Book bags heisted at Morris Library, Student Center

DAVID FERRARA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

In the wake of a recent string of 12 reported book bag thefts on campus in nearly two months, University Police said the Student Center and Morris Library tend to be hit the most by such crimes near the semester's end.

"I think it would be fair to say that these two facilities probably experience more (book bag thefts) toward the end of the semester because students are going there to study," Lt. Todd Sigler said Monday.

Sigler spoke in place of University Police Chief Sam Jordan, who could not be reached for comment Monday.

He said book resale as an incentive for the recent rash of backpack thefts and said students should exercise due caution with their possessions.

"They should practice a high degree of security with respect to those items," Sigler said.

"Don't leave something unattended that you can't afford to have stolen or missing."

He said that three recently reported book bag thefts are not likely related to the recent thefts at the University Bookstore.

"I can't say there's any connection between them," Sigler said.

"Theft is a crime of opportunity."

A 28-year-old Carbondale resident reported to University Police that his book bag was stolen from a second-floor study lounge in the student center between 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. Saturday.

Another SIUC student told University Police that his bag was stolen from an academic building within a 15-minute time frame Thursday.

The victim valued loss in the incident at $285. Police had no suspects in this incident as of press time Monday.

A 25-year-old SIUC student also reported Thursday to University Police that her book bag was stolen from Morris Library between 10:50 a.m. and 11:30 a.m.

Loss in the incident was estimated at $150.

Police are investigating the incident, and there are no suspects.

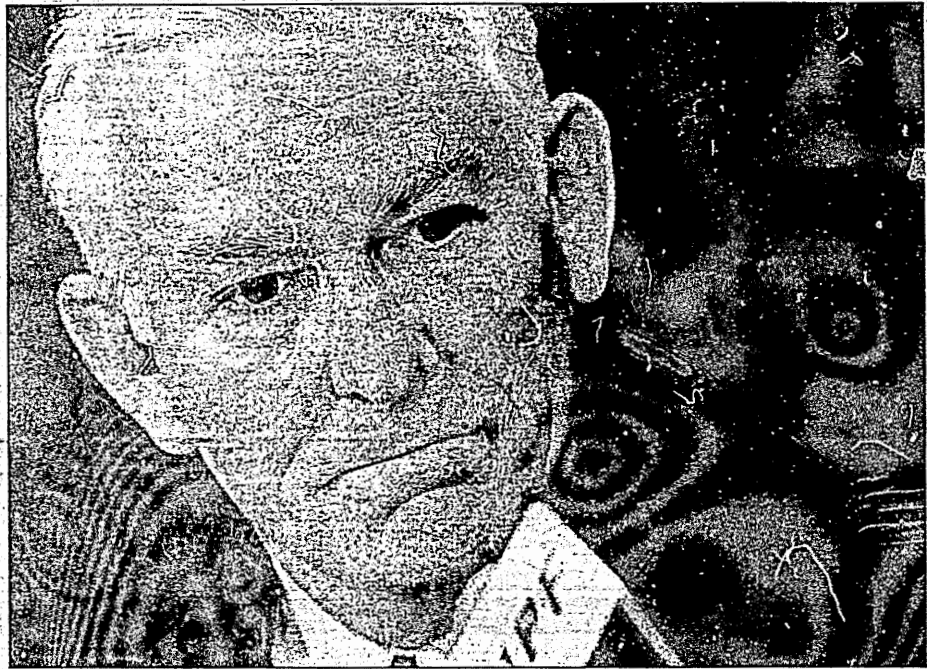

As Jordan and bookstore managers have identified bag theft as a "broad" problem, Sigler agreed that students could help deter book bag thefts.

"It's difficult (for police to prevent such crimes)," he said. "So mark your items and utilize lockers if they're available."

Allegedly stabbed to death by a jealous husband, student Michael Sasso is mourned by friends who call his death a senseless tragedy

Williamson County State's Attorney Charles Garnati pauses while answering questions Monday at a press conference about the murder of an SIUC student in Herrin Saturday night.

Authorities tight-lipped in slaying

DAVID FERRARA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A Herrin man has been charged with three counts of first-degree murder in relation to the stabbing death of a 20-year-old SIUC student, around midnight Saturday.

Friends of victim Michael Sasso, a sophomore in administration of justice from Chicago, said the second homicide of the weekend in Herrin occurred because Sasso was involved in a relationship with the accused man's wife.

But Herrin and Williamson County authorities would not confirm any type of relationship between Sasso and his alleged assailant, Steven Mack Crutchfield, who is being detained in Williamson County Jail without bond and charged with the stabbing death.

Sasso's friends said Monday that Crutchfield may have been enraged when he entered his residence at 916 S. 14th St., found Sasso with Crutchfield's wife and allegedly stabbed Sasso to death.

"He was seeing a married woman," said Stephanie Wagner, a junior in administration of justice from Prescott, Ariz., and a friend of Sasso. She said some of her other friends told her about Tracie Crutchfield's relationship with Sasso. "And the person that stabbed him was her husband."

Williamson County State's Attorney Charles Garnati charged Crutchfield, who was arrested in Marion early Sunday morning, in the homicide that took place minutes before midnight Saturday.

Garnati declined comment about any relationship between the victim and suspect, saying only that the homicide "revolves around a domestic

Write-in candidate Taylor seeks to shake up election

GRACIOUS LOSER?

Activist predicts he will likely lose, but wants to bring issues to forefront of mayor race.

DAN CRAFT
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Mayoral candidate Rob Taylor openly admits that he has no real chance at winning the upcoming race.

Taylor, a student activist who announced his write-in campaign last week, said the issues are more important than the mayor's seat at the city council table.

"This is a unique opportunity to exploit the issues," Taylor said. "That's really why I'm doing this."

Taylor has been pushing his "Four Fat Tigers Campaign," stressing issues such as rental housing, Halloween, the size of the city council and police/community relations.

However, he also has been responding to other issues brought up by opponents including Neil Dillard and John Budstiek, including the status of University Mall, the attraction of industry to town and the relationship between Carbondale and SIUC.

Taylor advocates increased aid to SIUC as the best way to help improve economics in Carbondale.

"The four tigers unite Carbondale to get to the big goal of increased SIU funding."

Taylor said, "And SIU is the most loyal business Carbondale could have."

"Increased funding and better recruitment and retention at SIU puts more money in the pockets of local merchants, and the well-being of the city rests in the bank accounts of local merchants."

Taylor said bringing other large industry into Carbondale is a risky proposition.

"There is no town loyalty with these big corporations," Taylor said.

"When they pick up and move out, they can really hurt a town."

Taylor also criticized some of the proposed uses of University Mall.

"That mall is dying already," Taylor said.

CARBONDALE

- Freddie S. Taylor II, 23, of Carbondale, was arrested and charged with driving while his license was revoked and operating an uninsured motor vehicle in a city parking lot after the vehicle he was driving at 4:52 p.m. Friday struck an unattended car owned by an 18-year-old Carbondale resident. Taylor was released after posting $100 bond.
- Chad Allen Sussen, 22, of Neely Hall was arrested in the lobby of Neely Hall and charged with disorderly conduct and aggravated assault after a desk worker called police at 2:57 a.m. Saturday. Police said Sussen, who appeared intoxicated, scared the desk worker. He also attempted to shove a police officer and pushed another resident out of the dorm, police said. Sussen posted cash bail and was released pending a later court date.
- An 18-year-old SIUC student told University Police that he was struck in the head in the Schneider Hall lobby by an unknown man. Police described the suspect as a 180-pound male, 5 feet 10 inches tall, with a braided hair style. The victim was slightly injured in the incident but refused medical attention, police said.
- Norman D. Forsy, 46, of Carbondale was arrested and charged with driving under the influence of alcohol and improper lane usage while driving on a revoked license at 3:44 a.m. Monday on South Wall Street near Southern Hills Road. Forsy was released after posting $300 bond.

