Charges filed in fire tragedy

By Coniie Fritsche
Staff Reporter

State's Attorney Mike Wepsiec announced Monday that he has filed a 10-count charge against Camilla Foulks after the fire at 424 E. Oak St. on Aug. 14 in which eight children were killed.

Foulks, 25, was charged with eight counts of involuntary manslaughter, one count of reckless conduct and one count of endangering the life or health of a child.

Wepsiec said he reached his decision, probably the most difficult he has ever made, after days of carefully reviewing and re-reading reports and interviews.

"I have discussed this case with my staff and have reflected on their thoughts, comments, and suggestions," he said. "And, I have researched the law applicable to the facts as presented to me."

Involuntary manslaughter is defined as a class three felony. Each of the eight counts carries a possible prison sentence of 3 to 7 years. The charges of reckless conduct and endangering the life or health of a child are each class A misdemeanors, which carry a possible sentence of 364 days in the county jail.

Wepsiec said all charges are probational.

"Although nothing I do today will return the eight victims of the fire to their families, I have an obligation to ensure that the law is upheld," he said. "While I am sure that there will be disagreement with my decision, I emphasize that I have thought long and hard about this case and my action on it."

Foulks has been summoned to appear in Jackson County Circuit Court on Sept. 12 at 1 p.m. Wepsiec said that Foulks was summoned to appear instead of being taken into custody because she is in mourning and because she poses no threat to the community, unlike a criminal like a serial rapist.

He said individuals are usually summoned to appear two weeks after notification, but because of the Labor Day holiday, Foulks is not scheduled to appear until the following Monday. Wepsiec said there is no bond set on a summons. He said, in his experience, the judge usually sets a recognizance bond.

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom agreed with Wepsiec's decision to serve Foulks with a summons. "We do know where Foulks is now. I think that she can be adequately served with the papers and we can move this process along."

SIUC students experience first day frustrations

Money, long lines cause anxiety

By Stephanie Moletti
Senior Reporter

The frustration of the first day of college for many students includes waiting in long lines, lack of money for books and just the general overwhelming feeling of a campus the size of SIUC.

But the frustration is intensified when students are new to the campus or when the money some students anxiously await does not come through.

Chastity Bree, a transfer junior from Lincoln who is an undecided major in the health field, had a little bit of everything go wrong on her first day at SIUC.

"It's just the normal run around. I have to watch this film before they will give me my check and changing classes," Bree said. "I like it (SIUC) but this is a pain."

Bree had to change classes, because after being put on a wait list she found she could not get into the class. Then when changing her schedule around on Monday, the lab she needed was closed.

"I had to deal with all of this today (Monday)," Bree said. Stacia McClure, a sophomore in elementary education art from Taylorville said almost everything went smoothly on her first day at SIUC.

"Everything but my beginning swimming class at Pulliam, you have to know the secret code and go through nine miles of mazes to find it," McClure said. "Everyone in the class seemed to be confused too."

McClure said finding a place to park and lock up her bike was also a challenge, along with just riding it.

"Riding my bike has become an

Proposal allocates funds for university pensions

By Marc Chase

SIUC faculty and staff, as well as teachers and professors across the state, no longer need to worry about their retirement pensions not being funded as a result of a bill signed Monday by Gov. Jim Edgar.

State Rep. Gerald Hawkins, D-DuQuoin, co-sponsor of the pension bill, said the bill will help eliminate a $15 billion statewide unfunded liability of retirement money that has not been paid, $3.5 billion of which is unfunded at SIU.

Charles Henderson, former president of the SIUC Emeritus Association and director of the association's board, said the state

Local lawmakers say yes to crime bill

By Dean Weaver

Southern Illinois lawmakers spent Monday afternoon explaining how the recently passed crime bill will affect their constituents and why they voted to pass the controversial legislation.

U.S. Reps. Glenn Poshard, D-III., and Jerry Costello, D-III., both voted for the crime bill that passed the House of Representatives 235 to 195 Sunday evening.

Although Poshard, whose district borders Jackson County, along with Costello, voted for the crime bill, both voted against a procedural motion to bring the bill to the House floor for debate, without allowing changes to the bill.

Poshard said in a Monday afternoon press conference that he voted for the compromised crime bill because it could be paid for by the proposed 270,000 federal employee cut, and it was a well-balanced bipartisan compromise.

Poshard said he voted on Aug. 11 to send the bill back to conference because it included a SEARCH FOR MISSING ENGINEER CALLED OFF — WASHINGTON — After three months of combing the Andes Mountains by air and on foot, the Bolivian government called off its efforts to find Harvey Olem, an environmental engineer from Herndon, Va., whose single-engine plane disappeared May 7 while he was on a mission for the World Bank. U.S. and World Bank officials concurred in the decision to end the search.

HAITIAN REPORTER HIDING FROM SOLDIERS — PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — When he went into hiding three weeks ago to escape soldiers that were after him because of a report he had broadcast over an independent radio station in St. Marc, Ernst Ocean became the most recent Haitian journalist to stop reporting. Ocean reported July 28 that soldiers had sacrificed three alleged supporters of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide in voodoo ceremonies at the St. Marc's army barracks. Ocean is one of nine St. Marc reporters in hiding.

VOTER TURNOUT HIGH IN MEXICAN ELECTION — MEXICO CITY — Tens of millions of Mexicans, discarding their suspicions and fears in favor of guarded hope, poured into schools, private homes, movie theaters and parks Sunday to vote in national elections after six decades of one-party rule. Early exit polls showed the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party's presidential candidate Ernesto Zedillo in the lead, but no official returns were announced Sunday.

RUSSIAN VIEWS REFLECT POLITICAL CHANGE — SARATOV, Russia — Reacting to the economic woes that plague the former Soviet Union as it makes the transition from Communism to democracy, Russian factories are using Western tactics to boost productivity. As merit-based pay scales and managerial training become more prevalent, workers' attitudes are changing to reflect the independent thinking of a more democratic society.

CORPORATION CREATING SELF-GOVERNMENT — MIRAMAR, Fla. — Despite opposition from environmentalists and local landowners, lobbyists for Blockbuster Entertainment Corp. convinced the Florida legislature to give the company powers traditionally limited to popularly elected governments. Blockbuster needed the power to condemn some private land and levy sales and property taxes to build a large sports complex in the swamps northwest of Miami.

