Council candidates face off

By Sanjay Seth
City Writer

Proposals for change, for diversity, for economic development and even for things to remain the same were expressed at a second City Council candidates forum Monday.

About 80 people attended the forum at the SIUC Student Center Auditorium.

Maggie Flanagan said she wants to provide creative input in a direct manner as a councilwoman.

Flanagan said she wants to propose a surcharge on products that have oil-based plastic as its main component, such as many beverage containers.

These plastic products are taking up too much space in landfills, she said.

Flanagan said the community would send a message to the producers of these products.

Candidate Mike Henry, on the other hand, said it was not necessary to make drastic changes every time one woke up with a new vision.

Henry said his interests were more in pursuing a constant course for the city.

He said he wants to see clean, safe and diverse youth centers and scholarships for disadvantaged youth.

Incumbent Keith Tuxhorn reiterated his no-nonsense approach to city government, saying he had no desire in being complacent, an "old way, typical of a town's big money and old boys."

Incumbent John Yow said he always has strived for improvement of services and facilities of the elderly and disabled individuals—a matter he said is close to his heart.

The issue of mandatory licensing of rental property in Carbondale had a variety of remarks from the candidates.

Both incumbents agreed to this proposal and had strong sentiments about the issue.

Yow said the mandatory licensing was "a must" and he would support it in the council.

Tuxhorn said he was "100 percent behind the proposal" and a high standard of housing would give an important and different look for investors and prospective SIUC students.

Henry would not take a stand on the issue, saying it was only at its discussion stage and he needed more input on the matter.

Flanagan, who had stood by the proposal 100 percent at the primary elections on Feb. 22, said after talking to landlords who run "impeccable apartments" property in Carbondale, several questions had arisen for her.

"I have to scrutinize what the city codes are all about before I commit to a stand," Flanagan said.

The city election will be on April 20.

CTC program gets reprieve

By Tracy Moss
Administration Writer

Construction industry executives along with SIUC alumni and students rallied successfully against a proposal to eliminate the construction technology department in the College of Technical Careers.

Mark Harrison, executive vice president of the Home Builders Association of Illinois, testified before a subcommittee of the Faculty Senate that elimination of the construction technology program would be devastating.

"From our perspective at HBAI, we think that it is two steps backwards if you cancel these programs," Harrison said. "Not only do we think it should be kept in tact, but we think it should be expanded."

The subcommittee was voting on whether to recommend the elimination of the construction technology program. The committee decided to support keeping the program.

Carl Bronson, coordinator of the construction program, said there is not another university program in Illinois like the SIUC program. He said the No. 1 goal of the program is to produce construction managers.

"It is not a hammer and nail program," he said.

Elaine Vitello, dean of CTC, said the construction program was designated for elimination for financial and academic reasons in an effort to respond to the University's request that each college eliminate some programs and enhance others to reduce the WASHINGTON — Pronouncing itself on the cutting edge of changes called for by the White House, the U.S. Department of Energy unveiled a $19.6 billion budget Monday that would eliminate thousands of nuclear weapons production jobs and shift priorities toward environmental cleanup and the development of more efficient energy sources.

Miles Hall break-in reported

By Jeremy Finley
Special Assignment Writer

An estimated $14,475 in office equipment was stolen this weekend from the disbursements office, SIUC police said.

Entry was forced at the office in Miles Hall sometime between 5:30 p.m. Friday and 6:50 a.m. Monday.

The incident was reported at 7:04 a.m. Monday, and the investigation is continuing, police said.

Lois Stanton, an office worker in the disbursements office, said three computers, four telephones, three typewriters, a fax machine, microwaves and keyboards were stolen.

Stanton said they called the police Monday morning after she found a message holder in the office broken on the floor.

"I got as far as the computers, and I didn't go any further after seeing the door open," she said. "And not all the computers were taken, either."

Stanton, who has been with the office for five years, said she cannot remember a break into the office in the past.

Illinois breaks record for unpaid bills

By Jeremy Finley
Politics Writer

Illinois has broke its own record for the second time in two weeks for unpaid bills to state agencies, including universities, but SIUC officials say the delay should not affect student grants.

Rick Davis, spokesman for the state comptroller, said Illinois again broke the record Friday when it closed out at $885.2 million. The state also had a record $858.9 million in unpaid bills in March.

Davis said the last time Illinois was paying its bills regularly was in 1990.

"Ever since 1991, it just seems to be getting worse," he said.

Davis said this lack of funds will mean the agencies that do business with Illinois will not be paid this month, including $86.7 million in college grants and $29.6 million to the Illinois Board of Higher Education.

The student assistant grants are issued to students who qualify for financial aid across the state, but smaller and private schools will be the ones hit hardest by the delay in funds, he said.

Davis said students with grants that go to schools such as SIUC should not worry about their financial aid because the larger schools have credit to fund these grants.

Pamela Britton, director of the financial aid department, confirmed Davis's statement.

"(The financial aid department) puts the credit in for students before we get paid," she said. "Then they pay us when they get the money, but we already credit the student."

Britton said the school has a third party account to pay for this credit and that SIUC has no plans to raise student fees to pay for the grants.

"Some of the smaller and private schools are dependent on the grants, so they have had to ask students to pay the bills and then pay the students back," she said. "We won't do that here."

Lawrence A. Juhlin, vice president for student affairs, said the school will not increase fees to pay for the delayed funds.

Juhlin said the hurt the University will feel is indirect, affecting interest earning mainly.

Time (out) not on Wolverines' side

The Washington Post

It has taken 32 seasons, 23 trips to the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament and nine marches to the Final Four, but North Carolina Coach Dean Smith finally has his second national championship.

It came in the form of the Tar Heels' 77-71 victory over Michigan in the NCAA tournament national final Monday night at the Louisiana Superdome, which soon may be nicknamed the Louisiana Deardome.

It is in this building that Smith has won his national championships—the other in 1982 against Georgetown.

Michigan (31-5) and its Fab Five of center Juwan Howard, forwards Chris Webber and Ray Jackson and guards Jalen Rose and Jimmy King have been to the national finals in those players' freshman and sophomore years. They will have to try again.

Michigan trailed by 72-67 with a minute to play, but scored a basket, forced a quick turnover and scored again to move within 72-71 with 35 seconds left. The Wolverines fouled Tar Heels forward Pat Sullivan with 20 seconds left and he made only the first of a one-and-one.

Michigan got the rebound, Webber raced downcourt and called a timeout with 11 seconds left. But the Wolverines were out of timeouts—a violation that resulted in a technical foul call.

"In the heat of the moment, strange things happen," Michigan Coach Steve Fisher said. "Chris said he heard someone hollering and calling for a timeout. It's an awful way to end the season."

Asked about getting his second championship on a bizarre play, Smith said, "I don't want to say that was another fluke."

North Carolina guard Donald Williams, the game's most valuable player, made the two free throws for 75-71, the Tar Heels inbounded the ball and Williams added two more free throws after being fouled with eight seconds left.

Links squad finishes 11th at invitational

The SIUC women's golf team finished 11th out of 14 teams at the Indiana Invitational last weekend in Bloomington, Ind.

The Salukis ended the two-round meet with a score of 344-349-693.

Ohio State captured the overall team title with a 313-322-635 effort.

The top player for the Salukis was Tracey Pace.

Pace fired a 81-80-161 to finish in a three-way tie for 10th overall individually.

Ohio State also produced the individual champion. Buckeye Tami Dougan fired a 75-77-152 to claim the title.

Three other SIUC athletes finished in a five-way tie for 54th place.

Kristen Oglesby, Laura Stefanich and Carrie Hall each shot a 178.

