, burned and had nails driven into me," Ron Carr, manager and shoer of SIU's Horse Center, said. Carr was concentrating on the business end of one of his customers. (Staff photo by Marc Galessin)

A growing number of schools teach horseshoeing, but each horseshoer must serve as an apprentice to complete his training. Horseshoeing, which is only unionized at racetracks, operates mainly on informal contacts. An aspiring horseshoer should get to know the horsemen in his area and meet a seasoned blacksmith who will take him on as an apprentice. The horseshoer should get to know the horsemen in his area and meet a seasoned blacksmith who will take him on as an apprentice. The horseshoer should get to know the horsemen in his area and meet a seasoned blacksmith who will take him on as an apprentice.

A survey by the Shoeing Company lists any injuries involving horses as the third most dangerous. The pay for this exciting profession can go as high as $30,000 a year for race track jockeys. For those who travel around showing pleasure horses, earnings are likely to be half that. Such supplies as tools and metal and the biggest profit eater, gasoline, bring the figure down further to about $10,000 a year. A shoer will often spend more time on the road going to customers than shoeing. Carr said, "Horseshoeing is something not just anybody can do." said Mitch Rawlings, a sophomore in construction technology, who is one of the many who aspire to be horseshoers.
Students send self-help bill to Assembly; Carbondale landlord inquest protested

By Paulette Chappell

Editor's Note: This is the record of a two-part story on county housing codes.

When temperatures in Carbondale last January, Steve Bloom was eating dinner at Chuck's Mobile Ranch, 799 East College, who experienced throne pipes and broken hot water. Because rate savings was backing up his Hungary and toilet, Bloom complained to his landlord. The landlord proceeded to "fix the problem by removing the tenant's drainage pipe, allowing the sewerage to flow freely under the tenant.

Despite Bloom's continued protests, the landlord failed to replace the drainage pipe. When he finally did fix the landlord's proposals, it was only under threat from Carbondale Code Enforcement, and only after Bloom had lived with the problem for nearly two months. The problem Bloom experienced in Bloom's example, files at the Student Tenant Union are full of cases involving SU students at which the landlord either moved too slowly, repaired a problem or refused to do anything at all.

A class of students at SU and their landlord over the university law student Tim Eaton, believe that Bloom's case is weighty too heavily in favor of landlords, and they have set up a "Self-Help Tenant Bill at Springfield in hope that the Illinois General Assembly will agree.

The bill, researched and written by a faculty in a Family Economics and Management workshop entitled Legal Aspects of Landlord-Tenant Compensation, would allow tenants to deduct rent from their rent, for all plugging and plumbing problems. Beg your pardon

An article in Tuesday's Daily Egyptian reported that a judgment had been made in a case out of Small Claims Court, because Bloom had no housing code. Sam Dunning, coordinator for legal research for the Student Tenant Union, said Tuesday the complaint was dismissed. Dunning also said the judge had cited the lack of a housing code.

The following column was written by Robert Nieso, professor of history and University Government, American Federal of Teachers and originally appeared in The American Teacher: "FACULTY NIESO: NO BARGAINING -- SPEAKING UNFORUNKLY: "One of the things that academic and personnel policies aren't working well is the growth of unionism. I think academic and personnel administrators should be welcoming this and not opposing it, which is a pathological threat to the academy."

However, that is not the president of the faculty union (APT Local 1985) at SAU. He is the president of the union and the annual meeting of the faculty is not something that one would expect to hear good words about faculty unions or collective bargaining. Traditionally, it is where the "Old Boys' Club" of college presidents share last year's horror stories and the present. The present moment Hotel in New Orleans was nearly inundated with executive fears as they complained and carp about campus life and me one more no-money, affirmative action. The Equal Pay Act, the sex bias, the hiring, the punishment, etc., etc., etc. -- you name it and there was a buckled shield for it. Doon and gloom was everywhere. The session "Designing New Personnel Policies," as Professor Walker participated in was not an exception. Every speaker and audience all--except the occasional realist--were off, away with tenure through a variety of schemes including rolling contracts, renewable contracts, no contracts and to " mortalities and make the permanent person.

After hearing what Walker had to say to the more than 500 assembled presidential potentials, one could only admire the man's courage for even going through with the matter at the matter.

