Restaurant expansion proposal advances

KAREN BLATTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The Liquor Advisory Board recommended approval for the expansion of Chicago Underground Thursday, creating two separate establishments with two separate licenses.

John and Susan Karayanis will own and operate both establishments, keeping Chicago Underground, 717 S. University Ave., a restaurant that serves alcohol and renovating the upstairs into a coffee shop and bar.

The downstairs will continue to have a class A-2 restaurant license where 51 percent of sales must come from food, but liquor can be served. The upstairs will have a class B-2 bar license, requiring no one under the age of 19 be allowed in the establishment and may serve alcohol until 1:59 a.m.

The expansion was unanimously approved by the board and will go before the Liquor Control Commission at 6:45 p.m. Tuesday.

Karayanis said he needs to do renovations to the upstairs, but it will resemble the atmosphere of the downstairs, which will remain the same. He said the renovations, which include installing drywall, and completing the ceiling and electrical work, should be completed in three months.

Susan said they will use the B-2 license to utilize the upstairs space and provide for their customers.

"We wouldn't have to worry about food," she said. "We could serve good things, like cold sandwiches and have a dessert display case."

Karayanis plans to keep the same feeling and the same customers for the upstairs.

"We are more mature entertainment," he said. "We want to provide entertainment for the type of customers we have — townspeople."

John Benschoff, chairman of the Liquor Advisory Board, said Carbondale needs a place where people can go after shows at the University. He said the atmosphere and location of Chicago Underground would provide this opportunity for people.

Karayanis has until mid-February to pick up the B-2 license awarded to him at the Nov. 16 Liquor Control Commission meeting. But with a good reason, he can request a 90 day extension from the city.

City Clerk Janet Vaught said completing renovations would be a good reason to grant an extension.

Vaught said there are no reasons why the building cannot have two licenses. There will not be public access from the upstairs to the downstairs, but there will be employee access. Patrons will have to walk outside to get from one place to the other.

Karayanis apologized for his previous misunderstanding about the details of having both licenses and said having the expansion will increase his business.

"It was an honest attempt to get and use a license," he said. "[The upstairs] is a solution for the predicament."

USG hears student criticism of SIU judicial system

Resolutions demand change in policies deemed unfair by some students, council members

GINNY SKALSKI
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Several students concerned with the way SIUC Student Judicial Affairs operates had an opportunity to voice their opinions at Thursday night's Undergraduate Student Government Town Hall meeting.

About 25 students and USG members attended the meeting to voice their concerns about the Judicial Affairs process at SIUC and to listen to a proposal for an inquiry into Judicial Affairs written by USG Senator Josh Dean. Dean and USG President Sean Henry worked together to organize the information for the meeting.

The proposed inquiry was in six parts and cited what some USG members and students believed were problem areas in the Judicial Affairs system.

The inquiry was primarily focused on concerns about a potential conflict of interest for students who sit on the Judicial Hearing Board, students not being allowed to have a lawyer speak on their behalf during a hearing and Judicial Affairs being allowed to try a student a second time despite the student being found not guilty for the same offense in a court of law.

Dean said the meeting was organized after it was brought to his and Henry's attention that some students have had troubles with Judicial Affairs.

"Some students felt like they had been treated unfairly, and that they had not been given a full opportunity to have their case heard," Dean said.

Students listened to the proposed inquiry and from guest speaker Kevin Freeman, a senior in public relations, who said he had some trouble with Judicial Affairs last April. The floor was then opened up for comments from the students.

Several students spoke about their negative experiences with Judicial Affairs and with those in charge of Judicial Affairs. Though the meeting was intended to discuss concerns with the Judicial Affairs system, some students singled out their problems with individuals within Judicial Affairs.

SIU head football coach Jan Quarless, one of the two staff members that attended the meeting, said Judicial Affairs at SIUC is not much different than at other colleges, but if students wanted to make a change, it should not be personal.

"If you're so dissatisfied with the process and if you're dissatisfied with the system, proceed, but I don't think it is necessary to attack individuals within the system," Quarless said.

Graduate and Professional Student Council President Ed Ford said that in order to make changes to the Judicial Affairs process, students needed to go through the right outlets.

"We want to be careful about not making this about personal attacks," Ford said. "We want to go through the right process."

Six resolutions directly related to the inquiry will be presented at the Undergraduate Student Government meeting Wednesday night.

The resolutions call for immediate review of the Student Conduct Code, making the Constituency Review Board the final hearing entity at the campus level, and calls for the chancellor or his designee to rehear all pending appeals that involve the sanction of suspension.