SIUC's Lieschen Eller ended in a five-way tie for 59th with a 90-89-179.

The Salukis will compete in the Southern Intercollegiate April 16-18 in Athens, Ga.

Softball team hauls out big bats to face SEMO

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

It might ease the Indians of Southeast Missouri State to know that they are on their home territory when the SIUC softball team pulls out its offensive guns today in Cape Girardeau, Mo.

The Salukis are 15-5 going into today's game and are doubling their opponents totals in RBIs (67), doubles (16), triples (17), home runs (5) and stolen bases (30).

Saluki head coach Kay Brechtelsbauer said it all comes down to the swing of the bat.

"We have worked a lot harder on our batting stroke and we are starting to get the big hits when we need them," she said. "We also have to account that our big numbers have come in some blowout games, while we have really worked hard to earn our last four wins."

SIUC is 7-1 in its last eight games, with its only loss, against Creighton, being decided by one run.

Senior Karrie Irvin, who has already been named Missouri Valley Conference player of the week once this season, leads the Salukis with a batting average of .450. Freshman Christine Knotts follows the slugger, averaging .375 along with senior Colleen Holloway at .367.

SEMO was at the Saluki Invitational earlier in the season, and posted a 1-2 record, with losses to Northern Iowa and Ball State. Bad weather kept SEMO and SIUC from playing their first season match-up.

Brechtelsbauer said SEMO is a good hitting team that SIUC will have to watch out for.

"I understand that SEMO is on a nine-game winning streak, and have come into their own as a strong Division I program," she said. "I don't know if their pitching is that strong, but it has kept them in ballgames, and they were also able to beat us in the fall season."

SEMO pitcher Lori Neely heads the Indians' pitching staff with a 2.26 ERA. She is backed by Shelly Trieb batting .389 with seven doubles and Robyn Horace batting .354 with five doubles and a triple.

The teams will face off in a doubleheader with the first pitch tossed at 3:30 p.m.

SIUC hurler Mick MVC pitcher of week

By Karyn Viverito
Sports Writer

Not only is senior pitcher Angie Mick one of the leaders on the SIUC softball team, but her performance on the field is also a step above the rest in the Missouri Valley Conference.

After going 4-0 with an 0.72 earned run average last week, Mick was chosen as MVC pitcher of the week.

She hurled four-hit shutouts against Evansville and Creighton, fanning six batters in each game. Mick also had SIUC-Edwardsville getting nothing but air, striking out eight players in the game.

Mick's total stats for the week include 29 innings pitched, 21 hits, five runs, three errors, six walks and 23 strikeouts.

Saluki pitching coach Gary Buckles said Mick has been doing a great job of keeping the ball away from the middle of the plate.

"Angie has been placing the ball in good locations and a lot of pitchers are really working for her this season," he said. "Her change-up especially has been

Kentucky, Kansas have what it takes to make it back again

The Sporting News

In the past three years, they have totaled three Final Four appearances between them. And no national championships. Make a list of the best coaches and they would be near the top. Still, no NCAA titles. But here is a prediction: Within the next three years, Kansas' Roy Williams or Kentucky's Rick Pitino will finish atop the college heap.

"We will be back and we are going to keep knocking on this door, and one day we will knock the sucker down," says Williams, who lost in the title game to Duke two years ago and in a semifinal contest to North Carolina last Saturday in New Orleans.

"We've got a very fine program established at the University of Kentucky," says Pitino, whose team fell to Michigan in the other semifinal. "We are going to keep plugging away at our goal."

This could have been Pitino's year. Entering the Final Four, his Wildcats were favored to take the title. But the cornerstone of his offensive diversity—the three-point shot—led to his team's undoing. Kentucky, which made 46 percent of its three-point attempts during the first four games of the tournament, was seven for 21 against Michigan. Still, it isn't hard to imagine the Wildcats returning to this same event soon and using the three-pointer to capture the championship. Pitino, one of the shot's leading advocates, certainly isn't going to abandon his faith in the tactic.

That time might have been next season, if forward Jamal Mashburn had decided to return for his senior year. With Mashburn, Kentucky would have been the odds-on choice to finish No. 1. But Mashburn is jumping to the National Basketball Association, and Pitino needs to reload without his best player.

But even without Mashburn, Kentucky will be a title challenger. The Wildcats expect big things from 6-foot-10 Walter McCarty, who sat out this season under Proposition 48. He should move into Mashburn's spot. Guard Dale Brown, the only senior starter, will be replaced by a trio of players, including freshman gunner Tony Delk. Big men Rodney Dent and Andre Riddick matured considerably during the season and freshmen Jared Prickett and Rodrick Rhodes have the potential to be standout forwards.

Pitino also can turn to junior guard Travis Ford, whose leadership and three-point shooting helped turn Kentucky into an elite squad. Ford's role will be even bigger next season, now that Mashburn is gone.

The combination of Kentucky's tradition and Pitino's coaching abilities—he has a great feel for the game and its intricacies—have been considered a sure-bet national CLINTON TO MEET WITH EGYPTIAN PRESIDENT — Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak will meet President Clinton today amid growing Arab unease that U.S. policy on the Arab-Israeli conflict is retreating from what many Arabs saw as the "even-handed" approach of the Bush administration to a more pro-Israeli stance, analysts said. Mubarak conferred with Saudi Arabia's King Fahd, Syrian President Hafez Assad and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat before leaving for Washington.

VIOLENCE IN SOUTH AFRICA SLOWS CHANGE — South Africa's slow political transition featured both talk of reconciliation and a fresh incident of multiple killings Monday. President Frederik W. de Klerk and African National Congress President Nelson Mandela, leader of the nation's largest anti-apartheid organization, met to discuss ways to ensure the violence does not derail multi-party talks to lay the groundwork for the nation's first nonracial, post-apartheid election.

MERCEDES TO BUILD PLANT IN UNITED STATES — Seeking lower costs and new market, German luxury car maker Mercedes-Benz A.G. announced it will build a $300 million plant at an undetermined U.S. location to produce a new sports utility vehicle. The factory, which is expected to be completed by 1997, will make up to 60,000 vehicles a year, with about two-thirds to be exported. The decision is part of a strategy by the German auto maker to increase efficiency and expand into markets.

U.N. PLANS BOSNIAN REFUGEE EVACUATION — The United Nations plans to evacuate up to 15,000 Muslim refugees from the Serb-besieged eastern Bosnian town of Srebrenica in the largest operation it has undertaken in the year-long Bosnian war. Starting Tuesday, the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees will send 20 trucks to the town each day to take out women, children, elderly and sick, according to the refugee agency's special envoy, Jose Maria Mendiluce.

CLINTON REVEALS SUMMER YOUTH PROGRAM — President Clinton plans to spend well over $2 billion on youths this summer in the most concentrated social effort of its kind since the 1960s. "The Summer of Opportunity," as Clinton is calling the summer of '93, includes reactivating a Lyndon B. Johnson-era VISTA program, teaching 850,000 poor children in summer school, creating 700,000 new summer jobs and rounding up 2-year-olds for trips to the doctor.

JUDGE'S APPEAL DENIED BY SUPREME COURT — The Supreme Court refused Monday to hear an appeal by a convicted federal judge, raising the possibility that the House of Representatives will impeach a fourth judge in less than eight years. U.S. District Judge Robert F. Collins of New Orleans has been in prison since 1991 when he was convicted of taking a $100,000 bribe from a drug smuggler who wanted leniency. Collins draws a $133,600 federal salary.