Almanac

THIS WEEK IN 1927:

- Buddy Rich, one of the world's great jazz drummers for more than 40 years, died after suffering a seizure at his home. He was 69 years old. The cause of death was found to be an inoperable brain tumor.
- Fred's Dance Band in Carterville presented the "King of the Hobos," Box Car Willie and The Texas Trainmen in concert with special guest Jackson Junction. Admission was $8.
- Movies playing in Carbondale were "Marniequin," "Flatfoot," "A Nightmare on Elm Street 3," "Crocodile Dundee," "Hoosiers" and "Lethal Weapon."
- Tickets went on sale for Neil Diamond, to perform live at the SIU Arena May 2. The most inexpensive seat was $15.
- A 4-liter jug of Carlo Rossi wine was $3.99.
- SIUC's campus radio station, WDB, found a new home on the fourth floor of the Student Center. The move, which had been delayed for three years because of an array of complications, made the station's atmosphere bigger and better adding conference rooms and offices. The move also ensured that dorm residents would be able to get better station reception because of the addition of FM cable.

Hale drops 'unreasonable' Dershowitz

FRANK KLIMAS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Matt Hale will no longer consider prominent attorney Alan Dershowitz to represent him in his court appeal to obtain an Illinois law license.

Hale, who was refused a law license in December because of his white supremacist beliefs, announced March 23 that Dershowitz will no longer represent him in his appeal because he found Dershowitz to be "unreasonable" in his pricing.

Dershowitz, a Jewish attorney renowned for championing civil rights and First Amendment cases, asked Hale for $585 an hour for his services — more than Hale was willing to spend.

Dershowitz also required him to waive his right to confidentiality, which according to Hale is "unheard of in an attorney-client relationship."

Dershowitz issued a general statement March 24: "I imposed certain conditions on representation for Matthew Hale. After reviewing those conditions, Matthew Hale has decided to select another lawyer, which is certainly his right."

Dershowitz was not available for further comment.

Hale accused Dershowitz of making his case a "political show."

"This was an attempt to humiliate me, and I just wouldn't stand for that idea," Hale said.

Hale was refused a law license by a three-judge state panel that evaluated the character and fitness of state bar applicants. Although he passed the state bar exam, the panel voted two to one to deny Hale a license because of his outspoken beliefs as the leader of the white supremacist World Church of the Creator. Hale graduated from the SIU School of Law last May.

According to Hale, Dershowitz had never intended to come to Illinois for the hearing in the first place. Hale was going to have another attorney in Chicago handle the case.

"Why have Jim as my attorney if he's not even going to come to Illinois?" Hale said. "The whole point was to have him argue on my behalf. I think it surprised him I didn't hire him. I think he's disappointed, but that's too bad."

"I didn't like his attitude or approach. I wanted to have an

Landlord/tenant task force to be announced tonight

Proposed members of the long-awaited landlord/tenant task force will be presented at tonight's City Council meeting after the council decided to form the task force at its March 30 meeting.

According to City Manager Jeff Doherty, the new task force will consist of the members of the original task force, which consisted of 10 Carbondale property owners, and will be expanded from there.

As of Monday, Doherty said the task force was still being worked on, but he expected there to be something for the mayor to present to the City Council at its meeting.

The Carbondale City Council will meet tonight at 7 at City Hall, 200 S. Illinois Ave.

Transforming rabbit hair into clothing

ERIN FAFOGLIA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Two massive amounts of fur resembling cotton powder-puffs hop around the floor while curiously wriggling their gray noses.

Dressed in her own angora-fur cardigan creation, Janneke Resnick, a resident of Carbondale, places several items she has made from her rabbits' fur on the coffee table.

Gus Bode

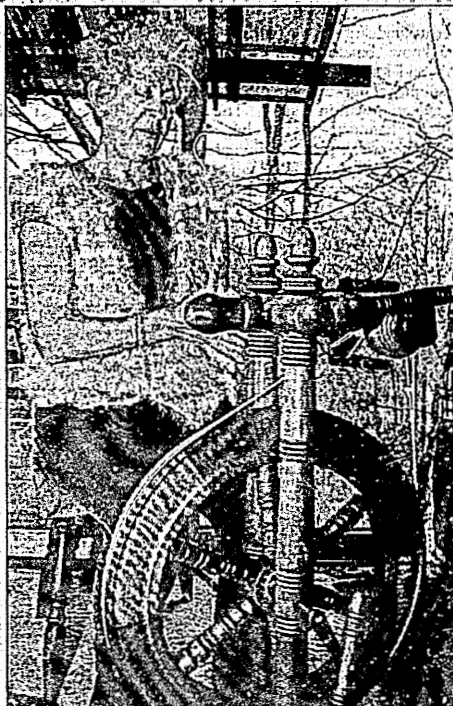

Gus says: I would wear this, but it's hotter than hell in all of the campus buildings.

"It is so soft and luxurious," Resnick said. "Nothing compares to 100-percent real angora rabbit fur."

Resnick, originally from Holland, was first taught how to spin with sheep wool. She began spinning angora fur 15 years ago in her native land and said it has become her specialty.

"I needed a hobby that was fun because my kids were growing up and moving out," Resnick said. "I wanted to make something from scratch."

Joan Lintault, professor of textile design and weaving, said she has seen Resnick's work and thinks highly of it.

Presentation to explain where you can spit in Jewish temple

NICOLE A. CASHAW
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Every culture enforces laws governing people's actions, and the Jewish culture is no different. They administer specific rules, such as where to spit in the temple.

"Jewish law regulates a large component of people's behavior," said Mark Schneider, assistant professor in sociology. "It's so expensive and so explicit that it specifically explains that if you have to spit, where to spit in the temple."

At noon Tuesday at the Student Center in the Thebes Room, Schneider will present a lecture titled "Where to Spit in Temple: Sociological Perspectives on the

Code of Jewish Law

Schneider said the focus of the talk is to explain the distinctiveness of Jewish laws as it applies primarily to Orthodox Jews.

"Spitting is one tiny example of Jewish law," he said. "It also includes criminal, civil and ritual law. [Spitting] is just a way to catch people's interests in the expansiveness and the explicitness of the law. Where to spit in the temple is part of the ritual component."

Schneider's presentation is part of Jewish Awareness Month and the Faculty Brown Bag Lunch series sponsored by the Hillel Foundation at SIUC.

Schneider's wife, Joan Friedenberg, said she is excited about her husband's presentation for three reasons.

"First, it is my husband," she said. "Second, the topic is very interesting because it's something a lot of people don't know about and it's specialized and detailed. Third, it's Jewish Awareness Month."

Friedenberg, a professor in linguistics, said she finds her husband's topic intriguing because it includes everything about Jewish people's mannerisms, including the three aspects to being Jewish.

"One is the law — how we behave, another one is the spiritual part, and the third is people hood in our community — being helpful and faithful to the community," Friedenberg said.

"The laws are interesting because it covers everything about our behavior," she said. "He uses [spit] as an example to show how specific it gets."

Friedenberg also mentioned the celebration of the Sabbath as being pertinent to Jewish life.