REPUBLICANS GAIN STRENGTH ON KEY ISSUES — WASHINGTON — Weakened by President Clinton's victory over George Bush in the 1992 election, Republicans have found themselves wielding increasing power over key issues in the last few weeks. Heavy talk-show criticism of Clinton and recent splits between liberal and conservative Democrats on health care and crime have helped Republican leaders boost their party's popularity while chipping away at Democrats' power.

LAWYER ACCUSED OF STEALING DOCUMENTS — WASHINGTON — Board of Veterans' Appeals attorney Lawrence Gottfried, who handled hundreds of disability-claims cases since 1971, was accused Friday of taking crucial papers from veterans' files to make his job easier. By stealing disability-benefits documents to make files seem incomplete, he could return cases to local veterans' offices. The thefts delayed hundreds of claims, preventing veterans from getting needed benefits. Gottfried faces up to three years in prison and $250,000 in fines.

NICOTINE LEVELS IN CIGARETTES COULD DROP — Although the tobacco industry insists that smokers light up for pleasure, not to satisfy an addiction, medical experts say the nicotine level found in cigarettes hooks people on the drug. As the FDA explores the possibility of regulating tobacco products as drugs, Commissioner David A. Kessler has suggested that it might require cigarette-makers to ratchet back the amount of nicotine in cigarettes gradually over a decade or more to reach non-addictive levels. Finding those levels may be difficult, however, since the drug affects individuals differently.

Graduate gains experience through exchange program

By Katie Morrissey
Staff Reporter

A recent SIUC graduate will soon be packing his bags for a year-long trip after accepting the Hamburg Exchange program's scholarship, making this his third excursion abroad.

Even before David Speck knew whether or not he would be going to Bregenz, he applied for the scholarship program in Hamburg, Germany through his department at SIUC. He said that undergraduates in German studies reach a point where direct immersion in the language and culture is needed, or at least desired.

Speck spent last spring semester in the Austria Program, sponsored by SIUC.

Charles Speck, David's father and faculty member of SIUC, referred to his son's acceptance of the scholarship with little surprise.

"I've always known my son's main strength, academically, was in languages — course I couldn't tell him that," he said. "I was pleased with David's choice to study German."

Charles Speck began his own teaching career as an instructor in Peru, Illinois. When a position opened up at SIUC in 1964 under the direction of Helmut Liedloff, Speck accepted.

Liedloff is now the director of the Bregenz Program, Charles noted.

A summer 1994 graduate of SIUC, David also studied at the University of Iowa, and at Dickinson College in Carlisle, Penn.

In high school, David took his first trip abroad with other Carbondale High School students to study and travel in Bonne, Germany, where he lived with a host family for a couple of months.

Last spring, David went to Austria through the SIUC program in Bregenz and said the experience was rewarding.

"We weren't overburdened with work, but what was required was of quality," he said.

David said he was impressed with the instruction he received in the program. However, he also admitted that living in the town of Bregenz presented a challenge as the people speak a dialect of German with little resemblance to that which students learn in America.

Thomas Keller, chairman of the German Department, said courses offered are accepted as transfer credits to SIUC.

"There are general education level classes and some classes exclusive to the Bregenz program," he said.

Students can earn more than general education transfer credits in Bregenz, Austria. Keller described two new classes offered.

"Both will deal with political unification and will be taught by German professors from the University of Konstanz in Germany," he said.

Keller said that although the people of Bregenz normally speak a Swiss-German dialect, most are also able to speak fluent high German.

While in Hamburg, which is about the same size as Philadelphia, David will receive a stipend of 840 marks, or roughly $500 per month. His on-campus housing will be much more affordable and accommodating than he would have if it were necessary for him to find his own housing.

David noted that as a life-long Carbondale resident, he will find the contrast from small town to big city exciting.

David said that to apply for the Hamburg Exchange program a command of the language is required. Generally, it is an undergraduate program.

David applied and was accepted before he graduated this summer. One student per year is accepted and in exchange, one German student travels abroad for study at SIUC.

David will be leaving for the University of Hamburg to begin studies in October and will stay until mid-July.

The last person to complete the Hamburg Exchange Program was SIUC student Sujat Tarviel.

Crime bill highlights party system's faults

ON AUGUST 11 WHEN PRESIDENT CLINTON'S crime bill was rejected by the House it was questionable as to the bill's future. Its passage by the House Sunday has kept the bill alive, but the challenges for the bill are not over. Both Republicans and Democrats profess a desire to make the country safer, but the approach each party takes is markedly different. These differences have become painfully apparent in the recent battles over the latest incarnation of the crime bill in the U.S. House of Representatives.

BOTH SIDES AGREE, THE REPUBLICANS somewhat pessimistically, that the bill's call for 100,000 more police officers by the year 2000 is a worthwhile goal. A major question being raised is whether the $8.8 billion provided by the bill for new police officers can do so much with so little. A common thread between the two parties is the realization that crime is most definitely on the minds of many Americans. And, the fact that another election year is upon us certainly has a bearing on both parties desire to do, or at least appear to be doing, something about the problem of crime.

It is this desire by both sides to look like the one solving the problem that provokes a serious question concerning why such situations are approached in modern partisan politics. Both sides have reluctantly come together in an effort to get some form of crime bill passed— neither wanting to look like it is not interested in making the streets of its constituents safer. But, in the process has the crime bill been compromised to the point of ineffectiveness? The question that must be asked is whether both sides, in wanting to look productive, have forgotten the ultimate goal of the bill is to reduce crime. It must be remembered all the time that the goal is not simply to get a crime bill passed, but one that will do the job.

THE QUESTION OF WHETHER THE CRIME bill can accomplish its intended goal is one that will be asked by the Senate in the upcoming weeks. As voters we place our trust in our elected officials to decide what plan is best. But, the inherent question raised by the handling and negotiating of the bill by the House remains for the American public to answer. That question is whether the political system in the U.S. has become polarized to the point it cannot function as it should. Ideally, a body functioning as a group of independently elected officials sent to the legislature as objective problem solvers who vote based on merit and not party allegiance.

IN THE UNITED STATES WE HAVE TRIED to create a system where the different parties can provide alternate viewpoints, but often those parties define and limit its members. These limitations come in the form of causing an elected representative to vote as part of a political party rather than as a critical thinker. This in turn leads to a lack of mutually beneficial criticism and compromise intended to bring about a better end result. The crime bill and its struggle seem to be a good example of situations where the above can occur. It needs to be remembered that the process exists to find solutions — not to determine which party came up with them.