VIDEO ALLOWED IN KING CIVIL RIGHTS CASE — An appeals court ruling on Monday will allow the use in evidence of a videotape of Officer Ted Briseno in the federal trial against four men accused of violating Rodney King's civil rights. The federal appeals court rejected a challenge by defense attorneys who were trying to keep the tape from being shown during the trial, apparently because they believe it could be damaging to their cases.

REPUBLICAN SENATORS DELAY RUSSIAN AID — Senate Republicans began a filibuster on the Senate floor Monday in an effort to derail President Clinton's $1.6 billion economic aid package to Moscow. President Clinton and Democratic leaders in Congress were disappointed with Republican efforts to maintain the "gridlock" that has slowed the federal government in recent years. Also the filibuster delayed the Senate's adjournment for the traditional two-week spring break.

Seven students earn honors in art contest

By William Ragan
Entertainment Editor

Seven winners of the 1993 Purchase Awards Art Competition received a total of $1,000 in prize money last week, and the opportunity to have their work permanently displayed in the Student Center.

A record 140 pieces were entered in the competition this year. A panel of judges selected 37 pieces to be displayed in the Student Center Art Alley. Of those, seven creations will be purchased by the Student Center for its permanent collection.

Christina Varotsis, adviser for the Student Programming Council's Fine Arts committee, attributed the huge number of entries to the increased visibility of the Purchase Awards this year. "The faculty has helped a lot — we sent letters to the Cinema and Photography Department and the School of Art and Design," Varotsis said. "(The faculty), by talking to their classes about it, triggered some interest among the students."

Varotsis said the response also was a result of SPC's increased promotion of the event, as well as the amount of time the volunteers put into making the Purchase Awards work.

Teachers seemed to show more interest in encouraging students to enter the competition, she said.

The seven winners of this year's Purchase Awards Art Competition are:

■ Thomas Huck, a junior in drawing, for the pencil drawing "By Lamplight."

■ Yeonsung Lee, a graduate student in painting/printmaking, for the color intaglio painting "The Seven Deadly Sins — Club Infernois."

■ Laura Lindsey, for the oil pastel painting "Reflections of a Summer Journey"

■ Kerby McGhee, a senior in painting, for the oil painting "The Juggler."

■ Patrick Morrissey, a junior, for an untitled pottery piece.

■ Brian Shaw, a senior in painting, for the mixed-media painting "Asleep by the Water."

■ David Wagner, a senior in photography, for the photograph "Pomona General Store."

These works will be displayed permanently in the Student Center, adding a dash of culture to the building, which was once bare before the Purchase Awards were established in 1978.

"(The works) enhance the environment of the Student Center, as well as giving the students an opportunity to put up their artwork," Varotsis said.

Petition urges Guyon to move WIDB to airwaves

By Michael T. Kuciak
General Assignment Writer

Staff members of WIDB circulated a petition Monday to remind SIUC President John Guyon of student body support when he makes the decision today on whether to move the radio station to the general airwaves.

WIDB wants to show President Guyon that the general student population supports the radio station, Jason Pajdo, general manager of WIDB, said. The goal is to get about 10,000 signatures, he said.

"We are asking every staff member to get about 100 signatures, and we have about 100 people here," he said. "We are approaching classes and hope professors will let us talk in front of large lecture halls."

Joanne Yantis, WIDB fiscal adviser, said Vice President for Student Affairs Harvey Welch will meet with Guyon to discuss setting up a meeting with the faculty supporting WIDB's efforts.

Pajdo said WIDB has to persuade Guyon to give his official support in getting the radio station on the air before the idea can be sent to the Board of Trustees for the final okay.

"(Guyon) hasn't heard our pitch in six months to a year," Pajdo said. "We have done some more things since then. If given enough information, I think he will go with it. It's kind of a toss-up."

"We are trying to get on the May agenda of the Board of Trustees, and in June, get the Board to vote on it," he continued.

Pajdo said WIDB will have probably a $100,000 budget if it is able to get on the air.

"The Undergraduate Student Government voted yes on a $2 student fee increase for the station, and that was about a month ago," he said. "That gives us about $80,000. The extra revenue can be generated by sales."

According to Pajdo, WIDB still will need a Board of Trustees vote for funding even if going on-air is approved.

Gender shadows all when paying coach

TAKE TWO COACHES in the same sport at the same school.

One coach has produced better results for twice as many years as the other. A reasonable person might expect the more successful coach to have the higher salary.

Not so when it comes to SIUC athletics.

Coaches of men's athletics teams make more money than coaches of women's teams, even if the women's coaches have more seniority.

Cindy Scott has coached women's basketball at SIUC for 16 years, compiling 312 wins, including four NCAA tournament appearances.

Rich Herrin has coached the men's basketball for eight seasons and has a 141-107 record. He made it to the NCAAs for the first time this year.

Scott's winning percentage is .672, considerably higher than Herrin's .569, yet Herrin makes about $30,000 a year more than Scott.

The same holds true for other sports:

In track and field, women's coach Don DeNoon has an extra year of service at SIUC and four more years of experience overall, but men's coach William Cornell has the higher salary.

IN BASEBALL AND SOFTBALL, third-year coach Sam Riggelman already makes almost as much as Kay Brechtelsbauer, even though she has coached 26 years and won more than 400 games.

The only exception seems to be tennis. Women's coach Judy Auld makes about three times as much as Jim Lefevre, but Lefevre also draws retirement.

The fall sports of volleyball and football are harder to draw a comparison between because football has such a large budget. But not only does head coach Bob Smith make twice as much as Sonya Locke does in volleyball — one of Smith's assistants, Phil Meyer, also makes more than Locke.

The disparities exist even in the administration. Associate Athletic Director Charlotte West has worked at SIUC for 35 years, including almost a year as interim athletic director before Jim Hart started. Hart has worked only five years but already makes about $10,000 a year more than West.

THE SEX EQUITY COMMITTEE has pointed out other problems with salaries. It found that four male coaches received salary increases even though there was no qualifying offer made by other schools. Overall, women's sports get 39 percent of the salary budget, which is not equal to SIUC's female student population of 42 percent.

The committee said the disparities between Scott and Herrin cannot be defended by market value and may be violations of the Equal Pay Act of 1963.

The administration responded by saying salaries are in accord with Title IX regulations, which only require salaries to be proportionate to athlete ratios, not student population.

Salaries are just another area where men's and women's sports remain unequal. Cindy Scott should not have to win another 300 games before she makes as much as her male counterpart. Women's coaches deserve equal pay for equal service and performance.

Human beings may lose erect stance if improper backpack toting continues

While walking across campus yesterday, I saw a young man wearing a backpack. Not an unusual event, but he was utilizing both straps of the backpack. There was one strap over each shoulder.

My first thought, considering what appear to be the norm on campus, was that such behavior must result from faulty genetic makeup.

Upon closer observation, I noticed the man was walking erect and both hands were free. He was reading from a book in one hand and eating from an apple in his other.

It has been a while since I studied behavioral sciences, but I thought his actions displayed an evolutionary advantage.

Think of the possibilities. Humans may be on the brink of a considerable developmental advance.

Young people on campus should seek persons of the opposite sex exhibiting such behavior as possible mating stock.

What I thought was a faulty gene might be a strong gene mutation. An erect stance could result in a healthy, straight spine. The advantage of his free hands was readily demonstrated with the book and apple.

Young people on campus should seek persons of the opposite sex exhibiting such behavior as possible mating stock.

If my suggestion is not heeded, you may end up with children walking around campus with backs bent attempting to keep a backpack in place. At the same time superior humans will greet each other with a firm handshake while standing straight.

I am afraid that there might be pretenders. Some one-shoulder types may try wearing their packs like the erect beings, but they will be awkward and nervous about what to do with their hands, and they will lean to one side out of habit.