ACLU-sponsored discussion examines the role of school government in religious practice

RHONDA SCIARRA

People suffer when government tries to determine what is appropriate with respect to religion, SIUC professor Samuel Goldman told a crowd partially filled by children whose schools currently post the Ten Commandments.

Thursday's forum examined legal, educational and social insight into the separation of church and state, in light of the recent decision by the Harrisburg School Board to post a copy of the Ten Commandments in district schools.

An Oct. 26 vote by the Harrisburg School Board allows for the posting of the Ten Commandments, the Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights in Harrisburg schools.

SIUC faculty members Leonard Gross and Rhys Williams also spoke at the forum, which was sponsored by the Southern Illinois chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union.

"It is not in the interest of any religion to become part of a government mandate," Goldman said. "That is a terrible, slippery slope that nobody ought to get into."

The ACLU of Illinois is considering filing a lawsuit against the Harrisburg School District, following a pattern of ACLU challenges to the

Gus Bode

Gus says: "Get Rid of Our Present Emergency?" I'm touched by this outcry over the improper appointment of interim Gus.

"We're mostly concerned with being appointed the same rights that we have outside of the University and not having certain rules and restrictions," Dean said. "We just want to make sure that these rights are given back to students."

Moseley-Braun foresees equality

ANDY EGENSES
DAILY EGYPTIAN

A week after gaining approval for a U.S. Ambassadorship to New Zealand, former U.S. Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun kept her promise to speak at SIUC.

She told the crowd of more than 200 that every individual, despite his or her race, sex or income level, can contribute to a common good for society, and any person can work to make someone else's day better.

Moseley-Braun spoke about the effects of race, gender and wealth concerning candidates running for public office, as well as people in everyday life in her speech at Shryock Auditorium.

Moseley-Braun's confirmation hearing for U.S. Ambassador to New Zealand caused her to cancel her Nov. 4 SIUC visit, but she returned exactly one week before the swearing-in date for the new position. She will depart for New Zealand Dec. 10.

"One person can make a difference for good," Moseley-Braun said, after receiving a standing ovation before the speech. "Not everyone can save the world, but everyone can make a difference in another person's life."

To illustrate her point, Moseley-Braun told the audience a story that inspired her about a person who was trying to save starfish alongside the ocean. He was picking them up one at a time and tossing them in the water before the heat of the sun would kill them the next morning.

A scientist walked by and could not believe he was trying to accomplish. He asked the person why he was wasting his time trying to pick up a few starfish when thousands of starfish littered the ocean.

"It may not make a difference to all the starfish, but it makes a difference to that one," Moseley-Braun said.

Moseley-Braun said equality can arrive through the political system if government legislation changes campaign-finance regulations. She thinks action should be taken to ensure that everyone has a fair opportunity to pursue public office.

"Somehow [within] our government, only people who have private wealth should be in position of power to make decisions about our government," Moseley-Braun said.

"That is a level of inequality that is as fundamental and profound as the inequality that kept women out of government, as the inequality that kept African-Americans out of government."

Moseley-Braun spoke of the importance of eliminating the discriminator based on race and gender in order to lead America in the right direction. She said the same thing is true for wealth.

"I believe eliminating discrimination based on wealth is in that same vein," Moseley-Braun said.

Brenden Donahue, a senior in administrative of justice from LaSalle, said he was glad he attended Moseley-Braun's speech because she talked about a wide variety of government aspects.

"This is a great perk for everybody to have her come down," Donahue said. "Now that she came down after she didn't have to, it really shows that she is a good person."

Moseley-Braun said an individual's actions that make a positive difference on others is "what the

"If there are no rules on about how we treat one another, we are on a course of a dangerous race to the bottom in our public discourse," Moseley-Braun said. "How we treat one another matters."

Even though they are not sure how their friendship first came about, one SIU men's basketball player will reap the benefits from it every year.

SIUC alumnus James Fornear established a full scholarship to assist the SIU men's basketball program in the name of longtime friend, Seymour Bryson, associate chancellor for diversity at SIUC.

Derrick Tilmon, a senior from Clarksdale, Miss., received the first Seymour Bryson Basketball Endowed Scholarship Fund prior to the Salukis' matchup against Santa Clara University Saturday. The scholarship will aid a member of the men's basketball team with tuition, fees, room and board expenses.

Fornear and Bryson became close friends nearly 40 years ago when Fornear took Bryson under his wing when the pair attended graduate school at SIUC. The friendship initially began to blossom when Fornear, who was camp director at Camp Little Grassy as an undergraduate, hired Bryson to assist the camp one summer.