First, he acknowledged that throughout our society there is a movement towards more grass-roots in decision-making. This is because the movement has a legitimacy based in the right of citizens to participate in decisions affecting their destinies. This means that "professional judgment should be left to professionals" and that the president's decision by common consent are the least qualified to make promotion and tenure decisions."

Walker believes that the university is a pluralistic democracy. Because of this, the collective bargaining agreement must be read as a realistic device, but elevates it to the status of a constitution--a living document. A constitution and a Bill of Rights between the faculty and administration. As such, it is "designed to solve problems of responsible people in a cooperative and procedural fashion." Additionally, Walker finds that the "protest has been met with support and understanding by our society, but it is "acceptable to all-campus authorities who demand comprehensive explanations and accounting from the universities."

What about collegiality? The Boston Globe reports (Dec. 12, 1976) that SAU "grows with harmony ... and that there is a degree of cooperation and goodwill in day-to-day working relationships that would surprise those who argue that faculty unions stifle the growth of collegiality on college campuses."

Union president, Professor Theodore J. Kallikow, confirms this, stating, "Our president understands the role of collegiality." Kallikow says that the main benefits of the union and the contract has been to establish uniform and open procedures for promotion and tenure procedures, and to recently modified policies and procedures to allow faculty members to challenge the process at any point by filing a grievance.

There is a strong emphasis on quality by all parties at SAU. Walker states, "We don't make a lot of garbage class, and the fewer people in a class later. The emphasis is on very careful hiring." Needless to say, at SAU, the faculty is fully involved in the hiring process. It is a good sign to hear a rational and optimistic voice from within the halls of management. Let's hope that President Walker's colleagues in the AFT will also take heed to what we had to say. President Donald E. Walker, of Southeastern Mass. University (SAU), addressing the November 27th meeting of the American Council on Education (ACE).

SGAC FILM  "My Name is Nobody" April 15, 7 p.m., Student Center Auditorium, admission 50 cents Free School-Self Defense柔 to 1:30 p.m., Arena Northeast Concourse Free School-Creative Writing, 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m., Student Center Language Room Free School-Caricature and Sketching, 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m., Student Center Seminar Room "Family affair" weekend set Students living in the East Campus residence halls will have the opportunity to begin their spring break with a weekend set of planned recreational activities sponsored by SIU Housing and Residential Life.

Michael Scully, assistant director of housing for operational support, said the housing programming office has sent out 500 letters inviting brothers and sisters of East Campus residents to come to SIU during the weekend of April 15-17.

Scully said the weekend activities will begin with a talent show at 8 p.m., April 15 in the Grinnell Hall Cafeteria. The show will feature entries from all east campus residence halls.

The talent show will be followed by a full-length movie which will begin at midnight. Campus tours will be offered to visiting brothers and sisters during the morning and afternoon of April 16. The day's activities will conclude with a cookout, followed by a dance at 8 p.m. in the Treeblood Hall Cafeteria.

The weekend activities will conclude with a series of athletic events on April 17.

Scully said the purpose of the East Campus brother-sister weekend is to allow east campus residents to visit with brothers and sisters whom they might not see very often on campus visits.

Scully said this is the first time the housing programming office has sponsored a brother-sister weekend.

"If this effort attracts enough interest from eligible participants we will offer the program to residence halls on both sides of campus in the years to come," Scully said.

U.N. authority to discuss rights

Human rights and national sovereignty will be the topic of a lecture by William R. Frye, an authority on the United Nations (U.N.) and world affairs. Frye will speak at 8 p.m. Thursday in campus Library Auditorium. He writes two columns about the U.N. and world affairs which are carried in about 80 U.S. and foreign newspapers.

Frye was chief of the U.N. News Bureau of the Christian Science Monitor for 12 years, and was awarded the citation for world affairs reporting by the Overseas Press Club of America. In 1982 he was named co-winner of an award for distinguished UN coverage by Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalism organization.

He is author of "A United Nations Peace Force," and "In Whitest Africa." Frye provides behind the scenes look of the U.N. for his listeners and a personal perspective on world events.

The lecture is sponsored by the U.N. Association Chapter of Southern Illinois, the Graduate Student Council and the Office of the Vice-President for Student Affairs.
Outstanding law teacher named

By Lynn Waller

Donald W. Garner, who was recently denied promotion and then later promoted by the administration, has been named the "Outstanding Teacher of the Year" by Law School Dean Hiram Lear.