I think I will give up my backpack and wear a coat with large pockets.

Better yet, I think I will pray to God to bless each one of us with tolerance of people who are different. — Al Parr, storekeeper II, general stores

Homosexuality has nothing to do with mentality

I am writing specifically in response to Marc Perry's March 31 letter in the DE.

I would like to pose a question to Mr. Perry: How can you, with any degree of certainty, state that homosexuals suffer a mental disorder?

I wonder if Mr. Perry realizes that countless perfectly sane human beings he comes into contact with every day, might be homosexuals. I wouldn't want to fuel Mr. Perry's paranoia, but one of his professors, co-workers, or even individuals he's liked and respected enough to forge friendships with might be homosexual.

Homosexuals do not wish to become members of the opposite sex.

They have simply made some different sexual and relationship choices that Mr. Perry is not accustomed to accepting.

Homosexuality does not harm or victimize others.

To imply that homosexuals should be categorized with necrophiliacs and pedophiles suggests that perhaps it is Mr. Perry who is suffering from confusion.

I find Mr. Perry's suggestion that homosexuals be banned from voting particularly offensive. A person's sexual preference has absolutely nothing to do with their mental well-being. I challenge Mr. Perry to provide medical evidence proving otherwise.

The more general purpose of my letter is to offer a plea to everyone for kindness, acceptance and open-mindedness.

If a person's choices are not harmful to themselves or others, it is my opinion that we should not judge those choices. First and foremost, we are all human beings and should treat each other with respect.

We must all strive to understand and above all else respect the choices of others, regardless of how different they may be from our own.

We often fear what we do not understand, but to ostracize others and charge mental instability based solely on sexual preference is unacceptable. — Michelle Berry, senior, speech communications

White House working to save Clinton's neck
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—The accidental discovery and reporting of caustic comments about Japan by President Clinton at last weekend's Vancouver summit had the U.S. and Japanese governments scrambling Monday.

Trying to prevent Clinton's unguarded remarks from blowing up into a trans-Pacific storm, White House communications director George Stephanopolous issued an official explanation, Secretary of State Warren Christopher telephoned a senior Japanese Foreign Ministry official, and a Japanese diplomat gave interviews to American reporters Monday.

"When Japan tells us yes, often it means no. It's very important for the Japanese not to behave the same way with you," Clinton is quoted as having told Russian President Boris Yeltsin over dinner in Vancouver Saturday night.

Neither the White House nor the State Department denied the Clinton quotations, as obtained by a Vancouver television station, though they took pains to "put them in context."

The embarrassing quotations came to light in a highly unusual way after Vancouver television reporter Leigh Morrow and her camera crew were permitted inside the Seasons in the Park restaurant following a dinner hosted by Clinton for Yeltsin and accompanying officials.

the Illinois Board of Higher Education, said the $29.6 million is for grant allocations, including the health service education grant and the financial assistant act.

Smitley said IBHE prepared for the delay by allocating the grant funds ahead of schedule. This prepares them for a setback in the funds.

Engineering programs in the state will also be affected by the delay, because these programs receive funds for equipment through grants.

Juh Wah Chen, dean of the College of Engineering, said they will continue to operate as usual and doubts they will be affected.

"We'll continue to spend our money carefully and pay our bills," he said, "it won't have an immediate effect."

University budget.

"There are not tenured faculty in the program, and in order for the college to meet budget and programmatic challenges of the University and to not jeopardize tenured faculty we looked at programs that could not line up, could not be enhanced to baccalaureate and could be eliminated," Vitello said.

Bronson said the construction program is not expensive and it returns students to the largest industry in the United States.

"It is one of the cheapest programs to run in CTC and in the University," he said.

Rick Thompson, vice president of the HBAI and an SIUC alumni of the construction program, presented experimental 2-by-4s to the subcommittee to demonstrate the changing and complex technology in the construction business.

"The management end of our industry has changed dramatically," he said, "You can't be a good contractor without the education."

Larry Woolard, state representative of 117th district, said the elimination of this program could be a disaster.

Woolard asked Dean Vitello how much money it would take to keep the program in operation if he could work to remove the pressure of program cuts from the Illinois Board of Higher Education.

Vitello said it would take $300,000 a year plus the addition of two faculty if the program were enhanced to the baccalaureate level.

Many students of the program also attended the hearing.

One student explained to the subcommittee that his closest alternative program like the one at SIUC is located out of state at Purdue University, and out of state tuition would force him to pay much more than he is now.

The students and alumni waited outside the hearing room for the result of the subcommittee's vote and cheered when the result was announced.

The senate will vote on the matter at its next meeting April 13.

weapons production, she acknowledged it "would be unfair to pretend that each job will be replaced slot for slot."

Altogether, some 8,600 of more than 48,000 weapons workers are expected to be idled. And department officials said about $200 million is included in the budget to ease the effect on the department's 140,000 contract employees.

The money will be spent for worker retraining, relocation and retirement incentives, as well as for assistance to local communities affected by the cutbacks.

Hardest hit by the budget request soon to be sent to Congress for its approval is likely to be the Savannah River, S.C., nuclear complex, where the Clinton administration has decided not to restart an idled reactor that produced tritium for nuclear warheads.

As many as 2,900 workers could lose their jobs at the sprawling complex, where tritium and plutonium were produced throughout the Cold War years.

Also scheduled for sharp cutbacks are the Rocky Flats plant outside Denver, which produced tritium for atomic warheads, and the complex at Oak Ridge, Tenn., where uranium components were fashioned.

Altogether, weapons work would be reduced from $7.2 billion to $5.9 billion under the proposed budget.

But defense-related programs would still absorb a hefty portion of the department's budget because of the astronomical cost of cleaning up polluted weapons sites, the disassembly of warheads under arms agreements with Russia, and preparations for weapons tests, now suspended by Congress.

The eventual cost of cleaning up weapons sites, including Rocky Flats, Hanford Wash., Oak Ridge, Savannah River, and several others, has been estimated as high as $300 billion—perhaps $50 billion for Hanford alone.

O'Leary said Monday that cleanup schedules negotiated by the Bush administration's Energy Department and the Environmental Protection Agency with affected states are receiving close scrutiny. Already the timetable to begin construction on a Hanford plant to solidify millions of gallons of high level radio-active waste has been set aside.

While trimming back the weapons program and nuclear energy research, the administration is asking Congress to increase by more than $1 billion this year's outlays for energy conservation and renewable energy sources. An increase of $52 million, for a total outlay of $157 million, is being targeted for research and development aimed at encouraging the use of natural gas.

Following through on President Clinton's promise to slash spending on nuclear power research, the department cut its civilian reactor development programs by $30 billion.

But after Illinois senators lobbied on behalf of the Argonne National Laboratory, the department restored $22 million for a demonstration breeder reactor that would use plutonium created as waste by commercial nuclear power plants.

The technology is offered by Argonne as a potential future alternative to the permanent disposal of spent reactor fuel in the proposed Yucca Mountain waste repository in Nevada.

But the idea has little support in the nuclear utility industry and it has aroused the ire of environmentalists who see it as a step towards plutonium reprocessing in the United States.

To stop the spread worldwide of plutonium and the proliferation of nuclear weapons, the Carter administration halted the reprocessing of plutonium from the spent fuel of commercial reactors.

Storyteller entertains children with Easter books

Pam Finley of Carterville reads the classic "Velveteen Rabbit" to a group of enthusiastic children Saturday at Bookland bookstore at the University Mall in Carbondale.

By Tina Davis
General Assignment Writer

Easter is among us and Pam Finley of Carterville is keeping the spirit by reading Easter tales to children at Bookland.