"The Sabbath is the day of rest and a solemn gathering perceived as sacred to God by Jews and some Christian churches on the seventh day of the week from sunset Friday until sunset Saturday."

"Celebrating the Sabbath means we take off for Saturday," Friedenberg said. "The Sabbath is a very important thing in Jewish life. Honoring and protecting Israel is important and doing good deeds. These are three very important things for us."

Schneider said this particular topic is significant to him because it is one he wrote about in his master's thesis in 1968. Tuesday will mark the first time he presents it to an audience.

"This is a forum to discuss problems, issues and topics of interest both to Jews and the wider community," Schneider said.

"As part of Jewish Awareness Month, we hope to explain something about Jewish customs and help people understand Judaism."

Iowa students involved in murder mystery

Three students at the University of Iowa have told police they don't know how two women they don't know wound up dead in their apartment, which apparently was set on fire to destroy any evidence.

It's a case filled with twists and turns. Given the accounts of the victims' friends and family, officers have concluded that the women, Laura Watson Dalton and Maria Therese Lehner, didn't even know each other.

Whether they died together and how they wound up in the apartment is a mystery.

All that's known for sure is that both women died from multiple blows to the head and were found March 19 in the gutted apartment.

Students renting the apartment told police they weren't at home at the time of the slayings. Two were away for spring break, and one has been studying abroad for the semester.

Neighbors told investigators that they heard male voices coming from the apartment but assumed it was the students who live there.

NAFTA

A Short History of the Balkans

Our Word

On the right track for four-year graduation

When your four-year university graduation rate is barely over 10 percent, you know something is wrong. SIUC recognized this and formed a sub-committee to research the possibility of implementing a program guaranteeing graduation within four years. Now, as the final details are hammered out, the sub-committee is preparing to send a recommendation to the Campus Council for the Undergraduate Experience before Chancellor Jo Ann Argersinger and interim Provost Thomas Guemsey are appealed for final approval of the SIUC version of the GradTrac program Western Illinois University adopted in Fall 1998.

Despite initial concerns from academic advisers, the graduation guarantee program looks like it will be approved, and the DAILY EGYPTIAN encourages such action. The program will aid the University in its recruitment and retention goals and bolster our image as the four-year graduation rate rises.

So what changes after the program is approved? Well, no currently enrolled student will see any direct benefit, but academic advisement should be improved through more consistent, in-depth interaction with students. Incoming freshman with a pre-determined vision of their future contribution to society will be ensured of graduation within four years.

To take a broad look at the program, it's not going to hurt the University. If nothing else, it will put the heat on academic advisers to take a genuine interest in their students and do their job. Yes, a student should be responsible for figuring out what coursework is required for their degree, but academic advisers are supposed to help with that. Judging from the recent academic adviser evaluation sheets being past out at advisement appointments and the past student input sessions that have been held to try and improve advisement, advisers are coming up short on their end of the work.

This program will put a set of high-beams on advisers because if a person in the four-year graduation program doesn't finish in four years, the initial burden of proof will be on the advisers to show why. There are still some areas that need to be tightened up before the program is implemented such as the determination of fault when a student in the program doesn't graduate on time, but in the end more students will come to a University with a program that will put them through the system with a guarantee for a timely diploma.

Realistically, the guarantee program only will benefit a select number of students that come to college knowing what they want to do in life and stick with it all four years, but those individuals will be rewarded for their planning. If the only final outcome is better academic advisement, the program will be worth the implementation, that in itself will help retention and four-year graduation rates.

As a business and a University, we must be able to offer a product that will draw customers. Our product is knowledge and a degree, and our customers are students who don't want to spend the rest of their lives in school. SIUC's version of GradTrac will help the University become a better institution for learning. Any program that can improve recruitment and retention is good for the University, especially at a time when our four-year graduation rate is so poor. If other Universities are going to adopt this program, then SIUC needs it to stay competitive.

Watch out world, here we come

"The United States can't police the world." You've heard this phrase, right?

Every time anything very exciting happens, some schmo comes up with the token response so that people know what to say in their "man-on-the-street" interviews. I guess this started in the '60s when those phrases actually sounded a little catchy. Now, they just bore me to the brink of taking my own life.

The way I see it, the U.S., along with other countries, has been policing the world for some time. Years ago, South Africa's white minority was applying separate laws to black citizens. The U.S. had a hand in ending the oppression by refusing to trade with the South African government. Long before we bombed Iraq the first time, sanctions were applied — some of which are yet to be lifted. We stopped trading with Libya when they refused to return American prisoners.

I don't have a problem with this type of policing the world: I do believe that to trade with a country is to endorse their policies. To take that philosophy, though, is to make trade a weapon.

citizen of almost every country able to share information. In 1998, the most popular phrase was "world economy." We have organizations like the United Nations, agreements like NAFTA (North America Free Trade Agreement), distinctions such as Most Favored Nations Status. Countries are just not going to interact this much without rules.

What I'm getting at here is that "world police" are shockingly inevitable. We aren't on our own anymore. Lately, I can't tell where the U.S. stops and China begins.

Although I would like it to stop at sanctions, what happens when the country ignores the sanctions? This is the slipperiest of slopes and, baby, we're halfway there.

So what do we do? Do we dig our heels into the ground like Southern Baptists at a Planned Parenthood meeting? Do we send National Guard to China to direct traffic? Hell, I don't know.

I do know that the U.S. can, in fact, police the world. And it's going to happen more and more. Blame the economists, this all started with money.

Just to clarify, this isn't an argument for the current conflict in Yugoslavia. It is an argument against one argument against the war. Although we are heading toward worldwide regulation, each situation is judged on its own merits. As for me, my jury is still bickering about this one. I like to wait until it's over and then choose the right side. Then, I like to send hourly e-mails to the White House saying, "I told you so." Then I like to hide from the Secret Service when they come to my door.

All I ask is that the "man-on-the-street" be more creative. Do you really want to spend your 15 seconds of fame mumbling that same stupid phrase that the last guys said?

Killing death of student is a senseless tragedy

Dear Editor,

I heard tonight (Sunday) about the murder of my friend and fellow administration of justice student Michael Sasso Saturday night. I, first of all, am devastated.

To those of us who knew him and were friends with him, this is a shock and a horrible tragedy. Mike was getting ready to celebrate his 21st birthday and was full of plans for a future in federal law enforcement. He was a person of great character and a friend to all those who would befriend him back.

Though I only knew him, for one year, I was privileged to be able to spend the last two semesters in classes with him, hanging out with him and working with him on school projects.

My point in all of this, besides the fact that Mike truly deserves the recognition that should be granted to him as a friend to so many, is that this was a completely senseless and cowardly crime on the part of Mike's murderer.

We all make mistakes, and Mike was not free of those either, but he was an intelligent, honorable and sensitive young man with many aspirations for his future.

The man who so heinously took his life Saturday night should have known what he was taking from me and so many others who cared for him.

There is so much violence these days, and Mike was one of the few who wanted to change that.

He wanted to work for the law, the people and the rights of American citizens. Because of bad judgment on his part, and because he was a young college student acting upon urges and temptations, he is no longer here. That is just not fair!

We all make mistakes and many of us make much worse ones than Mike did, but NONE of us deserve to pay with our lives.

I just hope that those who knew Mike have had the chance to know him for the wonderful person that he was, and for those who did not have the privilege of knowing him that message might somehow get through.

There has been enough senseless violence and there are better ways to deal with our anger than this.

If the man who was so hateful as to take the life of my friend had just accepted these things, Mike Sasso would be on his way to class with me again Tuesday. The violence just has to stop.