"We really got to know each other when I started working for him in the summer," Bryson said. "His family just started reaching out and made me feel wanted. The relationship just grew out of

Carpenter's future with SIUC football unsure

SIUC running back Karlton Carpenter will go to trial in early January for felony burglary charges that stemmed from his arrest in July.

Carpenter, who may apply for his sixth year of NCAA eligibility, appeared in Jackson County Court Friday for a pre-trial hearing. Judge David W. Watt Jr. said a jury will hear the case starting January 3.

After he was arrested on charges of burglarizing a car in the 500 block of East Walnut Street, Carpenter missed a preliminary court hearing in late July because he was hospitalized for undisclosed reasons. The 22-year-old senior from Chicago pleaded not guilty to the charges at a September hearing.

While Carpenter's future as a Saluki football player is still questionable, he is enrolled as a senior in social work at SIUC this semester.

Carpenter broke SIUC football records during the 1998 season after gaining 1,982 rushing yards and scoring 17 touchdowns.

He ran into trouble with the law early this year when he was stopped in De Soto for speeding and did not pay the fine on time. Carpenter was arrested again in May on charges of reckless driving, resisting a police officer, escape, disobeying a stop sign and criminal damage to property. In September, he was sentenced to supervision for damage to property and resisting a police officer and the other charges were dropped.

Christmas comes a little early

International Students and Scholars bring Christmas to some lonely SIUC students and families far from home

DAPHNE RETTER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

It was beginning to feel a lot like Christmas Saturday when International Students and Scholars put on a party for students and their families who are far from home.

The Stone Center, lit up with white lights and gold ornaments on a 15-foot Christmas tree, was filled with about 150 SIUC students and their families from all over the globe.

Sanghee Kweon, a graduate student in journalism from South Korea, brought his wife and two daughters to the event. Kweon and his family moved to Carbondale seven months ago.

This holiday season has been bittersweet for the Kweons, who are so far from their family in a time Americans usually celebrate with their families.

"We are lonely here," he said. "We don't have many American friends."

Diane Hodgson, a former international student adviser, said the goal of the party is to introduce some American holiday traditions to the students.

The party, which ran from 2 to 3 p.m., featured Christmas carols, crafts, punch and, of course, Santa Claus.

With a booming voice and jolly laugh, Clarence Carter, a visiting lecturer for the Music Department, sprang into the room as the group sang "Jingle Bells."

The children gathered around him as he read "Twas the Night Before Christmas" and handed out candy canes.

Carter had fun at his premier performance of Santa Claus.

"I expected the kids to be afraid of me, but they weren't," he said. "It was great fun."

Beth Mochnick, director of International Students and Scholars, said the party was a success. She wanted the students to learn a few things, but mostly she wanted them to enjoy themselves.

"I wanted them to get away from their work, get together and just have fun before they start those awful exams," she said.

Kweon said Koreans celebrate a more commercialized version of Christmas that is less based on religion, so his children are familiar with most of the traditions.

When Kweon's 8-year-old daughter Jennifer finished decorating a construction paper tree, it was a reminder that many children from various cultures will have a difficult time going to sleep Dec. 24.

When asked what Christmas means, she said, "I get presents?"

Jewish students celebrate 'miracle' holiday

Hanukkah festivities allow students to observe religious days with their extended families

CODELL RODRIGUEZ
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Even though it was too early to light the menorah and nobody remembered to bring the dreidel, Jan Jacobs, along with seven students, still managed to make the most of their Hanukkah celebration Thursday.

The festivities began at 7 p.m. at the Interfaith Center. Even though the menorah could not be lit until the official start of Hanukkah Friday, the group talked about the holiday, ate traditional foods, exchanged gifts and played cards throughout the evening.

Jacobs, SIUC history professor and director of the Hillel Foundation for Jewish Campus Life, said Hanukkah originated when Jews were being oppressed by the Romans and had only a day's supply of oil for the menorah.

"Hanukkah is about the miracle of the oil burning for eight days instead of one," Jacobs said.

Sarah Blustein, a political science major from Homewood, said Hanukkah is a traditional holiday that should be celebrated with loved ones.

"Hanukkah is about my family and spending time with them," Blustein said.

When it came time to eat, the main dish was latkes. Latkes are fried potato pancakes that are sometimes cooked with onions and eaten with sour cream or applesauce.

In addition to latkes, sweet noodle kugel was also on the menu. Sweet noodle kugel consists of noodles, eggs, raisins, and cinnamon.

Receiving a gift on each of the eight days is another Hanukkah tradition. After eating, the group randomly selected presents out of a gift bag.

Another Hanukkah tradition is to play with the dreidel that looks like a four-sided top. It is traditionally used for a children's game or for friendly gambling purposes.