The classic "Velveteen Rabbit," a lengthy tale of a young rabbit coming of age, was the reading selection Saturday as children sat and listened with faces full of emotion. Nedra Shiver, manager of Bookland, said these readings will be from 1 to 2 p.m. every Saturday from now on.

"We're hoping to increase the children's literature sales with the reading," Shiver said.

Finley is not the usual, passive reader. In order to keep the children interested in what she is reading, she said she uses great enthusiasm and talks to the children on a one-to-one basis while showing pictures.

Shiver said it takes a special kind of person to do what Finley does.

As more children gather and settle down to the reading spot, Finley embraces the children with her smile as she pulls out her own velveteen rabbit to show to the children.

"When my boys were younger, I used to read to them all the time and I just don't see adults reading to children the way they used to; so I wanted to sort of bring it back," she said.

Each week, there will be a shelf premiering the books Finley will read that Saturday, Shiver said.

"Hopefully this will encourage the children to want to read more and see that reading can be joyful," Finley said.

At the end of the hour there was, as planned, a little girl who said to her mother, "We heard the 'Velveteen Rabbit' Mommy, can we get it, please?"

Jawbox delivers energetic, powerful show at Hangar 9

By William Ragan
Entertainment Editor

Washington D.C.'s Jawbox delivered an emotional set of heavy and powerful music at the Hangar 9, turning many first-time listeners into new fans.

Although a small group of slam dancers in front soured the mood with reckless, they failed to take away the power and energy of Jawbox's show Thursday night.

Jawbox bears a slight resemblance in sound to bands such as Fugazi and Souzside on Dischord, a staunchly independent record label operating out of the D.C. area.

But the band has crafted its own distinct sound by appropriating hardcore influences with a complex rhythmic foundation and melodic sensibility that surpasses the "alternative" cliché. The band opened with rumbling bass chords and quiet vocals: "I sunk my eyes in static/You taught me how to see it/Now there's no sign of you ahead..."

The quiet intro lurched into the bombastic "Static," a track from the band's "Novelty" album. The song displayed many earmarks of the Jawbox sound: frighteningly tight interplay between instruments and a dense, harmonic sound.

The next song was "Bullet Park," a straightforward song from the 1991 release, "Grippe." This was the only song performed from that album.

Visually, the band emanated confidence. Vocalist and guitarist J. Robbins swayed with the rhythm as he sang while bassist Kim Coletta energetically stomped back and forth. Guitarist W.C. Barbot spent most of the set hunched over his instrument, his head seemingly disconnected from his body. The drummer who recently replaced Adam Wade, identified only as "El Jefe," proved a worthy replacement.

However, while the band concentrated on playing music, a small group in the audience used the band as a background to slam dance, stage dive and body surf. Their adolescent behavior alienated the crowd who tried to avoid getting hit, and visibly shook the band.

Robbins attempted to calm the crowd, saying, "I know you guys are into the punk rock thing... but I think I'll just discourage it."

The slam dancers ignored the band's advice, and eventually the house lights had to be turned on so the bouncers could monitor the unruly segment of the audience. Several people were kicked out at one point in the show, but Jawbox's professionalism shone through as the band pushed on. Still, it is sad that a few members of the audience failed to take others into consideration during their punk-rock-a-thon.

Jawbox's set included half of "Novelty," including "Tracking" with its shouted refrain of "Let It Slide!" More heavy-hitting songs such as "Chump" and "Send Down" received good response. The band performed "Jackpot Plus!," a track from its Dischord single. The song, a terse diatribe against gambling, was a departure from the last album, revealing a direct songwriting style.

A new song, identified by Robbins as a "love song," plodded along at a slow, heavy pace, accentuated by unsettling vocals. The encore was a slow, creepy number, "I Got You Under My Skin." While similar to the Cole Porter classic, Jawbox's version differed through the tasteful use of dissonance.

Thanks go to Jon Martin, who booked the show. Martin's band Small opened up the evening with a melodicore attack similar to bands such as Samiam. Fast, tight and melodic, the band plowed through an energetic set, adding surprises such as John Patterson's harmonica solo.

The other opening band, Nitro Jr., delivered unbridled punk energy, but suffered from monotony and a too-long set. Singer and guitarist John Collins displayed guitar talent and angry vocalizing, but covers such as the Eagles' "Already Gone" fell flat.

Profs' views differ on Russian aid package

By Candace Samolinski
International Writer

Two SIUC professors took different views on Clinton's economic aid package to Russia and what steps the United States should take to aid it in establishing security.

"All of what Clinton is doing should have been done long ago, although it may not be enough," said Robert Edwards, assistant professor of foreign languages (Russian). "As much as we can, we should try to help them establish a program instead of funneling money to the bureaucrats as we have done in the past."

William Turley, professor of political science, said the United States only can play a role which is outside the actual state of affairs, and much of the aid package is about usage.

"Clearly the political value outweighs the economic value. After all, the $700 million in farm credits is good for American farmers," he said. "The United States can play a role only in the margins. We can't do anything more directly in the way of expectations of growth."

Both professors agreed with the implementation of establishing business and commercial law within Russia, but Turley said before anything can be done a constitution outlining the distribution of power must be constructed.

"Russia desperately needs a new constitution," Turley said. "This is an issue on which everyone agrees, but while the debate continues over terms and the time when it should be done, they continue to go on without one."

"You can't lurch from referendum to referendum," he said. "It doesn't make sense to pour money into a bad machine."

Edwards and Turley said it is a conflict of personalities that is causing friction between the Congress of People's Deputies and Yeltsin.

"This conflict has been portrayed in a manner which grossly oversimplifies the situation, and it has been this way since the disintegration of the former Soviet Union," Turley said. "There is no democracy v. communism. A large majority of the people are for anything but a return to Stalinism."

Edwards said he believes many conservatives favor a return to communism, and the number of those favoring a move to democracy is smaller.

"On the whole all the people in the Congress realize a return is

- 1989 — First multicandidate elections; many Communists are defeated.

- Eastern Europe breaks off
- 1989 — Poland is the first to have open elections. Gorbachev announces that the Soviets have no right to interfere in Eastern European events. The Berlin Wall falls.
- March 1990 — East Germany reunifies with West Germany.

- The End of the Soviet Union
- 1990 — Lithuania, Estonia, Latvia and Belorussia try for independence. Boris Yeltsin is elected Russian president; he later resigns from the Communist Party.
- October 1990 — Gorbachev wins Nobel Peace Prize.
- March 1991 — First nationwide referendum shows

- that more than 70 percent of Soviets vote to keep the union as a federation of equal sovereign states.
- August 19 — Coup is staged against Gorbachev. Yeltsin declares the takeover illegal and appeals to Moscow citizens to protest.
- August 22 — Gorbachev returns to Moscow, coup leaders are arrested.
- September 6 — Independence of Baltic States is recognized.

- The Soviet Union breaks up
- December 8 — Commonwealth of Independent States is formed. Georgia is the only republic not to join.
- December 25 — Gorbachev resigns as president. January 1, 1992 — Soviet Union ceases to exist.
- April 1 — President Bush and the German chancellor announce a program for $24 billion in aid for Russia.
- April 13 — Russian Congress asks Yeltsin to resign as prime minister and change economic program.
- March 1993 — Congress still at odds with Yeltsin. Special meetings are called, but impeachment proceedings are not brought.
- April — President Clinton offers $1.6 billion aid package.

Vehicle strikes power pole, cuts current in Carbondale

By Karyn Viverito
Special Assignment Writer

The call for lights off at University Mall came a bit early Saturday night after a hit-and-run vehicle struck a power pole, leaving part of southeast Carbondale without power.