Input should have been sought in grad dean search

Dear Editor,

A great wrong has been committed. Recently, the decision was made to replace Acting Dean Richard Falvo with another person in the acting dean position.

This decision to replace Acting Dean Falvo with another acting dean was made with no broad solicitation of input from the University community on which to base the decision.

Further, unlike the process used in engineering to replace an acting dean with another acting dean, there was:

- NO solicitation of the University community for people interested in applying for the position;

- NO vote on who the new acting dean should be by those directly affected by the decision — the staffs of the Graduate School and its reporting units; and,

- NO discussion with the staffs of the Graduate School and its reporting units on the proposed change in their administrative leader.

This decision to replace Acting Dean Richard Falvo was hasty, poorly planned and creates an environment of distrust and low morale amongst those with whom the new acting dean must work most closely.

We believe that Acting Dean Falvo should remain in his position until a credible process used to make other recent acting dean decisions has been followed.

This letter also was signed by 17 others.

Program could make Southern Illinois an economic player

JAY SCHWAB
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

In a case of better late than never, the state Senate unanimously approved a bill March 25 that would initiate tax breaks for businesses locating in select regions of Illinois — a plan that should be particularly beneficial to economic growth in areas like Southern Illinois, legislators say.

The proposal will be eligible for consideration in the House, where it is also expected to pass, when the General Assembly reconvenes from its brief recess April 14.

Bordering states such as Indiana, Missouri, Kentucky and Iowa already offer businesses similar incentive programs.

Gov. George Ryan's Economic Development for a Growing Economy (EDGE) Tax Credit Act was co-sponsored as SB-40 by 55th District State Sen. Frank Watson, R-Greenville, and 57th District State Sen. James Clayborne, D-East St. Louis.

If the House sends the legislation to Ryan for his signature, businesses creating at least 25 jobs and making a minimum capital investment of $5 million will be eligible for state income tax credits equal to a portion of the incremental income tax generated from the new jobs.

The legislation ensures the new jobs are created before a company receives any tax rebates.

Clayborne said regions of Illinois near other states already offering an incentive program, such as Southern Illinois, have much to gain from the legislation.

"This can make Illinois more competitive with surrounding states," Clayborne said. "It should help us keep jobs here, as well as to attract new ones."

"We're hoping that this will help border areas and other areas where economic development is necessary," he said.

Ryan repeatedly expressed support for a

Bridge over troubled intersection

PARTNERSHIP:

Pedestrian overpass to be built mostly out of composite materials.

TRAVIS MORSE
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A new pedestrian bridge linking the Engineering and Neckers Buildings on campus was approved by the SIU Board of Trustees March 11.

Max Yen, director of the Materials Technology Center, and his organization are conducting a study to finalize the shape and type of location of the $1.2-million bridge.

Yen is also applying for grants from the Illinois Department of Transportation and other organizations to help pay for the bridge.

The bridge, titled the Partnership Bridge, will be unique in the sense that it will be built almost entirely out of composite materials like glass fiber epoxy and carbon epoxy.

Yen said there are two major advantages in using these kinds of materials.

"For one thing, it is lightweight material so it can hold more weight," Yen said. "Secondly, the material has much better resistance to the environment than a conventional steel or concrete bridge."

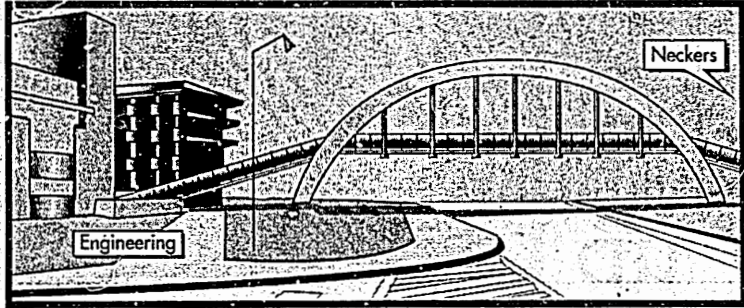

Initially, the purpose of the bridge was to make the crowded intersection between the Engineering and Neckers Buildings safer for pedestrians.

However, Yen also sees this project as an opportunity for educational growth at the University.

"The primary emphasis is to resolve the traffic problem, but I believe we can take advantage of the technology, too," Yen said. "I think the bridge can be used as an instruction and research tool for students in the College of Engineering and the College of Science."

Yen hopes the bridge can become a kind of living laboratory where students can study the bridge over time and see how these new composite materials are affected by the environment.

He also said the students and teachers should be able to create a developmental document on how the bridge was built and how it fares over time.

By Jason Adams / Daily Egyptian

In addition, Yen believes the Partnership Bridge can help engineers in the future build more efficient bridges with these new and improved materials.

The bridge should be completed by June 30, 2002. Yen said the biggest challenge will be in the planning of the project.

"The most challenging part of this project will be coming up with a design criteria for the bridge,"

Yen said. "The key is to develop a well-thought-out equation that anticipates any possible problems."

The next step, Yen said, is to wait for the grant money to come through so the MTC can start initiating the design process with a contractor. He said building this bridge will be a step in the right direction for SIUC.

"Just to have the bridge built will be a success, but I believe we can build more success beyond the bridge," Yen said. "There are no other composite bridges in this country so having this one will be a very educational experience."

Yen has titled the project the Partnership Bridge because it is a collaboration between many different people in the engineering and science departments, as well as the SIUC administration.

"It is the Partnership Bridge because it will take a lot of goodwill between different departments on campus to make this bridge happen," Yen said.

Students share knowledge learned through experience

BANQUET: Reception honors participants who externed over the past spring break.

TRAVIS MORSE
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The SIU Alumni Association sponsored a reception last Tuesday to honor students who took part in the Extern Program during spring break.

Since 1984, the Extern Program has offered students a chance to spend one week as externs at professional businesses in their area of interest.

Lori Nichols, extern coordinator, said the program seems to be getting more popular with students.

"This year we had the most applications we've ever had — about 300," Nichols said. "I think students are very interested in getting a taste of what a real-life, professional work environment is like."

Nichols said the program also allows students to gain valuable contacts in their future profession.

"It's a very productive alternative to spring break," Nichols said. "A lot of students get offers for a summer internship, and some even get offered future employment at a company."

Nichols said she is not surprised by the number of students offered future jobs because the SIU Alumni Association performs an extensive screening process on applicants beforehand.

In order to qualify for the Extern Program, a student has to go through two interviews, get two letters of recommendation and maintain a minimum grade point average of 2.0.

At the reception, students in the Extern Program divided into their prospective colleges to discuss their experiences with deans and other students in their college.

"The reception gave students the opportunity to talk about their employment experiences," Nichols said. "Most of the feedback was very positive."

Students involved in the program were awarded a certificate of participation and also were registered with University Career Services for a nine-month period, which will help the students when they are in the process of searching for a job.

This year, all eight of the colleges at SIUC took part in the Extern Program. Nichols believes the increasing popularity of the program has to do with giving students what they need to succeed after college.

"The shorter length of the externship — one week — is beneficial to students who don't have time during the school year for an internship," Nichols said. "The Extern Program helps students clarify their goals, and that's why I think it has become so popular."

Greg Scott, assistant director of public and alumni relations, agrees the program has steadily become more noticed as the years go by.

"I think it has continued to grow over the years," Scott said. "It assists students in affirming the profession they want, and also if they find they don't like the job, they still have time to change their course of action."

Because of the program's popularity, Nichols said the SIU Alumni Association is hoping to expand the Extern Program in the future.