The Senate takes up the issue of the crime bill this week and the threat of a stalling filibuster looms on the horizon. The question is how objectively our senators will evaluate the bill, and if they will vote in their state's best interest.

Commentary

Health care would change with reform

The Washington Post

The plan produced by what is called the mainstream health-reform group in the Senate has a couple of strong points, though much of it is a disappointment. If the strengths can be developed and the weaknesses finessed in the negotiations that lie ahead, the result could yet be a decent bill. But it's an uphill fight.

Serious health-care reform requires two tough steps that for the most part this proposal fails to take.

First, to reduce the number of uninsured, Congress needs to raise the money to help finance the insurance that these people generally can't afford. The new proposal does only a modest amount of this. Most of the uninsured would likely stay uninsured.

That constitutes a problem for haves as well as have-nots. Hospitals and other institutions would continue to be under enormous pressure to provide uncompensated care, the cost of which they would have to keep trying desperately to shift toward higher charges to the privately insured. Better to regularize the process and do it right.

The related goal of reform is cost containment. Congress can raise all the money it wants; there still won't be enough to stand up to current trends in health-care costs. The country can't afford the health-care system that it has, much less an expanded one. There has to be some gradual constraint.

The problem is that no one quite knows how to achieve this, and hardly anyone has full confidence in any of the means that have been proposed. Their weaknesses are better established than their strengths.

There aren't the votes in the Senate to impose direct controls on the system (for example, by limiting annual premium increases as the president proposed).

The mainstainers would rely instead (as would Senate majority leader George Mitchell in his plan) mainly on competition plus a shift in tax policy to deter instead of subsidize and encourage people to buy high-priced plans.

The idea is that, if people are made to feel the cost of health care more directly, they will be led to get it as cheaply as they can, which would add to the pressure on providers to cut their prices, and thus be a lot different from now.

Chavis was wrong for NAACP

The Baltimore Sun

In firing Benjamin F. Chavis Jr. Saturday as executive director of the NAACP, the venerable civil rights organization's board of directors bowed to the inevitable and did what was necessary. Mercifully, the board acted swiftly and decisively to limit the damage.

Chavis clearly had become a serious liability to the group he headed. Having embroiled himself in controversy over his financial management of the organization and charges of sexual harassment and discrimination, he made his own credibility an issue that overrode all other concerns, including the new course he had set for the NAACP's future.

Though he blamed unnamed "forces outside the African-American community" for his travails, his downfall was in fact entirely self-inflicted.

Matters came to a head last month, when it was revealed that Chavis had secretly entered into a potentially costly settlement for the NAACP in order to avoid a lawsuit by a former employee alleging sexual harassment and discrimination.

In exchange for dropping the suit, Chavis agreed to pay Mary E. Stansel, who worked briefly at NAACP headquarters last year, up to $322,400 from the NAACP treasury. Yet he told neither his general counsel nor his board what he had done, which only became public in July when Stansel filed suit alleging he had broken their agreement.

Chavis apparently has persuaded himself that people opposed to the direction he intended to take the NAACP used the Stansel affair in order to discredit his leadership. In this he is sadly mistaken.

Many board members confirmed privately that they thought the organization needed to be shaken up and that it had to reach out to a wider spectrum of the black community in order to maintain its credibility and effectiveness in the post-civil rights era. Chavis was brought on board precisely for the purpose of doing that. Even his controversial embrace of Louis Farrakhan found strong support both on the board and at the grassroots level.

What drove the board to dismiss Chavis was neither his program nor the allegations against him but the fact that he kept his own organization in the dark regarding matters crucial to its financial stability and moral credibility.

In effect, he put his own interest ahead of that of the institution. No leader can do that and hope to be successful. Chavis is a fighter, and he may yet find a way to make important contributions to the struggle for equal justice for all Americans. But he was the wrong man for the NAACP.

ban on 19 semiautomatic assault-style weapons and was $6 billion higher than the original crime bill that passed through the house in April.

"By defeating the rule to bring the bill to debate, we got a more honest, affordable bipartisan bill," Poshard said.

In a press release Costello said he voted for the bill because it would do more good than harm.

"I believe it can be better, but communities in my congressional district need the immediate assistance this crime bill will bring," he said.

The $30.2 billion crime bill includes funds for crime prevention programs, up to 100,000 police hires nationwide and state prisons. Local law enforcement officials had varying opinions of the impact of the bill.

Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said, despite all the criticisms the crime prevention programs received from many members of the House, the bill would not be effective at reducing crime without preventative programs.

"Police agencies are reactive to crime and cannot be responsible for solving social programs," Strom said.

James Garofalo, director of the SIUC Center for the Study of Crime, Delinquency and Corrections, said he agrees the crime prevention portion of the crime bill will turn out to be the most important factors in reducing crime.

"We have had a prison building boom over the past two decades, and the rate of imprisonment has doubled over the past 10 years—prison funding is necessary but does not reduce crime," Garofalo said.

Garofalo said if the bill passes and there is enough funding to add 100,000 police officers to the nations force the results would be substantial since there are now only about 500,000 sworn police officers nationwide.

Poshard said that the bill provides law enforcement with $13.45 billion, and $8.8 billion of that goes for the hiring of officers.

"The communities would pay 25 percent of the officers salaries with the government funding the rest over a six year period," Poshard said.

The bill also provides $9.85 billion for prisons and $6.9 billion for prevention programs.

Dave Stricklin, spokesman for Poshard, said that there are $380 million in block grants included in the preventive crime programs so communities and states can decide for themselves which programs are most important.

A spokesperson for U.S. Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., said the Senate will probably reach a vote on the crime bill today or Wednesday.

said. "I did consider charges against other individuals and found that such would not be warranted by the law." Wepsiec said he expected mixed reactions to his decision. "Our community is pretty diverse and I'm sure as diverse as it is, there will be as many reactions."

"I think the State's Attorney was faced with a very difficult decision here," Chief Strom said.

"In my opinion, someone had to speak for the children and I think the State's Attorney's office has done that this morning."

Strom said he supported the charges that Wepsiec filed against Foulks.

"Ultimately, it sends a very strong signal about the welfare of children; that we do take this very seriously and that we intend to respond strongly when children are put at risk in our community."

adventure," she said. "If you're riding on the street, the cars scream at you and if you're on the sidewalk the people yell at you. I'm afraid I'm going to hit someone."