The original purpose of the dreidel was a way to disguise studying the scriptures of the Torah which were prohibited. The four sides of the dreidel contain the words "Nes Gadol Haya Sham," which means, "A Great Miracle Happened There (Israel)."

Caryl Davidson, a visual communications major from Lake Forest and president of the Hillel Foundation for Jewish Campus Life, said that Hanukkah is a holiday of faith.

"Hanukkah means remembering God makes miracles," Davidson said.

Alternative food for thought

TRAVIS MORSE
DAILY EGYPTIAN

In a state dominated by large, high-tech farming, Livy Coe is recommending that small-scale Southern Illinois farmers try alternative crops instead of soybeans, corn or livestock.

"Producing alternative crops allows farmers to employ more labor into the production," said Coe, a researcher in the Agribusiness Department at SIUC. "I want to help new farmers enter the operation and stimulate public involvement."

Coe and a team of researchers in SIUC's College of Agriculture are putting together an informational guide for farmers in this area who are interested in growing alternative crops like peppers, strawberries, tomatoes and herbs.

The project began last summer and is funded by the Council on Food and Agricultural Research. Coe hopes to have a detailed guide put together by next fall.

Alternative farming could be a way for small-scale farmers to make a profit in an industry dominated by corn and soybean producers.

"Farmers who have less capital to invest can produce alternative crops and sell directly to the public," Coe said. "That way you can get a higher price and not have to produce such a massive quantity."

Coe also said farmers can make extra money with entertainment farming and value-added crops.

"Value-added products can also produce more income, like pressing apples to make cider," Coe said.

"An additional trend we've discovered in this area is entertainment farming. This is where farmers offer entertainment on their farms to attract the public like festivals, corn-field mazes and hay rides."

In November, Coe met with a group of area experts and discussed the future of alternative farming.

David Beal, owner and operator of Beal's Orchard in Centralia, was on the board and said it is important to discuss both the upsides and downsides of this form of agriculture.

"We really want to show both sides of the coin because it's not all profit," Beal said. "Finding labor to get the job done is the most difficult part because no one wants to work outside during the winter and summer months."

Beal also lists weather and wildlife as two more dangers involved with alternative farming.

"Animals like deer, for example, have become a problem in this area because they eat these sort of crops,"

Beal said. "It's important to give people a realistic impression of what you can expect producing these kinds of crops."

Providing realistic information on all aspects of alternative farming is the most important part of the project for Coe.

"The goal is to provide information to the public through tourism offices and to farmers who may be contemplating going into this kind of business," Coe said. "It's important to tell them what to do and what not to do."

As for the future, Coe is confident more and more farmers in Illinois will be seeking alternative crops to harvest.

"Right now, traditional farmers are struggling with low prices, so I think more farmers will attempt to boost their income with alternative crops," Coe said.

Fornear remembers the early years of knowing Bryson, but can not pinpoint one particular event that brought them together.

"I don't know how we became friends," Fornear said.

Fornear wants the scholarship to be for "first-generation college students, who have overcome social and cultural barriers. Both Fornear and Bryson were first-generation college students.

The amount of the scholarship is undisclosed, but Harold Bardo, interim athletics director, said the additional financial support for the Athletics Department is greatly appreciated.

"This is one of the most significant scholarships that we have had in the history of the Athletics Department," Bardo said.

Bryson said Tilmon represented the qualifications he and men's head basketball coach Bruce Weber were looking for when deciding the recipient of the award.

"I think he's a person who is committed to try and excel educationally and professionally," Bryson said about their decision to select Tilmon. "He is a very positive person, plus he thinks 'rebounding' before 'scoring'."

Bryson still leads SIU basketball for most career rebounds with 1,244 during four seasons in the '50s.

Fornear said honoring his longtime friend with such an honor as awarding a scholarship in his name was something that the pair could share while supporting SIU Athletics.

"Something I admire about Seymour is his ability to work with whoever he meets," Fornear said. "It doesn't make any difference who you are, he gets along with anybody."

I think Derrick Tilmon's a person who is committed to try and excel educationally and professionally. He's a very positive person, plus he thinks 'rebounding' before 'scoring'.

Beware of the dangers of Internet addiction

JENNIFER WIG
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The words on the computer screen reflect off Tom Denney's glasses as he stares into the monitor, defying time and space barriers to communicate with people around the world.

"I'm addicted to e-mail," said Denney, a junior in cinema from Chicago. "I have to check my e-mail all the time. Let's just call it a habit, which is an addict's term."

Denney, who spends 20 hours each week on the Internet, said the addiction sometimes interferes with his classes.