"We're going to look for ways to expand the program because the interest is there," Nichols said. "We would like to have not only more people on the program here at the college but also more business people willing to sponsor students."

"Putting office space in there will just kill it faster."
"We need to make the mall interactive and entertaining, someplace family-oriented that will bring in anchor stores."
Taylor said increased travel opportunities are also important.
"Basically anything ... better than what we have now, that's a vast improvement," Taylor said.
Taylor said he has increased voter turnout simply by running.
"Right now it's a clothespin election," Taylor said. "The people who will turn out to vote for me are those who wouldn't have otherwise participated, who would have stayed at home."

He is also a deputy registrar within Jackson County.
As for his four tigers, Taylor expounded on rental housing at a press conference Monday afternoon.
Using a dwelling at 407 W. Cherry St. as an example of both how bad housing can become and what can be done to remedy the situation, Taylor advocated changes in housing and stressed the importance of the renters in the process.
"These kids got their house fixed because of their 'polite, direct and relentless' pursuit of change through proper channels," Taylor said.
"Despite the cowardly actions of the Carbondale City Council, there are still alternatives," he said.

Taylor said he will continue to pursue the tigers after the elections, with emphasis on Halloween and the size of city council. He said he intends to circulate a petition regarding the city council size and is considering forming a Registered Student Organization to tackle the Halloween issue.
Taylor, whose past political endeavors have included a campaign for Undergraduate Student Government president and a push against the increase in the athletic fee on campus as a spokesman for Students Organized Against the Athletic Fee Increase (SOAFI), said he has always been and will remain an activist.
"I'm here to see that the issues get out," Taylor said.

attorney that was more on my side."
He has found an attorney that may be more on his side. He has since hired St. Louis attorney Robert Herman of Schwartz, Herman and Davidson. Herman has handled at least two free-speech cases for the Ku Klux Klan.
Herman defended the KKK Realm of Missouri in December when they sued a St. Louis public radio station for not accepting a subscription-drive gift to sponsor its news program "All Things Considered."
The U.S. District Court ruled that the state-owned radio station is not required to accept underwriting support from the KKK. However, Herman will try to appeal the decision.
"The hypocrisy of the situation intrigues me," Herman told the Washington Post. "They would allow a Mercedes dealer to sponsor the program, the NAACP, B'nai B'rith, and all of a sudden they're asserting editorial policy against the Klan. What would stop them from saying, 'we don't like Jews, either?' Nothing."

In a similar case, Herman defended the Missouri Klan when the State of Missouri refused to allow the Klan's application to adopt a highway.
Herman commented Monday that he has often defended those whose rights have been denied. Often these organizations or individuals have opinions that are not popular, but he said he needs to preserve their right to express it. The Jewish attorney does not share Hale's political or ideological views.
Hale's appeal will take place at 9:30 a.m. at the River Valley Detention Center in Joliet April 10.

According to Hale, the case is easy to prepare for because there is a lot of First Amendment precedent.
"I expect to win," said Hale. "I think that if they follow the law, I'll win. The law is clearly on my side here."
Herman cautiously shares Hale's optimism.
"Based on the law, he should get his law license," Herman said. "His right to be free of government interference based on his beliefs is well established."
Hale plans to defend himself with a 1971 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that states no one can inquire about a bar applicant's political beliefs.
The East Peoria native contends that he never should have been asked about his political beliefs, and any inquiry into those beliefs was improper.
"He will ultimately prevail," Herman said.

Job hunting made a little bit easier

WORKFORCE: Three week old listserv exposes students to the benefits of SIUC Career Services.

ASTARIA L. DILLARD
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Informing students about job information on the Internet is why University Career Services started a listserv for SIUC students, faculty and staff three weeks ago.

The new listserv will provide information for students about job opportunities, how to complete resumes and talk about job experiences.

Jamie Thomas, a graduate student in workforce education and development from Mt. Vernon, created the listserv.

"I thought this was a good way to get exposure for career services," she said. "I think a lot of people, especially students, don't know about career services, so through listserv we can get discussions going with students, faculty and staff."

Dianna Reusch, Career Services specialist, said Career Services is trying to make the University more aware of services that it offers.

"It has been said in the past that Career Services is one of the best kept secrets on campus," Reusch said. "We are trying to change that."

She said they were also looking for a project that would benefit SIUC students as well as help Thomas understand what a professional in career services does.

Reusch said Thomas did most of the work, including sending e-mails to all the department chairs and deans about joining the listserv.

James Scales, director of University Career Services, said the new listserv will benefit students because it will give them all the information they need on how to do resumes and get jobs.

He said students will be able to get information on their services, but they can also get information for themselves.

"Listserv is good because it gives a good communication link with the student body," Scales said. "Students can actually learn from each other."

Scales said the listserv is also an advantage to students because it enables them to ask professors questions about topics discussed in class without feeling uncomfortable.

LISTSERV
• To be added to the listserv, faculty or staff need to send an e-mail to jamie@career-services.net and state in the subject line "add to listserv."

Law school deans speak out about 'U.S. News' rankings

THREE IN A ROW: Placement in magazines guide disputed by Tom Guernsey, 167 other law school deans.

FRANK KIJMAS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The U.S. News and World Report 2000 Best Graduate Schools guide again ranked SIUC School of Law on the third tier list, which places them among 45 other schools in the

No. 87 to 131 range of 181 U.S. law schools.

Despite this ranking for at least three years, enrollment has not suffered according to Michael Ruiz, SIUC assistant dean for admissions and student affairs.

However, this ranking has been repeatedly disputed not only by SIUC Law School Dean Tom Guernsey but also by 167 other law school deans.

The ranking takes 12 measures of academic quality and determines a weighted average. The top schools are ranked from one to 50. The 131 remaining schools are distributed between three additional lists called tiers.

Most law school deans dispute the importance of the measures and believe they are arbitrary. They argue that it is not possible to rank every law school in the country by the same standard.

"For a practitioner sitting in Florida to rate a law school in Washington is simply ludicrous," Guernsey said. "I'm a dean of one of these schools, and I don't have sufficient information [to rank them]."

The largest measure, reputation, represents

Although Resnick is the only person in the surrounding area who knits angora items, Lintault said she has seen the craft everywhere.

"I've met several people who do this," Lintault said. "It's very time-consuming."

The process of spinning and knitting angora fur is not difficult, but what makes it expensive and unique is the effort put into the care of the rabbits, Lintault said.

"What makes rabbit hair so exclusive is the care," Lintault said. "It has to be collected over the years, and they have to be combed daily."

The items knitted are made in a humanitarian way, which Resnick said makes her designs more special.

"Unlike most real-fur products, the nice part is you don't have to kill for it," Resnick said.

The bunnies' fur is collected every six months by grooming, a process that loosens and sheds the fur. Large clumps can then be pulled out easily by hand.

A large female rabbit sits calmly on Resnick's lap as she demonstrates the process.

"I don't have to pull hard because it is very loose," Resnick said. "Her hair is very ripe to come out."

The fur Resnick uses is never colored, so it stays as soft as it was on the rabbit.

A spinning wheel is first used to prepare the fur for knitting.

"Spinning is twisting the fibers into one another," Resnick said. "[The spinning wheel] is very ingenious."

As an even amount of hair is fed into the spindle, the thread is twisted into a ball. The threaded fur does not look as fuzzy as it did before being spun, but it fluffs up to normal size after a few inches of knitting.

Resnick also uses a model ancient Navajo spinner she made out of an incense burner and a dowel (a disk of heavy wood).