McClure said she broke her glasses her first day in Carbondale which made finding a class in her lecture class somewhat difficult.

"I found a seat but I dropped my back pack on the guy sitting next to me," she said.

McClure was not the only student having trouble finding the beginning swimming class. Andrea Turetzky, a transferring sophomore in elementary education from Hoffman Estates said no one she asked knew what PLLP meant on her schedule list.

"No one seemed to know what it meant, but I finally found someone to tell me it was Pulliam Pool," Turetzky said. "Besides that everything was right in front of my face. I liked all of my teachers and all my classes sounded interesting even my politics and government class."

Turetzky said the walking and heat were the worst part of the day, but aside from those two drawbacks it was a good day.

"I was expecting to come home exhausted, but I feel totally energized," she said.

Rahsaan Jahi, a sophomore in cinema and photography from Chicago waited in the seemingly never-ending line at the Bursar's Office trying to find out what happened to his financial aid money.

"Nobody seems to know," Jahi said. "All of my financial aid is here. I made a pre-payment and have a credit account with the University."

Jahi said he was supposed to be reimbursed for the pre-payment after his financial aid came through, but no one could tell him what happened to the money.

"I can't buy my books until the check comes through," Jahi said.

Tracy Ludwig, a graduate student in food and nutrition from Cape Girardeau, Mo., is also new to the campus and having difficulty with her assistantship.

Ludwig said her teaching assistantship was supposed to cover her full tuition and pay her a monthly salary of $407.

"My assistantship is supposed to pay all expenses except for fees, but I received a statement from the Bursar's Office which reads quarter time tuition," Ludwig said.

The bill from the University indicated that only one-fourth of her tuition was paid and she had to pay the remaining $927. She was waiting in line at the Bursar's Office trying to find out what went wrong.

Chris Lupien, a transferring sophomore in radio and television from Park Forest, said his first day was interesting. He walked his classes before Monday to make sure he knew where they all were.

"I thought it was going to be easy, but my first class was in Famer Hall and when I got there the building wasn't how I pictured it," Lupien said.

"I went to the opposite end of the building first, then I found this girl who was looking for a class near mine. She told me her story. She puked in her first class because she was nervous and hadn't eaten."

Lupien said after twenty minutes of searching he finally found his classroom on the third floor.

"At first it was confusing," Lupien said. "But I finally found the room. I didn't realize it (Famer) was three separate buildings."

Those were the days: Progress harms nostalgia

The Washington Post

Last year the National Trust for Historic Preservation put the entire state of Vermont on its list of Most Endangered Places.

The qualities that make the state special — compact, walkable cities and towns, unspoiled countryside and a near absence of suburbs and strip development — were in imminent danger, it said, from the newest engine of sprawl — the huge discount superstore and the regional outlet mall.

It's happening all over the country, the trust says in a new report whose pictures and text capture the best and worst of our democracy.

Ugly, homogenizing development — Wal-Marts, Kmart and the rest — that makes everyplace look like no place and derives a good part of its profits from shifting its costs to others (especially local governments) is galloping across America.

Misguided zoning and transportation policies are enabling these stores to do to small cities and towns what shopping centers did to the larger cities before them: to suck the life out of downtowns, destroy farm and rural land on the outskirts and clog the roads with the congestion that inevitably accompanies total auto dependence.

St. Albans, Vt., is a typical example. A 150,000-square-foot store has been proposed for this town of 11,000. It would be plunked down two miles out of town (much too far to walk), on what is now farmland.

If built true to form, the store would be a cheap, windowless box set amid a vast, tabletop flat, treeless expanse of concrete. Its 44 acres would cover an area as large as St. Albans's present downtown.

If successful, the superstore would generate 9,000 automobile trips daily and new strip development.

Needed economic growth, yes, but much of its sales would come at the expense of locally owned stores, many of which would close, while most of the superstore's profits would go to its corporate headquarters elsewhere.

One-, two- and five-acre zoning doesn't preserve open land as originally intended. Instead, it produces a chopped-up countryside of parcels that are "too big to mow and too small to plow."

Rules that forbid mixing residential and commercial uses mean no one can walk to buy a carton of milk, much less to work, and that the number and miles of automobile trips will climb inexorably.

In the '80s, the number of vehicle miles traveled in the United States grew four times faster than population.

'Dynamos' create new image for music channel

Los Angeles Times

You want your MTV.

And audiences have wanted it enough to catapult many MTV VJs into celebrityhood.

Basic formula for stardom: If they stand out, they're a success.

Many have become well known. Cindy's on TV commercials and magazines. Daisy's a Revlon girl and has a CNBC talk show. Bill's gonna jam with his stand-up on Showtime. Eric lived in "The Real World" in its first season. Tabitha talked to President Clinton.

But MTV has a new breed of VJs looking to invade that popular music-vid territory.

Naturally, MTV execs hope the new guys and gals on the rock block will follow in their more illustrious predecessors' footsteps.

But just how does one become a beacon of light for the MTV generation? As Joel Stillerman, an MTV production vice president, explains it, the most important aspect is the least tangible, and probably the most obvious: star quality.

"We're looking for someone who really jumps off the screen," he says from his New York office. "And they're the hardest to find. But I think we've done a good job so far."

MTV also wants dynamos who are fun, attractive and knowledgeable about music.

"There's no secret formula," adds Doug Herzog, senior vice president of programming. "It's an ongoing effort. We turn over every rock."

The latest finds: John Sencio, Ed Marques and Idalis.

Each brings a different edge, a unique side for the restless MTV audience.

On a lark, John Sencio, winner of last year's VJ search, made a quick tape. Two weeks later he got a call that he had the job.

Ed Marques has been a VJ for nearly five months, but has quickly established his self-described "bizarre personal sociological experiments" on camera. If Ed has something on his mind, he'll tell you.

Newest VJ Idalis is "super fun and super enthusiastic," Stillerman says. "The party follows her wherever she goes."

'Airheads' antics funny in spots

Movie Review

By Aleksandra Macysz
Senior Reporter

True to its name, the newly released movie "Airheads," is about the lives of three struggling rock musicians looking to get a record contract and their album played on the radio.

The antics band members go through to get what they want make for a funny movie in spots because they do things that most of us only dream about doing.

The band, named The Lone Rangers, get razzed for their antics and their name as well. The funny name fits the goofy band members and the theme of the movie.