The accident occurred at about 7 p.m. at 250 S. Lewis Lane. The broken circuit line cut power to part of the Lewis Park Apartments, the new section of University Mall and residences in the area.

The Carbondale police department said it had no official report on the accident, except for the information it received from the Central Illinois Public Service Co.

A CIPS spokesperson said the power outage was the first ever caused by a hit-and-run accident.

A representative for Famous Barr said the situation came as a surprise but was handled well by both employees and customers.

"Our security lights that are supposed to come in that situation did not, and yet no one was hurt, nothing was broken, and everything seemed to run smoothly," the representative said.

Famous Barr trains their staff for emergencies, and employees in working near exits immediately went to help oversee the evacuation.

Other employees used flashlights to help customers out of the store.

Famous Barr, despite the store's size and large number of customers, did not experience any problems with shoplifting to their knowledge, the representative said.

The store's security system includes an alarm system that runs on batteries and prevents people from stealing items from the store.

Lester Brown, first assistant manager at Garfield's Restaurant and Pub, said his experience during the power outage was less worrisome than the other businesses at the mall might have had.

"When the lights went off, we sent waiters over to the tables to keep the customers happy, while we went down to Walgreen's and bought about 60 candles," he said. "It turned out to be a great big candlelight dinner."

Brown said out of 49 tables only five or six left the restaurant, while the rest stayed to outlast the outage, which lasted about 45 minutes.

"People that had already received their food before the outage finished eating, and the rest of the place sat around drank until the kitchen could be used again," he said.

Power was restored at 8 p.m.

Legacy left by legal giant Holmes studied during SIUC symposium

By Shawna Donovan
General Assignment Writer

Faculty and lawyers who attended a two-day symposium on Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr. at the SIUC School of Law left with a better understanding of the elements of law pertaining to Holmes, a SIUC law professor said.

In an effort to get scholarly input, the SIUC School of Law presented a symposium about Holmes Friday and Saturday to re-examine the justice's influence on American law today.

The symposium featured eight distinguished Holmes' scholars who spoke on different aspects of Holmes' history and theology.

Patrick Kelley, who is a Holmes scholar, said the symposium was a success.

"We gathered together to exchange views and scholarly interaction. By the end, we better understood the elements of law pertaining to Holmes," Kelley said. "It was a success because our goal was achieved. Our goal was to intellectually look at the history of Holmes."

G. Edward White, an award-winning legal historian and University of Virginia law professor, said Holmes' personal life had an effect on his judging and theology.

"Holmes was the great theologian," White said. "He was a deeply contradicted person with internal tension. He had many things going on in his life while he was a justice."

White, along with fellow Holmes scholar and former U.S. Congressman John Monagan, found Holmes' personal letters to friends by doing extensive research throughout their careers.

"In my research, I have found that Holmes was very modest about his appointment in 1902," White said. "He was very fearful of his future. He did not know whether he should have been appointed or not, even though he took the opportunity because available."

Holmes, 1841-1935, practiced law in Boston for fifteen years before becoming a member of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts for 20 years. Finally, he sat as an associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court for 30 years, retiring in 1933. Holmes' famous work, "The Common Law" is considered a reference to many aspects of law.

"Holmes is known as a civil libertarian, enlightened economist and transcending radical. He is truly a prominent figure in legal history," White said.

SIUC School of Law Dean Harry Haynsworth said the symposium illustrated Holmes' effect on the legal system.

"He is one of the giants of law in history. The conclusion of the symposium was that Holmes is still influential. His ideas are the basic areas of the law," Haynsworth said.

Other speakers included Hiller Zobel, a Massachusetts trial judge; Catharine Wells, associate law professor at the University of Southern California; Spencer Weber Weller, associate law professor at Brooklyn Law School; David Rabban, law professor at the University of Texas; Sheldon Novick, scholar in residence at the Vermont Law School; and John Monagan, former U.S. Congressman from Connecticut.

Students to host series explaining Arab-Israeli issue

By Candace Samolinski
International Writer

The long history of the Arab-Israeli conflict has prompted several SIUC student organizations to host a series of lectures and films on the topic.

Dr. Aly Mishal and RaReeg Jaber will begin the series at 7:30 p.m. today in Parkinson lecture hall.

"Mishal has long been an outspoken activist regarding human rights violations against Palestinians in Israel," said Jeff Russell, a member of Pi Sigma Alpha political science honor society. "He is Palestinian and a refugee who grew up in Jordan."

Jaber and Mishal will present a lecture on "Human Rights and the History of the Arab/Israeli Conflict". Mishal is the director of the Islamic Hospital in Amman, Jordan.

"Jaber is the chairman of Citizens for Americans Detained in Israel," Russell said. "He has been taking action for the two Palestinian-Americans who have been held in Israel for over two months."

"No charges have been filed against them, but they will not release them," he said.

The series will continue on April 10, 12 and 13 with discussions and a film on similar topics.

The film "Journey to the Occupied Lands" will be shown at 7:30 p.m. on April 10 and at 1:30 p.m. on April 12 in the Video Lounge of the Student Center.

On April 13 a lecture on "The United States' Role in the Arab/Israeli Conflict" will be presented in the Parkinson lecture hall.

Paul Finley, author of "They Dare to Speak Out," will present the discussion.

The events are sponsored by Pi Sigma Alpha, Phi Alpha Theta, College Republicans, Muslim Student Association and the Interreligious Committee for Middle East Peace.

For more information on the series contact Jeff Russell at 536-7671.

Lakota gathering invokes spirits of the Shawnee

Environmentalists join Native Americans in logging protest

By Angela Hyland
Environmental Writer

A ceremony by Lakota spiritual warriors at Cripps Bend brought environmentalists together with Native Americans in an attempt to gain the offensive edge in their battle to stop logging on the Shawnee National Forest, a Student Environmental Committee member said.

"We went in, checked the place out and basically just bonded with Cripps Bend," said Donna Braun, an undecided sophomore from Mokena and a member of SEC. "It was a really good opportunity to get people together and show the powers that be who would do the cutting that we are spiritually strong and organizationally strong."

"We wanted to show them that we're not only going to be there, but that we're there already," she said.

Protecting forests is a matter that has always been important to the Lakota, said Sylvester Mesteth, a Lakota from Pine Ridge, S.D.

"We are having a ceremony so that maybe in some way people can understand that what they are doing there isn't right," he said.

The ritual began with the smoking of a ceremonial pipe.

As individuals gathered in a circle around Donald Red Blanket, a full-blooded spiritual warrior from Ogalala Defenders of Mother Earth, two traditional songs were performed.

One was a song of pain for Mother Earth, Mesteth said. It was appropriate because of the cutting taking place within the forest, he said.

Mesteth said he felt it was wrong for people to go in and cut down the trees.

"They should be planting trees, putting them back into the ground," he said. "A long time ago when our forefathers wanted to cut a tree down, they talked it over with their families. They thought about how it would affect our children."

"Today, it's not like that," Mesteth said. "A lot of people are self-centered. They think of only themselves. They don't think of their children."

Braun said she felt people should not be so accepting of the cutting of trees. The ceremony made her feel very close to nature, she said.

"Spiritually, it was very intense," she said. "There was a sense that the trees were our relations. How can you cut them down?"

AT&T sensors to help future of highway system

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—AT&T is making waves — shifting a new technology from under the sea out to the highways.

The company's Federal Systems Custom Electronic Services unit in suburban Arlington, Va., is adapting technology deployed by the Navy on submarines to possible use by highway authorities to monitor traffic flows.