"It takes longer to do this way, so I use it mostly to demonstrate," Resnick said.

Resnick has demonstrated her talent in the "Past to Present Festival" in Harrisburg for the past 10 years, as well as the John A. Logan General Museum in Murphysboro and in many public school classes.

"I've seen Resnick's demonstrations, and she has made beautiful things with it," Lintault said.

"Many of the boys and men seem more interested in the whole technique of spinning and knitting than girls," Resnick said. "They're so curious as to exactly how it works."

Commercial angora is cut shorter and mixed with another fiber, such as lamb's wool, before spinning. Resnick said this can make the material itchy, whereas 100-percent angora fur is soft.

"It keeps you very warm because the wind does not go through it, and it does not shed either," Resnick said as she brushes the sweater she is wearing without fear of fur falling off.

Resnick gives her work away as presents and said she continues to get better at her designs. The process is not only rewarding thoughtfully for Resnick but also spiritually.

"It is very peaceful," Resnick said. "If I sit and spin for 20 minutes before I go to bed, it completely relaxes and quiets me down."

Sabbatical leave lets staff expand their horizons

RESEARCH: Professors get a break from teaching to pursue professional growth.

RHONDA SCIARRA
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A 21-foot aluminum sculpture lays on its side outside the SIUC School of Art and Design's Foundry waiting for finishing touches before being displayed in July at the Laumeier Sculpture Park in St. Louis.

Its sculptor, Tom Walsh, might never have been able to finish the project without a year of sabbatical leave in San Jose, Calif.

Sabbatical leave provides faculty members with paid time away from a teaching setting for continued professional growth and extensive research in new fields of study.

Tenured, full-time members of the academic faculty are eligible to apply for sabbatical leave after six years of service to the University.

John Jackson, vice chancellor of Academic Affairs and provost, said the concept of sabbatical leave is traditional among institutes of higher learning and gives faculty members a block of time to further the next phase of their careers.

"Once every six or seven years a faculty member is allowed time away from their day-to-day duties to refresh in one's discipline in order to intensify and develop research," Jackson said.

Walsh, a professor in the School of Art and Design, spent a year from fall 1997 until fall 1998 in San Jose, Calif., working in his own studio daily. Walsh had access to art and design facilities at San Jose State University, where he casted molds for his work.

His reasons for taking the year of leave at half pay included his desire to finish five large sculpture pieces, do a series of 38 large drawings and work on new pieces.

"I needed to devote a big block of time to my work," he said. "Being in a studio, all day, every day, was a vacation to me. It was very hard to come back."

Walsh said although he missed some aspects of teaching while in California, the year gave him a break from administrative hassles.

"I missed teaching and the students," he said. "What I didn't miss was the committee work and politics."

Walsh said taking the chance to devote some time to himself on sabbatical made his transition back to SIUC smoother.

"It's a period of time to replenish your juices — you can burn out very easily," Walsh said. "You come back to work refreshed and ready to deal with students."

Sarah Blackstone, chairwoman of the Theater Department, is taking her first sabbatical leave. While she currently is researching popular entertainment theater, she also takes time to stop in and say "hi" to co-workers at SIUC.

Blackstone spent the first five weeks of the spring semester in Mexico observing outdoor festivals in Mexico City, Oaxaca and other small villages. Her experiences included a large outdoor festival in downtown Mexico City and a small celebration of a Zapotec Indian village in honor of its patron saint.

"The whole trip was a valuable experience," she said. "It is something I can't gain in my normal day-to-day duties of my job."

She said her observations in Mexico add to her ability to teach her students at SIUC from a more diversified point of view.

"I can bring my experiences back to my students," Blackstone said. "They can see how theater is unique and how it is used by different cultures."

Blackstone said being away from the University has its drawbacks, including feeling "disconnected."

"I am used to knowing everything that goes on within the department," she said. "When you are on sabbatical, you are out of that loop."

"You do not realize when you start your sabbatical everything is going to go on without you."

New Media Center could be a ship with no captain

EMPTY SPOT: After current director steps down, center could be left leaderless.

TRAVIS MORSE
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Budgetary constraints may hinder the College of Mass Communication and Media Arts' plan to hire a permanent New Media Center director when the acting director, Peter C. Riley, steps down in December 1999.

The SIUC faculty contract requires a 5-percent pay raise each year. All of the colleges are then required to come up with the money to pay for the pay raise.

MCMA was informed it would have to give back 1 percent of the budget for the fiscal year 2000.

Jyokita Ramaprasad, associate dean of MCMA, said this could possibly jeopardize the New Media Center's future.

"This is not easy for us," Ramaprasad said. "We want to have a permanent New Media Center director, but unless we get new money we won't have enough to pay them."

"At the end of last semester, Robert Cook stepped down as the New Media Center director and is now the assistant director of the medical library at the SIUC School of Medicine.

Riley, an associate professor in communications, then replaced Cook on a temporary basis. He will be stepping down from the position to focus on his teaching responsibilities.

Ideally, MCMA would like to hire a permanent New Media Center director who is an administrative professional rather than a member of the faculty. This would allow the director to concentrate on running the center and not on teaching and making tenure.

"We would like to find someone who will be able to administer the New Media Center, get new grants and contracts and possibly do Outreach programs for the community," Ramaprasad said.

The provost's office at SIUC has asked officials at MCMA to fill out an impact statement indicating how much the 1-percent budget reduction might harm MCMA.

Ramaprasad said the New Media Center situation will be a major part of that document.

Riley said the New Media Center is vital to many colleges on the campus that need the technology. The Center provides a multitude of innovative multimedia software such as the Yield CD that was used for student recruitment.

Riley fears that without a director, the whole program might be in danger of closing down.

"The director is a position that provides vision and leadership," Riley said. "Without that position, it's just hardware and machines."

Riley said the impact statement may be the key to showing the University how important it is to fill the permanent director position.

"Between the impact statement and its justification, I feel the importance of the position will be seen by the University," Riley said.

As of right now, the future of the New Media Center is unclear. According to MCMA Dean Joe Foote, the permanent New Media Center director is the only open position for which MCMA is not carrying out an active search.

40 percent of the school's ranking. The Law School continues to lose points in this area because it is only 25 years old, Guernsey explained.

The "specialty" ranking is also based on reputation.

The next largest ranking, selectivity, is based on a median of entering students' Law School Admission Test Scores and represents 25 percent.

The deans from Yale, Harvard and Stanford University law schools, the top three ranked law schools in the country, also have signed the letter protesting the validity and usefulness of the U.S. News ranking.

A letter endorsed by 168 law school deans was published in February. They argue that these ranking systems are inherently flawed because none of them can take students' special needs and special circumstances into account when comparing law schools.

"People have individual reasons why they pick a particular law school," Ruiz said. "This is not the information students are looking for. I've never heard anyone ask if we are second tier or third tier."

"The listserv takes a lot of that pressure away from asking a question in front of the entire class," he said. Thomas said she has received 120 to 150 respondents to the listserv.

She said some professors have forwarded the listserv information to their students and they have asked to be included. Reusch said she would like to see the listserv used for discussion purposes and conveying information.

"Listserv is a way of conveying information about job fairs, new websites, seminars, on-campus interviews, internships and other opportunities," Reusch said.

Scales said the listserv should open up a lot of information avenues for students. He said students have a chance to see it and talk back.

"We're trying to use any avenue that will work to put the information in the students hands," he said. "In the long run it helps to make our students more marketable in their field."

Netters find greener grass in Memphis

Salukis turn 5-4 in their favor

PAUL WLEKUNSKI
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

The grass is not always greener on the other side. The SIUC women's tennis team has proven the fable wrong in recent weeks.