"You end up on the computer instead of doing your homework, procrastinating and goofing off," he said.

Denney is one of many students who are constantly online. The Internet is used by students today for educational purposes, but because it offers games, chatting and millions of websites, it can become addictive.

Thomas Thibault, director of the SIUC Language Media Center, said an addiction is anything that controls you more than you control it.

"One problem that students have is that they depend on the web for their schoolwork and things like that and can get very easily distracted," Thibault said. "Students also have more access and faster access to the Internet than most people do."

Thibault said that rooms are especially dangerous because it is easier to communicate with people you do not have to confront face-to-face.

"If something goes wrong with the relationship, you can just never sign on again," he said. "With someone in your immediate vicinity, if you have a conflict with that person, you can't get away from them."

Li Zhang, a supervisor at the Computer Learning Center in Fanner Hall, said she has seen students spend entire Saturdays online playing games and chatting.

"Sometimes they just want to relax, which is okay," said Zhang, a graduate student in accounting information systems from China. "It's understandable for people to be online — it's interesting and adds to our lives, but we also need to take care of our health."

Internet addiction is actually a misleading term because addiction is defined as a psychological problem. But Jean Cunningham, chief psychologist at the SIUC counseling center, said many people are driven toward the Internet in search of an escape from everyday life.

"Loneliness is the root of it," said Cunningham. "We have had clients who have either gotten into trouble from spending too much time on the Internet or have had problems with relationships online," Cunningham said.

Cunningham suggests students set a time limit for the amount of time spent on the Internet, but some may need help fixing their daily lives to keep from being drawn to the Internet.

The Internet was created in the 1970s by the military, which was concerned about the vulnerability of its computer network to nuclear attack. The Pentagon did not want to lose its computer system because of an atomic bomb. Computer experts created an interconnected web of computer networks, decentralizing the system. The system, called ARPANET, was designed so that every computer could talk to every other computer within the military.

While the Internet advanced during the 1980s and more people outside the government began using it, not all computers used the same communications programs. The World Wide Tangled in the Web: Symptoms of Internet Addiction.

1. Using the online services everyday without any skipping.
2. Losing track of the time after making a connection.
3. Goes out less and less.
4. Spending less and less time on meals at home or at work, and eats in front of the monitor.
5. Denying spending too much time on the Internet.
6. Others complaining of your too much time in front of the monitor.
7. Checking on your mailbox too many times a day.
8. You think you have the best web site and are eager to give people your URL.
9. Logging onto the Internet while already busy at work.
10. Sneaking online when spouse or family members are not home to gain a sense of relief.

Jan Young - Daily Egyptian

Web was developed in 1990 when a group of engineers in Switzerland created an interconnected set of computers that used hypertext, a navigational tool linking electronic documents together by allowing people to click on words that will take them to other pages. With the invention of browsers in 1993, people were able to search for specific items. By 1998 there were more than one million sites on the World Wide Web. Thibault said the Internet will only continue to grow, making access easier and addict numbers higher.

"It's going to become wireless, and in time we'll be able to access it from anywhere in the world through a satellite communication rather than through wires," he said. "In some places it's already happening, but it probably won't hit the consumer market for another couple of years."

Thibault said while some schools and universities regulate students' usage of the Internet through filters, it is impossible to regulate the Internet itself.

"The Internet is either the ultimate democracy or the ultimate anarchy," he said. "It's a complete reflection of what people want."

Thibault said because universities have a limited number of computers, they may apply filters to prevent the computers from being occupied for game use instead of education.

Patty Cosgrove, an assistant director of Information Technology, has run four computer learning centers on campus for ten years and sees students who spend up to 30 hours a week on the Internet.

"There's always been computer 'groupie' people," Cosgrove said. "We don't encourage game-playing when people have work to do. I don't want people thinking they're invited to come in and play games — we don't have enough computers for that."

"But there are people who are genuinely interested in technology. More students use computers every year whether or not they're in a computer-related field or major."

Denney, with his eyes still focused on the computer screen, said his life has not changed much because of the time he spends on the Internet.

"Some of it is work too," Denney said. "But I'm going to keep doing it everyday as long as I keep getting e-mail. The Internet sucks up your time like a vacuum."

posting of the Ten Commandments in public schools in California and Kentucky.

The push to post the document in Harrisburg has been led by a group of parents and community, known as Raise the Standard, in reaction to recent incidents of school violence.

Judy Cape, parent and current member of the newly installed Harrisburg School Board, said there are alternatives other than -religion in public schools to preventing violence.

"If schools taught tolerance instead of religion, that would go a long way," she said.