Garner, an assistant professor of law who has been recommended for promotion at least twice by Dean Lear, Frank Horton, vice president for law school affairs, and a faculty member, received Garner promotion and did not act on the recommendation for early tenure. The decision has been appealed.

An appeals committee reviewing Garner's promotion and other decisions of three other law faculty members is expected to make a recommendation to President Warren Brandt in a few days.

Referring to the denial of promotion by Horton, Garner said the Law school faculty knows better than anyone else who is a good teacher and that Horton's decision simply overruled the judgment of the Law School.

According to American Bar Association standards and University guidelines for tenure and promotion, the SIU administration has a role in the decision only insofar as it ensures that the Law School follows procedures for tenure and promotion recommendations. Garner said.

Lear said it was ironic that the two-week decision made by Garner's promotion and tenure also influenced his decision to name Garner the "Outstanding Teacher of the Year".

UFO lecturer to be in area

Stanley T. Friedman, nuclear physicist and veteran of U.S. space programs, will present a lecture and slide show titled "Faster Than Saucers Are Real" at 8 p.m. Wednesday at the Union Coliseum.

Friedman's lecture, sponsored by John Lesar, dean of the law school, is free and open to the public.

"The lecture is an experiment and investigation," said Friedman. "I am convinced the evidence is overwhelming that the planet is being visited by extraterrestrial spacecrafts."

Friedman completed his masters degree in nuclear physics at the University of Chicago 14 years ago. Since that time he has worked in the development of advanced nuclear weapons and space systems for various government-related industries.

Among the projects he has devoted time to is the Pioneer spacecraft which is currently exploring the solar system beyond the planet Jupiter.

At the present time, Friedman is the only known space scientist in the United States studying UFO's fulltime. He is convinced that the U.S. government is withholding facts and evidence to prove that beings from other planets have visited Earth.

Having lectured at more than 200 colleges campuses in 47 states, Friedman believes the time has come for the public to accept the reality of flying saucers. He has appeared on hundreds of radio and TV shows including The Tonight Show, David Shanks, and an NBC special in 1974.

The lecture will last one hour, with a question and answer session following. Friedman's papers and a free booklet will be available.
City Council adopts change in business zoning ordinance

By Sue Greene
DAILY EGYPTIAN STAFF WRITER

An amendment to the Carbondale area business zoning ordinance was approved by the City Council Monday night, clearing the way for establishment of a new business district.

The central business district, as defined by the ordinance, is located at the intersection of South Main Street and the First Street extension. The ordinance states that businesses within the designated area must be at least 100 feet wide by 100 feet deep to avoid strip development, shallow lot development along the major streets, and BDR areas.

City councilman Jack Harlan, owner of the Carbondale Evening Intelligencer, said the ordinance was needed to encourage redevelopment in the central business district.

The ordinance allows for establishment of a new business area, called the BDR district, by the County Mayor for a period of three years. The BDR district is expected to accommodate 60 percent of the city's business development.

The ordinance states that the BDR district must be at least three blocks long. Lots in the district are required to be at least 100 feet wide by 100 feet deep to avoid strip development, shallow lot development along the major streets, and BDR areas.

The County Mayor will be able to declare the BDR district by a resolution. The ordinance also states that the BDR district must be at least 100 feet wide by 100 feet deep to avoid strip development, shallow lot development along the major streets, and BDR areas.

Electric car zips along for just pennies a day

By Rita Jo Elliott
Student Writer

What weights 1,400 pounds, has four wheels, has room for two people and looks like it belongs in a Star Trek show?

Give up? It is Philip Koch's electric car.

Koch, who is a broadcasting engineer for WSIU, owns the small vehicle which is powered by eight six-volt batteries and a three- and one-half horsepower d.c. series wound motor.

Koch, who lives at 3208 Meadow Lane, has had his car for about six months. Koch decided to buy the electric car because of two factors:

"One last horrendous bill I had on my reciprocating engine—the gas burning type. Secondly, I was giving serious thought for the last five or 10 years—I believe the electric car is the most efficient nonpolluting and the least expensive," Koch said.

Koch explained that the reciprocating engine has less than 70 per cent efficiency. However, the efficiency is very high on an electric car and when you add to that a gasoline engine. Much of the energy goes to waste.

Although Koch's electric car may look like something that belongs in the Star Trek series, electric vehicles have been used for many years:

"Electric cars have been used for years and years and years in industry—electric carts inside factories and fork trucks. I have worked in that environment and they run those night and day," Koch said.