The Salukis suffered six 5-4 losses in the 1998 fall season in which they posted a 4-11 mark. This season, the Salukis are reveling in greener pastures after last weekend's two 5-4 victories before dropping a 6-3 decision in Memphis.

SIUC improved to 7-5 overall and 1-1 in the Missouri Valley Conference this season.

"Last year we had a lot of 5-4 losses, and it was discouraging," SIUC coach Judy Auld said. "But this year, we have been 3-3 in 5-4 matches."

The Salukis picked up both wins Friday, defeating Northeastern Oklahoma State University and the University of Memphis. The 6-3 loss Saturday came at the hands of Troy State University.

Freshmen (No. 1) Simona Petrutiu and (No. 6) Monica Villarreal and sophomore (No. 5) Kerri Crandall all earned victories to begin doubles play at 3-3. The Salukis would need two of the three doubles matches to win.

They did just that when freshman Pamela Floro teamed up with Petrutiu for an 8-4 victory in No. 1 doubles. Villarreal and Crandall also picked up a needed victory posting an 8-6 win.

"Northeastern Oklahoma is a larger for the Salukis, as they trailed Memphis 4-2 after singles action. The Salukis would need all three matches for the win.

"Once again, the doubles teams came through under pressure. Petrutiu and Floro (No. 1 doubles) took an 8-3 win, freshmen Erika Ochoa and Teryn Esrock (No. 2 doubles) pulled out with an 8-6 win, and Crandall and Villarreal (No. 3 doubles) did the same with an 8-5 score.

"We had really been struggling at No. 2, but they, stepped it up and came through for us."

The Salukis would need a repeat performance Saturday when facing Troy State. They began doubles play, trailing 4-2, once again, but managed only one win when Petrutiu and Floro combined forces for an 8-5 score.

Petrutiu finished the weekend 3-0 for the second consecutive week in both singles and doubles play and has improved to 29-3 in her stay at SIUC.

Petrutiu and doubles partner Floro have a 25-5 doubles record in just their first year at SIUC.

"Unbelievable," Auld said. "That's what it is."

The Salukis return to MVC action today against the University of Evansville in Evansville, Ind.

"Evansville is usually strong and has a tradition of being scrappy," Auld said. "We will really need to be pumped up and physically be ready to play."

friend's death, would have shared a class with Sasso today.

"I'm still kind of in shock," she said. "I don't think it's going to hit me until I'm sitting in class and he's not there," Wagner said.

Tamara Garnati also was startled. "I was absolutely devastated," she said. "I have been devastated all day."

Garnati, remembered Sasso's bright demeanor and mature personality.

"You'd never see him once mad or angry," she said. "I was just impressed by his maturity."

Prior to Saturday's stabbing, two Herrin men also were arrested in Thursday's shooting death of 44-year-old Aaron Paul Gregory.

Joey D. Valco, 26, and Michael E. Harris, 30, are being held in Williamson County Jail without bond. Harris said Monday in court that he plans to defend himself, and Valco asked for a public defender. State's Attorney Garnati said county officials will be bogged down with work because of the crimes.

"These things go in cycles," he said. "I don't believe we've had a murder in Williamson County in about seven or eight months. And unfortunately now we have two in three days."

situation" and that Crutchfield also was suspected of home invasion.

Garnati did say that one other person, who likely will not face any charges in relation to the homicide, was at the residence.

"And beyond that I can't release any names at this point."

But Garnati's ex-wife, Tamara Garnati, a junior in administration of justice and a friend of Sasso, said she asked her ex-husband about a motive for the crime.

"I didn't know he was dating a married woman until I called my ex-husband last night and wanted to know why," she said.

She said her ex-husband confirmed that Sasso was with the woman in her residence when Crutchfield came home and found the two together.

"They say murder is a crime of passion," Tamara Garnati said. "And apparently that's true in this case. It was the spouse who came in and killed him."

"I'm sure he ran for his life," Tamara Garnati said. "From my understanding, it was in the neighbor's yard (where Sasso was found). He had run near a neighbor's porch and collapsed, and a neighbor found him."

On Monday, Crutchfield, who said in court he pays 30 percent of his $10-per-hour job to child support, sat shackled at his ankles in a Williamson County Courtroom afternoon with his face twitching and eyes rapidly blinking as charges against him were read by Judge John Speroni.

Dressed in a bright orange Williamson County jumpsuit, Crutchfield squeaked out answers of "yes" to let Speroni know he understood the charges against him and asked that he be appointed a public defender.

Speroni ordered Williamson County Public Defender Larry Broeking in defense.

Crutchfield faces the death penalty if convicted of the charges. A preliminary hearing is set for April 26 at 1:15 p.m.

He will be held without bond in Williamson County Jail.

Wagner said the relationship between Sasso and the woman began a few weeks ago and that Sasso had not said too much about the affair to friends.

"It was a fairly new relationship," Wagner said. "He had told another couple of our friends last week a little bit about the relationship."

Tamara Garnati said the relationship may not have been in Sasso's best interest but that Crutchfield's alleged crime was definitely not justified.

"What he (Sasso) did was morally and ethically wrong, but he didn't deserve to die for it," she said.

Wagner and Tamara Garnati said they lost a close companion in the murder.

"He was a pretty good friend," Wagner said. "He was just a really humorous and a nice guy."

Garnati agreed.

"It just broke my heart," she said. "He was just so sweet and so cute and so full of life."

Wagner, who remains torn about her friend's death, would have shared a class with Sasso today.

"I'm still kind of in shock," she said. "I don't think it's going to hit me until I'm sitting in class and he's not there," Wagner said.

Tamara Garnati also was startled. "I was absolutely devastated," she said. "I have been devastated all day."

Garnati, remembered Sasso's bright demeanor and mature personality.

business incentive plan during his victorious gubernatorial bid, and Ryan spokesman Nick Palazzolo said it is no mistake that the plan is one of the governor's first major initiatives.

"For too long, Illinois has lost out to neighboring states that offer incentives for businesses to locate," Palazzolo said.

State Rep. Mike Bost, R-Murphysboro, of the 115th District, remembered an ethanol plant that nearly located in De Soto but instead opted for greener pastures — and a reduced tax burden — outside of Illinois.

Bost said such missed opportunities will be less prevalent under EDGE and believes northern legislators in the house will join him in support of the program.

"This thing's going to fly, it's going to the governor's desk," Bost predicted. "It's a tremendous step."

Palazzolo was a bit more guarded about EDGE's prospects of becoming law.

"Anything can happen in the course of a General Assembly session," he said. "But certainly the governor is very optimistic."

With EDGE, Palazzolo said Illinois will be on track to "becoming an economic player." He said the program, if adopted, will be especially helpful in economically depressed portions of Southern Illinois.

"This is a targeted program, and Southern Illinois is included in that targeted area," he said.

EDGE also directs the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs to produce a five-year economic development strategy for Illinois.

The legislature has previously entertained ideas of implementing a tax incentive program like EDGE, but former Gov. Jim Edgar made it clear that he would not support such a measure.

But with the change of administrations in January, the Assembly has found an ally in the governor's mansion.

Edgar, who staunchly opposed the idea of using tax rebates to lure businesses to Illinois, unsuccessfully tried to convince his colleagues in neighboring states to resist the temptation of offering tax breaks.

State Sen. Dave Luechtefeld, R-Okawville, of the 58th District, cautioned that EDGE will not immediately cure the area's considerable economic ills but said Southern Illinois will be much more competitive in offering profit-conscious businesses a place to settle.