At one point, the band takes over a radio station while holding hostages with plastic guns filled with hot sauce. Their point — to get their song played on the air.

The movie then takes an unbelievable and stupid turn as the DJ, played extremely well by Joe Mantegna, befriends the band.

The band's outrageous actions continue at the station when they make up a list of crazy and hilarious demands ranging from a football helmet filled with cottage cheese to a record contract. Since the radio station is on the air during the situation, a large crowd gathers to show support for the band. At one point, Chaz, the leader of the band goes outside to win over more fans, but instead is hassled by the police. In an obvious attempt to be like Al Pacino in the movie "Dog Day Afternoon," Chaz begins shouting "Rodney King," much like Pacino shouted "Attica" years ago — a point where the movie is stupid.

Judd Nelson puts on an uproarious performance as the record producer who handles the contract — his performance alone makes the movie a must-see.

The movie ends with the band being arrested and sentenced to serve a minimal sentence. While in prison, they release their first album, "Live From Prison," one of the funniest moments in the movie.

Audiences should not expect profound life lessons when they go see "Airheads," but rather a movie that pokes fun at some things in life and shows a life that most of us would never lead.

"Airheads" is currently playing at the University Place 8 Theater, located at 1370 E. Main, across from the University Mall.

Rediscovered Peirce pages sent to Morris

By Benjamin Golshahr
Staff Reporter

Charles Sanders Peirce, often regarded as the founder of American pragmatism, wrote a myriad of articles that appeared in The Monist and The Open Court publications towards the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Peirce project editors from Indiana University who traveled to SIUC's Morris Library to photocopy and examine retrieved Peirce original manuscripts were astounded by the 700 new autographed manuscript pages that the library's special collections department restored.

These articles, which were originally rolled up with the publications and tossed into a basket, have made restoring these papers a century later a tedious job.

Karen Drickamer, curator of manuscripts at special collections, said the papers are steamed open, flattened and cleaned. The original article, correspondence with the editor, the galleys (long streams of print), and the proofs were all rolled up, bound, and tossed into a basket, she said. Luckily, a nearby zinc factory at the original print site contaminated the papers keeping them remarkably well preserved.

David Clarke, a professor in the philosophy department at SIUC, said the papers are very important to the history of American scholarship.

Peirce and a contemporary of his, William James, founded what is known among scholars as American pragmatism, which Clarke explained as, "a philosophy that emphasizes relating ideas to practice."

After all the papers have been retrieved a complete volume set of Peirce's work will be available, Drickamer said. Readers will be able to see exactly how Peirce evolved over time as a thinker, she said.

The Peirce manuscripts were sent to Morris from Open Court, a prestigious publishing house in La Salle Illinois.

A Peirce Project Newsletter claimed The Open Court collection, even as it now stands, is second only to Harvard in its importance for Peirce research.

Some of the articles that the library has includes "Pythagorics" published in 1892 and "The Marriage of Science and Religion" published a year later.

Many of the manuscripts are now being converted to microfiche, Drickamer said. This presents a special problem because often the galleys are long and cumbersome, so the process is slow, she said.

True Math.

You don't have to be a calc professor to see you could save more with AT&T True USASM Savings.

It's true—if you live off campus, AIN^T True USASM Savings really could save you more. Just look up your average monthly long distance bill on the chart, and see for yourself.

Now here's why AIN^T's and MCI's basic rates start off about the same. Then, with Friends and Family MCI advertises 20% off your long distance calls, but—here's the catch—only if they're to MCI users who are also on your calling circle list. Truth is, two-thirds of most Friends and Family members' calls aren't to those selected people. So the average discount you end up seeing on your bill is only 6%. Not the 20% you expected.

AIN^T True USASM Savings is a whole lot simpler. Spend $25 a month, and we'll subtract 20% off your bill. The full 20%—not some conditional percentage. Spend $75 a month, and we'll take 30% off. You can save on calls to anyone, anytime, anywhere in the good old US of A.SM No restrictions. No calling circles. No disappointments.

So take a good look at the chart (you can ask a math major for help) and check out who's saving you what. We think you'll find you could be saving a lot more with AIN^T. Call 1-800-TRUE-USASM. And get all the savings you expect.

Course altered to reflect global, economic reality

By Diane Dove
Staff Reporter

Flyers posted around SIUC advertising a new elective course have many University students asking several questions, among them, is it true that:

■ Americans wrote the Japanese constitution?

■ You can get fined $500 for not flushing a public toilet in Singapore?

■ Ho Chi Minh, the leader of Communist North Vietnam, admired America?

These and other questions can be answered in the course offered by the Department of Management, according to associate professor Charles I. Stubbart, who teaches the class.

Called "Global 2000 — The Pacific Century," the new course replaces Supervisory Management and is now offered as MGNT 301.

Arlyn J. Melcher, chairperson of the department, said the course is not new, but is an old course with a new perspective.

"The focus is on a global perspective on management," he said. "That is a critical perspective that the students should be exposed to."

Stubbart said the change was made because it is more practical to adapt a current course than to start a new one.

"It's easier to get a new course approved with an old number," he said.

The course studies economic, social and political relationships between the United States and Japan, China, Hong Kong, Singapore, South Korea and other Pacific Rim countries.

Stubbart said the course, which he hopes will become a required part of the management curriculum and be offered by other departments, is unique because it looks at current and future issues in several disciplines.

"The material doesn't easily fit into any particular department, so I don't think there's ever been any course quite like it," he said.

The course's purpose is to sensitize students to other cultures and make them aware of challenges that face managers, Melcher said.

"The topical areas are intended to cover the insights necessary to inform students about the broader context they're operating in," he said.

The change in curriculum is part of a departmental effort to create a more appealing and practical program, Melcher said.

"We would hope that the other majors will draw on the course as part of their elective requirements," he said. "I think that as we hone it down we'll have a vehicle that will be attractive to them."

Stubbart said approximately 20 management students are enrolled in the course and he hopes foreign language and international trade majors will enroll once word about the course is spread through fliers posted and word of mouth.

"When you've got a new elective course it's hard for anybody else to know about it," he said.

Stubbart said he was able to develop the course because of a three-year grant providing money to the colleges of Business and Administration and Liberal Arts.

Charles B. Klasek, executive assistant to the president, approved Stubbart's expenditures of the grant money. Klasek said he was pleased that Stubbart's use of the grant, which included working with businesspersons overseas and learning about international trade and business practices, resulted in the improved class.