Ed Yohnka, director of communications for the ACLU, said the trend of crusades to post religious documents in public schools violates the concept of government and the separation of church and state.

"It is not something that someone would tolerate if, for example, someone would have come to the Harrisburg School Board and suggested putting Islamic symbols all over the schools," Yohnka said.

In interpreting the First Amendment, the U.S. Supreme Court looks at two concepts: the establishment clause and the free-exercise clause. The establishment clause says that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, and the free exercise clause forbids Congress from prohibiting the practice of religion. The 14th Amendment applies the First Amendment to state governments and public school systems.

"Even if there is not a preference for a particular religion, you can still violate the establishment clause if what the state does is prefer religion over non-religion," School of Law faculty Gross said.

The posting of the Ten Commandments for a religious purpose has been interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court to be unconstitutional, Gross said. The U.S. Supreme Court struck down a law in Kentucky requiring the posting of the Ten Commandments in public schools.

The 1970 ruling said, "The pre-eminent purpose of posting the Ten Commandments on classroom walls is plainly religious in nature. The Ten Commandments are undeniably a sacred text in the Jewish and Christian faiths, and no legislative recitation of a supposed secular purpose can blind us to that fact."

customer service practices and current marketing strategies to increase overall customer satisfaction.

"The fact that they will take our information and ideas and implement them is a great opportunity for us," Kania said. "It is a real world situation."

John Summey, an associate professor of marketing, said the reality of the work his students do can be comparable to the work of a professional marketing research company.

"It's really challenging for the students because they are dealing with a real business and real professionals," Summey said.

The project is also a requirement for the marketing research class the five students are taking this semester. Christie and Bennington have worked with Summey and students in his class for two years.

Christie said the research results his company gains each year from SIUC students has been contributed to his company's success.

"We're in business every day. We generally don't stop, and listen, or look around as we should," Christie said. "Then we come out here, talk to students, look at the research they have done. It makes us sit back and say there are areas for improvement."

Melaniece Bardley's late arrival assists Blue Demons' victory

Senior center scores game-high 17 points, but Salukis still fall 60-52 to DePaul University

CHRISTINE BLOM
DAILY EGYPTIAN

If Melaniece Bardley's plane had arrived 20 minutes earlier in Chicago Saturday, who knows what the outcome of the game between the SIU women's basketball team and DePaul University would have been.

While the Salukis (2-4) were on their way to Chicago, Bardley was still in Carbondale, grueling over the long-awaited LSAT test she has been studying for all semester. After Bardley's flight from Lambert International Airport in St. Louis to Chicago's Midway Airport was delayed, Bardley burst into Alumni Hall with seven minutes remaining in the first half, with SIU trailing 19-11.

Even though Bardley still played 25 minutes, the Blue Demons proved to be too much for the Salukis claiming the non-conference win, 60-52.

Teammates and coaches were surprised and relieved to see the 6-foot-3-inch center eager to get into the game.

"I was as ready as I could have been," Bardley said. "I was exhausted, but I knew we needed to win this game."

Even with Bardley back in the lineup for the Salukis, they still could not cut into the lead, going into the recess down 33-25.

In the second half, Bardley began a seven-point run connecting on two free-throws in the first minute of the half, followed by a jump-shot by McDowell.

After Bardley made a jump-shot tying the game at 33, the Salukis lit a four-minute scoring drought, allotting DePaul (3-1) to regain the lead at 37-33.

The Blue Demons finally pulled ahead in the final three minutes as sophomore Lenae Williams scored two three pointers that sealed the victory for DePaul.

Williams led all scorers with 22 points and eight rebounds while Sylvia Blakeslee chipped in with 12 points. Bardley led the Salukis with 17 points and seven rebounds in 25 minutes of play. McDowell added 16 points.

Despite Bardley and McDowell's scoring efforts, head coach Julie Beck thinks the Salukis dealt with two problems against the Blue Demons—tough defense and poor shooting.

"DePaul played 94 feet of defense," Beck said. "And our shooting percentage is low. We are still searching for more points from our other guards like Morancie and Holloway."

The Salukis made half their shots (21-for-42) throughout the game. Bardley blames the Salukis' woes on poor ball handling as SIU turned the ball over 23 times.

"We have to take care of the ball," Bardley said. "We pass the ball too much like a hot potato. We must learn to pass the ball and play the game with more confidence."

Delano D'Oyen was the kind of call that doesn't sit well with a team that is used to losing by a mere point. The call negated the technical on D'Oyen. Williams insisted he didn't do anything to precipitate the incident, and there's no evidence to believe that wasn't the case.