He added that in the past, the geographic narrowness of Southern Illinois has made the region vulnerable to watching as businesses choose to settle in nearby states.

"If nobody did this, it might be the best of both worlds," Luechtefeld said. "Our neighboring states are doing it, and [EDGE] puts us on a level playing field."

faced — period," Biggs said.

Despite raising their overall ERA to 3.72 during the weekend, the Salukis understand sometimes one team can have a dominance over another that is unexplainable.

"I think sometimes a team can get the b-iter part of you," Biggs said. "They beat us in every aspect of the game this weekend."

• Defense — Two costly mistakes by junior left fielder Scott Boyd on Friday's 9-8 loss and Sunday's 11-2 drubbing potentially cost the Salukis two wins. But the blame cannot be solely placed on Boyd.

The Salukis' defense, which has been iffy all season, committed four errors in the losses. The mistakes leave the team with 53 on the season through 27 games.

"I said all along that we needed to clean up our game or it was going to hurt us," Callahan said. "Prior to this weekend, I thought it was our infield defense that was off at times, but this weekend it was our outfield defense. I don't think it is going to be a persistent problem, but maybe it was just an isolated incident."

• Timely hitting — Surely it was not expected for the Salukis to come up with the two-out-two-strike hits each game, but for the first 24 games, SIUC found ways to combat their opponents' runs with timely hits. Averaging more than eight runs a game before the weekend, the Salukis only managed 13 runs to the Bears' 27.

Trailing 9-8 in Friday's game with right fielder Marty Worsley on second base with one out in the bottom of the ninth inning, SMS pitcher Shayne Ferrer fanned freshman Jeff Stanek and pinch-hitter Luke Nelson to end the game.

In previous situations this season, the Salukis were able to come through with a clutch hit for a victory.

"When you have been as successful as we have with two-out and two-strike hits early this season, what you have to realize is that it is not always going to happen from an offense standpoint," Callahan said.

But beneath every bump is a smoother road.

• Senior Donnie Chester made his '99 debut with a solid outing in Sunday's 7-3 loss. Chester, the only left-handed pitcher for the Salukis, struck out heavy-hitting Matt

Cepicky with a man on second base with two outs to end the sixth inning.

Nelson continued his hitting parade (.429 avg.) with a 3-for-5 performance at the plate while pitching 3 1/3 innings on the mound. He struck out two and allowed one run.

"Luke is a good athlete and does a good job on the mound," Callahan said. "Luke's best ticket for us is to be a pinch hitter and (designated hitter). It's a situation where his best chance to contribute for us is both on the mound and at the bat."

• Senior center fielder Joe Schley surpassed former Saluki Steve Finley in career runs with 176, and junior pitcher Jim Pecoraro became the all-time leader for games pitched with 65 in Sunday's game one loss.

impressed DeNoon with her first individual title in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles (1 minute, 4.15 seconds).

The 4x800 relay also brought SIUC a title, as junior Leah Nolden, freshman Julia Roundtree, junior Joy Cetrano, and senior Leah Steele ran to victory in 9:29.

Junior Felicia Hill and sophomore Hilla Medalia added field victories. Hill won the high jump (5-4), while Medalia took the triple jump (39-4.25).

Meanwhile, the men's team needed a lift from some athletes other than the usual contributors.

On the first day of competition Friday, the team's All-American long-jumper, Brad Bowers, and No. 1 shot-putter, Mike Sandusky, both were disqualified after three fouls each, scoring no points.

"I was pretty disappointed after Friday's performances," head coach Bill Cornell said. "But they came out Saturday and did a good job. I'm pretty happy we came through and won the meet."

SIUC got a lot of help from three relay victories, two in the distance category.

In the 4x1600 race, junior Matt McClelland, senior Jeremy Parks, junior Chris Owen and senior Joseph Parks won with a time of 17:24.53. In the distance medley, Joseph Parks, junior Allen Lakomiak, freshman Joe Zeibert and Jeremy Parks picked up another victory (10:05.84).

The third winning Saluki relay came courtesy of freshman Anthony White, senior Chris Robinson, junior Gerald Henry and senior Romante Archer in the 4x100 (42.02 seconds).

One athlete who particularly was impressed was junior Loren King, who captured the 400-meter intermediate hurdles at 52.96 seconds.

"He's getting better with every meet; he might have a chance to qualify for nationals," Cornell said. "He's living up to his expectations where some are not."

Cornell also was pleased with the performance of sophomore Dan Stone, who set a personal best while winning the pole vault (16 feet).

Other Salukis who racked up valuable points included sophomore Brock Lovelace, who threw a 169-15 in the javelin for second place. Robinson was runner-up in the 100-meter dash (11.16).

Henry added a second place in the long-jump (47-5.75).

GOLF
Women finish 16th in Georgia

The SIUC women's golf team finished 16th out of 18 teams in the Liz Murphley Collegiate Classic in Athens, Ga., during the weekend.

The Salukis shot a three-round total of 979, but only the University of Memphis (981) and the University of North Carolina-Wilmington (984) completed the tournament with lower scores.

The University of Georgia topped the 18-team field with a team total of 872.

Freshman Alison Hillier was the highest Saluki finisher. She tied for 12th place after shooting a 228, finishing nine over par. Sophomore Elizabeth Uthoff finished scored a 241 (58th), while senior Jami Zimmerman (83rd), junior Andrea Walker (87th) and senior Renee Myers (92nd) rounded out the Salukis' finishers.

Smoothing the bumpy road

STORY BY MIKE BJORKLUND

After getting off to a great start, baseball team is now searching for ways back on winning track

Bumps in the road are common. Learning to avoid them takes a little bit of driving experience.

Last season, losing was commonplace for the SIUC baseball team. Losers of three straight games for the first time this season, the Salukis find themselves in unfamiliar territory.

With seven winless streaks of three or more games in 1998, including a 0-6 start, the Salukis are hoping past experiences guide them to a smoother road.

Being swept by Southwest Missouri State University this past weekend at Abe Martin

Field only made SIUC swerve a little off course, but mentioning these unexpected detours are important to ensure safer driving.

Starting pitching — Seniors Jason Frasor (4-0), Adam Biggs (5-3) and Dave Piazza (3-2) all struggled in the losses to SMS. A reluctance to pitch inside to the powerful Bear hitters, according to coach Dan Callanan, was one of the reasons for failure to dominate SMS.

If Southeast Missouri State University wants to showcase its track and field programs at home each April, they need to make a note for next season — don't invite the Salukis.

The SIUC squads combined for 378 points on the weekend — 193 for the women and 185 for the men — in earning double victories at the All Sport Relays in Cape Girardeau, Mo.

SEMO, the hosts, were runners-up in both meets.

The women's team used a good all-around effort to spread points out and pick up the Salukis' first victory of the outdoor season.

SIUC won six individual titles on the weekend. Sophomore Caryn Poliquin staked her claim to two titles, taking the discus (141 feet, 2.25 inches) and the hammer throw (156-3).

"Our strongest person this weekend was Caryn Poliquin," coach Don DeNoon said. "That was just an outstanding day, and she really helped us with the championships."

Sophomore Tawnjai Ames finished second in the shot put with a throw of 46 feet, just ahead of Poliquin's third place throw of 43-01.5.

"Our shot putting took us into first place," DeNoon said. "The meet came right down to the end, and that made the difference."

"We had 20-25 athletes help us score points, and we took 33," DeNoon said. "It was a really good, strong team effort."