The AT&T unit has not made a sale yet, but the heavily traveled New Jersey Turnpike is testing the new pizza-box sized "SmartSonic" sensors.

AT&T says the sensors can be used to control ramp access to congested interstates or to provide information so that traffic can be diverted to alternate routes.

Data from sensors can help to predict future highway needs and meet federal reporting requirements, according to AT&T.

The sensors count, classify and measure the speed of passing vehicles by listening to their individual sounds, or "acoustical signatures," just as they have been used to listen to other submarines.

Hank packs house for rowdy old time

By Erick J.B. Enriquez
General Assignment Writer

Concert Review

Fans in cowboy gear roared during a nearly full capacity SIUC Arena Sunday evening, for what turned out to be a great show for Hank Williams Jr.

With an extremely entertaining opening act by Aaron Tippin, the arena became Southern Illinois' answer to the Grand Ole Opry. Tippin's ability to manipulate a crowd was more than evident. Swaying across the stage every chance he got and making playful quick draw hand gestures were only a few of the visual elements that made his act work.

But those were just his bodily gestures.

Tippin proved he knew how to crease an audience as well. "My Blue Angel" was a romantic melody that seduced the ladies and made the gentlemen jealous.

Tippin was a true crooner in the cowboy sense, but he proved he could keep up with the faster western tunes with his hard lyrics and sensitive voice.

His song "You've Got to Stand for Something or Fall for Anything," followed by a statement about his respect for Americans who were not afraid to stand for their rights, was a sign of character as well as musical sensibility.

Yet Tippin was not even the headliner.

"The best is yet to come," said Tippin before leaving the stage. He was right.

When Hank Williams Jr. took the stage, the audience exploded with applause.

All decked out in a black Stetson hat, boots and leather vest, Hank was rarin' to go.

He opened with the song that according to him "started the country music revolution."

"We Are Young Country" drew mass crowd approval.

His quick chants, accompanied by heart pounding drum beats and down-home guitar licks, were a melodic testament to Williams' command of music.

In a homage to an Otis Redding song, Williams displayed a fast moving fiddle solo.

What was equally amazing about Williams was his ability to pull off well executed cover songs. "Walk This Way," originally done by Aerosmith, was one song that Williams proved he could do.

With a slight touch of rap, which he did away with quickly, Williams sang it as good, if not better, than Steve Tyler.

Probably the best part of the entire evening was when Williams sat down on the stage and did several songs accompanied by his acoustic guitar.

With the stage lights dimmed and two towering photos of Williams acting as a backdrop to his lone figure strumming a guitar, the atmosphere was mysterious and romantic.

"Playin' Hide and Seek," from his new album, received the most response among these songs.

The lyrics detailed Williams' own feelings about the government's trait of hiding things from the public.

Its tone was sarcastic as well humorous because it contained elements of truth.

Another element that made the show work was its simplicity in lighting and stage set up.

The two basic elements in lighting were color tones of the band on stage that changed mood with each song and a flood light that highlighted the audience during moments of suggested crowd response.

Williams' climactic song ended the night on a good note.

"Give the Wheel of Life a Spin," was a fast-moving extravaganza of rotating lights and inspirational music that pushed an already pumped-up audience over the edge of the envelope.

Over all, Hank Williams Jr. was a hell of a good time.

unlikely," he said. "However they are using the people's unrest as a lever against Yeltsin, but he is still popular."

Edwards said the Russian people are not eager for drastic change, but would like to see more personal security. Turley said he agrees with Clinton's plan to build houses for generals as part of this security.

"In retrospect, many of us will be sorry to see the Soviet Union go ..."

-Robert Edwards

"The military has been patient up until this point," Edwards said. "Typically they follow the leadership of their government, but right now they are very concerned about the security of their families."

"I think they want to remain indifferent to the regime, the military used to be prestigious and many of them are now demoralized," he said.

Edwards said the relationship between Clinton and Yeltsin is crucial at this point. He agreed with Turley's belief that civil war within the new republics should be an area of concern.

"There is already a civil war and while the world's attention is focused on Bosnia others may erupt," Turley said. "The possibility of Russian intervention on either side is something we should be aware of."

"In provinces throughout the republics there are large populations of Russians," he said. "If a civil war were to break out, it is likely Russia would step in to protect their Russian interests."

Edwards said a trend of xenophobia throughout Europe and elsewhere signifies some action could take place if not dealt with early on.

"An outbreak of old national patriots is taking place in Eastern Europe, France and other places," he said. "It is parallel to the 1930's, and it is in our best national interests to take action to advert patriots by enabling the people of the Soviet Union to have economic and political stability. Otherwise the possibility of a civil war involving nuclear capability could be real."

Turley said the Baltic countries have made some progress, but it will be 20 years before any real advances are noticeable.

"In retrospect many of us will be sorry to see the Soviet Union go," he said. "As an empire it kept the peace."

Miracle program possible remedy for health care ills

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—While Congress and President Clinton search for a miracle cure to the nation's health care ills, some observers believe an over-the-counter remedy already exists: the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program (FEHBP), created in 1959.

The program is "a living example, in many ways, of the currently red-hot concept of 'managed competition,'" said James Morrison, who once headed the program.

Health planners "are out of their minds" if they don't put the program "high on their list of models to emulate," said Walton Francis, author of the Washington Consumers' Checkbook magazine's 1993 guide to FEHBP benefits.

Their enthusiasm stems from the fact that, over the past dozen years, the program's average premium cost per person apparently rose about 3.5 percentage points less per year than private-sector premiums for large firms.

But questions have been raised about how well FEHBP really controls cost growth and whether it is a sterling example of managed competition.

For one thing, said Rep. Jim Cooper, D-Tenn., a key sponsor of managed competition legislation, it lacks some features that theorists of managed competition, such as Alain C. Enthoven, believe must be included. "The menu shopping system is an early and important version of managed competition," Cooper said, "but we need to improve it." Enthoven agreed: "It is not full, managed competition."

Advocates argue that the FEHBP avoids heavy federal regulation while holding down cost growth by forcing different insurers to compete for customers by providing the best service at the lowest premiums.

New teams, self-promotion boost NHL's spirit

The Washington Post

Jodie Carbiener bubbles with the sort of enthusiasm one expects from Snow White greeting children at the gates of Disneyland. But Carbiener is very corporate.

Her title is director of corporate synergy and special projects for Walt Disney Co., the entertainment conglomerate and owner of the Mighty Ducks of Anaheim, one of two new National Hockey League teams.

"My main job is to get everyone talking to each other," Carbiener said of the multitude of corporate entities that make up the Disney empire: Walt Disney Pictures, attractions (Disneyland, Disney World), Disney Channel, KCAL (the Los Angeles TV station), consumer products (with 173 Disney Stores in North America), home video, publishing, Hollywood Records.

Hockey players? There are no players yet. There won't be until June. The general manager, Jack Ferreira, was hired last week, and though he is a respected judge of hockey talent, he joked that he was still trying to remember which way to turn when he got to the Peter Pan or the Goofy painted on the wall in order to find certain offices at the Burbank, Calif., headquarters.

"Yes, we are excited about the potential of hockey as a sport," Carbiener said. "The NHL, in terms of marketing, is, in some ways, in its infancy, which is an exciting time to come on board."

The NHL has been in existence since 1917.

For a league that has sometimes moved at a glacial pace, the last several months of NHL history have been spent in fifth gear. Whether all that motion proves productive remains to be seen. As one NHL coach is fond of saying about players, "Don't mistake activity for achievement."

But since Dec. 1, the league hired an aggressive, fast-moving commissioner, Gary Bettman, and new staff, added two new teams and had another team move from what should be a natural home for hockey to one that is, well, in Texas.