He did give serious thought to port designing and constructing my own. To produce a prototype is demanding and so time consuming. You run into a lot of little problems that have to be solved," Koch commented.

"I'm in electronics, so I appreciate good engineering. I appreciate that which is well designed and that which is functional," Koch said.

Koch likes his car for several reasons. "It starts immediately. You never have a starting problem. Just turn on the battery, so to speak, and go," Koch said.

"I like it because it is inexpensive to operate, approximately two cents a mile. I like it because it's agile. It will exceed the speed limit here in town," Koch said. "The maximum speed is about 35 miles per hour.

And finally I like it because it does the job—it does it good," Koch said.

However, there are some drawbacks to the car. "Of course, there is a trade-off in everything in life. It's not enough. It rides more like a sports car," Koch explained.

"It's made for the city, by definition. It is called a Citirac. It is not large enough to take my family out, but that's not its purpose," Koch said.

On a typical day Koch uses the electric car to go to the bank, go to the City Hall, to go to a class, to go to work and to go home. This is about six to eight miles a day. It takes about four hours to recharge the batteries after a day's use.

To recharge the batteries, the battery charger which comes with the car is plugged into a regular electrical outlet. "At the end of the day, I merely plug it into the electrical cord. While I'm sleeping, it does its thing," Koch said. The maximum charge is 12 hours. This allows 40 to 50 miles of travel.

In the amount of electricity used goes up, the cost per kilowatt hour goes down. Koch said "So we are operating on the cheaper part of the curve when I plug mine in at home."

Koch has not had many problems with the electric car. Since the electric car has few parts in comparison to a gasoline-powered car, the probability of breakdown is higher for the gasoline car, Koch said.

"I drove into a filling station a couple of weeks ago and do you know what I acquired?" Koch asked.

"When it was 14 degrees below zero, I was rolling down the streets henching at the ones with their hoods up," Koch said. "The electrical devices are not necessarily sensitive to temperature. The batteries are not as at all operate as well but do operate."

The questions that people ask Koch most frequently are how fast will it go and how far will it go. One female asked long it took to recharge the batteries. Koch less about that it took about three or four hours to charge.

"I don't think I can afford that much time," she said. Then he explained that it could be charged overnight.

The only car dealership is in Carbondale that sells electric cars is Jim Pearl Inc. In 1975, they removed five or six cars, said Bill Schlichting, a salesman for Jim Pearl Inc.

"This was at a time when we had the energy crisis. On the gas station lines were backed up with cars. There was actually a big panic—an energy scare. That's actually what killed it or less brought it on because the small car market really went up. So we assumed that since the small car market went up, maybe the electric car would go in this area since it is more or less a metropolitan area" Schlichting said.

But the market wasn't there. Schlichting explained. They did not sell, probably because the energy crisis changed. "One the original cars ordered in 1975 is still on the lot."

"The car was really put together very fast and it was not really ready for the market that was there. There are a lot of drawbacks in the car and there are a lot of good features," Schlichting said.

"It has reverted back into more or less of an engineering and planning stage for future presentation on the market."

Soccer Club wins one, ties one

By Chris Fuller
Student Writer
The Saluki Soccer Club added a win and a tie to its record, defeating the University of Illinois 1-0 Saturday and playing Southwestern Missouri to a 1-1 stand-off Sunday.

Illinois scored first, but by the end of the first half forward Ahmed Alaa had put SIU ahead 2-1.

Senphon Xepomahontas scored with an assist from wing Kayvon Hay, headed one past the Illinois goal early in the second period. Alaa added SIU's fourth and final goal with a penalty shot.

In Sunday play against SEMO, Alaa was there again, accounting for SIU's lone goal. Steve Quinn scored for SEMO.

Manager Frank Lucchese decided to start Bungie Wilk, Manny's son, at second instead of Len Randle. Randle wasn't too happy, and after Lucchese called him "punky" Randle wouldn't hit the ball.

The Rangers picked up Bert Cam, and will put him at third, moving Harrar to third, giving them an adequate infield. The outfield is mediocre, with good speed and Ken Henderson. Jeff Burroughs is gone to Atlanta, and they'll miss his stick.