"That's great that he did that," he said. "That's what (the grant) was designed for."

Students wanting more information on the course can phone Stubbart at 453-3307.

Welfare debate grows during election year

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Rep. Dave McCurdy's campaign ad seems to leave little doubt about where the Oklahoma Democrat stands on welfare reform.

As one hefty welfare check after another disintegrates or shrinks on the television screen, McCurdy declares that if he has his way there will be "No check if you're not a U.S. citizen," no check for recipients who refuse training or a job and no check to reward welfare mothers who have more children.

"When I was growing up in Yukon (Okla.), my parents taught me to work hard, earn my own way and stand my ground and fight," says McCurdy, a seven-term House member who is in the thick of a tough campaign for an open Senate seat. "That's why today I'm fighting to change welfare."

Polls indicate that welfare reform could be a potent issue in upcoming mid-term elections, even if Congress does not complete it this year.

Voters say they are fed up with the current system and favor changes that would force recipients to find work. Democratic and GOP candidates are finding virtue in stressing their commitment to radical change.

And, as McCurdy's ad demonstrates, welfare-reform rhetoric sometimes gets a lot tougher on the campaign trail than in Congress.

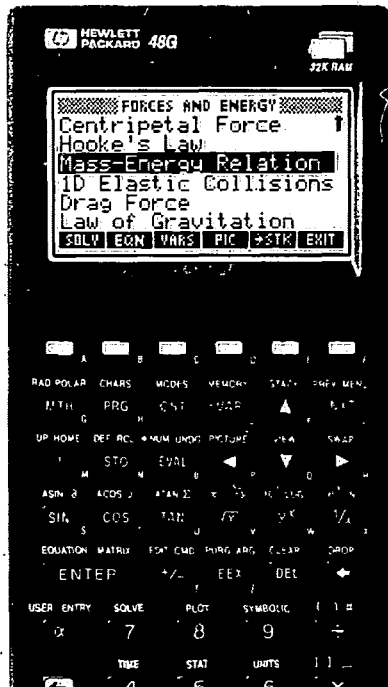

In Washington, McCurdy has been a voice of moderation in the welfare-reform debate.

He leads a group of "mainstream" Democratic House members and is head of the Democratic Leadership Council, a progressive, mainstream group that President Clinton helped to found while he was a governor.

While favoring a dramatic overhaul of welfare, including the two-year limit on benefits favored by Clinton and Republicans, McCurdy has expressed sympathy for millions of recipients trapped in a system that discourages self-initiative, work and family unity.

SIUC's School of Law Clinical Program recently received a grant that could result in $235,000 in funds over the next three years.

The "Learn and Serve America" grant was awarded Aug. 9 by the Corporation for National and Community Service, a new agency established last year by President Bill Clinton.

The grant will be used to fund three community service programs that may reduce violence in schools and neighborhoods.

By June 1995, the grant will establish programs to teach local elementary and high school students to peacefully settle their disagreements.

Suzanne J. Schmitz, coordinator of SIUC's Alternate Dispute Resolution Clinic, said peer mediation will let the students solve their problems instead of resorting to violence.

The fund also will create a Community Dispute Resolution Clinic.

The clinic, run through the city attorney's office, will help resolve neighborhood disputes.

If there is a disagreement, police will refer community members to this service.

Schmitz said people occasionally need help resolving conflicts.

"Sometimes it takes a third party to help settle some disputes," Schmitz said.

The grant also will pay for Illinois' first program to help disabled residents solve problems with housing, transportation, public accommodations and employment.

Mary C. Rudasill, director of SIUC's legal clinics, said these programs give law students experience working in the community that will help them in their future careers.

Sean Smoot, a senior in law from Carterville, said the program is a good idea.

"Mediation is a good way to settle disputes that would be too costly or take too much time in court," Smoot said.

Education Purnell's priority: Coming to Southern Illinois

By Aaron Butler
Staff Reporter

Forty thousand black men and women owe their opportunity for a better life through education to one man — someone who helped each of them get into college or university when others told them it could not be done.

Silas Purnell is that man, and SIUC students will have a chance to hear him speak Wednesday at John A. Logan College.

"I like to work with students that nobody wants," he says. "No one can tell what an individual's potential is until that individual has been given the opportunity to prove themselves."

Head of the educational services division of Ada S. McKinley Educational Services, Purnell says he is determined to increase the percentage of minorities in Illinois higher education. This commitment stems from his belief that education is the most important factor in determining one's long-term quality of life.

"I have one of the best jobs in the world. My product will last as long as that person lives, in whatever political, economic, or social situation our nation experiences."

— Silas Purnell

"Jobs, and money in and of themselves are not going to give anyone permanent security," he said. "Look at how many athletes receive huge salaries for a few years, then end up broke later in life."

Purnell sees his role in student's lives as an opportunity to give anyone who truly wants to succeed the ability to do so.

However, Purnell cautions that he helps those who help themselves.

"Motivation is the most important thing. No matter what I do, in the end the student decides whether he or she will succeed."

After working side by side with Purnell for fifteen years, McKinley Educational Service's senior counselor Henry Ray says he "can't think of a single bad thing" to say about the man he calls "very caring."

Ray described Purnell's commitment to education as one of the most dedicated he had ever seen.

"He used to work as a manager for Coca-Cola, and he would tell the young kids that applied there to go back to school. Then, after he retired, he traveled to local high schools on his own time, in his own car, without pay, to convince the kids that education was the most important thing they could have."

Brenda Major met Purnell soon after beginning her job as an admissions counselor at SIUC, and says has been seeing the results of his efforts ever since.

"Before and during the beginning of each semester we get one or two referrals a day from Mr. Purnell's office."

Major was very impressed with Purnell's mixture of compassion and humor for young people who wanted to better their situation.

Purnell, now 71, is still a very active speaker for minority education, and visited SIUC in October 1993, as the keynote speaker for the annual NAACP banquet.

Purnell will speak at 11:00 a.m. Wednesday, Aug. 24, in the Bateau Room of John A. Logan College.

has a large unfunded liability because the legislature has not been allocating funds to state retirement programs that are promised.

Henderson said the passage of the pension bill is a step in the right direction to eliminate the unfunded liability.

"There comes a day when someone has to pay for it," Henderson said.

Hawkins said the bill calls for a continuing appropriation of money to fulfill retirement liabilities each year.