Hockey, a sport played on ice, will now have more professional teams in Florida than baseball, the summer game. There has been division realignment and changes in the schedule and playoff formats.

As late as October 1991, then-NHL president John Ziegler said being on network television was unimportant, but the NHL will once again appear on that medium in a couple weeks when the Stanley Cup playoffs begin.

There always may be certain barriers that prevent hockey from attaining the popularity of other major team sports. What's changed is a greater interest in fulfilling whatever potential is there.

"One of the things that hockey has to accept is that it is not a schoolyard game played in every small town, village and hamlet in the country. Hockey is just not available to a substantial portion of the American public," said CBS Sports President Neal Pilson.

"The basic point for hockey is that it's not a one-year wararound," Pilson said. "They need to be thinking about five-year and 10-year plans, and I think they are."

Both Anaheim and the as-yet-unnamed South Florida franchise are tied to marketing-oriented companies with deep pockets. That is appeal for the NHL.

The Florida team is owned by Blockbuster Entertainment Chairman Wayne Huizenga. Though the Blockbuster board of directors will reportedly consider buying the team or a portion of it at an annual meeting Tuesday, Huizenga personally owns it at the moment. Don't be shocked if the team colors are the company's blue and yellow.

Still, the corporate tie-in will benefit the league almost immediately. There are 2,162 Blockbuster Video stores nationwide, 1,131 of which are company-owned. Each of the company-owned stores soon will be adorned with pictures of Mario Lemieux, the Pittsburgh Penguins' star.

Blockbuster customers might soon be able to watch a hockey video as they wait in a checkout line, even if "Gone With the Wind" is tucked under their arm.

Speaking of movies, "The Mighty Ducks" brought in $50 million to Disney Studios. Disney Chairman Michael Eisner chose Mighty Ducks as the team name over many objections, including those of his immediate family, because Disney is planning a sequel called "D2 — The Champions."

Disney could have a Mighty Ducks Saturday-morning cartoon. There will be promotional tie-ins with Disney properties, with families encouraged to spend their days at Disneyland and their evenings down the street watching the Mighty Ducks play hockey at The Pond (Anaheim Arena) before resting their weary bodies at the Disneyland Hotel.

The Disney Stores, which also have video tape monitors, will carry Mighty Ducks and NHL paraphernalia. But Disney will also require a special arrangement because of the NHL's licensing rules. No one believes that will be a problem.

"You can treat everybody the same, or you can try to be the entrepreneurs that I think we need to be," Philadelphia Flyers President Jay Snider said.

"You've got to be flexible. If Disney does good things for hockey, it will increase my franchise's value, and I'm certainly for that."

Owners get nervous when a franchise moves, because it implies failure, which could lessen the value of others.

The Hartford Whalers and Edmonton Oilers will remain in those towns for next season, but how long after that is unclear. The Minnesota North Stars will become the Dallas Stars next season because owner Norm Green said he couldn't make enough money at the Met Center, partly because he couldn't raise ticket prices to what he felt was a money-making level and partly because broadcast revenues were low.

Minneapolis-St. Paul is the 15th largest TV market. Dallas/Fort Worth is the eighth largest, just behind Washington. Although the league would not mind having a well-financed owner try downtown Minneapolis again someday, having a team in Dallas presents a better television profile.

ESPN resumed televising games this season, the first of a five-year deal worth upwards of $80 million. ESPN, which is partially owned by ABC, will buy time on ABC to broadcast playoff games on five days this spring.

ABC expects to have the games picked up by just over 90 percent of the network's affiliates. In 1974-75, when the NHL was last on network TV, as few as 62 percent of the affiliates picked up games.

title combination. And although he has rebuilt the program in astonishingly quick fashion — the Wildcats ended a two-year probation before the 1991-92 season — he already has felt the sting of disappointment the last two seasons.

Kentucky was on the verge of going to the Final Four last season before Christian Laettner's game-ending shot in overtime pulled out a miraculous victory for Duke, which eventually won the title. This season, Pitino had the Wildcats peaking at the right time. They rolled through the early rounds of the tournament, and had won their last seven games by an average of 30 points before facing Michigan. Mashburn fouled out in overtime and Pitino again saw his team fall. Last season, he would have been happy to get this far. This season, he felt his team could win it all.

"We felt we had a victory and we let it get away," Pitino said. "With Mashburn in, we could win it. We were in control. Now our job is to get back on track and not hang our heads. Our job is to rebuild this program and to get back to the Final Four. But still, in two years, after getting off probation, we were in the elite eight and the Final Four. That is not a bad accomplishment."

Williams' future revolves more around personnel. He is a Mashburn-type player away from having a legitimate shot at a title. In the Jayhawks' Final Four appearances in '91 and '93, they played without a blue-chip big man, at forward or center.

The '92-'93 team might have had that big man in 6-foot-8 Ben Davis, who, at least, would have given Williams a consistent rebounder. But Davis transferred to Florida last fall, leaving a huge void that was apparent in the loss to North Carolina. The Tar Heels had 11 more rebounds in the game, offsetting Kansas' edge in the backcourt. One Kansas center, senior Eric Pauley, is a finesse player. The other, Greg Ostertag, is big enough (7-foot-2, 270 pounds) but raw. Neither was a match for Eric Williams, who scored 23 points, mostly on hooks and dunks. "We knew we would have problems at times with them inside," Williams said. "They just did a great job of using their size and making their shots."

In five seasons, Williams has done a brilliant job of establishing his program at Kansas, which was placed on probation soon after he took the job from Larry Brown. Brown left after guiding Kansas to a national title in '88. Williams was a little-known assistant at North Carolina before coming to Kansas. Now he is putting together numbers that rival his mentor, Smith. Remember, Williams couldn't bring recruits on campus for paid visits until January 1991. But he managed to sign three quality players — Adonis Jordan, Richard Scott and Steve Woodberry — before that date.

Now, he has to cope with the pressures of expectations. He said this was his toughest season because of what was predicted for his team and the adverse ways it affected his players. "But, in some ways, it has been the most satisfying," he said, referring to Kansas' stellar play during the early rounds of the tournament.

One of Williams' recruits is a 6-foot-10 center, Scott Pollard, but he is not considered an elite prospect. Still, if he eventually can provide the defensive and rebounding help Kansas was lacking this season, it might give Williams enough to push for a title.

But he may not return to the Final Four as quickly as Pitino. Gone from this club will be guards Jordan and Rex Walters, taking with them the bulk of the team's offense.

Woodberry and Scott will have to assume a bigger scoring role, and Williams will need Ostertag to continue his development. Plus, former junior-college star Darrin Hancock has to regain the scoring touch he displayed before coming to Kansas.

Nevertheless, Williams has shown he can carve a contender out of almost any combination of talent. That's especially true because he plays so many minutes, which always gives him a chance of experienced replacements. "It's a good way to ensure consistency, finding good spots, and with her ability to hit the corners and work the rise ball, hitters are finding her tough to face."

For the season, Mick posted a 6-3 record, with losses coming in games against South Florida, Florida State and Ball State. Two of those games were decided by only one run.

Mick has posted a 1.00 ERA so far on the season and is leading SIUC in complete games (9), games saved (9), wins (6), innings pitched (63) and strikeouts (35).

Buckles said the difference for Mick this season has been her not overthrowing her pitches.

"Some pitchers throw fast and hard, and tend to reach back and try to throw the ball past hitters," he said. "This year she has been pitching smart and realizes that she cannot always throw the ball by somebody, because on this level, everybody can hit it."

Mick will start the Salukis' first game against Southeast Missouri State today.