Semi has to keep Texas respect. Bert Blyleven is too good to always have such a bad wound record. Doyle Alexander (from the Yanks) is a very good, and Gaylord Perry is still tough. Roger Mett and Paul Luhld will also help.

CHICAGO WHITE SOX
The White Sox probably won't finish last this season. The expansion Seattle team will still fight them to the end, you can be sure.

The Sox are going nowhere fast, and that's bad for Bill Veeck, who wants to win so much and try to hard. They have several agents that won't exactly win a pennant in Tim Nordbrook, Steve Sture, Eric, Bob, Tim, and Bob.

Stillman

The best pitcher on the squad will be Rickie Zat, but Veeck gave away too much in Rich Gasage and Terry Forster to get him. Jorge Orta will be able to move back to short without a slide in the batter's box.

Picking? Their best hope lies with Willie Wood coming back off a knee injury. And that speaks for itself.

SEATTLE MARINERS
You know the seafood teams. They're destined to finish last, but they still have to play and plan for the future and try to win fans.

Seattle picked up a lot of good, young players and won't take as long to get off the ground as the old Mets. For all their like Glenn Abbott, Pete Bebber, Dave Egg, Nick Pote and Tommy Sego will get by.

The Mariners have a few good names of there, but Stan, Steve Braun, Juan Bernardo and Skip Jutte, and will just have to bear with it. They may have their lot of giveaways for the fans, like owner Danny Kaye signing autographs.

4-1 Rugby Club beats Eastern

SIU's Rugby Club npped their spring season record to 4-1 by demolishing Eastern Illinois 42-0 Sunday.

Wing forward Scott McClan scored first for the Salukis on a pass interception. Roger Tebehe then scored from 46 yards out and Jim Ingalls PAT was good to give the Salukis a 10-0 lead. Outside center Mike Daily added two more tries to give the Salukis a 30-0 halftime margin.

SIU continued domination in all phases of the game in the second half. Scott McClan again opened the scoring in the half via another pass interception. Eastern's only tally of the game resulted from recovering a Saluki fumble in SIU's own end zone. Prop John Canfield scored once and Mike Daily added two more tries to conclude the scoring.

The SIU-B team was edged by the Panthers 8-4, on a try with only 30 seconds remaining. Fullback Randy Allin had just put the Salukis into the lead on a 3-yard field goal.

Two women gymnasts named All-America

By Rick Korch
Daily Egyptian Sports Writer

Although the SIU women's gymnastics team couldn't win the AIAW national championship last weekend, it's always a certainty that a couple of members of the team will be named All-America and the same holds true this year.

Barbara Poquette and Cindy Mora both received their honors from "The Gymnast," the international gymnastics magazine. The honors are awarded to any gymnast who scores 9.0 or better on an event.

Meanwhile, Moran, who was competing on two sprained ankles, had to work over last event uneven bars before she could hit the 9.0 barrier to make the All-American team.

Second gymnast almost realized that she had made All-America until a little after her routine ended.

"I didn't think about it after I got the score," Moran said. "It wasn't until about five minutes later when they were telling Linda that she made it. Then I realized that I must not have done it, too. It was a delayed reaction."

But she took Nevada a little while longer,

"It didn't dawn on me that I made it until we got to the van for the ride home," Nelson said. "Then it occurred to me that I had scored 9.0.

Both women were fairly happy with their performances in the meet, although each had a disappointment.

Coach Herb Vogel decided not to let Moran compete in vaulting because of her sprained ankles, thus shutting her out of competing in the all-around competition.

The Latmitos dominated play throughout the contest with aggressive play and an advantage of a defensive lapse to take a 1-0 lead at just 1:02 on the first two goals by Ricardo Caballero.

Second-half play was all Latmitos as they moved to a 3-0 lead when Peter Hunsuggage scored on a direct kick.

Tony Bowie closed out the scoring when he scored on his own rebound.

"We played great. I was expecting a very tough game," Bowie said. "I didn't think we'd beat them 4-0." Bowie said.

The Latmitos advanced to the championship game with a 4-3 overtime win over Mazdak. Caballero connected for three goals including the winner in overtime. Kourosh Daneshfar scored all three Mazdal goals in a losing effort.

International Team A won its semifinal game against International Team B, 7-2. International A led 3-1 at halftime and were never headed. Ahmed Abbass scored three goals and Ahmed Abbass scored two goals and was named All-American.