Santa Clara head coach Dick Davey, who was visibly angry with D'Oyen, didn't have much to say about the controversial double technical call, but did say SIU fans shouldn't give up ship.

"They've had a chance to win every game they've been in this year and haven't quite got over the hump," Davey said. "It's obvious to me, at least for us, that they're going to have a fine season once they get it going in the other direction, and they were very close to doing that today."

SIU has the talent, the heart and the smarts to pick up the pieces and move toward the type of season Saluki fans have been dreaming about. Judging from the early returns around the conference, the MVC is wide open, and the Salukis could very well be right there at the top of the league come late February.

Now is not the time to bail on the Salukis, folks. More than ever, SIU needs a rowdy crowd.

Wednesday night to make the Arena a pit for the University of Evansville. The UE game is SIU's first conference game of the season, and marks a crucial juncture in the young season.

For the Salukis, Wednesday can't come fast enough. Nothing short of a victory will get rid of that sickening feeling of being on the losing end when the final buzzer sounds.

handed save. The ball eventually fell to the court harmlessly as time expired.

The Salukis (1-3) could not get a shot off, making the lost time even more crucial.

"We really didn't have a strategy, nobody really knew what we were doing," said Williams concerning the call of the final time-out.

The Salukis lost another emotional game, but the final 2.5 seconds was not what damaged the Salukis the most. Instead, it was another lackluster start.

The Broncos (4-2) built an eight-point lead by the half, 44-36, forcing the Salukis to play catch-up, much like they had done in their other two losses this season.

"You can't blame the game on the last 2.5 seconds," said Collum, who led the Salukis with 19 points. "Something needs to be done. We've got to change something or we're going to be in trouble."

Weber said he may have to make a change in the starting lineup, possibly inserting Mells to add more energy at the start of the game.

"We played soft in the first half, and I have to kick a blackboard, kick a water fountain and then they come out and play," Weber said. "That shouldn't happen."

After the mediocre first half, the Salukis came out of the locker room and played with more vigor. SIU stormed back to take a six-point lead early in the second half led by the tandem of Collum and Williams.

Williams scored his 15 points early, but would not see many touches in the final 10 minutes of the ballgame.

To the Broncos credit, they did not fold after the Salukis made their run.

Led by veteran guards, junior Brian Jones and Fast, the Broncos fought back to take the lead and sneak out of the Arena with the victory.

Fast, a senior, led all scorers with 22 points on 9-of-15 shooting, while Jones scored 17, including a big bucket in the final minute to give the Broncos a 78-75 lead with 47 seconds left.

"It looked like it was going to be a disaster there for a while, and I didn't have any answers for them, so we just kind of let them play," said eighth-year Bronco coach Dick Davey of his team's poise in the second half.

In a game where one point was the deciding factor, one play seemed to stand out.

Not to say it was the deciding factor, but a double technical foul call on Williams and Bronco guard Delano D'Oyen in the second half sparked major controversy after the decision.

After a foul call, D'Oyen, disgusted with the call, smacked the ball out of Williams' hands, bouncing it off the court nearly in Williams' face.

Neither player said a word to each other.

Williams simply walked away, while D'Oyen's teammates were dragging him away from the referee. It looked as though Williams would have two free throws on the play, but it was offset by the call of a double technical.

Davey said he did not see the play, but he gave D'Oyen an earful on the sideline, while Weber and Williams pleaded their case to the referee.

"Nothing happened at all," Williams said. "The guy slapped the ball out of my hands, and I was just standing there. For some reason, they gave it a double technical. He didn't even say a word to me. I just walked off, nobody knows where it came from."

Weber was obviously upset with the call, but could not voice his criticisms following the game because of NCAA policy.

"I questioned it, but I don't know — it's disappointing," he said.

SIU down, but not out

The final blow after SIU's 78-77 loss to Santa Clara University Saturday blared especially harsh.

As the buzzer blasted after Kent Williams' last second in-bounds heave to Chris Thunell was tapped harmlessly to the floor, sealing the Saluki defeat, the frenzied noise of the nervous SIU Arena crowd gave way to an eerie, sickening silence. The atmosphere went from a carnival to a funeral in a matter of seconds.

JAY SCHWAB

SPORTS REPORTER

The Broncos high-fived their way into the locker room, while SIU head coach Bruce Weber and his troops took to the court feeling like they had just taken a round-hug right to the gut from Evander Holyfield.

As it stands today, disappointment resonates throughout the Saluki basketball domain. From the players, to the coaches, to the fans, everyone is frustrated with SIU's 1-3 start, and with losing the last three games by a total of just seven points.