"The funding for pension liabilities is now automatic every year," Hawkins said. "The only way funding could be stopped in any given year would be for the General Assembly and the governor to pass official legislation against it."

Hawkins said the 50 years that it will take to completely solve the problem of unfunded liabilities seems like a long time, but every year enough funding will be given to insure all pensions will be covered.

He said in the long run employees of SIUC, as well as other state schools, will benefit greatly.

"Southern Illinois is the largest employer in my district," Hawkins said. "Without this legislation the state would be asking faculty, staff, local school teachers and state employees to place all their years of work on the line.

"Finally, SIU employees, teachers, and other state employees will have their hard-earned pensions guaranteed. It's certainly overdue."

SIUC President John C. Guyon said the pension bill is something the University has been supporting for a long time and is pleased to see it pass state government.

"This is a good piece of legislation for the entire University," Guyon said. "It may diminish the state treasury a little, but basically it's an excellent plan for the whole state."

Ex-commissioner Vincent expected ball strike

The Hartford Courant

NEW YORK — There must be a wry smile on Fay Vincent's face as the former baseball commissioner sits in his summer house on Cape Cod, watching the players and owners make fools of themselves again.

Every now and then, an "I-told-you-so" must form in his mind and work its way to his lips. But Vincent refuses to utter it.

"I really don't want to discuss what's going on," Vincent said this week. "First, I don't think I know that much about what's going on, and second, I don't think it's appropriate."

He's being more than a little evasive in the pursuit of diplomacy. If anyone is familiar with the goofy machinations of the owners and players, it's Vincent. It was his decision to take over the negotiations during the 1990 lockout that so angered many of the owners that they later forced him out.

But mum remains the word. Instead, he splits time between his Cape Cod and Connecticut homes, finishing his book about his tenure as commissioner and doing some consulting for Liberty Media, which is trying to buy Madison Square Garden.

If you're a fan of baseball labor stoppages or just have a good memory, you probably remember that the federal Mediation and Conciliation Service was involved in trying to end the two-day strike of 1980 and the 50-day strike of 1981.

Fox gets NFC after long trip to acquisition

Newsday

LOS ANGELES — On the evening of Dec. 17, 1993, the world learned that the NFL, which was used to rough play on the field, wasn't immune to corporate hardball. In a bitter twist, CBS' Dan Rather broke the story that his employer had lost the lucrative NFC, which it had telecast for 38 years, to upstart Fox Broadcasting.

Media titan Rupert Murdoch's seven-year-old network, home of Bart Simpson and Al Bundy, had shelled out a mind-blowing $1.58 billion for the rights through 1997.

The price was 49 percent higher than what CBS had paid in 1990. It was the biggest deal ever in sports television. Not only did it rock the rafters at CBS, but the Fox coup signaled a new bridge across the rapidly blurring line between entertainment and pro sports.

Fox had discussed acquiring the Monday Night Football package in both 1987 and 1990, but was spurned by the NFL. After all, the precocious network wasn't even on four nights a week back then.

So, Murdoch had some reservations. "I was not confident at all last December," he said during an interview in a Fox Sports trailer outside Candlestick Park last Friday, just before the network's first NFL preseason game. "We knew we'd get a listen from the NFL, although if we were going to get a franchise, we thought it would be NBC's, not CBS'. But they didn't mess us around or use us as a stalking horse. We knew we would have to make a bid substantially above anyone else so the younger owners would have some manswearable figure to take to the (NFL TV) committee. If we had bid $10 million above CBS we would not have won."

Instead, the Fox negotiating team, led by chief operating officer Chase Carey, offered $400 million higher than CBS for the four-year package, which includes the 1997 Super Bowl.

"We were obviously helped by other networks who took an antagonistic role," said Carey, now Fox TV's chairman and CEO, referring to networks who wanted to pay a lower rights fee.

"But trying to compare their economics and their situation is like apples and oranges. We look at this as a growth business, and the locomotive for that is this network. For them, they're already there. They've built structures for years with overheads. They don't have the flexibility. We are more tailored to the entertainment and television business of today."

Like ESPN in 1987 and TNT in 1990, Fox paid a premium to certify the network as a major player. The critics came out in force. Wall Street estimated Fox would lose $650 million on the deal. TV rivals wondered if the new guys on the block were up to the task. But Fox executives knew that the NFL also would greatly enhance its Sunday night lineup and serve as a platform for promoting weeknight programming.

waist — like a Barbie doll," said Corcoran. "In a man's case, it's big and burly — approaching Hulk Hogan, He-Man and Arnold Schwarzenegger."

R.J. Sussman, a doctoral student in Education Psychology and a weight lifter, said if bodybuilders are really concerned about their fitness they should not want to use steroids.

"I am totally into fitness, which means I don't put anything bad in my body like drugs and alcohol, and I am also a vegetarian," Sussman said. "There are people who spend all of their time in the weight room, but that does not help their overall fitness including their mental aspect of life."

He said one way to see if someone is on or has been on steroids is if they have stretch marks from the front of their shoulder to their armpit.

"The stretch mark indicates rapid growth in an area which normally can't grow that fast," he said.

Doug Salmon, strength coach for the SIUC football team, said for some bodybuilders the chance to build up their body through the use of steroids is tempting.

"For people who use steroids, they obviously feel that the positives outweigh the negatives," Salmon said. "The opportunity to help their bodybuilding is too tempting for some to pass up."

Salmon said the positives of getting bigger are enough for some to risk taking an illegal substance with physiological and physical side effects.

He said there are ways to tell when people are on steroids, including people getting bigger extremely fast.

"There are certain physiological and physical appearances which are characteristic to people who are on steroids," Salmon said. "People who consistently are training harder and recovering faster than normal is a possible sign."

Steroid side-effects include atrophied testicles, liver cancer and violent mood swings, called "roid rages," researchers say.

Schwerin said this research will also help in the treatment of steroid-users, because as it stands now weight lifters see their physique diminish in treatment, which will make some leave the program.

"But permitting workouts — without steroids — adding weight rooms at treatment centers can help bodybuilders retain some of the physical characteristics so meaningful to them," he said. "That could buy them enough time to shatter the cycle."

Tour of Africa on NBA's list of free clinics

The Baltimore Sun

Wes Unseld met his share of prominent people over 20 years as a National Basketball Association player and coach, but which experience stands out among them?