Ten of the top 12

This is the third of a four-part story analyzing the upcoming major league baseball season. The story will conclude in Thursday's issue with a look at the AL East and predictions for the league.

The American League West might be the toughest of all to pick. Kansas City and California should be so far ahead they'll be able to root for the other teams to finish. Texas is coming on, Minnesota gets stronger every year and Oakland can't be as bad as everyone says they'll be. Chicago and Seattle will be worse than everyone says.

In order of last season's finish:

KANSAS CITY ROYALS: The Royals can hit a ton. George Brett and Hal McRae went one-two in the batting race last season, but McRae can't catch up with Brett can't throw. Amos Otis, who was injured in last season's AL playoffs, can do it all and is probably the best player on the club. First baseman John Mayberry had an off year, but still had 96 RBI's.

Defensively, Fred Patek and Frank White, with help from Cookie Rojas make the infield solid up the middle. But manager Whitey Herzog is counting heavily on Dante Bichette to package some batting points behind the man. At Cowan to come through in the outfield and another strong season from Tom Pochette.

Pitching could be a problem for the Royals. Last season, the staff may have had stock in Blue Cross. so many were injured. Dennis Leonard is one of the best young pitchers in the game and Doug Bird, who had a fantastic first last year, is capable of 20 wins. Herzog is putting a lot of hope into Andy Hawkins, Jim Calhoun, Larry Gura, Paul Spiltorff and Marty Pattin. That's sort of like throwing up this year from the midcourt line in basketball with your eyes closed.

OAKLAND ATHLETICS: They're all gone except Billy North and Vida Blue. That leaves a lot of work to do. Bat-fought and kicked and barbered its way to three straight world championships by history. But don't count the A's out a little after a Blue and fellow pitcher Mike Torrez give them two stopovers, which is an awfully lot of work to do. The A's have a lot of work to do. Bat-fought and kicked and barbered and try to start three or four rookies. But Charlie Finley has a way of coming up with talent, and it is too much of a sneaky fan for even think of counting them out too early.

MINNESOTA TWINS: These guys are underrated. They are a lot tougher than they're given credit for, and could make the race very interesting. Rod Carew, a magician with the stick, is still the best hitter in the game. Butch Wynegar, at 21, will be a good one behind the plate for a long time.

Larry Hise, Lynwood Bostock and Dan Ford make up a respectable outfield with good plate power. The infield is not bad, with Ross Smalley at short, Mike Cubbage at short, and Bobby Randall at second. Like every other team in the division, the Twins could pitch pennies better than baseballs. Top reliever Tom Egan was lost in the free agent draft, and Bill Singer went in the expansion draft. A lot of riding on guys like Pete Redfern, Jim Hughes, Dave Goltz, and Vic Alcorn.

Luckily, the Twins hit good. CALIFORNIA ANGELS: Gene Autry rides again. With a multi-million dollar horse, you can talk all you want about the Yankees buying a pennant, but the Angels have put their foot into the barnyard. And they might have purchased all the right ingredients.

Starting with Nolan Ryan (a man who wouldn't want to start with him?) Frank Tanana, Bobby Bonds, and Dave Chalk you add one Bobby Grich at second, plus a Joe Rudi and Don Baylor in the outfield and "poof", you have a contender.

Jerry Remy and Tony Solari toughen up the infield and it will be hard to beat against the Angels. The only sore spot for California is behind the plate. It has a lot of nothing. A lack of pitching depth might hurt too. It might take a whole for the Angels to get rolling, because Grich is injured and they've all never played together, but watch out come September.

TOM ROYERS: The Rangers have three world league leaders last year. Mike Hargrove at first, Toby Harrah at short and Roy Howell at third all led the league in errors at their positions. And they also lead this year in managers sent to the hospital by irate fans.

AL West baseball race should be a two-horse race

Country's baseball experts have predicted a two-horse race for the AL West crown.

The Angels are currently in first place, but the Rangers are close behind.

It's going to be a tight race, and any team that wants to win the division is going to have to be at their best every single game.

The Angels have a strong pitching rotation, led by Roger Clemens and Dave Stieb.

The Rangers have a potent offense, with Home Run Derby champion Frank Thomas leading the way.

Both teams have solid defenses, with the Angels' defense being led by shortstop Charlie Finley and the Rangers' defense being led by center fielder Moises Alou.

It's going to be an exciting season, and fans of both teams are excited to see how it unfolds.