The Salukis' early season propensity for dropping close games brings comparisons to mind of the snakebitten Saluki football team, thoughts SIU fans would just as soon block out.

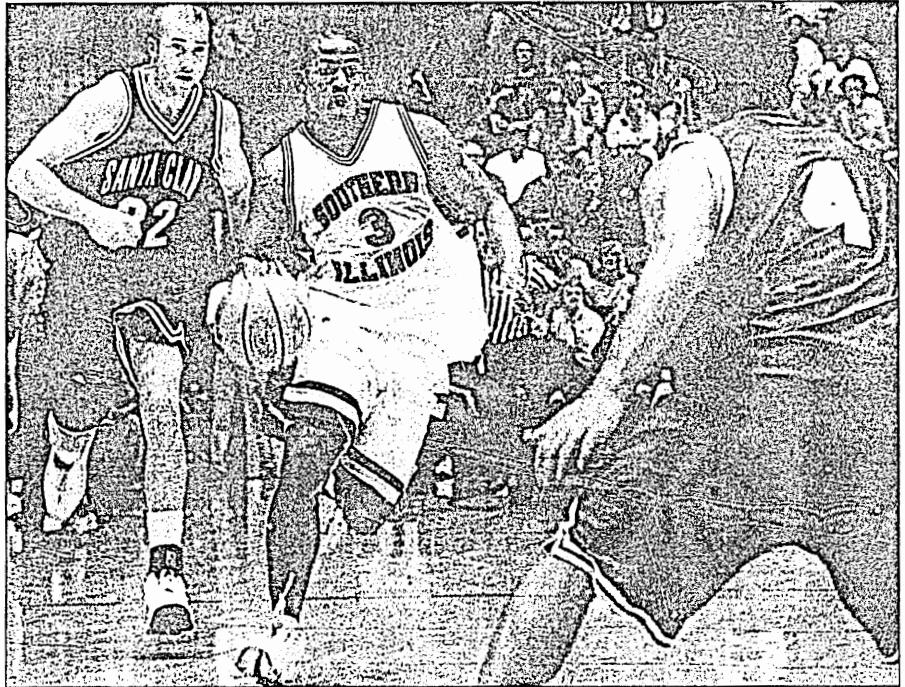

Most assuredly, there is reason to be dejected. SIU's lackluster start to the year means unless the Salukis catch fire over the next few weeks, SIU will be forced to win the Valley tournament to reach the supreme goal of an NCAA tournament bid.

The way SIU is going now, though, any talk of post-season play is premature. The Salukis need to focus on tangible concepts — improving its defense, not falling behind early in games, and getting more consistent play from everyone outside of Williams — before dwelling on the grand scheme.

But it's too early for SIU to panic. Each of the Salukis' three losses came to quality teams, and they all could have easily gone SIU's way. The Santa Clara loss stings extra because it came at home, but give the Broncos plenty of credit for withstanding a spirited Saluki second-half charge and having the poise to pluck the 'W' in crunch time.

"They played a great game," Williams said. "Especially when we made that huge [17-2 second-half] run and got our fans back, and we even got the lead back. We had all the momentum in the world and they just stuck right with their stuff."

While officiating generally does not decide games, the phantom technical foul whistled on Williams when he had the ball slapped out of his hands by Santa Clara's

Men's basketball team suffers second straight one-point loss

COREY CUSICK
DAILY EGYPTIAN

At first, the final 6.4 seconds of mass confusion resulted in disbelief, and eventually led to questions of what actually transpired amid the chaotic end of yet another dramatic Saluki loss.

The SIU men's basketball team suffered its second consecutive one-point loss, this time to Santa Clara University, 78-77, Saturday afternoon at the SIU Arena.

After senior guard Ricky Collum and freshman guard Kent Williams both missed a pair of three-point attempts to tie the game, senior forward Chris Thunell picked up the rebound and scored a lay-up to bring the Salukis within one.

The Salukis put Bronco guard Nathan Fast on the foul line with 6.4 seconds remaining, and just like the Salukis' last defeat, a 78-77 loss to Long Beach State University in Long Beach, Calif., their opponent missed both free throws.

Sophomore guard Brandon Mells grabbed the rebound and sped down court as the clock ticked down. As Mells began to drive toward the lane, a time-out was called stopping the play with only 2.5 seconds remaining.

"I was yelling time-out, time-out," said Saluki head coach Bruce Weber. "I thought it was four seconds to be honest, and all of a sudden I look at the clock and it's 2.5. So that's my fault."

With no time-outs left and little time to run a final play, the Saluki in-bounder, Williams, was forced to throw a cross court pass to Thunell that nearly sailed out of bounds, forcing Thunell to make a one-