"Sitting down (to dinner) with Nelson Mandela," Unseld said unequivocally. "I've been very fortunate to meet a lot of important people, but I didn't have the feeling that I was meeting someone as truly important as him (Mandela). ... I came away with the feeling that this is a guy whom history will record as a truly great individual."

Unseld, now the Washington Bullets' vice president, will have another opportunity to meet Mandela — South Africa's first black president — when he joins this year's NBA South Africa Tour, which begins in Johannesburg Monday.

Besides the Bullets Hall of Famer, the tour, which will end Saturday, will include NBA All-Star centers Patrick Ewing, Dikembe Mutombo and Alonzo Mourning, guard John Crotty, coach Lenny Wilkens, NBA commissioner David Stern and Charles Grantham, executive director of the players association.

The NBA players and coaches will hold free clinics in Johannesburg and Cape Town.

The delegation is scheduled to have dinner with Mandela one night during its six-day stay, which, Unseld said, gives him a chance to see "what has transpired, what changes have opened up. But I'm realistic enough to know that if there are any changes, they will be minor changes."

For Unseld and Mutombo, this is the second year in a row they have gone to South Africa. But Unseld said it was unclear if this tour would become an annual event.

"That would, of course, have to come from Mr. Stern," Unseld said.

"Simplify, simplify."

Saluki 3-on-3 hoops tourney to give fans fix

By Chris Clark
Staff Reporter

Basketball season may not start until November, but those who need an early dose of roundball can get it at the Saluki 3-on-3 Basketball Tournament and Health Fair, being held Aug. 27-28. The two-day event is sponsored by the Saluki Booster Club in conjunction with the Carbondale Convention and Tourism Bureau.

Teams in this tournament will consist of four members, three regular players and one substitute. The registration fee is $100 per team, with the proceeds going towards an endowed academic scholarship for SIUC athletes.

Teams will be placed in divisions according to skill level, and in categories ranging from jr. high to over 40, and there is also a wheelchair division.

"There may even be a women's division, depending upon how many women's teams actually register," said Bill Vicars, vice-president of the Saluki Booster Club.

Each team will play two games on Saturday, with the survivors of each bracket competing on Sunday for trophies commemorating their feat. Everyone who participates receives a free t-shirt.

The Saluki 3-on-3 tournament will also feature individual skill events, such as three-point shooting, dribbling marathon, free throw contest, family challenge and slam dunk contest. Anyone can take part in the special events competition, not just 3-on-3 team members. Winners of each individual contest will be awarded a pair of Reebok shoes.

There will be a registration party on Friday, Aug. 26, from 4 p.m.- 8 p.m. at the Student Center, but registration may continue as late as Saturday morning if all registration slots are not filled.

Steroids harm body for image

By Doug Durso

A recent SIUC study shows bodybuilders who use steroids may be suffering from the same problems as people with eating disorders like anorexia and bulimia.

Kevin J. Corcoran, SIUC psychology professor, said anorexics and bulimics see themselves as fat no matter how big they are, while some bodybuilders, are never happy with their physique.

Corcoran and former SIUC student Michael J. Schwerin, teamed up to research the psychological aspects of steroid use.

The results were compiled from an anonymous SIUC study of 185 men at gyms and health clubs throughout four states. Questions were given to participants ranging in age from 19 to 44 and they were asked about self-perception, physical anxiety and training habits.

Participants in the study fell into four categories: steroid-using bodybuilders, drug-free weight lifters, other athletes and men who did not exercise.

Schwerin said the men most at risk are those obsessed with their size, heavy workouts and dissatisfaction with their physique.

"We think this a really significant piece of the puzzle that may help prevent steroid use and help treat addicts," he said.

Schwerin said the information received from the study will help psychologists get a better understanding of behavior.

"If we can begin to identify men who place importance on body image and work out hard but see a distorted self-image, we can begin counseling before they slide into steroid use," he said.

Corcoran said even though the public is against steroid use, people send steroid users positive feedback without realizing it.

"Our society values exaggerated natural attributes. In the woman's case, it's big breasts and a small

SIUC volleyball team set to spike preseason poll

Heyne tops list of Saluki netters in scoring power

By Sean Walker
Staff Reporter

Despite being picked fourth in this year's preseason Missouri Valley Conference coaches poll, SIUC volleyball head coach Sonya Locke said she does not put much meat in polls.

"This pick is mainly a motivational tool to give the players something to shoot for," Locke said. "We have one mission this year and that is to finish first and to host the MVC tournament."

The conference has been expanded this year to 11 teams with the additions of Creighton and Evansville.

Northern Iowa received 6 first place votes to head the preseason ranking followed by Illinois State (3), Southwest Missouri State (1), SIUC, Indiana State, Bradley, Wichita State, Drake, Evansville, Tulsa and finally Creighton.

Northern Iowa head coach Iragde Ahrabi-Fard, who recently lost his first-team all-conference senior Natalie Walters to a career-ending back injury, said the Salukis have the ability to change the entire make-up of the preseason rankings.

"I believe SIUC is our number one opponent," he said. "With the loss of three of last year's starters and the Walters injury, I think SIUC, Illinois State and Southwest Missouri State have the opportunity to make up the top three positions at the end of the season."

Illinois State head coach Julie Morgan, who led the Redbirds to a second place finish in the conference last year, said anything could happen during the season, but she is not taking the Salukis lightly.

Heyne

"SIUC has a very strong squad, and I expect them to surprise a lot of teams early on," she said.

"Sonya [Locke] has an experienced team that is capable of finishing very strong."

Returning first-team all-conference senior Deborah Heyne was also a preseason coaches selection to the All-MVC team. Locke said Heyne is very deserving of the pick.

"She [Heyne] has gotten much stronger than last year and her defensive game has improved," Locke said. "She is a definite threat at the net and her defense is much stronger. Heyne has become an individual we can really count on to score."

Heyne, who led the conference in hitting percentage (.328), was third in kills (4.02/g), eighth in aces (0.34/g) and tenth in blocks (0.94/g) last year, said she is honored to gain the respect from the coaches in the MVC.

"Last year I really broke through," Heyne said. "This year I've changed positions to outside hitter, which has been an adjustment, but things are coming around. I look forward to the challenge ahead and to bring our team to the top."

Returning letterman Kelly Parke said Heyne works hard and pushes the other players to be at their best. "We're on a mission to get our reputation up to where it should be, and with Heyne's experience, we'll get there," Parke said. "I feel we're better than fourth place, and now we have to make everyone else believe it."
